will force the enemy to cry out for quarter. Addis.

5. Exigence; trial; extremity.

We'll put the matter to the present push.
Shaksp.

'Tis commou to talk of dying for a friend; but when it comes to the push, 'tis no more than talk.
L'Estrange.

The question we would put is, not, whether the sacrament of the mass be as truly propitiatory, as those under the law? but, whether it be as truly a sacrifice? if so, then it is a true proper sacrifice, and is not only commemorative or representative,
as we are told at a push. Atterbury.

6. A sudden emergence.

There's time enough for that;
Lest they desire, upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation. Shaksp.

7. [rustula, Lat.] A pimple; an efflorescence; a wheal; an eruption.

He that was praised to his hurt, should have a push rise upon his nose; as a blister will rise upon one's tongue, that tells a lie. Bacon.

A look so pale no quartan ever gave,
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave.
Dryden.

QUARTA'TION, kwòr-tá'shùn. n. s. [from quartus, Lat.] A chymical operation.

- In quartation, which refiners employ to purify gold, although three parts of silver be so exquisitely mingled by fusion with a fourth part of gold, whence the operation is denominated, that the resulting mass acquires several new qualities; yet, if you cast the mixture into aqua fortis, the silver will be dissolved in the menstruum, and the gold like a dark powder will fall to the bottom.
Boyle.

QUARTER, kwòr'túr.⁸⁶ n. s. [quart, quartier, Fr.]

1. A fourth part.
It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.
Shakspeare.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile.
Burnet.
Observe what stars arise or disappear,
And the four quarters of the rolling year.
Dryden.
Supposing only three millions to be paid, 'tis evident that to do this out of commodities, they must,
to the consumer, be raised a quarter in their price;
so that every thing, to him that uses it, must be a quarter dearer.
Locke.
2. A region of the skies, as referred to the seaman's card.
I'll give thee a wind.
—I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow,
And all the quarters that they know,
I th' shipman's card.
Shakspeare.
His praise, ye winds! that from four quarters
blow,
Breathe soft or loud.
Milton.
When the winds in southern quarters rise,
Ships, from their anchors torn, become their sport,
And sudden tempests rage within the port.
Addison.
3. A particular region of a town or country.
The like is to be said of the populousness of their coasts and quarters there.

They had settled here many ages since, and over-spread all the parts and quarters of this spacious continent.
Heylin.
The sons of the church being so much dispersed, though without being driven, into all quarters of the land, there was some extraordinary design of divine wisdom in it.
Sprat.
A bungling cobbler that was ready to starve at his own trade, changes his quarter, and sets up for a doctor.
L'Estrange.

4. The place where soldiers are lodged or stationed.
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?
—Unless I have mista'en his quarters much,
His regiment lies half a mile
South from the mighty power of the king.
Shaksp.
Thou canst defend as well as get,
And never hadst our quarter beat up yet.
Cowley.
The quarters of the several chiefs they show'd,
Here Phenix, here Achilles made abode.
Dryden.
It was high time to shift my quarters.
Spectator.
5. Proper station.
They do best, who, if they cannot but admit love, yet make it keep quarter, and sever it wholly from their serious affairs.
Bacon.
Swift to their several quarters hasten then
The cumbrous elements.
Milton.
6. Remission of life; mercy granted by a conqueror.
He magnified his own clemency, now they were at his mercy, to offer them quarter for their lives, if they gave up the castle.
Clarendon.
When the cocks and lambs lie at the mercy of cats and wolves, they must never expect better quarter.
L'Estrange.
Discover the opinion of your enemies, which is commonly the truest; for they will give you no quarter, and allow nothing to complaisance.
Dryd.
7. Treatment shown by an enemy.
To the young if you give any tolerable quarter,
you indulge them in their idleness and ruin them.
Collier.
Mr. Wharton, who detected some hundreds of the bishop's mistakes, meets with very ill quarter from his lordship.
Swift.
8. Friendship; amity; concord. Not now in use.
Friends, all but now,
In quarter and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed, and then, but now
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts.
Shakspeare.
9. A measure of eight bushels.
The soil so fruitful that an acre of land well ordered will return 200 bushels or 25 quarter of corn.
Heylin.
10. False quarter is a cleft or chink in a quarter of a horse's hoof from top to bottom; it generally happens on the inside of it, that being the weakest and thinnest part.
To QUARTER, kwòr'túr. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To divide into four parts.
A thought that quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward.
Shakspeare.
2. To divide; to break by force;
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean fanuie, quartering steel, and climbing fire.
Shakspeare.
Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war.
Shakspeare.
3. To divide into distinct regions.
Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fixt and ev'ry wand'ring star.
Dryden.
4. To station or lodge soldiers.
When they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd fires,
They will waste their time upon our note,
To know from whence we are.
Shakspeare.
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?
—His regiment lies half a mile south.
Shakspeare.
They o'er the barren shore pursue their way,
Where quarter'd in their camp, the fierce Thessalians lay.
Dryden.
5. To lodge; to fix on a temporary dwell-ling.

- They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd.
Shakspeare.

And when these fail'd, he'd suck his claws,
And quarter himself upon his paws.
Hudibras.
7. To bear as an appendage to the hereditary arms.
The first being compounded of argent and azure, is the coat of Beauchamp of Hack in the county of Somerset, now quartered by the earl of Hertford.
Peucham.
- QUARTERAGE, kwòr'túr-idje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from quarter.] A quarterly allowance.
He us'd two equal ways of gaining,
By hindring justice or maintaining;
To many a whore gave privilege,
And whipp'd for want of quarterage.
Hudibras.
- QUARTERDAY, kwòr'túr-dá. n. s. [quarter and day.] One of the four days in the year, on which rent or interest is paid.
However rarely his own rent-days occurred, the indigent had two and fifty quarter-daies returning in his year.
Fell.
The usurer would be very well satisfied to have all the time annihilated, that lies between the present moment and next quarter-day.
Spectator.
- QUARTERDECK, kwòr'túr-dèk. n. s. [quarter and deck.] The short upper deck.
- QUARTERLY, kwòr'túr-lè. adj. [from quarter.] Containing a fourth part.
The moon makes four quarterly seasons within her little year or month of consecution.
Holder.
From the obliquity of the ecliptick to the equator arise the diurnal differences of the sun's right ascension, which finish their variations in each quadrant of the ecliptick, and this being added to the former inequality from eccentricity, makes these quarterly and seemingly irregular inequalities of natural days.
Bentley.
- QUARTERLY, kwòr'túr-lè. adv. Once in a quarter of a year.
- QUARTERMASTER, kwòr'túr-má-stúr. n. s.

- QUARTERN, kwòr'túr-n.⁹⁸ n. s. A gill or the fourth part of a pint.
- QUARTERSTAFF, kwòr'túr-stáf. n. s. A staff of defence: so called, I believe, from the manner of using it; one hand being placed at the middle, and the other equally between the middle and the end.
His quarterstaff, which he could ne'er forsake,
Hung half before, and half behind his back.
Dryd.
Immense riches he squandered away at quarterstaff and cudgel play, in which he challenged all the country.
Arbuthnot.
- QUARTILE, kwòr'tíl.^{140 148} n. s. An aspect of the planets, when they are three signs or ninety degrees distant from each other, and is marked thus □.
Harris.
Mars and Venus in a quartile move
My pangs of jealousy for Ariet's love.
Dryden.
- QUARTO, kwòr'tò. n. s. [quartus, Latin.]
A book in which every sheet, being twice doubled, makes four leaves.
Our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems; their folio's and quarto's were the fashionable sizes, as volumes in octavo are now.
Watts.

To QUASH; kwôsh. v. a. [quassen, Dut. squacciare, Ital. quasso. Lat.]

1. To crush; to squeeze.

The whales

Against sharp rocks, like reeling vessels quash'd,
Though huge as mountains, are in pieces dash'd.

Walter.

2. To subdue suddenly.

'Twas not the spawn of such as these,
That dy'd with Punick blood the conquer'd seas,
And quash'd the steru Cæcides.

Roscommon.

Our she-confederates keep pace with us in quash- ing the rebellion, which had begun to spread itself among part of the fair sex.

Addison.

3. [cassus, Lat. casser, Fr.] To annul; to nullify; to make void: as, the indictment was quashed.

To QUASH, kwôsh. v. n. To be shaken with a noise.

A thin and fine membrane strait and closely adhering to keep it from quashing and shaking.

The water in this dropsy, by a sudden jirk, may be heard to quash.

Sharp.

QUASH, kwôsh. n. s. A pompion.

QUA'TERCOUSINS, kâ'têr-kûz-z'nz.⁴¹⁵ As they are not quatercousins, as it is commonly spoken catercousins, plus ne sont pas de quatre cousins, they are not of the four first degrees of kindred, that is, they are not friends.

Skinner.

QUATE'RNARY, kwâ-têr'nâr-ê. n. s. [quaternarius, Lat.] The number four.

The objections against the quaternary of elements and ternary of principles, needed not to be opposed so much against the doctrines themselves.

Boyle.

QUATE'RNION, kwâ-têr'nê-ûn. n. s. [quaternio, Lat.] The number four.

Air and the elements! the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run
Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Maker still new praise.

Milton.

I have not in this scheme of these nine quaternions of consonants, distinct known characters, whereby to express them, but must repeat the same.

Holder.

QUATE'RNITY, kwâ-têr'nê-tê. n. s. [quaternus, Lat.] The number four.

The number of four stands much admired, not only in the quaternity of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God.

Brown.

QUATRA'IN, kwâ'trîn.²⁰² n. s. [quatrain, French.] A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately: as,

Say, Stella, what is love, whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?

What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Disclos'd to light the mischief-making boy?

Mrs Mulso.

I have writ my poem in quatrains or stanzas of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judg'd them of greater dignity for the sound and number, than any other verse in use.

Dryden.

To QUA'VER, kwâ'vûr.⁵⁶ v. n. [cpavan, Saxon.]

1. To shake the voice; to speak or sing with a tremulous voice.

Miso sitting on the ground with her knees up, and her hands upon her kness, tuning her voice with many a quavering cough, thus discours'd.

Sidney.

The division and quavering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave.

Bacon.

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious,

Philips.

We shall hear her quavering them half a minute after us, to some sprightly airs of the opera.

Addison.

2. To tremble; to vibrate.

A membrane, stretch'd like the head of a drum, is to receive the impulse of the sound, and to vibrate or quaver according to its reciprocal motions.

Ray.

If the eye and the finger remain quiet, these colours vanish in a second minute of time, but if the finger be moved with a quavering motion, they appear again.

Newton.

QUAY, kè.²²⁰ n. s. [quoi, Fr.] A key; an artificial bank to the sea or river, on which goods are conveniently unladen.

QUE'ACHY, kwê'tshê. adj. [I know not whence derived; perhaps originally quacky, quaggy, or quashy.] Unsolid; unsound; boggy. Not in use.

The boggy mears and queachy fens below.

Drayton.

QUEAN, kwêne.³ n. s. [cpæan, Saxon; a barren cow; hoppæn, in the laws of Canute, a strumpet.] A worthless woman, generally a strumpet.

As fit as the nail to his hole, or as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave.

Shakespeare.

This well they understand like cunning queans,
And hide their nastiness behind the scenes.

Such is that sprinkling, which some careless quean

Flirts on you from her mop.

Swift.

QUE'ASINESS, kwê'zê-nês. n. s. [from queasy.] The sickness of a nauseated stomach.

QUE'ASY, kwê'zê. adj. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. Sick with nausea.

He, queasy with his insolence, already
Will their good thoughts call from him.

Shaksp.

Whether a rotten state and hope of gain;
Or to disuse me from the queasy pain
Of being belov'd and loving,
Out push me first.

Donne.

2. Fastidious; squeamish.

I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedic't, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice.

Shakespeare.

The humility of Gregory the great would not admit the stile of bishop, but the ambition of Boniface made no scruple thereof, nor have queasy resolutions been harboured in their successors ever since.

Brown.

Men's stomachs are generally so queasy in these cases, that it is not safe to overload them.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Without question,

Their conscience was too queasy of digestion.

Dryden.

3. Causing nauseousness.

I have one thing of a queasy question,
Which I must act.

Shakespeare.

To QUECK, kwêk. v. n. To shrink; to show pain; perhaps to complain. Not in use.

The lads of Sparta were accustomed to be whip-ped at altars, without so much as quecking.

Bacon.

QUEEN, kwêên.⁸ n. s. [cpæn, Sax.] A woman, a wife, the wife of a king.

1. The wife of a king.

He was lapt

In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother.

Shaksp.

2. A woman who is sovereign of a kingdom.

That queen Elizabeth lived sixty-nine, and reigned forty-five years, means no more than that the duration of her existence was equal to sixty-nine, and the duration of her government to forty-five annual revolutions of the sun.

Locke.

Have I a queen

Past by my fellow rulers of the world?
Have I refus'd their blood to mix with yours,
And raise new kings from so obscure a race?

Dryden

To QUEEN, kwêên. v. n. To play the queen.

A three-pence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it.

Shaksp.

Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes and weep.

Shaksp.

QUEEN-APPLE, kwêên'âp-pl. n. s. A species of apple.

The queen-apple is of the summer kind, and a good cyder apple mixed with others.

Mortimer.

Her cheeks with kindly claret spread,
Aurora like new out of bed,

Or like the fresh que n-apple's side,
Blushing at sight of Phœbus' pride.

Sidney.

QUEEN'ING, kwêên'ing.¹¹⁰ n. s. An apple.

The winter queening is good for the table.

Mortimer.

QUEER, kwêêr. adj. [Of this word the original is not known: a correspondent supposes a queer man to be one who has a quære to his name in a list.] Odd; strange; original; particular.

He never went to bed till two in the morning, because he would not be a queer fellow; and was every now and then knocked down by a constable to signalize his vivacity.

Spectator.

QUEER'LY, kwêêr'lê. adv. [from queer.] Particularly; oddly.

QUEERNESS, kwêêr'nês. n. s. [from queer.] Oddness; particularity.

QUE'EST, kwêst. n. s. [from questus, Lat. Skinner.] A ringdove; a kind of wild pigeon.

To QUELL, kwêl. v. a. [cpellan, Sax.] To crush; to subdue; originally, to kill.

What avails

Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain,

Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands
Of mightiest?

Milton.

Compassion quell'd

His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.

Milton.

This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd,
That once disdainng, she might be disdain'd.

Dryden.

He is the guardian of the publick quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world.

Atterbury.

To QUELL, kwêl. v. n. To die.

Spenser.

QUELL, kwêl. n. s. [from the verb.] Murder. Not in use.

What cannot we put upon

His spongy followers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell.

Shakespeare.

QUE'LLER, kwêl'lûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from quell.] One that crushes or subdues.

Hail son of the most high,

Queller of Satan, on thy glorious work
Now enter.

Milton.

QUE'LLQUECHOSE, kèk'shòze. n. s. [French.] A trifle; a kickshaw.

From country grass to confitures of court,
Or city quellquechoses, let not report
My mind transport.

Donne.

To QUEMME, kwême. v. n. [cpeman, Saxon.] To please. An old word.

Skinner.

To QUENCH, kwénsh. v. a.

1. To extinguish fire.

Since stream, air, sand, mine eyes and ears conspire,
What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire?
Sidney.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench. Shaksp.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,

Which being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakespeare.

The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue; and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisdom.

Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entereth better. Bacon.

Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;

One draws and blows reciprocating air,

Others to quench the hissing mass prepare. Dryden.

You have already quench'd sedition's brand,

And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land. Dryden.

When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Moxon.

2. To still any passion or commotion; to repress any motion of the mind good or bad.

But if all aim but this be levelled false,

The supposition of the lady's death

Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shaksp.

Beseech God, that he will inflame thy heart with this heavenly fire of devotion; and when thou hast obtained it, beware that thou neither quench it by any wilful sin, or let it go out again for want of stirring it up and employing it. Duty of Man.

3. To allay thirst.

Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and diseases, a drowning of the spirits. South.

4. To destroy.

When death's form appears, she feareth not

An utter quenching or extinguishment;

She would be glad to meet with such a lot,

That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.

To QUENCH, kwénsh. v. n. To cool; to grow cool.

Dost thou think, in time

She will not quench, and let instructions enter

Where folly now possesses? Shakespeare.

QUENCHABLE, kwénsh'á-bl. adj. [from quench.] That may be quenched.

QUENCHER, kwénsh'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from quench.] Extinguisher; one that quenches.

QUENCHLESS, kwénsh'lés. adj. [from quench.] Unextinguishable.

Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,

I dare your quenchless fury to more rage. Shaksp.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,

He fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire. Crashaw.

QUERELE, kwér'rél. n. s. [querela, Latin; querelle, French.] A complaint to a court.

A circumduction obtains not in causes of appeal, but in causes of first instance and simple querele only. Ayliffe.

QUERENT, kwér'ént. n. s. [querens, Lat.] The complainant; the plaintiff.

QUERIMONIOUS, kwér-ré-mó'né-ús. adj. [queremonia, Latin.] Querulous; complaining.

QUERIMONIOUSLY, kwér-ré-mó'né-ús-lé.

adv. [from querimonious.] Querulously; with complaint.

To thee, dear Thom, myself addressing,
Most querimoniously confessing. Denham.

QUERIMONIOUSNESS, kwér-ré-mó'né-ús-nés. n. s. [from querimonious.] Complaining temper.

QUERIST, kwér'rist. n. s. [from quæro, Latin.] An inquirer; an asker of questions.

I shall propose some considerations to my gentle querist. Spectator.

The juggling sea god, when by chance trepan'd
By some instructed querist sleeping on the strand, Impatient of all answers, strait became A stealing brook. Swift.

QUERN, kwér'n. n. s. [cpeorn, Sax.] A handmill.

Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,
And bootless make the breathless huswife churn. Shakespeare.

Some apple-colour'd corn
Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn. Chapman.

QUERPO, kwér'pó. n. s. [corrupted from cuerpo, Spanish.] A dress close to the body; a waistcoat.

I would fain see him walk in querpo, like a cased rabbit, without his holy fur upon his back. Dryden.

QUERRY, kwér'ré, for equerry. n. s. [écuyer, French.] A groom belonging to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horses; also the stable of a prince. Bailey.

QUERULOUS, kwér'rú-lús. adj. [querulus, Latin.] Mourning; whining; habitually complaining.

Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful, and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time before mentioned was expired. Hooker.

The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Hovel.

Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Locke.

QUERULOUSLY, kwér'rú-lús-lé. adv. [from querulous.] In a complaining manner.

His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,
As unoil'd hinges, querulously shrill. Young.

QUERULOUSNESS, kwér'rú-lús-nés. n. s. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.

QUERY, kwér're. n. s. [from quære, Lat.] A question; an inquiry to be resolved.

I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a further search to be made by others. Newton.

This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.

To QUERY, kwér're. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.

Three Cambridge sophs,
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate. Pope.

QUEST, kwést. n. s. [queste, Fr.]

1. Search; act of seeking.

None but such as this hold ape unblest,
Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest. Spenser.

If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanchi?
Shakespeare.

Fair silver huskio'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant,
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milton.

An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewc.
Milton.

One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unsounded deep, and the void immense
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be. Milton.

'Twould be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day, where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison.

We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spectator.

2. [for inquest.] An empanell'd jury.

What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? Shakespeare.

3. Searchers. Collectively.

You have been hotly call'd for
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate seat above three several quests
To search you out. Shakespeare.

4. Inquiry; examination.

O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests Upon thy doings. Shakespeare.

5. Request; desire; solicitation.

Had not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion. Herbert.
To QUEST, kwést. v. n. [quæter, French; from the noun.] To go in search.

QUESTANT, kwéstánt. n. s. [from quæster, Fr.] Seeker; endeavourer after.

See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek That fame may cry you loud. Shaksp.

QUESTION, kwést'ion. ⁴⁴⁶ n. s. [questio, Fr. quæstio, Lat.]

1. Interrogatory; any thing inquired.

Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.

2. Inquiry; disquisition.

It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon.

3. A dispute; a subject of debate.

There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. John.

4. Affair to be examined.

In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.
How easy is it for a man to fill a book with quotations, as you have done, that can be content with any thing, however foreign to the question! Waterland.

5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.

This is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shaksp.

'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is called in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.

The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.

Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.

6. Judicial trial.

Whosoever be found guilty, the communion book hath deserved least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker.

7. Examination by torture.

Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe.

8. State of being the subject of present inquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty-money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.

Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Atterbury.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes, So may be with more facile question bear it; For that it stands not in such warlike brace, But altogether lacks the abilities That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shaksp.

QUICKSIGHTEDNESS, kwik-sítèd-nés. n. s. [from quicksighted.] Sharpness of sight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER, kwik'sil-vúr.⁹⁵ n. s. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Lat.]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water; it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others. The specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest; the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool: but the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders. Hill.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wout to be made in Libia of brimstone and quicksilver burnt. Peacham.

Pleasures are few; and fewer we enjoy;
Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy;
We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill,
Still it eludes us, and it glitters still:
If seiz'd at last, compute your mighty gains,
What is it, but rank poison in your veins? Young.

QUICKSILVERED, kwik'sil-vúr'd.³⁵⁹ adj. [from quicksilver.] Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the fore side, and as much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton.

QUI DAM, kwi dâm. n. s. [Lat.] Somebody. Not used.

For envy of so many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those so many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenser.

QUI'DDANY, kwid'úð-né. n. s. [cydonium, cydoniatum, Latin; quiddan, German, a quince.] Marmalade; confection of quinces made with sugar.

QUI'DDIT, kwid'dit. n. s. [corrupted from quidlibet, Lat. or from que dit, Fr.] A subtlety; an equivocation. A low word.

And knew their natures and abstracts,
Where entity and quiddity
The ghosts of defunct bodies fly. Hudibras.

2. A trifling nicety; a cavil; a captious question. Not used.
Misnomer in our laws, and other quiddities, I leave to the professors of law. Camden.

QUIESCENCE, kwí-és-sense.⁶¹⁰ n. s. [from quiesco, Lat.] Rest; repose.

Whether the earth move or rest, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quiescence, the testimony of sense, is weak and frivolous. Glanville.

QUIESCENT, kwí-és-sént. adj. [quiescens, Lat.] Resting; not being in motion; not movent; lying at repose.

Though the earth move, its motion must needs be as insensible as if it were quiescent. Glanville.

The right side, from whence the motion of the body beginneth, is the active or moving side; but the sinister is the weaker or more quiescent side. Brown.

Sight takes in at a greater distance and more variety at once, comprehending also quiescent objects, which hearing does not. Holder.

If it be in some part movent, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew.

Pression or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines beyond an obstacle which stops part of the motion, but will bend and spread every way into the quiescent medium, which lies beyond the obstacle. Newton.

QUIET, kwí-ét.⁹⁹ adj. [quiet, Fr. quietus, Lat.]

1. Still; free from disturbance.
Breaking off the end for want of breath,
And sliding soft, as down to sleep her laid,
She ended all her woe in quiet death. Spenser.

This life is best,
If quiet life is best; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper know'n. Shaksp.

Justly thou abhor'st
That sun, who on the quiet state of man
Such trouble brought. Milton.

2. Peaceable; not turbulent; not offensive; mild.

QUIETLY, kwí-ét-lé. adv. [from quiet.]

1. Calmly; without violent emotion.
Let no man for his own poverty become more oppressing in his bargain, but quietly, modestly, and patiently recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

2. Peaceably; without offence.
Although the rebels had behaved themselves quietly and modestly by the way as they went; yet they doubted that would but make them more hungry to fall upon the spoil in the end. Bacon.

3. At rest; without agitation.

QUIETNESS, kwí-ét-nés. n. s. [from quiet.]

1. Coolness of temper.
This cruel quietness neither returning to mislike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but gracious still after one manner. Sidney.

That which we move for our better instruction sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly. Hooker.

2. Peace; tranquillity.
Stop effusion of our christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness on ev'ry side. Shaksp.

What miseries have both nations avoided, and what quietness and security attained by their peaceable union? Hazward.

3. Stillness; calmness.
If we compare the quietness and chastity of the Bolognese pencil to the bustle and tumult that fills every part of a Venetian picture, without the least attempt to interest the passions, their boasted art will appear a mere struggle without effect. Reynolds.

QUIETSOME, kwí-ét-súm. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; still; undisturbed. Not in use.
Let the night be calm and quietsome,
Without tempestuous storms or sad affray. Spenser.

Is but a quintain, a mere lifeless block. Shaksp.

QUINTAL, kwîn'tâl. n. s. [centupondium, Latin.] A hundred weight to weigh with.

QUINTESENCE, kwîn'tês-sênsê. n. s. [quinta essentia, Latin.]

1. A fifth being.
From their gross matter she abstracts the forms,
And draws a kind of quintessence from things. Davies.

The ethereal quintessence of heav'n

Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That rowl'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars. Milton.

They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence, or fifth sort of body distinct from all these. Watts.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakspere.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,
Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?

What alchymist can draw, with all his skill,
The quintessence of these out of the mind? Davies.

For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,
For by his art he did express,

A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness. Donne.

Paracelsus, by the help of an intense cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of wine. Boyle.

Let there be light! said God; and forthwith light
Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure, Sprung from the deep. Milton.

When the supreme faculties more regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights. South.

QUINTESENTIAL, kwîn-tês sên-shâl. adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous assertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, especially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens; so neither is there to the light thereof. Hakewill.

QUINTIN, kwîn'tin. n. s. [I know not whence derived; Minsheu deduces it from quintus, Latin, and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; palus quintanus, Lat. Ainsworth; quintaine, Fr.]

An upright post, on the top of which a cross post turned upon a pin; at one end of the cross post was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand bag; the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and pass by, before the sand bag, coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bridaltee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee;
Come cut and long tail, for there be Six batchelors as bold as he,
Adjoining to his company,
And each one hath his livery. Ben Jonson.

QUINTUPLE, kwîn'tû-pl. adj. [quintuplus, Latin.] Fivefold.

In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least. Graunt.

QUIP, kwîp. n. s. [derived by the etymologists, from whip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still. Shakspere.

If I sent him word his beard was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the quip modest. Shaksp.

Nymph bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton

To QUIP, kwîp. v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms. Ainsworth.

QUIRE, kwîre. n. s. [chocur, Fr. choro, Italian.]

1. A body of singers; a chorus.

The trees did bud and early blossom bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their caroling. Spenser.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such cutting birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shaksp.

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night
And told them the Messiah now was born. Milton

I may worship thee
For ay, with temples vow'd and virgin quires. Milton.

Begin the song, and strike the lively lyre,
Lo how the years to come, a numerous and well fitted quire,
All hand in hand do decently advance,
And to my song with smooth and equal measures dance. Cowley.

As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
So nobler than the rest was her attire. Dryden.

2. The part of the church where the service is sung.

I am all on fire,
Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage Cleveland.
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play. Dryden.

The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires. Pope.

3. [cahier, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

To QUIRE, kwîre. v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young ey'd cherubims. Shaksp.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lull asleep. Shakspere.

QUIRISTER, kwîr'ris-tûr.¹⁰⁸ n. s. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quiristers that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony. Thomson.

QUIRK, kwêrk.¹⁰⁸ n. s. [Of this word I can find no rational derivation.]

1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.

I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto 't. Shaksp.

2. Smart taunt.

Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; belike this is a man of that quirk. Shaksp.

I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me. Shaksp.

3. Slight conceit.

Conceits, puns, quirks, or quibbles, jests and repartees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth. Watts.

4. Flight of fancy. Not in use.

Most fortunate he hath achiev'd a maid,
That paragon's description and wild fame,
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakspere.

5. Subtily; nicety; artful distinction.

Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail: how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law quirk. Decay of Piety.

QUI

QUI

QUO

There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law. L'Estrange

6. Loose light tune.
Now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of prayer;
Light quirks of musick, broken and uneven. Pope.

To QUIT, kwit. v. a. part. pass. quit; pret. I quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitar, Ital. quitar, Spanish.]

1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.
We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Joshua.
By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now
Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denham.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unbappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.
Thou are quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent. Taylor.
Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much; bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumb'rous charge. Milton.

To quit you of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it? Wake.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.
Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown. Daniel.

4. To clear himself of an affair: with the reciprocal pronoun.
Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd, hath left them years of mourning. Milton.

5. To repay; to requite.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Spenser.

Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shaksp.

6. To vacate obligations.
For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted. Ben Jonson.

One step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to tantamount.
They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own. Hooker.
Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it? South.

Still I shall hear and never quit the score, Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theseid o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To at solve; to acquit.
Nor further seek what their offences he,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Fairfax.

9. To pay.
Far other plaints, tears, and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire. Fairfax.

10. To abandon; to forsake.
Their father,
Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow,
That he quit being. Shaksp.
Honours are promis'd
All will quit 'em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courses. Ben Jonson.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity. Locke.

11. To resign; to give up.
The prince, renown'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms,
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace. Prior.

QUITCHGRASS, kwitsh'grás. n. s. [cupie, Saxon; gramen caninum, Latin.] Dog-grass.
They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds. Mortimer.

QUITE, kwite. adv. [This is derived, by the etymologists, from quittè, discharged, free, French; which, however at first appearance unlikely, is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly; totally; throughly.
Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Hooker.
He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money. Genesis.

If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.

The same actions may be aimed at different ends, and arise from quite contrary principles. Spectator.

QUITRENT, kwit'rènt. n. s. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.
Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quittrent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quittrents upon the estate. Spectator.

QUITS, kwits. interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE, kwit'tânse. n. s. [quittance, French.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.
Now I am rememb'rd, he scorn'd at me!
But that's all onc; omittance is no quittance. Shakspere.

2. Recompense; return; repayment.
Mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Monmouth. Shaksp.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no meed but he repays

Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shaksp.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit. Shaksp.

To QUITTANCE, kwit'tânse. v. a. [from the noun.] To repay; to recompense.
Not used.
Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit. Shakspere.

1. A deliverer. Ainsworth.

2. Scoria of tin. Ainsworth.

QUITTERBONE, kwit'tûr-bône. n. s. A hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

QUIVER, kwiv'vûr. n. s. [This word seems to be corrupted from couvrir, French, to cover.] A case or sheath for arrows.
As Dianne hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts she stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the others stead;
With that Love wounded my love's heart
But Dianne beasts with Cupid's dart. Spenser.

Those works, with ease as much he did,
As you would ope and shut your quiver-hut. Chapman.

Diana's nymphs would be array'd in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peacham.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd. Dryden.

QUIVER, kwiv'vûr. adj. Nimble; active.
Not in use.
There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about. Shaksp.

To QUIVER, kwiv'vûr. v. n.

1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.
The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind. Shaksp.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground. Addison.

Eurydice with quiv'ring voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's hanks Eurydice return'd. Gay.

Dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quiv'ring shade. Pope.

The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze. Pope.

2. To shiver; to shudder.
Zelmae would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on. Sidney.

QUIVERED, kwiv'vûr'd. adj. [from quiver.]

1. Furnished with a quiver.
'Tis chastity:
She that has that, is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds. Milton.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.
From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks as Westminster. Pope.

To QUOB, kwôb. v. n. [A low word.] To move as the embryo does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.

QUO'DLIBET, kwôd'lè-bèt. n. s. [Lat.] A nice point; a subtily.

He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat,

Pok'd her rabatos, and survey'd her steel. Old Comedy.

To RA'BBET, râb'bit.⁹⁹ v. a. [rabat, raboter; Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbeting. Mozon.

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbeted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbits are groved square.

Moxon.
RA'BBET, rāb'bit. n. s. [from the verb.]
 A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.
 Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbits of the door within the rabbets of the door-post.

Moxon.
RA'BBI, rāb'bé, or rāb'bi. } n. s. A doctor
RA'BBIN, rāb'bin. } among the Jews.

Be not ye called rabbi; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Matthew.
 The Hebrew rabbins say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate and throat. Camden.

Moxon.
RA'BBIT, rāb'bit. n. s. [robbe, robbekin, Dutch.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakespeare.

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecc multi cuniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, Who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin? Bacon.

RA'BBLE, rāb'bl.⁴⁰⁶ n. s. [rabula, Latin; rabulari, low Latin] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy, Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths? Shaksp.

Go bring the rabble here to this place. Shaksp.
 Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.

The better sort abhors scurrility, And often censures what the rabble like.

Roscommon.
 That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South.

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice. Dryden.

In change of government, The rabble rule their great oppressors fate, Do sov'reign justice and revenge the state. Dryden.

His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment. Addison.

RA'BBLEMENT, rāb'bl-ment. n. s. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people. Not in use.

A rude rabblement,
 Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
 But got his ready steed, and fast away 'gan ride. Spenser.

The rabblement houted, clapp'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath. Shakespeare.
 There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement. Camden.

RA'BID, rāb'bid.⁷⁴⁴ adj. [rabidus, Latin.]

Fierce; furious; mad.

RA'BINET, rāb'bin-ēt. n. s. A kind of smaller ordnance Ainsworth.

RACE, rāse. n. s. [race, Fr. from radice, Latin]

1. A family ascending.
 2. Family descending.

He in a moment will create
 Another world; out of man, a race
 Of men innumerable, there to dwell. Milton.

Male he created thee, but thy consort
 Female for race. Milton.

High as the mother of the gods in place,
 And proud like her of an immortal race. Dryden.
 Hence the long race of Alban fathers come. Dryden.

3. A generation; a collective family.
 A race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare.

4. A particular breed.
 The race of mules, fit for the plough is bred. Chapman.

Instead
 Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room. Milton.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance. Locke.

If they are all debas'd and willing slaves,
 The young but breathing to grow grey in bondage,
 And the old sinking to ignoble graves,
 Of such a race no matter who is king. Murphy.

5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgment in contrivance. Temple.

7. [ras, Islandick.] Contest in running.
 To describe races and games

Or tilting furniture. Milton.
 Stand forth, ye champions who the gauntlet wield,

Or you the swiftest racers of the field;
 Stand forth, ye wrestlers who these pastimes grace,
 I wield the gauntlet, and I run the race. Pope.

8. Course on the feet.
 The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts. Bacon.

9. Progress, course.
 It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples have taught them, never stopt his race till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame. Milton.
 The great light of day yet wants to run
 Much of his race though steep. Milton.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past,
 New to his friends embrace. Pope.

10. Train; process.
 An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turn'd defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence? Bacon.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin, which he re-obtained. Bacon.

RA'CEHORSE, rāse'horse. n. s. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a race-horse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries. Addison.

RACEMATION, rās'sé-mā'shūn.⁵³⁰ n. s. [racémus, Latin.] Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after. Brown.

RACEMIFEROUS, rās-sé-mif'ér-ūs. adj. [racemus and fero, Lat.] Bearing clusters

RA'GER, rāse'ūr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.

His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
 As any other Pegasus can fly;
 So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
 Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

A poet's form she plac'd before their eyes,

And bad the nimblest racer seize the prize, Pope.
RA'CINESS, rās'sé-nēs. n. s. [from racy.]
 The quality of being racy.

RACK, rāk. n. s. [racke, Dut. from racken, to stretch.]

1. An engine to torture.
 Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
 That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress. Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
 And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addison.

2. Torture, extreme pain.
 A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject. Temple.

A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference. Addison.

3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others. Wilkins.

4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball. It is commonly spoken and written rack.

The sisters turn the wheel,
 Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel. Dryden.

5. [racke, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought
 The rack dissimins, and makes it indistinct
 As water is in water. Shakespeare.

The great globe itself,
 Yea, all, which it inherit, shall dissolve;
 And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
 Leave not a rack behind. Shakespeare.

We often see against some storm,
 A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
 The hold wind speechless, and the orb below
 As hush as death. Shakespeare.

The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise. Bacon.

As wintry winds contending in the sky,
 With equal force of lungs their titles try:
 They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.

6. [hραcca, the occiput, Saxon; raccia, Islandick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.

7. A grate; the grate on which bacon is laid.

8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.
 Their bulls they send to pastures far,
 Or hills, or feed them at full racks within. May.

The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.

He bid the nimble hours
 Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:
 From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire. Addison.

9. Arrack, a spirituous liquor. See ARRACK.

To RACK, rāk. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before the wind.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
 Not separated with the racking clouds,
 But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. Shaksp.

To RACK, rāk. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To torment by the rack.

Unhappy most like tortured me,
Their joints new set to be new rack'd again.
Cowley.
Hold, O dreadful sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man.
Dryden and Lee.

2. To torment; to harass.
Th' apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.
Milton.

3. To harass by exaction.
The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants,
Exact of them, besides his covenants, what he pleaseth.
Spenser.
The commons hast thou rack'd, the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions.
Shaksp.
He took possession of his just estate,
Nor rack'd his tenants with increase of rent.
Dryd.

4. To screw; to force to performance.
They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences.
Hooker.
The wisest among the heathens racked their wits, and east about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage.
Tillotson.
It was worth the while for the adversary to rack invention, and to call in all the succours of learning and critical skill to assail them, if possible, and to wrest them out of our hands.
Waterland.

5. To stretch; to extend.
Nor have I money nor commodity
To raise a present sum;
Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost.
Shaksp.

6. To defecate, to draw off from the lees.
I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse: this is perhaps of the same race.
It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much sooner.
Bacon.
Some roll their eask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days resettlement rack it off.
Mortimer.

RACK-RENT, rák'rènt. n. s. [rack and rent.]
Rent raised to the uttermost.
Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church?
Swift.

RACK-RENTER, rák'rènt-úr. n. s. [rack and renter.] One who pays the utter-most rent.
Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred: yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land;
which the rack-renter or undertenant pays.
Locke.

RA'CKET, rák'kit.⁹⁹ n. s. [Of uncertain derivation; Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from ραχία, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]

1. An irregular clattering noise.
That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there.
Shakespeare.

2. A confused talk. In burlesque language.
Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and every night in an uproar.
Swift.

3. [raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players at tennis strike the ball.
Whence perhaps all the other senses.
When we have matcht our rackets, to these halls,
We will in France play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Shakespeare.

The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot: if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion;

as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it.
Digby.
He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second causes.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

RA'CKING, rák'king. n. s.
Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread;
and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier.
Ferrier's Dict.

RA'CKOON, rák-kóon'. n. s.
The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out at nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea side, where it is hunted by dogs.
Bailey.

RA'CY, rá'sè. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root.] Strong; flavorous;
tasting of the soil.
Rich racy verses in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and see.
Cowley.
From his brain that Helicon distil,
Whose racy liquor did his offspring fill.
Denham.
The eyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more racy.
Mortimer.
The hospitable sage, in sign
Of social welcome, mix'd the racy wine,
Late from the mellowing eask restor'd to light.
By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright.
Pope.

RAD, rád. The old pret. of read. Spenser.
RAD, RED, and ROD, rád. differing only in dialect, signify counsel; as Conrad, powerful or skilful in counsel; Ethel-red, a noble counsellor; Rodbert, eminent for counsel; Eubulus and Thrasybulus have almost the same sense.
Gibson.

RA'DDOCK, or ruddock. rád'dúk.¹⁰⁰ n. s.
a bird; the redbreast.
The raddoek would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this.
Shaksp.

RA'DIANCY, rá'dé-ánse or rá'jé-ánse.²⁹³ }
RA'DIANCY, rá'dé-án-sé or rá'jé-án-sé. }
n. s. [radiare, Lat.] Sparkling lustre;
glitter.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care.
Shakespeare.
Whether there he not too high an apprehension above its natural radiancy, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gem, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire.
Brown.

The Son
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majestic divine.
Milton.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiancy.
Burnet.

RA'DIANT, rá'dé-ánt, or rá'jé-ánt. adj.
[radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.
There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top and before, a small cherub of gold with wings displayed.
Bacon.
Mark what radiance state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is she alone
Milton.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk.
Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and heamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below.
Milton.

RA'DDOCK, or ruddock. rád'dúk.¹⁰⁰ n. s.
a bird; the redbreast.
The raddoek would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this.
Shaksp.

By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk.
Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and heamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below.
Milton.

To RA'DIATE, rá'dé-áte, or rá'jé-áte.
v. n. [radio, Latin.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.
Though with wit and parts their possessors could never engage God to send forth his ligat and his truth: yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleas'd to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those scatter'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topicks proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal.
Boyle.

Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture.
Locke.

RA'DIATED, rá'dé-á-téd, or rá'jé-á-téd. adj.
[adiatus Lat.] Adorned with rays.
The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Ausonius.
Addison.

RADIA'TION, rá-dé-á'shùn, or rá-jé-á'shùn.
n. s. [radiatio, Lat] radiation, Fr.]
1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours.
Bacon.
Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you.
Donne.

2. Emission from a centre every way.
Sound paralleth in many things with the light,
and radiation of things visible.
Bacon.

RA'DICAL, rád'dé-kál. adj. [radical, Fr
from radix, Lat.]
1. Primitive; original.
The differences, which are secondary, and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not.
Bacon.
Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion.
Bentley.

2. Implanted by nature.
The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company.
Bacon.
If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed.
Wilkins.
The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture.
Arbutnot.

3. Serving to origination.
RADICA'LITY, rád-dé-kál'é-té. n. s. [from radical.] Origination
There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel.
Brown.

RA'DICALLY, rád'dé-kál-é. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.
It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part.
Brown.
These great orbs, thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light,
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight.
Prior.

RA'DICALNESS, rád'dé-kál-nés. n. s. [from radical.] The state of being radical.
To RA'DICATE, rád'dé-káte.¹⁰¹ v. a.
[radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root;
to plant deeply and firmly.
Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul.
Hannend.
Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicated beliefs, and points
of high prescription.
Bretn.

sient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions
of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul.
Hannend.
Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicated beliefs, and points
of high prescription.
Bretn.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicated knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of reserving those atoms in the brain. Glanville.

RADICA'TION, rád-è-ká'shún. n. s. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls. Hammond.

RA'DICLE, rád'dé-kl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [radicule, Fr. from radix, Lat.] That part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RA'DIUS, rá'dé-ús, or rá'jé-ús.^{293 294} n. s. [Latin.]

1. The semidiameter of a circle.
2. A bone of the fore arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

To RAFF, ráf. v. a. To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.

Their causes and effects I thus raff up together. Carew.

To RA'FFLE, rá'fl.⁴⁰⁵ v. n. [raffler, to snatch, Fr.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

Letters from Hamstead give me an account, there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffling shop. Tatler.

RA'FFLE, rá'fl. n. s. [rafle, Fr. from the verb.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle. Arbutnot.

RAFT, ráft. n. s. [probably from ratis, Latin.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.

Where is that son

That floated with thee on the fatal raft? Shaksp.

Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.

RAFT, ráft. part pass. of reave or raff. Spenser. Torn; rent.

RA'FTER, ráftúr.⁹⁸ n. s. ræfter, Sax. rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being still with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne
Shepherd,

I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls. Milton.

On them the Trojans cast

Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.
By Donaus, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Ramesses, the use of shipping was first brought among the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow seas, but on beams or rafters tied to one another. Heylin.
From the East, a Belgiau wind,

His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall clim'd slowly after. Swift.

RA'FTERED, ráftúr'd.³⁸⁹ adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No raftered roofs with dance and labor sound,
No noon-tide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAG, rág.⁷⁴ n. s. [hacode, torn, Sax. ǣxǣ.]

1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowl, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.

Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands. Mortimer.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes: proverbially, mean dress.

Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind. Shakspere.

They took from me
Both coate and cloake, and all things that might be Grace in my habit; and in place, put on These tatter'd rags. Chapman.

Worn like a cloth,
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.

3. A fragment of dress.

He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone,
Before one rag of form was on. Hudibras.

RAGAMU'FFIN, rág-á-múffin. n. s. [from rag and I know not what else.] A paltry mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakspere.

Shall we brook that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, vapouring and huffing. Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.

RAGE, rádje. n. s. [rage, French.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakspere.

Desire not

T' allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons. Shakspere.

Argument more heroick than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disespous'd. Milton.

Torment and loud lament and furious rage. Milt.

2. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.

The party hurt, who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anointed. Bacon.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress. Pope.

3. Enthusiasm; rapture.

Who brought green poesy to her perfect age,
And made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

4. Eagerness; vehemence of mind: as, a rage of money getting.

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live. Pope.
Then may his soul its free-born rage enjoy,
Give deed to will, and ev'ry pow'r employ. Harte.

To RAGE, rádje.⁷⁴ v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Proverbs, Psalms.

Why do the heathen rage?

At this he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff. Milton.

2. To ravage; to exercise fury.

Heart-rending news,

That death should license have to rage among
The fair, the wise, the virtuous. Waller.

3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Nahum.

The madding wheels of brazen chariots rag'd. Milton.

After these waters had raged on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.

RA'GEFUL, rádje'fúl. adj. [rage and full.]

Furious; violent.

This courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane, so that again with rageful eyes she had him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.

A popular orator may represent vices in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hammond.

RA'GGED, rág'gíd.^{99 391} adj. [from rag.]

1. Rent into tatters.

How like a prodigal,
The skarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind. Shakspere.

As I go in this ragged tattered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every harking cur. Arbutnot.

RAI'LLERY, rā'l'ler-è. n. s. [raillerie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical merriment.

Let railery be without malice or heat. B. Jonson.

A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next; railery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble. Addison.

Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is sufficient to turn them into railery. Addison.

To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle, and the raileries of the prophane. Rogers.

RAI'MENT, rā'm'ent.²⁰² n. s. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.

His raiments, though mean, received handsomeness by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.

O Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!

Be thou ask'd, that I have took upon me

Such an immodest raiment. Shakespeare.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies. Dryden.

You are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them food, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life. Law.

To RAIN, rāne.²⁰² v. n. [penan, Sax. regen, Dutch.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds.

Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,

That all at once it falls. Dryden.

The wind is south-west, and the weather low'ring and like to rain. Locke.

2. To fall as rain.

The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonished at the raining of it. Ecclus.

They sat them down to weep; nor only tears

Rain'd at their eye, but high winds rose within. Milton.

3. It RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.

That which serves for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack when it begins to rain;

And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare.

It rain'd down fortune, show'ring on your head. Shakespeare.

Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,

Make sacred even his stirrop. Shakespeare.

Israel here had famish'd, had not God

Rain'd from heav'n mauna. Milton.

RAIN, rāne. n. s. [pen, Sax.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.

When shall we three meet again,

In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakespeare.

With strange rains, hails, and showers were they persecuted. Wisdom.

The lost clouds pour

Into the sea an useless show'r,

And the vext sailors curse the rain,

For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Waller.

Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it be condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Ray.

RAIN BOW, rāne'bō.³²⁷ n. s. [rain and bow.]

The iris; the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.

To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shaksp.

The rainbow is drawn like a tympan with large wings dispread in the form of a semicircle, the feathers of sundry colours. Peacham.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sun-shine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled bow,

And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.

Gay rainbow silks her mellow charms unfold,

And nought of Lyce but herself is old. Young.

RAI'NDEER, rāne'déer. n. s. [hpanar, Sax. rangifer, Latin.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

self, to flatter its own laziness.
Locke.

15. To bring from death to life.
He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification.
Romans.

It is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. 1 Corinth.

16. To occasion; to begin.
Raise not a false report.
Exodus.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that wafted over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him.
Brown.

Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.
Milton.

17. To set up; to utter loudly.
All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound.
Dryden.

Soon as the prince appears they raise a cry.
Dryden.

18. To collect; to obtain a certain sum.
Britain, once despis'd, can raise
As ample sums as Rome in Cæsar's days.
Arbut.

I should not thus be bound,
If I had means, and could but raise five pound.
Gay.

19. To collect; to assemble; to levy.
He out of smallest things could without end
Have rais'd incessant armies.
Milton.

20. To give rise to.
Higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name, unless years damp my wing.
Milton.

21. To procure to be bred or propagated:
as, he raised sheep; he raised wheat
where none grew before.

22. To raise is, in all its senses, to elevate from low to high, from mean to illustrious, from obscure to famous, or to do something that may be by an easy

23. To RAISE paste. To form paste into pies without a dish.

Miss Liddy can dance a jig, and raise paste.
Spectator.

RAI'SER, raze'ûr. n. s. [from raise.] He that raises.

And drinke the dark-deepe water of the spring,
Bright Arethusa, the most nourishing
Raiser of heads.
Chapman.

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes.
Daniel.

They that are the first raisers of their houses are most indulgent towards their children.
Bacon.

He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue.
Taylor.

Raiser of human kind! by nature cast,
Naked and helpless.
Thomson.

RAI'SIN, ré'z'n. n. s. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.] Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried: grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and plea-santier than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars.

Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which being betimes distilled, affords an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves.
Boyle.

RAKE, rake. n. s. [rastrum, Lat. pace,
Saxon; racche, Dutch.]

1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.

At midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forkes and thy rakes.
Tusser.

O that thy bounteous deity would please
To guide my rake upon the chinking sound
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground.
Dryd.

He examines his rake in the stream, combs his rueful locks with a rake.
Garth.

2. [racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rekel,
Dutch; a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vitious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.

The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth.
Addison.

Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen.
Men, some to bus'ness, some to pleasure take,
But ev'ry woman is at heart a rake.
Pope.

The sire saw smiling his own virtues wake
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake.
Pope.

To dance at public places, that fops and rakes might admire the fineness of her shape, and the beauty of her motions.
Lavo.

To RAKE, rake. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gather with a rake.
Mow barlie and rake it, and set it on cocks.
Tuss.

Harrows iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up.
May's Virgil's Georgicks.

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dung-hills; and accordingly the apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract.
South.

2. To clear with a rake.
As they rake the green-appearing ground,
The russet hay-cock rises.
Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence.
An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice, or any way hinder the credit of apo-cryphal books, hath caused the collector's pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think,

Hooker.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!
How, i' th' name of thrift,
Does he rake this together?
Shakespeare.

A sport more formidable
Had rak'd together village rabble.
Hudibras.

Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little conscience as they were raked together.
L'Estrange.

4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence.
The statesman rakes the town to find a plot.
Swift.

5. To heap together and cover. To rake the fire is still used.
Here i' th' sands,
Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified
Of murth'rous lechers.
Shakespeare.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
But 'tis the fire rak'd up that has the heat,
And keeps it long.
Suckling.

To RAKE, rake. v. n.

1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.
If you hide the crown
Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it.
Shakespeare.

It is as offensive as to rake into a dunghill.
Another finds the way to dye in grain,
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,
Then melts the mass.
Dryden.

One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be revived, but when sound or significance is wanting.
Dryden.

After having made essays into it, as they do for coals in England, they rake into the most promising parts.
Addison.

2. To pass with violence.
When Pas hand reached him to take,
The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,
And crown'd the earth with his first touching crown.
Sidney.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send.
Dryden.

RA'KER, rake'ûr. n. s. [from rake.] One that rakes.

RA'KEHELL, rake'hél. n. s. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness:
Skinner derives it from racaille, French,
the rabble; Junius from rekel, Dutch,
a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, sorry fellow.

Out of the frie of these rakehell horse-boys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern supplied.
Spenser.

The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, said in sport, that the king of rakehells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him.
Bacon.

A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, profaneness, intemperance, and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined.
Swift.

RA'KEHELLY, rake'hél-lè. adj. [from rake-hell.] Wild, dissolute.

I scorn the rakehellly rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment
jangle, and without reason rage and foam.
Spenser.

No breaking of windows or glasses for spight,
And spoiling the goods for a rakehellly prank.
Ben Jonson.

RA'KISH, rake'ish. adj. [from rake.] Loose;
lewd, dissolute.

There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a rakish heart. Clarissa.

To RA'LLY, rá'l'le. v. a. [rallier, French.]

1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.

With rallied arms to try what may be yet
Regain'd in heaven. Milton.

Publick arguing serves to whet the wits of heretics, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy. Decay of Piety.

Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without. Atterbury.

2. [rallier, French.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.

Honeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life. Spectator.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire. Addison.

Strephon had long confess'd his am'rous pain,
Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain. Gay.

To RA'LLY, rá'l'le. v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.

If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world. Tillotson.

2. To come again into order.

The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
With fury charge us. Dryden.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.

RAM, rám. n. s. [nam, Saxon; ram, Dut.]

1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.

The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams.
Shakespeare.

An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender.
Shakespeare.

Much like a well-growne bel-weather or felted ram he shews. Chapman.

You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands. Peacham.

A ram their off'ring, and a ram their meat.
Dryden.

2. Aries, the vernal sign.

The ram having pass'd the sea, serenely shines,
And leads the year. Creerh.

3. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.

Let not the peac of virtue,
Which is set as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded be the ram to batter
The fortress of it. Shakespeare.

Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did east down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls. 2 Maccabees.

To RAM, rám. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.

Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren. Shakespeare.

Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he set one of the gates on fire. Bacon.

The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopped, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report. Bacon.

Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sunshine. Addison.

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.

As when that devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and framed by furies kill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill.
Spenser.

He that proves the king.

To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.
Shakespeare.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.

This into hollow engines, long and round,
Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire
Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
Such implements of mischief as shall dash
To pieces. Milton.

A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some sound materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid. Arbutnot.

RA'MAGE, rám'idje. n. s. [from ramus, Lat.] Branches of trees.

MAGE.

To RA'MBLE, rám'bl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [rammelen, Dutch, to rove loosely in lust;
ramb, Swedish, to rove.] To rove loosely and irregularly; to wander.

Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself. South.

He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind? Locke.

Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase so loose and rambling as his. Pope.

Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow. Swift.

O'er his ample sides the rambling sprays Luxuriant shoot. Thomson.

RA'MBLE, rám'bl. n. s. [from the verb.]

Wandering; irregular excursion.

This conceit puts us upon the ramble up and down for relief, till very weariness brings us at last to ourselves. L'Estrange.

Coming home after a short Christmas ramble, I found a letter upon my table. Swift.

She quits the narrow path of sense.

For a dear ramble through impertinence. Swift.

RA'MBLER, rám'bl-úr. n. s. [from ramble.]

[ramification, Fr. from ramus, Lat.]

1. Division or separation into branches;

the act of branching out.

By continuation of profane histories or other monuments kept together, the genealogies and ramifications of some single families to a vast extension may be preserved. Hale.

2. Small branches.

As the blood and chyle pass together through the ramifications of the pulmonary artery, they will still more perfectly mixed; but if a pipe is divided into branches, and these again subdivided, the red and white liquors, as they pass through the ramifications, will be more intimately mixed; the more ramifications, the mixture will be the more perfect.

Arbutnot.

To RA'MIFY, rám'mè-fi.¹⁸³ v. a. [ramifier, Fr. ramus and facio, Lat.] To separate into branches.

The mint, grown to have a pretty thick stalk, with the various and ramified roots, which it shot into the water, presented a spectacle not unpleasant to behold. Boyle.

To RA'MIFY, rám'mè-fi. v. n. To be parted into branches.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fœtid smell, especially if cut when they are white; when they are older and begin to ramify, they lose this quality. Arbutnot.

RA'MMER, rám'múr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from ram.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is driven hard.

The master bricklayer must try the foundations under the tongue: it is made by congestion, and its progress filleth up the space between the jaws, and maketh a tumour externally under the chin.

Wiseman.

RANUNCULUS, rá-núng'kù-lús. n. s. Crowfoot.

Ranunculuses excel all flowers in the richness of their colours; of them there is a great variety.
Mortimer.

To RAP, ráp. v. n. [hɾæppan, Sax.]

1. To strike with a quick smart blow.
Knock me at this gate,
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.
Shaksp.

With one great peal they rap the door,
Like footmen on a visiting day. Prior.

2. To RAP out. To utter with hasty violence.

He was provoked in the spirit of magistracy, upon discovering a judge who rapped out a great oath at his footman. Addison.

To RAP, ráp. v. a. [from rapio extra se,
Latin.]

1. To affect with rapture; to strike with ecstasy; to hurry out of himself.

These are speeches of men, not comforted with the hope of that they desire, but rapped with admiration at the view of enjoyed bliss. Hooker.

Beholding the face of God, in admiration of so great excellency, they all adore him; and being rapt with the love of his beauty, they cleave inseparably for ever unto him. Hooker.

What thus raps you? are you well? Shaksp.

The government I east upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies. Shaksp.

You're rapt in some work, some dedication.
Shakespeare.

Circled me

With all their welcomes, and as chearfully
Disposed their rapt minds, as if there they saw Their naturall countrie. Chapman.

The rocks that did more high their foreheads raise

To his rapt eye. Chapman.
I'm rapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears.
Addison.

It is impossible duly to consider these things without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the divine architect. Cheyne.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive, a virgin bear a son! Pope.
Let heav'n scize it, all at once 'tis fir'd,
Not touch'd but rapt; not waken'd, but inspir'd.
Pope.

2. To snatch away.
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shyne.
Spenser.

Underneath a bright sea flow'd
Of jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
Who after came from earth, sailing arriv'd
Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake
Rapt in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds. Milton.

Standing on earth, not rapt above the pole.
Milton.

3. To seize by violence.
Adult'rous Jour, the king of Mambrant, rap'd
Fair Josien his dear love. Drayton.

4. To exchange; to truck. A low word.
To RAP and rend, ráp. [more properly rap and ran; næpan, Saxon, to bind, and rana, Islandick, to plunder.] To seize by violence.

Their husbands robb'd, and made hard shifts
To administer unto their gifts
All they could rap and rend and pilfer,
To scraps and ends of gold and silver. Hudibras.

RAP, ráp. n. s. [from the verb.] A quick smart blow.

How comest thou to go with thy arm tied up? has old Lewis given thee a rap over thy fingers ends?
Arbutnot.

RAPA'CIOUS, rá-pá'shús. adj. [rapace,
Fr. rapax, Latin.] Given to plunder;
seizing by violence.

Well may thy lord, appeas'd,
Redeem thee quite from death's rapacious claim.
Milton.

Shall this prize,
Soon heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
On that rapacious band for ever blaze? Pope.

RAPA'CIOUSLY, rá-pá'shús-lé. adv. [from rapacious.] By rapine; by violent robbery.

RAPACIOUSNESS, râ-pâ'shûs-nês. n. s. [from rapacious.] The quality of being rapacious.

RAPACITY, râ-pâs'sè-tè. n. s. [rapacité, Fr. rapacitas, from rapax, Lat.] Ad-dictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenousness.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church. Sprat.

RAPÉ, râpè. n. s. [raft, French; raftus, Latin.]

1. Violent defloration of chastity.

You are both decypher'd
For villains mark'd with rape. Shaksp.

Rape call you it, to seize my own,
My true betrothed love? Shaksp.

The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards assent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest. Bacon.

Witness that night
In Gibeah, when the hospital door
Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape. Milton.

The haughty fair,
Who not the rape ev'n of a god could bear. Dryden.
Tell the Thracian tyrant's alter'd shape,
And dire revenge of Philomela's rape. Roscommon.

2. Privation; act of taking away.

Pear grew after pear,
Fig after fig came, time made never rape
Of any dainty there. Chapman.

3. Something snatched away.

Sad widows by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
Where now are all my hopes? oh never more Shall they revive! nor death her rapes restore! Sandys.

4. Fruit plucked from the cluster.

The juice of grapes is drawn as well from the rape, or whole grapes plucked from the cluster, and wine poured upon them in a vessel, as from a vat, where they are bruised. Ray.

5. A division of the county of Sussex answering to a hundred in other counties.

6. A plant from the seed of which oil is expressed.

RAPID, râp'id. adj. [rapide, Fr. rapidus, Latin.] Quick; swift.

Part shun the goal with rapid wheels. Milton.
While you so smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,
That rapid motion does but rest appear. Dryden.

RAPIDITY, râ-pid'è-tè. n. s. [rapidite, Fr. rapiditas, from rapidus, Lat.] Celerity; velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them so by our rapidity of pronunciation. Spectator.

RAPIDLY, râp'id-lè. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

RAPIDNESS, râp'id-nês. n. s. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.

RAPIER, râ-pè-èr. n. s. [rapiere, Fr. so called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thrusting.

I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forg'd, with my rapier's point. Shakspere.

A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope.

RAPIER-FISH, râ-pè-èr-fish. n. s. The swordfish.

The rapier-fish, called xiphias, grows sometimes to the length of five yards: the sword, which grows level from the snout of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew.

RAPINE, râp'in. n. s. [rapina, Latin; rapine, Fr.]

1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. King Charles.

The logick of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decay of Piety.

2. Violence; force.

Her least action overaw'd
His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd
His fierceness of its fierce intent. Milton.

RAPPER, râp'pûr. n. s. [from raft.] One who strikes.

RAPPORT, râp-pôrt'. n. s. [rapport, Fr.]

Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others.
'Tis obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.

TO RAPT, râpt. v. n. [This word is used by Chapman for raft improperly, as appears from the participle, which from raft would be not raft, but rafted.] To ravish; to put in ecstasy.

You may safe approve,
How strong an instigation to their love
Their raping tunes are. Odyssey.

RAPT, râpt. n. s. [from raft.] A trance; an ecstasy.

RAPTURE, râp'tshûrè. n. s.

1. Violent seizure.

And thicke into our ship, he threw his flash:
That 'gainst a rocke, or flat, her keele, did dash
With headlong rapture. Chapman.

2. Ecstasy, transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.

Could virtue be seen, it would beget love, and advance it not only into admiration, but rapture. Holiday

Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. Spectator.

You grow correct, that once with rapture writ. Pope.

3. Rapidity; haste.

The watry throng,
Wave rowling after wave, where way they found,
If steep, with torrent rapture; if through plain Soft ebbing; nor withstood them rock or hill. Milton.

RAPTURED, râp'tshûr'd. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported. A bad word.

He drew
Such madning draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while cancell'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson.

RAPTUREOUS, râp'tshûr-ûs. adj. [from rapture.] Ecstatick; transporting.

Nor will he be able to forbear a raptureous acknowledgment of the infinite wisdom and contrivance of the divine artificer. Blackmore.

Are the pleasures of it so inviting and raptureous?

is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Culier.

RARE, râre. adj. [rarus, Latin; rare, Fr. in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon; not frequent.

Live to be the shew and gaze o' th' time;
We'll have you, as our rarer monisters are,
Painted upon a pole. Shaksp.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.

This jealousy
Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
Must it be great; and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shaksp.

On which was wrought the gods and giants fight,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight. Cowley.
Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.

3. Thinly scattered.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upsprung. Milton.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.

They are of so tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon.

So eagerly the fiend
O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way. Milton.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost invisible. Newton.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton.

5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire.

This is often pronounced rear.
New-laid eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RAREESHOW, râ-rè-shò. n. s. [This word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rareeshow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.

Of rareeshows he sung, and Punch's feats. Gay.

RAREFACTION, râ-rè-fâk'shûn. n. s. [rarefaction, Fr. from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before: contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rarefaction resolv'd into wind, will force up the smok. Wotton.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnet.

RAREFIABLE, râ-rè-fi-â-bl. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

TO RAREFY, râ-rè-fi. v. a. [rarefier, Fr. rarus and facio, Latin; rarefy were more proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

RAREFY, râ-rè-fi. v. n. To become thin.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more,
The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden.

RA'RELY, rare'lè. adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

His temperance in sleep resembled that of his meats; midnight being the usual time of his going to rest, and four or five, and very rarely six, the hour of his rising. Fell.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. Dryden.

Vanessa in her bloom,
Advance'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately. This is now seldom used but ironically.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakspeare.

RA'RENESS, rare'nès. n. s. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes, and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touched there, for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rareness of touch, doth further. Bacon.

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition,
I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make;
Accept it as when early fruit we send,
And let the rareness the small gift commend. Dryden.

2. Value arising from scarcity.

Roses set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use. Bacon.

To worthiest things,
Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.

3. Thinness; tenuity.

4. Distance from each other; thinness.

RA'RITY, rare'tè, or rare'té.^{530 511} n. s. [rarité, Fr. raritas, Lat.]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

Far from being fond of any flower for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spectator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.

Sorrow would be a rarity most beloved,
If all could so become it. Shakspeare.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one shew us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the place. Addison.

3. Thinness, subtilty: the contrary to density.

Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley.

RA'RSAL, rare'sâl.⁸⁹ n. s. [rarsal, Saxon, a lean beast.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a sorry wretch.

For the rascal commons, lest he eared.
And when him list the rascal routs appal,
Men into stones therewith he could transwear. Spenser.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends:
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces. Shakspeare.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor. Shakspeare.

But for our gentlemen,

The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakspeare.

I am accurst to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath remov'd my horse. Shakspeare.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rascal. Swift.

2. RASCAL deer are still mentioned for lean deer.

RASCA'LION, rare-kâl'yûn.¹¹³ n. s. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people

That proud dame
Us'd him so like a base rascalion,
That old Pig—what d'ye call him—malion,
That cut his mistress out of stone,
Had not so hard a hearted one. Hudibras.

RASCA'LITY, rare-kâl'è-tè. n. s. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs. Glanville.

Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying, and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RA'SCALLY, rare'sâl-e. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.

Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheepbiter come by some notable shame? Shakspeare.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time. Swift.

TO RASE, rare, or raze. ^{437 407} v. a. This word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, ferstringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; raser, Fr. rasus, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the boar had rased off his helm. Shakspeare.

Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that rased his cheek, have gone into his head? South.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.

Her battering engines bent to raze some city. Milton.

3. To blot out by rasure; to erase.

Though of their names in heav'nly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rased. Milton.

RASE, rare. n. s. [from To rase.]

1. A cancel.

2. A slight wound.

RASH, rash. adj. [rasch, Dutch.]

1. Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit. Ascham.

Blast her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on me. Shakspeare.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Ecclesiastius.

Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat. Milton.

2. Hasty; requiring haste. Not in use.

I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash. Shakspeare.

RA'SHER, rash'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [rasura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.

If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money. Shakspeare.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rashers of sing'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.
Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rasher from the coals. King.

RA'SHLY, rash'lè. adv. [from rash.] Hastily; violently; without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rashly plotted. Shakspeare.

Men are not rashly to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon.

He that doth any thing rashly, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estrange.

Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly base to injure Phœdra,
So rashly brave to dare the sword of Theseus. Smith.

RA'SHNESS, rash'nès. n. s. [from rash.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rashness. Hooker.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispence,
But with cool prudence age doth recompence. Denham.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth; yet we offend not properly by falsehood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rashness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.

The vain Morat by his own rashness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,
Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryden.

RASP, rasp. n. s. [raspio, Ital.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.

Set sorrel amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller. Bacon.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philips.

TO RASP, rasp. v. a. [raspen, Dut. rasper, Fr. raspare, Ital.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wiseman.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes. Mozon.

RASP, rasp. n. s. [from the verb.] A large rough file commonly used to wear away wood.

Case-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron, and case-hardened. Mozon.

RA'SPATORY, rasp'â-tûr-è. n. s. [raspatoir, Fr. from raspi.] A surgeon's rasp.

I put into his mouth a rasperatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to a crust. Wiseman.

RA'SPBERRY, or Raspberry, răs'bêr-ê. n. s.
A kind of berry.
Raspberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasiest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer.

RA'SPBERRY-BUSH, răs'bêr-rê-bûsh. n. s.
A species of bramble.

RA'SURE, răs'zhûre.⁴⁰⁹ n. s. [rasura, Lat.]

RATE, râte. n. s. [ratius, Lat. rate, old Fr.]

1. Price fixed on any thing.
How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected! Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,
To buy an empire at so base a rate. Dryden

The price of land has never chang'd, the several changes have been made in the rate of interests by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.

2. Allowance settled.
His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day. 2 Kings.
They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments Addison.

3. Degree; comparative height or value.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shaksp.
In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other men's in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy.

To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.

4. Quantity assignable.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shaksp.
5. That which sets value; principle on which value is set.

Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserved to have the tongue cut out. South.

A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridged
From such a noble rate. Shakspere.

Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough. Clarendon.

Tom hinting at his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Addison.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.
They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.

To RATE, râte. v. a. from the noun.

1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. Shakspere.

We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentrate into felicity. Boyle.

You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.

2. [reita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.

Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shakspere.
An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir. Shakspere.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour when his conscience shall take him aside and rate him by himself? South.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.

To RATE, râte. v. n. To make an estimate.

In rating when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandize every affront or injury that is done to ourselves. Kettlewell.

RATH, râth. n. s. A hill I know not whence derived.

There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between towships or private persons. Spenser.

RATH, râth. adj. [pað, Sax. quickly.]
Early; coming before the usual time.

Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all to rath
The ear, that budded fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenser.

Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden some, and some of purple rind. May Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies.

The tufted crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.
RA'THER, rât'h'ûr, or rât'hûr. adv. [This is a comparative from rath; pað, Sax. soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]

1. More willingly; with better liking.
Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.

'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right, by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is. Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.
He sought through the world, but sought in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dryden.

4. More properly.
This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature. Shakspere.

5. Especially.
You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shakspere.

6. To have RATHER, [This is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impenitence to apply the discipline of severity; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Reggers.

RATIFICA'TION, rât-tê-fê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.

RA'TIFIER, rât'tê-fi-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.

They cry, "chuse we Læertes for our king;"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakspere.

To RA'TIFY, rât'tê-fi. v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.] To confirm; to settle; to establish.

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.

By the help of these, with him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shakspere.

We have ratified unto them the borders of Judea. 1 Maccabees.

God ratified their prayers by the judgment brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against. South.

Tell me, my friend, from whence hadst thou the skill,

So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.

RATIO, răs'shê-ô. n. s. [Lat.] Proportion.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cleigne.

To RATIO'CINATE, răs'h-ê-ôs ê-nâte.

v. n. [ratiocinor, Lat.] To reason; to argue.

RATIFICATION, rāsh-è-òs-è-ná'shún.⁵³⁶
n. s. [ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of ratiocination. Brown.

The discerning of that connexion or dependence which there is betwixt several propositions, where-by we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called ratiocination or discourse. Wilkins.

Can any kind of ratiocination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.

Such an inscription would be self-evident without any ratiocination or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.

RATIOGINATIVE, rāsh-è-òs-è-nā-tív. adj. [ratiocinate.] Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees the object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale.

RATIONAL, rāsh'ún-ál.⁶⁰⁷ adj. [rationalis, Latin.]

1. Having the power of reasoning.

God decreed to create man after his own image, a free and rational agent. Hammond.

As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, considered as a sensitive being, is stiled natural good; so that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary and free agent, is stiled moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil. Wilkins.

If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature; then it must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power. Law.

2. Agreeable to reason.

What higher in her society thou find'st Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.

When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glanville.

If your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic part swallow up the rational. Swift.

3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.

RATIONALLE, rā-shún-ál'. n. s. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons: as Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.

RATIONALIST, rāsh'ún-ál-list. n. s. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.

RATIONALITY, rāsh-è-ò-nál'è-tè. n. s. [from rational.]

1. The power of reasoning.

When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Government of the Tongue.

2. Reasonableness.

In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown.

RATIONALLY, rāsh'ún-ál-è. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.

RATIONALNESS, rāsh'ún-ál-nès. n. s. [from rational.] The state of being rational.

RATSBANE, ráts'bāne. n. s. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.

He would throw ratsbane up and down a house, where children might come at it. L'Estrange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance? Unless the new-found pois'ning trick of France; And when their art of ratsbane we have got, By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot. Dryden.

I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but sack might do it, though ratsbane would not. Swift to Pope.

RATTEEN, rá-téén'. n. s. A kind of stuff.

We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen, And Anthony shall court her in ratteen. Swift.

TO RATTLE, rá'tl.⁴⁰⁵ v. n. [ratelen, Dut.]

1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.

The quiver rattleth against him. Job.
The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nahum.

They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell; He fagoted his notions as they fell, And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden.

There she assembles all her blackest storms, And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addis.

2. To speak eagerly and noisily.

With jealous eyes at distance she hath seen Whisp'ring with Jove the silver-footed queen; Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke, Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.
He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an assertor of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery. Swift.

TO RATTLE, rá'tl. v. a.

1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.

Her chains she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.

2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.

Sound but another, and another shall, As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear, And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakspeare.

He should be well enough able to scatter the Irish as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon.

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.

Hearing Æsop had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for robbing his house. L'Est.

She that would sometimes rattle off her servants sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took notice. Arbuthnot.

RATTLE, rá'tl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick noise nimbly repeated.

I'll hold ten pound my dream is out; I'd tell it you but for the rattle Of those confounded drums. Prior.

2. Empty and loud talk.

All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit. Hakevill.

3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.

The rattles of Isis and the cymbals of Brasilca nearly enough resemble each other. Raleigh.

Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glanville.

They want no rattles for their froward mood, Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food. Dryden.

Farewel then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy, The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy; What right, what true, what fit we justly call, Let this be all my care, for this is all. Pope.

4. A plant. [crista galli, Latin.] An herb resembling a cock's comb; lousewort.

RATTLEHEADED, rá'tl-héd-éd. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.

RATTLESNAKE, rá'tl-snáke. n. s. A kind of serpent.

The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail. Grew.

She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake. Moore.

RATTLESNAKE Root, rá'tl-suáke-róót. n. s.

Rattlesnake root, called also seneca, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake. Hill.

TO RAVAGE, ráv'vídje.⁹⁰ v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.

Already Cæsar Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.

His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill, The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thomson.

RAVAGE, ráv'vídje. n. s. [ravage, French, from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise, To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden.

Would one think 'twere possible for love To make such ravage in a noble soul! Addison.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts. Bentley.

RAVAGER, ráv'vídje-úr.⁹³ n. s. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers. Swift.

RAUCITY, ráw'sè-tè. n. s. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness: loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an increase of sweetness; as in the purling of a wreathed string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon.

TO RAVE, ráve. v. n. [reven, Dut. rever, French.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Gov. of the Tongue.

It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wiseman.

Her grief has wrought her into frenzy; The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed: Sometimes she raves for music, light, and air;

Nor air, nor light, nor musick calm her pains.

Smith

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall these wild distempers of thy mind,
This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find
No opposition.

Sandys.

Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air at no mark, and so to no purpose.

Temple.

Wonder at my patience,
Have I not cause to rave, and heat my breast,
To read my heart with grief, and run distracted?

Addison.

Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,
I'll cry for vengeance.

Southern.

He swore he could not leave me,
With ten thousand ravings.

Rosce.

3. To be unreasonably fond: with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is as fantastical and wild, attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires.

Locke.

To RA'VEL, râv'-v'l.¹⁰² v. a. [ravelen, Dut. to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwist one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

If then such ravel the Macedonian got,
For having rudely cut the Gordian knot,
What glory's due to him, who e'er'd divide
Such ravel'd int'rests, has the knot untied,
And without stroke so smooth a passage made,
Where craft and malice such obstructions laid?

Waller.

2. To unweave; to unknit: as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of reechy kisses
Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out.

Shakspeare

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.

They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of their single, seem harsh to them.

Digby.

To RA'VEL, râv'-v'l. v. n.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me.

Shakspeare.

Give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution;
Till by their own perplexities involv'd,
They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self-satisfying solution.

Milton.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances.

Decay of Piety.

The humour of raveling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes.

Temple.

RA'VELIN, râv'-lîn. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courtines or counterscarps.

Dict.

RA'VEN, râ'-v'n.¹⁰³ n. s. [h̄ræfn̄, Sax.]

A large black fowl, whose cry is supposed ominous.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That cokes the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements.

Shakspeare.

Come thou day in night,
Far thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter than snow upon a raven's back.

Shakspeare.

I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers.

Boyle.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias' caterers, and bring him food.

King Charles.

On several parts a several praise bestows,
The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose,

The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek.

Dryden.

The raven once in snowy plumes was drest,
White as the whitest dove's unsully'd breast,
His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite

To sooty blackness from the purest white.

Addison.

Hence Gildon rails, that raven of the pit,
Who thrives upon the carcasses of wit.

Young.

To RA'VEN, râv'-v'n.¹⁰³ v. a. [ræfn̄, Sax. to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.

Thriftless ambition! that will raven up
Thine own life's means.

Shakspeare.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that raven down their proper hane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.

Shakspeare.

The cloyed will
That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both filled and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage.

Shakspeare.

There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravening the prey.

Ezekiel.

To RA'VEN, râv'-v'n. v. n. To prey with rapacity.

Benjamin shall raven as a wolf, in the morning
he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil.

Genesis.

They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

Psalms.

The more they fed, they raven'd still for more;
They drai'd from Dan, and left Beersheba poor;
But when some lay preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance.

Dryd.

Convulsions rack man's nerves and cares his breast,
His flying life is chas'd by rav'ning pains
Through all his doubles in the winding veins.

Blackmore.

RA'VENOUS, râv'-v'n-ûs. adj. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.

Thy desires

Arc wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

Shakspeare.

As when a flock

Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses.

Milton.

What! the kind Ismena,

That nurs'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh, she watch'd me,

As rav'nous vultures watch the dying lion.

Smith.

RA'VENOUSLY, râv'-v'n-ûs-lè. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.

RA'VENOUSNESS, râv'-v'n-ûs-nês. n. s. [from ravenous.] Rage for prey; furious voracity.

The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence.

Hale.

RAUGHT, râwt. The old pret. and part. pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,

The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought.

Spenser

In like delights of bloody game
He trained was till ripier years he raught,
And there abode whilst any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest.

Spenser.

This staff of honour raught, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand.

Shakspeare.

The hand of death has raught him.

Shakspeare.

Grittus furiously running in upon Schendon, violently raught from his head his rich cap of sables, and with his horsemen took him.

Knolles.

RA'VIN, râv'-în. n. s. [from raven: this were better written raven.]

1. Prey; food gotten by violence.

The lion strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

Nahum.

To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best, where most with ravin I may meet.

Milton.

2. Rapine; rapaciousness.

They might not lie in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape.

Ray.

RA'VINGLY, râv'-îng-lè.¹¹⁰ adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.

Will quicken and accuse thee.

Shakspeare.

Their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps.

Shakspeare.

His sire appear'd;
And all his praise, to every syllable heard
But then a rocke, in size more amplified,
Then first he ravish't to him.

Chapman.

I owe myself the care,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite,
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right.

Dryd.

3. To delight to rapture; to transport.

Thou hast ravished my heart.
Be thou ravished always with her love.

Proverbs.

RA'VISHER, râv'-îsh-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [ravisser, French; from ravish.]

1. He that embraces a woman by violence.

They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children.

Spenser.

A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if she desire it.

Taylor

Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn ravisher to keep you here.

Dryden.

2. One who takes any thing by violence.

Shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?

Pope.

RA'VISHINGLY, râv'-îsh-ing-lè. adv. [from ravishing.] To extremity of pleasure.

Fatal this marriage, cancelling your fame,
Razing the characters of your renown. Shaksp.

Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shaksp.
He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton.

3. To extirpate.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And RAZE their factions and their family. Shaksp.

RA'ZOR, ra'zur.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [rasor, Latin.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded. Hooker.
These words are razors to my wounded heart. Shakespeare.
Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdued. Milton.
Razor makers generally clap a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Moxon.
As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set,
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen. Young.

RAZORS of a boar, ra'zurz. A boar's tusks.

RA'ZORABLE, ra'zur-â-bl. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.

RA'ZURE, ra'zûre.⁴⁸⁴ n. s. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Lat.] Act of erasing.
Oh! your desert speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And razure of oblivion. Shaksp.

RE, ré. Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action: as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back: reciprocation, as to recriminate. It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to insert. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.

REACCE'SS, ré-âk-sés'. n. s. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun. Hakewill.

To REACH, rétsh.²⁷⁷ v. a. ancient preterit raught. [pæcan, Sax.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.
Round the tree
They longing stood, but could not reach. Milton.
What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to rise and reach
Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scaffolding
Of sceptres, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd? Congreve.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.

The coast so long desir'd
Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent.
Dryden.

What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he reaches no bottom.
Locke.

It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands.
Pope.

3. To strike from a distant place.
O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the beast!
Dryden.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
He reached me a full cup.

Locke.
If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine.
Locke.

11. To extend to.
Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame.
Milton.
Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death.
Addison.

12. To extend; to spread abroad.
Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs.
Milton.

13. To take in the hand.
Lest he reach of the tree of life, and eat.
Milton.

To REACH, *rêsh.*³⁶² v. n.

1. To be extended.
We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws, doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach.
Hooker.

The new world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropick to the other.
Boyle.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther.
Locke.

If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave.
Addison.

The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason.
Swift.

2. To be extended far.
Great men have reaching hands.
Shaksp.

3. To penetrate.
He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage, that reacheth up into heaven.

We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time.
Addison.

4. To make efforts to attain.
Could a sailor always supply new linc, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity.

Locke.

REACH, rêsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.

2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.

There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open.
Locke.

3. Power of attainment or management.
In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him.
Locke.

4. Power; limit of faculties.
Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe.
Addison.

Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go.
Pope.

5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.
Hayward.

Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches.
Hovel.

6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.
The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.
Bacon.

7. Tendency to distant consequences.
Strain not my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.
Shaksp.

8. Extent.
The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world: and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd.
Milton.

To REACT, rê-âkt'. v. a. [re and act.]
To return the impulse or impression.
The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly.
Arbuthnot.

Cut off your hand, and you may do
With t' other hand the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts.
Swift.

REACTION, rê-âk'shùn. n. s. [reaction, French; from react.] The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.

Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest, their parts heating one another; and may not great, dense, and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflexions and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain degree of heat, such as is that of the sun?
Newton.

Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them.
Arbuthnot.

READ, rêéd. n. s. [ræð, Saxon; ræed, Dutch.]

1. Counsel.
The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear.
Sternhold.

Addison.

REA'SON, ré'z'n.¹⁷⁰ 227 n. s. [raison, Fr. ratio, Lat.]

1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty; discursive power.

Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason.

Hooker.

Though brutish that contest and foul, When reason hath to deal with force; yet so

Most reason is that reason overcome.

Milton.

I appeal to the common judgment of mankind, whether the humane nature be not so framed, as to acquiesce in such a moral certainty, as the nature of things is capable of; and if it were otherwise, whether that reason which belongs to us, would not prove a burden and a torment to us, rather than a privilege, by keeping us in a continual suspense, and thereby rendering our conditions perpetually restless and unquiet.

Wilkins.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers, is reason to the soul: and as on high, Those rowling fires discover but the sky,

Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,

But guide us upward to a better day.

Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turned by his interests, his passions, and his vices.

Swift.

2. Cause; ground or principle.

What the apostles deemed rational and probable means to that end, there is no reason or probability to think should ever in any produce this effect.

Hammoud.

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness.

Tilletson.

3. Efficient cause.

Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Such a benefit, as by the antecedent will of Christ is intended to all men living, though all men, by reason of their own demerits, do not actually receive the fruit of it. White.

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Hale.

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been over-ruled to approach this place. Sprat.
I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.

4. Final cause.

Reason in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause. Locke.

5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive.

I mask the business from the common eye For sundry weighty reasons. Shaksp.

If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson.

If we commemorate any mystery of our redemption, or article of our faith, we ought to confirm our belief of it, by considering all those reasons upon which it is built; that we may be able to give a good account of the hope that is in us. Nelson.

6. Ratiocination; discursive act.

When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,

The name of reason she obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, she understanding is. Davies.

7. Clearness of faculties.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shaksp.

When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakspere.

8. Right; justice.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme:
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

Are you in earnest?
—Ay and resolved withal
To do myself this reason and this right. Shakspere.

The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillingfleet.

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryd.

9. Reasonable claim; just practice.

God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.

Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.

A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden.

We have as great assurance that there is a God as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have. Tillotson.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

10. Rationale; just account.

This reason did the ancient fathers render, why the church was called Catholic. Pearson.

To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.

1. Moderation; moderate demands.

The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.

To REA'SON, rè'z'n. v. n. [raisonner, Fr.]

1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.

No man in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.

Ideas, are ranked under names, are those that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.

Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost In high ambition. Addison.

In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong,
Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some serious song. Tickel.

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shaks.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the narrow seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shaksp.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Samuel.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make inquiries.

Jesus, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts? Luke.

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Mill.
Down reason then, at least vain reasoning down. Milton.

To REASON, rè'z'n. v. a. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of speech.

When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reasoned in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Burnet.

REA'SONABLE, rè'z'n-â-bl. adj. [raison, Fr.]

1. Having the faculty of reasoning; endowed with reason.

She perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his hurt was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible part. Sidn.

2. Acting, speaking, or thinking rationally.

The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such forces, as were held sufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward.

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.

By indubitable certainty, I mean that which doth not admit of any reasonable cause of doubting, which is the only certainty of which most things are capable. Wilkins.

A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the law-givers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.

Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakspere.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.

I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the princess Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one princess oweth to another. Sidney.

A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four several lands of reasonable quantity. Abbot.

Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies.

REA'SONABLENESS, rè'z'n-â-bl-nès. n. s. [from reasonable.]

1. The faculty of reason.

2. Agreeableness to reason.

They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon.

He that rightly understands the reasonableness and excellency of charity, will know, that it can never be excusable to waste any of our money in pride and folly. Law.

3. Compearance with reason.

The passive reason, which is more properly reasonableness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

4. Moderation.

REA'SONABLY, rè'z'n-â-blè. adv. [from reasonable.]

1. Agreeably to reason.

Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden.

The church has formerly had eminent saints in that sex; and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to the poor and vain education, that this honour of their sex is for the most part confined to former ages. Law.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.

Some man reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon.

If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken. Holder.

REA'SONER, rè'z'n-ûr. n. s. [raisonneur, French; from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.

Due reverence pay
To learned Epicurus; see the way
By which this reas'ner of so high renown Moves through th' ecliptic road the rolling sun. Blackmore.

The terms are loose and undefined; and what less becomes a fair reasoner, he puts wrong and invidious names on every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.

Those reasoners who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REA'SONING, rè'z'n-ing. n. s. [from reason.] Argument.

Those who would make use of solid arguments and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshipped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it. Addison.

Your reasonings therefore on this head, amount only to what the schools call ignorantio elenchi; proving before the question, on talking wide of the purpose. Waterland.

REA'SONLESS, rè'z'n-lès. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.

This proffer is absurd and reasonless. Shakspere.

Is it
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus. Shaksp.

That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolved; for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh.

These reasons in love's law have past for good, Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton.

To RECA'LL, ré-kâll'. v. a. [re and call.]

To call back; to call again; to revoke.

They who *reca*l the church unto that which was at the first, must set bounds unto their speeches. Hooker.

If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. Shakspeare.

Neglected long, she let the secret rest,
Till love recall'd it to her lab'ring breast. Dryden.

It is strange the soul should never once *reca*l over any of its pure native ideas, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never any other ideas, but what derive their original from that union. Locke.

To the churches, wherein they were ordained,
they might of right be recalled as to their proper church, under pain of excommunication. Ayliffe.

It is necessary to recall to the reader's mind, the desire Ulysses has to reach his own country. Broome.

If princes whose dominions lie contiguous, be forced to draw from those armies which act against France, we must hourly expect having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us in the midst of a siege. Swift.

RECA'LL, ré-kâll'. n. s. [from the verb.] Revocation; act or power of calling back.

Other decrees

Against these are gone forth without recall. Milton.

'Tis done, and since 'tis done, 'tis past *reca*l;
And since 'tis past *reca*l, must be forgotten. Dryden.

To RECA'NT, ré-kânt'. v. a. [recanto, Latin.] To retract, to recall; to contradict what one has once said or done.

He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon that I late pronounced. Shakspeare.

How soon would ease recant
Vows made in pain as violent and void? Milton.

To RECA'NT, ré-kânt'. v. n. To revoke a position; to unsay what has been said.

If it be thought that the praise of a translation consists in adding new beauties, I shall be willing to recant. Dryden.

That the legislature should have power to change the succession, whenever the necessities of the kingdom require, is so useful towards preserving our religion and liberty, that I know not how to recant. Swift.

RECANTA'TION, ré-kân-tâ'shûn. n. s.

[from recant.] Retraction; declaration contradictory to a former declaration.

She could not see means to join this recantation

And told me of a mistress. Shakspeare.

It must be done upon the receipt of the wound,
before the patient's spirits be overheated. Wiseman.

The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory must not be expressed like the ecstasy of a harlequin, on the receipt of a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

2. The place of receiving.

Jesus saw Matthew sitting at the receipt of custom. Matthew.

3. [recepte, French.] A note given, by which money is acknowledged to have been received.

4. Reception; admission.

It is of things heavenly an universal declaration, working in them, whose hearts God inspirith with the due consideration thereof, an habit or disposition of mind, whereby they are made fit vessels, both for the receipt and delivery of whatsoever spiritual perfection. Hooker.

5. Reception; welcome.

The same words in my lady Philoclea's mouth might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt. Sidney.

Jove requite,
And all th' immortal gods, with that delight
Thou most desir'st, thy kind receite of me;
Of friend to humane hospitality. Chapman.

6. [recipe.] Prescription of ingredients for any composition.

On 's bed of death
Many receipts he gave me, chiefly one
Of his old experience th' only darling. Shaksp.

I'll teach him a receipt to make Words that weep and tears that speak. Cowley.

That Medea could make old men young again, was nothing else, but that, from knowledge of simples,
she had a receipt to make white hair black. Brown.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude,
While growing pains pronounce the humours crude. Dryden.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.

Scribonius found the receipt in a letter wrote to Tiberius, and was never able to procure the receipt during the emperor's life. Arbutnot.

RECEI'VABLE, ré-sé'vâ-bl. adj. [recevable, French; from receive.] Capable of being received.

To RECEI'VE, ré-séve'. v. a. [recevoir, French, recepio, Latin.]

A certain nobleman went into a far country to *receiv*e for himself a kingdom, and return. Luke.

2. To take or obtain any thing from another, whether good or evil.

Though I should *receiv*e a thousand shekels of silver in mine own hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son. 2 Samuel.

What? shall we *receiv*e good at the hands of God, and shall we not *receiv*e evil? Job.

- To them hast thou poured a drink-offering? should I receive comfort in these? Isaiah.
 He that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong done; and there is no respect of persons. Colossians.
 Put all in writing that thou givest out, and receivest in. Ecclesiasticus.
 They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren; received no laws from one another, but lived separately. Locke.
3. To take any thing communicated.
 Draw general conclusions from every particular they meet with: these make little true benefit of history: nay, being of forward and active spirits, receive more harm by it. Locke.
 The idea of solidity we receive by our touch. Locke.
 The same inability will every one find, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received in by his senses or by reflection. Locke.
 To conceive the ideas we receive from sensation, consider them, in reference to the different ways, whereby they make their approaches to our minds. Locke.
4. To embrace intellectually.
 We have set it down as a law, to examine things to the bottom, and not to receive upon credit, or reject upon improbabilities. Bacon.
 In an equal indifferency for all truth; I mean the receiving it, in the love of it, as truth; and in the examination of our principles, and not receiving any for such till we are fully convinced of their certainty, consists the freedom of the understanding. Locke.
5. To allow.
 Long received custom forbidding them to do as they did, there was no excuse to justify their act; unless, in the scripture, they could show some law that did licence them thus to break a received custom. Hooker.
 Will it not be receiv'd
 When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
 And us'd their very daggers, that they have don't?
 —Who dares receive it other. Shakspeare.
 Lest any should think that any thing in this number eight creates the diapason: this computation of eight is rather a thing received, than any true computation. Bacon.
6. To admit.
 When they came to Jerusalem, they were received of the church. Acts.
 Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me into glory. Psalms.
 Let her be shut out from the camp seven days, and after that received in again. Numbers.

- RECEIVER, ré-sé'vûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [receveur, Fr. from receive.]
1. One to whom any thing is communicated by another.

- All the learnings that his time could make him receive of, he took as we do air. Shakspeare.
 She from whose influence all impression came,
 But by receivers impotencies lame. Donne.
 What was so mercifully designed, might have been improved by the humble and diligent receivers unto their greatest advantages. Hammond.
2. One to whom any thing is given or paid.
 In all works of liberality, something more is to be considered, besides the occasion of the givers; and that is the occasion of the receivers. Sprat.
 Gratitude is a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgement of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, as the occasions of the doer shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to. South.
 If one third of the money in trade were locked up, landholders must receive one third less for their goods; a less quantity of money by one third being to be distributed amongst an equal number of receivers. Locke.
 Wood's halfpence will be offered for six a penny, and the necessary receivers will be losers of two thirds in their pay. Swift.
3. An officer appointed to receive publick money.
 There is a receiver, who alone handleth the monies. Bacon.
4. One who partakes of the blessed sacrament.
 The signification and sense of the sacrament dispose the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God there consigned. Taylor.
5. One who co-operates with a robber, by taking the goods which he steals.
 This is a great cause of the maintenance of thieves, knowing their receivers always ready; for were there no receivers, there would be no thieves. Spenser.
6. The vessel into which spirits are emitted from the still.
 These liquors, which the wide receiver fill,
 Prepar'd with labour, and defin'd with skill,
 Another course to distant parts begin. Blackmore.
 Alkaline spirits run in veins down the sides of the receiver in distillations, which will not take fire. Arbutnot.
7. The vessel of the air-pump, out of which the air is drawn, and which therefore receives any body on which experiments are tried.
 The air that in exhausted receivers of air pumps is exhaled from minerals, is as true as to elasticity and density or rarefaction, as that we respire in. Bentley.
- To RECELEBRATE, ré-sél'lê-brâte. v. a. [re and celebrate.] To celebrate anew.
 French air and English verse here wedded lie:
 Who did this knot compose,

 In this recension of monthly flowers, it is to be understood from its first appearing to its final withering. Evelyn.
- RECENT, ré'sént. adj. [recens, Lat.]
1. New; not of long existence.
 The ancients were of opinion, that those parts, where Egypt now is, were formerly sea, and that a considerable portion of that country was recent, and

- formed out of the mud discharged into the neighbouring sea by the Nile. Woodward.
2. Late; not antique.
 Among all the great and worthy persons, whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient, or recent, there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love. Bacon.
3. Fresh; not long dismissed, released, or parted from.
 Ulysses moves,
 Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
 The brackish ouze his manly grace deforms. Pope.
- RE'CENTLY, ré'sént-lê. adv. [from recent.] Newly; freshly.
 Those tubes which are most recently made of fluids, are most flexible and most easily lengthened. Arbutnot.
- RE'CENTNESS, ré'sént-nês. n. s. [from recent.] Newness; freshness.
 This inference of the recentness of mankind from the recentness of these apotheoses of gentile deities, seems too weak to hear up this supposition of the novitas humani generis. Hale.
- RECEP'TACLE, ré'sép-tâ-kl, or ré-sép'tâ-kl. n. s. [receptaculum, Latin.] A vessel or place into which any thing is received. This had formerly the accent on the first syllable.
 When the sharpness of death was overcome, he then opened heaven as well to believing gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.
 The county of Tipperary, the only county palatine in Ireland, is by abuse of some bad ones made a receptacle to rob the rest of the counties about it. Spenser.
 As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
 Where for these many hundred years, the bones
 Of all my buried ancestors are packt. Shakspeare.
 The eye of the soul, or receptacle of sapience and divine knowledge. Raleigh.
 Lest paradise a receptacle prove
 To spirits foul, and all my trees their prey. Milton.
 Their intelligence, put in at the top of the horn, shall convey it into a little receptacle at the bottom. Addison.
 These are conveniences for private persons; instead of being receptacles for the truly poor; they tempt men to pretend poverty, in order to share the advantages. Atterbury.
 Though the supply from this great receptacle be below continual and alike to all the globe; yet when it arrives near the surface, where the heat is not so uniform, it is subject to vicissitudes. Woodward.
- RECEP'TIBILITY, ré-sép-tê-bil'ê-tê. n. s. [receptus, Latin.] Possibility of receiving.
 The peripatetick matter is a pure unactuate power; and this conceited vacuum a mere receptibility. Glanville.
- RE'CEPTARY, ré'sép-tâ-rê. n. s. [receptus, Latin.] Thing received. Not in use.
 They, which behold the present state of things, cannot condemn our sober enquiries in the doubtful appertenancies of arts and receptaries of philosophy. Brown.
- RECEP'TION, ré-sép'shùn. n. s. [receptus, Latin.]
1. The act of receiving.
 Both serve completely for the reception and communication of learned knowledge. Holder.
 In this animal are found parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, provisions had been superfluous. Brown.
 2. The state of being received.
 Causes, according still
 To the reception of their matter, act;
 Not to th' extent of their own sphere. Milton.
 3. Admission of any thing communicated.

In some animals, the avenues, provided by nature for the reception of sensations, are few, and the perception, they are received with, obscure and dull. Locke.

4. Readmission.

All hope is lost
Of my reception into grace. Milton.

5. The act of containing.

I cannot survey this world of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Addison.

6. Treatment at first coming; welcome; entertainment.

This succession of so many powerful methods being farther prescribed by God, have found so discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery can pretend to prove successful. Hammond.

Pretending to consult
About the great reception of their king, Thither to come. Milton.

7. Opinion generally admitted.

Philosophers, who have quitted the popular doctrines of their countries, have fallen into as extravagant opinions, as even common reception countenanced. Locke.

8. Recovery. Not in use.

He was right glad of the French king's reception of those towns from Maximilian. Bacon.

RECE'PTIVE, rê-sêp'tiv. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.

The soul, being, as it is active, perfected by love of that infinite good, shall, as it is receptive, be also perfected with those supernatural passions of joy, peace and delight. Hooker.

To advance the spiritual concerns of all that could in any kind become receptive of the good he meant them, was his unlimited design and endeavour. Fell.

The pretended first matter is capable of all forms, and the imaginary space is receptive of all bodies. Glanville.

RECE'PTORY, rê-sêp-tûr-ê. adj. [receptus, Latin.] Generally or popularly admitted.

Although therein be contained many excellent things, and verified upon his own experience, yet are there many also receptory, and will not endure the test. Brown.

RECE'SS, rê-sê's'. n. s. [recessus, Lat.]

1. Retirement; retreat; withdrawing; secession.

What tumults could not do, an army must; my recess hath given them confidence that I may be conquered. King Charles.

Fair Thames she haunts, and ev'ry neigh'ring grove, Sacred to soft recess and gentle love. Prior.

2. Departure.

We come into the world, and know not how: we live in it in a self-nescience, and go hence again, and are as ignorant of our recess. Glanville.

3. Place of retirement; place of secrecy; private abode.

This happy place, our sweet Recess, and only consolation left. Milton.

The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd. Dryden.

I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth in a kind remove the cause, and answers the physician's first recipe, vomiting and purging; but this would be too harsh. Suckling.

Th' apothecary train is wholly blind,
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryd.

RECIP'IENT, rê-sîp'pê-ênt. n. s. [recipients, Latin.]

1. The receiver; that to which any thing is communicated.

Though the images, or whatever else is the cause of scuse, may be alike as from the object, yet may the representations be varied according to the nature of the recipient. Glanville.

2. The vessel into which spirits are driven by the still.

The form of sound words, dissolved by chymical preparation, ceases to be nutritive; and after all the labours of the alembick, leaves in the recipient a fretting corrosive. Decay of Piety.

RECIPROCAL, rê-sîp'prò-kâk. adj. [reciprocus, Latin; reciproque, French.]

1. Acting in vicissitude; alternate.

Corruption is reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two boundaries, and guides to life and death. Bacon.

What if that light,
To the terrestrial moon be as a star,
Enlight'ning her by day, as she by night,
This earth? reciprocal, if land be there,
Fields and inhabitants. Milton.

2. Mutual; done by each to each.

Where there's no hope of a reciprocal aid, there can be no reason for the mutual obligation. L'Estrange.

In reciprocal duties, the failure on one side justifies not a failure on the other. Clarissa.

3. Mutually interchangeable.

These two rules will render a definition reciprocal with the thing defined; which, in the schools, signifies, that the definition may be used in the place of the thing defined. Watts.

4. In geometry, reciprocal proportion is, when, in four numbers, the fourth number is so much lesser than the second, as the third is greater than the first, and vice versa. Harris.

According to the laws of motion, if the hulk and activity of aliment and medicines are in reciprocal proportion, the effect will be the same. Arbutnot.

RECIPROCALLY, rê-sîp'prò-kâk-ê. adv. [from reciprocal.] Mutually; interchangeably.

His mind and place
Infecting one another reciprocally. Shakspeare.

Make the bodies appear enlightened by the shadows which bound the sight, which cause it to repose for some space of time; and reciprocally the shadows may be made sensible by enlightening your ground. Dryden.

If the distance be about the hundredth part of an inch, the water will rise to the height of about an inch; and if the distance be greater or less in any proportion, the height will be reciprocally proportional to the distance very nearly: for the attractive force of the glasses is the same, whether the distance between them be greater or less; and the weight of the water drawn up is the same, if the height of it be reciprocally proportional to the height of the glasses. Newton.

Those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation. Bentley.

RECIPROCALNESS, rê-sîp'prò-kâk-nês. n. s. [from reciprocal.] Mutual return; alternateness.

Whatever nature has in worth deny'd, She gives in large recruits of needful pride. Pope.

The endeavours to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.

2. A new soldier.

The pow'rs of Troy

With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men.

Dryden.

RECTA'NGLE, rĕk-tāng-gl. n. s. [rectangle, Fr. rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.

If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration.

Brown.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind.

Locke.

RECTA'NGULAR, rĕk-tāng-gŭ-lār. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Lat.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink.

Wotton.

RECTA'NGULARLY, rĕk-tāng-gŭ-lār-lĕ. adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely.

Brown.

From whom it sprung. Milton.

Nor hope to be myself less miserable,
By what I seek, but others to make such
As I, though thereby worse to me redound. Milton.

2. To conduce in the consequence.
As the care of our national commerce redounds more to the riches and prosperity of the publick than any other act of government, the state of it should be marked out in every particular reign with greater distinction. Addison.

He had drawn many observations together, which very much redound to the honour of this prince.
Addison.

The honour done to our religion ultimately redounds to God the author of it. Rogers.

3. To proceed in the consequence.

As both these monsters will devour great quantities of paper, there will no small use redound from them to that manufacture. Addison.

To seek reformation of evil laws is commendable, but for us the more necessary is a speedy redress of ourselves. Hooker.

2. Relief; remedy.

No humble suitors press to speak for right;
No, not a man comes for redress to thee. Shaksp.

Such people as break the law of nations, all nations are interested to suppress, considering that the particular states, being the delinquents, can give no redress. Bacon.

Grief, finding no redress, ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle, and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton.

A few may complain without reason; but there is occasion for redress when the cry is universal.
Davenant.

3. One who gives relief.

Fair majesty, the refuge and redress,
Of those whom fate pursues, and wants oppress.
Dryden.

His ire will quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton.

The ordinary smallest measure is looked on as an unit in number, when the mind by division would reduce them into less fractions. Locke.

5. To degrade; to impair in dignity.

There is nothing so bad, but a man may lay hold of something about it, that will afford matter of excuse; nor nothing so excellent, but a man may fasten upon something belonging to it, whereby to reduce
it. Tillotson.

6. To bring into any state of misery or meanness.

The most prudent part was his moderation and indulgence, not reducing them to desperation.
Arbutnot.

7. To subdue.

Under thee, as head supreme,
Thrones, principdoms, pow'rs, dominions I reduce.
Milton.

reductive.] By reduction; by consequence.

If they be our superiors, then 'tis modesty and reverence to all such in general, at least reduc-tively. Hanmond.

Other niceties, though they are not matter of conscience, singly and apart, are yet so reductively; that is, though they are not so in the abstract, they become so by affinity and connection. L'Estrange.

REDUNDANCE, rê-dûn'dânse. } n. s. [re-REDUNDANCY, rê-dûn'dân-sè. } dundan- tia, Lat. from redundant.] Superfluity; superabundance; exuberance.

The cause of generation seemeth to be fulness;
for generation is from redundancy: this fulness ariseth from the nature of the creature, if it be hot,
and moist, and sanguine; or from plenty of food.
Bacon.

It is a quality, that confines a man wholly within himself, leaving him void of that principle which alone should dispose him to communicate and impart those redundancies of good, that he is possessed of. South.

I shall show our poet's redundancy of wit, justness of comparisons, and elegance of descriptions.
Garth.

Labour ferments the humours, casts them into their proper channels, and throws off redundancies.
Addison.

REDUNDANT, rê-dûn'dânt. adj. [redundans, Latin.]

Cheyne.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media.

Cheyne.

Refracted from yon eastern cloud, The grand ethereal bow shoots up.

Thomson.

REFRACTION, ré-frákt'shûn. n. s. [refractio, French.]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside.

Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton.

REFRACTIVE, ré-frákt'iv. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton.

REFRACTORINESS, ré-frákt'ûr-é-nés. n. s.[from refractory.] Sullen obstinacy.

I never did allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. K. Charles.

Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gang, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order.

Sawnderson.

REFRACTORY, ré-frákt'ûr-é. adj. [refractaire, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.

There is a law in each well-ordered nation, To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory.

Shakespeare.

A rough hewn seaman being brought before a wise justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, insomuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place.

Bacon.

Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory sullenness.

King Charles.

Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains.

Arbutnot.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore, like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason.

Bentley.

REFRAGABLE, ré-frá-gâ-bl. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.TO REFRAIN, ré-frâne'. v. a. [refrener, Fr. re and frænum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

rants, without any preceding evacuation. Wiseman.

To REFRI'GERATE, rê-frid'jêr-âte.⁹¹
v. a. [refrigero, re and frigus, Latin.]
To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air in great circles, such as the girdle of the world produeth, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the breezes are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon.
Bacon.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinably, or somewhat equinoxially, though in a lesser degree they discover some verticity. Brown.

REFRIGERA'TION, rê-frid'jêr-â-shûn. n. s.
[refrigeratio, Latin; refrigeration, Fr.]
The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

Divers do stut; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move. Bacon.

If the mere refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRI'GERATIVE, rê-frid'jêr-â-tiv.⁵¹² }

REFRI'GERATORY, rê-frid'jêr-â-tûr-ê.⁵¹² }

REFRI'GENATORY, rê-frid'jêr-â-tûr-ê. n. s.

1. That part of a distilling vessel that is placed about the head of a still, and filled with water to cool the condensing vapours; but this is now generally done by a worin or spiral pipe, turning through a tub of cold water. Quincy.

2. Any thing internally cooling.

A delicate wine and a durable refrigeratory.
Mortimer.

REFRIGER'IUM, rê-frid-jêr-ê-ûm. n.
s. [Latin.] Cool refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeriums, respites, or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REFT, rêft. part. pret. of reave.

1. Deprived; taken away. Obsolete.

Thus we well left, he better reft,
In heaven to take his place,
That by like life and death, at last,
We may obtain like grace. Ascham.

I, in a desperate hay of death,
Like a poor hark, of sails and tackling reft,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky hosom. Shaksp.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,
And would have reft the fishers of their prey.
Shaksp.

Our dying hero, from the continent
Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards reft,
As his last legacy to Britain left. Waller.

2. [pret. of reave.] Took away. Obsolete.

So 'twixt them both, they not a lamkin left,
And when lambs fail'd, the old sheep's lives they reft. Spenser.

About his shoulders broad he threw
An hairy hide of some wild beast, whom he
In savage forest by adventure slew
And reft the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REF'UGE, rêf'ûdje. n. s. [refuge, Fr.
refugium, Lat.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress; protection.

Roeks, dens, and caves! but I in none of these Find place or refuge. Milton.

The young vipers supposed to break through the helly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it: for then the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again; which is a peculiar way of refuge. Brown.

Those, who take refuge in a multitude, have an Arian council to answer for. Atterbury.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in times of trouble. Psalms.

They shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood. Joshua.

Fair majesty, the refuge and redress
Of those whom fate pursues. Dryden.

3. Expedient in distress.

This last old man,

Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father:
Their latest refuge was to send him. Shaksp.

4. Expedient in general.

Light must be supplied, among graceful refuges,
hy terracing any story in danger of darkness.
Wotton.

To REF'UGE, rêf'ûdje. v. a. [refugier, French; from the noun.] To shelter;
to protect.

Silly beggars,
Who sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,
That many have, and others must, sit there. Shaksp.

Dreads the vengeance of her injur'd lord;
Ev'n by those gods, who refug'd her, abhor'd.
Dryden.

REFUGEE', rêf-û-jêé'. n. s. [refugie, Fr.]

One who flies to shelter or protection.

Poor refugees, at first they purchase here;
And soon as denizen'd, they domineer. Dryden.

This is become more necessary in some of their governments, since so many refugees settled among them. Addison.

REFU'LGENCE, rê-fûl'jênce. n. s. [from refulgent.] Splendour; brightness.

REFU'LGENT, rê-fûl'jênt.¹⁷⁷ adj. [re- fulgens, Lat.] Bright; shining; glittering; splendid.

He neither might nor wish'd to know
A more refulgent light. Waller.

So conspicuous and refulgent a truth is that of God's being the author of man's felicity, that the dispute is not so much concerning the thing as concerning the manner of it. Boyle.

Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face. Dryden.

REFU'LGENTLY, rê-fûl'jênt-lê. adv. [from refulgent.] In a shining manner.

To REFU'ND, rê-fûnd'. v. n. [refundo,
Latin.]

1. To pour back.

Were the humours of the eye tintured with any colour, they would refund that colour upon the object, and so it would not be represented as in itself it is. Ray.

2. To repay what is received; to restore.

A governor, that had pillaged the people, was,
for receiving of bribes, sentenced to refund what he had wrongfully taken. L'Estrange.

Such wise men as himself account all that is past to be also gone; and know, that there can be no gain in refunding, nor any profit in paying debts.
South.

How to Icarus, in the bridal hour,
Shall I, by waste undone, refund the dow'r? Pope.

3. Swift has somewhere the absurd phrase, to refund himself, for to reimburse.

REFU'SAL, rê-fû'zâl.⁸⁸ n. s. [from refuse.]

1. The act of refusing; denial of any thing demanded or solicited.

God has born with all his weak and obstinate re- fusals of grace, and has given him time day after day. Rogers.

2. The preemption; the right of having any thing before another; option.

When employments go a begging for want of hands, they shall be sure to have the refusal. Swift.

To REFU'SE, rê-fûze'.⁴⁹² v. a. [refuser,
French.]

1. To deny what is solicited or required; not to comply with.

If he should chuse the right casket, you should refuse to perform his father's will, if you should refuse to accept him. Shaksp.

Having most affectionately set life and death before them, and conjured them to chuse one, and avoid the other, he still leaves unto them, as to free and rational agents, a liberty to refuse all his calls, to let his talents lye by them unprofitable.
Hammond

Wonder not then what God for you saw good
If I refuse not, but convert, as you,
To proper substance. Milton.

Common experience has justly a mighty influence on the minds of men, to make them give or refuse credit to any thing proposed. Locke.

2. To reject; to dismiss without a grant.

I may neither chuse whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike. Shaksp.

To REFU'SE, rê-fûze'. v. n. Not to accept;
not to comply.

Women are made as they themselves would choose;

Too proud to ask, too humble to refuse. Garth.

REFUSE, rê-fûze'.^{437 499} adj. [from the verb. The noun has its accent on the first syllable, the verb on the second.]

Unworthy of reception; left when the rest is taken.

Every thing vile and refuse they destroyed. Sam.
He never had vexatious law-disputes about his ducs, but had his tithes fully paid, and not of the most refuse parts, but generally the very best. Fell.
Pleas'd to bestow on him the refuse letters; he hopes by printing them to get a plentiful provision. Spectator.

RE'FUSE, rě'fűse. n. s. That which remains disregarded when the rest is taken.

We dare not disgrace our worldly superiours with offering unto them such refuse, as we bring unto God himself. Hooker.

Many kinds have much refuse, which countervails that which they have excellent. Bacon.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, to see that men can so put off ingenuity, as to descend to so base a vice; yet we daily see it done, and that not only by the scum and refuse of the people. Government of the Tongue.

Down with the falling stream the refuse run,
To raise with joyful news his drooping son. Dryden.

This humourist keeps more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

To REGAI'N, rě-gá'ne'. v. a. [regagner, French; re and gain.] To recover; to gain anew.

Hopeful to regain

Thy love, from thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n. Mil.
We've driv'n back

These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from an ebbing tide. Dryden.

As soon as the mind regains the power to stop or continue any of these motions of the body or thoughts, we then consider the man as a free agent. Locke.

RE'GAL, rě'gál. adj. [regal, Fr. regalis, Lat.] Royal; kingly.

Edward, duke of York,
Usurps the regal title and the seat
Of England's true anointed lawful heir. Shaksp.

Why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts Wherewith I reign'd. Shakspere.

With them comes a third of regal port,
With faded splendour wan, who by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

When was there ever a better prince on the throne than the present queen? I do not talk of her government, her love of the people, or qualities that are purely regal; but her piety, charity, temperance, and conjugal love. Swift.

RE'GAL, rě'gál. n. s. [regale, French.] A musical instrument.

The sounds that produce tones, are ever from such bodies as are in their parts and parts equal; and such are in the nightingale pips of regals or organs. Bacon.

REGRESS, ré-grès. n. s. [regress, French; regressus, Lat.] Passage back; power of passing back.

'Tis their natural place which they always tend to; and from which there is no progress nor regress. Burnet.

To REGRESS, ré-grès'. v. n. [regressus, Latin.] To go back; to return; to pass back to the former state or place.

All being forced into fluent consistencies, naturally regress unto their former solidities. Brown.

REGRESSION, ré-grêsh'ûn. n. s. [regressus, Lat.] The act of returning or going back.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must needs be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them, and restrains from regression into nothing. Brown.

REGRET, ré-grêt'. n. s. [regret, French; regretto, Italian.]

1. Vexation at something past; bitterness of reflection.

I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret. King Charles.

A passionate regret at sin, a grief and sadness at its memory, enters us into God's roll of mourners. Decay of Piety.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing a dress, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint gratifications it affords the senses. South.

2. Grief; sorrow.

Never any prince expressed a more lively regret for the loss of a servant, than his majesty did for this great man; in all offices of grace towards his servants, and in a wonderful solicitous care for the payment of his debts. Clarendon.

That freedom which all sorrows claim, She does for thy content resign:

Her piety itself would blame, If her regrets should waken thine. Prior.

3. Dislike; aversion. Not proper.

Is it a virtue to have some ineffective regrets to damnation, and such a virtue too, as shall balance all our vices? Decay of Piety.

To REGRET, ré-grêt'. v. a. [regretter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To repent; to grieve at.

I shall not regret the trouble my experiments cost me, if they be found serviceable to the purposes of respiration. Boyle.

Calmly he look'd on either life, and here Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear; From nature's tem'perate feast rose satisfy'd, Thank'd heav'n that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd. Pope.

2. To be uneasy at. Not proper.

Those, the impiety of whose lives makes them regret a deity, and secretly wish there were none, will greedily listen to atheistical notions. Glanville.

REGUERDON, ré-gêr'dûn. n. s. [re and guerdon.] Reward; recompense.

Stoop, and set your knee against my foot, And in reguerdon of that duty done, I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shaksp.

To REGUERDON, ré-gêr'dûn. v. a. [from the noun.] To reward. The verb and noun are both obsolete.

Long since we were resolved of your truth, Your faithful service and your toil in war; Yet never have you tasted your reward, Or been reguerdon'd with so much as thanks. Shaks.

REGULAR, rég'û-lâr.¹⁷⁹ adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Lat.]

1. Agreeable to rule; consistent with the mode prescribed.

The common cant of criticks is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece. Guardian.

The way of heaven are dark and intricate; Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors, Our understanding traces them in vain, Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search; Nor sees with how much art the windings run, Nor where the regular confusion ends. Addison.

So when we view some well-proportion'd dome, No monstrous height or breadth or length appear; The whole at once is hold and regular. Pope.

2. Governed by strict regulations.

So just thy skill, so regular my rage. Pope.

3. In geometry.

A regular body is a solid, whose surface is composed of regular and equal figures, and whose solid angles are all equal, and of which there are five sorts, viz. 1. angles: 4. That which is contained under twelve equal and equilateral pentagons. 5. A body consisting of twenty equal and equilateral triangles: and mathematicians demonstrate, that there can be no more regular bodies than these five. Muschenbr.

There is no universal reason, not confined to human fancy, that a figure, called regular, which hath equal sides and angles, is more beautiful than any irregular one. Bentley.

4. Instituted or initiated according to established forms or discipline: as, a regular doctor; regular troops.

5. Methodical; orderly.

More people are kept from a true sense and taste of religion, by a regular kind of sensuality and indulgence, than by gross drunkenness. Lavo.

REGULAR, rég'û-lâr. n. s. [regulier, Fr.]

In the Romish church, all persons are said to be regulars, that do profess and follow a certain rule of life, in Latin stiled regula; and do likewise observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Ayliffe.

REGULARITY, rég'û-lâr'è-tê. n. s. [regularité, Fr. from regular.]

1. Agreeableness to rule.

2. Method; certain order.

Regularity is certain, where it is not so apparent, as in all fluids; for regularity is a similitude continued. Grew.

He was a mighty lover of regularity and order; and managed all his affairs with the utmost exactness. Atterbury.

REGULARLY, rég'û-lâr-lê. adv. [from regular.] In a manner concordant to rule; exactly.

If those painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had indeed made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden.

With one judicious stroke, On the plain ground Apelles drew A circle regularly true. Prior.

Strains that neither ebb nor flow, Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope.

To REGULATE, rég'û-lâte. v. a. [regula, Lat.]

1. To adjust by rule or method.

Nature, in the production of things, always designs them to partake of certain regulated, established essences, which are to be the models of all things to be produced: this, in that crude sense, would need some better explication. Locke.

2. To direct.

Regulate the patient in his manner of living. Wiseman.

Ev'n goddesses are women; and no wife Has pow'r to regulate her husband's life. Dryden.

REGULATION, rég'û-lâ'shûn. n. s. [from regulate.]

He was not well cured, and would have relapsed. Wiseman.

RELA'PSE, ré-lá'pse'. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fall into vice or error once forsaken
This would but lead me to a worse relapsd
And heavier fall. Milton.

We see in too frequent instances the relapses of those, who, under the present smart, or the near apprehension of the divine displeasure, have resolved on a religious reformation. Rogers.

2. Regression from a state of recovery to sickness.

It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand; of which, the former would purge and keep under the body, the other pamper and strengthen it suddenly: whereof what is to be looked for, but a most dangerous relapse? Spenser.

3. Return to any state. The sense here is somewhat obscure.

Mark a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakspeare.

To RELA'TE, ré-lá'te'. v. a. [relatus, Lat.]

1. To tell; to recite.

Your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were to add the death of you. Shakspeare.

Here I could frequent
With worship place by place, where he vouchsaf'd Presence divine; and to my sons relate. Milton.

The drama represents to view, what the poem only does relate. Dryden.

2. To vent by words. Unauthorized.

A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smoother. Bacon.

3. To ally by kindred.

Avails thee not
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains. Pope.

4. To bring back; to restore. A latinism. Spenser.

To RELA'TE, ré-lá'te'. v. n. To have reference; to have respect.

All negative or privative words relate to positive ideas, and signify their absence. Locke.

RELA'TER, ré-lá'túr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from relate.] Teller; narrator; historian.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth than any disservice unto their relators. Brown.

Her husband the relater she prefer'd
Before the angel. Milton.

The best English historian, when his style grows antiquated, will be only considered as a tedious relater of facts. Swift.

RELA'TION, ré-lá'shùn. n. s. [relation, Fr. from relate.]

1. Manner of belonging to any person or thing.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity and truth;
Just unto all relations known,
A worthy patriot, pious son. Waller.

So far as service imports duty and subjection, all created beings bear the necessary relation of servants to God. South.

Our necessary relations to a family, oblige all to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions. Watts.

Our intercession is made an exercise of love and care for those amongst whom our lot is fallen, or who belong to us in a nearer relation: it then becomes the greatest benefit to ourselves, and produces its best effects in our own hearts. Law.

2. Respect; reference; regard.

I have been importuned to make some observation on this art, in relation to its agreement with poetry. Dryden.

Relation consists in the consideration and comparing one idea with another. Locke.

3. Connexion between one thing and another.

Of the eternal relations and fitnesses of things we know nothing; all that we know of truth and falsehood is, that our constitution determines us in some cases to believe, in others to disbelieve. Beattie.

4. Kindred; alliance of kin.

Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son and brother first were known. Milt.

Be kindred and relation laid aside,

And honour's cause by laws of honour try'd. Dryd.

Are we not to pity and supply the poor, though they have no relation to us? No relation? that cannot be: the gospel stiles them all our brethren; nay, they have a nearer relation to us, our fellow-members; and both these from their relation to our Saviour himself, who calls them his brethren. Sprat.

5. Person related by birth or marriage; kinsman; kinswoman.

A she-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations. Swift.

Dependants, friends, relations, Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson.

To RELE'NT, ré-lént'. v. n. [relentir, French.]

1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.

In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bacon.

In that soft season, when descending show'rs
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flow'rs;
When opening huds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray. Pope.

2. To melt; to grow moist.

Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.

Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the imbibed moisture of the air, wherein, if it be left long, it will totally be dissolved. Boyle.

All nature mourns, the skies relent in show'rs,
Hush'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flow'rs;
If Delia smile the flow'rs begin to spring,
The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing. Pope.

3. To grow less intense.

I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slacking of the main career, you had so notably begun, and almost performed. Sidney.

The workmen let glass cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their healing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air. Digby.

4. To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.

Can you behold
My tears, and not once relent? Shaksp.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool
To shake the head, relent, and sigh and yield
To christian intercessors. Shaksp.

Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure. Milton.

He sung, and hell consented
To hear the poet's pray'r;
Stern Proserpine relented,
And gave him back the fair. Pope.

To RELE'NT, ré-lént'. v. a.

1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.

Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,

And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
That him his foe more fiercely should pursue.

Spenser.

2. To soften; to mollify. Obsolete.

Air hated earth, and water hated fire,

Till love relented their rebellious ire.

Spenser.

RELENTLESS, rè-lènt'lès. adj. [from relent.]

1. Unpitying; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts;

Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,

Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire.

Dryden.

Why should the weeping hero now

Relentless to their wishes prove?

Prior.

2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disquieting objects.

Only in destroying I find ease

To my relentless thoughts.

Paradise Lost.

RELIANCE, rè-lî'ânse. n. s. [from rely.]

Trust; dependence; confidence; repose of mind: with on before the object of trust.

His days and times are past,

And my reliance on his fracted dates

Has smit my credit.

Shaksp.

That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he itches upon with so great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution.

Woodward.

He secured and increased his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reli- ance on his providence.

Atterbury.

They afforded a sufficient conviction of this truth,

and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it.

Rogers.

Resignation in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying.

Clarissa.

Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon.

Clarissa.

RELICK, rèl'ik. n. s. [reliquiæ, Latin;

relique, Fr.]

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.

Up dreary dame of darkness queen,

Go gather up the reliques of thy race,

Or else go them avenge.

Spenser.

Shall we go see the reliques of this town?

The fragments, seraps, the bits, and greasy re-

liques

Of her o'reaten faith are bound to Diomedé.

Shakspere.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,

But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains;

The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,

And spots of sin.

Dryden.

2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.

What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,

The labour of an age in piled stones?

Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid

Under a stary pointed pyramid?

Milton.

In peace, ye shades of our great grandsires, rest;

Eternal spring, and rising flow'rs adorn

The reliques of each venerable urn.

Dryden.

Shall our reliques second birth receive?

Sleep we to wake, and only die to live?

Prior.

Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,

And sacred place by Dryden's awful dust;

Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,

To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes.

Pope.

3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.

Cowls flutter'd into rags, then reliques leaves

The sport of winds.

Milton.

This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasuries of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint.

Addison.

RELIQUY, rèl'ik-lè. adv. [from relick.]

In the manner of reliques. A word not used, nor elegantly formed.

Thrifty wench serapes kitchen stuff,

And barreling the droppings and the snuff

Of wasting candles, whiel in thirty year

Reliquy kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer.

Donne.

RELICT, rèl'ikt. n. s. [relicte, old French;

relicta, Latin.] A widow; a wife desolate

by the death of her husband.

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their reliques and children cannot be strangers in this household.

Sprat.

pain or sorrow.

Thoughts in my quiet breast are risen,

Tending to some relief of our extremes.

Milton.

2. That which frees from pain or sorrow.

He found his designed present would be a relief, and then he thought it an impertinence to consider what it could be called besides.

Fell.

So should we make our death a glad relief

From future shame.

Dryden.

Nor dar'd I to presume, that press'd with grief,

My flight should urge you to this dire relief;

Stay, stay your steps.

Dryden.

3. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.

For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,

And I am sick at heart.

Shakspere.

4. [relevium, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.

5. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.

The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those on the modern;

the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal.

Addison.

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,

The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,

E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have shin'd,

In polish'd verse, the manners, and the mind.

Pope.

6. The exposure of any thing, by the proximity of something different.

RELIEVABLE, rè-lèèv'â-bl. adj. [from re- lieve.] Capable of relief.

on his post.

Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?

—Benardo has my place, give you good night.

Shakspere.

Relieve the centuries that have watch'd all night.

Dryden.

4. To right by law.

5. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.

As the great lamp of day,

Through diff'rent regions does his course pursue,

And leaves one world but to revive a new;

While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night

Relieves his lustre with a milder light.

Stepney.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection.

Addison.

6. To support; to assist; to recommend to attention.

Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass asunder, yet are they plausible together.

Brown.

RELIEVER, rè-lèèv'ûr. n. s. [from relieve.]

One that relieves.

He is the protector of his weakness, and the re- liever of his wants.

Rogers.

RELIEVO, rè-lèèv'ò. n. s. [Ital.] The prominence of a figure or picture.

A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies: the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relievo and more strength.

Dryden.

To RELI'GHT, rè-lite'. 393 v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.

His pow'r can heal me, and relight my eye.

Pope

RELIGION, rè-lîd'jûn. n. s. [religion,

Fr. religio, Latin.]

1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.

He that is void of fear, may soon be just,

And no religion binds men to be traitors.

One spake much of right and wrong,

Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace

And judgment from above.

Milton.

By religion, I mean that general habit of reverence towards the divine nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worship and serve God after such a manner as we conceive most agreeable to his will, so as to procure his favour and blessing.

Wilkins.

If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality.

South.

By her inform'd, we best religion learn,

Its glorious object by her aid discern.

Blackmore.

Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God.

Watts.

I never once in my life considered, whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such, as would procure me the merc-cy of God at this hour.

Law.

2. A system of divine faith and worship,

as opposite to others.

The image of a brute, adorn'd

With gay religions, full of pomp and gold.

Milton.

The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is.

More.

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.

Tillotson.

RELIGIONIST, rè-lîd'jûn-ist.

a motly administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others.

Swift.

RELIGIOUS, rê-ld'jûs. adj. [religieux, Fr. religiosus, Latin.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose habits the same proceed.

Hooker.

When holy and devout religious christians are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence;

So sweet is zealous contemplation! Their lives

Shakspeare.

Religious titled them the sons of God.

Milton.

2. Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend.

Wotton.

3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Certain fryars and religious men were moved with some zeal, to draw the people to the christian faith.

Abbot.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious.

Addison.

What the protestants would call a fanatick, is in the Roman church a religious of such an order; as an English merchant in Lisbon, after some great disappointments in the world, resolved to turn capuchin.

Addison.

4. Exact; strict.

5. Appropriated to strict observance of holy duties.

Her family has the same regulation as a religious house, and all its orders tend to the support of a constant regular devotion.

Law.

RELIGIOUSLY, rê-ld'jûs-lê. adv. [from religious.]

1. Piously; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

For, who will have his work his wished end to win,
Let him with hearty pray'r religiously begin.

Drayton.

2. According to the rites of religion.

These are the brethren, whom you Goths behold
Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice.

Shakspeare.

3. Reverently; with veneration.

Dost thou in all thy addresses to him, come into his presence with reverence, kneeling and religiously bowing thyself before him?

Duppa.

4. Exactly; with strict observance.

The privileges justly due to the members of the two houses and their attendants, are religiously to be maintained.

Bacon.

RELIGIOUSNESS, rê-ld'jûs-nês. n. s. [from religious.] The quality or state of being religious.

To RELINQUISH, rê-ling'kwish. v. a. [relinquo, Latin.]

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquished.

Abbot.

The English colonies grew poor and weak, though the English lords grew rich and mighty; for they placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquished by the English.

Davies.

2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God; by which act he relinquishes and delivers back to God all his right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God.

South.

3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and noisome quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still.

Hooker.

RELINQUISHMENT, rê-ling'kwish-mênt. n. s. [from relinquish.] The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish.

Hooker.

That natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning.

South.

RELISH, rê-lîsh. n. s. [from relecher, Fr. to lick again. Minshew. Skinner.]

1. Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate: it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Under sharp, sweet, and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern.

Boyle.

These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from saltpetre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

Boyle.

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd
From this delightful fruit, nor known till now
True relish, tasting.

Milton.

Could we suppose their relishes as different there as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate.

Locke.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh, and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant.

Locke.

2. Taste; small quantity just perceptible.

The king-becoming graces;

As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.

Shakspeare.

3. Liking; delight in any thing.

We have such a relish for faction, as to have lost that of wit.

Addison.

Good men after death are distributed among these several islands with pleasures of different kinds, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those settled in them.

Spectator.

4. Sense; power of perceiving excellence; taste. Addison uses it both with of and for before the thing.

A man who has any relish for fine writing discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him.

Addison.

Some hidden seeds of goodness and knowledge give him a relish of such reflections, as improve the mind, and make the heart better.

Spectator.

The pleasure of the proprietor, to whom things become familiar, depends, in a great measure, upon the relish of the spectator.

Seed.

5. Delight given by any thing; the power by which pleasure is given.

Expectation whirls me round;
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense.

Shakspeare.

When liberty is gone,

Life grows insipid, and has lost its relish.

Addison.

6. Cast; manner.

It preserves some relish of old writing.

Pope.

To RELISH, rê-lîsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give a taste to any thing.
On smoking lard they dine;
A sav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine.

Dryden.

2. To taste; to have a liking.

I love the people;

Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause.

Shakspeare.

How will dissenting brethren relish it?
What will malignants say?
Men of nice palates would not relish Aristotle, as drest up by the schoolmen.

Hudibras.

Baker.

He knows how to prize his advantages, and relish the honours which he enjoys.

Atterbury.

You are to nourish your spirit with pious readings, and holy meditations, with watchings, fastings, and prayers, that you may taste and relish and desire that eternal state, which is to begin when this life ends.

Law.

To RELISH, rê-lîsh. v. n.

1. To have a pleasing taste.

The ivory feet of tables were carved into the shape of lions, without which their greatest dainties would not relish to their palates.

Haweell.

2. To give pleasure.

Had I been the finder-out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

Shakspeare.

3. To have a flavour.

A theory, which how much soever it may relish of wit and invention, hath no foundation in nature.

Woodward.

RELISHABLE, rê-lîsh-â-bl. adj. [from relish.] Gustable; having a taste.

To RELIVE, rê-lîv'. v. n. [re and live.]

To revive; to live anew. Not used.

The thing on earth, which is of most avail,
Any virtue's branch and beauty's bud,
Reliven not for any good.

Spenser.

To RELOVE, rê-lîv'. v. a. [re and love.]

To love in return. Not used.

To own for him so familiar and leveling an affection as love, much more to expect to be reloved by him, were not the least saucy presumption man could be guilty of, did not his own commandments make it a duty.

Boyle.

RELUCENT, rê-lû'sênt. adj. [relucens, Latin.] Shining; transparent; pellucid.

In brighter mazes, the relucens stream
Plays o'er the mead.

Thomson.

To RELUCT, rê-lûkt'. v. n. [reluctor, Latin.] To struggle again.

We, with studied mixtures, force our relucting appetites, and with all the spells of epicurism, conjure them up, that we may lay them again.

Decay of Piety.

RELUCTANCE, rê-lûktânse. } n. s. [reluct-

RELUCTANCY, rê-lûktân-sê. } tor, Lat.]

Unwillingness; repugnance; struggle in opposition: with to or against.

A little more weight, added to the lower of the marbles, is able to surmount their reluctancy to separation, notwithstanding the supposed danger of thereby introducing a vacuum.

Boyle.

It favours

Reluctance against God, and his just yoke,
Laid on our necks.

Milton.

Bear witness, heav'n, with what reluctancy
Her helpless innocence I doom to die.

Dryden.

Aeneas, when forced in his own defence to kill Lausus, the poet shows compassionate, and tempering the severity of his looks with a reluctance to the action; he has pity on his beauty and his youth; and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature.

Dryden.

How few would be at the pains of acquiring such an habit, and of conquering all the reluctancies and difficulties that lay in the way towards virtue?

Atterbury.

Many hard stages of discipline must he pass through, before he can subdue the reluctances of his corruption.

Rogers.

With great reluctancy man is persuaded to acknowledge this necessity.

Rogers.

RELUCTANT, rê-lûktânt. adj. [reluctans,

- Latin.] Unwilling; acting with repugnance.
Reluctant; but in vain! a greater pow'r
 Now rul'd him. Milton.
 Some refuge in the muse's art I found;
Reluctant now I touch'd the trembling string,
 Bereft of him who taught me how to sing. Tickel.
- To RELU'CTATE, ré-lûk'tâte. v. n. [reluc-tor, Lat.] To resist; to struggle against.
 In violation of God's patrimony, the first sacrilege is looked on with some horror, and men devise colours to delude their reluctating consciences; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Decay of Piety.
- RELUCTA'TION, vél-lûk-tâ'shûn. n. s. [re-luc-tor, Latin.] Repugnance; resistance.
 The king prevailed with the prince, though not without some reluctation. Bacon.

That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd.
Shakspeare.

To REPLE'NISH, rê-plên'nish. v. n. To recover the former fulness. Not in use.

The humours in men's bodies increase and decrease as the moon doth; and therefore purge some day after the full; for then the humours will not re- plenish so soon. Bacon.

REPLE'TE, rê-plê-tê'. adj. [replet, French; repletus, Latin.] Full; completely filled;
filled to exuberance.

The world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts. Shaksp.

This mortification, if in over high a degree, is little better than the corrosion of poison: as sometimes in antimony, if given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours save the parts. Bacon.

His words replete with guile,
Into her heart too easy entrance won. Millon.

In a dog, out of whose eye, being wounded, the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in six hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour without the application of any medicines.

Ray.
REPLE'TION, rê-plê'shûn. n. s. [repletion,
French.] The state of being over full.

The tree had too much repletion, and was oppressed with its own sap; for repletion is an enemy to generation. Bacon.

All dreams
Are from repletion and complexion bred;
From rising fumes of undigested food. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger may be satisfy'd;
But this repletion is to love deny'd. Dryden.
The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion. Arbuthnot.

REPLE'VIABLE, rê-plêv'vê-â-bl. adj. [reple-

To be demanded of a sponge, what replication should be made by the son of a king? Shakspeare.

This is a replication to what Menelaus had before offered, concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Broome.

To REPLY, rê-plî'. v. n. [repliquer, Fr.]
To answer; to make a return to an answer.

O man! who art thou that repliest against God.
Romans.

Would we ascend higher to the rest of these lewd persons, we should find what reason Castalio's painter had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St. Peter and Paul's faces: that it was true in their life-time they were pale mortified men, but that since they were grown ruddy, by blushing at the sins of their successors. Atterbury.

To REPLY', rê-plî'. v. a. To return for an answer.

Perplex'd
The tempter stood, nor had what to reply. Millon.
His trembling tongue invok'd his bride;
With his last voice Eurydice he cry'd:
Eurydice the rocks and river-banks reply'd. Dryd.

REPLY', rê-plî'. n. s. [replique, French.]
Answer; return to an answer.

But now return,
And with their faint reply this answer join. Shaksp.
If I sent him word, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply churlish.
Shakspeare.

One rises up to make replies to establish or con-fute what has been offered on each side of the question. Watts.

To whom with sighs, Ulysses gave reply;
Ah! why ill-suiting pastime must I try? Pope.

REPLY'ER, *rê-plî'ûr.*⁹⁸ n. s. [from reply.]
He that answers; he that makes a return to an answer.

At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his question, that an aristocracy was better than a monarchy: the replyer did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a question of state: the answerer said, that the replyer did much wrong the privilege of scholars, who would be much straightened if they should give questions of nothing, but such things wherein they are practised; and added, we have heard yourself dispute of virtue, which no man will say you put much in practice. Bacon.

To REPO'LISH, rê-pôl'lish. v. a. [repolir,
Fr. re and polish.] To polish again.

A sundred clock is piecemeal laid,

There she appear'd; or my reporter devis'd well for her. Shakspeare.
Rumours were raised of great discord among the nobility; for this cause the lords assembled, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these surmises.
Hayward.

If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.

REP'ORTINGLY, rê-pôrt'ing-lê. adv. [from reporting.] By common fame.
Others say thou dost deserve; and I believe it better than reportingly. Shakspeare.

REP'OSAL, rê-pô'zâl.⁹⁹ n. s. [from repose.]
The act of reposing.
Dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd? Shakspeare.

To REPO'SE, rê-pôze'. v. a. [repono,
Latin.]

1. To lay to rest.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps;
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells. Shaksp.
Have ye chos'n this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue? Milton.

2. To place as in confidence or trust: with on or in.
I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden.
That prince was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a foundation for that trust he reposed in him, to deliver him out of his distresses. Rogers.

3. To lodge; to lay up.
Pebbles, reposed in those cliffs amongst the earth, being not so dissoluble, and more bulky, are left behind. Woodward.

Within a thicket I repos'd; when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chap.

2. To rest in confidence: with on.
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shakspeare.

REP'OSE, rê-pôze'. n. s. [repos, French.]

1. Sleep; rest; quiet.
Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakspeare.
Th' hour
Of night, and of all things retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton.

I all the livelong day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse; nor at shut of eve
Enjoy repose. Philips

2. Cause of rest.
After great lights must be great shadows, which we call reposes; because in reality the sight would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden.

REP'OSEDNESS, rê-pô'zêd-nês. n. s. [from reposed.] State of being at rest.

To REPO'SITE, rê-pôz'zit. v. a. [refo-

Those that by their deeds will make it known, Whose dignity they do sustain; And life, state, glory, all they gain, Count the republick's, not their own. Ben Jonson.

REPUDIABLE, ré-pù'dé-á-bl, or ré-pù'jèá-bl.^{293 294 276} adj. [from repudiate.] Fit to be rejected.

To REPUDIATE, ré-pù'dé-áte, or ré-pù'jè-áte. v. a. [repudio, Lat. refudier, Fr.] To divorce; to reject; to put away.

Let not those, that have repudiated the more inviting sius, show themselves plighted and bewitched by this. Gov. of the Tongue.

Here is a notorious instance of the folly of the atheists, that while they repudiate all title to the kingdom of heaven, merely for the present pleasure of body, and their boasted tranquillity of mind, besides the extreme madness in running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

REPUDIATION, ré-pù-dé-á'shùn. n. s. [repudiation, Fr. from repudiate.] Divorce; rejection.

It was allowed by the Athenians, only in case of repudiation of a wife. Arbutnot.

REPUGNANCE, ré-pùg'nâns. } n. s. [re-
REPUGNANCY, ré-pùg'nânsé. } ugnance,
Fr. from repugnant.]

1. Inconsistency; contrariety.

But where difference is without repugnancy, that which hath been can be no prejudice to that which is. Hooker.

It is no affront to omnipotence, if, by reason of the formal incapacity and repugnancy of the thing, we aver that the world could not have been made from all eternity. Bentley.

2. Relucance; resistance.

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle, And let the foes quietly cut their throats, Without repugnancy? Shaksp.

3. Struggle of opposite passions.

Thus did the passions act, without any of their present jars, combats, or repugnancies, all moving with the beauty of uniformity and the stiness of composure. South.

4. Aversion; unwillingness.

That which causes us to lose most of our time, is the repugnance which we naturally have to labour. Dryden.

REPUGNANT, ré-pùg'nânt. adj. [repugnant, Fr. repugnans, Lat.]

1. Disobedient; not obsequious.

His antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, Repugnant to command. Shaksp.

2. Contrary; opposite; inconsistent: with to, sometimes with.

There is no breach of a divine law, but is more or less repugnant unto the will of the law-giver, God himself. Perkins.

Why I reject the other conjectures, is, because they have not due warrant from observation, but are clearly repugnant therunto. Woodward.

Your way is to rest and strain some principles maintained both by them and me, to a scuse repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

REPUGNANTLY, ré-pùg'nânt-lé. adv. [from repugnant.] Contradictorily.

They speak not repugnantly thereto. Brown.

To REPULLULATE, ré-pù'llù-lâte. v. n. [re and pullulo, Latin; repulluler, Fr.] To bud again.

Though tares repullulate, there is wheat still left in the field. Hovel.

REPULSE, ré-pùlse'.¹⁷⁷ n. s. [repulse, Fr. repulsa, Lat.] The condition of being driven off or put aside from any attempt.

My repulse at Hull seemed an act of so rude disloyalty, that my enemies had scarce confidence enough to abet it. King Charles.

Nor much expect

A foe so proud will first the weaker seek;
So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse.
Milton.

By fate repell'd and with repulses tir'd. Denham.
To REPU' LSE, ré-pûlse'. v. a. [repulsus,
Lat.] To beat back; to drive off.

The christian defendants still repulsed them with greater courage than they were able to assail them.
Knolles.

This fleet attempting St. Minoes, were repuls'd, and without glory or gain returned into England.
Hayward.

Man complete to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.
REPU'LSION, ré-pûl'shûn.¹⁷⁷ n. s. [repul- sus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.

Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repul- sion or flying off from one another. Arbuthnot.

REPU'LSIVE, ré-pûl'siv. adj. [from re- pulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.

The parts of the salt or vitriol reede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton.

To REPU'ROHASE, ré-pûr'tshâs. v. a. [re- and purchase.] To buy again.

Once more we sit on England's royal throne,
Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies;
What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride?
Shakespeare.

If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale.

REPU' TABLE, ré-pû-tâ-bl. adj. [from re- pute.] Honourable; not infamous.

If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself? Rogers.

In the article of danger, it is as reputable to elude an enemy as to defeat one. Broome.

REPU' TABLENESS, ré-pû-tâ-bl-nés. n. s.
[from reputable.] The quality of a thing of good repute.

REPU' TABLY, ré-pû-tâ-blé. adv. [from re- putable.] Without discredit.

To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse. Atterbury.

REPU' TATION, ré-pû-tâ'shûn. n. s. [repu- tation, Fr. from repute.]

1. Character of good or bad.

Versoy, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputa- tion of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.

2. Credit; honour.

Reputation is an idle and most false imposition;
oft got without merit, and lost without deserving;
you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. Shaksp.

A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes;
At ev'ry word a reputation dies. Pope.

To REPU' TE, ré-pûte'. v. a. [reputo, Lat. reputer, Fr.] To hold; to account;
to think.

The king was reputed a prince most prudent.
Shakespeare.

I do repute her grace
The rightful heir to England's royal seat. Shaksp.

I do know of those,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing. Shaksp.

Men, such as chuse
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute.
Donne.

If the grand vizier be so great, as he is reputed, in politicks, he will never consent to an invasion of Hungary. Temple.

REPU' TE, ré-pûte'. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Character; reputation.

2. Established opinion.

He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, till then as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.

REPU' TELESS, ré-pûte'lés. adj. [from re- pute.] Disreputable; disgraceful. Not inelegant, but out of use.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor livelihood. Shaksp.

REQUE' ST, ré-kwést'. n. s. [requeste,
French.]

1. Petition; entreaty.

But ask what you would have reform'd,
I will both hear and grant you your requests.
Shakespeare.

Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther. Esther.

All thy request for man, accepted Son!
Obtain; all thy request, was my decree. Milton.

Ask him to lend
To this, the last request that I shall send,
A gentle ear. Denham.

2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.

Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country. Shaksp.

Whilst this vanity of thinking, that men are obliged to write either systems or nothing, is in re- quest, many excellent notions are suppressed. Boyle.

Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now. Temple.

To REQUE' ST, ré-kwést'. v. a. [requester,
Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.

To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence. Shaksp.

It was to be requested of almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace. Knolles.

The virgin quire for her request,
The God that sits at marriage feast;
He at their invoking came,
But with a scarce well-lighted flame. Milton.

In things not unlawful, great persons cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied. South.

REQUE' STER, ré-kwést'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from request.] Petitioner; solicitor.

To REQUI' CKEN, ré-kwik'k'n. v. a. [re- and quicken.] To reanimate.

By and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense, when straight his double spirit
Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigatè,
And to the battle came he. Shaksp.

REQUI' EM, ré-kwè-ém. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem and such peace to her,
As to peace-parted souls. Shakespeare.

2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.

The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
With pain produc'd, and nars'd for future woes;
Else had I an eternal requiem kept,
And in the arms of peace for ever slept. Sandys.

REQUI' RABLE, ré-kwi'râ-bl. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.

It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform.
Hale.

To REQUI' RE, ré-kwire'. v. a. [requiro,
Lat. requerir, Fr.]

1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right.

Ye me require
A thing without the compass of my wit;
For both the lineage and the certain fire,
From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet.
Spenser.

We do require them of you, so to use them,
As we shall find their merits. Shakespeare.

This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do, and this the law of God requireth also at our hands.
Spelman.

This imply'd
Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway. Milton.

Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.

2. To make necessary; to need.

The king's business required haste. 1 Samuel.
High from the ground, the branches would re- quire

Thy utmost reach, Milton.
But why, alas! do mortal men complain?

God gives us what he knows our wants require,
And better things than those which we desire.
Dryden.

God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded man also to labour; and the penury of his condition required it. Locke.

REQUI' SITE, rék'wè-zit. adj. [requisi- tus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.

When God new-modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former. South.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. Bacon.

Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance. Wake.

REQUI' SITE, rék'wè-zit.¹⁵⁴ n. s. Any thing necessary.

Res non parva labore, sed relicta, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life.
Dryden.

For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.

God on his part has declared the requisites on ours; what we must do to obtain blessings, is the great business of us all to know. Wake.

REQUI' SITELY, rék'wè-zit-lé. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences. Boyle.

REQUI' SITENESS, rék'wè-zit-nés. n. s.
[from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscurer passages, but the requisi- tiness of their having been written so obscurely.
Boyle.

REQUI' TAL, ré-kwi'tâl.⁹⁸ n. s. [from re- quite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.

Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching? Hooker.

Since you
Wear out your gentle limbs in my affairs,

Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. Shakspeare.

We hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot hut yield you forth to publick thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shakspeare.

2. Return; reciprocal action.

No merit their aversion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love. Waller.

3. Reward; recompense.

He ask'd me for a song,
And in requital op'd his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milt.
I have ta'en a cordial.

Sent by the king of Haly, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return, however, though there can be no requital. South.

To REQUITE, ré-kwite'. v. a. [requit- er, French.]

1. To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite
him. Shakspeare.

When Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will requite us all the evil we did. Genesis.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Ecclesiasticus.
Him within protect from harms;

He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milt.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,
Great patriot hero! ill requited chief! Thomson.

2. To do or give in reciprocation.

He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Samuel.
Open not thine heart to every man, lest he re- quite thee with a shrewd turn. Ecclesiasticus.

RE'EMOUSE, rére'mouse. n. s. [hépé- mup, Sax.] A bat. See REARMOUSE.

To RESAIL, ré'sâle. v. a. [re and sail.] To sail back.

From Pyle resailing, and the Spartan court,
Horrid to speak in ambush is decreed. Pope.

RESA'LE, ré-sâle'. n. s. [re and sale.] Sale at second hand.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon.

To RESALUTE, ré-sâ-lute'. v. a. [resaluto, Lat. resaluer, Fr.] To salute or greet anew.

We drew her up to land,
And trod ourselves the resaluted sand. Chapman.

To resalute the world with sacred light,
Leucothea wak'd. Milton.

To RESCIND, ré-sînd'. v. a. [rescindo, Lat. rescinder, Fr.] To cut off; to abrogate a law.

It is the imposing a sacramental obligation upon him, which being the condition, upon the performance whereof all the promises of endless bliss are made over, it is not possible to rescind or disclaim the standing obliged by it. Hammond.

I spake against the test, but was not heard;
These to rescind, and peerage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSION, ré-sîzh'ûn. n. s. [rescission,
Fr. rescissus, Lat.] The act of cutting off; abrogation.

If any infer rescission of their estate to have been for idolatry, that the governments of all idolatrous nations should he also dissolved, it followeth not.

Bacon.
RESCI'SSORY, ré-sîz'zûr-ré.⁵¹² adj. [rescis- soire, Fr. rescissus, Latin.] Having the power to cut off.

To RESCRIBE, ré-skribe'. v. a. [rescribo,
Lat. rescrire, French.]

1. To write back.

Whenever a prince on his being consulted re- scribes or writes back Tolernamus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful. Ayliffe.

2. To write over again.

Calling for more paper to rescribe them, he shewed him the difference betwixt the ink-box and the sand-box. Howel.

RESCRIPT, ré'skript. n. s. [rescrit, Fr.
rescriptum, Latin.] Edict of an em-perour.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus: Use it.

Bacon.
The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did, after the manner of the Roman emperors, write back their determinations, which were stiled rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe.

To RESCUE, rés'kû. v. a. [rescorre, old Fr.] To set free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scudamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him and re- skewed his love.

My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shaksp.
We're beset with thieves;

Rescue thy mistress, if thou he a man. Shakspeare.
Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clarendon.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily resolve, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure.

Hammond.
Who was that just man, whom had not heav'n
Rescu'd, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.
Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave.

Dryden.
We have never yet heard of a tumult raised to rescue a minister whom his master desired to bring to a fair account. Davenant.

RESCUE, rés'kû. n. s. [rescousse, rescosse, old Fr. rescussus, low Latin.] Delivrance from violence, danger, or confinement.

How comes it, you
Have help to make this rescue? Shakspeare.

RESCUER, rés'kû-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from rescue.]
One that rescues.

RESEA'RCH, ré-sértsh'. n. s. [recherche,
Fr.] Inquiry; search.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and hettering of fruits, emptying mines, and draining fens.

Glanville.
I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more felicity. Holder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the re- searches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Rogers.

To RESEA'RCH, ré-sértsh'. v. a. [recher- cher, Fr.] To examine; to inquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity.

Wotton.
To RESEAT, ré-sète'. v. a. [re and seat.]
To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you rescat him
Upon his father's throne? Dryden.

RESEIZER, ré-sé'zûr.⁹⁹ n. s. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE, ré-sé'zhûre.⁴⁸² n. s. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now
the more easy to judge of the forfeiture or reseizure, deface the image, and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE, ré-zém'blânse. n. s. [re- semblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please;
they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryd.

The quality produced hath commonly no resem- blance with the thing producing it; wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flow'r,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune.
Pope.

2. Something resembling.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on. Milton.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

To RESEMBLE, ré-zém'bl.⁴⁴⁵ v. a. [resem- bler, French.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh.

The torrid parts of Africk are resembled to a li-bard's skin, the distance of whose spots represents the disperseness of habitations. Brerewood.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

To RESEND, ré-sênd'. v. a. [re and send.]

To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her by this same coxcomb,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shaksp.

To RESENT, ré-zênt'.⁴⁴⁶ v. a. [ressen- tir, French.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordship understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

To be absent from any part of publick worship he thus deeply resented. Fell.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milt.

Such proceedings have been always resented, and often punished in this kingdom. Davenant.

RESENTER, rè-zènt'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Wolton.

RESENTFUL, rè-zènt'fûl. adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY, rè-zènt'ing-lè. adv. [from resenting.]

1. With deep sense; with strong perception.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. Movè.

2. With continued anger.

RESENTMENT, rè-zènt'mènt. n. s. [resentiment, French.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. Movè.

Some faces we admire and doat on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanville.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanville.

2. Deep sense of injury; anger long continued; sometimes simply anger.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show, Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment, against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

Though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment, and uncasiness at any thing, there they pass the judgment upon themselves. Law.

RESERVATION, rè-zèr-vâ-shûn. n. s. [reservation, French.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. K. Charles.

We swear with jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations. Sanderson.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

Ourselves by monthly course, With reservation of an hundred knights, By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode Make with you by due turns. Shakspeare.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Brown.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me, In heedful'st reservation, to bestow them As notes, whose faculties inclusive were, More than they of note. Shakspeare.

RESERVATORY, rè-zèr-vâ-tûr-é.⁵¹² n. s. [reservoir, Fr.] Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservatory as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

To RESERVE, rè-zèrv'. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reservo, Lat.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Samuel.

Flowers Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,
The fainty knights were seorch'd. Dryden.

2. To catch breath.

Till breathless both themselves aside retire,
Where foaming wrath, their cruel tusks they whet,
And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire.
Spenser.

I, a pris'nèr chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
With day spring born; here leave me to respire.
Milton.

3. To rest; to take rest from toil.

Hark! he strikes the golden lyre;
And see! the tortur'd ghosts respire,
See shady forms advance! Pope.

RESPI'TE, rèsp'pit.¹⁴⁰ n. s. [respit, Fr.]

1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence.

I had hope to spend
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both. Milton.

One moment's respite for the learned head;
Judges of writings and of men have dy'd. Prior.

2. Pause; interval.

The fox then counsel'd th' ape for to require Respite till morrow t' answer his desire. Spenser.

This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow preience from the necessary, to make itself appear more honest. Raleigh.

Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.

To RESPI'TE, rèsp'pit. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pause.

In what bow'r or shade
Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,
To respite his day-labour with repast,
Or with repose. Milton.

2. [respiter, old French.] To suspend; to delay.

An act passed for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanding. Clarendon.

RESPLE'NDENCE, rè-splèn'dènce. } n. s.

RESPLE'NDENCY, rè-splèn'dèn-sè. } [from resplendent.] Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold

In full resplendency, heir of all my might. Milton.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for these dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifices to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

RESPLE'NDENT, rè-splèn'dènt. adj.

[resplendens, Latin.] Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory. Camden.

RESPO'NDENT, rè-spònd'ènt. n. s. [respondens, Latin.]

1. An answerer in a suit.

In giving an answer, the respondent should be in court, and personally admonished by the judge to answer the judge's interrogation. Ayliffe.

2. One whose province, in a set disputation, is to refute objections.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator! Morè.

The respondent may easily shew, that though wive may do all this, yet it may be finally hurtful to the soul and body of him. Watts.

RESPO'NSE, rè-spònsè'. n. s. [responsum, Latin.]

1. An answer; commonly an oraculous answer.

Mere natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration. Government of the Tongue.

The oracles, which had before flourished, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced. Hammond.

2. [respon, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in public worship.

To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary, after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response. Watts.

RESPONSIBLE, ré-spôn'sé-bl. adj. [from responsus, Lat.]

1. Answerable; accountable.

Heathens, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, are responsible for it. Hammond.

He as much satisfies the itch of telling news; he as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the truth of his relations. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.

The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as a security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible. Locke.

RESPONSIBLENESS, ré-spôn'sé-bl-nés. n. s. [from responsible.] State of being obliged or qualified to answer.

RESPONSION, ré-spôn'shún. n. s. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.

All things retir'd to rest,

Mind us of like repose.

Milton.

My tost limbs are wearied into rest.

Pope.

2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.

Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden.

3. Stillness; cessation or absence of motion.

Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build? Milton.

All things past are equally and perfectly at rest;
and to this way of consideration of them are all one,
whether they were before the world, or but yesterday. Locke.

4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.

Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart;
and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Mathew.
He giveth you rest from all your enemies.

Deuteronomy.

'Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding it best
To be below herself to be at rest. Daniel.

The root cut off, from whence these tumults rose,
He should have rest, the commonwealth repose.

Daniel.

Thus fenc'd, but not at rest or ease of mind.

Milton.

Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms
Shall a short life enjoy a little rest? Fanshawe.

With what a load of vengeance am I prest,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest;
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love.

Dryden.

Like the sun, it had light and agility: it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity. South.

Thither, where sinners may have rest. 1 go. Pope.

The grave, where ev'n the great find rest. Pope.

5. Cessation from bodily labour.

There the weary be at rest. Job.

The christian ehuseth for his day of rest the first day of the week, that he might thereby profess himself a servant of God, who on the morning of that day vanquished Satan. Nelson.

6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.

Forth prick'd Clorinda from the throng,

And 'gainst Tancredie set her spear in rest. Fairfax.

A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel setteth business straight.

Bacon.

Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest;

Or 'at the helmet pointed, or the crest;

They speed the race. Dryden.

Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steady upon the rest, holding the edge a little aslant over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest. Moxon.

7. Place of repose.

Sustain'd by him with comforts, till we end

In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.

8. Final hope.

Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battle.

Bacon.

This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, if upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolved to set up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Clarendon.

9. [reste, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Remainder; what remains.

Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give. Tillotson.

The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known,
The rest a huntress. Dryden.

REST, rést. adj. [restes, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Others; those not included in any proposition.

By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the inhabitants. Abbot.

They had no other consideration of the publick, than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all peaceable arts. Clarendon.

Plato, and the rest of the philosophers acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and providence of the supreme God. Stillingfleet.

Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears,
And by his pious labour urges theirs. Dryden.

Upon so equal terms did they all stand, that no one had a fairer pretence of right than the rest. Woodward.

To REST, rést. v. n. [from the noun.]

After such a lord I rest secure,

Thou wilt no foreign reins or Trojan load endure. Dryden.

There yet survives the lawful heir
Of Sanchio's blood, whom, when I shall produce,
I rest assur'd to see you pale with fear. Dryden.

6. To cease from labour.

Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest.

The ark went before, to search out a resting place for them. Numbers.

From work

Resting, he bless'd the seventh day. Milton.

When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears. Taylor.

7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.

To urge the foe to battle,

Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,

Were to refuse th' awards of providence,

And not to rest in heaven's determination. Addison.

8. To lean; to recline for support or quiet.

On him I rested,

And, not without consid'ring, fix'd my fate. Dryden.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.

The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge. Locke.

9. [resto, Latin; rester, Fr.] To be left; to remain.

Fall'n he is; and now

What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass

On his transgression? Milton.

There resteth the comparative; that is, its being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heresies. Bacon.

To REST, rést. v. a.

1. To lay to rest.

Your piety has paid

All needful rites, to rest my wand'ring shade.

Dryden.

2. To place as on a support.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last,

Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;

So England now doth, with like toil oppress,

Her weary head upon your bosom rest. Waller.

The protestants having well studied the fathers, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon scripture only, but fathers too; so far at least as the three first centuries. Waterland.

Herc rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown. Gray.

RESTA'GNANT, ré-stág'nánt. adj. [restagnans, Lat.] Remaining without flow or motion.

He would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakespeare.

He restitution to the value makes; Nor joy in his extorted treasure takes. Sandys.

Whosoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution. Taylor.

In case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution. Tillotson.

A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has lost his note. Arbutnot.

2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastick; that so their roots may yield to stones, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of restitution. Grew.

RE'STLESLY, rêst'lês-lê. adv. [from restless.] Without rest; unquietly.

When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember; thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South.

RE'STLENESS, rêst'lês-nês. n. s. [from restless.]

1. Want of sleep.

Restlessness and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey.

2. Want of rest; unquietness.

Let him keep the rest, But keep them with repining restlessness; Let him be rich and weary, that at least, If goodness lead him not, yet weariness May toss him to my breast. Herbert.

I sought my bed, in hopes relief to find, But restlessness was mistress of my mind. Harte.

3. Motion; agitation.

The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any hut the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Boyle.

RE'STLESS, rêst'lês. adj. [from rest.]

1. Being without sleep.

Restless he pass'd the remnants of the night, Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh: And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight, With paler fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden.

2. Unquiet; without peace.

Ease to the body some, none to the mind From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone, But rush upon me thronging, and present Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now. Milton.

Could we not wake from that lethargick dream, But to be restless in a worse extreme? Denham.

We find our souls disordered and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury.

What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes,

When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior.

3. Unconstant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand, Bold was his heart, and restless was his spright. Fairfax.

He's proud, fantastick, apt to change, Restless at home, and ever prone to range. Dryden.

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose

Such restless revolution, day by day Repeated? Milton.

RESTO'RABLE, rê-stô'râ-bl. adj. [from restore.] What may be restored.

By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly despoiled. Swift.

RESTORA'TION, rês-tô-râ'shûn. n. s. [from restore; restauration, Fr.]

1. The act of replacing in a former state. This is properly restauration.

Hail, royal Albion, hail to thee, Thy longing people's expectation! Sent from the gods to set us free From bondage and from usurpation: Behold the different climes agree, Rejoicing in thy restauration. Dryden.

The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restauration. Swift.

2. Recovery.

The change is great in this restauration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers.

RESTO'RATIVE, rê-stô'râ-tîv. adj. [from restore.] That has the power to recruit life.

Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil; But life preserves, destroys life's enemy, Hunger, with sweet restorative delight. Milton.

RESTO'RATIVE, rê-stô'râ-tîv. n. s. [from restore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.

I will kiss thy lips; Haply some poison yet doth hang on them, To make me die with a restorative. Shakespeare.

God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the houndless rage of an insatiable intemperance, and take the weakness of the flesh, the physick and restorative of the spirit. South.

Asses' milk is an excellent restorative in consumptions. Mortimer.

He prescribes an English gallon of asses' milk, especially as a restorative. Arbutnot.

To RESTO'RE, rê-stô're'. v. a. [restaurer, Fr. restauo, Lat.]

1. To give back what has been lost or taken away.

Restore the man his wife. Genesis. He shall restore in the principal, and add the fifth part more. Leviticus.

She lands him on his native shores, And to his father's longing arm restores. Dryden.

2. To bring back.

The father banish'd virtue shall restore, And crimes shall threat the guilty world no more. Dryden.

Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.

3. To retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin, to its former state.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain the blissful seat. Milton.

Th' archangel paus'd Between the world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milton.

These artificial experiments are but so many essays, whereby men attempt to restore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilkins.

In his Odyssey, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune restored after the severest afflictions. Prior.

4. To cure; to recover from disease. Garth, faster than a plague destroys, restores. Granville.

5. To recover passages in books from corruption.

RESTO'RER, rê-stô'rûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from re-store.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost, or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son,

Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom

New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Mill.

I foretel you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden.

Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift.

To RESTRAIN, rê-strâin'. v. a. [re-streindre, Fr. restringo, Lat.]

1. To withhold; to keep in.

If she restrain'd the riots of your followers, 'Tis to such wholesome end as clears her. Shakspeare.

The gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs. Shakspeare.

2. To repress; to keep in awe.

The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke.

That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke.

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.

Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakspeare.

Compassion gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.

4. To abridge.

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance. Shakspeare.
Though they two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty, yet this discovered too much of the humour of the court. Clarendon.

5. To hold in.

His horse, with a half checked bit, and a head-stall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots. Shakspeare.

6. To limit; to confine.

We restrain it to those only duties, which all men, by force of natural wit, understand to be such duties as concern all men. Hooker.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute? South.

Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also is to be restrained by a part of the predicate; as all the Italians are politicians; that is, those among the Italians, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i. e. they are generally so.
Watts.

RESTRAIN'ABLE, rê-strâ'nâ-bl. adj. [from restrain.] Capable to be restrained.

Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable, than the pen of the poet. Brown.

RESTRAIN'EDLY, rê-strâ'néd-lè. adv. [from restrained.] With restraint; without latitude.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the scripture, is manifested by the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it be sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth signify a far smaller disproportionable part of the world. Hammond.

RESTRAIN'ER, rê-strâ'nûr.²⁰² n. s. [from restrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.

If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience, submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the restrainer. Brown.

RESTRAINT, rê-strânt'. n. s. [from restrain; restraint, Fr.]

1. Abridgment of liberty.

She will well excuse,

Why at this time the doors are barred against you:

Depart in patience,

And about evening come yourself alone,

To know the reason of this strange restraint. Shakspeare.

I request

Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint

Doth move the murm'ring lips of discontent. Shakspeare.

It is to no purpose to lay restraints or give privileges to men, in such general terms, as the particular persons concerned cannot be known by. Locke.

I think it a manifest disadvantage and a great restraint upon us. Felton.

2. Prohibition.

What mov'd our parents to transgress his will,

For one restraint, lord of the world besides? Mill.

3. Limitation; restriction.

If all were granted, yet it must be maintained, within any bold restraints, far otherwise than it is received. Brown.

4. Repression; hinderance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.

There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by many or by few. 1 Samuel.

Thus it shall befall

Him who, to worth in woman overtrusting,

Lets her will rule; restraint she will not brook. Milton.

Is there any thing which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person than a severe temperance, and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures? South.

To RESTRICT, rê-strikt'. v. a. [restrictus, Latin.] To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.

In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTION, rê-strik'shûn. n. s. [restriction, French.] Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a divertisement, not a trade. Gov. of the Tongue.

Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places. Temple.

All duties are matter of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.

Each other gift, which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To one fix'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.

Celsus's rule, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTIVE, rê-strik'tiv. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

They who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. Stillingfleet.

2. [restrictif, Fr.] Styptic; astringent.

I applied a plaister over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Wiseman.

RESTRICTIVELY, rê-strik'tiv-lè. adv. [from restrictive.] With limitation.

All speech, tending to the glory of God or the good of man, is aright directed; which is not to be understood so restrictively, as if nothing but divinity or necessary concerns of life, may lawfully be brought into discourse. Government of the Tongue.

To RESTRI'NGE, rê-strînje'. v. a. [restringo, Latin.] To confine; to contract; to astringe.

RESTRI'NGENT, rê-strînj'ènt. n. s. [restringens, Latin; restringent, French.]

That which hath the power of contracting; styptic.

The two latter indicate phlebotomy for revulsion, restringents to stench, and incassatives to thicken
the blood. Harvey.

RE'STY, rês'tè. adj. [restif, French.] Oustinate in standing still. See RESTIFF.

Come, our stomachs

Will make what's homely savoury, weariness

Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth

Finds the down pillow hard. Shakspeare.

Have not other hands been tied and found resty/
but we stick at nothing. Davenant.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may,
with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

To RESUBLIME, rê-sûb-lîme'. v. a. [re and sublime.] To sublime another time.

When mercury sublimate is resublimed with fresh mercury it becomes mercurius dulcis, which is a white tasteless earth scarce dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimed with spirit of salt returns into mercury sublimate. Newton.

To RESUL'T, rê-zûlt'.⁴⁴⁶ v. n. [resulter,
French; resulto, Latin.]

1. To fly back.

With many a weary step, and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resulting with a bound, Thunders impetuous down, and smoaks along the ground. Pope.

2. [resulter, French.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.

Rue prospers much, if set by a fig tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to result sweet, the other bitter. Bacon.

Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite,
Wonder from thence results, from thence delight. Denham.

Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately result. Burnet.

Pleasure and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. Tillotson.

The horror of an object may overbear the pleasure resulting from its greatness. Addison.

Their effects are often very disproportionable to the principles and parts that result from the analysis. Baker.

3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESUL'T, rê-zûlt'. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Resilience; act of flying back.

Sound is produced between the string and the air, by the return of the result of the string, which was strained by the touch to his former place. Bacon.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.

Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgment for not speedily concurring with them. King Charles.

As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,

'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,

Nor this part musk or civet eau we call,

Or amber, but a rich result of all:

So she was all a sweet, whose ev'ry part,

In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art. Dryden.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain: men in trade seldom lay out money upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.

5. Inference from premises.

These things are a result or judgment upon fact.
South.

4. Resolve; decision. Improper.

Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Swift.

RESULTANCE, rê-zûlt'ânse. n. s. [resultance, French.] The act of resulting.

RESUMABLE, rê-zû'mâ-bl. adj. [from resume.] What may be taken back.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. Hale.

To RESUME, rê-zûme'.⁴⁴⁵ v. a. [resumo, Latin.]

1. To take back what has been given.

The sun, like this, from which our sight we have, Gaz'd on too long, resumes the light he gave. Denh.

Sees not my love, how time resumes
The glory which he lent these flow'rs;

Though none should taste of their perfumes,
Yet must they live but some few hours:

Time, what we forbear, devours. Waller.

2. To take back what has been taken away.

That opportunity,

Which then they had to take from 's, to resume
We have again. Shakspeare.

They resume what has been obtained fraudently, by surprise and upon wrong suggestions. Davenant.

3. To take again.

He'll enter into glory, and resume his seat. Milt.
At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head,
Reason resum'd her place, and passion fled. Dryd.

4. Dryden uses it with again, but improperly, unless the resumption be repeated.

To him our common grandsire of the main
Had giv'n to change his form, and chang'd, resume again. Dryden.

5. To begin again what was broken off:
as, to resume a discourse.

RESUMPTION, rê-zûm'shûn.⁴⁴² n. s. [resomption, French; resumptus, Latin.]

The act of resuming.

If there be any fault, it is the resumption or the dwelling too long upon his arguments. Denham.

The universal voice of the people seeming to call for some kind of resumption, the writer of these papers thought it might not be unseasonable to publish a discourse upon grants. Davenant.

RESUMPTIVE, rê-zûm'tiv. adj. [resumptus, Latin.] Taking back.

RESUPINATION, rê-sû-pê-nâ'shûn.⁴⁴⁶ n. s. [resupino, Latin.] The act of lying on the back.

To RESURVEY, rê-sûr-vâ'. v. a. [re and survey.] To review; to survey again.

I have, with cursory eye, o'erglanc'd the articles;
Appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us, once more with better heed
To resurvey them. Shakspeare.

RESURRECTION, rêz-ûr-rêk'shûn.⁴⁴⁵ n. s. [resurrection, Fr. resurrectum, Latin.]

Revival from the dead; return from the grave.

The Sadducees were grieved, that they taught,
and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts.

Nor after resurrection shall he stay Longer on earth, than certain times t' appear
To his disciples. Milton.

He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward to the great object which she has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being remitted to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection. Spectator.

Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a publick act, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. Watts.

To RESUSCITATE, rê-sûs'sê-tâte.⁴⁴⁵

v. a. [resuscito, Latin.] To stir up anew; to revive.

We have beasts and birds for dissection, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth, resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance. Bacon.

RESUSCITATION, rê-sûs-sê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from resuscitate.] The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.

Your very obliging manner of enquiring after me, at your resuscitation, should have been sooner answered: I sincerely rejoice at your recovery. Pope.

To RETAIL, rê-tâle'.²⁰² ⁴⁹² v. a. [retailer, French.]

1. To sell in small quantities, in consequence of selling at second hand.

All encouragement should be given to artificers; and those, who make, should also vend and retail their commodities. Locke.

2. To sell at second hand.

The sage dame,

By names of toasts, retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

3. To tell in broken parts, or at second hand.

He is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me. Shaksp.

Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;

To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole viêtress, Cæsar's Cæsar. Shakspeare.

RETAIL, rê'tâle. n. s. [from the verb.]

Sale by small quantities, or at second hand.

The author, to prevent such monopoly of sense, is resolved to deal in it himself by retail. Addison.

We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,

And selling basely by retail. Swift.

RETAILER, rê-tâ'lûr. n. s. [from retail.]

One who sells by small quantities.

From these particulars we may guess at the rest, as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. Hakewill.

To RETAIN, rê-tâne'.²⁰² v. a. [retineo, Lat. retiner, French.]

1. To keep; not to lose.

Where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain? Shaksp.

Though the offending part felt mortal pain,
Th' immortal part its knowledge did retain. Denh.

The vigour of this arm was never vain;
And that you wou'dst prowess I retain,

Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
A tomb and fun'ral honors I decreed
The place your armour and your name retains. Dryden.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it is reasonable to conclude, it can retain without the help of the body too. Locke.

2. To keep; not to lay aside.

Let me retain

The name and all the addition to a king:
The sway, beloved sons, be yours. Shakspeare.

As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind. Romans.

Be obedient, and retain Unalterably firm his love entire. Milton.

Although they retain the word mandrake in the text, yet they retract it in the margin. Brown.

They who have restored painting in Germany, not having seen any of those fair reliques of antiquity, have retained much of that barbarous method. Dryden.

3. To keep; not to dismiss.

Receive him that is mine own bowels; whom I would have retained with me. Philemon.

Hollow rocks retain

The sound of blust'ring winds. Milton.

4. To keep in pay; to hire.

A Benedictine convent has now retained the most learned father of their order to write in its defence. Addison.

To RETAIN, rê-tâne'. v. n.

1. To belong to; to depend on.

These betray upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness. Boyle.

In animals many actions depend upon their living form, as well as that of mixtion, and though they wholly seem to retain to the body, depart upon disunion. Brown.

2. To keep; to continue. Not in use.

Perhaps it should be retain.
No more can impure man retain and move
In the pure region of that worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

RETAINER, rê-tâ'nûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from retain.]

1. An adherent; a dependant; a hanger-on.

You now are mounted,
Where pow'rs are your retainers. Shakspeare.

One darling inclination of mankind affects to be a retainer to religion; the spirit of opposition, that lived long before christianity, and can easily subsist without it. Swift.

A combination of honest men would endeavour to extirpate all the profligate immoral retainers to each side that have nothing to recommend them, but an implicit submission to their leaders. Addison.

2. In common law, retainer signifieth a servant not menial nor familiar, that is not dwelling in his house; but only using or bearing his name or livery. Cowell.

3. The act of keeping dependants, or being in dependance.

By another law, the king's officers and farmers were to forfeit their places and holds, in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in unlawful assemblies. Bacon.

To RETAKE, rê-tâke'. v. a. [re and take.]

To take again.

A day shall be appointed, when the remonstrance should be retaken into consideration. Clarendon.

To RETALIATE, rê-tâl'ê-âte.¹¹³ v. a. [re and talio, Latin.] To return by giving like for like; to repay; to requite: it may be used of good or evil.

It is very unlucky, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger of appearing the first aggressors. Swift.

If a first minister of state had used me as you have done, retaliating would be thought a mark of courage. Swift.

RETALIATION, rê-tâl-ê-â'shûn. n. s. [from retaliate.] Requit; return of like for like.

They thought it no irreligion to prosecute the severest retaliation or revenge; so that at the same time their outward man might be a saint, and their inward man a devil. South.

God, graciously becoming our debtor, takes what is done to others as done to himself, and by promise obliges himself to full retaliation. Calamy.

To RETARD, rê-târd'. v. a. [retardo, Latin; retarder, French.]

1. To hinder; to obstruct in swiftness of course.

How Iphitus with me, and Pelias Slowly retire; the one retarded was
By feeble age, the other by a wound. Denham.

2. To delay; to put off.

Nor kings nor nations

One moment can retard th' appointed hour. Dryd.
It is as natural to delay a letter at such a season, as to retard a melancholy visit to a person one cannot relieve. Pope.

To RETARD, ré-târd'. v. n. To stay back.
Some years it hath also retarded, and come far later, than usually it was expected. Brown.

RETARDATION, ré-târ-dâ'shûn.⁶⁵⁰ n. s.
[retardation, French; from retard.]
Hinderance; the act of delaying.

Out of this a man may devise the means of altering the colour of birds, and the retardation of hoary hairs. Bacon.

RETARDER, ré-târd'ûr.⁶⁵ n. s. [from retard.] Hinderer; obstructor.

This disputing way of enquiry is so far from advancing science, that it is no inconsiderable re-tarder. Glanville.

To RETCH, rétsh. v. n. [hræcan, Saxon.]
To force up something from the stomach. It is commonly written reach.

RETCHESS, rétsh'lés. adj. [sometimes written wretchedless, properly reckless.
See RECKLESS.] Careless.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began;
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone. Dryden.

RETECTION, ré-ték'shûn. n. s. [retectus, Latin.] The act of discovering to the view.

This is rather a restoration of a body to its own colour, or a relection of its native colour, than a change. Boyle.

RETENTION, ré-tên'shûn. n. s. [retentio,
Fr. retentio, from retentus, Latin.]

1. The act of retaining; the power of retaining.

No woman's heart
So big to hold so much; they lack retention. Shaks.
A forward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as an innovation; and they that reverence too much old things, are but a scorn to the new. Bacon.

2. Retention and retentive faculty is that state of contraction in the solid parts, which makes them hold fast their proper contents. Quincy.

3. Memory.

The backward learner makes amends another way, expiating his want of docility with a deeper and more rooted retention. South.

Retention is the keeping of those simple ideas, which from sensation or reflection the mind hath received. Locke.

To REVEA'L, rê-vêl'.²²⁷ v. a. [revelo, Lat. reveler, Fr.]

1. To show; to discover; to lay open; to disclose a secret.

Be ashamed: speaking again that which thou hast heard, and revealing of secrets. Ecclesiasticus.

Light was the wound, the prince's care unknown, She might not, would not yet reveal her own. Waller.

The answer to one who asked what time was, si non rogas intelligo; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered. Locke.

Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light, A blaze of glory that forbids the sight; O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd, And search no further than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

2. To impart from heaven.

The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Romans.

REVEA'LER, rê-vê'lûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from revel.]

1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable assent unto things incident, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown.

The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.

2. One that discovers to view.

He brought a taper; the revealer light Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight. Dryden.

To RE'VEL, rêv'êl. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveiller, Fr. to awake; Lye from raveelen, Dut. to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.

My honey love,

Will we return unto thy father's house, And revel it as bravely as the best. Shaksp.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two.

Tybalt being slain so late, It may be thought we held him carelessly, Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shaksp.

Antony, that revels long o' nights, Is up. Shaksp.

We shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shaksp.

He can report you more odd tales Of our outlaw Robin Hood, That revel'd here in Sherwood, Though he ne'er shot in his bow. Ben Jonson.

Were the doctrine new, That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true; For every part to dance and revel goes, They tread the air, and fall not where they rose. Donne.

Whene'er I revel'd in the women's bow'rs; For first I sought her but at looser hours: The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet. Prior.

RE'VEL, rêv'êl. n. s. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.

Let them pinch th' unclean knight, And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shaksp. They could do no less, but, under your fair conduct, Crave leave to view these ladies, and intreat An hour of revels with them. Shaksp.

To RE'VEL, rê-vêl'. v. a. [revello, Latin.] To retract; to draw back.

Those, who miscarry, escape by their flood, revelling the humours from their lungs. Harvey.

Not unappeas'd he pass'd the Stygian gate, Who leaves a brother to revenge his fate. Pope.

2. To vindicate by punishment of an enemy.

If our hard fortune no compassion draws, The gods are just, and will revenge our cause. Dryden.

3. To wreak one's wrongs on him that inflicted them. With the reciprocal pronoun, or in a passive sense.

Come, Antony and young Octavius, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius. Shaksp.

It is a quarrel most unnatural, To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee. Shaksp.

Northumberland slew thy father; And thine, lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge; If I be not, heav'n's be reveng'd on me! Shaksp.

Edom hath revenged himself upon Judah. Ezekiel.

O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors. Jeremiah.

Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisdom.

Your fury of a wife, Not yet content to be reveng'd on you, Th' agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.

REVENGE, rê-vênje'.⁷⁴ n. s. [revanche, revanche, Fr.]

1. Return of an injury.

May we, with the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with further revenge. Shaksp.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood; from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. Deuteronomy.

Deformed persons are commonly even with nature; for as nature has done ill by them, so they do by nature; being void of natural affection; they have their revenge of nature. Bacon.

What will not ambition and revenge descend to? Milton.

The satyr in a rage Forgets his bus'ness is to laugh and bite, And will of death and dire revenges write. Dryden.

Draco, the Athenian law-giver, granted an impunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Broomer.

2. The passion of vengeance; desire of hurting one from whom hurt has been received.

Revenge burn in them: for their dear causes Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man. Shaksp.

3. Revenge is an act of passion; vengeance of justice. Injuries are revenged, crimes are avenged. This distinction is perhaps not always preserved.

REVENGEFUL, ré-vênje'fûl. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.

May my hands
Never brandish more revengeful steel
O'er the glittering helmet of my foe. Shaksp.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
Which hide in this true breast. Shaksp.
Into my borders now Jarbas falls,
And my revengeful brother scales the walls. Denham.

Repenting England, this revengeful day,
To Phillip's manes did an off'ring bring. Dryden.

REVENGEFULLY, ré-vênje'fûl-lè. adv.
[from revengeful.] Vindictively.
He smil'd revengefully, and leap'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
Gods I accuse you not. Dryden.

REVENGER, ré-vên'jâr. n. s. [from revenge.]

1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.
May be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
Have secret pow'r t' appease enflamed rage. Spenser.

I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends Shaksp.
So shall the great revenger ruinate
Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys.
Morocco's monarch

Had come in person, to have seen and known
The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.

2. One who punishes crimes.

What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury? Bentley.

REVENGEMENT, ré-vênje'mént. n. s. [from revenge.] Vengeance; return of an injury.

It may dwell
In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. Spenser.

By the perclose of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.

REVENGINGLY, ré-vên'jîng-lè. adv. [from revenging.] With vengeance; vindictively.

I've bely'd a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on 't Revengingly enfeebles me. Shaksp.

REVENUE, rév'è-nû, or ré-vên'û. n. s. [from revenue, Fr. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.

They privily send over unto them the revenues wherewith they are there maintained. Spenser.
She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart scorns our poverty. Shaksp.

Only I retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, beloved sons, be yours. Shaksp.
Many offices are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.

If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on still. L'Estrange.

His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest;
Not so a nation's revenues are paid;
The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.

When men grow great from their revenue spent,
And fly from bailiffs into parliament. Young.
To REVE'RB, ré-vêrb'. v. a. [from reverbero, Lat.] To resound; to reverberate. Not in use.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness:
The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud sound
Reverbs no hollowness. Shaksp.

REVE'RBERANT, ré-vêrb'êr-ânt. adj. [from reverberans, Lat.] Resounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.

Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Olivia! Shaksp.

To REVE'RBERATE, ré-vêrb'êr-âte. v. a. [from reverbero, Lat. reverberer, Fr.]

1. To beat back.
Nor doth he know them for aught,
Till he behold them formed in th' applause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, re-verb'rates

The sound again. Shaksp.
As the sight of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.

As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.

2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.
Crocus martis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract. Brown.

To REVE'RBERATE, ré-vêrb'êr-âte. v. n.

1. To be driven back; to bound back.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, that they dispelled all clouds. Hovell.

2. To resound.

Start
And echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shaksp.

REVE'RBERATION, ré-vêrb'êr-â'shûn. n. s. [from reverberation, Fr. from reverberate.] The act of beating or driving back.

To the reflection of visibles, small glasses suffice; but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bacon.

The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reverberations of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses. Addison.

REVE'RBERATORY, ré-vêrb'êr-â-tûr-ê. adj. [from reverberatoire, Fr.] Returning; beating back.

Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints, but they are hard to burn, except in a reverberatory kiln. Mozon.

To REVE'RE, ré-vêre'. v. a. [from revereor, Latin.] To reverence; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.

An emperor often stamped on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Vcrus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison.

Love shall again revere your pow'r,
And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.
Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r rever'd,
And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Prior.

REVERENCE, rév'êr-êuse. n. s. [from reverence, Fr. reverentia, Lat.]

1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.
When quarrels and factions are carried openly,
it is a sign the reverence of government is lost Bacon.

Higher of the gonial bed,
And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milton.

In your prayers, use reverent postures and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.

A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryden.

The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear; an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.

2. Act of obeisance; bow; courtesy.

Now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence. Shaksp.

He led her eas'ly forth,
Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
She rev'rence did, then blush'd as one dismay'd. Fairfax.

Had not men the hoary heads rever'd,
Or boys paid rev'rence when a man appear'd,
Both must have dy'd. Dryden.

Up starts the beldam,
And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.

The monarch
Commands into the court the beautiful Emily:
So call'd, she came; the senate rose and paid
Becoming rev'rence to the royal maid. Dryden.

3. Title of the clergy.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shaksp.

4. Poetical title of a father.

O my dear father! let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shaksp.

To REVERENCE, rév'êr-êuse. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.

Those that I rev'rence, those I fear, the wise;
At fools I laugh, not fear them. Shaksp.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milt.

He slew Aetion, but despoil'd him not;
Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
And reverenc'd thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Rogers.

He presents every one so often before God in his prayers, that he never thinks he can esteem, reverence, or serve those enough, from whom he implores so many mercies from God. Law.

REVERENCER, rév'êr-ên-sûr. n. s. [from reverence.] One who regards with reverence.

The Athenians, quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crown'd heads. Swift.

REVEREND, rév'êr-ênd. adj. [from reverendus, Lat.]

1. Venerable; deserving reverence; exacting respect by his appearance.

Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shaksp.

Reverend and gracious senators. Shaksp.
Onias, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, pray'd for the Jews. 2 Maccabees.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend and religious man,
His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

A reverend sire among them came

Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Milton.
 Rev'rend old man! to here confest he stands.

Pope.

2. The honorary epithet of the clergy.
 We style a clergyman, reverend; a bishop, right reverend; an archbishop, most reverend.

REVERENT, rêv'êr-ênt. adj. [reverens, Latin.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.

They forthwith to the place
 Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell
 Before him reverent. Milton.

Meet then the senior, far renown'd for sense,
 With rev'rent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.

REVERENTIAL, rêv-êr-ên-shâl. adj. [reverentielle, French; from reverent.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.

That oaths made in reverential fear
 Of love and his wrath may any forswear. Donne.

The least degree of contempt weakens religion;
 it properly consisting in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.

The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Woodward.

All look up, with reverential awe,
 At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law. Pope.

REVERENTIALLY, rêv-êr-ên-shâl-ê. adv. [from reverential.] With show of reverence.

The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from north to south. Brown.

REVERENTLY, rêv'êr-ênt-lê. adv. [from reverent.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently. Shaks.
 His disciples here,

By their great master sent to preach him every where,

Most reverently receiv'd. Drayton.
 To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,

Whereby our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
 So reverently men quit th' open air,
 When thunder speaks the angry gods abroad. Dryden.

Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
 Only reserve the sacred one:

Low, reverently low,
 Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:

To look to heav'n be blind to all below. Prior.

REVERER, rê-vê-rûr. n. s. [from reverere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Masorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament. Gov. of the Tongue.

REVER'SAL, rê-vêr'sâl. n. s. [from reverse.] Change of sentence.

The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon.

1. To turn upside down.

A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point, if balanced by admirable skill. Temple.

2. To overturn; to subvert.

These now controul a wretched people's fate,
 These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.

3. To turn back.

Michael's sword stay'd not;

But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd Satan's right side. Milton.

4. To contradict; to repeal.

Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that strifes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end. Hooker.

A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed. Hayward.

Death, his doom which I

To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
 To better life shall yield him. Milton

Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.

Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judged of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

5. To turn to the contrary.

These plain characters we rarely find,
 Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;
 Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,
 Or affectations quite reverse the soul. Pope.

6. To put each in the place of the other.

With what tyranny custom governs men! it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.

7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.

Well knowing true all he did rehearse,
 And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
 The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Spenser.

As were our England in reversion his,
 And he our subjects next degree in hope. Shaks.

A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on. Hammond.

2. Succession; right of succession.

He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends; many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompense of services, procured the reversion of his office. Clarendon.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute? South.

So many candidates there stand for wit,
 A place at court is scarce so hard to get;
 In vain they crowd each other at the door;
 For e'en reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.

Fame's a reversion in which men take place,
 O late reversion! at their own decease. Young.

REVERSIONARY, rê-vêr'shûn-â-rê. adj. [from reversion.] To be enjoyed in succession.

He with great indifference considered his reviews and subsequent editions. Fell.

We make a general review of the whole work, and a general review of nature; that, by comparing them, their full correspondency may appear. Burnet.

The works of nature will bear a thousand views and reviews; the more narrowly we look into them, the more occasion we shall have to admire. Atterbury.

To REVILE, rê-vîle'. v. a. [re and vile.] To reproach; to vilify; to treat with contumely.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snib. Spenser.
I read in's looks

Matter against me; and his eye revîl'd
Me as his subject object. Shaksp.

Fear not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revîlings. Isaiah.

She still beareth him an invincible hatred, revîl-eth him to his face, and railleth at him in all companies. Swift.

REVÎLE, rê-vîle'. n. s. [from the verb.] Reproach; contumely; exprobration. Not used, but elegant.

I heard thee in the garden, and of thy voice Afraid, being naked, hid myself,—to whom
The gracious Judge, without revîle, reply'd. Milton.

REVÎLER, rê-vîl'êr. n. s. [from revîle.] One who reviles; one who treats another with contumelious terms.

The bitterest revîlers are often half witted people. Gov. of the Tongue.

REVÎLINGLY, rê-vîl'îng-lê. adv. [from revîle.] In an opprobrious manner; with contumely.

The love I bear to the civility of expression will not suffer me to be revîlingly abroad. Maine.

REVÎSAL, rê-vî'zâl. n. s. [from revîse.] Review; re-examination.

The revîsal of these letters has been a kind of examination of conscience to me; so fairly and faithfully have I set down in them the undisguised state of the mind. Pope.

To REVÎSE, rê-vîze'. v. a. [revîsus, Latin.] To review; to overlook.

Lintot will think your price too much:
Not, sir, if you revîse it, and retouch. Pope.

REVÎSE, rê-vîze'. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Review; re-examination.
The author is to be excused, who never, in regard to his eyes and other impediments, gives himself the trouble of corrections and revîsals. Boyle.

To REVÎSIT, rê-vîz'ît. v. a. [revîsiter, Fr. revîso, revîsito, Latin.] To visit again.

Thou I revîsit safe,
And feel thy sov'reign vital lamp; but thou
Revîsîst not these eyes, that rowl in vain,
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.

Let the pale sire revîsît Thebes, and bear
These pleasing orders to the tyrant's ear. Pope.

REVÎVAL, rê-vî'vâl. n. s. [from revîse.] Recall from a state of languor, oblivion, or obscurity; recall to life.

To REVÎVE, rê-vîve'. v. n. [revîvre, Fr. revîvo, Latin.]

1. To return to life.

So he dies;
But soon revîves: death over him no power Shall long usurp. Milton.

2. To return to vigour or fame; to rise from languor, oblivion, or obscurity.

I revîve
At this last sight, assur'd that man shall live. Milton.

To REVÎVE, rê-vîve'. v. a.

1. To bring to life again.

Spot more delicious, than those gardens feign'd
Of revîv'd Adonis. Milton.

2. To raise from languor, insensibility, or oblivion.

Noise of arms, or view of martial guise,
Might not revîve desire of knightly exercise. Spenser.

3. To renew; to recollect; to bring back to the memory.

The memory is the power to revîve again in our minds those ideas, which after imprinting have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.

The mind has a power in many cases to revîve perceptions, which it has once had. Locke.

4. To quicken; to rouse.

I should revîve the soldiers' hearts;
Because I ever found them as myself. Shaksp.

What first Æneas in this place beheld,
Revîv'd his courage, and his fear expell'd. Dryden.

Old Egeus only could revîve his son,
Who various changes of the world had known. Dryden.

5. To recomfort; to restore to hope.

God lighten our eyes, and give us a little revîving in our bondage. Ezra.

6. To bring again into notice.

He'll use me as he does my betters,
Publish my life, my will, my letters,
Revîve the libels born to die,
Which Pope must bear as well as I. Swift.

7. [In chymistry.] To recover from a mixed state.

REVÎVER, rê-vî'vêr. n. s. [from revîse.] That which invigorates or revives.

To REVÎVIFICATE, rê-vîv'ê-fê-kâte. v. a. [revîvîfier, Fr. re and vîvîfico, Latin.] To recall to life.

REVÎVIFICATION, rê-vîv'ê-fê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from revîvîficat.] The act of recalling to life.

As long as an infant is in the womb of its parent, so long are these medicines of revîvîfication in preparing. Spectator.

REVÎVÎSCENCY, rêv-vê-vis'sên-sê. n. s. [revîvisco, revîviscentia, Lat.] Renewal of life.

Scripture makes mention of a restitution and revîviscency of all things at the end of the world. Burnet.

REVÎNION, rê-û'nê-ûn. n. s. [reunion, Fr. re and union.] Return to a state of juncture, cohesion, or concord.

She, that should all parts to revînion bow,
She that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten sundred parts in one. Donne.

To REUNITE, rê-û'nîte'. v. a. [re and unite.]

1. To join again; to make one whole a second time; to join what is divided.

By this match the line of Charles the great
Was revînited to the crown of France. Shaksp.

2. To reconcile; to make those at variance one.

To REUNITE, rê-û'nîte'. v. n. To cohere again.

REVOCABLE, rêv'ô-kâ-bl. adj. [revocabl, French; revoco, revocabilis, Lat.]

1. That may be recalled.

Howsoever you shew bitterness, do not act any thing that is not revocable. Bacon.

2. That may be repealed.

REVOCABLENESS, rêv'ô-kâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from revocabl.] The quality of being revocable.

To REVOCATE, rêv'ô-kâte. v. a. [revoco, Latin.] To recall; to call back.

His successor, by order, nullifies
Many his patents, and did revocate
And re-assume his liberalities. Daniel.

REVOCATION, rêv'ô-kâ'shûn. n. s. [revocation, Fr. revocatio, Lat.]

1. Act of recalling.

One, that saw the people bent for a revocation of Calvin, gave him notice of their affection. Hooker.

2. State of being recalled.

Elaiana's king commanded Chenandra to tell him that he had received advice of his revocation. Howel.

3. Repeal; reversal.

A law may cease to be in force, without an express revocation of the lawgiver. White.

If a grievance be inflicted on a person, he may appeal; it is not necessary to pray a revocation of such grievance. Ayliffe.

To REVOLVE, rê-vôlve'. v. a. [revolver, Fr. revoco, Lat.]

1. To repeal; to reverse.

When we abrogate a law as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revolve our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea s^t that were makers of it with oversight and error? Hooker.

What reason is there, b^t that those grants and privileges should be revolved, or reduced to the first intention? Spenser.

Without my A-rengzehe I cannot live;
Revolve his doct^s, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

2. To check; to repress.

She strove their sudden rages to revolve,
Th^t at the last repressing fury mad,
They 'gan abstain. Spenser.

3. To draw back.

Shame were to revolve
The forward footing for an hidden shade. Spenser.

Seas are troubled when they do revolve
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

REVOKEMENT, rê-vôk'émênt. n. s. [from revolve.] Revocation; repeal; recall.

Little in use.

Let it be nois'd,
That through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes. Shaksp.

To REVOL'T, rè-vòlt', or rè-vòlt'. v. n.
[revolter, Fr. revoltare, Ital.]

1. To fall off from one to another. It denotes something of pravity or rebellion.

All will revolt from me, and turn to him. Shaksp.

Our discontented counties do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience. Shaksp.
This people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone. Jeremiah.

2. To change. Not in use.
You are already love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt and change your mind. Shaksp.

REVOL'T, rè-vòlt'. n. s. [revolte, French;
from the verb.]

1. Desertion; change of sides.
He was greatly strengthened, and the enemy as much enfeebled by daily revolts. Raleigh.

If all our levies are made in Scotland or Ireland, may not those two parts of the monarchy be too powerful for the rest, in case of a revolt? Addison.

2. A revolter; one who changes sides.
Not in use.

You ingrate revolts,
You bloody Neros, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England. Shaksp.

3. Gross departure from duty.
Your daughter hath made a gross revolt:
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger. Shaksp.

REVOL'TED, rè-vòlt'éd. part. [from re- volt.] Having swerved from duty.

Thou single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

REVOL'TER, rè-vòlt'úr. n. s. [from revolt.]
One who changes sides; a deserter; a renegade.

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
He will accept thee to defend his cause,
A murderer, a revolter, and a robber. Milton.

He was not a revolter from the truth, which he had once embraced. Atterbury.

Those, who are negligent of revollers, shall perish. Swift.

To REVOL'VE, rè-vòlv'. v. n. [revolvero,
Latin.]

1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution.

They do not revolve about any common centre. Cheyne.

If the earth revolve thus, each house near the equator must move a thousand miles an hour. Watts.

Each revolving year,
The teeming eyes a triple offspring bear. Pope.

2. To fall back.
On the desertion of an appeal, the jurisdiction does ipso jure revolve to the judge a quo. Ayliffe.

To REVOL'VE, rè-vòlv'. v. a.

1. To roll any thing round.

Then in the east her turn she shows,
Revolv'd on heav'n's great axis. Milton.

2. To consider; to meditate on.

You may revolve what tales I told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shaksp.

REVOL'UTION, rè-vò-lù'shùn. n. s. [revo- lution, Fr. revolutus, Lat.]

1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move.

On their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day Repeated. Milton.

They will be taught the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts.

2. Space measured by some revolution.

At certain revolutions are they brought,
And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day.
Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Wake.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us xal' ἐξοχον, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

The late revolution, justified by its necessity, and the good it had produced, will be a lasting answer. Davenant.

4. Rotation; circular motion.

5. Motion backward.

Fear

Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution
On my defenceless head. Milton.

To REVOM'IT, rè-vòm'mít. v. a. [revomir,
Fr. re and vomit.] To vomit; to vomit again.

They might cast it up, and take more, vomiting and revomiting what they drink. Hakewill.

REVULSION, rè-vùlsh'ùn. n. s. [revulsion,
Fr. revulsus, Latin.] The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs only from revulsion in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used; if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wiseman.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion
it may make of humours from the head. Temple.

REVULSIVE, rè-vùl'siv. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revul- sives of any kind. Fell.

To REWA'RD, rè-wàrd'. v. a. [re and award, to give in return. Skinner.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have re- warded thee evil. 1 Samuel.

They rewarded me evil for good. Psalms.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give: and the method of his reward- ing is by giving them more grace. Hannond.

To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three, than for being hungry or sleepy: because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise. Wilkins.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Broome.

REWA'RD, rè-wàrd'. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.
Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill: without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit, and not a reward.

Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.
Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWA'RDABLE, rè-wàrd'à-bl. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors. Taylor.

REWA'RDER, rè-wàrd'úr. n. s. [from re- ward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shaksp.
As the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

All judges, as well as rewarders, have popular as-semblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

To REWO'RD, rè-wùrd'. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reword; which madness
Would gambol from. Shaksp.

RHABA'RBARATE, râ-bàr'bâ-râte. adj.
[from rhabarbara, Lat.] Impregnated or tinctured with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the sen-nate, rhabarbarate, and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Floyer.

RHA'BDOMANCY, râb'dò-mân-sé. n. s. [ῥαβ- δομαντεια and μαντεια.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhabdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazle, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown.

RHA'PSODIST, râp'sò-dist. n. s. [from rhaps- sody.] One who writes without regular dependance of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim? Watts.

RHA'PSODY, râp'sò-dè. n. s. [ῥαψωδία; ῥάπτω, to sew, and ὄδη, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependance or natural connexion.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Shaksp.

This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner. Hannond.

He, that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts.

RHEIN-BERRY, rène-bèr'rè. n. s. [spina cervina, Lat.] Buckthorn, a plant.

RHE'TORICK, rét'tò-rik. n. s. [ῥητορικη;
rhetorique, Fr.]

1. The act of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rheto- rique, if he had not acquired the art of using them.

Dryden.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Aristotle, in his second book of rhetorick, hath admirably discoursed in a little compass.

Locke.

Grammar teacheth us to speak properly, rhetorick instructs to speak elegantly.

Baker.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart 's still rhetorick, disclos'd with eyes.

Shakspeare.

His sober lips then did he softly part,
Whence of pure rhetorick whole streams outflow.

Fairfax.

Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhetorick,
That hath so well been taught her dazling fence.

Milton.

RHETORICAL, rê-tôr'è-kâl. adj. [rhetoricus, Latin; from rhetorick.] Pertaining to rhetorick; oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it.

More.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were presages of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again.

Brown.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhetorical, which does not come under our senses.

Watts.

RHETORICALLY, rê-tôr'è-kâl-è. adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

To RHETORICATE, rê-tôr'è-kâte. v. n. [rhetoricor, low Latin; from rhetorick.]

To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'Twill be much more seasonable to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved.

Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN, rêt-tô-rîsh'ân. n. s. [rhetoricien, French; rhetor, Latin.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhetorick.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old.

Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions.

Dryden.

A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator.

Baker.

2. An orator. Less proper.

He play'd at Lions a declaiming prize,
At which the vanquish'd rhetorician dies.

Dryden.

RHETORICIAN, rêt-tô-rîsh'ân. adj. Suiiting a master of rhetorick.

Boldly perform'd with rhetorician pride,
To hold of any question either side.

Blackmore.

RHEUM, rôôm. n. s. [ῥευμα; rheume, French.] A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth.

Quincy.

Trust not these cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without a rheum;

And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse.

Shakspeare.

You did void your rheum upon my beard.

Shakspeare.

Each changing season does its poison bring,
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.

Prior.

RHEUMATICK, rôô-mât'îk. adj. [ῥευματικος; from rheum.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watery humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases may abound.

Shakspeare.

The blood taken away looked very sizo or rheumatick.

Floyer.

RHEUMATISM, rôô-mâ-tizm. n. s. [ῥευματισμος; rheumatisme, Fr. rheumatismus, Latin.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis musculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout.

Quincy.

The throting quinsy, 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I send to rack the joints.

Dryden.

RHEUMY, rôô-mé. adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness?

Shakspeare.

The south he loos'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are shaken from his flaggy wings:
From his divided beard two streams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes distil in show'rs.

Dryd.

RHINOCEROS, ri-nô's'sé-rôs. n. s. [ῥίνο and κέρας; rhinocerot, Fr.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn on his nose.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble.

Shakspeare.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast; as to the rhinoceros an East Indian landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian.

Peacham.

RHOMB, rûmb. n. s. [rhombe, French; rhombus, Latin; ῥομβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base.

Trevoux and Harris.

Save the sun his labour, and that swift
Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd
Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night.

Milton.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings.

Milton.

RHOMBICK, rûm'bîk. adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the asteria in form of a star, and they are of a rhombick figure.

Grew.

RHOMBROID, rûm'bôid. n. s. [ῥομβοειδης; rhomboide, French.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhombick figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid.

Grew.

RHOMBOIDAL, rûm-bôid'âl. adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhomboidal selenites of a compressed form, had many others infixed round the middle of it.

Woodward.

RHUBARB, rôô-bûrb. n. s. [rhabarbara, Latin.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug
Would scour these English hence?

Shakspeare.

Having fixed the fontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale.

Wiseman.

RHYME, rime. n. s. [ῥυθμος; rhythme, French.]

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

The youth with songs and rhymes:
Some dance, some hale the rope.

Denham.

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses.

Hudibras.

Such was the news, indeed, hut songs and rhymes
Prevail as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise
Against an eagle sousing from the skies.

Dryden.

If Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis sure he must transfix the liver;
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense.

Prior

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did disperse,
As he were warmed with enchanted rhymes,
That oftentimes he quak'd.

Fairy Queen.

Who would not sing for Lyeidas? he knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.

Milton.

Now sportive youth,
Carol incoadite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver inharmonious.

Philips.

4. A word of sound to answer to another word.

What wise means to gain it hast thou chose?
Know, fame and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time?

Young.

RHYME or reason, rime. Number or sense.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time unto this season,
I had neither rhyme nor reason.

Spenser.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhime and reason, that they were fairies.

Shakspeare.

To RHYME, rime. v. n.

1. To agree in sound.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But faggot his notions as they fell,
And, if they rhim'd and rattled, all was well.

Dryd.

2. To make verses.

These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhime themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again.

Shakspeare.

There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride.

Pope.

RHYMER, ri'mûr. n. s. [from RHYMSTER, rime'stûr.] rhyme.] One who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.

Scall'd rhimers will ballad us out o' tune.

Shakspeare.

It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhimers, or news-tellers.

Davies.

Rhymer come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man.

Dryden.

Milton's rhime is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhimer, though not a poet.

Dryden.

I speak of those who are only rhimsters.

Dennis.

RHYTHNICAL, ri'h'mè-kâl. adj. [ῥυθμικος;
rythmique, Fr. from rhyme or rhythm.]

Harmonical; having one sound proportioned to another.

RIB, rib. n. s. [ribbe, Saxon.]

1. A bone in the body.

Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz. twelve on each side the twelve vertebræ of the back; they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebræ, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebræ: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebræ: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: their extremities which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head: the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intrails: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest: it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the musculus obliquus descendens.

Quincy.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature!

Shaksp.

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood streaming fresh.

Milton.

Sure he, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side.

Dryden.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial.

Shaksp.

The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creeping from the seas.

Drayton.

3. Any prominence running in lines; as the stalks of a leaf.

RIBALD, rib'bald.^{ss} n. s. [ribauld, Fr. ribaldo, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen.

Spenser.

Your ribauld nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

Shaksp.

The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer.

Shaksp.

Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribbalds,
From flashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds.

Pope.

RIBALDRY, rib'bald-rè. n. s. [from ribald; ribaudie, old Fr.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than barefaced ribaldry.

Dryden.

The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other.

Dryden.

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
Ere yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jests and fulsome ribaldry.

Granville.

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneness.

RIBAND, rib'bin.^{ss} n. s. [rubande, ruban, Fr. This word is sometimes written ribbon.] A fillet of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.

A name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Glisson. A distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction. Quincy.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness.

Graunt.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil. Dryden.

So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busy walks us in a theme,
Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain;
But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate. Prior.

RICKETY, rik'it-ē.⁹⁹ adj. [from rickets.]

We'll use his countenance; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise

His speedy taking off Shakspeare.

Upon the word, stept forth

Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care. Ben Jonson.

I can put on

Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,

Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd. Milton.

Did saints for this bring in their plate;

For when they thought the cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. Hudibras.

The god uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.

The ladies asked whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? Addison.

Born free, he sought his right. Dryden.

7. Property; interest.

A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight.

Dryden.

8. Power; prerogative.

God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks: but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right.

Tillotson.

9. Immunity; privilege.

The citizens,
Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shews.

Shaksp.

Their only thoughts and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law.

Clarendon.

To right my honour, and redeem your own.

Dryden.

RIGHT-HAND, rite'hând. n. s. Not the left.

The rauk of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place.

Shaksp.

RIGHTTEOUS, ri'tshûs.^{263 464} adj. [right-pipe, Saxon; whence rightwise in old authors, and rightwisely in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation.]

1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.

That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked.

Genesis.

2. Equitable; agreeing with right.

Kill my rival too; for he no less
Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will hless.

Dryden.

RIGHTTEOUSLY, ri'tshûs-lê. adv. [from righteous.] Honestly; virtuously.

Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went.

Dryden.

RIGHTTEOUSNESS, ri'tshûs-nês. n. s. [from righteous.] Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness; integrity.

The scriptures, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults.

Hooker.

Here wretched Palegius warns the world with cries,

Cou'd warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th' avenging deities.

Dryden.

Good men often suffer, and that even for the sake of righteousness.

Nelson.

RIGHTFUL, rite'fûl. adj. [right and full.]

1. Having the right; having the just claim.

As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.

Shaksp.

2. Honest; just; agreeable to justice.

Some will mourn in ashes, some coal black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Shaksp.

Be won, their rightful causes down to tread.

Spenser.

RIGHTFULLY, rite'fûl-ê. adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not sound; but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York.

Dryden.

RIGHTFULNESS, rite'fûl-nês. n. s. [from rightful.] Moral rectitude.

But still although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest sightfulness.

Sidney.

RIGHTLY, rite'lê. adv. [from right.]

1. According to truth or justice; properly; suitably; not erroneously.

Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd
Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and earth beneath.

Milton.

Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd.

Milton.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men.

Milton.

A man can never have so certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the word rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true.

Locke.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine.

Pope.

2. Honestly; uprightly.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think.

Shakespeare.

3. Exactly.

Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd.

Dryden.

4. Straightly; directly.

that leadeth rightly to that end.

Ascham.

RIGHTNESS, rite'nês. n. s. [from right.]

1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude; not error.

It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting.

South.

Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company.

Rogers.

2. Straightness.

Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance.

Bacon.

RIGID, rid'jid.³⁵⁰ adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Lat.]

1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.

A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid onc of the same substance and weight.

Ray.

2. Severe; inflexible.

Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die.

Milt.

4. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.

Cressey plains
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight.

Philips.

RIGIDITY, rê-jid'ê-tê. n. s. [rigidité, Fr. from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance, in order to the preservation of health: it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions: rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres.

Arbutnot.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonest, and by the other in her absolutest forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness.

Wotton.

RIGIDLY, rid'jid-lê. adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.

2. Severely; inflexibly; without remission; without mitigation.

1. Cold; stiffness.

The rest his look
Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move.

Milton.

2. Convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, chillness, and a fever attend every such new supuration.

Blackmore.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease; during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions, therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation.

Arbutnot.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turn'd to grief and pity.

Denham.

Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarissa.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He resumed his rigours, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to. Fell.

Does not looseness of life, and want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Sprat.

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be released, rather than all mea always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the efficient; but are names expressing our passions. Glanville.

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour: This awes an impious hold offending world. Addis.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his foe with furious rigour smites; That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;

The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights, That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Spenser.

Driven by the necessities of the times, and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel, And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS, rîg'gûr-ûs. adj. [from rigour.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial, Than the severity of publick power. Shakspeare.

Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers.

2. Exact; scrupulously nice; as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY, rîg'gûr-ûs-lê. adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Lest they faint At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd, For I behold them soften'd, and with tears Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.

The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

RILL, ril. n. s. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy brimmed waves from this Their full tribute never miss, From a thousand petty rills, That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.

On every thorn delightful wisdom grows, In every rill a sweet instruction flows; But some untaught, o'erbear the whispering rill, In spite of sacred leisure blockheads still. Young.

TO RILL, ril. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy, Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake, Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.

RILLET, ril'lit.⁹⁹ n. s. [corrupted from rivulet.] A small stream.

A creek of Ose, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Caraco.

1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues; a competitor.

Oh love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain.

2. A competitor in love.

She saw her father was grown her favourite party, and yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival.

France and Burgundy,
Great rivals in our younger daughter's love.

Your rival's image in your worth I view;
And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you.

RIVAL, riv'vâl. adj. Standing in competition; making the same claim; emulous.

Had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I should be fortunate.

Equal in years, and rival in renown
With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton
Like honour claims.

You bark to be employ'd,
While Venus is by rival dogs enjoy'd.

To RIVAL, riv'vâl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another; to oppose.

Those that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass
O'er hollow arches of resounding brass;
To rival thunder in its rapid course,
And imitate inimitable force.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,
Forgive, lamented shade, these duteous lays.
Lee had thy fire, and Congreve had thy wit;
And copyists, here and there, some likeness hit;
But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;
In thee alone 'twas natural to please!

To RIVAL, riv'vâl. v. n. To be competitors. Out of use.

Burgundy,
We first address'd toward you, who with this king
Have rival'd for our daughter.

RIVALITY, riv'vâl'ê-tê. } n. s. [rivalitas,
RIVALRY, riv'vâl-rê. } Lat. from rival.] Competition; emulation.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists, who, by their rivalry for greatness, divided a whole age.

RIVALSHIP, riv'vâl-shîp. n. s. [from rival.] The state or character of a rival.

To RIVE, rive. v. a. pret. rived; part. riven. [rîpēt, broken, Saxon; rijven, Dutch; river, French, to drive.] To split; to cleave; to divide by a blunt instrument; to force in disruption.

At his haughty helmet
So hugely struck, that it the steel did rive
And cleft his head.

The varlet at his plaint was grieved sore,
That his deep wounded heart in two did rive.

Through riven clouds and molten firmament,
The fierce three-forked engine making way,
Both lofty towers and highest trees bath rent.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks; but ne'er till now
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.

As one he stood escap'd from cruel fight,
Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havock hewn.

The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and riven with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Druina.

Had I not been blind I might have seen
Yon riven oak, the fall of the green.

Let it come;
Let the fierce lightning blast, the thunder rive me.
Roice.

To RIVE, rive. v. n. To be split; to be divided by violence.
Freestone rives, splits, and breaks in any direction.
Woodward.

To RIVE, rive. for derive or direct. Not used.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament, To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shaksp.

To RIV'EL, riv'v'l.¹⁰² v. a. [geripled, Saxon; corrugated, rump'd.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.
Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And riv'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed.
Dryden.

And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such riv'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.

Alum stipticks, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin essence like a riv'd flow'r. Pope.

RIV'EN, riv'v'n.¹⁰³ The part of rive.

RIV'ER, riv'v'r.⁹⁸ n. s. [riviere, Fr. rivus, Lat.] A land current of water bigger than a brook.
It is a most beautiful country, being stor'd throughout with many goodly rivers, replenish'd with all sorts of fish. Spenser.

The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison.

RIVER-DRAGON, riv'v'r-drâg'v'n. n. s. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.
Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon tam'd at length, submits
To let his sojourners depart. Paradise Lost.

Bringing all their riverets in,
There ends; a new song to begin. Drayton.

Calls down riveret from her spring,
Their queen upon her way to bring. Drayton.

RIVER-GOD, riv'v'r-gôd. n. s. Tutelary deity of a river.
His wig hung as strait as the hair of a river-god rising from the water. Arbutnot.

RIVER-HORSE, riv'v'r-hôrse. n. s. Hippopotamus.
Rosc,
As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.

RIV'ET, riv'v't. n. s. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shaksp.

Thy armour
I'll frush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shaksp.

Though Valeria's fair, and though she loves me too,
'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart.
Where Berenice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightnings. Dryden.

The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no sight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd.
Dryden.

The rivets of those wings inclos'd
Fit not each other. Dryden.

This instrument should move easy upon the rivet.
Sharp.

To RIV'ET, riv'v't. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with rivets.
This man,
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should he but frown. Ben Jonson.

2. To fasten strongly; to make immoveable.
You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And rivetted with faith unto your flesh. Shaksp.

Why should I write this down, that's rivetted, Screw'd to my mem'ry? Shaksp.

What one party thought to rivet to a settledness
By the influence of the Scots, that the other rejects.
King Charles.

Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but rivetted his throne. Dryd.

Thus hath God not only rivetted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

If the eye sees those things rivetted which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake?
Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs!
Congreve.

They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.
In rivetting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is rivetted. Moxon.

RIV'ULET, riv'v'l-ét. n. s. [rivulus, Lat.]
A small river; a brook; a streamlet.
By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He sought them. Milton.

The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Beutley.

I saw the rivulet of Salsorata, formerly called Albula, and smelt the stench that rises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison.

RIXD'OLLAR, riks'dôl-lûr. n. s. A German coin, worth about four shillings and sixpence sterling. Dict.

ROACH, rôtsch.²⁹⁵ n. s. [from rutilus, Lat.
red-haired.]
A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste: his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton.

If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

ROAD, rôde.²⁹⁵ n. s. [rade, Fr. route, Fr.
route is via trita.]

1. Large way; path.
Would you not think him a madman, who, whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps? Suckling.

To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.

The liberal man dwells always in the road. Fell.

To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.

Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By different roads and adverse ways proceed,

That there they might encounter, here unite.
Blackmore.

There is but one road by which to climb up.
Addison.

2. [rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.
I should be still
Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures. Shaksp.

About the island are many roads, but only one harbour. Sandys.

3. Inroad; incursion.
The Volscians stand
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again. Shaksp.

Cason was desirous of the spoil, for he was, by the former road into that country, famous and rich.
Knolles.

The king of Scotland, seeing none came in to Perkin, turned his enterprize into a road, and wasted Northumberland with fire and sword.
Bacon.

4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rode, the preterit of ride: as we say, a short ride;
an easy ride.
With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shaksp.

He from the east his flaming road begins. Milton.

5. The act, or state of travelling.
Some taken from their shops and farms, others from their sports and pleasures, these at suits of law, those at gaming tables, some on the road, others at their own fire-sides. Law.

To ROAM, rôme.²⁹⁵ v. n. [romigare, Italian. See Room.] To wander without any certain purpose; to ramble; to rove; to play the vagrant. It is imagined to come from the pretences of vagrants, who always said they were going to Rome.
Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia.
Shaksp.

Daphne roaming through a thorny wood.
Shaksp.

The lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud. Prior.

What were unlighten'd man,
A savage roaming through the woods and wilds
In quest of prey. Thomson.

To ROAM, rôme. v. a. To range; to wander over.
Now fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam.
Milton.

ROA'MER, rô'mûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from roam.]
A rover; a rambler; a wanderer; a vagrant.

ROAN, rône.²⁹⁵ adj. [rouen, French.]
Roan horse is a horse of a bay, sorrel, or black colour, with grey or white spots interspersed very thick. Farrier's Dictionary.

To ROAR, rôre. v. n. [raap in, Sax.]

1. To cry as a lion or other wild beast.
Roaring bulls he would him make to tame.
Spenser.

Warwick and Montague,
That in their chaus fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.
Shaksp.

The young lions roared upon him, and yelled.
Jeremiah.

The death of Daphnis woods and hills deplore,
They cast the sound to Libya's desert shore,
The Libyan lions hear, and hearing roar. Dryden.

2. To cry in distress.
At his nurse's tears

He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare.
Sole on the barren sands the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

3. To sound as the wind or sea.
South, east, and west, with mix'd confusion roar,
And rowl the foaming billows to the shore. Dryden.
Loud as the wolves in Orca's stormy steep,
Howl to the roaring of the northern deep. Pope.

4. To make a loud noise.
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar. Milton.
Consider what fatigues I've known,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd. Gay.

ROAR, ròre.²⁰⁶ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of the lion or other beast.
The wonted roar is up,
And hiss continual through the tedious night. Thomson.

2. An outcry of distress.
3. A clamour of merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
Your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakspeare.

4. The sound of the wind or sea.
The roar
Of loud Euroclydon. Philips.

5. Any loud noise.
Deep throated engines belch'd, whose roar
Imbowel'd with outrageous noise the air. Milton.
Oft on a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shoar,
Swinging flow with sullens roar. Milton.
When cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar. Waller.

The waters, list'ning to the trumpet's roar,
Obey the summons, and forsake the shore. Dryden.

ROARER, rò'rùr. n. s. [from roar.] A noisy brutal man.
The English roarers put down all. Howel.

ROA'RY, rò'rè. adj. [better rory; rores, Lat.] Dewy.

And shook his wings with roary May dews wet. Fairfax.

To ROAST, ròst.²⁰⁵ v. a. [rostir, rotir, Fr. rosten, Germ. zeporçod, Sax. roasted; from rastrum, Lat. a grate; to roast, being, in its original sense, to broil on a gridiron.]

1. To dress meat, by turning it round before the fire.
He roasteth not that which he took in hunting. Decay of Piety.
Roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office. Swift.

2. To impart dry heat to flesh.
Here elements have lost their uses,
Air ripens not, nor earth produces;
Fire will not roast, nor water boil. Swift.

3. To dress at the fire without water.
In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned. Bacon.

4. To heat any thing violently.
Roasted in wrath and fire,
He thus o'ersized with coagulate gore,
Old Priam seeks. Shakspeare.

ROAST, ròst. for roasted.
He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirlain Addison.
And if Dan Congreve judges right,
Roast beef and ale make Britons fight. Prior.
It warns the cook-maid, not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn. Swift.
To rule the ROAST. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps originally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.

Where champions ruleth the roast,
There dailie disorder is most. Tusser.
The new made duke, that rules the roast. Shakspeare.

Alma slap-dash, is all again
In ev'ry sinew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where she rules the roast. Prior.

ROB, ròb. n. s. [I believe Arabick.] In-spissated juice.

The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob, extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion. Arbuthnot.

To ROB, ròb. v. a. [robber, old Fr. rob-bare, Italian.]

1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder. To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft secret or violent; to rob, is to take away by unlawful violence; and to steal, is to take away privately.

Is't not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
But thou wilt brave me with these sawcy terms? Shakspeare.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.

I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion. Dryden.

The water nymphs lament their empty urns, Bœotia, rob'd of silver Dirce, mourns. Addison.

2. To set free; to deprive of something bad. Ironical.

Our house is hell, and thou a merry devil,
Did'st rob it of some taste of tediousness. Shaksp.

3. To take away unlawfully.

Better be disdain'd of all, than fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakspeare.
Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away. Bacon.
Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus assuming all, he robs from you. Dryden.
Oh double sacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deface the shrine! Dryden.

RO'BBER, ròb'bùr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from rob.] One that plunders by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer; a thief.

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robber's hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakspeare.
Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Ascalon;
Then, like a robber, strip'd'st them of their robes. Milton.

The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the gaol, and from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.

Bold Prometheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing tract pursue. Dryden.
Publick robbers are more criminal than petty and common thieves. Davenant.

RO'BBERY, ròb'bùr-è. n. s. [roberie, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.

Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. Shakspeare.

A storm or robbery Shakspeare.
Shook down my mellow hangings. Shakspeare.
Some more effectual way might be found, for suppressing common thefts and robberies. Temple.

ROBE, ròbe. n. s. [robbe, Fr. robba, Ital. rauba, low Lat.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.

Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakspeare.
My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies,
Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shakspeare.

The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore. Dryd.

To ROBE, ròbe. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.

What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders: and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform rites and observances? Bacon.

There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldæans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans. Pope.
Robed in loose array she came to bathe. Thomson.

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shakspeare.

ROD, rôd. n. s. [roede, Dutch.]

1. A long twig.

Some chuse a hazle rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, aud walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.

2. A kind of sceptre.

Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shakspeare.

The past'ral reed of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.

O gentle sleep, I cry'd,
Why is thy gift to me alone deny'd?

Mildest of beings, friend to ev'ry clime,
Where lies my error, what has been my crime?
Beasts, birds and cattle feel thy balmy rod;
The drowsy mountain wave, and seem to nod:
The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,
And the hush'd waves recline upon the shore. Harte.

3. Any thing long and slender.

Let the fisherman
Increase his tackle, and his rod retie. Gay.

Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love braves all the gods,

I am not in the roll of common men. Shakspeare.

The roll and list of that army doth remain.
Davies.

Of that short roll of friends writ in my heart,
There's none, that sometimes greet us not. Donne.
'Tis a mathematical demonstration, that these twenty-four letters admit of so many changes in their order, and make such a long roll of differently ranged alphabets, not two of which are alike; that they could not all be exhausted, though a million millions of writers should each write above a thousand alphabets a-day, for the space of a million millions of years. Bentley.

8. Chronicle.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryd.

leaves no room for human prudence to place it any where. Locke.

4. Place of another; stead.

In evils, that cannot be removed without the manifest danger of greater to succeed in their rooms, wisdom of necessity must give place to necessity.
Hooker.

For better ends our kind Redeemer dy'd,
Or the fallen angels rooms will be but ill supply'd Roscommon.

By contributing to the contentment of other men,
and rendering them as happy as lies in our power,
we do God's work, are in his place and room.
Calamy.

5. Unobstructed opportunity.

When this princess was in her father's court, she was so celebrated, that there was no prince in the empire, who had room for such an alliance, that was not ambitious of gaining her into his family.
Addison.

It puts us upon so eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, as leaves no room to reflect on the great author of them. Atterbury.

6. Possible admission; possible mode.

Will you not look with pity on me?
Is there no hope? is there no room for pardon?
A. Philips.

7. An apartment in a house; so much of a house as is enclosed within partitions.

I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks. Shaks.

If when she appears in th' room,
Thou dost not quake, and art struck dumb;
Know this,
Thou lov'st amiss;
And to love true,
Thou must begin again, and love anew. Suckling.

In a prince's court, the only question a man is to ask is, whether it be the custom of the court, or will of the prince, to be uncovered in some rooms and not in others. Stillingfleet.

It will afford me a few pleasant rooms, for such a friend as yourself. Pope.

RoO'MAGE, rôôm'idje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from room.]

Space; place.
Man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion, for the lodging of the intellective faculties: it must be a silent character of hope, when there is good store of roomage and receipt,
where those powers are stowed. Wotton.

RoO'MINESS, rôôm'è-nès. n. s. [from roomy.] Space; quantity of extent.

RoO'MY, rôôm'è. adj. [from room.] Spacious; wide; large.

truth universally agreed in. Temple.

5. The first ancestor.

It was said,
That myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. Shakspeare.

Why did my parents send me to the schools,
That I with knowledge might enrich my mind?

Since the desire to know first made men fools,
And did corrupt the root of all mankind. Davies.

Whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root. Milton.

They were the roots, out of which sprang two distinct people, under two distinct governments. Locke.

6. Fixed residence.

7. Impression; durable effect.

Having this way eased the church, as they thought, of superfluity, they went on till they had plucked up even those things also, which had taken a great deal stronger and deeper root. Hooker.

That love took deepest root, which first did grow.
Dryden.

To Root, rôôt. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix the root; to strike far into the earth.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakspeare.

that of the calmest sea, if still in the form of its first mass. Burnet.

2. Austere to the taste: as, rough wine.

3. Harsh to the ear.
Most by the numbers judge a poet's song,
And smooth or rough with them is right or wrong. Pope.

4. Rugged of temper; inelegant of manners; not soft, coarse; not civil; severe; not mild; rude.
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough,
A wolf; uay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakspeare.
Strait with a band of soldiers tall and rough,
On him he seizes. Cowley.
The booby Phaon only was unkind,
A surly boatman rough as seas and wind. Prior.

5. Not gentle; not proceeding by easy operation.
He gave not the king time to prosecute that gracious method, but forced him to a quicker and rougher remedy. Clarendon.
Hippocrates seldom mentions the doses of his medicines, which is somewhat surprizing, because his purgatives are generally very rough and strong. Arbuthnot.

6. Harsh to the mind; severe.
Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness, which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds. Locke.

7. Hard featured; not delicate.
A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

8. Not polished; not finished by art: as, a rough diamond.

9. Terrible; dreadful.
Before the cloudy van,
On the rough edge of battle ere it join'd,
Satan advanc'd. Milton.

10. Rugged; disordered in appearance; coarse.
Rough from the tossing surge Ulysses moves,
Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ooze his manly grace deforms. Pope.

11. Tempestuous; stormy; boisterous.
Come what come may,
Time and the hour run through the roughest day. Shakspeare.

To ROU'GHCAS, rúf'kást. v. a. [rough and cast.]

1. To mould without nicety or elegance; to form with asperities and inequalities.
Nor bodily, nor ghostly negro could Rougheast thy figure in a sadder mould. Cleaveland.

2. To form any thing in its first rudiments.
In meriment they were first practis'd, and this rougheast unbewn poetry was instead of stage plays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden.

ROU'GHCAS, rúf'kást. n. s. [rough and cast.]

1. A rude model; a form in its rudiments.
The whole piece seems rather a loose model and rougheast of what I design to do, than a compleat work. Digby.

2. A kind of plaster mixed with pebbles, or by some other cause very uneven on the surface.
Some man must present a wall; and let him have some plaster, lome, or rougheast about him to signify wall. Shakspeare.

ROU'GHDRAUGHT, rúf'dráft. n. s. [rough and draught.] A draught in its rudiments; a sketch.

My elder brothers came
Roughdraughts of nature, ill design'd and lame,
Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden.

To ROU'GHDRAW, rúf'dráw. v. a. [rough and draw.] To trace coarsely.

His victories we scarce could keep in view,
Or polish 'em so fast, as he roughdraw. Dryden.

To ROU'GHEN, rúf'p'n.¹⁰⁰ v. a. [from rough.] To make rough.

Such difference there is in tongues, that the same figure, which roughens one, gives majesty to another; and that was it which Virgil studied in his verses. Dryden.
Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade?
His only coat: when dust confus'd with rain,
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift.

To ROU'GHEN, rúf'p'n. v. n. To grow rough.
The broken landskip,
Ascending, roughens into rigid hills. Thomson.

To ROUGHHEW, rúf'hú'. v. a. [rough and heve.] To give to any thing the first appearance of form.
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Roughheve them how we will. Shakspeare.

The whole world, without art and dress,
Would be but one great wilderness,
And mankind but a savage herd,
For all that nature has conferr'd:
This does but roughheve and design,
Leaves art to polish and refine. Hudibras.

ROU'GHHEWN, rúf'húne'. particip. adj.
1. Rugged; unpolished; uncivil; unrefined.
A roughheven seaman, being brought before a justice for some misdemeanour, was by him ordered away to prison; and would not stir; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon.

2. Not yet nicely finished.
I hope to obtain a candid construction of this roughheven ill-timber'd discourse. Howel.

ROU'GHLY, rúf'lé. adv. [from rough.]

1. With uneven surface; with asperities on the surface.

2. Harshly; uncivilly; rudely.
Ne Mammon would there let him long remain,
For terror of the torments manifold,
In which the damned souls he did behold,
But roughly him bespake. Spenser.
Rebuk'd, and roughly sent to prison,
Th' immediate heir of England! was this easy! Shakspeare.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.
When the diamond is not only found; but the roughness smoothed, cut into a form, and set in gold, then we cannot but acknowledge, that it is the perfect work of art and nature. Dryden.
Such a persuasion as this well fixed, will smooth all the roughness of the way that leads to happiness, and render all the conflicts with our lusts pleasing. Atterbury.

2. Austere to the taste.
Divers plants contain a grateful sharpness, as lemons: or an austere and uncooked roughness, as sloes. Brown.

3. Taste of astringency.
A tobacco-pipe broke in my mouth, and the spitting out the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

4. Harshness to the ear.
In the roughness of the numbers and cadences of this play, which was so designed, you will see somewhat more masterly than in any of my former tragedies. Dryden.
The Swedes, Danes, Germans, and Dutch attain to the pronunciation of our words with ease, because our syllables resemble theirs in roughness and frequency of consonants. Swift

5. Ruggedness of temper; coarseness of manners; tendency to rudeness; coarseness of behaviour and address.
Roughness is a needless cause of discontent; severity breedeth fear; but roughness breedeth hate: even reproofs from authority ought to be grave and not taunting. Bacon.
When our minds' eyes are disengag'd,
They quicken sloth, perplexities unty,
Make roughness smooth, and hardness mollify. Denham.
Roughness of temper is apt to discountenance the timorous or modest. Addison.

6. Absence of delicacy.
Should feasting and balls once get amongst the cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost, their tempers would grow too soft for their climate. Addison.

She called for a round sum out of the privy purse. Hooker.

7. Plain; clear; fair; candid; open.
Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like alloy in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it. Bacon.

8. Quick; brisk.
Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it. Dryden.
Sir Roger heard them upon a round trot; and after pausing, told them, that much might be said on both sides. Addison.

9. Plain; free without delicacy or reserve; almost rough.
Let his queen mother all alone intreat him,
To shew his griefs; let her be round with him. Shakespeare.
The kings interposed in a round and princely manner; not only by way of request and persuasion, but also by way of protestation and menace. Bacon.

ROUND, roun. n. s.

1. A circle; a sphere; an orb.
Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphisick aid doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakespeare.
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round. Shakespeare.
Three or four we'll dress like urchins,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakespeare.
Hirsute roots are a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.
What if the sun
Be centre to the world; and other stars
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds.
Knit your hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.
He did foretel and prophesy of him,
Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd. Denham.
They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts afar,
Then in a round the mingled bodies run;
Flying they follow, and pursuing shun. Dryden.
How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a fame so truly circular?
For, in a round, what order can be shew'd,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are? Dryden.
The mouth of Vesuvius has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round. Addison.
This image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp't on British coins shall live. Addison.

2. Rundle; step of a ladder.
When he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. Shakespeare.
Many are kicked down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder. Government of the Tongue.
All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise;

The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies. Dryden.
This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven. Norris.

3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.
A gentle round fill'd to the brink,
To this and 'o other friend I drink. Suckling
Women to cards may be compar'd; we play
A round or two; when us'd, we throw away. Granville
The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.

4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.
We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the stary quire,
Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years. Milton.
No end can to this be found,
'Tis nought but a perpetual fruitless round. Cowley.
If nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect, but the ass's round of vexatious changes? L'Estrange.
How then to drag a wretched life beneath
An endless round of still returning woes,
And all the gnawing pangs of vain remorse?
What torment's this? Smith.
Some preachers, prepared only upon two or three points, run the same round from one end of the year to another. Addison.
Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn,
Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

5. Rotation; succession in vicissitude.
Such new Utopians would have a round of government, as some the like in the church, in which every spcak becomes uppermost in his turn. Holiday.

6. [ronde, Fr.] A walk performed by a guard or officer, to survey a certain district.

ROUND, roun. adv.

1. Every way; on all sides.

divided into three couplets; and at the end of the second and third, the beginning of the roundel is repeated in an equivocal sense, if possible. Trevoux.
Siker, like a roundle never heard I none,
Little lacketh Perigot of the best,
And Willie is not greatly over-gone,
So weren his under-songs well address. Spenser.
To hear thy rimes and roundelays,
Which thou wert wont in wastful hills to sing,
I more delight than lark in summer days,
Whose echo made the neighb'ring groves to ring. Spenser.
Come now, a roundel and a fairy song. Shaksp.
The muses and graces made festivals; the fawns, satyrs, and nymphs did dance their roundelays. Howel.
They list'ning heard him, while he search'd the grove,
And loudly sung his roundelay of love,
But on the sudden stop'd. Dryden.

To rouse the watchman of the publick weal;
To virtue's work provoke the tardy hall,
And goad the prelate slum'ring in his stall. Pope.
 - To excite to thought or action.
Then rouse that heart of thine,
And whatsoever heretofore thou hast assum'd to be,
This day be greater. Chapman.
The Dane and Swede, rous'd up by fierce alarms,
Bless the wise conduct of her pious arms;
Soon as her fleets appear their terrors cease,
And all the northern world lies hush'd in peace. Addison.
I'll thunder in their ears their country's cause,
And try to rouse up all that's Roman in them. Addison.
The heat, with which Luther treated his adversaries, though strained too far, was extremely well fitted by the providence of God to rouse up a people, the most phlegmatick of any in christendom. Atterbury.
 - To put into action.
As an eagle, seeing prey appear,
His airy plumes doth rouse full rudely dight;
So shaken he, that horror was to bear. Fairy Queen.
Blust'ring winds that rous'd the sea. Milton.
 - To drive a beast from his laire.
The blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare. Shaksp.
He stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up? Genes.
Th' unexpected sound
Of dogs and men his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm. Denham.
Now Cancer glows with Phæbus' fiery car,
The youth rush eager to the sylvan war:
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest walk surround,
Rouse the fleet hart, and cheer the op'ning hound. Pope.
- To ROUSE, ròuze. v. n.
- To awake from slumber.
Men, sleeping sound by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake. Milton.

While night's black agents to their prey do rouse.
Shakspeare.

ROUSE, rōuze. n. s. [rusch, German, half drunk.] A dose of liquor rather too large. Not in use.

They have given me a rouse already.
—Not past a pint, as I am a soldier. Shakspeare.
No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king's rouse shall bruit it back again,
Respeaking earthly thunder. Shakspeare.

ROU'SER, rōu'zūr. n. s. [from rouse.] One who rouses.

ROUT, rōut. n. s. [rot, Dutch.]

1. A clamorous multitude; a rabble; a tumultuous crowd.

Besides the endless routs of wretched thralls,
Which thither were assembled day by day
From all the world. Spenser.
A rout of people there assembled were,
Of every sort and nation under sky. Spenser.
If that rebellion

Came like itself in base and abjects routs,
Led on by bloody youth, goaded with rage,
And countenanc'd by boys and beggary,
You, reverend father, then had not been there. Shakspeare.

Farmers were to forfeit their holds in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in routs and unlawful assemblies. Bacon.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shows, as have utterly degenerated from the laws of nature. Bacon.

Nor do I name of men the common rout,
That wand'ring loose about,
Grow up and perish, as the summer fly. Milton.
Fancy, wild dame, with much lascivious pride,
By twin chameleons drawn, does gaily ride,
Her coach there follows, and throngs round about,
Of shapes and airy forms an endless rout. Cowley.

The mad ungovernable rout,
Full of confusion and the fumes of wine,
Lov'd such variety and antic tricks. Roscommon.

Harley spies
The doctor fasten'd by the eyes
At Charing-cross among the rout,
Where painted monsters are hung out. Swift.

2. [route, French.] Confusion of an army defeated or dispersed.

Thy army,
As if they could not stand when thou wer't down,
Dispers'd in rout, betook them all to fly. Daniel.

Why should an ape run away from a snail, and very ruefully and frightfully look back, as being afraid? More.

RUE'FULNESS, rôd'fûl-nês. n. s. [from rueful.] Sorrowfulness; mournfulness.

RUE'LLÉ, rôd-êl'. n. s. [Fr.] A circle; an assembly at a private house. Not used.

The poet, who flourished in the scene, is denimed in the ruelle. Dryden.

RUFF, rûf. n. s.

1. A puckered linen ornament, formerly worn about the neck. See RUFFLE.
You a captain; for what? for tearing a whore's ruff in a bawdy house. Shakspeare.

We'll revel it,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and fardingals. Shakspeare.
Like an uproar in the town,
Before them every thing went down,
Some tore a ruff, and some a gown. Drayton.

Sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.
The ladies free the neck from those yokes, those linen ruffs, in which the simplicity of their grandmothers had enclosed it. Addison.

2. Any thing collected into puckers or corrugations.

I rear'd this flow'r,
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread. Pope

3. [from rough scales.] A small river fish.
A ruff or pope is much like the perch for shape, and taken to be better, but will not grow bigger thau a gudgeon; he is an excellent fish, and of a pleasant taste. Walton.

4. A state of roughness. Obsolete.
As fields set all their bridles up; in such a ruff
wert thou. Chapman.

5. New state. This seems to be the meaning of this cant word, unless it be contracted from ruffl.

How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's char-riot! L'Estrange.

RU'FFIAN, rûf'yân.¹¹³ n. s. [ruffiano, Ital.
ruffien, French, a bawd; roffver, Danish, to pillage; perhaps it may be best derived from the old Teutonick word which we now write, rough.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.

Have you a ruffian that will swear: driuk? dance?
Revel the night? rob? murder? Shakspeare.
Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers, termed rude and ruffian like falling into years apt to take offence, furthered his condemnation. Hayward.

The boasted ancestors of these great men,
Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians;
This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison.

RU'FFIAN, rûf'yân. adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.

Experienc'd age,
May timely intercept the ruffian rage;
Convene the tribes. Pope.

To RU'FFIAN, rûf'yân. v. n. [from the noun.] To rage; to raise tumults; to play the ruffian. Not in use.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? Shakspeare.

To RU'FFLE, rûf'fl.¹⁰⁵ v. a. [ruyffelen,
Dutch, to wrinkle.]

1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.

Nughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers' hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakspeare.
In changeable taffeties, differing colours emerge and vanish upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk. Boyle.

As she first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies. Dryden.

Bear me, some god! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down to pity kings. Pope.

2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.

Were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. Shaksp.

We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glanville

3. To put out of order; to surprise.

The knight found out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruffled foe infest. Hudibras.

4. To throw disorderly together.
Within a thicket I repos'd, when round
I ruffl'd up fal'n leaves in heap, and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.

5. To contract into plaits.

A small skirt of fine ruffled linnen, running along the upper part of the stays before, is called the modesty-piece. Addison

To RU'FFLE, rûf'fl. v. n.

1. To grow rough or turbulent.

The night comes on, and the high winds
Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about There's scarce a bush. Shakspeare.
The rising winds a ruffling gale afford. Dryden.

2. To be in loose motion; to flutter.

The fiery courser, when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
On his right shoulder his thick mane reclin'd,
Ruffles at speed, and dances in the wind. Dryden

3. To be rough; to jar; to be in contention.
Out of use.

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome. Shaksp.
They would ruffle with jurors, and enforce them to fud as they would direct. Bacon.

RU'FFLE, rûf'fl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Plaited linen used as an ornament.

The tucker is a slip of fine linnen, run in a small ruffle round the uppermost verge of the women's stays. Addison.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, rushes strew'd, cobwebs swept?
Your farm requites your pains;
Though rushes overspread the neighb'ring plains. Dryden.

2. Any thing proverbially worthless.
Not a rush matter, whether apes go on four legs or two. L'Estrange.
John Bull's friendship is not worth a rush. Arbuthnot.

RUSH-CANDLE, rûsh-kân'dl. n. s. [rush and candle.] A small blinking taper, made by stripping a rush, except one small stripe of the bark which holds the pith together, and dipping it in tallow.

Be it moon or sun, or what you please;
And if you please to call it a rush-candle,
Henceforth it shall be so for me. Shakspeare.

If your influence be quite dam'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us. Milton.

To RUSH, rùsh. v. a. [hpeoran, Saxon.]
To move with violence; to go on with tumultuous rapidity.

Gorgias removed out of the camp by night, to the end he might rush upon the camp of the Jews.
1 Maccabees.

Every one that was a warrior rushed out upon them. Judith.

Armies rush to battle in the clouds.
Why wilt thou rush to certain death, and rage
In rash attempts beyond thy tender age,
Betray'd by pious love? Dryden.

Desperate should he rush, and lose his life,
With odds oppress'd. Dryden.

They will always strive to be good christians, but never think it to be a part of religion, to rush into the office of princes or ministers. Sprat.

You say, the sea
Does with its waves fall backward to the west,
And, thence repell'd, advances to the east;
While this revolving motion does endure,
The deep must reel, and rush from shoar to shoar.
Blackmore.

With a rushing sound th' assembly bend Diverse their steps. Pope.

Now sunk the sun from his aerial height,
And o'er the shaded billows rush'd the night. Pope.

RUSH, rùsh. n. s. [from the verb.] Violent course.

A gentleman of his train spurred up his horse, and with a violent rush severed him from the duke.
Wotton.

Him while fresh and fragrant time
Cherish in his golden prime,
The rush of death's unruly ware
Sweet him off into his grave. Crashaw.

Cruel Auster, thither hy'd him,
And with the rush of one rude blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to cast
All his leaves so fresh, so sweet. Crashaw.

RUSHY, rùsh'è. adj. [from rush.]

1. Abounding with rushes.
In rushy grounds, springs are found at the first spit. Mortimer.

The timid hare to some lone seat
Retir'd; the rushy fen or rugged furze. Thomson.

What knight like him could toss the rushy lance.
Tickel.

RUSK, rùsk. n. s. Hard bread for stores.
The lady sent me divers presents of fruits, sugar, and rusk. Raleigh.

RUSMA, rùs'mâ. n. s. A brown and light iron substance, with half as much quicklime steeped in water, the Turkish women make their psilothron, to take off their hair. Grew.

RUSSET, rùs'sit.⁹⁹ adj. [rousset, Fr. russus, Lat.]

1. Reddish brown. Such is the colour of apples called russetings.

The morn, in russet mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon eastern hill. Shaksp.

Our summer such a russet livery wears,
As in a garment often dy'd appears. Dryden.

2. Newton seems to use it for gray: but, if the etymology be regarded, improperly.

This white spot was immediately encompassed with a dark grey or russet, and that dark grey with the colours of the first Iris. Newton.

3. Coarse; homespun; rustick. It is much used in descriptions of the manners and dresses of the country, I suppose, because it was formerly the colour of rus-tick dress: in some places, the rusticks still die cloths spun at home with bark, which must make them russet.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Figures pedantical: these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shaksp.

RUSSET, rùs'sit. n. s. Country dress. See RUSSET, adj.

The Dorick dialect has a sweetness in its clown-ishness, like a fair shepherdess in her country russet.
Dryden.

RUSSET, rùs'sit. } n. s. A name
RUSSETING, rùs'sit-ing. } given to several sorts of pears or apples from their colour.

The russet pearmain is a very pleasant fruit, continuing long on the tree, and in the conservatory partakes both of the russeting and pearmain in colour and taste; the one side being generally russet, and the other streaked like a pearmain.
Mortimer.

RUST, rùst. n. s. [ῥυστ, Sax.]

1. The red desquamation of old iron.
This iron began at length to gather rust. Hooker.

Rust eaten pikes and swords in time to come,
When crooked plows dig up earth's fertile womb,
The husbandman shall oft discover. May.

But Pallas came in shape of rust,
And 'twixt the spring and hammer thrust
Her Gorgon shield, which made the cock
Stand still, as 'twere transform'd to stock. Hudib.

My scymitar got some rust by the sea water.
Gulliver.

2. The tarnished or corroded surface of any metal.

By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,
And scour his armour from the rust of peacc.
Dryden.

3. Loss of power by inactivity.

4. Matter bred by corruption or degeneration.

Let her see thy sacred truths cleared from all rust and dross of human mixtures. King Charles.

To RUST, rùst. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To gather rust; to have the surface tarnished or corroded.

Her fallow leas,
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon, while that the culter rusts,
That should deraenate such savagery. Shakspeare.

Our armours now may rust, our idle scymitars
Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

2. To degenerate in idleness.

Must I rust in Egypt, never more Appear in arms, and be the chief of Greece?
Dryden.

To RUST, rùst. v. a.

1. To make rusty.
Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them. Shakspeare.

2. To impair by time or inactivity.

RUSTICAL, rùs'tè-kâl.⁸⁸ adj. [rusticus, Lat.] Rough; savage; boisterous; bruttal; rude.

On he brought me to so bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable happiness and rich beggary, served only by a company of rustical villaius, full of sweat and dust, not one of them other than a labourer. Sidney.

This is by a rustical severity to banish all urba-nity, whose harmless and confined condition is consistent with religion. Brown.

He confounds the singing and daucing of the satyrs with the rustical entertainment of the first Romans. Dryden.

RUSTICALLY, rùs'tè-kâl-è. adv. [from rustical.] Savagely; rudely; inelegantly.

My brother Jaques he keeps at school,
And report speaks goldeuly of his profit;
For my part he keeps me rustically at home.
Shakspeare.

Quintius here was born,
Whose shining ploughshare was in furrows worn,
Met by his trembling wife, returning home,
And rustically joy'd, as chief of Rome. Dryden.

RUSTICALNESS, rùs'tè-kâl-nès. n. s. [from rustical.] The quality of being rustical;
rudeness; savageness.

To RUSTICATE, rùs'tè-kâte. v. n. [rusticor, Latin.] To reside in the country.

My lady Scudamore, from having rusticated in your company too long, pretends to open her eyes for the sake of seeing the sun, and to sleep because it is night. Pope.

To RUSTICATE, rùs'tè-kâte. v. a. To banish into the country.

I was deeply in love with a milliner, upon which I was sent away, or, in the university phrase, rusticated for ever. Spectator.

RUSTICITY, rùs-tis'è-tè. n. s. [rusticitè,
Fr. rusticitas, from rusticus, Lat.]

1. Qualities of one that lives in the country; simplicity; artlessness; rudeness;
savageness.

There presented himself a tall, clownish, young man, who falling before the queen of the fairies, desired that he might have the achievement of any adventure, which, during the feast, might happen;
that being granted, he rested him on the floor, unfit for a better place by his rusticity. Spenser.

The sweetness and rusticity of a pastoral cannot be so well exprest in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixt with the Dorick dialect.
Addison.

This so general expence of their time would curtail the ordinary means of knowledge, as 'twould shorten the opportunities of vice; and so accordingly an universal rusticity presently took place, and stopped not till it had over-run the whole stock of mankind. Woodward.

2. Rural appearance.

RUSTICK, rùs'tik. adj. [rusticus, Latin;
rustique, French.]

1. Rural; country.

By Lelius willing missing was the odds of the Iberian side, and continued so in the next by the excellent running of a knight, though fostered so by the muses, as many times the very rustick people left both their delights and profits to hearken to his songs. Sidney.

2. Rude; untaught; inelegant.

An ignorant clown cannot learn fine language or a courtly behaviour, when his rustick airs have grown up with him till the age of forty. Watts.

3. Brutal; savage.

My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster fierce with barb'rous pow'r;
Some rustick wretch, who liv'd in heav'n's despight,
Contemning laws, and trampling on the right.
Pope.

4. Artless; honest; simple.

5. Plain; unadorned.

An altar stood, rustick, of grassy sord. Milton.
With unguets smooth the polish'd marble shone,
Where ancient Neleus sat, a rustick throne. Pope.

RUSTICK, rùs'tik. n. s. A clown; a swain;
an inhabitant of the country.

As nothing is so rude and insolent as a wealthy rustick, all this his kindness is overlooked, and his person most unworthily rail'd at. South.

RUSTINESS, rûs'té-nés. n. s. [from rusty.]
The state of being rusty.

To RUSTLE, rûs'sl.⁴⁷² v. n. [haprclan, Saxon.] To make a low continued rattle; to make a quick succession of small noises.

He is coming; I hear the straw rustle. Shaksp.
This life

Is nobler than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk. Shaksp.
Thick swarm'd, both on the ground, and in the air

Brush'd with the hiss of rustling wings. Milton.
As when we see the winged winds engage,
Rustling from ev'ry quarter of the sky,
North, east, and west, in airy swiftness vy. Granville.

All begin the attack;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack. Pope.

Not less their number than the milk-white swans,
That o'er the winding of Cyaster's springs,
Stretch their long necks, and clap their rustling wings. Pope.

RUSTY, rûs'tè. adj. [from rust.]

1. Covered with rust; infected with rust.
After a long calm of peace, he was left engaged in a war with a rusty sword and empty purse. Howel.

Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax. Dryden.

2. Impaired by inactivity.
Hector in his dull and long continued truce,
Is rusty grown. Shaksp.

To RUT, rût. v. n. [ruit, Fr.] To desire to come together. Used of deer.

RUT, rût. n. s. [rut, French.]

1. Copulation of deer.
The time of going to rut of deer is in September; for that they need the whole summer's feed to make them fit for generation: and if rain come about the middle of September, they go to rut somewhat the sooner. Bacon.

The ground hereof was the observation of this part in deer after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut. Brown.

2. [route, Fr.] The track of a cart wheel. Ainsworth.

From hills raine waters headlong fall,
That always eat huge ruts, which, met in one bed for a vall
Will such a confluence of streames, that on the mountaine grounds
Fame of, in frighted shepherds eares the bustling noise rebounds. Chapman.

RUTH, rôôth n. s. [from rue.]

1. Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another. Out of use.

O wretch of guests, said he, thy tale hath stirred
My mind to much ruth. Chopman.
All ruth, compassion, mery he forgot. Fairfax.
She fair, he full of bashfulness and truth
Lov'd much, hop'd little, and desired nought;
He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth. Fairfax.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Mill

2. Misery; sorrow.
The Britons, by Maximilian laid way
With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Spenser.

RUTHFUL, rôôth'fûl. adj. [ruth and full.]
Rueful; woful; sorrowful.

The inhabitants seldom take a ruthful and reaving experience of those harms, which infectious diseases carry with them. Carew.

RUTHFULLY, rôôth'fûl-è. adv. [from ruthful.]

1. Wofully; sadly.
The flower of horse and foot, lost by the valour of the enemy, ruthfully perished. Knolles.
2. Sorrowfully; mournfully.
Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound

Is sign of dreary death, my deadly cries
Most ruthfully to tune. Spenser.

3. Wofully; in irony.
By this Minerva's friend bèreft
Oileades of that rich bowl, and left his lips, nose, eyes
Ruthfully smear'd. Chapman.

RUTHLESS, rôôth'lès. adj. [from ruth.]
Cruel; pitiless; uncompassionate; barbarous.

What is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit? Shaksp.
The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
And when I start, the cruel people laugh. Shaksp.
His archers circle me; my reins they wound,
And ruthless shed my gall upon the ground. Sandys.
Their rage the hostile bands restrain,
All but the ruthless monarch of the main. Pope.

RUTHLESSLY, rôôth'lès-lè. adv. [from ruthless.]
Without pity; cruelly; barbarously.

RUTHLESSNESS, rôôth'lès-nès. n. s. [from ruthless.]

A direction of the road or course at sea.

RUTTIISH, rût'tish. adj. [from rut.]
Wanton; libidinous; salacious; lustful; lecherous.

That is an advertisement to one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy; but for all that very ruttish. Shaksp.

RYE, ri. n. s. [ryge, Saxon.]

1. A coarse kind of bread corn.
Between the acres of the rye,
These pretty country folks would lie. Shaksp.
Rye is more aerid, laxitive, and less nourishing than wheat. Arbuthnot.

2. A disease in a hawk. Ainsw.

RYE'GRASS, ri'gràs. n. s. A kind of strong grass.

Some sow ryegrass with the corn at Michaelmas. Mortimer.

S.

S, ès. HAS in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation. In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger impulse of the tongue to the palate, like z, as rose, roseate, rosy, osier, nosel, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given. In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where es stands in verbs for eth, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once sse, as ass, anciently asse; wilderness, anciently wildernesse; distress, anciently distresse.

SABA'OTH, sâb-bâ'ôth. n. s. [Hebrew.]
Signifying an army.

Holy Lord God of sabaoth; that is, Lord of hosts. Common Prayer.

SABBATH, sâb'bâth. n. s. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, Fr. sabbatum, Lat.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for publick worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,

To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shaksp.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Ere sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releast,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one she now enjoys;
Ev'n that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.
2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.
Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.
Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SABBATA'RIAN, sâb-bâ-tâ'rè-ân. n. s. [from sabbath.]
One who observes the sabbath with unreasonable rigour; one who observes the seventh day of the week in opposition to the first.

SA'BEATHBREAKER, sâb'bâth-brâ-kûr. n. s. [sabbath and break.] Violater of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.

The usurer is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday. Bacon.

SABBA'TICAL, sâb-bât'tè-kâl. adj. [sabbaticus, Lat. sabbatique, Fr. from sabbath.] Resembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.

The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year, a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment. Forbes.

SA'BBA'TISM, sâb'bâ-tizm. n. s. [from sabbatum, Lat.] Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid.

SA'BINE, sâb'in.¹⁴⁰ n. s. [sabine, Fr. sabina, Lat.] A plant.

Sabine or savin will make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond trees. Mortimer.

SA'BLE, sâ'bl.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [zibella, Lat.] Fur.

Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little beast of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black. Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentlemen's arms. Peacham.

Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently raught from his head his rich cap of sables. Knolles.

The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail, Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail. Gay.

SA'BLE, sâ'bl. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade, And yield his room to sad succeeding night, Who with her sable mantle 'gan to shade The face of earth, and ways of living wight. Fairy Queen.

With him intron'd

Sat sable vested night, eldest of things, The consort of his reign. Milton.

They soon begin that tragick play, And with their smoaky cannons banish day: Night, horror, slaughter, with confusion meet, And in their sable arms embrace the fleet. Waller.

Adoring first the genius of the place, And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne. Dryden.

SACERDO'TAL, sâs-èr-dò'tâl.⁹⁸ adj. [sacerdotalis, Lat.] Priestly; belonging to the priesthood.

They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.

He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders. Dryden.

If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with these powers, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission. Atterbury.

SA'CHEL, sâtsh'il.⁹⁹ n. s. [sacculus, Lat.] A small sack or bag.

SACK, sâk. n. s. [p̄ Hebrew; σάκος; saccus, Lat. γ̄æc, Sax. It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]

1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag.

Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city, And we be lords and rulers over Rome. Shaksp.
Vastius caused the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the sight of the fleet cast into the sea. Knolles.

2. The measure of three bushels.

3. A woman's loose robe.

To SACK, sâk. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in bags.
Now the great work is done, the corn is ground, The grist is sack'd, and every sack well bound. Betterton.

2. [from sacar, Spanish.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.

Edward Bruce spoiled all the old English pale inhabitants, and sacked and raised all cities and corporate towns. Spenser.

I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee, Or sack this country with a mutiny. Shaksp.

What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword? What cities sack'd? Fairfax.

Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand What barbarous invader sack'd the land? Devinham.

The pope himself was ever after unfortunate, Rome being twice taken and sacked in his reign. South.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water. Addison.

SACK, sâk. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Storm of a town; pillage; plunder.

If Saturn's son bestows The sack of Troy, which he by promise owes, Then shall the conqu'ring Greeks thy loss restore. Dryden.

2. A kind of sweet wine, now brought chiefly from the Canaries. [Sec, Fr of uncertain etymology; but derived by Skinner, after Mandesto, from Xeque, a city of Morocco. The sack of Shaksp is believed to be what is now called sherry.]

Please you drink a cup of sack. Shaksp.

The butler hath great advantage to allure the maids with a glass of sack. Swift.

SA'CKBUT, sâk'bût. n. s. [sacabuche, Span.]

sambuca, Lat. sambuque, Fr.] A kind of pipe.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fife, Make the sun dance. Shaksp.

SA'CKCLOTH, sâk'klòth. n. s. [sack and cloth.] Cloth of which sacks are made; coarse cloth sometimes worn in mortification.

Coarse stuff made of goat's hair, of a dark colour, worn by soldiers and mariners; and used as a habit among the Hebrews in times of mourning. Called sackcloth, either because sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because hair-cloths were strait and close like a sack. Calmet.

To augment her painful penance more, Thrice every week in ashes she did sit, And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore. Spenser.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe, And dust upon my clouded forehead throw. Sandys.

Being clad in sackcloth, he was to lie on the ground, and constantly day and night to implore God's mercy for the sin he had committed. Ayliffe.

SA'CKER, sâk'kûr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from sack.] One that takes a town.

Snuff the candles at supper on the table, because the burning snuff may fall into a dish of soup or sackposset. Swift.

SA'CRAMENT, sâk'krâ-mènt.⁵⁰³ n. s. [sacrament, Fr. sacramentum, Latin.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament To rive their dangerous artillery

Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shaksp.

As we have ta'en the sacrament, We will unite the white rose with the red. Shaksp.
Before the famous battle of Cressy, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his lion, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

A feigned tear destroys us, against whom Tydides nor Achilles could prevail,
Nor ten years conflict, nor a thousand sail. Denham.

He had promised to his army, who were discouraged at the sight of Seleucus's fleet, consisting of an hundred sail, that at the end of the summer they should see a fleet of his of five hundred sail. Arbutnot.

5. To strike SAIL. To lower the sail.

Fearing lest they should fall into the quick-sands,
they strike sail, and so were driven. Acts.

6. A proverbial phrase for abating of pomp or superiority.

Margaret
Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve
Where kings command. Shaksp.

To SAIL, sâle. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be moved by the wind with sails.
I shall not mention any thing of the sailing waggons. Mortimer.

2. To pass by sea.

When sailing was now dangerous, Paul admonished them. Acts.

3. To swim

To which the stores of Crcesus, in the scale,
Would look like little dolphins, when they sail
In the vast shadow of the British whale. Dryden.

4. To pass smoothly along.

Speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this sight, being o'er my head,
As is a winged messenger from heav'n,
When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shaksp.

To SAIL, sâle. v. a.

1. To pass by means of sails.
A thousand ships were mann'd to sail the sea.
Dryden.

View Aleinous' groves, from whence Sailing the spaces of the boundless deep,
To Ariconium precious fruits arriv'd. Philips.

SAIN, sâne. [a participle, obsolete, from sav.] Said.

Some obscure precedence, that hath tofore been sain. Shakespeare.

SA'INFOIN, sânf'ôin. n. s. [sainfoin, Fr. medica.] A kind of herb.

SAIN T, sânt.²⁰² n. s. [saint, Fr. sanctus, Latin.] A person eminent for piety and virtue.

To thee be worship and thy saints for aye. Shakespeare.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor ope her lap to saint seducing gold. Shakespeare.
Then thus I cloath my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And deem a saint when most I play the devil. Shakespeare.

Miracles are required of all who aspire to this dignity, because they say an hypocrite may imitate a saint in all other particulars. Addison.

By thy example kings are taught to sway,
Heroes to fight, and saints may learn to pray. Granville.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,
Heav'n, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd;
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd. Pope.

To SAINT, sânt. v. a. [from the noun.]
To number among saints; to reckon among saints by a publick decree; to canonize.

Are not the principles of those wretches still own'd, and their persons sainted, by a race of men of the same stamp? South.

Over-against the church stands a large hospital erected by a shoemaker, who has been beaified, though never sainted. Addison.

Thy place is here, sad sister; come away:
Onee, like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd;
Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid. Pope.

Ofteuer upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakespeare.

2. Holy; sacred.

I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
By your renoucement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakespeare.

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted hills. Milton.

SAINT John's Wort, sânt-jônz'wûrt. n. s. [hypericum.] A plant.

SA'IN LIKE, sânt'like. adj. [saint and like.]

1. Suiding a saint; becoming a saint.

If still thou do'st retain

The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saintlike show,
Still thou art bound to vice. Dryden.

2. Resembling a saint.

The king, in whose time it passed, whom catho-lieks count a saintlike and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

SA'INTLY, sânt'lé. adj. [from saint.] Like a saint; becoming a saint.

I mention still

Him whom thy wrongs, with saintly patience borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure. Milton.

SA'INTSHIP, sânt'ship. n. s. [from saint.]
The character or qualities of a saint.

He that thinks his saintship licenses him to censure, is to be looked on not only as a rebel, but an usurper. Decay of Piety.

This savours something ranker than the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded upon saintship. South.

The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him. Pope.

SAKE, sâke. n. s. [rac, Saxon; saecke,
Dutch.]

1. Final cause; end; purpose.

Thou neither do'st persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect
For glory's sake. Milton.

The prophane person serves the devil for nought, and sins only for sin's sake. Tillotson

Wyndham like a tyrant throws the dart,
And takes a cruel pleasure in the smart;
Proud of the ravage that her beauties make,
Delights in wounds, and kills for killing's sake. Granville.

2. Account; regard to any person or thing.

Would I were young for your sake, mistress Anne!
Shakespeare.

The general so likes your music, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.
Shakespeare.

SA'KER, sâ'kûr. n. s. [Saker originally signifies a hawk, the pieces of artillery being often denominated from birds of prey.]

The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker,
He was th' inventor of, and maker. Hudibras.

According to observations made with one of her majesty's sakers, and a very accurate pendulum chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds, which is a mile in a little above seventeen half seconds.
Derham.

SA'KERET, sâk'ér-ît.⁹⁹ n. s. [from saker.]
The male of a saker-hawk.

This kind of hawk is esteemed next after the falcon and gyrfalcon. Bailey.

SAL, sâl. n. s. [Latin.] Salt. A word often used in pharmacy.

Salsoacids will help its passing off; as sal prunel.
Floyer.

Sal gem is so called from its breaking frequently into gem-like squares. It differs not in property from the common salt of the salt springs, or that of the sea, when all are equally pure. Woodward.

Sal Ammoniac, is found still in Ammonia, as mentioned by the ancients; and from whence it had its name. Woodward.

SALA'CIOUS, sâ-lâ'shûs. adj. [salacis,
Latin; salace, French.] Lustful; lecherous.

One more salacious, rich, and old,
Outbids, and buys her. Dryden.

Feed him with herbs
Of generous warmth, and of salacious kind. Dryden.

Animals spleened, grow extremely salacious.

Arbutnot.

SALA'CIOUSLY, sâ-lâ'shûs-lè. adv. [from salacious.] Lecherously; lustfully.

posed to shorten the lives of cocks. Brown.

A corrosive acrimony in the seminal lymph produces salacity. Floyer.

SA'LAD, sâl'lâd. n. s. [salade, French; sa-laet, German.] Food of raw herbs. It has been always pronounced familiarly sallet.

I climbed into this garden to pick a salad, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach. Shaksp.

My sallet days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood.
Shakespeare.

You have, to rectify your palate,
An olive, capers, or some better salad,

Ush'ring the mutton Ben Jonson.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Fall on. Dryden.

The happy old Corieyan's fruits and salads, on which he lived contented, were all of his own growth.
Dryden.

Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled, they become potherbs; and some of those plants which are potherbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMA'NDER, sâl'â-mân-dûr. n. s.

[salamandre, French; salamandra, Lat.]

An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous.

Ambrose Percy has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite;
but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.

The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish it. Bacon.

According to this hypothesis, the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell therein. Glanville.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown.

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation.
Addison.

SALAMA'NDER'S Hair, sâl'â-mân-dûr-z-hâre'.

SALAMA'NDER'S Wool, sâl'â-mân-dûr-zwûi'. n. s. A kind of asbestos, or mineral flax.

There may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaister or parget: the finer, spaad, earth flax, or salaman-der's hair. Woodward.

SALAMA'NDRINE, sâl-lâ-mân'drin.¹⁴⁰ adj.
[from salamander.] Resembling a salamander.

Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed or singed. Spectator.

SA'LARY, sâl'â-rè. n. s. [salair, French;
salarium, Latin.]

1. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal. Arbutnot.

2. Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.

This is hire and salary, not revenge. Shaksp.

Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand.

SALE, sâle. n. s. [saal, Dutch.]

1. The act of selling.

2. Vent; power of selling; market.

Nothing doth more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry commodities, knowing that they shall have ready sale for them at those towns.

3. A publick and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.

Those that won the plate, and those thus sold, ought to be marked so as they may never return to the race, or to the sale.

4. State of being venal; price.

The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim

Private reward; for which both God and state

They'd set to sale.

The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale.

5. It seems in Spenser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from sallow, in which fishes are caught.

To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont;

Who to entrap the fish in winding sale

Was better seen?

SALEABLE, sâ'lâ-bl. adj. [from sale.]

Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.

I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money.

This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade.

SALEABLENESS, sâ'lâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from saleable.] The state of being saleable.

SALEABLY, sâ'lâ-bl-ê. adv. [from saleable.] In a saleable manner.

SALESMAN, sâlz'mân. n. s. [sale and man.] One who sells clothes ready made.

Poets make characters, as salesmen cloaths;

We take no measure of your fops and beaux.

SALEWORK, sâle'wûrk. n. s. [sale and work.] Work for sale; work carelessly done.

I see no more in you than in the ordinary Of Nature's salework.

SALIENT, sâ'l-ê-ânt. adj. [French.] In heraldry, denotes a lion in a leaping posture, and standing so that his right foot is in the dexter point, and his hinder left foot in the sinister base point of the escutcheon, by which it is distinguished from rampant.

Salient, in heraldry, is when the lion is sporting himself.

SA'LIENT, sâ'l-ê-ânt. adj. [saliens, Lat.]

1. Leaping; bounding; moving by leaps. The legs of both sides moving together, as frogs, and salient animals, is properly called leaping.

2. Beating; panting.

A salient point so first is call'd the heart, By turns dilated, and by turns compressed, Expels and entertains the purple guest.

3. Springing or shooting with a quick motion.

Who best can send on high The salient spout, far streaming to the sky.

SA'LIGOT, sâ'l-ê-gôt. n. s. [tributus aquaticus.] Waterthistle.

SA'LINE, sâ-line', or sâ'line. adj. [salinus, Lat.]

SA'LINOUS, sâ-li'nûs. adj. [from saline.]

Consisting of salt; constituting salt.

We do not easily ascribe their induration to cold; but rather unto salinous spirits and concretive juices.

This saline sap of the vessels, by being refused reception of the parts, declares itself in a more hostile manner by drying the radical moisture.

If a very small quantity of any salt or vitriol be dissolved in a great quantity of water, the particles of the salt or vitriol will sink to the bottom, though they be heavier in specie than the water, but will evenly diffuse themselves into all the water, so as to make it as saline at the top as at the bottom.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time.

SALIVA, sâ-lî-vâ. n. s. [Latin.] Every thing that is spit up; but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival.

Not meeting with disturbance from the saliva, I the sooner extirpated them.

SALIVAL, sâ'l-ê-vâl, or sâ-lî-vâl. adj.

SA'LIVARY, sâ'l-ê-vâ-rê. [from saliva.] Relating to spittle.

The woodpecker, and other birds that prey upon flies, which they catch with their tongue, in the room of the said glands have a couple of bags filled with a viscid humour, which, by small canals, like the saliva, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein, and so with the help of this natural birdlime attack the prey.

The necessity of spittle to dissolve the aliment appears from the contrivance of nature in making the salivary ducts of animals which ruminates, extremely open: such animals as swallow their aliment without chewing, want salivary glands.

To SA'LIVATE, sâ'l-ê-vâ-te. v. a. [from saliva, Latin.] To purge by the salival glands.

She was prepossessed with the scandal of salivating, and went out of town.

SALIVATION, sâ-l-ê-vâ'shûn. n. s. [from salivate.] A method of cure much practised of late in venereal, scrophulous, and other obstinate cases, by promoting a secretion of spittle.

Holding of ill-tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation.

SALIVOUS, sâ-lî-vûs, or sâ'l-ê-vûs. adj. [from saliva.] Consisting of spittle; having the nature of spittle.

There happeneth an elongation of the uvula, through the abundance of salivous humour flowing upon it.

SA'LLET, sâ'l-lit. n. s. [from salad.] I tried upon sallet oil.

Sow some early salleting.

SALLIANCE, sâ'l-l-ê-ânse. n. s. [from sally.] The act of issuing forth; sally. Not inelegant, but out of use.

Now note I weat, Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet.

SA'LLING, sâ'l-lit-ing. [by pronunciation from salad.]

Sow some early salleting.

SALLIANCE, sâ'l-l-ê-ânse. n. s. [from sally.] The act of issuing forth; sally. Not inelegant, but out of use.

Now note I weat, Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet.

SA'LLOW, sâ'l-lô. n. s. [salix, Latin.] A tree of the genus of willow.

Sallows and reeds on banks of rivers born, Remain to cut to stay thy vines.

SA'LLOW, sâ'l-lô. adj. [salo, German, black; salt, French, foul.] Sickly; yellow.

What a deal of brine Hath washt thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline? Shakspeare. The scene of beauty and delight is chang'd:

No roses bloom upon my fading cheeks, Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes;

But haggard Grief, lean looking sallow Care, And pining Discontent, a rueful train, Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn.

SA'LLOWNESS, sâ'l-lô-nês. n. s. [from sallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.

A fish diet would give such a sallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France.

SA'LLY, sâ'l-lê. n. s. [sallie, French.]

1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.

The deputy sat down before the town for the space of three winter months; during which time sallies were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss.

2. Range; excursion.

Every one shall know a country better, that makes often sallies into it, and traverses it up and down, than he that, like a mill-horse, goes still round in the same track.

3. Flight; volatile or sprightly exertion.

These passages were intended for sallies of wit; but whence comes all this rage of wit?

4. Escape; levity; extravagant flight; frolick; wild gayety; exorbitance.

At his return all was clear, and this excursion was esteemed but a sally of youth.

'Tis but a sally of youth.

We have written some things which we may wish never to have thought on: some sallies of levity ought to be imputed to youth.

The episodic part, made up of the extravagant sallies of the prince of Wales and Falstaff's humour, is of his own invention.

To SA'LLY, sâ'l-lê. v. n. [from the noun.]

To make an eruption; to issue out.

The Turks sallying forth, received thereby great hurt.

The noise of some tumultuous fight; They break the truce, and sally out by night.

The summons take of the same trumpets call, To sally from one port, or man one public wall.

SA'LLYPORT, sâ'l-lê-pôrt. n. s. [sally and port.] Gate at which sallies are made.

My slippery soul had quit the fort, But that she stopp'd the sallyport.

Love to our citadel resorts Through those deceitful sallyports, Our sentinels betray our forts.

SALMAGUNDI, sâ'l-mâ-gûn-dê. n. s. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon gout, or salé à mon goût.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SA'LMON, sâm'mûn. n. s. [salmo, Lat. saumon, Fr.] A fish.

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness.

He is said to cast his spawn in August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become samlets early in the spring: they haste to the sea before winter, both the melter and spawner.

Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes from a samlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton.

They poke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew.

They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

Of fishes, you find in arms the whale, dolphin, salmon, and trout. Peacham.

SA'L MONTROUT, sãm-mũn-trũtũt'. n. s. A trout that has some resemblance to a salmon.

There is in many rivers that relate to the sea salmontrouts as much different from others, in shape and spots, as sheep differ in their shape and bigness. Walton.

SALPI'CON, sâl-pê-kũn. n. s. [In cookery.]

A kind of farce put into holes cut in legs of beef, veal, or mutton. Bailey.

SALSAMENTA'RIOUS, sâl-sãmên-tã-rê-ũs. adj. [salsamentarius, Lat.] Belonging to salt things. Dict.

SA'LSIFY, sâl'sê-fi. n. s. [Latin.] A plant. Salsify, or the common sort of goatsbeard, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cods all over streaked, and engraven in the spaces between the streaks, which are sharp-pointed towards the end. Mortimer.

SALSOA'CID, sâl-sũ-ãs'sid. adj. [salsus, and acidus, Latin.] Having a taste compounded of saltness and sourness.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALSUGINOUS, sâl-sũ-jê-nũs. adj. [salsugo, Latin.] Saltish; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT, sãlt. n. s. [salt, Gothick; pealt, Saxon; sal, Latin; sel, French.]

1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential: fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water; after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some purified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakspeare.

He perfidiously has given up, For certain drops of salt, your city Rome, To his wife and mother. Shakspeare.

Since salts differ much, some being fixt, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a sapor, good or evil. Boyle.

A particle of salt may be compared to a chaos, being dense, hard, dry, and earthy in the centre, and rare, soft, and moist in the circumference. Newton.

Salts are bodies friable and brittle, in some degree pellucid, sharp or pungent to the taste, and dissoluble in water; but after that is evaporated, incorporating, crystalizing, and forming themselves into angular figures. Woodward.

2. Taste; smack.

Though we are justices and doctors, and churchmen, Mr. Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women. Shakspeare.

3. Wit; merriment.

SALT, sãlt. adj.

1. Having the taste of salt: as, salt fish.

We were better parch in Africk sun, Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakspeare.

Thou old and true Menenius, Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's, And venomous to thine eyes. Shakspeare.

2. Impregnated with salt.

Hang him, mechanical salt butter rogue: I will awe him with my cudgel. Shakspeare.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that salt water will dissolve salt put into it in less time than fresh water. Bacon.

A leap into salt waters very often gives a new motion to the spirits, and a new turn to the blood. Addison.

In Cheshire they improve their lands by letting out the water of the salt springs on them, always after rain. Mortimer.

3. Abounding with salt.

He shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness in a salt land, and not inhabited. Jeremiah.

4. [salar, Latin.] Lecherous; salacious.

Be a whore still:

Make use of thy salt hours, season the slaves For tubs and baths; bring down the rose-cheek'd youth To the tub-fast, and the diet. Shakspeare.

All the charms of love, Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan lip! Shakspeare.

This new married man, approaching here, Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd Your well-defended honour, you must pardon. Shakspeare.

To SALT, sãlt. v. a. [from the noun.] To season with salt.

If the offering was of flesh, it was salted thrice. Brown.

SA'LT-PAN, sãlt'pãn. } n. s. [salt and pan, SA'LT-PIT, sãlt'põt. } or pit.] Pit where salt is got.

Moab and Ammon shall be as the breeding of nettles, salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation. Zeph.

Cicero prettily calls them salinas, salt-pans, that you may extract salt out of, and sprinkle where you please. Bacon.

The stratum lay at about twenty-five fathom, by the duke of Somerset's salt-pans near Whitehaven. Woodward.

SA'LTANT, sãlt'tãnt. adj. [saltans, Latin.] Jumping; dancing.

SALTA'TION, sãlt-tã'shũn. n. s. [saltatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dancing or jumping.

The locusts being ordained for saltation, their hinder legs do far exceed the others. Brown.

If the great artery be hurt, you will discover it by its saltation and florid colour. Wiseman.

SA'LTCAT, sãlt'kãt. n. s.

Many give a lump of salt, which they usually call a saltcat, made at the salterns, which makes the pigeons much affect the place. Mortimer.

SA'LTCELLAR, sãlt'sêl-lũr. n. s. [salt and cellar.] Vessel of salt set on the table.

When any salt is spilt on the table-cloth, shake it out into the saltcellar. Swift.

SA'LTRER, sãlt'ũr. n. s. [from salt.]

1. One who salts.

2. One who sells salt.

After these local names, the most have been derived from occupations; as smith, salter, armourer. Camden.

SA'LTERN, sãlt'êrn. n. s. A salt-work.

A saltcat made at the salterns. Mortimer.

SALTINBA'NCO, sãlt-in-bãng'kũ. n. s. [saltare in banco, to climb on a bench, as a mountebank mounts a bank or bench.]

A quack or mountebank.

Saltinbancoes, quacksalvers, and charlatans, deceive them: were Æsop alive, the Piazza and Pont-neuf could not speak their fallacies. Brown.

He play'd the saltinbanco's part, Transform'd 't a Frenchman by my art. Hudibras.

SA'LTIER, sãlt'têr. n. s. [saultiere, Fr.]

Term of heraldry.

A saltier is in the form of a St. Andrew's cross, and by some is taken to be an engine to take wild beasts: in French it is called un sautoir: it is an honourable bearing. Peacham.

SA'LTISH, sãlt'ish. adj. [from salt.] Somewhat salt.

Soils of a saltish nature improve sandy grounds. Mortimer.

SA'LTLESS, sãlt'lês. adj. [from salt.] In-sipid; not tasting of salt.

SA'LTLY, sãlt'lũ. adv. [from salt.] With taste of salt; in a salt manner.

SA'LTNESS, sãlt'nês. n. s. [from salt.] Taste of salt.

Salt water passing through earth, through ten vessels, one within another, hath not lost its saltness, so as to become potable; but drained through twenty, become fresh. Bacon.

Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between saltness, and bitterness. Bacon.

SALTPETRE, sãlt-pêê'tũr. n. s. [sal petrae, Latin; sal petre, Fr.] Nitre.

Nitre, or saltpetre, having a crude and windy spirit, by the heat of the fire suddenly dilateth. Bacon.

Nitre, or saltpetre, in heaps of earth, has been extracted, if they be exposed to the air, so as to be kept from rain. Locke.

SALVABILITY, sãl-vã-bil'ê-tê. n. s. [from salvable.] Possibility of being received to everlasting life.

Why do we christians so fiercely argue against the salvability of each other, as if it were our wish that all should be damned, but those of our particular sect? Decay of Piety.

SA'LVABLE, sãl'vã-bl. adj. [from salvo, Latin.] Possible to be saved.

Our wild fancies about God's decrees have an event reprobated more than those decrees, and have bid fair to the damning of many whom those left salvable. Decay of Piety.

SA'LVAGE, sãl'vidje. adj. [saulvage, Fr. selvaggio, Italian, from silva, Latin.]

Wild; rude; cruel. It is now spoken and written savage.

May the Essexian plains

Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.
A savage race inur'd to blood. Dryden.

SALVA'TION, sãl-vã'shũn. n. s. [from salvo, Latin.] Preservation from eternal death; reception to the happiness of heaven.

As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of understanding or knowledge, all men's salvati n., and all men's endless perdition, are things so opposite, that whosoever doth affirm the one must necessarily deny the other. Hooker.

Him the most High,
Wrap'd in a balmy cloud with winged steeds,
Did as thou saw'st, receive; to walk with God
High in salvation, and the clinics of bliss, Exempt from death. Milton.

SALVATORY, sál'vá-túr-è.⁵¹² n. s. [salvatoire, Fr.] A place where any thing is preserved.

I consider the admirable powers of sensation, phantasy, and memory, in what salvatories or repositories the species of things past are conserved. Hale.

SALUBRIOUS, sál-lù'brè-ús. adj. [salubris, Latin.] Wholesome; healthful; promoting health.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.

SALUBRITY, sál-lù'brè-tè. n. s. [from salubrious.] Wholesomeness; healthfulness.

SALVE, sálv.⁷⁸ n. s. [This word is originally and properly salv, which having salves in the plural, the singular in time was borrowed from it: pealv, Saxon, undoubtedly from salvus, Lat.]

1. A glutinous matter applied to wounds and hurts; an emplaster.

Let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide. Shakspeare.
Sleep is pain's easiest salve, and doth fulfil
All offices of death, except to kill. Donne.

Go study salve and treacle: ply
Your tenant's leg, or his sore eye. Cleaveland.
The royal sword thus drawn, has cur'd a wound,
For which no other salve could have been found. Waller.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain;

The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

2. Help; remedy.

If they shall excommunicate me, hath the doctrine of meekness any salve for me then? Hammond.

To SALVE, sálv. v. a. [salvo, Latin; or from the noun.]

1. To cure with medicaments applied.

Many skillful leeches him abide,
To salve his hurts. Spenser.

It should be to little purpose for them to salve the wound, by making protestations in disgrace of their own actions. Hooker.

The which, if I perform, and do survive,
I do beseech your majesty may salve
The long-grown wounds of my intemperance. Shakspeare.

2. To help; to remedy.

Some seek to salve their blotted name
With others blot, 'till all do taste of shame. Sidney.

Our mother-tongue, which truly of itself is both full enough for prose, and stately enough for verse, hath long time been counted most bare and barren of both; which default, when as some endeavoured to salve and cure, they patched up the holes with rags from other languages. Swift.

3. To help or save by a salvo, an excuse, or reservation.

Ignorant I am not how this is salved: they do it but after the truth is made manifest. Hooker.

My more particular,
And that which most with you should salve my going,
Is Fulvia's death. Shakspeare.

The schoolmen were like the astronomers, who, to salve phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles; so they, to salve the practice of the church, had devised a great number of strange positions. Bacon.

There must be another state to make up the inequalities of this, and salve all irregular appearances. Atterbury.

This conduct might give Horace the hint to say, that when Homer was at a loss to bring any difficult matter to an issue, he laid his hero asleep, and this salved all difficulty. Broome.

4. [from salvo, Latin.] To salute. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in presence came,
And goodly salved them; who nought again
Him answered as courtesy became. Spenser.

SALVER, sál'vúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [A vessel, I suppose, used at first to carry away or save what was left.] A plate on which any thing is presented.

He has printed them in such a portable volume, that many of them may be ranged together on a single plate; and is of opinion, that a salver of spectators would be as acceptable an entertainment for the ladies, as a salver of sweetmeats. Addison.

Between each act the trembling salvers ring,
From soup to sweet wine. Pope.

SALVO, sál'vò. n. s. [from salvo jure, Latin, a form used in granting any thing: as, salvo jure futei.] An exception; a reservation; an excuse.

They admit many salvos, cautions, and reservations, so as they cross not the chief design. King Charles.

It will be hard if he cannot bring himself off at last with some salvo or distinction, and be his own confessor. L'Estrange.

If others of a more serious turn join with us deliberately in their religious professions of loyalty, with any private salvoes or evasions, they would do well to consider those maxims in which all casuists are agreed. Addison.

SALUTARINESS, sál'lù-tà-rè-nès. n. s. [from salutary.] Wholesomeness; quality of contributing to health or safety.

SALUTARY, sál'lù-tà-rè. adj. [salutaire, French; salutaris, Lat.] Wholesome; healthful; safe; advantageous; contributing to health or safety.

The gardens, yards, and avenues are dry and clean; and so more salutary as more elegant. Ray.

It was want of faith in our Saviour's countrymen, which hindered him from shedding among them the salutary emanations of his divine virtue; and he did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief. Bentley.

SALUTA'TION, sál-lù-tà'shùn. n. s. [salutation, Fr. salutatio, Lat.] The act or style of saluting; greeting.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shaksp.

Thy kingdom's peers
Speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,
Hail, king of Scotland! Shakspeare.

On her the angel hail
Bestow'd the holy salutation used
To blest Mary. Milton.

In all publick meetings, or private addresses, use those forms of salutation, reverence, and decency, usual amongst the most sober persons. Taylor.

Court and state he wisely shuns;
Nor brib'd, to servile salutations runs. Dryden.

To SALUTE, sál-lùtè'. v. a. [saluto, Latin; saluer, French.]

1. To greet; to hail.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shaksp.

One hour hence
Shall salute your grace of York as mother. Shaksp.

2. To please; to gratify.

Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me,
To think what follows. Shakspeare.

3. To kiss.

SALUTE, sál-lùtè'. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Salutation; greeting.

The custom of praying for those that sneeze is more ancient than these opinions hereof; so that not any one disease has been the occasion of this salute and deprecation. Brown.

O, what avails me now that honour high
To have conceiv'd of God, or that salute, Hail highly favour'd, among women blest! Milton.

Continual salutes and addresses entertaining him all the way, kept him from saving so great a life, but with one glance of his eye upon the paper, till he came to the fatal place where he was stabbed. South.

I shall not trouble my reader with the first salutes of our three friends. Addison.

2. A kiss.

There cold salutes, but here a lover's kiss. Roscommon.

SALUTER, sál-lù'túr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from salute.] He who salutes.

SALUTIFEROUS, sál-lù-tif'fèr-ús. adj. [salutifer, Latin.] Healthy; bringing health.

The king commanded him to go to the south of France, believing that nothing would contribute more to the restoring of his former vigour than the gentle salutiferous air of Montpelier. Dennis.

SAME, sáme. adj. [samo, Gothick; sammo, Swedish.]

1. Not different; not another; identical; being of the like kind, sort, or degree.

Miso, as spitefully as her rotten voice could utter it, set forth the same sins of Amphialus. Sidney.
The tenor of man's woe

Holds on the same. Milton.

Th' etherial vigour is in all the same,
And every soul is fill'd with equal flame. Dryden.

If itself had been colour'd, it would have transmitted all visible objects tinctured with the same colour; as we see whatever is beheld through a coloured glass, appears of the same colour with the glass. Ray.

The merchant does not keep money by him; but if you consider what money must be lodged in the banker's hands, the case will be much the same. Locke.

The same plant produceth as great a variety of juices as there is in the same animal. Arbuthnot.

2. That was mentioned before.

Do but think how well the same he spends,
Who spends his blood his country to relieve. Daniel.

SAMENESS, sáme'nès. n. s. [from same.]

1. Identity; the state of being not another; not different.

Difference of persuasion in matters of religion may easily fall out, where there is the sameness of duty, allegiance, and subjection. K. Charles.

2. Undistinguishable resemblance.

If all courts have a sameness in them, things may be as they were in my time, when all employments went to parliamentmen's friends. Swift.

SAMLET, sán'lét. n. s. [salmonet, or salmonet.] A little salmon.

A salmon, after he is got into the sea, becomes from a samlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton.

SAMPHIRE, sám'fir.¹⁴⁰ n. s. [saint Pierre, Fr. riethum, Lat.] A plant preserved in pickle.

This plant grows in great plenty upon the rocks near the sea-shore, where it is washed by the salt water. It is greatly esteemed for pickling, and is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.

Half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire: dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head. Shaksp
SA'MPLE, sâ'm/pl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [from examp̄le.]
A specimen; a part of the whole shown, that judgment may be made of the whole.

He entreated them to tarry but two days, and he himself would bring them a sample of the oar.

I have not engaged myself to any: I am not loaded with a full cargo: 'tis sufficient if I bring a sample of some goods in this voyage.

I design this but for a sample of what I hope more fully to discuss Determinations of justice were very summary and decisive, and generally put an end to the vexations of a law-suit by the ruin both of plaintiff and defendant: travellers have recorded some samples of this kind.

From most bodies
Some little bits ask leave to flow;
And, as through these canals they roll,
Bring up a sample of the whole.

To SA'MPLE, sâ'm/pl. v. a. To show something similar.

SA'MPLER, sâ'm/pl-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [exemplar, Latin; whence it is sometimes written samplar.] A pattern of work; a piece worked by young girls for improvement.

O love, why do'st thou in thy beautiful sampler set such a work for my desire to see out, which is impossible?

Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind.

We created with our needles both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion;
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds
Had been incorporate.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to teize the housewife's wool.

I saw her sober over a sampler, er gay over a jointed baby.

SA'NABLE, sâ'n/nâ-bl.⁵³⁵ adj. [sanabilis, Latin.] Curable; susceptible of remedy; remediable.

SANA'TION, sâ-nâ/shûn. n. s. [sanatio, Lat.] The act of curing.

Consider well the member, and, if you have no probable hope of sanation, cut it off quickly.

SA'NATIVE, sâ'n/nâ-tiv.¹⁵³ adj. [from sano, Latin.] Powerful to cure; healing.

The vapour of coltsfoot hath a sanative virtue towards the lungs.

SA'NATIVENESS, sâ'n/nâ-tiv-nês. n. s. [from sanative] Power to cure.

SANCTIFICATION, sângk-tê-fê-kâ/shûn.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [sanctification, Fr. from sanctifico, low Latin.]

1. The state of being freed, or act of freeing from the dominion of sin for the time to come.

The grace of this sanctification and life, which was first received in him, might pass from him to his whole race, as malediction came from Adam unto all mankind.

2. The act of making holy; consecration.
The bishop kneels before the cross, and devoutly adores and kisses it: after this follows a long prayer for the sanctification of that new sign of the cross.

SA'NCTIFIER, sângk-tê-fi-ûr. n. s. [from sanctify.] He that sanctifies or makes holy

To be the sanctifier of a people, and to be their God, is all one.

To SA'NCTIFY, sângk'tê-fi. v. a. [sanctifier, French; sanctifico, Latin.]

1. To free from the power of sin for the time to come.

For if the blood of bulls, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ?

2. To make holy

What actions can express the entire purity of thought, which refines and sanctifies a virtuous man?

3. To make a means of holiness.

The gospel, by not making many things unclean, as the law did, hath sanctified those things generally to all, which particularly each man to himself must sanctify by a reverend and holy use.

Those judgments God hath been pleased to send upon me, are so much the more welcome, as a means which his mercy hath sanctified so to me as to make me repent of that unjust act.

Those external things are neither parts of our devotion, or by any strength in themselves direct causes of it: but the grace of God is pleased to move us by ways suitable to our nature, and to sanctify these sensible helps to higher purposes.

4. To make free from guilt.

The holy man, amaz'd at what he saw,
Made haste to sanctify the bliss by law.

5. To secure from violation.

Truth guards the poet, sanctifies the line.

SANCTIMONIOUS, sângk-tê-mô'nê-ûs. adj. [from sanctimonia, Lat.] Saintly; having the appearance of sanctity.

A sanctimonious pretence, under a pomp of form, without the grace of an inward integrity, will not serve the turn.

SA'NCTIMONY, sângk'tê-mô-nê. n. s. [sanctimonia, Latin.] Holiness; scrupulous austerity; appearance of holiness.

If sanctimony, and a frail vow between an errant Barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian, be not too hard for my wit, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her.

Her pretence is a pilgrimage, which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, she accomplish'd.

There was great reason why all discreet princes should beware of yielding hasty relief to the robes of sanctimony.

SA'NCTION, sângk'shûn.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [sanction, Fr. sanctio, Latin.]

1. The act of confirmation which gives to any thing its obligatory power; ratification.

I have kill'd a slave,
And of his blood caus'd to be mix'd with wine:
Fill every man his bowl. There cannot be

A fitter drink to make this sanction in

Against the publick sanctions of the peace,
With fates aversè, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch.

There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience.

By the laws of men, enacted by civil power, gratitude is not enforced; that is, not enjoined by the sanction of penalties, to be inflicted upon the person that shall not be found grateful.

The satisfactions of the christian life, in its present practice and future hopes, are not the mere raptures of enthusiasm, as the strictest professors of reason have added the sanction of their testimony.

This word is often made the sanction of an oath: it is reckoned a great commendation to be a man of honour.

Wanting sanction and authority, it is only yet a private work.

2. A law; a decree ratified. Improper.
'Tis the first sanction nature gave to man,
Each other to assist in what they can.

SA'NCTITUDE, sângk'tê-tûde. n. s. [from sanctus, Lat.] Holiness; goodness; saintliness.

In their looks divine
The image of their glorious Maker shone,
Truth, wisdom, sanctitude, serene and pure.

SA'NCTITY, sângk'tê-tê. n. s. [sanctitas, Latin.]

1. Holiness; the state of being holy.

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

No sanctity, if none be thither brought
By men who there frequent.

2. Goodness; the quality of being good; purity; godliness.

This youth
I reliev'd with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which methought did promise
Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

It was an observation of the ancient Romans, that their empire had not more increased by the strength of their arms than the sanctity of their manners.

3. Saint; holy being.

About him all the sanctities of heav'n
Stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd
Beatitude past ut'rance.

To SA'NCTUARISE, sângk'tshù-â-rize. v. n. [from sanctuary.] To shelter by means of sacred privileges. Not in use.

No place indeed should murder sanctuarise.

SA'NCTUARY, sângk'tshù-â-rê.⁴⁶³ n. s. [sanctuaire, Fr. sanctuarium, Lat.]

1. A holy place; holy ground. Properly the penetralia, or most retired and awful part of a temple.

Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our evils there?

They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines.

Let it not be imagined, that they contribute nothing to the happiness of the country who only serve God in the duties of a holy life, who attend his sanctuary, and daily address his goodness.

2. A place of protection; a sacred asylum: whence a sanctuary man, one who takes shelter in a holy place.

Come, my boy, we will to sanctuary.
I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,
To save at least the heir of Edward's right.

Oft have I heard of sanctuary men;
But sanctuary children we'er till now.

Howsoever the sanctuary man was protected from his creditors, yet his goods out of sanctuary should not.

3. Shelter; protection.

What are the bulls to the frogs, or the lakes to the meadows? Very much, says the frog; for he that's worsted, will be sure to take sanctuary in the fens.

The admirable works of painting were made fuel for the fire; but some reliques of it took sanctuary under ground, and escap'd the common destiny.

SAND, sând. n. s. [sand, Danish and Dutch.]

1. Particles of stone not conjoined, or stone broken to powder.

That finer matter called sand, is no other than very small pebbles. Woodward.

Here i' th' sands
Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified. Shaksp.
Hark, the fatal followers do pursue!
The sands are number'd that make up my life:
Here must I stay and here my life must end.

Shakespeare.
Sand bath always its root in clay, and there be no veins of sand any great depth within the earth. Bacon.

Calling for more paper to rescribe, king Philip shewed him the difference betwixt the ink box and sand box. Howel.

If quicksilver be put into a convenient glass vessel, and that vessel exactly stopped, and kept for ten weeks in a sand furnace, whose heat may be constant, the corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will, after innumerable revolutions, be so connected to one another, that they will appear in the form of a red powder. Boyle.

Engag'd with money bags, as hold
As men with sand bags did of old. Hudibras.

The force of water casts gold out from the bowels of mountains, and exposes it among the sands of rivers. Dryden.

Shells are found in the great sand pit at Woolwich. Woodward.

Celia and I, the other day,
Walk'd o'er the sand hills to the sea. Prior.

2. Barren country covered with sands.

Most of his army being slain, he, with a few of his friends, sought to save themselves by flight over the desert sands. Knolles.

Her sons spread

Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands. Milton.

So, where our wild Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden the impetuous burricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies. Addison.

SA'NDAL, sán'dál, n. s. [sandale, French; sandalium, Lat.] A loose shoe.

Thus sung the uncouth swain to th' oaks and hills
While the still morn went out with sandals grey. Milt.

Flows light ineffable: his harp, his quiver,
And Lycian bow are gold: with golden sandals
His feet are shod. Prior.

The sandals of celestial mold,
Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,
Surround her feet. Pope.

SAN'DARAK, sán'dár-rák, n. s. [sandaracque, Fr. sandaraca, Latin.]

1. A mineral of a bright colour, not much unlike to red arsenick. Bailey.

2. A white gum oozing out of the juniper tree. Bailey.

SA'NDBLIND, sánd'blind, adj. [sand and blind.] Having a defect in the eyes, by which small particles appear to fly before them.

My true begotten father, being more than sand-blind, high gravelblind, knows me not. Shakespeare.

SA'NDBOX Tree, sánd'bóks-tréé, n. s. [hura, Lat.] A plant.

The fruit of this plant, if suffered to remain on till they are fully ripe, burst in the heat of the day with a violent explosion, making a noise like the firing of a pistol, and hereby the seeds are thrown about to a considerable distance. These seeds, when green, vomit and purge, and are supposed to be somewhat a-kin to nux vomica. Miller.

SA'NDED, sán'déd, adj. [from sand.]

1. Covered with sand; barren.
In well sanded lands little or no snow lies. Mortimer.

The river pours along

Resistless, roaring dreadful down it comes;
Then o'er the sanded valley floating spreads. Thomson.

2. Marked with small spots; variegated with dusky specks.

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so sanded, and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew.

Shakespeare.

SA'NDERLING, sán'dúr-ling, n. s. A bird.
We reckon coots, sanderlings, pewets, and mews. Carew.

SA'NDERS, sán'dúr-z, n. s. [santalum, Lat.] A precious kind of Indian wood, of which there are three sorts, red, yellow, and green. Bailey.

Aromatize it with sanders. Wiseman.

SA'NDEVER, sánd'év-úr, n. s.

That which our English glassmen call sandever, and the French, of whom probably the name was borrowed, suindever, is that recrement that is made when the materials of glass, namely, sand and a fixt lixiviate alkali, having been first baked together, and kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen afterwards take off with ladles, and lay by as little worth. Boyle.

SA'NDISH, sánd'ish, adj. [from sand.] Approaching to the nature of sand; loose; not close; not compact.

Plant the tenuifolia and ranunculus in fresh sandish earth, taken from under the turf. Evclyn.

SA'NDSTONE, sánd'stone, n. s. [sand and stone.] Stone of a loose and friable kind, that easily crumbles into sand.

Grains of gold in sandstone, from the mine of Costa Rica, which is not reckoned rich; but every hundred weight yields about an ounce of gold. Woodward.

SA'NDY, sánd'é, adj. [from sand.]

1. Abounding with sand; full of sand.

I should not see the sandy hourglass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shaksp.
Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
Than where castles mounted stand. Shakespeare.

A region so desert, dry, and sandy, that travellers are fain to carry water on their camels. Brown.

Rough unwieldy earth, nor to the plough

Nor to the cattle kind, with sandy stones

And gravel o'er-abounding. Philips.

O'er sandy wilds were yellow harvests spread. Pope.

2. Consisting of sand; unsolid.

Favour, so bottomed upon the sandy foundation of personal respects only, cannot be long lived. Bacon.

SANE, sáne, adj. [sanus, Latin.] Sound; healthy. Baynard wrote a poem on preserving the body in a sane and sound state.

SANG, sâng, The preterit of sing.

These next they sang, of all creation first. Milton.

SANGUIFEROUS, sâng-gwíf'fêr-ús, adj. [sanguifer, Lat.] Conveying blood.

The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twists about. Derham.

SANGUIFICATION, sâng-gwé-fé-ká'shün, n. s. [sanguification, Fr. sanguis and facio, Lat.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instruments of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbutnot.

Asthmatick persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguification, are leucophlegmatick. Arbutnot.

SA'NGUIFIER, sâng'gwé-fi-úr, n. s. [sanguis and facio, Latin.] Producer of blood.

Bitters, like choler, are the best sanguifiers, and also the best febrifuges. Floyer.

To SA'NGUIFY, sâng'gwé-fi, v. n. [sanguis and facio, Latin.] To produce blood.

At the same time I think, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify, and carnify, by the power of an individual soul. Hale.

SA'NGUINARY, sâng'gwé-nâ-ré, adj. [sanguinari, Latin; sanguinaire, Fr. from sanguis, Latin.] Cruel; bloody; murderous.

We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences. Bacon.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of actors: never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this. Howel.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savages, and make us brutal and sanguinary. Broomc.

SA'NGUINARY, sâng'gwé-nâ-ré, n. s. [sanguis, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SA'NGUINE, sâng'gwin, adj. [sanguis, Fr. sanguineus, from sanguis, Lat.]

1. Red; having the colour of blood.

This fellow

Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks. Shakespeare.

A stream of nect'rous humour issuing flow'd Sanguine. Milton.

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,

Girt in her sanguine gown. Dryden.

Her flag aloft, spread rustling to the wind,

And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire;

The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd,

Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire. Dryden.

2. Abounding with blood more than any other humour; cheerful.

The choleric fell short of the longevity of the sanguine. Brown.

Though these faults differ in their complexions as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united. Government of the Tongue.

3. Warm; ardent; confident.

A set of sanguine tempers ridicule, in the number of fopperies, all such apprehensions. Swift.

SA'NGUINE, sâng'gwin, n. s. [from sanguis.] Blood colour.

A grisly wound,

From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick,

That all her goodly garments stain'd around,

And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Fairy Queen.

SA'NGUINENESS, sâng'gwin-nés, } n. s.

SANGUINITY, sâng-gwin'é-té, }

[from sanguine.] Ardour; heat of expectation; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrenzy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguineness of temper in others; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinsick violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man. Decay of Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS, sâng-gwin'é-ús, adj. [sanguis, Latin; sanguis, Fr.]

SA'NIUS, sá'né-ús.⁴¹⁴ adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well-digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wiseman.

SA'NITY, sán'è-té. n. s. [sanitas, Latin.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are!

A happiness that often madness hits on,
Which sanity and reason could not be
So prosperously delivered of. Shakespeare.

SANK, sánk. The preterit of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon.

SANS, sánz. pref. [French.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shakespeare.

For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not. Shakespeare.

SAP, sáp. n. s. [sæp, Sax. sap, Dut.] The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
Now in the same bathing his tender feet Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaksp.

Wound the bark of our fruit-trees,
Lest, being over-proud with sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself. Shaksp.

His presence had infused
Into the plant scintillating sap. Milton.

The sap which at the root is bred
In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Waller.

Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot.

To SAP, sáp. v. a. [sapier, Fr. sapfare, Ital.] To undermine; to subvert by digging; to mine.

Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dryd.

To SAP, sáp. v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.

For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Tuller.

In vain my heroes fight, and patriots rave,
If secret gold saps on from knave to knave. Pope.

SA'PHIRE, sáf'fir.^{140 413} See SAPPHIRE.

SA'PID, sáp'id.⁶⁴⁴ adj. [sapidus, Latin.]

Tasteful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet. Brown.

The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor. Arbuthnot.

SAPIDITY, sá-píd'è-té. } n. s. [from sap-

SA'PIDNESS, sáp'id-nés. } pid.] Tasteful-ness; power of stimulating the palate. As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, and void of all sapidity. Brown.

If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.

SA'PIENCE, sá'pè-ènsé. n. s. [sapience, Fr. sapientia, Latin.] Wisdom; sageness; knowledge.

By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom Grew.

Ne only they that dwell in lowly dust,
The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,
Did'st to the top of honour erst advance:
They now, puffed up with 's deignful insolence,
Despise the blood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Wotton.

Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Immense, and all his father in him shone. Milton.
O sov'reign, virtuous, precious of all trees
In paradise! of operation blest
To sapience. Milton.

Many a wretch in Bedlam,
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
Still has gratitude and sapience,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

SA'PIENT, sá'pè-ènt. adj. [sapiens, Lat.] Wise; sage.

There the sapient king held dalliance. Milton.

That droops his sapless branches to the ground. Shakespeare.

The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
Produces sapless leaves instead of fruits. Denham.

This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sapless trunk. Swift.

2. Dry; old; husky.

If by this bribe, well plac'd, he would ensnare
Some sapless usurer that wants an heir. Dryden.

SA'PLING, sáp'ling. n. s. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shaksp.

Nurse the saplings tall, and curl the grove
With ringlets quaint. Milton.

A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.

What plauter will attempt to yoke
A sapling with a falling oak? Swift.

Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vig'rous hand

Wielding her oaken sapling of command. King-

Saphire is of a bright blue colour. Woodward.
In euroll'd tufts, flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
Like saphire pearl, in rich embroidery. Shaksp.
He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
And on the saphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

That the saphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to their value. Derham.

SA'PPHIRINE, sáf'fir-ine.¹⁴⁹ adj. [saphyrinus, Latin.] Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.

She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be. Donne.

A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the colliquated mass, upon breaking the crucible, of a lovely sapphirine blue. Boyle.

SA'PPINESS, sáp'pè-nés. n. s. [from sapfy.]

To SATE, sâte. v. a. [satio, Lat.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me.

How will their bodies stript
Enrich the victors, while the vultures sate
Their maws with full repast?

Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy.

SA'TELLITE, sât'tél-lite.¹⁵⁵ n. s. [satelles,

Lat. satellite, Fr. This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four: I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.

Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites.

The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are wisely removed to the extreme regions of the system

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove?

SATELLITIOUS, sât-tél-lish'ûs. adj. [from satelles, Lat.] Consisting of satellites.

SAT'IRE, sâ'tîr, sât'îr, sâ'îre, or sât'îre.³⁶³ n. s. [satira, anciently satira, Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded: it has on before the subject.

He dares to sing thy praises in a elime
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind.

Dryden.

My verse is satire, Dorset lend your ear,
And patronise a muse you cannot fear.

Young.

SAT'IRICAL, sâ-tîr'è-kâi. } adj. [satiricus, SAT'IRICK, sâ-tîr'îk. } Lat. satirique,
Fr. from satire.]

I first adventure, follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist.

Hall.

Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest *satyr*ist of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive.

Graville.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid *satyr*ists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau.

Cleland.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay;
Blest *satyr*ist! who touch'd the mean so true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too.

Pope.

To SAT'IRIZE, sât'tîr-îze. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness.

Dryden.

Should a writer single out and point his railery, at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers; but must he a very ill man if he could please himself.

Addison.

I insist that my lion's mouth he not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to revile the human species, and satirize his betters.

Spectator.

It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished vices, as to praise a man of distinguished virtues.

Swift.

SATISFA'CTION, sât-tis-fâk'shûn. n. s. [satisfactio, Latin; satisfaction, Fr.]

1. The act of pleasing to the full, or state of being pleased.

Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction.

South.

2. The act of pleasing.

The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them.

Locke.

3. The state of being pleased.

'Tis a wretched satisfaction, a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company.

L'Estrange.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt.

Locke.

4. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness; conviction.

Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
—What satisfaction can you have?

Shakespeare.

5. Gratification; that which pleases.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have cheated into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain.

Dryden.

6. Amends; atonement for a crime; recompense for an injury.

Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death.

Milton.

SATISFA'CTIVE, sâ-tis-fâk'tîv. adj. [satisfactus, Latin.] Giving satisfaction.

By a final and satisfactive discernment of faith, we lay the last effects upon the first cause of all things.

Brown.

SATISFA'CTORILY, sât-tis-fâk'tîr-è-î-è. adv. [from satisfactory.] So as to content Bellonus hath been more satisfactorily experimental, not only affirming that chameleons feed on flies, but upon exenteration he found these animals in their bellies.

Broten.

They strain their memory to answer him satisfactorily unto all his demands.

Digby.

SATISFA'CTORINESS, sât-tis-fâk'tîr-è-nès. n. s. [from satisfactory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content.

The incompleteness of the scrapplick lover's happiness in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but his want of an entire possession of them.

Boyle.

SATISFA'CTORY, sât-tis-fâk'tîr-è. adj. [satisfactoire, Fr. satisfactus, Lat.]

1. Giving satisfaction; giving content.

An intelligent American would scarce take it for a satisfactory account, if, desiring to learn our architecture, he should be told that a pillar was a thing supported by a basis.

Locke.

2. Atoning; making amends.

A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ.

Sanderson.

To SAT'ISFY, sât'tis-fi. v. a. [satisfaire, Fr. satisfacio, Latin.]

1. To content; to please to such a degree as that nothing more is desired.

A good man shall be satisfied from himself.

Proverbs.

I'm satisfy'd. My hoy has done his duty.

Addison.

2. To feed to the fill.

Who has caused it to rain on the earth, to satisfy the desolate and waste ground, and to cause the bud of the tender tree to spring forth?

Job.

I will pursue and divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them.

Exodus.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul.

Proverbs.

3. To recompense; to pay to content.

He is well paid that is well satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid.

Shaksp.

4. To appease by punishment.

Will he draw out,
For anger's sake, finite to infinite
In punish'd man, to satisfy his rigour, Satisfy'd never? That were to extend
His sentence beyond dust and Nature's law.

Milt.

5. To free from doubt, perplexity, or suspense.

Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardi de Vinci.

Dryden.

This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it?

Locke.

6. To convince.

He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause.

Dryden.

When come to the utmost extremity of hody, what can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that it is at the end of space, when its satisfied that body itself can move into it!

Locke.

The standing evidences of the truth of the Gospel are in themselves most firm, solid, and satisfying.

Atterbury.

To SAT'ISFY, sât'tis-fi. v. n.

1. To give content.

2. To feed to the full.

3. To make payment.

By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for them: thus silver becomes the measure of commerce.

Locke.

SAT'URABLE, sât'tshù-râ-bl. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing till it will receive no more.

Be the figures of the salts never so various, yet

if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always so conform to those figures as to fill up all vacuities; and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Grew.

SATURANT, sât'tshû-rânt. adj. [from saturans, Latin.] Impregnating to the fill.

To SATURATE, sât'tshû-râte. v. a. [saturō, Latin.] To impregnate till no more can be received or imbibed.

Rain-water is plentifully saturated with terrestrial matter, and more or less stored with it. Woodward.

His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last so many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Cheyne

Still night succeeds

A soften'd shade, and saturated earth
Awaits the morning beam. Thomson.

SATURDAY, sât'tûr-dê.²²³ n. s. [rætepp-dæg, or ræteppdæg, Sax. according to Verstegan, from rætep, a Saxon idol; more probably from Saturn, dies Saturni.] The last day of the week.

This matter I handled fully in last Saturday's Spectator. Addison.

SATURITY, sâ-tû-ré-té. n. s. [saturitas, from saturō, Lat.] Fullness; the state of being saturated; repletion.

SATURN, sâ-tûrn, or sât'ûrn. n. s. [saturne, Fr. saturnus, Latin.]

1. A remote planet of the solar system: supposed by astrologers to impress melancholy, dulness, or severity of temper.

The smallest planets are placed nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, are wisely removed to the extreme regions. Bentley.

From the far bounds
Of utmost Saturn, wheeling wide his round. Thomson.

2. [In chymistry.] Lead.

SATURNINE, sât'tûr-nine.¹⁴⁸ adj. [saturninus, Lat. saturnien, Fr. from Saturn.] Not light; not volatile; gloomy; grave; melancholy; severe of temper: supposed to be born under the dominion of Saturn.

I may cast my readers under two divisions, the mercurial and saturnine: the first are the gay part, the others are of a more sober and solemn turn. Addison.

SATURNIAN, sâ-tûr'né-ân. adj. [saturnius, Latin.] Happy; golden: used by poets for times of felicity, such as are feigned to have been in the reign of Saturn.

Th' Augustus, born to bring saturnian times. Pope.

SATYR, sât'tûr, or sât'ûr. n. s. [satyrus, Lat.] A sylvan god: supposed among the ancients to be rude and lecherous. Satyrs, as Pliny testifies, were found in times past in the eastern mountains of India. Peacham.

SATYRIASIS, sâ-têr-ê-â-sis. n. s. [from satyr.]

If the chyle be very plentiful, it breeds a satyriasis, or an abundance of seminal lymphas. Floyer.

SAVAGE, sâv'vidje.⁹⁰ adj. [sauvage, Fr. selvaggio, Italian.]

1. Wild; uncultivated.

These godlike virtues wherefore dost thou hide,
Affecting private life, or more obscure
In savage wilderness? Milton.
Cornels, and savage berries of the wood,
And roots and herbs, have been my meagre food. Dryden.

2. Untamed; cruel.

Chain me to some steepy mountain's top,
Where roaring bears and savage lions roam. Shakspeare.

Hence with your little ones:
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty. Shakspeare.
Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept. Pope.

3. Uncivilized; barbarous; untaught; wild; brutal.

Thus people lived altogether a savage life, 'till Saturn, arriving on those coasts, devised laws to govern them by. Raleigh.

The savage clamour drown'd
Both harp and voice. Milton.

A herd of wild beasts on the mountains, or a savage drove of men in caves, might be so disorder'd;
but never a peculiar people. Sprat.

SAVAGE, sâv'vidje. n. s. [from the adjective.] A man untaught and uncivilized; a barbarian.

Long after these times were they but savages. Raleigh.

The seditious lived by rapine and ruin of all the country, omitting nothing of that which savages, enraged in the height of their unruly behaviour, do commit. Hayward.

To deprive us of metals is to make us mere savages;
to change our corn for the old Arcadian diet, our houses and cities for dens and caves, and our clothing for skins of beasts: 'tis to bereave us of all arts and sciences, nay, of revealed religion. Bentley

To SAVAGE, sâv'vidje. v. a. [from the noun.] To make barbarous, wild, or cruel. A word not well authorized.

Friends, relations, Love himself,
Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson.

SAVAGELY, sâv'vidje-lê. adv. [from savage.] Barbarously; cruelly.

Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes Savagely slaughter'd. Shakspeare.

SAVAGENESS, sâv'vidje-nês. n. s. [from savage.] Barbarousness; cruelty; wildness.

A savageness in unreclaimed blood
Of general assault. Shakspeare.

Wolves and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shakspeare.

The Cyclops were a people of Sicily, remarkable for savageness and cruelty. Broome.

SAVAGERY, sâv'vidje-rê. n. s. [from savage.]

1. Cruelty; barbarity.

This is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savag'ry, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-eye'd Wrath, or staring Rage,
Presented to the tears of soft Remorse. Shakspeare.

2. Wild growth.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts,
That should deracinate such savagery. Shakspeare.

SAVANNA, sâ-vân'nâ. n. s. [Spanish, according to Bailey.] An open meadow without wood; pasture-ground in America.

He that rides post through a country may tell how, in general, the parts lie; here a morass, and there a river; woodland in one part, and savannas
in another. Locke.

Plains immense,
And vast savannas, where the wand'ring eye,
Unfix'd, is in a verdant ocean lost. Thomson.
SAUCE, sâwse.²¹⁸ n. s. [sauce, saulse, Fr. salsa, Italian.]

1. Something eaten with food to improve its taste.

The bitter sauce of the sport was, that we had our honours for ever lost, partly by our own faults, but principally by his faulty using of our faults. Sidney.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meet is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakspeare.

Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shaksp.

Such was the sauce of Moab's noble feast,
Till night far spent invites them to their rest. Cowley.
He that spends his time in sports, is like him whose meat is nothing but saucés; they are health-less, chargeable, and useless. Taylor.

High saucés and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. To serve one the same SAUCE. A vulgar phrase to retaliate one injury with another.

To SAUCE, sâwse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To accompany meat with something of higher relish.

2. To gratify with rich tastes. Obsolete.
Earth, yield me roots;

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison. Shakspeare.

3. To intermix or accompany with any thing good, or, ironically, with any thing bad.

Then fell she to sauce her desires with threatenings, so that we were in a great perplexity, restrained to so unworthy a bondage, and yet restrained by love, which I cannot tell how, in noble minds, by a certain duty, claims an answering. Sidney.

All the delights of love, wherein wanton youth walloweth, he but folly mixed with bitterness, and sorrow sauced with repentance. Spenser.

Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy unbraidings;

Unquiet meals make ill digestions. Shakspeare.

SAUCEBOX, sâwse'bôks. n. s. [from sauce, or rather from saucy.] An impertinent or petulant fellow.

The foolish old poet says, that the souls of some women are made of sea-water: this has encouraged my saucebox to be witty upon me. Spectator.

SAUCEPAN, sâwse'pân. n. s. [sauce and pan.] A small skillet with a long handle, in which sauce or small things are boiled.

Your master will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.

1. A small pan or platter in which sauce is set on the table.

Infuse a pugil of new violets seven times, and it shall make the vingar so fresh of the flower, as, if brought in a saucer, you shall smell it before it come at you. Bacon.

Some have mistaken blocks and posts
For spectres, apparitions, ghosts,
With saucer eyes and horns. Hudibras.

2. A piece or platter of china, into which a tea-cup is set.

SAUCILY, sâw'sê-lê. adv. [from saucy.] Impudently; impertinently; petulantly; in a saucy manner.

Though this knave came somewhat saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair. Shakspeare.

A freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very saucily had almost all the words; and, amongst other things, he asked in scorn one of the examiners, who was likewise a freed servant of Scribonianus, I pray, sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done? He answered, I would have stood behind his chair, and held my peace.

A trumpet behaved himself very saucily? Addis.

SA'UCINESS, sáw'sé-nés. n. s. [from saucy.] Impudence; petulance; impertinence; contempt of superiours.

With how sweet saws she blam'd their sauciness,
To feel the panting heart, which through her side
Did beat their hands. Sidney.

By his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness. Shakspeare.

Being interecepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness. Shakspeare.

It is sauciness in a creature, in this case, to reply. Bramhall.

Imputing it to the natural sauciness of a pedant,
they made him eat his words. L'Estrange.

You sauciness, mind your pruning-knife, or I may use it for you. Dryden.

This might make all other servants challenge the same liberty, and grow pert upon their masters; and when this sauciness became universal, what less mischief could be expected than an old Seythian rebellion? Collier.

SA'UCISSE, sáw'sése. n. s. [Fr.] In gunnery a long train of powder sewed up in a roll of pitched cloth, about two inches diameter, in order to fire a bomb-chest. Bailey.

SA'UCISSON, sáw-sís-són'. n. s. [Fr.]
In military architecture, fagots or fascines made of large boughs of trees bound together. They are commonly used to cover men, to make epaulments, traverses, or breastworks in ditches full of water, to render the way firm for carriages. Bailey.

SA'UCY, sáw'sé.²¹⁸ adj. [I know not how this word can be easily deduced from saucy; it may come more properly from salsus, Lat.] Pert; petulant; contemptuous of superiours; insolent; impudent; impertinent.

You are more saucy with the lords than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission.
Shakspeare.

Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with saucy looks;
Small have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from others' books. Shaksp.

And if thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours against these saucy walls. Shaksp.

Power's first pedigree from force derives,
And calls to mind the old prerogatives
Of free-born man: and with a saucy eye
Searches the heart and soul of majesty. Denham.

I lose my patience, when with saucy pride
By untun'd ears I hear his numbers try'd. Roscom.
No saucy citizens shall dare
To strike a soldier, nor, when struck, resent
The wrong. Dryden.

Homer, to express a man both timorous and saucy, makes use of a kind of point, namely, that he had the eyes of a dog, but the heart of a deer.
Spectator.

To SAVE, sáve. v. a. [sauver, sautver,
Fr. salvo, Latin.]

1. To preserve from danger or destruction.

Let me die ere men can say God save the queen.

One shall cry, yet cannot he answer, nor save him out of his trouble. Shakspeare.
Isaiah.

A wond'rous ark,
To save himself and houshold from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

The circling streams, once thought but pools of blood
From dark oblivion Harvey's name shall save.

Will no superior genius snatch the quill,
And save me on the briuk from writing ill? Young.

2. To preserve finally from eternal death.
Whatsoever we read in scripture concerning the endless love and saving mercy which God sheweth towards his church, the only proper subject thereof is this church. Hooker.

There are some that will be saved, and some that will be damned. Shakspeare.

We are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe, to the saving of the soul. Hebrews.

His merits save them.
He who feareth God, and worketh righteousness, and perseveres in the faith and duties of our religion, shall certainly be saved. Rogers.

3. Not to spend or lose; to hinder from being spent or lost.
We may be confident whatever God does is intended for our good, and whatever we interpret otherwise we can get nothing by repining, nor save any thing by resisting. Temple.

With your cost you terminate the cause,
And save th' expense of long litigious laws,
Where suits are trayers'd, and so little won,
That he who conquers is but last undone. Dryden.

4. To reserve or lay by.
He shall not feel quietness, he shall not save of that of which he desired. Job.

They meanly pilfer, as they bravely fought,
Now save a nation, and now save a groat. Pope.

When Hopkins dies, an hundred lights attend
The wretch, who living sav'd a candle's end. Pope.

6. To spare; to excuse.
Will you not speak to save a lady's blush? Dryd.
Our author saves me the comparison with tragedy.
Dryden.

These sinews are not so much unstrung,
To fail me when my master should be serv'd;
And when they are, then will I steal to death,
Silent and unobserv'd, to save his tears. Dryden.

6. To salve; to reconcile.
How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances: how gird the sphere
With centrick and eecentrick. Milton.

7. To take or embrace opportunely, so as not to lose.
The same persons, who were chief confidants to Cromwell, foreseeing a restoration, seized the castles in Ireland, just saving the tide, and putting in a stock of merit sufficient. Swift.

To SAVE, sáve. v. n. To be cheap.
Brass ordnance saveth in the quantity of the material, and in the charge of mounting and carriage. Bacon.

SAVE, sáve. adv. [This word, adverbially used, is, like except, originally the imperative of the verb.] Except; not including. It is now little used.

But being all defeated, save a few,
Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she slew.
Spenser.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

He never put down a near servant, save only Stanley, the lord chamberlain. Bacon.

How have I then with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I made? Milton.

plied her fortune to pay John's clamorous debts.
Arbutnot.

Be saving of your candle. Swift.

2. Not turning to loss, though not gainful.
Silvio, finding his application unsuccessful, was resolved to make a saving bargain; and since he could not get the widow's estate, to recover what he had laid down of his own. Addison.

SA'VING, sá'ving. adv. [This is nothing more than a participle of the verb save adverbially used.] With exception in favour of.

All this world's glory seemeth vain,
And all their shows but shadows, saving she. Spens.

Such laws cannot be abrogated, saving only by whom they were made; because the intent of them being known unto none but the author, he alone can judge how long it is requisite they should ex-cure. Hooker.

Saving the reverence due to so great a man, I doubt not but they did all creep out of their holes.
Ray.

SA'VING, sá'ving. n. s. [from save.]
1. Escape of expense; somewhat preserved from being spent.

It is a great saving in all such lights, if they can be made as fair and right as others, and yet last longer. Bacon.

By reducing interest to four per cent, there was a considerable saving to the nation; but this year they give six. Addison.

2. Exception in favour.
Content not with those that are too strong for us, but still with a saving to honesty; for integrity must be supported against all violence. L'Estrange.

SA'VINGLY, sá'ving-lè. adv. [from saving.]
With parsimony.

SA'VINGNESS, sá'ving-nés. n. s. [from saving.]

Redeemer; he that has graciously saved mankind from eternal death.

So judg'd he man, both judge and Saviour sent
Milton.

However consonant to reason his precepts appeared, nothing could have tempted men to acknowledge him as their God and Saviour, but their being firmly persuaded of the miracles he wrought. Addison.

To SAU'NTER, sán'tür, or sáwn'tür.²¹⁴ v.
n. [aller à la sainte terre, from idle people who roved about the country, and asked charity under pretence of going à la sainte terre, to the holy land: or sans terre, as having no settled home.]

1. To wander about idly.

The comorant is still sauntering by the sea-side, to see if he can find any of his brass cast up. L'Estr.

Tell me, why sauntering thus from place to place I meet thee, Navolus, with clouded face? Dryden.

So the young 'squire, when first he comes

From country school to Will's or Tom's,

Without one notion of his own,

He saunters wildly up and down. Prior.

Here sauntering 'prentices o'er Otway weep. Gay.

Led by my hand, he saunter'd Europe round,

And gather'd ev'ry vice in ev'ry ground. Dunciad.

2. To loiter; to linger.

Though putting the mind upon an unusual stress that may discourage, ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it into a lazy sauntering about ordinary things. Locke.

If men were weaned from their sauntering humour, wherein they let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, they would acquire skill in hundreds of things. Locke.

The brainless stripling

Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek;

A sauntering tribe! such born to wide estates,

With yea and no in senates hold debates. Tickel.

SA'VORY, sà'vûr-é. n. s. [savorée, French;

satureia, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SA'VOUR, sà'vûr. n. s. [savour, French.]

2. Taste; power of affecting the palate.

The savour of death from all things. Milton.

A directer influence from the sun gives fruit a better savour and a greater worth. South.

To SA'VOUR, sà'vûr. v. n. [savourer, Fr.

from the noun.]

1. To have any particular smell or taste.

This ripping of ancestors is very pleasing, and *savour*eth of good conceit and some reading. Spens.

The duke's answers to his affrontments are very diligently and civilly couched; and though his heart was big, yet they all savour of an humble spirit. Wotton.

That savours only of rancour and pride. Milton.

If 'twere a secret that concern'd my life,

This boldness might become thee;

But such unnecessary rudeness savours

Of some design. Denham.

I have rejected every thing that savours of party. Addison.

To SA'VOUR, sà'vûr. v. a.

1. To like; to taste or smell with delight.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;

Filth savour but themselves. Shakspeare.

2. To exhibit taste of.

Thou savour'st not the things that be of God. Matthew.

SA'VOURILY, sà'vûr-é-lé. adv. [from savoury.]

1. With gust; with appetite.

The collation he fell to very savourily. L'Estr.

This muti is some English renegado, he talks so savourily of toaping. Dryden.

2. With a pleasing relish.

There's a dearth of wit in this dull town,

When silly plays so savourily go down. Dryden.

SA'VOURINESS, sà'vûr-é-ni-és. n. s. [from savoury.]

1. Taste pleasing and picquant.

2. Pleasing smell.

SA'VOURV, sà'vûr-é. adj. [savoureux, Fr.

from savour.]

1. Pleasing to the smell.

The pleasant savoury smell

So quicken'd appetite, that I

Could not but taste! Milton.

From the boughs a savoury odour blown,

Grateful to appetite! more pleas'd my sense

Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats

Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milt.

2. Picquant to the taste.

Savoury meat, such as my father loveth. Genesis.

The savoury pulp they chew. Milton.

SA'VOY, sà-vôé'. n. s. [brassica sabaudica,

Latin.] A sort of colewort.

SA'USAGE, sàu'sidje, or sàs'sidje. n. s.

[saucisse, French; salsum, Latin.] A roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal, and sometimes of beef, minced very small, with salt and spice; sometimes it is stuffed into the guts of fowls, and sometimes only rolled in flour.

SAW, sàw.²¹⁹ The preterit of see.

I never saw till now

Sight more detestable. Milton.

SAW, sàw. n. s. [sawe, Danish; raga, or rige, Saxon; scie, French.]

1. A dentated instrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.

The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or straight between the handle and end;

because the saw is designed to act only in its progress forwards, a man having in that more strength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back, he bears it lightly off the unsawn stuff, which enables him the longer to continue his several progressions of the saw. Moxon.

The roach is a leather mouth'd fish, and has saw- like teeth in his throat. Walton.

Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden.

If they cannot cut,

His saws are toothless, and his hatchets lead. Pope.

2. [raga, Sax. saeghe, Dutch.] A saying;

a maxim; a sentence; an axiom; a proverb.

Good king, that must approve the common saw:

Thou out of heav'n's benediction com'st

To the warm sun! Shakspeare.

From the table of my memory

I'll wipe away all saws of books. Shakspeare.

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ. Shaksp.

Strict age and sour severity,

With their grave saws in slumber lie. Milton.

To SAW, sàw. v. a. part. sawed and sawn.

[scier, French; from the noun.] To cut timber or other matter with a saw.

They were stoned, they were sawn asunder. Hebrews.

A carpenter after he hath sawn down a tree, and wrought it handsomely, sets it in a wall. Wis. om.

Master workmen, when they direct any of their underlings to saw a piece of stuff, have several phrases for the sawing of it: they seldom say, saw the piece of stuff, but, draw the saw through it;

give the piece of stuff a kerf. Moxon.

It is an incalcescency, from a swift motion, such as that of running, threshing, or sawing. Ray.

If I cut my finger, I shall as certainly feel pain as if my soul was co-extended with the limb, and had a piece of it sawn through. Collier.

SA'WDUST, sàw'dùst. n. s. [saw and dust.]

Dust made by the attrition of the saw.

If the membrane be fouled by the sawdust of the bone, wipe it off with a sponge. Wiseman.

Rotten sawdust, mixed with earth, enriches it very much. Mortimer.

SA'WFISH, sàw'fîsh. n. s. [saw and fish.]

A sort of fish with a kind of dentated horn.

SA'WPIT, sàw'pît. n. s. [saw and pit.]

Pit

over which timber is laid to be sawn by two men.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once

With some diffused song. Shakspeare.

They colour it by laying it in a sawpit that hath oak saw-dust therein. Mortimer.

SAW-WORT, sàw'wûrt. n. s. [serruola,

Latin.] A plant like the greater cen-taury, from which this differs in having smaller heads, and from the knapweed, in having the borders of the leaves cut into small sharp segments, resembling the teeth of a saw. Miller.

SAW-WREST, sàw'rêst. n. s. [saw and wrest.]

A sort of tool.

With the saw-wrest they set the teeth of the saw;

that is, they put one of the notches of the wrest between the first two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the notch towards the end of the saw; and that at once turns the first tooth somewhat towards you, and the second tooth from you. Moxon.

SA'WER, sàw'ûr. } n. s. [scieur, Fr.

SA'WYER, sàw'yûr.¹¹³ } from saw.] One whose trade is to saw timber into boards or beams.

The pit-saw is used by joiners, when what they have to do may be as soon done at home as send it to the sawyers. Moxon.

SA'XIFRAGE, sâk'sè-frâdje. n. s. [saxi- frage, French; saxifraga, Lat.] A plant.

Saxifrage, quasi saxum frangere, to break the stone, is applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term most commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtues to this effect. Quincy.

SA'XIFRAGE, Meadow, sâk'sè-frâdje-mêd'

dô. n. s. [silanum, Lat.] A plant.

SA'XIFRAGOUS, sâk-sîf-râ-gûs. adj. [saxum and frango, Latin.] Dissolvent of the stone.

Because goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the stone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and so it became to be ordered that the goats should be fed on saxifragous herbs, and such as are conceived of power to break the stone. Brown.

To SAY, sâ.²²⁰ v. a. pret. said. { reçgan,

Sax. seggen, Dutch.}

1. To speak; to utter in words; to tell.

Say it out, Diggon, whatever it hight. Spenser.

In this slumbry agitation what have you heard her say? Shakspeare.

Speak unto Solomon; for he will not say thee nay. 1 Kings.

Say nothing to any man, but go thy way. Mark.

2. To allege by way of argument.

After all can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of. Tillotson.

In vain shall we attempt to justify ourselves, as the rich young man in the gospel did, by appealing to the great duties of the law; unless we can say somewhat more, even than we have been liberal in our distributions to the poor. Atterbury.

3. To tell in any manner.
With flying speed, and seeming great pretence,
Came messenger with letters which his message said.
Fairy Queen
4. To repeat; to rehearse: as, to say a part; to say a lesson.
5. To pronounce without singing.
Then shall be said or sung as follows.
Common Prayer.

To SAY, sá. v. n.

1. To speak; to pronounce; to utter; to relate.

He said, moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee; and she said, say on. Kings

The council-table and star-chamber hold, as Thucydides said of the Athenians, for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

The lion here has taken his right measures, that is to say, he has made a true judgment. L'Estrange.

Of some propositions it may be difficult to say whether they affirm or deny; as when we say, Plato was no fool. Watts.

2. In poetry, say is often used before a question; tell.

Say first what cause

Mov'd our grand parents to fall off? Milton.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,

Reflecting on a life well spent Swift.

And who more blest, who chain'd his country; say,

Or he whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day? Pope.

SAY, sá. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A speech; what one has to say.

He no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning suap. L'Estrange.

2. [for assay.] Sample.

So good a say invites the eye,

A little downward to espy

The lively clusters of her breasts. Sidney.

Since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,

And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes,

By rule of knight-hood I disdain. Shakespeare.

3. Trial by a sample.

This gentleman having brought that earth to the publick say masters, and upon their being unable to bring it to fusion, or make it fly away, he had procured a little of it, and with a peculiar flux separated a third part of pure gold. Boyle.

4. [soie, French.] Silk. Obsolete.

5. A kind of woollen stuff.

SAY'ING, sá'ing. 410 n. s. [from say.] Expression; words; opinion sententiously delivered.

I thank thee, Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true. Shakspeare.
Moses fled at this saying, and was a stranger in Midian. Acts.

Many are the sayings of the wise,

Extolling patience as the truest fortitude. Milton.

Others try to divert the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, that if evils are long, they are but light. Tillotson.

We poetick folks, who must restrain

Our measur'd sayings in an equal chain,

Have troubles utterly unknown to those,

Who let their fancy loose in rambling prose. Prior.

The sacred function can never be hurt by their sayings, if not first reproached by our doings. Atterbury.

SCAB, skáb. n. s. [rcæb, Saxon; scabbia, Ital. schabbe, Dutch; scabies, Lat.]

1. An incrustation formed over a sore by dried matter.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourself scabs? Shakspeare.

That free from gouts thou may'st preserve thy care,

And clear from scabs produce'd by freezing air. Dryd.

2. The itch or mange of horses.

3. A paltry fellow, so named from the itch often incident to negligent poverty.

I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsom'st scab in Greece. Shakspeare.

Well said, Wart, thou art a good scab: there is a tester for thee.

One of the usurers, a head man of the city, took it in dudgeon to be ranked, cheek by jowl, with a scab of a currier. L'Estrange.

This vap'ring scab must needs devise
To ape the thunder of the skies. Swift.

SCA'BBARD, skáb'búrd. 418 n. s. [schaf, German. Junius.] The sheath of a sword.

Enter fortune's gate,

Nor in thy scabbard sheath that famous blade,

'Till settled he thy kingdom and estate. Fairfax.

What eyes! how keen their glances! you do well to keep 'em veil'd; they are too sharp to be trusted out o' th' scabbard. Dryden.

SCA'BBED, skáb'béd, or skáb'd. 366 adj. [from scab.]

1. Covered or diseased with scabs.

The briar fruit makes those that eat them scabbed. Bacon.

2. Paltry; sorry; vile; worthless.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryden.

SCA'BBEDNESS, skáb'béd-nés. n. s. [from scabbed.] The state of being scabby.

SCA'BBINESS, skáb'bè-nés. n. s. [from scabby.] The quality of being scabby.

SCA'BBY, skáb'bé. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.

Her writhled skin, as rough as maple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loath'd all woman-kind. Fairy Queen

A scabby letter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

If the grazier should bring me one wether fat and well fleeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me security to restore my money for those that were lean, shorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customer. Swift.

SCA'BIOUS, ská'bé-ús. adj. [scabiosus, Lat.] Itchy; leprous.

In the spring scabious eruptions upon the skin were epidemical, from the acidity of the blood. Arbuthnot.

SCA'BIOUS, ská'bé-ús. n. s. [scabieuse, Fr. scabiosa, Lat.] A plant.

SCA'BROUS, ská'brús. 314 adj. [scabreux, French; scaber, Latin.]

1. Rough; rugged; pointed on the surface.

Urine, black and bloody, is occasioned by something sharp or scabrous, wounding the small blood-vessels; if the stone is smooth and well bedded, this may not happen. Arbuthnot.

2. Harsh; unmusical.

Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these: he seeks them, as some do Chaucerisms, which were better expunged. Ben Jonson.

SCA'BROUSNESS, ská'brús-nés. n. s. [from scabrous.] Roughness; ruggedness.

SCA'WORR, skáb'wúrt. n. s. [helenium.] A plant. Ainsworth.

SCAD, skád. n. s. A kind of fish. Probably the same with shad.

SCAFFOLD, skáf'fúld. 166 n. s. [eschaffout, French; schavot, Dutch, from scharwen, to show.]

1. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators.

Pardon

The flat unraised sprit, that bath dar'd
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakspeare.

The throng

On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand. Milton.

2. The gallery raised for execution of great malefactors.

Fortune smiling at her fortune therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney.

3. Frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.

These outward beauties are but the props and scaffolds

On which we build our love, which, now made perfect,

Stands without those supports. Denham.

Sylla added three hundred commons to the senate, then abolished the office of tribune, as being only a scaffold to tyranny, whereof he had no further use. Swift.

To SCA'FFOLD, skáf'fúld. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with frames of timber.

SCA'FFOLDAGE, skáf'fúl-didje. n. s. [from scaffold.] Gallery; hollow floor.

A strutting player doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound,
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage. Shakspeare.

SCA'FFOLDING, skáf'fúl-ding. 440 n. s. [from scaffold.]

1. Temporary frames or stages.

What are riches, empire, power,
But steps by which we climb to rise, and reach
Our wish: and, that obtain'd, down with the scaffold. Congreve.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure. Pope.

2. Building slightly erected.

Send forth your lah'ring thought;
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke:
Yet this solution but once more affords
New change of terms and scaffolding of words. Prior.

SCALA'DE, ská-láde. } n. s. [French; scala, Latin.]

SCALA'DO, ská-lá'dò. } lada, Spanish; from scala, Latin, a ladder.] A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.

What can he more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalado, battered and assaulted another, and overthrown great forces in the field? Bacon.

Thou raisedest thy voice to record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalade of needy heroes, the terror of your peaceful citizens. Arbuthnot.

SCA'LARY, skál'á-ré. adj. [from scala, Latin.] Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.

He made at nearer distances certain elevated places and scalary ascents, that they might better ascend or mount their horses. Brown.

To SCALD, skáld. 24 v. a. [scaldare, Ital. calidus, Latin.]

1. To burn with hot liquor.

I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see you. Shakspeare.

O majesty!

When thou do'st pinch thy bearer, thou do'st sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. Shakspeare.

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakspeare.
Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,
Involving swiftly in one ruin all. Cowley.
That I grieve, 'tis true;
But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair;
And if a manly drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the greenwood,
That, spitt'ring in the flame, works outward into tears. Dryden.
It depends not on his will to persuade himself that what actually scalds him, feels cold. Locke.
Warm cataplasms discuss; but scalding hot may confirm the tumour: heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body: for too great heat will produce concretions. Arbutnot.
The best thing we can do with Wood is to scald
him;
For which operation there's nothing more proper
Than the liquor he deals in, his own melted copper. Swift.

2. A provincial phrase in husbandry.
In Oxfordshire the sour land they fallow when the sun is pretty high, which they call a scalding fallow. Mortimer.

SCALD, skåld. n. s. [from the verb.] Scurf on the head.
Her head, altogether bald,
Was overgrown with scruff and filthy scald. Spenser.

SCALD, skåld. adj. Paltry; sorry; scurvy.
Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhymers Ballad us out o' tune. Shakspeare.

SCA'LDHEAD, skåld-hêd'. n. s. [skalladur, bald, Islandick. Hicks.] A loathsome disease; a kind of local leprosy in which the head is covered with a continuous scab.
The serum is corrupted by the infection of the touch of a salt humour, to which the scab, pox, and scaldhead are referable. Floyer.

SCALE, skåle. n. s. [rcale, Sax. schael,
Dutch; skal, Islandick.]

1. A balance; a vessel suspended by a beam against another vessel; the dish of a balance.
If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound, if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest. Shakspeare.
Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales. Shakspeare.
Here's an equivocator, that could swear, in both the scales, against either scale. Shakspeare.
Long time in even scale
The battle hung. Milton.
The world's scales are even; what the main
In one place gets, another quits again. Cleaveland.
The scales are turn'd, her kindness weighs no
more
Now than my vows. Waller.
In full assemblies let the crowd prevail;
I weigh no merit by the common scale,
The conscience is the test. Dryden.
If we consider the dignity of an intelligent being,
and put that in the scales against brute inanimate matter, we may affirm, without overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one virtuous and religious man is of greater worth and excellency than the sun and his planets. Bentley.

2. The sign Libra in the zodiac.
Juno pours out the urn, and Vulcan claims
The scales, as the just product of his flames. Creach.

3. [escaille, French; squama, Lat.] Small shell or crust, of which many lying one over another make the coats of fishes.
He puts him on a coat of mail,
Which was made of a fish's scale. Dryden.

Standing aloof, with lead they bruise the scales,
And tear the flesh of the incensed whales. Waller.

4. Any thing exfoliated or desquamated;
a thin lamina.
Take jet and the scales of iron, and with a wet feather, when the smith hath taken an heat, take up the scales that fly from the iron, and those scales you shall grind upon your painter's stone. Peacham.
When a scale of bone is taken out of a wound, burning retards the separation. Sharp.

5. [scala, a ladder, Latin.] Ladder; means of ascent.
Love refines
The thoughts, and heart enlarges; hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious; is the scale
By which to heav'nly love thou may'st ascend. Milton.
On the bendings of these mountains the marks of several ancient scales of stairs may be seen, by which they used to ascend them. Addison.

6. The act of storming by ladders.
Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale, and mine Assaulting. Milton.

7. Regular gradation; a regular series rising like a ladder.
Well hast thou the scale of nature set,
From centre to circumference; whereon
In contemplation of created things,
By steps we may ascend to God. Milton.
The scale of the creatures is a matter of high speculation. Grew.
The higher nature still advances, and preserves his superiority in the scale of being. Addison.
All the integral parts of nature have a beautiful analogy to one another, and to their mighty original whose images are more or less expressive, according to their several gradations in the scale of beings. Cheyne.
We believe an invisible world, and a scale of spiritual beings, all nobler than ourselves. Bentley.
Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends. Pop.

8. A figure subdivided by lines like the steps of a ladder, which is used to measure proportions between pictures and the thing represented.
The map of London was set out in the year 1658, by Mr. Newcourt, drawn by a scale of yards. Graunt.

9. The series of harmonick or musical proportions.
The bent of his thoughts and reasonings run up and down this scale, that no people can be happy but under good governments. Temple.

10. Any thing marked at equal distances.
They take the flow o' th' Nile
By certain scale i' th' pyramid: they know
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth
Or foizon follow. Shakspeare.

To SCALE, skåle v. a. [scalare, Italian.]

1. [from scala, a ladder.] To climb as by ladders.
Often have I scal'd the craggy oak,
All to dislodge the raven of her nest;
How have I wearied with many a stroke,
The stately walnut-tree, the while the rest
Under the tree fell all for nuts at strife! Spenser.
They assailed the breach, and others with their scaling ladders scaled the walls. Knolles.
The way seems difficult and steep, to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe. Milton.
Heav'n with these engines had been scal'd,
When mountains heap'd on mountains fail'd. Waller.
When the bold Typhæus scal'd the sky,
And forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods all suffer'd. Dryden.

2. [from scale, a balance.] To measure or compare; to weigh.
You have found,

Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy. Shakspeare.

3. [from scale of a fish.] To strip of scales;
to take off in a thin lamina.
Raphael was sent to scale away the whiteness of Tobit's eyes. Tobit.

4. To pare off a surface.
If all the mountains were scaled, and the earth made even, the waters would not overflow its smooth surface. Burnet.

To SCALE, skåle. v. n. To peel off in thin particles.
Those that cast heir shell are the lobster and crab;
the old skins are found, but the old shells never;
so as it is like they scale off, and crumble away by degrees. Bacon.

SCA'LED skål'd. adj. [from scale.]
Squamous; having scales like fishes.
Half my Egypt was submerged, and made
A cistern for scal'd snakes. Shakspeare.

SCALE'NE, skå-iène'. n. s. [Fr. scale-num, Latin.] In geometry, a triangle that has its three sides unequal to each other. Bailey.

SCA'LINESS, skål'è-nês. n. s. [from scaly.]
The state of being scaly.

SCALL, skåwl. n. s. [skalladur, bald, Islandick. See SCALDHEAD.] Leprosy; morbid baldness.
Upon thy bald hede maist thou have the scall. Chaucer.
It is a dry scall, a leprosy upon the head. Levit.

Italian; ascalonia, Latin.] A kind of onion.

SCA'LLOP, skål'lûp. n. s. [escallop, Fr.]
A fish with a hollow pectinated shell.
So th' emperor Caligula,
That triumph'd o'er the British sea,
Engag'd his legions in fierce busles
With periwinkles, prawns, and muscles;
And led his troops with furious gallops,
To charge whole regiments of scallops. Hudibras.
The sand is in Sicily glistering, which may be occasioned from freestone mingled with white scallop shells. Mortimer.

To SCA'LLOP, skål'lûp. v. a. To mark on the edge with segments of circles.

SCALP, skålp. n. s. [schelpe, Dut. a shell;
scalpo, Italian.]

1. The scull; the cranium; the bone that encloses the brain.
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made. Fairy Queen.
If the fracture be not complicated with a wound of the scalp, or the wound is too small to admit of the operation, the fracture must be laid bare by taking away a large piece of the scalp. Sharp.

2. The integuments of the head.
White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty. Shakspeare.
The hairy scalps
Are whirl'd aloof, while numerous trunks bestrow
Th' ensanguin'd field. Philips.

To SCALP, skålp. v. a. [from the noun.]
To deprive the scull of its integuments.
We seldom inquire for a fracture of the skull by scalping, but that the scalp itself is contused. Sharp.

SCA'LPEL, skål'pêl. n. s. [French; scal-pellum, Latin.] An instrument used to scrape a bone by churgeons.

SCA'LY, skål'è. adj. [from scale.] Cover-

And, as you're scamp'ring, stop you in your coach. King.

To SCAN, skân. v. a. [scandre, Fr. scando,
Latin.]

1. To examine a verse by counting the feet.

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
First taught our English musick how to span Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, committing short and long. Milton.

They scan their verses upon their fingers. Walsh.

2. To examine nicely.
So he goes to heav'n,
And so am I reveng'd; that would be scann'd. Shakespeare.

The rest the great architect
Did wisely to conceal; and not divulge
His secrets to be scann'd by them, who ought Rather admire. Milton.

Every man has guilts, which he desires should not be rigorously scanned; and therefore, by the rule of charity and justice, ought not to do that which he would not suffer. Government of the Tongue.

At the final reckoning, when all men's actions shall be scanned and judged, the great king shall pass his sentence, according to the good men have done, or neglected to do. Calamy.

And scar'd the moon with splinters. Shaksp.
The noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

Shakespeare.
Scarecrows are set up to keep birds from corn and fruit; and some report that the head of a wolf, whole, dried, and hanged up in a dovehouse, will scare away vermin. Bacon.

The wing of the Irish was so grievously either galled or scared therewith, that, being strangers, and in a manner neutrals, they had neither good heart to go forward, nor good liking to stand still, nor good assurance to run away. Haycard.

One great reason why men's good purposes so often fail, is, that when they are devout, or scared, they then in the general resolve to live religiously.
Calamy.

Let wanton wives by death be scar'd;
But, to my comfort, I'm prepar'd. Prior.

pan*, Saxon; schatteren, Dutch.]

1. To throw loosely about; to sprinkle.
Teach the glad hours to scatter, as they fly,
Soft quiet, gentle love, and endless joy. Prior.

Corruption, still
Voracious, swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd o'er the savage year. Thomson.

2. To dissipate; to disperse.
A king, that sitteth in the throne of judgment,
scattereth away all evil with his eyes. Proverbs.
Samuel came not to Gilgal, and the people were scattered from Saul. 1 Samuel.

Adam by this from the cold sudden damp
Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd.
Milton.

3. To spread thinly.
Why should my muse enlarge on Libyan swains,
Their scatter'd cottages and ample plains? Dryd.

4. To besprinkle with something loosely spread.
Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses and arms th' ensanguin'd field.
Milton.

To SCATTER, skât'tûr. v. n. To be dissipated; to be dispersed.

Sound diffuseth itself in rounds; but if that which would scatter in open air be made to go into a cannal, it gives greater force to the sound. Bacon.

The sun
Shakes from his noon-day throne the scattering clouds. Thomson.

SCATTERINGLY, skât'tûr-îng-lê. adv.
[from scattering.] Loosely; dispersedly.

The Spaniards have here and there scatteringly, upon the sea-coasts, set up some towns. Abbot.
Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to desecate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

SCATTERLING, skát-túr-ling. n. s. [from scatter.] A vagabond; one that has no home or settled habitation. An elegant word, but disused.

Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any ordinary officer, be gotten, when challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

Gathering unto him all the scatterlings and outlaws out of all the woods and mountains, in which they long had lurked, he marched forth into the English pale. Spenser.

SCATUR'RIENT, ská-tú-ré-ént. adj. [scaturiens, Latin.] Springing as a fountain. Dict.

SCATUR'GINOUS, ská-tú-ríd-jé-nús. adj. [from scaturigo, Lat.] Full of springs or fountains. Dict.

SCAV'ENGER, skáv'in-jár.⁹⁸ n. s. [from scapan, to shave, perhaps to sweep, Saxon.] A petty magistrate, whose province is to keep the streets clean: more commonly the labourer employed in removing filth.

Since it is made a labour of the mind, as to inform men's judgments, and move their affections, to resolve difficult places of scripture, to decide and clear off controversies, I cannot see how to be a butcher, scavenger, or any other such trade does at all qualify men for this work. South.

Fasting's nature's scavenger. Baynard.
Dick the scavenger, with equal grace,
Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face. Swift.

SC'E'LERAT, sél'ér-át. n. s. [Fr. sceleratus, Lat.] A villain; a wicked wretch. A word introduced unnecessarily from the French by a Scottish author.

Scelerats can by no arts stifle the cries of a wounded conscience. Cheyne.

SC'E'NARY, scén'ér-é. n. s. [from scene.]

1. The appearances of place or things.
He must gain a relish of the works of nature, and be conversant in the various scenary of a country life. Addison.
2. The representation of the place in which an action is performed.

The progress of the sound, and the scenary of the bordering regions, are imitated from Æn. VII. on the sounding the horn of Alecto. Pope.

3. The disposition and consecution of the scenes of a play.

To make a more perfect model of a picture, is, in the language of poets, to draw up the scenary of a play. Dryden.

SCENE, scèn. n. s. [scæna, Latin; σκηνη; scene, French.]

1. The stage; the theatre of dramatick poetry.
2. The general appearance of any action; the whole contexture of objects; a display; a series; a regular disposition.
Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A sylvan scene; and as the ranks ascend
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.
Now prepare thee for another scene. Milton.
A mute scene of sorrow, mixt with fear;
Still on the tab'c lay the unfinish'd cheer. Dryden.
A larger scene of action is display'd,
And, rising hence, a greater work is weigh'd. Dryden.

Ev'ry sev'ral place must be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me. Dryden.
When rising spring adorns the mead,
A charming scene of nature is display'd. Dryden.
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untry'd beings,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass!
Addison.

About eight miles distance from Naples lies a very noble scene of antiquities: what they call Virgil's tomb is the first. Addison.

Say, shepherd, say, are these reflections true?
Or was it but the woman's fear that drew
This cruel scene, unjust to love and you? Prior.

3. Part of a play.

It shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed, as if
The scene you play were mine. Shakspeare.
Our author would excuse these youthful scenes
Begotten at his entrance. Granville.

4. So much of an act of a play as passes between the same persons in the same place.

If his characters were good,
The scenes entire, and freed from noise and blood,
The action great, yet circumscrib'd by time,
The words not forc'd, but sliding into rhyme,
He thought, in hitting these, his business done. Dryden.

5. The place represented by the stage.

The king is set from London, and the scene
Is now transported to Southampton. Shakspeare.

6. The hanging of the theatre adapted to the play.

The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

SC'E'NICK, sèn'nik.⁶⁴⁴ adj. [scenique, Fr. from scene.] Dramatick; theatrical.

With scenick virtue charm the rising age. Anonymus.

SCENOGR'APHICALLY, sèn-ò-gráf'fè-kál-é. adv. [from scenographical.] In perspective.

If the workman be skilled in perspective, more than one face may be represented in our diagram scenographically. Mortimer.

SCENOGR'APHY, sè-nòg-grá-fè.⁶¹⁸ n. s. [σκηνη and γραφω; scenographie, Fr.]

The art of perspective.

SCENT, sént. n. s. [sentir, to smell, Fr.]

1. The power of smelling; the smell.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, crosses and confounds her former track, and uses all possible methods to divert the scent. Watts.

2. The object of smell; odour good or bad.

Bellman cried upon it at the meekest loss,
And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent. Shakspeare.

The plague, they report, hath a scent of the smell of a mellow apple. Bacon.

Good scents do purify the brain,
Awake the fancy, and the wits refine Partake
The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs
Milton.

Exulting, 'till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.

Cheerful health,
His duteous handmaid, through the air improv'd,
With lavish hand diffuses scents ambrosial. Prior.

3. Chase followed by the smell.

He gained the observations of innumerable ages,
and travelled upon the same scent into Æthiopia
Temple.

To SCENT, sént. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smell; to perceive by the nose.
So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air,
Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton.
2. To perfume; or to imbue with odour good or bad.

Balm from a silver box distill'd around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.

Actæon spies
His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries;
A gen'rous pack, or to maintain the chace,
Or snuff the vapour from the scented grass. Addison.

SC'E'NTLESS, sèn'ti-és. adj. [from scent.] Inodorous; having no smell.

SC'E'PTICK, sèp'tik. n. s. See SKEPTICK.

SC'E'PTRE, sèp'túr.⁴¹⁸ n. s. [scptitrum, Lat. scptre, Fr.] The ensign of royalty born in the hand.

Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist. Shakspeare.

How, best of kings, do'st thou a sceptre bear!
How, best of poets, do'st thou laurel wear!
But two things rare the fates had in their store,
And gave thee both, to shew they could no more. Ben Jonson.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
In that right hand which held the crook before. Cowley.

The parliament presented those acts which were prepared by them to the royal sceptre, in which were some laws restraining the extravagant power of the nobility. Clarendon.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns and sceptres are conferred gratis. Decay of Piety.

SC'E'PTRED, sèp'túr'd.³⁶⁹ adj. [from sceptre.] Bearing a sceptre.

The sceptred heralds call
To council, in the city-gates. Milton.

To Britain's queen the scepter'd suppliant bends,
To her his crowns and infant race commends. Tickel.

SCHE'DULE, sèd'jùle, or skéd'jùle.³⁶³ n. s. [schedula, Lat. schedule, Fr.]

1. A small scroll.

The first published schedules being brought to a grave knight, he read over an unsavory sentence or two, and delivered back the libel. Hocker.

2. A writing additional or appendant.

All ill, which all
Prophets or poets spake, and all which shall
B' annex'd in schedules unto this by me,
Fall on that man! Donne.

3. A little inventory.

I will give out schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil label'd to my will. Shakspeare.

SCH'E'MATISM, ské'má-tizm. n. s. [σχηματισμος.]

1. Combination of the aspects of heavenly bodies.

2. Particular form or disposition of a thing.

Every particle of matter, whatever form or schematism it puts on, must in all conditions be equally extended, and therefore take up the same room. Creech.

SCH'E'MATIST, ské'má-tist. n. s. [from scheme.] A projector; one given to forming schemes.

SCHEME, skème.⁸³⁸ n. s. [σχημα.]

1. A plan; a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose; a system.

Were our senses made much quicker, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us, and be inconsistent with our well-being. Locke.

We shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the divine conduct, without forming such a scheme of things as shall at once take in time and eternity. Atterbury.

2. A project; a contrivance; a design.

He forms the well-concerted scheme of mischief; 'Tis fix'd, 'tis done, and both are doom'd to death. Rowe.

The haughty monarch was laying schemes for suppressing the ancient liberties, and removing the ancient boundaries of kingdoms. Atterbury.

The stoical scheme of supplying our wants by lopping off our desires, is like cutting off our feet when we want shoes. Swift.

3. A representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies; any lineal or mathematical diagram.

It hath embroiled astrology in the erection of schemes, and the judgment of death and diseases. Brown.

It is a scheme and face of heav'n, As th' aspects are disposed this even. Hudibras.

SCHÉMER, ské'mér.⁹⁸ n. s. [from scheme.] A projector; a contriver.

SCHÉSIS, ské'sis. n. s. [σχέσις.] A habitude; state of any thing with respect to other things.

If that mind which has existing in itself from all eternity all the simple essences of things, and consequently all their possible scheses or habitudes, should ever change, there would arise a new schesis in the mind, which is contrary to the supposition. Norris.

SCHISM, sizm. n. s. [σχίσμα; schisme, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.

Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity. King Charles.

Oppose schisms by unity, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Sprat.

When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which are the schismaticks: in the sense of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.

SCHISMATICAL, siz-mát-té-kál. adj. [schismatique, Fr. from schismatic.] Implying schism; practising schism.

By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatic proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.

Here bare anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the obstinate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves sbrav'dly hurt by being cut off from that body which they abuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South.

SCHISMATICALLY, siz-mát-té-kál-é. adv. [from schismatical.] In a schismatical manner.

SCHISMATICK, siz-má-tik. n. s. [from schism.] One who separates from the true church.

No known heretick nor schismatick should be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

Thus you behold the schismaticks bravado's: Wild speaks in squibs, and Calamy in granado's. Butler.

The schismaticks united in a solemn league and covenant to alter the whole system of spiritual government. Swift.

To SCHISMATIZE, siz'má-tize. v. a. [from schism.] To commit the crime of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.

SCHOLAR, skól'ár.⁸⁸ n. s. [scholaris, Lat. écolier, Fr.]

1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.

Many times that which deserveth approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the antients. Hooker.

The scholars of the Stagyrite, Who for the old opinion fight, Would make their modern friends confess The difference but from more to less. Prior.

2. A man of letters.

This same scholar's fate, res augusta domi, hinders the promoting of learning. Wilkins.

To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed for. Locke.

3. A pedant; a man of books.

To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar: they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.

4. One who has a lettered education

My cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shaksp.

SCHOLARSHIP, skól'ár-ship. n. s. [from scholar.]

1. Learning; literature; knowledge.

It pined my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.

2. Literary education.

This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.

3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar.

SCHOLASTICAL, skó-lás-té-kál adj. [scholasticus, Lat.] Belonging to a scholar or school.

SCHOLASTICALLY, skó-lás-té-kál-é. adv. [from scholastic.] According to the nicetas or method of the schools.

No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice, but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of it. South.

SCHOLASTICK, skó-lás-tik. adj. [from schola, Lat. scholastique, Fr.]

1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.

I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning. Digby.

Scholastick education, like a trade, does so fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Burnet.

2. Befitting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle.

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known them to grant, of scholastick courtesy unto strangers, never hath nor ever will be denied you. Hooker.

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastick speculations, were like the Olympick gamsters, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastick meety. Stillingfleet.

SCHOLIAST, skól'é-ást.⁸⁸ n. s. [scholiast, Fr. scholiastes, Latin.] A writer of explanatory notes.

The title of this satyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholiasts 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobæus cook'd before, Or chew'd by blind old scholiasts o'er and o'er. Pope.

SCHO'LION, skó'lé-ôn. } n. s. [Latin.]
SCHO'LIUM, skó'lé-úm. } A note; an explanatory observation.

Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholion, for the exposition of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.

Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHO'LY, skó'lé. n. s. [scholie, Fr. scholium, Lat.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own prescript form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commended in the world, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.

To SCHO'LY, skó'lé. v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.

SCHOOL, skóól.⁸⁸ n. s. [schola, Latin; école, Fr.]

1. A house of discipline and instruction.

Their age the same, their inclinations too, And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.

2. A place of literary education; an university.

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools Digby.

Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilities, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction.

The calf breed to the rural trade, Set him betimes to school, and let him be Instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.

No craz'd brain could ever yet propound, Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought; But some among these masters have been found, Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Taylor.

5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers; so called, because this mode of treating religion arose from the use of academical disputations.

The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets. Sanderson.

A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before. Locke.

To SCHOOL, skóól. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to train.

Una her besought to be so good As in her virtuous rules to school her knight, Fairy Queen.

He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned. Shakspere.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.

You shall go with me;
I have some private schooling for you both. Shaksp.
Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious. Shaksp.

School your child,
And ask why God's anointed he revild. Dryden.
If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer:
I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him. Atterbury.

SCHO'OLBOY, skôôl'hôé. n. s. [school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.

Schoolboys tears take up
The glasses of my sight. Shaksp.
He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures,

As 'prentices or schoolboys, which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.
Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
How Semele of mortal race
By thunder died. Swift.

SCHO'OLDAY, skôôl'dâ. n. s. [school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.

Is all forgot?
All schooldays friendship, childhood, innocence?
Shaksp.

SCHO'OLFELLOW, skôôl'fél-lô. n. s. [school and follow.] One bred at the same school.

Thy flatt'ring method on the youth pursue;
Join'd with his schoolfellows by two and two;
Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke. Dryd.
The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.

SCHO'OLHOUSE, skôôl'hôuse. n. s. [school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.

Fair Una gan Fidelia fair request,
To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd.
Spenser.

SCHO'OLMAN, skôôl'mân. n. s. [school
and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtil-ties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute. Bacon.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.

2. A writer of scholastick divinity or philosophy.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.
To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
My sickness to physicians. Donne.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was drest up by the schoolmen. Baker.
Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to fight,
More studious to divide than to unite. Pope.

SCHO'OLMASTER, skôôl'mâs-tûr. n. s.
[school and master.] One who presides and teaches in a school.

I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. Shaksp.
Adrian VI. was some time schoolmaster to Charles V. Knolles.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius. Bacon.

A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South.

SCHO'OLMISTRESS, skôôl'mis-três. n. s.
[school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have from nature, that exact schoolmistress. Dryden.

My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
Maintains her lazy husband by our work. Gay.

SCHREIGHT, skrét. n. s. [turdus viscivo- rus.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SCI'AGRAPHY, ski'â-grâ-fê. n. s. [sciagra- phie, Fr. sciagraphie.]

1. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to show the inside thereof. Bailey.

2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars. Bailey.

SCI'ATHERICAL, ski-â-thêr'è-kâl. } adj.
SCI'ATHERICK, ski-â-thêr'ik. } sciate- rique, Fr. sciathrique. } Belonging to a sundial. Dict.

There were also, from great antiquity, sciathe- rical or sun dials by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours; an invention ascribed unto Anaxamines by Pliny. Brown.

SCIA'TICA, si-ât'tè-kâ.⁶⁰⁰ } n. s. [sci- sciatick, si-ât'tik.⁶⁰⁰ } atique, Fr.
ischiadica passio, Lat.] The hip gout.

Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?
Shakspere.

Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners. Shaksp.

The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout.

Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone,
Will any mortal let himself alone? Pope.

SCIA'TICAL, si-ât'tè-kâl. adj. [from sciat- ica.] Afflicting the hip.

In obstinate sciatical pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual. Arbuthnot.

SCIENCE, si'ênc. n. s. [science, Fr.
scientia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge.

If we conceive God's sight or science, before the creation, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his prescience or foresight of any action of mine, or rather his science or sight from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it. Hannwald.

The indisputable mathematicks, the only science heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stagirite. Glanv.

2. Certainty grounded on demonstration.
So you arrive at truth, though not at science.
Berkeley.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.

Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself within the bounds of reason. Dryden.

4. Any art or species of knowledge.

No science doth make known the first principles whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident. Hooker.

Whatsoever we may learn by them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which mere discourse of wit and reason findeth out.
Hooker.

I present you with a man
Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,
To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shaksp.

5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, logick, arithmetick, musick, geometry, astronomy.

Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven.
Pope.

SCIE'NTIAL, si-ên'shâl. adj. [from science.]
Producing science.

From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
That dwelt within; whose presence had infus'd
Into the plant sciential sap deriv'd
From nectar, drink of gods. Milton.

SCIENTI'FICAL, si-ên-tif'è-kâl. } adj. [sci- SCIENTI'FICK, si-ên-tif'ik. } entifi- que, Fr. scientia and facio, Latin.] Producing demonstrative knowledge; producing certainty.

Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scien- tifical progressions, and such as beget a sure or rational belief. Brown.

Nowhere are there more quick, inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of sci- entifical knowledge. Howel.

No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against. South.

The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, sci- entifical, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature. Locke.

SCIENTI'FICALLY, si-ên-tif'è-kâl-è. adv.
[from scientific.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.

sparks.

SCINTILLA'TION, sîn-til-lâ'shûn. n. s. [scin- tillatio, Lat. from scintillat.] The act of sparkling; sparks emitted.

These scintillations are not the accession of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided. Brown.

He saith the planets' scintillation is not seen, because of their propinquity. Glanville.

SCIOLIST, si'ô-list. n. s. [sciolus, Latin.]
One who knows many things superficially.

'Twas this vain idolizing of authors which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations:
these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more generous discerners, but the pedantry of the affected sciolists. Glanville.

These passages were enough to humble the presumption of our modern sciolists, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance. Temple.

SCIOLOUS, si'ô-lûs. adj. [sciolus, Latin.]
Superficially or imperfectly knowing.
Not used.

I could wish these sciolous zealotists had more judgment joined with their zeal. Howel.

SCI'OMACHY, si-ôm'mâ-kê. n. s. [schama- chie, French; σκια and μαχη.] Battle with a shadow. This should be written sciamachy.

or piece of wood under it before. Bailey.

To SCOFF, skóf. v. n. [schoppen, Dut.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contumelious language: with at.

Of two noblemen of the west of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell, truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophanely to scoff at religion. Tillotson.

Such is love,
And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
And scoffs at the vain wisdom of the wise. Rowe.

SCOFF, skóf.¹⁷⁰ n. s. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contumelious language.

Our answer therefore to their reasons is, no; to their scoffs, nothing. Hooker.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts, In open market-place produc'd they me. Shakspeare.

How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives? South.

Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all in comparison of their favourite science. Watts.

SOO'FFER, skóf'fúr.⁵⁵ n. s. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contumelious reproacher.

Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:
Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer;
Foul is the most foul, being found to be a sooffer. Shakspeare.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane sooffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies. Government of the Tongue.

Consider what the apostle tells these sooffers they were ignorant of; not that there was a deluge, but he tells them that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so constituted. Burnet.

SCOFFINGLY, skóffing-lé. adv. [from scoffing] In contempt; in ridicule.

Aristotle applied this hemistick scoffingly to the sycophants at Athens. Broome.

To SCOLD, skòld. v. n. [scholden, Dut.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.

Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever I'm forc'd to scold. Shakspeare.

The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
As th' other is for beauteous modesty. Shakspeare.

They attacked me, some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting, and others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

For gods, we are by Homer told,
Can in celestial language scold. Swift.

Scolding and cursing are her common conversation. Swift.

Melted Alpine snows
The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores
Of water scoop'd among the hollow rocks. Thomson.

3. To empty by lading.

If some penurious source by chance appear'd
Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,

And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him?
Addison.

4. To carry off, so as to leave the place hollow.
A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scooped out of that hollow space.
Spectator.
Her fore-feet are broad, that she may scoop away much earth at a time.
Addison.
To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dext'rously applied,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoopt out the big round jelly from its orb.
Addison.

5. To cut into hollowness or depth.
Whatever part of the arbour they scoop in, it has an influence on all the rest; for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level.
Addison.
Those caruncles the Indians will scoop, so as to hold above a pint.
Arbuthnot.
It much conduces how to scare
The little race of birds, that hop
From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit,
Insatiate, undisturb'd.
Philips.
The genius of the place
Or helps th' ambitious hill the heav'n to scale,
Or scoops in circling theatres the vale.
Pope.

SCOOPER, skôp'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from scoop.]
One who scoops.

SCOPE, skôpe. n. s. [scopus, Latin.]

1. Aim; intention; drift.
Your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws,
As to your soul seems good.
Shakspeare.
His coming hither hath no farther scope
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees.
Shakspeare.
Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rehels.
Addison.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.
The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as, depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world.
Hooker.
Now was time
To aim their counsels to the fairest scope.
Hub. Ta.
We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth.
Raleigh.
He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim.
Milton.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.
An heroick poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination.
Dryden.
These theorems being admitted into opticks, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction.
Newton.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it resteth that they search out some stronger reason.
Hooker.
Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.
Shakspeare.

5. Liberty beyond just limits; license.
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope

'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do.
Shakspeare.
Being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working.
Shakspeare.

6. Act of riot; sally.
As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope, by the immoderate use,
Turns to restraint.
Shakspeare.

7. Extended quantity.
The scopes of land granted to the first adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for subjects.
Davies.

Instead of five you scor'd me ten.
Swift.

2. To impute; to charge.
Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score 'em on the stage;
Unless each vice in short-hand they indite,
Ev'n as notch prentices whole sermons write.
Dryden.

3. To mark by a line.
Hast thou appointed where the moon should rise,
And with her purple light adorn the skies?
Scor'd out the hounded sun's obliquer ways,
That he on all might spread his equal rays?
Sandys.

SCO'RIA, skô'rè-â. n. s. [Lat.] Dross; recrement.
The scoria, or vitrified part, which most metals, when heated or melted, do continually protrude to the surface, and which, by covering the metals in form of a thin glassy skin, causes these colours, is much denser than water.

 Never came reformation in a flood With such a heady current, scouring faults; Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness So soon did lose his seat, and all at once, As in this king. Shakspeare.
 I will wear a garment all of blood, And stain my favour in a bloody mask, Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it. Shakspeare.
 Then in the clemency of upward air We scour our spots, and the dire thunder's scar. Dryden.
- [scorrere, Italian.] To range about, in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.
 The kings of Laecedemon having sent out some gallies, under the charge of one of their nephews, to scour the sea of the pirates, they met us. Sidney.

 Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.
 If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,
 And dost in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
 Please not thyself the flatt'ring crowd to hear. Dryden.

6. To pass swiftly over.

Sometimes
 He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left. Milton.

Not half the number in their seats are found,
 But men and steeds lie grov'ling on the ground;
 The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
 The steeds without their riders scour the field,
 The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
 The line too labours, and the words move slow:
 Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
 Flies o'er th' unbending corn and skims along the main. Pope.

To SCOUR, skôûr. v. n.

1. To perform the office of cleaning domestic utensils.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shakspeare.

2. To clean.

Warm water is softer than cold; for it scoureth better. Bacon.

 Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
 That with his name the mothers still their babes?
Shakspeare.

Such conquerors are not the favourites but scourges of God, the instruments of that vengeance. Atterbury.

In all these trials I have borne a part;
 I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart. Pope.
 Immortal Jove!

Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
 Or bless a people willing to obey;
 But crush the nations with an iron rod,
 And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. A whip for a top.

If they had a top, the scourge stick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Locke.

To SCOURGE, skûrje. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lash with a whip; to whip.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
 Make instruments to scourge us. Shakspeare.
 Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman? Acts.
 He scourg'd with many a stroke th' indignant waves. Milton.

When a professor of any religion is set up to be laughed at, this cannot help us to judge of the truth of his faith, any better than if he were scourged. Watts.

2. To punish; to chastise; to chasten; to castigate, with any punishment or affliction.

Seeing that thou hast been scourged from heaven, declare the mighty power of God. 2 Maccabees.
 He will scourge us for our iniquities, and will have mercy again. Tobit.

SCOUR'GER, skûr'jûr.³¹⁵ n. s. [from scourge.] One that scourges; a punisher or chastiser.

To SCOURSE, skôrse. v. a. To exchange one thing for another; to swap. Ainsworth.

SCOUT, skôût.³¹² n. s. [escout, Fr. from escouter; auscultare, Lat. to listen; scolta, Italian.] One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.

Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
 That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin!
Shakspeare.

As when a scout,
 Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
 All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn, Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill. Milton.

This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations. Wilkins.

The scouts to sev'ral parts divide their way,
 To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
 The coasts. Dryden.

To SCOUT, skôût. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go out, in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.

Off on the bordering deep
 Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing
 Scout far and wide into the realm of night, Scorning surprize. Milton.

As a hunted panther casts about
 Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to scout;

So she, to shun his toils, her cares employ'd. Dryden.
 Command a party out,
 With a strict charge not to engage, but scout. Dryden.

2. To ridicule; to sneer. This is a sense unauthORIZED, and vulgar.

To SCOWL, skôûl. v. n. [scýlan, to squint, Sax. skeela sig, to look sour, Islandick.]

To frown; to pout; to look angry, sour, or sullen.

Miso, her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a slaving good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

With bent louring brows, as she would threaten,
 She scowl'd and frown'd with froward countenance. Fairy Queen.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
 Did scowl on Richard. Shakspeare.

Not a courtier,
 Although they wear their faces to the bent
 Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakspeare.

The dusky clouds o'erspread
 Heav'n's cheerful face: the low'ring element
 Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or show'r. Milton.

Fly, fly, profane fogs! far hence fly away
 With your dull influence; it is for you
 To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.

In useful gaze
 The cattle stand, and on the scowling heav'n's Cast a deploring eye. Thomson.

SCOWL, skôûl.³²² n. s. [from the verb.]

Look of sullenness or discontent; gloom.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
 Hover o'er the new-born day
 With rosy wings so richly bright,
 As if he scorn'd to think of night;
 When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
 Made heav'n's radiant face look foul,
 Call'd for an untimely night,
 To blot the newly-blossom'd light. Crashaw.

SCOWL'INGLY, skôûl'ing-lê. adv. [from scowl.]

With a frowning and sullen look.

To SCRA'BBLE, skrâb'bl.⁴¹⁶ v. n. [krabbelen, scraffelen, to scrape or scratch, Dutch.]

- To catch at any thing eagerly and tumultuously with the hands; to catch with haste preventive of another; to contend tumultuously which shall catch any thing.

England now is left

To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
The unow'd interest of proud swelling state. Shaks.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.

It is not to be supposed, that, when such a tree was shaking, there would be no scrambling for the fruit. Stillingfleet.

They must have scrambled with the wild beasts for crabs and nuts. Ray.

- To climb by the help of the hands: as, he scrambled up that rock.

SCRAMBLE, skrám'bl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [from the verb.]

- Eager contest for something, in which one endeavours to get it before another.

As they were in the middle of their gambols, somebody threw a handful of apples among them, that set them presently together by the ears upon the scramble. L'Estrange.

Because the desire of money is constantly almost every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

- Act of climbing by the help of the hands.

SCRAMBLER, skrám'bl-úr.⁹³ n. s. [from scramble.]

- One that scrambles.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him.

To SCRANCH, skránsh. v. a. [schrantzer, Dutch.] To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth. The Scots retain it.

SCRANNEL, skrán'níl.⁹⁹ adj. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor any other example.] Vile; worthless. Perhaps grating by the sound.

When they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw.
Milton.

SCRAP, skráp. n. s. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]

- A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.

It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glanville.

Trencher esquires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.

Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Locke.

No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.

I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.

- Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms, and fester'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court, is no contract. Shaks.

The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds,
for their own scraps and advantage. Bacon.

On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head
To bleakest colds. Granville.

What has he else to bait his traps,
Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?
The offals of a church distrest,
A hungry vicarage at best. Swift.

- A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.

Pregnant with thousands flits the scrap unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.

To SCRAPE, skrápe. v. a. [scræpan, Saxon; chrapen, Dutch; 'sasrópitiigh, Erse.]

her dust, and make her like the top of a rock. Ezekiel.

Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, if toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up. Swift.

- To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.

The chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall. Pope.

- To gather by great efforts, or penurious or trifling diligence.

Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if by avarice he can scrape together so much as to make his peace. South.

Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets. Watts.

To SCRAPE, skrápe. v. n.

- To make a harsh noise.
- To play ill on a fiddle.

- To make an awkward bow. Ainsw.

To SCRAPE Acquaintance. A low phrase. To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity: probably from the scrapes or bows of a flatterer.

SCRAPE, skrápe. n. s. [skraft, Swedish.]

- Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word.

- The sound of the foot drawn over the floor.

- A bow.

SCRA'PER, skráp'úr.⁹⁵ n. s. [from scrape.]

- Instrument with which any thing is scraped.

Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer. Swift.

- A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live;
Then live, and use it; else it is not true
That thou hast gotten: surely, use alone
Makes money not a contemptible stone. Herbert.

- A vile fiddler.

Out! ye semipiternal scrapers. Cowley.

Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrapers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians? Arbutnot.

SERAT, skrát. n. s. [scratta, Saxon.] A hermaphrodite. Skinner. Junius.

To SCRATCH, skrátsh. v. a. [kratzen, Dutch.]

- To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.

The lab'ring swain
Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,
And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again.
Dryden.

A sort of small sand-colour'd stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew.

- To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his trulous may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand?
Fairy Queen.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shaks.

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

—Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratch face.

—Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were. Shaks.

Scots are like witches: do but whet your pen,
Scratch till the blood come; they'll not hurt you then. Cleveland.

To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature. More.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;
Let go, for shame. Dryden.

- To wound slightly.

- To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds.
Shakspeare.

- To rub with the nails.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field. Camden.

Other mechanical helps Aretæus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears. Arbutnot.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.

SCRATCH, skrátsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

- An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the risings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer deuts. Mozon.

The smaller the particles of those substances are,
the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton.

- Laceration with the nails.

These nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
Lest by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better drest.
Prior.

- A slight wound.

The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmanco, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.

Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this.
Shakspeare.

SCRATCHER, skrátsh-úr.⁹⁶ n. s. [from scratch.] He that scratches.

creak, or shriek, from skrige, Danish.]

To make a shrill or loud noise. Bailey.

To SCREAM, skrême.²²⁷ v. n. [hremman, Saxon.]

1. To cry out shrilly, as in terrour or agony.

Soon a whirlwind rose around,

And from afar he heard a screaming sound

As of a dame distress'd, who cried for aid,

And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,

Old feeble men with fainter groans reply,

A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.

If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,

Can finely counterfeit a fright;

So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,

She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.

2. To cry shrilly.

I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry. Shaksp.

SCREAM, skrême. n. s. [from the verb.]

A shrill, quick, loud cry of terrour or pain.

Our chimnies were blown down; and, as they say,

Lamentings heard i' the air, strange screams of death. Shaksp.

Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes,

And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies. Pope.

To SCREECH, skrêétsh.²⁴⁶ v. n. [skrêkia, to cry, Islandick.]

1. To cry out as in terrour or anguish.

Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits. Bacon.

2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

SCREECH, skrêétsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cry of horreur and anguish.

2. Harsh horrid cry.

The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste, With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast; And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood, And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.

SCREE'CHOWL, skrêétsh'òul. n. s. [screech and owl.] An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.

Deep night,

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,

The time when screechowls cry, and bandogs howl. Shaksp.

Let him, that will a screechowl aye be call'd,

Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead. Shaksp.

By the screechowl's dismal note,

By the black night-raven's throat,

I charge thee, Hob. Drayton.

Jupiter, though he had joggled the balance to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Dryden.

Sooner shall screechowls bask in sunny day,

Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.

SCREEN, skrêèn.²⁴⁶ n. s. [escran, French.]

1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.

Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are. Shaksp.

Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes

in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages. Swift.

My juniors by a year,

Who wisely thought my age a screen,

When death approach'd, to stand between;

The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling. Swift.

2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.

When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon

one writeth. Bacon.

One speaks the glory of the British queen,

And one describes a charming Indian screen. Pope.

Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools. Swift.

3. A riddle to sift sand.

To SCREEN, skrêèn. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,

That screen'd the fruits of th' earth, and feats of men, Milton.

From cold septentrion blasts.

A good magistrate's retinue of state screens him from the dangers which he is to incur for the sake of it. Atterbury.

This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,

To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion. Rowe.

2. [cerno, crevi, Lat.] To sift; to riddle.

Let the cases be fill'd with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture-ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened. Evelyn.

SCREW, skrôò.²⁶⁵ n. s. [scroeve, Dut. es- crouz, French.] One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former. Quincy.

The screw is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it. Wilkins.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best. Mortimer.

To SCREW, skrôò. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To turn or move by a screw.

Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,

Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their wine

With the dry refuse. Philips.

2. To fasten with a screw.

We fail!

But screw your courage to the sticking place,

And we'll not fail. Shakespeare.

To screw your lock on the door, make wide holes,

big enough to receive the shank of the screw. Moxon.

3. To deform by contortions.

Sometimes a violent laughter screw'd his face,

And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace. Cowley.

He screw'd his face into a harden'd smile,

And said, Sebastian knew to govern slaves. Dryden.

With screw'd face, and doleful whine, they ply

you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other. South.

Let others screw their hypocritic face,

She shews her grief in a sincerer place. Swift.

4. To force; to bring by violence.

He resolved to govern by subaltern ministers, who screwed up the pins of power too high. Hewel.

No discourse can be, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will screw in here and there some imitations of what they said or did. Government of the Tongue.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and screwed up, may be computed to be about two millions. Swift.

5. To squeeze; to press.

6. To oppress by extortion.

Our country landlords, by unmeasurable screwing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France. Swift.

SCREW Tree, skrôò'trêe. n. s. [isora, Lat.]

A plant of the East and West Indies.

To SCRIBBLE, skrib'bl.⁴⁰⁶ v. a. [scribo, scribillo, Latin.]

1. To fill with artless or worthless writing.

How gird the sphere

With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

2. To write without use or elegance: as, he scribbled a pamphlet.

To SCRIBBLE, skrib'bl. v. n. To write without care or beauty.

If a man should affirm, that an ape casually meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and falling to scribble,

did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that.

Bentley.

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,

There are who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,

Whom, when they praise, the world believes no

more

Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

SCRIBBLE, skrib'bl. n. s. [from the verb.]

Worthless writing.

By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble. Boyle.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER, skrib'bl-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from scrib-

ble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. L'Estrange

The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,

And to your genius must conform his line. Granville

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers. Swift

Nobody was concerned or surprised, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce.

Letter to Pope's Dunciad.

SCRIBE, skribe. n. s. [scribe, Fr. scriba, Lat.]

1. A writer.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho! His love to Antony. Shakspeare

My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter. Shakspeare

We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes. Grew

The following letter comes from some notable young female scribe. Spectator

2. A public notary. Ainsworth

SCRIMER, skri'mér.⁹⁵ n. s. [escrimeur, Fr.] A gladiator; a fencingmaster. Not in use.

Creates, the scriptural use of that word determines sometimes to men. Atterbury

SCRIPTURE, skrip'tshùre.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [scriptura, Latin.]

1. Writing.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures, but famous for the death and overthrow of Crassus. Raleigh

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.

With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary. Hooker

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose: An evil soul producing holy witness

Is like a villain with a smiling cheek. Shaksp.

There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition, for it. South

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry. Locke

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are foiled. Atterbury

Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross them? Atterbury

The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat. Seed

SCRIVENER, skriv'núr. n. s. [scrivano, Latin.]

1. One who draws contracts.

We'll pass the business privately and well: Send for your daughter by your servant here, My boy shall fetch the scrivener. Shakspeare

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.

How happy in his low degree, Who leads a quiet country life, And from the griping scrivener free! Dryden

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and usurers, that suck the heart and blood. Arbutn.

SCROFULA, skróf'ù-lá. n. s. [from scrofa, Latin, a sow, as χοίρας.] A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores, commonly called the kingsevil.

If matter in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a scrofula. Wiseman

SCROFULOUS, skróf'ù-lús.³¹⁴ adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.

Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished; for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery. Arbutn.

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbutn.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure. Swift

SCROLL, skróle.⁴⁰⁶ n. s. [supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from an escrouelle given by the heralds: whence parchment wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrou.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls, And old records from ancient times deriv'd; Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls, That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser

We'll add a royal number to the dead, Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss, With slaughter coupled to the name of kings. Shakspeare

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude. Shakspeare

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned the christians. Knolles

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man. Bacon

Such follow him, as shall be register'd; Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll. Mill.

With this epistolary scroll, Receive the partner of my inmost soul. Prior.

Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole; May take yon beauteous, mystick, starry roll, And burn it like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE, skróél. n. s. [This word I remember only in Shakspeare: it seems derived from escrouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers flout you kings, And stand securely on their battlements, As in a theatre. King John

To SCRUB, skrub. v. a. [scrobben, Dut.]

To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skillful hand would draw For an old grandam ape, when with a grace She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbutn.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs, Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift

SCRUB, skrub. n. s. [from the verb]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Any thing mean or despicable. With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;

No little scrub joint shall come on my board. Swift.

3 A worn-out broom. Answerth.

SCRUBBED, skrub'bid.³⁰⁸ adj. [scrubel, Dan.] Mean; vile; worthless; dirty; sorry.

I gave it to a youth, A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy, No higher than thyself. Shaksp.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack Can set the mastiff on your back. Swift

The scene a wood, produc'd no more Than a few scrubby trees before. Swift

SCRUFF, skruf. n. s. The same, I suppose, with scurf, by a metathesis usual in pronunciation.

SCRUPLE, skróð'pl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [scrupule, French; scrupulus, Lat.]

1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute things. Macduff, this noble passion, Child of integrity, hath from my soul Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts To your good truth. Shakspeare

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the consent of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question. Bacon

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only entangle the soul. Taylor

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else. Locke

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.

Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth. Bacon

3. Proverbially, any small quantity. Nature never lends

The smallest scruple of her excellence;
Eut, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor. Shakspeare.
To SCRUPLE, skrôô'pl. v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt; to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms. Milton.
SCRUPLER, skrôô'pl-ûr. n. s. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scrupples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptized, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptized by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers. Graunt.

SCRUPULOUSITY, skrôô'pû-lôs-ê-té. n. s.
[from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.
The one sort they warned to take heed, that scrupu- lousity did not make them rigorous in giving unad-vised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupu- lous. Hooker.

So careful, even to scrupulousity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.

The first sacrilege is looked on with horror; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulousity soon retires. Decay of Piety.

SCRUPULOUS, skrôô'pû-lûs. adj. [scrupu- puleux, Fr. scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]

1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warned them, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous.
Hooker.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. Given to objections; captious.
Equality of two domestick pow'rs
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakspeare.

3. Nice; doubtful.
As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous. Bacon.

4. Careful; vigilant; cautious.
I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences from these observations are of importance. Woodward.

SCRUPULOUSLY, skrôô'pû-lûs-lé. adv.
[from scrupulous.] Carefully; nicely;
anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours. Taylor.
Henry V. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe
the success of it to himself. Addison.

SCRUPULOUSNESS, skrôô'pû-lûs-nês. n. s.
[from scrupulous.] The state of being scrupulous.

SCRUTABLE, skrôô'tâ-bl. adj. [from scrutor, Latin.] Discoverable by inquiry.

Shall we think God so scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us?
Decay of Piety.

SCRUTATION, skrôô'tâ-shûn. n. s. [scru- tor, Latin.] Search; examination; inquiry. Dict.

SCRUTATOR, skrôô-tâ-tûr. n. s. [scru- tateur, French; from scrutor, Latin.]
Inquirer; searcher; examiner.

In process of time, from being a simple scrutator, an archdeacon became to have jurisdiction more amply. Ayliffe.

SCRUTINE'ER, skrôô-tè-nêr'. n. s. [scru- tator, Latin.] A searcher; an examiner.

To SCRUTINIZE, skrôô'tin-ize. } v. a.
To SCRUTINY, skrôô'té-né. } [from scrutiny.] To search; to examine.

The compromissarii should chuse according to the votes of such, whose votes they were obliged to scru- tinize. Ayliffe.

SCRUTINOUS, skrôô'tin-ûs. adj. [from scrutiny.] Captious; full of inquiries. A word little used.

Age is froward, uneasy, scrutinous,
Hard to be pleas'd, and parsimonious. Denham.

SCRUTINY, skrôô'té-né. n. s. [scruti- nium, Lat.] Inquiry; search; examination with nicety.

In the scrutinies for righteousness and judgment, when it is required whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves. Taylor.

I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn
In what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The Son of God. Milton.

They that have design'd exactness and deep scru- tiny, have taken some one part of nature. Hale.

Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason well rectified must nature teach;
And these high scrutinies are subjects fit
For man's all-searching and enquiring wit. Denham.

We are admonish'd of want of charity towards others, and want of a christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves. L'Estrange.

When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, somewhat may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny. Atterbury.

These, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body. Locke.

SCRUTOIRE, skrôô-tôre'. n. s. [for scritoire, or escritoire.] A case of drawers for writings.

I locked up these papers in my scutoire, and my scutoire came to be unlocked. Prior.

To SCRUIZE, skrôôze. v. a. [perhaps from screw. This word, though now disused by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scrouge, in the London jargon.] To squeeze; to compress.

Though up he caught him 'twixt his puissant hands,
And having scruz'd out of his carrion corse
The loathful life, now loos'd from sinful bands,
Upon his shoulders carried him. Fairy Queen.

To SCUD, skûd. v. n. [squittire, Italian;
skutta, Swedish; skictur, swift, Islandick.] To flee; to run away with precipitation.

The vote was no sooner passed, but away they scudded to the next lake. L'Estrange.

The frightful satyrs, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with prick'd-up ears take flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn-feet ply,
About their sires the little sylvans cry. Dryden.

Away the frighted spectre scuds,
And leaves my lady in the suds. Swift.

To SCUDDLE, skûd/dl. v. n. [from scud.]

To run with a kind of affected haste or precipitation. A low word; commonly pronounced scuttle.

SCUFFLE, skûf'fl. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from shuffle.] A confused quarrel; a tumultuous broil.

His captain's heart,
In the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast. Shakspeare.

Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the scorner, take much pleasing divertisement, by deriding our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing. Decay of Piety.

The dog leaps upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned. L'Estrange.

Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and insults. Addison.

To SCUFFLE, skûf'fl. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.

I must confess I've seen in former days,
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some frays. Drayton.

A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.

To SCULK, skûlk. v. n. [sculcke, Dan.]
To lurk in hiding places; to lie close.

It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publickly. Government of the Tongue.

Fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head;
There sculk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time. Dryden.

My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war:
Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat; from the field
Of opening arms unwilling they depart,
And sculk behind the subterfuge of art. Prior.

No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say
The girl had such a bashful way. Swift.

SCULKER, skûlk'ûr. n. s. [from sculk.]
A lurker; one that hides himself for shame or mischief.

SCULL, skûl. n. s. [It is derived by Skin- ner from shell, in some provinces called shull; as testa, and teste, or tête, signify the head. Lye observes, more satisfactorily, that skola is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]

1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.
Fractures of the scull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.

2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCUL- LER.]

3. One who rows a cockboat.
Like catiff vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of steed;
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love,
Look one way and another move. Hudibras.

4. [rceole, Saxon; an assembly.] In Mil- ton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.

Each bay
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oft Bank the mid sea. Milton.

SCULLOAP, skûl'kâp. n. s. [scull and cap.]
1. A headpiece.

2. A nightcap.

SCU'LLER, skûl'lûr.⁹⁹ n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skioia is, in Islandick, a vessel; and escueille, in Fr. a dish.]

1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.

Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And shiv'ring in the leaky sculler sate. Dryden.

They hire the sculler, and, when once aboard,
Grow sick, and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.

2. One that rows a cockboat.

SCU'LLERY, skûl'lûr-ê. n. s. [from skioia, a vessel, Islandick; or escueille, French, a dish.] The piece where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.

Pyreicus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and setting rogues together
by the ears. Peacham.

SCU'LLION, skûl'yûn.¹¹³ n. s. [from escueille, French, a dish.] The lowest domestick servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.

I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing like a very drab,
A scullion, s'ye upon't! foh! about my brain. Shaksp.
If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook, the stable-men, and the scullion, to stand in his way. Swift.

To SCULP, skûlp. v. a. [sculpio, Latin. sculpter, French.] To carve; to engrave. Not in use.

O that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculpt with steel on rocks of adamant! Sandys.

SCU'LPTILE, skûlp'til. adj. [sculptilis, Lat.] Made by carving.

In a silver medal is upon one side Moses horned, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images. Brown.

SCU'LPTOR, skûlp'tûr.¹⁶⁰ n. s. [sculptor, Latin; sculpteur, French.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.

Thy shape 's in ev'ry part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryd.

The Latin poets give the epithets of trifidum and trisculcum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.

SCU'LPTURE, skûlp'tshûr.¹⁶¹ n. s. [sculptura, Lat. sculpture, Fr.]

1. The act of carving wood, or hewing stone, into images.

Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form, and birds began to live. Pope.

2. Carved work.

Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze with bossy sculptures graven. Milt.

There too, in living sculpture might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.

3. The art of engraving on copper.

To SCU'LPTURE, skûlp'tshûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut; to engrave.

Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.

SCUM, skûm. n. s. [escume, French; schiuma, Ital. skum, Danish; schuym, Dut.]

1. That which rises to the top of any liquor. The rest had several offices assign'd;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise,
Others to bear the same away did mind,
And others it to use according to his kind. Fairy Queen.

The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom. Bacon.

Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
Self-fed and self-consum'd. Milton.

Away, ye scum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryd.

They mix a med'cine, to foment their limbs,
With scum that on the molten silver swims. Dryden.

2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away. There flocked unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that ere long he had a mighty army. Spenser.

Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged of. Raleigh.

I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, base scum. Hudibras.

The Seythian and Egyptian scum
Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.

You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jails. Dryden.

The great and innocent are insulted by the scum and refuse of the people. Addison.

To SCUM, skûm. v. a. [from the noun.]

To clear off the scum: commonly written and spoken skim.

A second multitude
Severing each kind, and scum'd the hullion dross. Milton.

Hear, ye sullen pow'rs below;
Hear, ye taskers of the dead!

You that boiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead! Dryden and Lee.

What corns swim upon the top of the brine, scum off. Mortimer.

SCUMBER, skûm'bûr. n. s. [from scum.]

The dung of a fox. Ainsworth.

SCUMMER, skûm'mûr.²⁸ n. s. [escumoir, French.] A vessel with which liquor is scummed: commonly called a skimmer.

SCUPPER Holes, skûp'pûr.⁸⁵ n. s. [schoppen, Dutch, to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers; and the nails with which they are fastened, scupper nails.

The blood at scupper holes run out. Ward.

SCURF, skûrf. n. s. [scupp, Sax. skarfa, Islandick; skurff, Danish; skorf, Swedish; schorft, Dutch.]

1. A kind of dry military scab.

Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honourable eld,
Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. Fairy Queen.

The virtue of his hands
Was lost among Pactolus' sands,
Against whose torrent while he swims,
The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.

2. A soil or stain adherent.

Then are they happy, when by length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime,
No speck is left. Dryden.

3. Any thing sticking on the surface.

There stood a hill, whose grisly top Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

Upon throwing in a stone, the water boils; and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

SCURFINESS, skûrf'ê-nês. n. s. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.

SCURRIL, skûr'ril. adj. [scurrilis, Latin.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; lewdly jocose.

With him Patroclus,

Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day,
Breaks scurril jests. Shakspere.

Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the antients, provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurril scoffing. Ben Jonson.

Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurril taunts. Dryd.

SCURRI'LI'GY, skûr-ril'ê-tê. n. s. [scurrilite, Fr. scurrilitas, Lat.] Grossness of reproach; lewdness of jocularly; mean buffonery.

Good master Holofernes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility. Shakspere.

Banish scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.

SCURRILOUS, skûr'ril-ûs.³¹⁴ adj. [scurrilis, Latin.] Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the license of a buffoon can warrant; lewdly jocular; vile; low.

Scurrilous and more than satirical immodesty. Hooker.

Let him approach singing. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in 's tunes. Shaksp.

How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurrilous a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind? Addison.

Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by scurrilous and enraged orators. Swift.

SCURRILOUSLY, skûr'ril-ûs-lê. adv. [from scurrilous.] With gross reproach; with low buffonery; with lewd merriment.

Such men there are, who have written scurrilously against me, without any provocation. Dryden.

It is barbarous incivility, scurrilously to sport with that which others count religion. Tillotson.

SCURRILOUSNESS, skûr'ril-ûs-nês. n. s. [from scurrilous.] Scurrility; baseness of manners.

SCURVILY, skûr've-lê. adv. [from scurvy.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.

Look i' your glass now,
And see how scurvily that countenance shews;
You would be loth to own it. Ben Jonson.

This alters the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very scurvily. and makes it perfect. South.

The clergy were never more learned, or so scurvily treated. Swift.

SCURVY, skûr've. n. s. [from scurf. This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.] A distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries, and amongst those such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water, fresh or salt; invading chiefly in the winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoaked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented farinaceous vegetables, and drink bad water. Arbuthnot.

SCURVY, skûr've. adj. [from scurf, scurfy, scurvy.]

1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the scurvy.

Whatsoever man be scurvy or scabbed. Leviticus.

2. Vile; bad; sorry; worthless; contemptible; offensive.

I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler. Shakspere.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing to a man's funeral. Shakspere.

He spoke scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honour. Shakspeare.

A crane, which is but scurvy meat, lays but two eggs. Cheyne.

It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that scurvy custom of taking tobacco.
Swift.

SCU'RVYGRASS, skûr'vè-gràs. n. s. [scurvy and grass; cochlearia, Lat.] The plant spoonwort. Miller.

SCU'SES, skû'sês. for excuses.

I shifted him away,

And laid good 'scuses on your ecstasy. Shaksp.

SCUT, skût. n. s. [skott, Islandick.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short, as a hare.

In the hare it is aversely seated, and in its distension inclines into the coxix or scut. Brown.

He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear;

He left his scut behind, and half an ear. Swift

SCU'TCHEON, skûtsh'in.²⁸⁹ n. s. [scuccione, Italian, from scutum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns ar-morial of a family. See ESCUTCHEON.

And thereto had she that scutcheon of her desires supported by certain badly diligent ministers.
Sidney.

Your scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall hang in what place you please. Shakspeare.

Honour is a meer scutcheon. Shakspeare.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore,

With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryd.

SCUTE'LLATED, skût'tl-à-téd. adj. [scu- tella, Lat.] Divided into small surfaces.

It seems part of the scutellated bone of a sturgeon,
being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution.

Woodward.

SCU'TIFORM, skût'tè-fôrm. adj. [scutifor- mis, Lat.] Shaped like a shield.

SCU'TTLE, skût'tl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [scutella, Lat.
scutell, Celtick. Ainsworth.]

1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter which it resembles in form.

A scuttle or skrein to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.

The earth and stones they are fain to carry from under their feet in scuttles and baskets. Hakewill.

2. A small grate.

To the hole in the door have a small scuttle, to keep in what mice are there. Mortimer.

3. [from scud.] A quick pace; a short run; a pace of affected precipitation.
This is properly scuddle.

She went with an easy scuttle out of the shop.

Spectator.

To SCU'TTLE, skût'tl. v. n. [from scud or scuddle.] To run with affected precipitation.

The old fellow scuttled out of the room. Arbuth.

To SDEIGN, zdáne. v. a. [Spenser. Sdeg- nare, Italian; Milton, for disdain.]

Lifted up so high,

Milton.

SDEIGNFUL, zdáne'fûl. adj. [Contracted for disdainful.]

They now, puft up with sdeignful insolence,

Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

SEA, sé. n. s. [ræ, Saxon; see, or zee,
Dutch.]

1. The ocean; the water opposed to the land.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood

Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather

Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine,

Making the green one red. Shakspeare.

The rivers run into the sea. Carew.

He made the sea and all that is therein. Exodus.

So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air,
So working seas settle and purge the wine. Davies.

Amphibious, between sea and land,
The river horse. Milton.

Some Leviathan,

Haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,

The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff

Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,

With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,

Moors by his side under the lee, while night

Invests the sea. Milton.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land.

Woodward.

They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail.

Arbuthnot.

Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,

Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves

The raging tempest and the rising waves,

Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides

Wash off the sea weeds, and the sounding tides.

Dryden.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is,

without a great loss to the world.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,

High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,

While Argo saw her kindred trees

Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope.

2. A collection of water; a lake.

By the sea of Galilee. Matthew.

3. Proverbially for any large quantity.

That sea of blood, which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.

4. Anything rough and tempestuous.

To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,

And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.

5. Half SEAS over. Half drunk.

The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half seas over before the boufire was out. Spect.

SEA, sé. is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

SE'ABAR, sé'bár. n. s. [from sea and bar;

hirundo piscis, Lat.] The sea swallow.

SE'ABEAT, sé'bête. adj. [sea and beat.]

Dashed by the waves of the sea.

The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,

That one seabeat will to sea again. Spenser.

Darkness cover'd o'er

The face of things: along the seabeat shore

Satiate we slept. Pope.

SE'ABOAT, sé'bôte. n. s. [sea and boat.]

Vessel capable to bear the sea.

Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad seaboats, and themselves but indifferent seamen.

Arbuthnot.

SE'ABORN, sé'börn. adj. [sea and born.]

Born of the sea; produced by the sea.

Like Neptune and his seaborn niece, shall be

The shining glories of the land and sea. Waller.

All these in order march, and marching sing

The warlike actions of their seaborn king. Dryden.

SE'ABOY, sé'bôe. n. s. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.

Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose

To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,

And in the calmest and the stillest night

Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

SE'ABREACH, sé'bretsh. n. s. [sea and breach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.

To an impetuous woman, tempests and seabreaches

are nothing. L'Estrange.

SE'ABREEZE, sé'brêze. n. s. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the sea.

Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grass from the seabreeze.

Mortimer.

SE'ABUILT, sé'bilt. adj. [sea and built.]

Built for the sea.

Born each by other in a distant line,

The seabuilt forts in dreadful order move. Dryden.

SEACA'BUDGE, sé-káb'bidje. n. s. [crambe,

Lat.] Sea colewort. A plant.

It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage.

Miller.

SE'ACALF, sé-kâf'. n. s. [sea and calf;

phoca.] The seal.

The seacalf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf; his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's,

and mustaches like those of a cat: his body long,

and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed,

but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpess, and other viviparous fishes. Grew.

SE'ACAP, sé'kâp. n. s. [sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.

I know your favour well,

Though now you have no seacap on your head.

Shakspeare.

SE'ACARP, sé'kârp. n. s. [from sea and carp; turdus marinus, Lat.] A spotted fish that lives among stones and rocks.

SE'ACHART, sé-kârt'. n. s. [sea and chart.]

Map on which only the coasts are de-linedated.

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description. Watts.

SE'ACOAL, sé'kôle. n. s. [sea and coal.]

Coal so called, not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pitcoal.

We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacoal fire. Shakspeare.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal. Bacon.

This pulmonic disposition of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacoal is burnt. Harvey.

SE'ACOAST, sé-kôte'. n. s. [sea and coast.]

Shore; edge of the sea.

The venturesome mariner that way,

Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,

Which all along the southern seacoast lay;

For safety's sake that same his seamark made,

And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.

Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land, that would pay well for the taking in. Mortimer.

SE'ACOB, sé'kôb. n. s. [gavia, Latin.] A bird, called also seagull.

SE'ACOMPASS, sé-kûmpâs. n. s. [sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.

The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north point only, with moveor immotus, notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only. Camden.

SE'ACOOT, sé'kôôt. n. s. [from sea and coot;

fulica marina, Lat.] A sea-fowl like the moor-hen.

SE'ACORMORANT, or Seadrake, sé-kôr'mô-rârt. n. s. [from sea and cormorant; cor- vus marinus, Lat.] A seacrow.

SE'ACOW, sé-kôû'. n. s. [sea and cow.] The manatee.

The seacow is of the cetaceous kind. It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference; its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrick: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tusks standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards called it manatee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not scaly, but hairy. Hill.

SE'ADOG, sé-dóg'. n. s. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.

Fierce seadogs devour the mangled friends. Ros.
When stung with hunger, she embroils the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food. Pope.

SE'AEAR, sé'éér. n. s. [from sea and ear; auris marina, Latin.] A sea plant.

SEAFARER, sé'fà-rùr. n. s. [sea and fare.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.

They stiffly refused to veil their bonnets by the summons of those tows, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers. Carew.

A wand'ring merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Studious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd,
But dreads th' athletic labours of the field. Pope.

SEAFARING, sé-fà-ring. ⁴¹⁰ adj. [sea and fare.] Travelling by sea.

My wife fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms. Shaksp.
It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed. Arbuthnot.

SE'AFENNEL, sé-fèn'nìl.⁹⁹ The same with SAMPHIRE.

SE'AFIGHT, sé-fite'. n. s. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.

Seafights have been often final to the war; but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battles. Bacon.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a seafight. Locke.

This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a seafight. Arbuth.

SE'AFOWL, sé-fòul'. n. s. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.

The hills of curlews, and many other seafowl, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms. Derham.

A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the seas. Broome.

A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er-fly. Pope.

SE'AGIRDLES, sé-gèrd'lès. n. s. pl. [fungus phasganoides, Latin.] A sort of sea mushrooms.

SE'AGIRT, sé'gèrt. adj. [sea and girt.] Girded or encircled by the sea.

Neptune, besides the sway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in by lot, 'twixt high and nether Jove,
Imperial rule of all the seagirt isles. Milton.

Telemachus, the blooming heir,
Of seagirt Ithaca, demands my care:
'Tis mine to form his green unpractis'd years
In sage debates. Pope.

SE'AGRASS, sé'grás. n. s. [from sea and grass; alga, Latin.] An herb growing on the seashore.

SE'AGREEN, sé'grèén. adj. [sea and green.] Resembling the colour of the distant sea; cerulean.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their several mixtures, as green, scarlet, purple, and seagreen, come in by the eyes. Locke.

Upon his urn reclin'd,
His seagreen mantle waving in the wind,
The god appear'd. Pope.

SE'AGREEN, sé'grèén. n. s. Saxifrage. A plant.

SE'AGULL, sé-gùl'. n. s. [sea and gull.] A waterfowl.

Seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, foreshow rain and wind. Bacon.

Bitterns, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer.

SE'AHEDGEHOG, sé-hédjé'hóg. n. s. [echinus.] A kind of sea shellfish.

The seahedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and pinched, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin. Carew.

SE'AHOG, sé-hóg'. n. s. [sea and hog.] The porpus.

SE'AHOLLY, sé-hól'lè. n. s. [eryngium, Lat.] A plant.

The species are, seaholly, or eryngo. Common eryngo. The roots of the first are candied, and sent to London for medicinal use, being the true eryngo. Miller.

SE'AHOLM, sé-hólm'. n. s. [sea and holm.]

1. A small uninhabited island.
2. Seaholly. A kind of sea weed.
Corawal bringeth forth greater store of seaholm and samphire than any other country. Carew.

SE'AHORSE, sé-hórsè'. n. s. [sea and horse.]

1. A fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see dried, is a deep reddish brown; and its tail is turned round under the belly. Hill.
2. The morse.
Part of a large tooth, round and tapering; a tusk of the morse, or waltron, called by some the seahorse. Woodward.
3. The medical and the poetical seahorse seem very different. By the seahorse Dryden means probably the hippopotamus.
Seahorses, flound'ring in the slimy mud,
Toss'd up their heads, and dash'd the ooze about 'em. Dryden.

SE'AMAID, sé'máide. n. s. [sea and maid.] Mermaid.

Certain stars shot from their spheres,
To hear the seamaid's musick. Shaksp.

1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.
She, looking out,
Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout. Denham.

Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellespont. Evelyn.

Aeneas order'd
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's falchion, and a seaman's oar;
Thus was his friend interr'd. Dryden.

By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful. Dryden.

Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet, and the most seamen, of any state in Europe. Addison.

2. Merman; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and sea, and porpuses have the warm blood and entrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids or seamen. Locke.

SE'AMARK, sé'màrk. n. s. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.

Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay,
Threat'ning unheedy wreck and fish decay,
He for his safety's sake his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.

Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail. Shakspere.

They were executed at divers places upon the sea-coast, for seemarks, or light-houses, to teach Perkins's people to avoid the coast. Bacon.

They are remembered with a brand of infamy fixt upon them, and set as seemarks for those who observe them to avoid. Dryden.

The fault of others sway
He set as seemarks for himself to shun. Dryden.

SEAME'W, sé-mù'. n. s. [sea and mew.] A fowl that frequents the sea.

An island salt and bare,

Spurious virtue in a maid; Swift.

A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.
SE'COND, sêk'kûnd. n. s. [second, French, from the adjective.]

1. One who accompanies another in a duel, to direct or defend him.

Their seconds minister an oath,
Which was indiff'rent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magick them supplied;

And sought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their causes tried. Drayton.

Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toil and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds. Addison.

Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watts.

2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.

Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.

To SE'COND, sêk'kûnd. v. a. [seconder, Fr. secundo, Lat. from the noun.]

1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.

The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they sought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.

Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shaksp.

I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee, his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.

Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature seconds all his soft desires. Roscommon.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use. Pope.

2. To follow in the next place.

You some permit
To second ill with ill. Shakspere.

Having formerly discoursed of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Raleigh.

SE'CRECY, sê'krê-sê. n. s. [from secret.]

1. Privacy; state of being hidden; concealment.

That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shakspere.

The lady Anne,
Whom the king bath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shaksp.

In nature's book of infinite secrecy
A little can I read. Shakspere.

2. Solitude; retirement; not exposure to view.

Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South.

3. Forbearance of discovery.

It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that, being the publick act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.

4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.

For secrecy no lady closer.
Secrecy and fidelity were their only qualities. Burnet.

SE'CRET, sê'krît.⁹⁹ adj. [secret, French; secretus, Latin]

SE'CRETIST, sé'kré-tist. n. s. [from secret.] A dealer in secrets.

Some things I have not yet thought fit so plainly to reveal; not out of any envious design of having them buried with me, but that I may barter with those secretists, that will not part with one secret but in exchange for another. Boyle.

SE'CRETLY, sé'krit-lé. adv. [from secret.]

1. Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; with intention not to be known.

Give him this letter, do it secretly. Shakspeare.
Now secretly with inward grief he piñ'd;
Now warm resentments to his griefs he join'd. Add.
Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions. Atterbury.

2. Latently; so as not to be obvious; not apparently.

Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly de-separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Ray.

SECT, sékt. n. s. [secte, Fr. secta, Latin;
from sectando.]

1. A body of men following some particular master, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.

We'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shakspeare.

The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects and religions: the true religion is built upon a rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time.

The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as to the laws,
You for their empire and their synod take. Dryd.

The academies were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness. Dryden.

A sect of freethinkers is a sum of cyphers.

Bentley.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to be misprintthan this presbyterian way. King Charles.

SE'CTARY, sék'tá-ré. n. s. [sectaire, Fr.
from sect.]

1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.

My lord, you are a sectary;
That's the plain truth. Shakspeare.

Romish catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and protected by the church of England, whence we are called protestants; and the anabaptists, and separatists, and sectaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.

The number of sectaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or conscience. Swift.

2. A follower; a pupil.

The sectaries of my celestial skill,
That want to be the world's chief ornament,
They under keep. Spenser.

In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Wotton.

2. A part divided from the rest.

3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.

Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read, of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hooker.

The production of volatile salts I reserve till I mention them in another section. Boyle.

Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.

SE'CTOR, sék'tôr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [secteur, Fr.]

In geometry.

Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhombs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals, and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere.
All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.

SE'CLAR, sék'kù-lâr.⁸⁸ adj. [seclularis,
Latin; seclulier, French.]

1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.

This, in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral, in publick and political seclular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hooker.

Then shall they seek t' avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles; and with these to join Seclular pow'r, though feigning still to act
By spiritual. Milton.

2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.

Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby ease, to the clergy, both seclular and regular.

In France, vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, seclular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.

3. [seclulaire, Fr.] Happening or coming once in a secl or century.

The seclular year was kept but once in a century.

SECLA'RITY, sék-kù-lâr-é-té. n. s. [from seclular.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.

Littleness and seclularity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Burnet.

seclular.] Worldliness.

SE'CLUNINE, sék'kù-n-dine.¹⁴⁰ n. s. [seclun-

duces, secundes, French; secundæ, viz. partes, quod nascentem infantem sequantur. Ainsworth.] The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the afterbirth.

The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon.

Future ages lie

Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine asleep. Cowley.
If the fœtus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundines, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.

SECURE, sê-kûre'. adj. [securus, Lat.]
1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easy; assured.

Confidence then bore thee on secure
To meet no danger. Milton.

2. Confident; not distrustful: with of.
But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

One maid she had, below'd above the rest;
Secure of her, the secret she confess'd. Dryden

The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secure that it will be well employed. Atterbury.

3. Sure; not doubting: with of.
Haply too secure of our discharge
From penalty. Milton.

It concerns the most secure of his strength, to pray to God not to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.

As not secure to single or combin'd. Milton.

Messapus next,
Secure of steel, and fated from the fire,
In pomp appears. Dryden.

Secure from fortune's blows,
Secure of what I cannot lose,
In my small pinnace I can sail. Dryden.

6. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses: but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.
To SECURE, sê-kûre'. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.

Nothing left
That might his happy state secure,
Secure from outward force. Milton.

Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.

That prince, who shall be so wise as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.

Deeper to wound, she shuns the fight;
She drops her arms to gain the field:
Secures her conquest by her flight,
And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.

Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Broome.

2. To protect; to make safe.
I spread a cloud before the victor's sight,
Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secure'd his flight;
Ev'n then secure'd him, when I sought with joy
The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.

Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.

3. To insure.
SECURELY, sê-kûre'lè. adv. [from secure.]

1. Without fear; carelessly.
Love, that had now long time securely slept
In Venus' lap, unarmed then and naked,
'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being waked. Spenser.

'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight oppos'd. Shakspeare.

His daring foe securely him defy'd. Milton.

A soul that can securely death defy,
And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.

Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent,
I securely leave to the judgment of the reader. Atterbury.

2. Without danger; safely.
We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

SECUREMENT, sê-kûre'mènt. n. s. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.

They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securement from it. Brown.

SECURITY, sê-kû'rè-tè. n. s. [securité, Fr. securitas, Latin; from secure.]

1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.

2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
How senseless then and dead a soul hath he,
Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,
That he might sin with more security? Davies.

3. Protection; defence.
If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.

4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing; the act of giving caution, or being bound.
There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accurst. Shakspeare.

When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts.
It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.

Exchequer bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbuthnot.

5. Safety; certainty.
Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.

SEDA'N, sê-dân'. n. s. A kind of portable coach; a chair. I believe because first made at Sedan.

Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick, Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air, And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryden.

By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament, and sedan, exceeding 12*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* halfpenny, should pay 30*s.* in the hundred pounds value. Arbuthnot.

SEDA'TE, sê-dâte'. adj. [sedatus, Lat.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed; serene.

With countenance calm and soul sedate,
Thus Turnus. Dryden.

Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.

SEDA'TELY, sê-dâte'lè. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly; without disturbance.

That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.

SEDA'TENESS, sê-dâte'nès. n. s. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action. Addison.

SE'DENTARINESS, sêd'dèn-tâ-rè-nès. n. s. [from sedentary.] The state of being sedentary; inactivity.

SE'DENTARY, sêd'dèn-tâ-rè. adj. [sedentaire, Fr. sedentario, Italian; sedentarius, from sedeo, Latin.]

1. Passed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.

A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and for want of stirring the body, suffer the spirits to lie dormant. Harvey.

The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbuthnot.

2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.
The sedentary earth,
That better might with far less compass move,
Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
Her end without least motion. Milton.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton.

The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions. Spectator.

SEDGE, sêdje. n. s. [ræcz, Sax. whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with th' enamell'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge.
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays,
With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakspeare.

Adonis, painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
Which seem to move and wander with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shakspeare.

In hotter countries a fly called luciole, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.

My bonds I brake,

Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.
Niphates, with inverted urn,
And drooping sedge, shall his Armenia mourn.

SED'GY, sêd'jé. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour,
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
But fear'd the fate of Simoeis would return:
Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

SED'IMENT, sêd'ê-mênt. n. s. [sediment, Fr. sedimentum, Latin.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.

The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

That matter sunk not down till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest.

SED'ITION, sê-dîsh'ûn. n. s. [sedition, French; seditio, Latin.] A tumult, an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.

That sun-shine brew'd a show'r for him,

For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shaksp.

Be the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shaksp.

A beauty-waining and distressed widow
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shaksp.

In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Timothy.

I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any sinister thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.

Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton.

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Jonson's hostile name;

Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Oglethly thy envy raise. Dryden.

SEDUC'EMENT, sê-dûsê'mênt. n. s. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To season them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seducement or vain principle seize them wandering, some easy and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's seducements, and the magick how'r.

SEDUC'ER, sê-dû'sûr. n. s. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter; a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone. Shaksp.

There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and so removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.

The soft seducer, with enticing looks,
The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes. Dryden.

He, whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

SEE, sêê. n. s. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocess of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shaks.
It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

SEEN, sêen.²⁴⁶ adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.

Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster
Well seen in musick. Shaksp.
Noble Boyle, not less in nature seen,
Than his great brother read in states and men. Dryden.

SEER, sêér. n. s. [from see.]

1. One who sees.
We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Spectator.

2. A prophet; 'one who foresees future events.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

By day your frighted seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And wish their eyes were floods: by night from dreams

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show Emblems of heav'nly wrath, and mystick types of woe. Prior.

SEERWOOD, sêérwûd. n. s. See SEAR-
WOOD. Dry wood.

Caught, like dry stubble fir'd, or like seerwood;
Yet from the wound ensued no purple flood,
But look'd a huddling mass of frying blood. Dryden.

SEE'SAW, sê'sâw. n. s. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.

His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.

To SEE'SAW, sê'sâw. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbutnot.

To SEETH, sêéth.²⁴⁵ v. a. preterit I sod or seethed; part. pass. sodden. [reoban, Sax. soiden, Dutch.] To boil; to deco-ct in hot liquor.

The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser.

Go suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shaksp.

Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings.

To SEETH, sêéth.⁴⁶⁷ v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.

The boiling haths at Cairhadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames which they are warm'd upon. Fairy Queen.

I will make a complimental assault upon him; for my business seeths. Shaksp.

Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shaksp.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and stuck it into the pan. 1 Samuel.

SEETHER, sêéth'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from seeth.]
A boiler; a pot.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden.

SEGMENT, sêg'mènt. n. s. [segment, Fr. segmentum, Lat.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.

Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles, for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown.

Their segments or arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

SE'GNITY, sêg'nê-tê. n. s. [from segnis,
Lat.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Dict.

To SE'GREGATE, sêg'grê-gate. v. a.
[segrego, Latin; segreger, Fr.] To set apart; to separate from others.

SEGREGATION, sêg-grê-gâ'shûn. n. s. [se- gregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others.

What shall we hear of this?
—A segregation of the Turkish fleet;
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding hillows seem to pelt the clouds. Shaks.

SE'JANT, sê'jânt. adj. [In heraldry.] Sitting.

SEIGNEU'RIAL, sê-nû'rê-âl.²⁵⁰ adj. [from seignior.] Invested with large powers; independent.

Those lands were seigneurial. Temple.

SE'IGNIOR, sêne'yûr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [from se- nior, Latin; seigneur, Fr.] A lord. The title of honour given by Italians.

SE'IGNIORY, sêne'yûr-rê.¹⁴³ n. s. [seigneu- rie, Fr. from seignior.] A lordship; a territory.

O'Neal never had any seignior over that country, but what by encroachment he got upon the English. Spenser.

Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's *seignior*ies? Shaksp.

Hosea, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seignior over themselves; which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon.

William, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seignior successively. Davies.

SE'IGNORAGE, sêne'yûr-idje.⁹⁰ n. s. [seig- neurriage, Fr. from seignior.] Authority;
acknowledgment of power.

They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seignorage.
Locke.

To SE'IGNORISE, sêne'yûr-ize. v. a. [from seignior.] To lord over.

As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that seignoriseth hell. Fairfax.

SEINE, sêne. n. s. [re gne, Saxon; seine, senne, Fr.] A net used in fishing.

They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carew.

SE'INER, sêne'ûr. n. s. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.

Seiners complain, with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves.
Carew.

To SEIZE, sêze.²⁵⁰ v. a. [saisir, Fr.]

1. To take hold of; to gripe; to grasp.
Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied,
In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play,
Straight couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground,
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both,
Both griped in each paw. Milton.

2. To take possession of by force.

At last they seize
The sceptre, and regard not David's sons. Milton.

3. To take possession of; to lay hold on;
to invade suddenly.

In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

4. To take forcible possession of by law.

An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden.
It was judged, by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down.
Bacon.

5. To make possessed; to put in possession of.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encount'reth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way. Fairy Queen.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envied Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addis.

To SEIZE, sêze. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.

Fairest Correlia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be't lawful I take up what 's cast away? Shaksp.

Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing; even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Decay of Piety.

SE'IZIN, sê'zin. n. s. [saisine, Fr.]

1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin in fact, and seisin in law. Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seisin, in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as an enrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong disseized of them. Cowell.

2. The act of taking possession.

Every indulgent sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Decay of Piety.

Seisin is the same, in the canon law, as livery and seisin at the common law. Ayliffe.

3. The things possessed.

Many recoveries were had, as well by heirs as successors, of the seisin of their predecessors. Hale.

SE'IZURE, sê'zhûre.⁴⁵⁰ n. s. [from seize.]

1. The act of seizing.

2. The thing seized.

Sufficient that thy pray'rs are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou did'st transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days
Giv'n thee of grace. Milton.

3. The act of taking forcible possession.

Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shaksp.

In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole. Wotton.

Henry continued to hurn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Swift.

4. Gripe; possession.

And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shaksp.
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.

5. Catch.

Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable, to play upon it. Watts.

SE'LOUTH, sêl'kôôth. adj. [reld, rare,
Sax. and couth, known.] Rarely known; uncommon: Spenser. The same with uncouth.

SELDOM, sêl'dòm.¹⁶⁶ adv. [seldan, rarely; seldan, more rarely; seldor, most rarely. Seldan is supposed to be contracted from seldæn, or seld, rare, and hþænne, when, Sax. selden, Dutch; seltan, German.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.

Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker.

There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South.

Where the flight of fancy is managed with good judgment, the seldomer it is seen it is the more valuable. Grew.

SELDOMNESS, sêl'dòm-nês. n. s. [from seldom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the seldomness and oftiness of doing well. Hooker.

SELDOWN, sêl'd'shòne. adj. [seld and shown.] Seldom exhibited to view.

Seldown flames
Do press among the popular throngs. Shaksp.

TO SELE'CT, sê-lêkt'. v. a. [selectus, Lat.] To choose in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Knolles.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train selects. Dryden.

SELE'CT, sê-lêkt'. adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superiour excellence.

To the nuptial bow'r
I led her, hushing like the morn: all heav'n,
And happy constellations, on that hour
Shed their selectest influence. Milton.

Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way. Prior.

SELE'CTION, sê-lêkt'shûn. n. s. [selectio, Lat. from select.] The act of culling or choosing; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary. Brown.

SELE'CTNESS, sê-lêkt'nês. n. s. [from select.] The state of being select.

SELE'CTOR, sê-lêkt'ûr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [from select.] He who selects.

SELENOGRA'PHICAL, sêl-lê-nò-grâf'ê-kâl. }
SELENOGRA'PHICK, sêl-lê-nò-grâf'ik. }

adj. [selenographique, Fr. from selenography.] Belonging to selenography.

SELENOGRAPHY, sêl-lê-nòg'grâf-ê.⁵¹⁸ n. s. [selenographic, Fr. σεληνη and γραφω.] A description of the moon.

Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary. Brown.

SELF, sêlf. pronoun; plur. selves. [silba, Gothick; rylf, rylfa, Sax. self, selve, Dutch.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective. Very; particular; this above others; sometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first. Shaksp.

The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands,
Took off her life. Shaksp.

On these self hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Raleigh.

At that self moment enters Palamon
The gate of Venus. Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; the people hiss me, but I clap myself; thou lovest thyself, though the world scorns thee.

They cast to build a city,
And get themselves a name. Milton.

He permits
Within himself unworthy pow'rs to reign
Over free reason. Milton.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and so is concerned for itself, as far as that consciousness extends. Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as, myself will decide it; I myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective: joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

No more be mention'd then of violence Against ourselves, or wilful barrenness. Milton.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.
A horse well bitten, which himself did dress. Dryden.

And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
I learn to pity woes so like my own. Dryden.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel. F. Queen.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy of our endeavour. Hale.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Watts.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakespeare is often harsh.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self-accusing look, finding that in herself she had shot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than she minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passionate do deceive
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.

Till Stephon's plaining voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like ease he knew. Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it should be to self-destruction bound? Sid.
Before the door sat self-consuming care,
Day and night keeping wary watch and ward. Fairy Queen.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use. Shaksp.

I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought 't have spoke thereof;
But being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. Shakspere.

Nor know I aught
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us. Shakspere.

He walks and that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore. Shakspere.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Shakspere.

His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self-affrighted tremble at his sin. Shakspere.

The stars above us govern our conditions;
Else one self-mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. Shakspere.

I'm made of that self-metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth. Shakspere.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same fight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth. Shakspere.

He may do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is. Shakspere.

But lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song. Shakspere.

He conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,
Tript me behind: being down, insulted, rail'd,
Got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd. Shaksp.

The Everlasting fixt
His cannon 'gainst self-slaughter. Shakspere.

Know if his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course. He's full of alteration
And self-reproving. Shakspere.

More nor less to others paying,
Than by self-offences weighing;
Shame to him whose cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking. Shakspere.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons,
Point against point. Shakspere.

Self-love, my licge, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting. Shakspere.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakspere.

His lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride. Shakspere.

You promis'd
To lay aside self-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition. Shaksp.

In their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall. Genesis.

The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles.

Hast thou set up nothing in competition with God; no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own?

Up through the spacious palace passed she
To where the king's proudly reposed head,
If any can be soft to tyranny,

And self-tormenting sin, had a soft bed.

With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferments, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence.

Repent me sin; but if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids.

Him fast sleeping soon he found,
In labyrinth of many a round self-roll'd.

Of times nothing proats more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd.

Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous, to correspond with heav'n.

So virtue giv'n for lost,
Deprest and overthrow'n, as seem'd,

Like that self-begotten urd,
In th' Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows our thurd,
And say were white a holocaust,

From out her ashy womb now team'd.

He sorrows now, repeats, and prays contrite,
My motions in him: longer than they move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,

Self-iest.

Seneca approves this self-homicide.

Thyself from flattering self-conceit defend,
Nor what thou dost not know, to know pretend.

Man's that savage beast, whose mind,
From reason to self-love declin'd,
Delights to prey upon his kind.

Farewell, my tears;
And my just anger, be no more confid'd
To vain complaints, or self-avouring silence.

They are yet more mad to think that men may rest by weath, though they die in self-murder, the greatest sin.

Are not these strange self-delusions, and yet attested by common experience?

If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-denial and humility.

If a man would have a devout, humble, sin-abhorring, self-denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to obtain it than by praying himself into it.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination, by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul.

A fatal self-imposture, such as defeats the design, and destroys the force, of all religion.

When he intends to bereave the world of an illustrious person, he may cast him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper, who shall make a shift to cure him into his grave.

Neglect of friends can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self-sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-murder has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime.

A self-conceited fop will swallow any thing.

From Athens though your ancient lineage came;
Yet my self-conscious worth, your high renown,
Your virtue, through the neighb'ring nations blown.

He has given you all the commendation which his self-sufficiency could afford to any.

Below yon sphere
There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt,
Self-center'd and unmov'd.

All these receiv'd their birth from other things,

But from himself the phoenix only springs;
Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
In which he burn'd, another and the same.

The burning fire, that shone so bright,
Flew off all sudden with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space,
Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze.

Thou first, O king! release the rights of sway;
Pow'r, self-restrain'd, the people best obey.

Eighteen and nineteen are equal to thirty-seven, by the same self-evidence that one and two are equal to three.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet greater pride and self-conceitedness, when we take upon us to set another right in his story.

I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-consciousness, as I am for what I did the last moment.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between; the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected.

This self-existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence, in himself; for he that is above, or existeth without any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence.

Body cannot be self-existent, because it is not self-movant; for motion is not of the essence of body, because we may have a definitive conception of body abstracted from that of motion; wherefore motion is something else besides body, something without which body may be conceived to exist.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self-opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find,
Till some first cause, some self-existent mind,
Who form'd and rules all nature, is assign'd.

If a first body may to any place
Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
'Tis plain it then may absent be from all,
Who then will this a self-existence call?

Shall nature, erring from her first command,
Self-preservation, fall by her own hand?

Low nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegmatic temper: a writer of this complexion gropes his way softly amongst self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdities.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults.

The guilt of perjury is so self-evident, that it was always reckoned amongst the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason.

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience.

Men had better own their ignorance, than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative.

Thus we see, in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading are they and self-diffusive.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, much needs he infinitely self-imparting and communicative.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving, self-determining principle.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch.

By the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd.

Living and understanding substances do clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning.

The philosophers, and even the Epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed at all.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put; it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in.

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions.

This is not to be done in a rash and self-sufficient manner; but with an humble dependence on divine grace, while we walk among sinners.

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable.

I heard in Crete this island's name;
For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came Self-banish'd thence.

Achilles' courage is serious and untractable; that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding.

I doom, to fix the gallant ship,
A mark of vengeance on the sable deep;
To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train
No more unlicens'd thus to brave the main.

What is loose love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wind desire,
A wand'ring self-consuming fire.

In dubious thought the king awaits,
And self-considering, as he stands, debates.

By mighty Jove's command,
Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land;
For who self-mov'd with weary wing would sweep
Such length of ocean?

They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown
Employ their pains to spurn some others down;
And, while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contenting wits become the sport of fools.

It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modestly allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault.

No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion, or self-conviction.

SE'LFHEAL, sêlf'hêle. n. s. [brunella, Lat.]
A plant, the same with sanicle.

SE'LFISH, sêlf'ish. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.

What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it?

Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair, list under reason, and deserve her care;
Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name.

SE'LFISHNESS, sêlf'ish-nêss. n. s. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.

This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base dross of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect submission of our wills to the will of God.

SE'LFISHLY, sêlf'ish-lê. adv. [from selfish.]

fish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.

He can your merit selfishly approve,
And shew the sense of it without the love. Pope.

SE'LFsame, sél'sám. adj. [self and same.] Exactly the same.

I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you. Hooker.

Flight pursued one way the self-same hour. Milton.

I have been hase,
Base ev'n to him from whom I did receive
All that a son could to a parent give:
Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind;
Th' ungrateful does a more ungrateful find. Dryd.

SE'LIon, sél'le-ún. n. s. [selio, low Lat.] A ridge of land. Ainsworth.

SELL, sél. pronoun. [for self.] Sell is retained in Scotland for self, and sells in the plural for selves.

They turn round like grindle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives, and sells.
Ben Jonson.

SELL, sél. n. s. [selles, French; sella, Lat.] A saddle. Obsolete.

Turning to that place, in which
He left his lofty steed with golden sells,
And goodly gorgeous barbes, him found not there.
Fairy Queen.

To SELL, sél. v. a. [ÿllan, Saxon; sela, Islandick.]

1. To give for a price; to vend; the word correlative to buy.

The Midianites sold him into Egypt, unto Poti-phar. Genesis.

Let us sell him to the Ishmaelites. Genesis.

This sense is likewise mistress of an art,
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell.
Davies.

All the inns and public-houses are obliged to furnish themselves with corn, which is sold out at a much dearer rate than 'tis bought up. Addison.

You have made an order that ale should be sold for three-halfpence a quart. Swift.

2. To betray for money: as, he sold his country.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude. Shaksp.

To SELL, sél. v. n. To have commerce or traffick with one.

I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you. Shaksp.

Consult not with a buyer of selling. Ecclesiasticus.

SE'LLANDER, sél'lán-dúr.⁹³ n. s. A dry scab in a horse's hough or pastern. Ainsworth.

SE'LLER, sél'lúr.⁹³ n. s. [from sell.] The person that sells; vender.

To things of sale a seller's praise belongs. Shaksp.

The name of the agent, of the seller, notary, and witnesses, are in both instruments. Addison.

SE'LVAGE, sél'vidje.⁹⁰ n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skinner thinks selvage is said as salvage, from its saving the cloth.] The edge of cloth where it is closed by complicating the threads.

Make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain from the selvage in the coupling. Exodus.

SELVES, sélvz. The plural of self.

Consciousness being interrupted, and we losing sight of our past selves, doubts are raised whether we are the same. Locke.

SE'MBLABLE, sém'blá-bl. adj. [semblable, French.] Like; resembling.

Then be abhor'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea himself, Timon disdains. Shaksp.

With semblable reason we might expect a regularity in the winds. Brown.

SE'MBLABLY, sém'blá-blè. adv. [from semblable.] With resemblance.

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Semblably furnish'd like the king himself. Shaksp.

SE'MBLANCE, sém'bláns. n. s. [semblance, French; from semblant.]

1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues, that surmount
Her natural graces, that extinguish art:
Repeat their semblance often. Shakespeare.

She's but the sign and semblance of her honour;
Behold how like a maid she blushes here!

O, what authority and shew of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Shakespeare.

He with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears.

This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells. Woodward.

It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice. Rogers.

2. Appearance; show; figure.

Be you the soldier, for you likest are,
For manly semblance, and for skill in war. Spenser.

Their semblance kind, and mild their gestures were,
Peace in their hands, and friendship in their face. Fairfax.

All that is fair and good in thy divine
Semblance, and in thy beauty's heav'nly ray, United I beheld. Milton.

SE'MBLANT, sém'blánt. adj. [semblant, French.] Like; resembling; having the appearance of any thing. Little used.

Thy picture, like thy fame,
Entire may last; that, as their eyes survey
The semblant shade, men yet unborn may say,
Thus great, thus gracious, look'd Britannia's queen;
Her brow thus smooth'd, her look was thus serene. Prior.

SE'MBLANT, sém'blánt. n. s. Show; figure; resemblance; representation. Not in use.

Her purpose was not such as she did feign,
Ne yet her person such as it was seen;
But under simple shew, and semblant plain,
Lurks false Duessa, secretly unsecn. Fairy Queen.

Full lively is the semblant, tho' the substance dead. Spenser.

SE'MBLATIVE, sém'blá-tív.⁵¹² adj. [from semblant.] Suitable; accommodate; fit; resembling.

Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and ruby; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ shrill and sound;
And all as semblative a woman's part. Shakespeare.

To SE'MBLE, sém'bl.⁴⁰⁶ v. n. [sembler, Fr.] To represent; to make a likeness. Little used.

Let Europe, sav'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antonine's,
Where sembling art may carve the fair effect,
And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

SE'MI, sém'mè. n. s. [Latin.] A word which, used in composition, signifies half: as, semicircle, half a circle.

SE'MIBREVE sém'mè-bréf. n. s. [semibreve, French.]

Semibreve is a note in musick relating to time and is the last in augmentation. It is commonly called the master-note, or measure-note, or time-note, as being of a certain determinate measure or length of time by itself; and all the other notes of augmentation and diminution are adjusted to its value. Harris.

He takes my hand, and as a still which stays
A semibreve 'twixt each drop, he niggardly,
As loth to enrich me, so tells many a ye. Donne.

SEMICI'RCLE, sém-mè-sér'kl. n. s. [semicirculus, Latin; semi and circle.] A half round; part of a circle divided by the diameter.

Black hrovs
Become some women best, so they be in a semicircle
Or a half moon, made with a pen. Shakespeare.

Has he given the lyc
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? Shakespeare.

The chains that held my left leg gave me the liberty of walking backward and forward in a semicircle. Swift.

SEMICI'RCLED, sém-mè-sér'kl'd. }
SEMICI'RCULAR, sém-mè-sér'ku-lár.³³⁰ }

adj. [semi and circular.] Half round.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semicircled farthingale. Shakespeare.

The rainbow is caused by the rays of the sun falling upon a roid and opposite cloud, whereof some reflected, some refracted, beget the semicircular variety we call the rainbow. Brown.

The seas are inclosed between the two semicircular moles that surround it. Addison.

SEMICO'LN, sém-mè-kò'lón. n. s. [semi and κόλον.] Half a colon; a point made thus [:] to note a greater pause than that of a comma.

SEMIDIA'METER, sém-mè-di-ám'è-túr.⁹⁹ n. s. [semi and diameter.] Half the line which, drawn through the centre of a circle, divides it into two equal parts; a straight line drawn from the circumference to the centre of a circle.

Their difference is as little considerable as a semidiameter of the earth in two measures of the highest heaven, the one taken from the surface of the earth, the other from its centre: the disproportion is just nothing. More.

The force of this instrument consists in the disproportion of distance betwixt the semidiameter of the cylinder and the semidiameter of the rundle with the spokes. Wilkins.

SEMIDIAPHANE'ITY, sém-mè-di-á-fá-né'è-tè. n. s. [semi and diaphaneity.] Half transparency; imperfect transparency.

The transparency or semidiaphaneity of the superficial corpuscles of bigger bodies, may have an interest in the production of their colours. Boyle.

SEMIFLORET, sêm-mê-flô'rèt. n. s. [semi and floret.] Among florists, an half floret, which is tubulous at the beginning like a floret, and afterwards expanded in the form of a tongue. Bailey.

SEMIFLUID, sêm-mê-flù'id. adj. [semi and fluid.] Imperfectly fluid.

Phlegm, or petuite, is a sort of semifluid; it being so far solid that one part draws along several other parts adhering to it, which doth not happen in a perfect fluid; and yet no part will draw the whole mass, as happens in a perfect solid. Arbuthnot.

SEMILUNAR, sêm-mê-lù'nâr.⁸⁹ } adj.

SEMILUNARY, sêm-mê-lù'nâr-ê. } [semilunaire, French; semi and luna, Latin.] Resembling in form a half moon.

The eyes are guarded with a semilunar ridge. Grew.

SEMIMETAL, sêm'mê-mêt-tl. n. s. [semi and metal.] Half metal; imperfect metal.

Semimetals are metallic fossils, heavy, opaque, of a bright glittering surface, not malleable under the hammer; as quicksilver, antimony, cobalt, the arsenicks, bismuth, zink, with its ore calamine: to these may be added the semimetallick recrements, tutty and pampholyx. Hill.

SEMINAL, sêm'è-nâl.⁸⁸ adj. [seminal, Fr. seminis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to seed.

2. Contained in the seed; radical.

Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generations, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials. Glanville.

Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminal virtue, yet we may manage a sickly constitution, and preserve a strong one. Swift.

SEMINALITY, sêm'è-nâl'è-tè. n. s. [from semen, Latin.]

1. The nature of seed.

As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part. they conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown.

2. The power of being produced.

In the seeds of wheat there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown.

SEMINARY, sêm'è-nâ-rê.⁸¹² n. s. [seminaire, French; seminarium, from semino, Latin.]

1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, a parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be sempiternal, or eternal a parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.

Should we the long-depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run
To some one man whose being ne'er begun
If that one man was sempiternal, why Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.

SEMPITERNITY, sêm-pê-têr'nè-tè. n. s. [sempiternitas, Lat.] Future duration without end.

The future eternity or sempiternity of the world being admitted, though the eternity a parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SEMISTRESS, sêm'strês.⁸¹⁸ n. s. [peamerre, Saxon.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred semstresses were employed to make me shirts and linen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Gulliver.

We debate
The nature of our seats, which will in time break ope

The locks o' th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles. Shakspeare.

There they shall sound
Their government, and their great senate chuse.
Milton.
He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our counsel had not gain'd.
Denham.

Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest.
Dryden.
SENATEHOUSE, sên'nât-hôuse. n. s. [senate sent. [sandgan, Gothick; pendan, Sax. senden, Dutch.]

1. To despatch from one place to another:
used both of persons and things.

He sent letters by posts on horseback. Esther.
His citizens sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us. Luke.

There have been commissions Sent down among them, which have flaw'd the heart

Of all their loyalties. Shaksp.
My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along. Milton.

To remove him I decree,
And send him from the garden forth to till
The ground whence he was taken, fitter soil.
Milton.

His wounded men he first sends off to shore.
Dryden.

Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.

I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran.
Jeremiah.

But first, whom shall we send
In search of this new world? Here he had need
All circumspection, and we now no less Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send
The weight of all and our last hope relies. Milton.

3. To transmit by another; not to bring.
They sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas. Acts.

4. To dismiss another as agent; not to go.
God will deign

To visit oft the dwellings of just men
Delighted, and with frequent intercourse,
Thither will send his winged messengers
On errands of supernal grace. Milton.

5. To grant as from a distant place; as, if God send life.

I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Genesis.

O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Psalms.

6. To inflict, as from a distance.

The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto.
Deuteronomy.

7. To emit; to immit; to produce

The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves.
Bacon.

The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Cheyne.

8. To diffuse; to propagate.
Cherubic songs by night from neigh'ring hills
Aerial music send. Milton.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tire went round:
The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,
And through th' Achaian cities send the sound.
Pope.

9. To let fly; to cast or shoot.

To SEND, sênd. v. n.

1. To despatch a message.

I have made bold to send in to your wife:
My suit is that she will to Desdemona Procure me some access. Shaksp.

This son of a murderer hath sent to take away
my head. Kings.

They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. To send for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me, some few of you, and see the place;
and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon.

He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,
He threw his aged arms about my neck,
And, seeing that I wept, he press'd me close.
Dryden.

SENDER, sênd'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from send.] He that sends.

This was a merry message.
—We hope to make the sender blush at it.
Shaksp.

Love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence. Shaksp.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent.
Milton.

SENESCENCE, sê-nês'sense.⁵¹⁰ n. s. [senes- co, Lat.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay; without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SENESCHAL, sên'nês-kâl.³⁶² n. s. [senes- chal, Fr. of uncertain original.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts or domestick ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made sir John Arundel, of Trevice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Carew.

Marshall'd feast,
Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals;
The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton.

The seneschal rebuk'd, in haste withdrew;
With equal haste a menial train pursue. Pope.

plant.

SE'NILE, sê'nile.¹⁴⁰ adj. [senilis, Latin.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time, have happily matched a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of fancy.
Boyle.

SE'NIOR, sê'nê-ûr, or sêne'yûr. n. s. [se- nior, Latin.]

1. One older than another; one who, on account of longer time, has some superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whitgift.

2. An aged person.
A senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY, sê-nê-ô'r-ê-tê. n. s. [from se- nior.] Eldership; priority of birth.

As in insurrections the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity; so, in this case, the first provoker was, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt. Gov. of the Tongue.

He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be consigned to his care by the right due to his seni- ority. Broome.

SE'NNA, sên'nâ. n. s. [sena, Lat.] A physical tree.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence? Shaksp.

Senna tree is of two sorts; the bastard senna, and the scorpion senna; both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mortimer.

SE'NNIGHT, sên'nît.¹⁴⁴ n. s. [contracted from sevensnight.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORT-NIGHT.

If mention is made, on Monday, of Thursday sennight, the Thursday that follows the next Thursday, is meant.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a se'nnight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.
Shaksp.

SENO'ULAR, sê-nôk'kù-lâr. adj. [seni and oculus, Lat.] Having six eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some senocular. Derham.

SENSA'TION, sên-sâ'shûn. n. s. [sensation, Fr. sensatio, school Lat.] Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glanville.

The brain, distempered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protracted to the tympanium, causes the sensation of noise. Harvey.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE, sênsê. n. s. [sens, Fr. sensus,
Latin.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived; the sight, touch, hearing, smell, taste.

This pow'r is sense, which from abroad doth bring
The colour, taste, and touch, and scent, and sound,

The quantity and shape of ev'ry thing
Within earth's centre or heav'n's circle found:

And though things sensible be numberless,
But only five the sense's organs be;

And in those five all things their forms express,
Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear, or see.
Davies.

Then is the soul a nature which contains
The pow'r of sense within a greater pow'r,
Which doth employ and use the sense's pains;

But fits and rules within her private bow'r. Davies.

Both contain
Within them ev'ry lower faculty

Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste.

Milton.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing.

Holder.

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurion throughout the whole.

Bacon.

If we had nought but sense, then only they should have sound minds which have their senses sound;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.
Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind.

Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Basilius, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension.

Sidney.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far.

Milton.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge.

Shakspeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps.
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses.

Shakspeare.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities which we call natural light and reason, and common sense.

Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis sense,

Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:
A light within yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Notre have it not to give.

Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:
You see he knows not me, his natural father;
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy.

Dryden.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.

I speak my private but impartial sense
With freedom, and, I hope, without offence.

Roscommon.

8. Consciousness; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith.

Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices.

L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense, to be preserved from sin is not impossible.

Hooker.

My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense.

Shakspeare.

A haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves.

More.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory.

Hale.

In one sense, it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of christianity.

Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words.

Watts.

SENSED, sên'séd. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. Not in use.

Let the sciolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes.

Glanville.

SENSEFUL, sênse'fûl. adj. [from sense and full.] Reasonable; judicious. Not used.
Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation.

Norris.

SENSELESS, sên'slês. adj. [from sense.]

1. Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom which they drunk
Their blood with secret filth infected bath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion direful deadly stunk.

Fairy Queen.

The ears are senseless that should give us hearing
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd.

Shakspeare.

You blocks! you worse than senseless things!

Shakspeare.

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones.

Locke.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy.

The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows.

Rowe.

3. Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; blockish.

They would repeat this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them.

Clarendon.

If we be not extremely foolish, thankless, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to cure sorrow than a great trouble is.

Taylor.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny.

Tillotson.

She saw her favour was misplac'd;
The fellows had a wretched taste:
She needs must tell them to their face,
They were a senseless stupid race.

Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgment; contrary to reason.

It is a senseless thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preserved by religion.

South.

Other creatures, as well as monks, little wiser than they, destroy their young by senseless fondness, and too much embracing.

Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolitus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpalice in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and over-cold judgment.

Peacham.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious: with of.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Fatten'd in vice; so callous and so gross;
He sins and sees not, senseless of his loss.

Dryden.

Hear this,
You unhou'd, lawless, rambling libertines,
Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed.

Southern.

SENSELESSLY, sên'slês-lê. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner; stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully.

Locke.

SENSELESSNESS, sên'slês-nês. n. s. [from senseless.] Folly; unreasonableness; absurdity; stupidity.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain, from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the nether jaw with the upper.

Grete.

SENSIBILITY, sên-sê-bil'ê-tê. n. s. [sensibilité, Fr.]

1. Quickness of sensation.
2. Quickness of perception; delicacy.

Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul; it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hurtful.

Adison.

SENSIBLE, sên'sê-bl'ô. adj. [sensible, Fr. sensibilis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambrick were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.

Shakspeare.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls.

Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty.

Glanville.

2. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible: it resteth therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unsensible as are to be known.

Hooker.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still:

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight?

Shakspeare.

The space left and acquired in every sensible moment in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense.

Glanville.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter.

Newton.

The greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability so to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects.

Rogers.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it.

Arbuthnot.

3. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by so many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain.

Temple.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses; having perception by the mind or senses.

This must needs remove

The sensible of pain.

Milton.

I saw you in the east at your first arising: I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian.

Dryden.

I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep; but I do say, he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it.

Locke.

The versification is as beautiful as the description complete; every ear must be sensible of it.

Broome.

5. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,

I should not make so great a shew of zeal.

Shakspeare.

6. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected.

Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong,
 Restrain'd by shame, was forc'd to hold my tongue.
Dryden.

7. Convinced; persuaded. A low use.
 They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatick; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise.

I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SEN'SIBLENESS, sên'sé-bl-nês. n. s. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.
 2. Actual perception by mind or body.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.
 The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medica-ments. Sharp.

4. Painful consciousness.
 There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SEN'SIBLY, sên'sé-bl-ê. adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.
 He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed
 Of that self-blood that first gave life to you. Shaks.
 A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly.
Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turn'd alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arbutnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses.
 That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

5. [In low language.] Judiciously; reasonably.

SEN'SITIVE, sên'sé-tiv-ê. adj. [sensitif, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated-so as not to fall into sin, yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SEN'SITIVE Plant, sên'sé-tiv-plânt. n. s.
 [mimosa, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many stamina in the centre:
 these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Miller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen that the plant, which well
 We name the sensitive, should move and feel?
 Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
 Aud with quick horror fly the neighb'ring hand?
Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SEN'SITIVELY, sên'sé-tiv-lê. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SEN'SO'RIOUS, sên-sò'r-ê-ûm. } n. s.
 SE'NSORY, sên'sò-r-ê. ⁵⁵⁷ } [Lat.]

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As sound in a bell, or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensorium 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton.

2. Organ of sensation.
 That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Bentley.

SENSUAL, sên'shù-âl. ⁴⁵² adj. [sensual,
 French.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
 The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine.
Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose
 Belial, the dissolutes spirit that fell;
 The sensuallest, and after Asmodai
 The fleshliest, incubus. Milton.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity.
Atterbury.

SENSUALIST, sên'shù-âl-ist. n. s. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers. South.

SENSUA'LITY, sên-shù-âl-ê-tê. n. s. [from sensual.] Devotedness to the senses; addiction to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood
 Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
 That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

Kill not her quick'ning power with surfeitings;
 Mar not her sense with sensuality:

Cast not her serious wit on idle things,
 Make not her free-will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. South.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much con-firm'd by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples.

To SE'NSUALIZE, sên'shù-â-lize. v. a. [from sensual.] To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

Not to suffer one's self to be sensitized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe. Pope.

SEN'SUALLY, sên'shù-âl-ê. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

SEN'SUOUS, sên'shù-ûs. ⁴⁵² adj. [from sense.] Tender; pathetick; full of passion. Not in use.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate. Milton.

SENT, sênt. The participle passive of send.

I make a decree that all Israel go with thee for-asmuch as thou art sent of the king. Ezra.

SE'NTENCE, sên'tênsê. n. s. [sentence,
 Fr. sententia, Latin.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounceth of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.

How will I give sentence against them. Jeremiah.

If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines.
Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many?
Bacon.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass?
Milton.

3. A maxim, an axiom, generally moral.

A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Broome.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.
 An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding,
 and shewing of hard sentences were found in Daniel.
Daniel.

To SE'NTENCE, sên'tênsê. v. a. [sentencier,
 Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.
 After this cold consid'rance sentence me;
 And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
 What I have done that misbecame my place. Shak.

Came the mild judge and intercessor both
 To sentence man. Milton.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.

Could that decree from our brother come?
Nature herself is sentenc'd in your doom:
Piety is no more. Dryden.

Illness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes. Temple.

SENTENTIOUS, sên-tên-shùs. ^{293 312} adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sentence.] Comprehension in a sentence.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousness of common conceits with us. Brown.

SENTENTIOUS, sên-tên-shùs. ^{293 312} adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sentence.]

1. Abounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetick.

He is very swift and sententious. Shakespeare.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues:

Sententious showers! O let them fall!

Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms,

Foretold us useful and sententious truths. Waller

How he apes his sire,

Ambitiously sententious. Addison.

2. Comprising sentences.
The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them, as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grev.

SENTENTIOUSLY, sên-tên-shùs-lê. adv. [from sententious.] In short sentences; with striking brevity.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon.

Nausicaa delivers her judgment sententiously, to give it more weight. Broome.

SENTENTIOUSNESS, sên-tên-shùs-nês. n. s. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryden.

SENTERY, sên-têr-ê. n. s. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art, can then

Suffice, or what evasion hear him safe

Through the strict senteries, and stations thick

Of angels watching round? Milton.

SENTIENT, sên-shê-ênt. ⁵⁴² adj. [sentiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having perception.

This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that, without any formal syl-logism, presseth him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT, sên-shê-ênt. n. s. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passibus æquis, with the body whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible. Glanville.

SENTIMENT, sên-tê-mênt. n. s. [sentiment, Fr.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.
The consideration of the reason why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.

Alike to council or th' assembly came,

With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentence in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments. Dennis.

SENTINEL, sên-tê-nêl. n. s. [sentinelle, Fr. from sentio, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise.

Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels. Shaksp.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends,

it commonly comes to the king's ear. Bacon.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing pow'r,

Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel,

Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tow'r;

And though both see, yet both but one thing tell. Davies.

Love to our citadel resorts,

Through those deceitful sallyports;

Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

These senses are situated in the head, as sentinels in a watch-tower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Ray.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they sleep; but even this would be unsoldierlike. Broome.

SENTRY, sên-trê. n. s. [corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise.

If I do send, dispatch

Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve

For a short holding. Shakespeare.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep,

And set their sentries to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow,

A wakeful sentry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentinel.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep,

O'er my slumbers sentry keep;

Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes,

Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.

Herc toils and death, and death's half-brother,

sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

SEPARABILITY, sêp-pâr-â-bil'ê-tê. n. s. [from separable.] The quality of admitting disunion or discernption.

Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glanville.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE, sêp-pâr-â-bl. ⁵⁰⁵ adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptible of disunion; discernible.
The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbuthnot.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something; with from.
Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that tho' they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

SEPARABLENESS, sêp-pâr-â-bl-nês. n. s. [from separable.] Capableness of being separated.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle

To entail him and 's heirs unto the crown,
What is it but to make thy sepulchre?
Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king.

Shakspeare.

There, where the virgin's son his doctrine taught,
His miracles, and our redemption wrought;
Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praises sung,
And on his sepulchre my offering hung.

Sandys.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients.

Wilkins.

If not one common sepulchre contains
Our bodies, or one urn our last remains,
Yet Ceyx and Aleyone shall join.

Dryden.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.

Shaksp.

I am glad to see that time survive,
Where merit is not sepulchred alive;
Where good men's virtues them to honours bring,
And not to dangers.

Ben Jonson.

Thou so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

Milton.

Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,
And, deep surcharg'd, by sandy mountains lie,
Obscurely sepulchred.

Prior.

SE'PULTURE, sêp'pûl-tûre.¹⁷⁷ n. s. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepulture a marble tomb of her own.

Brown.

Where we may royal sepulture prepare;
With speed to Melesinda bring relief,
Recal her spirits, and moderate her grief.

Dryden.

In England, sepulture or burial of the dead may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased.

Ayliffe.

SEQUA'CIOUS, sé-kwâ'shûs.⁴¹⁴ adj. [sequacis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;

But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard,

And straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n.

Dryden.

Above those superstitious horrors that enslave
The fond sequacious herd, to mystick faith
And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few
The glorious stranger hail.

Thomson.

2. Ductile; pliant.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded.

Ray.

SEQUA'CITY, sé-kwâ's-ê-té. n. s. [from sequax, Latin.] Ductility; toughness.

Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lentor, and sequacity.

Bacon.

1. Conclusion; succeeding part.

If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me.

Shakspeare.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor: but was he not also successful? True, but still he was poor: grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised

South.

2. Consequence; event.

Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail or swerve, and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever dependeth on it?

Hooker.

In these he put two weights,

The sequel each of parting and of fight.

Milton.

3. Consequence inferred; consequentialness.

What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is only a deacon.

Whitgift.

SE'QUENCE, sê'kwênsê. n. s. [from sequor, Latin.]

Shakspeare.

To the which place a poor sequester'd stag, That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt, Did come to languish.

Shaksp.

In shady how'r,

More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd, Pan or Sylvanus never slept.

Milton.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess, Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless, Bear me, oh hear me, to sequester'd scenes Of bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens.

Pope.

2. To put aside; to remove

Although I had wholly sequester'd my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in hooks, what I thought pertinent to this affair.

Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate.

A thing as seasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action.

Hooker.

4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others: as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions.

It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragouts, which sequestered him; and, in a word, he came by his poverty as sinfully as some usually do by their riches.

South.

SEQUE'STRABLE, sê-kwês'trâ-bl. adj. [from sequestrate.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation.

Hartshorn, and divers other hodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not uneasily sequestrable salt.

Boyle.

Wherever death doth please t' appear,
Seas, serenés, swords, shot, sickness, all are there.

Ben Jonson.

To SER'NE, sè-rène'. v. a. [serener, Fr. sereno, Latin.]

1. To calm; to quiet.
2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.

Take care

Thy muddy bev'rage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser ropy lces.

Philips.

SER'NELY, sè-rène'lè. adv. [from serene.]

1. Calmly; quietly.
2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.
Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up.

Locke.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair:

Prior.

Soft fell her words as flew the air.

SER'NENESS, sè-rène'nés. n. s. [from serenc.] Serenity.

Ward.

The chasms of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series.

Pope.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas! and thine are born to know.

Pope.

SER'RIous, sé-rè-ûs.³¹⁴ adj. [serieux, Fr. serius, Latin.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Ah! my friends! while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who striveth against the obstinacy of our hearts; the holy scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the holy sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters; the whole creation is serious in serving God, and us; all that are in heaven or hell are serious: how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that they came not from the priesthood, but the court; and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted.

Young.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter.

Shakspeare.

There's nothing serious in mortality;

All is but toys.

Shakspeare.

SER'RIously, sé-rè-ûs-lè. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what borrow and confusion must needs surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another.

South.

All laugh to find

Unthinking plainness so o'erspread thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a God.

Dryden.

Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Laetantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors.

Addison.

SER'RIousNESS, sé-rè-ûs-nés. n. s. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it.

Atterbury.

The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day.

Addison.

SERMOCINA'TION, sér-mò-sè-nà'shùn. n. s. [sermocinatio, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.

SERMOCINA'TOR, sér-mò-sè-nà'tùr. n. s. [sermocinor, Lat.] A preacher; a speech-maker.

These obstreperous sermocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar.

Howel.

SER'MON, sér'mùn.¹⁰⁰ ¹⁶⁸ n. s. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.] A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so sound and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed.

Hooker.

This our life, exempt from public haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Sermons be heard, yet not so many
As left no time to practise any:

He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again.

Crashaw.

Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons have read a lecture of atheism in their practice.

South.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught.

Dryden.

To SER'MON, sér'mùn. v. a. [sermoner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned at large, than thus cloudily inwrapped in allegorical devices.

Spenser.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther:
No villanous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart.

Shakspeare.

SER'MOUNTAIN, or Seseli, sér'mòùn-tîn. n. s. [silex, Latin.] A plant.

SERO'SITY, sé-ròs'sè-tè. n. s. [serosité, French.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In these the salt and lixiviated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds.

Brown.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, œdematose, or schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour.

Arbuthnot.

SER'ROUS, sé'rùs. adj. [sereux, Fr. serosus, Lat.]

1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.
2. Adapted to the serum.

This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a dropsy by a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium.

Arbuthnot.

SER'RPENT, sér'pènt. n. s. [serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often ve-nomous. They are divided into two kinds: the viper, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fill'd up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enfold,
That horror made to all that did behold. F. Queen.
She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart. Shaksp.
They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wau'd'ring, found their way. Milton.

The chief I challeng'd; he, whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent wazes of deceit,
Eludes my search. Pope.

SE'RPENTINE, sêr'pên-tine.¹⁴⁹ adj. [serpentinus, Latin; from serpent.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am. Sidney.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock. Brown.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew
Thy inward fraud. Milton.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have I know not what of life and sceming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent. Dryden.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuons.

Nor can the sun
Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rose to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozening line
Steals by that point, and so is serpentine. Donne.
His hand th' adorned firmament display'd,
Those serpentine yet constant motions made. Sandys.

How many spacious countries does the Rbine,
In winding banks, and mazes serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits on Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main? Blackmore.

SE'RPENTINE, sêr'pên-tine. n. s. [dracantium.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SE'RPENTINE Stone, sêr'pên-tine-stone'. n. s.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophites, was green also, but variegated with spots of white, the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected. Hill.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four-and-twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinable for the cure of the spleen and gravel. Wotton.

SERPENT'S Tongue, sêr'pên-ts-tung'. n. s. [ophioglosson.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SERPET, sêr'pit. n. s. A basket. Ainsw.

6. Profession of respect uttered or sent.

I am a woman, lacking wit To make a seemly answer to such persons; Pray do my service to his majesty. Shakspeare.

7. Obedience; submission.

Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law My services are bound. Shakspeare.

God requires no man's service upon hard and unreasonable terms. Tillotson.

8. Act on the performance of which possession depends.

Although they built castles and made freeholders, yet were there no tenures and services reserved to the crown; but the lords drew all the respect and dependency of the common people unto themselves. Davies.

9. Actual duty; office.

The order of human society cannot be preserved, nor the services requisite to the support of it be supplied, without a distinction of stations, and a long subordination of offices. Rogers.

10. Employment; business.

If stations of power and trust were constantly made the rewards of virtue, men of great abilities would endeavour to excel in the duties of a religious life, in order to qualify themselves for publick service. Swift.

11. Military duty.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, or is put to a piece or pike, he maketh a worthy soldier. Spenser.

At the parliament at Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in sea-service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were yet set open. Wotton.

12. A military achievement.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done, at such and such a breach. Shakspeare.

13. Purpose; use.

All the vessels of the king's house are not for uses of honour; some be common stuff, and for mean services, yet profitable. Spelman.

14. Useful office; advantage conferred.

The stork's plea, when taken in a net, was, the service she did in picking up venomous creatures. L'Estrange.

The clergy prevent themselves from doing much service to religion, by affecting so much to converse with each other, and caring so little to mingle with the laity. Swift.

Gentle streams visit populous towns in their course, and are at once of ornament and service to them. Pope.

That service may really be done, the medicine must be given in larger quantities. Mead.

15. Favour.

To thee a woman's services are due, My fool usurps my body. Shakspeare.

16. Publick office of devotion.

According to this form of theirs, it must stand for a rule, No sermon, no service. Hooker.

If that very service of God in the Jewish synagogues, which our Lord did approve and sanctify with his own presence, had so large portions of the law and prophets, together with the many prayers and psalms read day by day, as equal in a manner the length of ours, and yet in that respect was never thought to deserve blame; is it now an offence, that the like measure of time is bestowed in the like manner? Hooker.

I know no necessity why private and single abilities should quite jumble out and deprive the church of the joint abilities and concurrent gifts of many learned and godly men, such as the composers of the service book were. King Charles.

The congregation was discomposed, and divine service broken off. Watts.

17. Course; order of dishes.

Acceptance of large grace, from servile fear
To filial. Milton.

Even fortune rules no more a servile land,
Where exil'd tyrants still by turns command. Pope.

2. Fawning; cringing.

The most servile flattery is lodged the most easily in the grossest capacity; for their ordinary conceit drawth a yielding to their greater, and then have they not wit to discern the right degree of duty.

He must bend the servile knee,
And fawning take the splendid robber's boon. Thomson.

SE'RVILELY, sêr'vil-lê. adv. [from servile.]

Meanly; slavishly.

T' each changing news they chang'd affections bring,

And servilely from fate expect a king. Dryden.
He affects a singularity in his actions and thoughts, rather than servilely to copy from the wisest. Swift.

SE'RVILENESS, sêr'vil-nês. } n. s. [from SERVILITY, sêr-vil'ê-tê. } servile.]

1. Subjection; involuntary obedience.

What, besides this unhappy servility to custom,
can possibly reconcile men, that own christianity,
to a practice widely distant from it?

Government of the Tongue.

2. Meanness; dependance; baseness.

3. Submission from fear.
The angels and dæmons, those by their subserviency, and these by the servility of their obedience, manifestly declared Christ and his apostles to be vested with an authority derived from their Lord. West.

4. Slavery; the condition of a slave.

To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility;
For princes should be free. Shaksp.

SE'RVING-MAN, sêr'ving-mân. n. s. [serve and man.] A menial servant.

Your niece did more favours to the duke's serviving-man than ever she bestowed on me. Shaksp.

Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice,
And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey;
Each serviving-man, with dish in hand,
March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,
Presented, and away. Suckling.

With Dennis you did we'er combine,
Not you, to steal your master's wine;
Except a bottle now and then,

To welcome brother serviving-men. Swift.

SE'RVITOR, sêr've-tûr.¹⁰⁶ n. s. [serviteur, French.]

1. Servant; attendant. A word obsolete.

This workman, whose servitor nature is, being only one, the heathens imagining to be more, gave him in the sky the name of Jupiter; in the air, of Juno; in the water, of Neptune; in the earth, of Vesta and Ceres. Hooker.

Thus are poor servitors,

When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold. Shaksp.

Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd heggary. Shaksp.

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor. Shaksp.

4. One of the lowest order in the universality.

His learning is much of a size with his birth and education; no more of either than what a poor hungry servitor can be expected to bring with him from his college. Swift.

SE'RVITUDE, sêr've-tûde. n. s. [servitude, French; servitus, Latin.]

1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.

Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature hath framed for the state of servitude, saying, They have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them. Hooker.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt. Shaksp.

Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name
Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,
Or nature: God and nature bid the same,
When he who rules is worthiest. Milton.

Though it is necessary that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleased at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in his freedom, as he that waits to present one. South.

2. Servants collectively. Not in use.

After him a cumb'rous train
Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude. Milton.

SE'RVUM, sê'rûm. n. s. [Latin.]

sixth.

The child born in the seventh month doth commonly well. Bacon.

Thy air is like the first:
A third is like the former. Filthy hags
Why do you shew me this? A fourth? Start eyes!
What! will the line stretch to the creak of doom?
Another yet? A seventh? I'll see no more. Shakspeare.

So Pharaoh, or some greater king than he,
Provided for the seventh necessity:
Taught from above his magazines to frame;
That famine was prevented ere it came. Dryden.

2. Containing one part in seven.

SE'VENTHLY, sèv'v'nth-lè. adv. [from seventh.] In the seventh place: an ordinal τῆνε, Saxon.] Seven times ten.

Worthy Marcus,
Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all,
From twelve to seventy. Shakspeare.

We call not that death immature, if a man lives till seventy. Taylor.

The weight of seventy winters prest him down,
He bent beneath the burthen of a crown. Dryden.

In the Hebrew, there is a particle consisting but of one single letter, of which there are reckoned up seventy several significations. Locke.

To SE'VER, sèv'vûr.⁹⁸ v. a. [sevrer, Fr.
separo, Latin.]

This axiom is of large extent, and would be severed and refined by trial. Bacon.

6. To disjoin; to disunite.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east. Shakspeare.

How stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare.

The medical virtues lodge in some one or other of its principles, and may therefore usually be sought for in that principle severed from the others.
Boyle.

7. To keep distinct; to keep apart.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear shining sky. Shakspeare.

I will sever Goshen, that no swarms of flies shall be there. Exodus.

To SE'VER, sèv'vûr.⁹⁸ v. n.

SE'VERAL, sèv'ûr-âl.⁸⁸ adj. [from sever.]

1. Different; distinct from one another.

Divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

The conquest of Ireland was made piece and piece, by several attempts, in several ages. Davies.

Four several armies to the field are led,
Which high in equal hopes four princes head.
Dryden.

2. Divers; many. It is used in any number not large, and more than two.

This country is large, having in it many people and several kingdoms. Milbot.

This else to several spheres thou must ascribe.
Milton.

We might have repaired the losses of one campaign by the advantages of another, and, after several victories gained over us, might have still kept the enemy from our gates. Addison.

3. Particular; single.

Each several ship a victory did gain,
As Rupert or as Albemarle were there. Dryden.

4. Distinct; appropriate.

The parts and passages of state are so many, as to express them fully, would require a several treatise.
Davies.

Like things to like, the rest to several place Disparted. Milton.

Each might his several province well command,
Would all but stoop to what they understand. Pope.

SE'VERAL, sèv'ûr-âl. n. s. [from the adject-tive.]

1. A state of separation, or partition. This substantive has a plural.

More profit is quieter found
Were pastures in several he,
Of one silly aker of ground
Than champion maketh of three. Tusser.

2. Each particular singly taken.
This by some severals
Of head piece extraordinary, lower messes
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shaksp.
There was not time enough to hear
The severals. Shaksp.

That will appear to be a methodical successive observation of these severals, as degrees and steps preparative the one to the other. Hammond.
Several of them neither rose from any conspicuous family, nor left any behind them. Addison.

3. Any enclosed or separate place.
They had their several for heathen nations, their several for the people of their own nation, their se- veral for men, their several for women, their several for their priests, and for the high priest alone their several. Hooker.

4. Enclosed ground.
There was a nobleman that was lean of visage, but immediately after his marriage he grew pretty plump and fat. One said to him, Your lordship doth contrary to other married men; for they at first wax lean, and you wax fat. Sir Walter Raleigh stood by and said, There is no heast, that if you take him from the common, and put him into the several, but will wax fat. Bacon.

SE'VERALLY, sév'úr-ál-é. adv. [from seve- rally.] Distinctly; particularly; separately; apart from others.

Consider angels each of them severally in himself, and their law is, All ye his angels praise him.
Hooker.

Nature and scripture, both jointly and not seve- rally, either of them, he so complete, that unto everlasting felicity we need not the knowledge of any thing more than these two may easily furnish our minds with. Hooker.

Th' apostles could not be confin'd
To these or those, but severally design'd
Their large commission round the world to blow.
Dryden.

We ought not so much to love likeness as beauty, and to chuse from the fairest bodies severally
the fairest parts. Dryden.

Others were so very small and close together, that I could not keep my eye steady on them seve- rally, so as to number them. Newton.

rus, Lat.]

1. Sharp; apt to punish; censorious; apt to blame; hard; rigorous.

Let your zeal, if it must be expressed in anger, be always more severe against thyself than against others. Taylor.

Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve:
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam severe?
Milton.

What made the church of Alexandria be so severe with Origen for, but holding the incense in his hands, which those about him cast from thence upon the altar? yet for this he was cast out of the church.
Stillingfleet.

2. Rigid; austere; morose; harsh; not indulgent.

Am I upbraided? not enough severe,
It seems, in thy restraint. Milton.

In his looks serene,
When angry most he seem'd, and most severe,
What else but favour shone? Milton.

Nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes. Pope.

3. Cruel; inexorable.
His severe wrath shall he sharpen for a sword.
Wisdom.

Truth, wisdom, sanctitude, severe and pure,
Severe, but in true filial freedom plac'd. Milton.

5. Exempt from all levity of appearance; grave; sober; sedate.
His grave rebuke,
Severe in youthful beauty, added graee. Milton.

Your looks must alter, as your subject does,
From kind to fierce, from wanton to severe. Waller.

Taught by thy practice steadily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

6. Not lax; not airy; close; strictly methodical; rigidly exact.

Their beauty I leave it rather to the delicate wit of poets, than venture upon so nice a subject with my severer style. More.

7. Painful; afflictive.
These piercing fires are soft, as now severe. Milton.

8. Close; concise; not luxuriant.
The Latin, a most severe and compendious language, often expresses that in one word, which modern tongues cannot in more. Dryden.

SEVE'RELY, sé-vére'lé. adv. [from severe.]

1. Painfully; afflictively.
We have wasted our strength to attain ends different from those for which we undertook the war:
and often to effect others, which after a peace we may severely repent. Swift.

More formidable Hydra stands within:
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden.

3. Strictly; rigorously.
To be or fondly or severely kind. Savage.

SEVE'RITY, sé-vér'eté. n. s. [severitas,
Latin.]

1. Cruel treatment; sharpness of punishment.

I laugh to see your ladyship so fond,
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow
Whereon to practise your severity. Shaksp.

He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power,
Which he so sets at nought. Shaksp.

Never were so great rebellions expiated with so little blood; as for the severity used upon those taken in Kent, it was but upon a scum of people.
Bacon.

There is a difference between an ecclesiastical censure and severity: for under a censure we only include excommunication, suspension, and an interdict; but under an ecclesiastical severity every other punishment of the church is intended: but according to some, a censure and a severity is the same. Ayliffe.

2. Hardness; power of distressing.

Though nature hath given insects sagacity to avoid the winter cold, yet its severity finds them out. Hale.

3. Strictness; rigid accuracy.
Confining myself to the severity of truth, becoming, I must pass over many instances of your military skill. Dryden.

In various figures scenes of dishes rise. Dryden.

2. [from issue, issuer. pron. shòre.] A passage for water to run through, now corrupted to shore. Cowell.

The fennmen hold that the sewers must be kept so, as the water may not stay too long in the spring, till the weeds and sedge be grown up. Bacon.

Men suffer their private judgment to be drawn into the common sewer or stream of the present vogue. King Charles.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick, and sewers annoy the air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn, to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.
Milton.

3. He that uses a needle. [pron. sò'úr.]

SEX, séks. n. s. [sexe, French; sexus,

The forge in fetters only is employ'd;
Our iron mines exhausted and destroy'd
In shackles. Dryden.

SHAD, shâd. n. s. [clupea.] A kind of fish.

SHADE, shâde. n. s. [rcadu, Sax. schade, Dutch.]

1. The cloud or opacity made by interception of the light.

Spring no obstacle found here nor shade,
But all sunshine. Milton.

2. Darkness; obscurity.
The weaker light unwillingly declin'd,
And to prevailing shades the murmuring world resign'd. Roscommon.

3. Coolness made by interception of the sun.

Antigonus, when told that the enemy had such volleys of arrows that hid the sun, said, That falls out well; for this is hot weather, and so we shall fight in the shade. Bacon.

That high mount of God, whence light and shade Shine both. Milton.

4. An obscure place, properly in a grove or close wood, by which the light is excluded.

Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad hosoms empty. Shakspeare.

Regions of sorrow, doleful shades. Milton.
Then to the desert takes his flight;
Where still from shade to shade the Son of God,
After forty days fasting, had remain'd. Milton.

The pious prince then seeks the shade Which hides from sight this venerable maid. Dryden.

5. Screen causing an exclusion of light or heat; umbrage.

Let the arched knife,
Well sharpen'd, now assail the spreading shades
Of vegetables, and their thirsty limbs discover. Philips.

In Brazil are trees, which kill those that sit under their shade in a few hours. Arbutnot.

6. Protection; shelter.

7. The parts of a picture not brightly coloured.

'Tis every painter's art to hide from sight,
And cast in shades, what seen would not delight. Dryden.

8. A colour; gradation of light.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their several degrees or shades and mixtures, as green, come in only by the eyes. Locke.

9. The figure formed upon any surface corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted; the shadow.

Envy will merit, as its shade, pursue. Pope.

10. The soul separated from the body; so called, as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch. A spirit; a ghost; wanes.

To Trachin, swift as thought, the fitting shade Thro' air his momentary journey made. Dryden.

Nor to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation came a nobler guest;
Nor e'er was to the bow'rs of bliss convey'd
A fairer spirit or more welcome shade. Ticket.

To SHADE, shâde. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To overspread with opacity.

Thou shad'st
The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud Thy skirts appear. Milton.

2. To cover from the light or heat; to overspread.

A seraph six wings wore to shade
His lineaments divine. Milton.

And, after these, came arm'd with spear and shield

An host so great as cover'd all the field;
And all their foreheads, like the knights before,
With laurels ever green was shaded o'er. Dryden.

I went to crop the sylvan scenes,
And shade our altars with their leafy greens. Dryden.

Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
And with fresh hays her rural shrine adorn. Pope.

SHA'DOW, shâ'dô.^{327 815} n. s. [rcadu, Saxon, schaduw, Dutch.]

1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Shakspeare.

Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more. Shakspeare.

Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon. Shakspeare.

The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shadows of sun-dials. Locke.

2. Opacity; darkness; shade.

By the revolution of the skies
Night's sable shadows from the ocean rise. Denham.

His countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and shadow of the eclipse. Addison.

3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.

In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lillies softly laid. Fairy Queen.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree,
For your good host. Shakspeare.

4. Obscure place.

To the secret shadows I retire,
To pay my penance till my years expire. Dryden.

5. Dark part of a picture.

A shadow is the diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light, spreading itself into the air, or medium, proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkeneth by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves. Peachment.

After great lights there must be great shadows. Dryden.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight; a ghost; a spirit, or shade.
Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry hence! Shakespeare.
7. An imperfect and faint representation: opposed to substance.
In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance. Raleigh.
If substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd. Milton.
Without the least impulse or shadow of fate. Milton.
Amongst the creatures are particular excellencies, scattered, which are some shadows of the divine perfections. Tillotson.
8. Inseparable companion.
Sin, and her shadow, death. Milton.
Thou my shadow
Inseparable must with me along. Milton.
9. Type; mystical representation.
Types and shadows of that destin'd seed. Milton.
10. Protection; shelter; favour.
Keep me under the shadow of thy wings. Psalms.

To SHA'DOW, shâ'dô. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with opacity.
The warlike elf much wonder'd at this tree,
So fair and great, that shadowed all the ground. Spenser.
The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branches,
and with a shadowing shroud. Ezekiel.
2. To cloud; to darken.
Mislike me not for my complexion;
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour. Shakespeare.
3. To make cool, or gently gloomy, by interception of the light or heat.
A gentle south-west wind comes creeping over flowery fields and shadowed waters in the extreme heat of summer. Sidney.
4. To conceal under cover; to hide; to screen.
Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The number of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us. Shakespeare.
5. To protect; to screen from danger; to shroud.
God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death,
The rafter, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war. Shakespeare.
6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.
Turnsoil is made of old linen rags dried, and laid in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a chafingdish of coals till it boils; then wring it into a shell, and put into it a little gum arabick: it is good to shadow carnations, and all yellows. Peacham.
From a round globe of any uniform colour, the idea imprinted on our minds is of a flat circle, variously shadowed with different degrees of light coming to our eyes. Locke.
More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and vallies. Addison.
7. To paint in obscure colours.
If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed, then place in those voids some fold, to make a joining of the parts. Dryden.
8. To represent imperfectly.
Whereat I wak'd, and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadow'd. Milton.
Augustus is shadowed in the person of Eneas.
Dryden.

- I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name. Dryden.
9. To represent typically.
Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament; namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which shad-oweth or signifieth grace, and the word which ex-presseth what is done by the element. Hooker.
The shield being to defend the body from weapons, aptly shadows out to us the continence of the emperor, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure. Addison.
- SHA'DOWGRASS, shâ'dô-grâs. n. s. [from shadow and grass; gramen sylvaticum, Lat.] A kind of grass.
- SHA'DOWY, shâ'dô-ê. adj. [from shadow.]
1. Full of shade; gloomy.
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shakespeare.
With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.
2. Not brightly luminous.
More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.
3. Faintly representative; typical.
When they see
Law can discover sin, but not remove Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
Some blood more precious must be paid for man. Milton.
4. Unsubstantial; unreal.
Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison.
5. Dark; opaque.
By command, ere yet dim night
Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward. Milton.
- SHA'DY, shâ'dé. adj. [from shade.]
1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.
The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.
Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,
And Amaryllis fills the shady groves. Dryden.
2. Secure from the glare of light, or sultriness of heat.
Cast it also that you may have rooms shady for summer, and warm for winter. Bacon.
- SHAFT, shâft. n. s. [ϣεαφτ, Saxon.]
1. An arrow; a missive weapon.
To pierce pursuing shield,
By parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught,
With shafts shot out from their back-turned bow. Sidney.
Who, in the spring, from the new sun
Already has a fever got,
Too late begins those shafts to shun
Which Phœbus thro' his veins has shot. Waller.
They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and them shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark. More.
So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow
With vigour drawn must send the shaft below. Dryden.
2. [shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.
They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length. Carew.
The fulminating damp, upon its ascension, gives a crack like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft. Woodward.
Suppose a tube, or, as the miners call it, a shaft were sunk from the surface of the earth to the center. Arbutnot.

3. Any thing straight; the spire of a church.
Practise to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple. Peacham.
- SHAG, shâg. n. s. [ϣεαcga, Sax.]
1. Rough woolly hair.
Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,
Hath he conversed with the enemy;
And given me notice of their villanies. Shakespeare.
Where is your husband?
He's a traitor.
—Thou yest, thou shag-ear'd villain! Shakespeare.
From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs, his having little or no tail, the slowness of his gait, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind. Grew.
True Witney broad cloth, with its shag unshorn,
Be this the horseman's fence. Gay.
2. A kind of cloth.
- SHAG, shâg. n. s. [thalacrocorax, Latin.]
A sea bird.
Among the first sort we reckon shags, duck, and mallard. Carew.

SHA'GGY, shâ'gê.³⁸³ } shag.]
1. Rugged; rough; hairy.
They change their hue, with haggard eyes they stare,
Lean are their looks, and shagged is their hair. Dryden.
A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden.
From the frosty north
The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,
In battailous array, while Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,
Her borderers, on mutual slaughter bent. Philips
2. Rough; rugged.
They pluck the seated hills with all their load,
Rocks, waters, woods; and by the shaggy tops
Uplifting, bore them in their hands. Milton.
There, where very desolation dwells,
By grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride. Milton.
Through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.
How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paws when tipt with gold,
And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders. Addison.
Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn;
Ye grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn!
Pope.
- SHA'GREEN, shâ-grêen'. n. s. [chagrin,
French.] The skin of a kind of fish,
or skin made rough in imitation of it.
To SHA'GREEN, shâ-grêen'. v. a. [cha-griner, French.] To irritate; to provoke.
Both should be written chagrin.
- To SHAIL, shâle. v. n. To walk sidewise.
A low word.

He looked at his hook, and, holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that I thought he would have shaken it off. Tatler.

4. To throw away; to drive off. 'Tis our first intent To shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths, whilst we Unhurthen'd crawl towards death. Shakspeare.

5. To weaken; to put in danger. When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook by his enemies, they persecuted his reputation. Atterbury.

6. To drive from resolution; to depress; to make afraid. A sly and constant knave, not to be shak'd. Shakspeare.

This respite shook The hosom of my conscience. Shakspeare. Be not soon shaken in mind, or trouhled, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thessalonians. Not my firm faith Can by his fraud be shaken or seduc'd. Milten.

7. To SHAKE hands. This phrase, from the action used among friends at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with, but commonly to take leave of.

With the slave He ne'er shook hands, nor hid farewell to him, Till he unseam'd him from the nave to th' chops. Shakspeare.

Nor can it be safe for bringing to tarry among them who are shaking hands with their allegiance, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion. King Charles.

8. To SHAKE off. To rid himself of; to free from; to divest of.

Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:

Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Shakspeare. If I could shake off but one seven years From these old arms and legs, I'd with thee every foot. Shakspeare.

Say, sacred bard! what could bestow Courage on thee, to soar so high? Tell me, brave friend! what help'd thee so To shake off all mortality? Waller.

Him I reserved to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures. Stillingfleet.

Can I want courage for so brave a deed? I've shook it off: my soul is free from fear. Dryden.

Here we are free from the formalities of custom and respect: we may shake off the haughty impudent. Collier.

How does thy beauty smooth The face of war, and make even borrow smile!

At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows. Addison.

To SHAKE, shake. v. n.

1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion. Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Job.

2. To totter. Under his burning wheels The steadfast empyrean shook throughout, All but the throne itself of God. Milten.

3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.

Thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts, Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow. Shakspeare.

What said the wench when he rose up again? —Trembled and shook: for why, he stamp'd, As if the vicar meant to cozen him. Shakspeare. A shaking through their limbs they find, Like leaves saluted by the wind. Waller.

4. To be in terrour; to be deprived of firmness.

He, short of succours, and in deep despair, Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryden.

SHAKE, shake. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Concussion suffered. If that thy fame with every toy be pos'd, 'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make; But the great soldier's honour was compos'd Of thicker stuff which could endure a shake: Wisdom picks friends; civility plays the rest, A toy, shunn'd cleanly, passeth with the hest. Herbert.

2. Impulse; moving power. The freeholder is the basis of all other titles: this is the substantial stock, without which they are no more than blossoms, that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.

3. Vibratory motion. Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addison.

4. Motion given and received. Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand. Addison.

SHA'KER, shá'kúr.⁹⁵ n. s. [from shake.]

The person or thing that shakes.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise, He said; the shaker of the earth replies. Pope.

SHALE, shále. n. s. [corrupted, I think, for shell.] A husk; the case of seeds in siliquous plants.

Behold you poor and starved band, And your fair shew shall suck away their souls, Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shakspeare.

SHALL, shál. v. defective. [ſceal, Saxon; is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer, the faith I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, dois, doit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have skall, and the Islanders skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.

The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will: but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.]

1. I SHALL love. It will so be that I must love; I am resolved to love.

2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will it be that I must love?

3. THOU SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction] it will be that thou must love.

4. SHALT thou love? Will it be that thou must love? Will it be permitted to thee to love?

5. HE SHALL love. It will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that shall remain. —Shall remain! Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you His absolute shall? Shakspeare.

See Romulus the great: This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear; And, like his sire, in arms he shall appear. Dryden.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded; and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond.

6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? [in solemn language] Will it be that he must love?

7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.

SHALLOO'N, shál-lóón'. n. s. A slight wool-len stuff.

In blue shalloon shall Hannibal be clad, And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.

SHA'LLOP, shál'lúp. n. s. [chalaupé, Fr.] A small boat.

You were resolved, after your arrival into Oroonogue, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have sir John Fearn's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly hut that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.

Our hero set In a small shallop, fortune in his debt. Waller.

SHA'LLOW, shál'ló.³²⁷ adj. [This word is probably compounded of shoal and low.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.

I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor. Shakspeare.

That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food. Bacon.

The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallower in his days, and would in process of time become a firm land. Brown.

I am made a shallow forded stream, Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scor'd, And all my faults expos'd. Dryden.

Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear, The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

In shallow furrows vines securely grow. Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound, not very knowing or wise; empty; trifling; futile; silly.

I'll shew my mind,
According to my shallow simple skill. Shakspeare.

This is a very shallow monster:
Afraid of him? A very shallow monster,
The man i' th' moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shakspeare.

The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Bretagne.
Bacon.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself.

One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest. Addison.

3. Not deep of sound.

If a virginal were made with a double coneave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring. Bacon.

SHA'LOW, shâl'lô. n. s. [from the adject-tive.] A shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal;
a place where the water is not deep.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakspeare.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon.

Having but newly left those grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning.
Milton.

You that so oft have sounded
And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments

To advance your ends. Denham.

He sounds and fathoms him, to find
The shallows of his soul. Dryden.

The wary Dutch
Behind their treach'rous shallows now withdraw,
And there lay snares to catch the British host.
Dryden.

Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land. Dryd.
In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.
Burnet.

Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows. Ray.

With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct,
he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

SHA'LOWBRAINED, shâl'lô-brân'd. adj.
[shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile;
trifling; empty.

It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men, to see a company of lewd shallow-brain'd huffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. South.

SHA'LOWLY, shâl'lô-lé. adv. [from shallow.]

1. With no great depth.

The load lieth open on the grass, or but shallow-ly covered. Carew.

2. Simply; foolishly.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.
Shakspeare.

SHA'LOWNESS, shâl'lô-nês. n. s. [from shallow.]

1. Want of depth.

2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; silliness; emptiness.

By it do all things live their measur'd hour;
We cannot ask the thing which is not there,
Blaming the shallowness of our request. Herbert.

I cannot wonder enough at the shallowness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar sort in Druina, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security. Howel.

SHALM, shâm. n. s. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.

Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readiness to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the sound of a shalm or hoboy.
Knolles.

SHALT, shâlt. Second person of shall.

To SHAM, shâm. v. n. [shommi, Welsh, to cheat.]

1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences. A low word.

Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and shammed into a conviction.
L'Estrange.

Then all your wits that fear and sham,
Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
From whom I jests and puns purloin,
And slyly put them off for mine,
Fond to be thought a country wit. Prior.

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.

We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.

SHAM, shâm. n. s. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.

No sham so gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatistical and inquisitive.

It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of astrological judgments. L'Estrange.

He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for. Locke.

That in the sacred temple needs would try
Without a fire, th' unheated gums to fry,
Believe who will the solemn sham, not I. Addison.

SHAM, shâm. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.

Never join the fray,
Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.

SHA'MBLES, shâm'blz.³⁶⁹ n. s. [of uncertain etymology; scannaglia, Italian.]

1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.

Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house.
Shakspeare.

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
Oh, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,
That quicken ev'n with blowing. Shaksp.

He warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to the shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled. Arbutnot.

2. It is here improperly used.

When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shambles of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other.
Watts.

SHA'MBLING, shâm'bl-ing.⁴¹⁰ adj. [See SCAMBLING.] Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.

By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona.
Dryden.

So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tries,
With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
With dangling hands he strokes the imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.
Smith.

SHAME, shâme. n. s. [reame, Saxon;
schaemte, Dutch.]

1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.

Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lie,
And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.
Spenser.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
—Urge neither charity nor shame to me:

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:
My charity is outrage, life my shame;
Aud in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage.
Shakspeare.

Hide, for shame,
Romans, your grandsires' images,
That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.

In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.

The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say, a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure.
Shakspeare.

God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times tried, has never fail'd of taking:
For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
Under the shelter of so broad a shield. Dryden.

O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy
The scheme of all our happiness destroy? Pope.

3. Reproach; infliction of shame.

A foul shame is upon the thief. Ecclesiasticus.

Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.

To SHAME, shâme. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make ashamed; to fill with shame.

To tell thee of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless. Shakspeare.

If thou hast power to raise him, bring him hither,
And I've power to shame him hence:

Oh, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil.
Shakspeare.

Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use.
Cleaveland.

Despoil'd
Of all our good, sham'd, nak'd, miserable. Milton.

What hurt can there be in all the slanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence, to shame us into the glories of the next. South.

Were there but one righteous man in the world,
he would hold up his head with confidence and honour, he would shame the world, and not the world
him. South.

He, in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it set him free. Dryd.

The coward bore the man immortal spite,
Who sham'd him out of madness into flight.
Dryden.

Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through;
He spins the slight self-pleasing thread anew. Pope.

2. To disgrace.

Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,

And with foul cowardice his carcass shame.

Fairy Queen.

To SHAME, shâme. v. n. To be ashamed.

Great shame it is, thing so divine in view,
Made for to be the world's most ornament,

To make the bait her gazers to embrew;
Good shames to be to ill an instrument. Spenser.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-traught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart? Shaks
To the trunk of it authors give such a magnitude, as I shame to repeat. Raleigh.

Cruel Auster thither hied him;
And with the rush of one rude blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to waste

All his leaves, so fresh, so sweet,
And lay them trembling at his feet. Crashaw.

SHA'MEFAC'ED, shâme'fâste.³⁶⁹ adj. [shame and face.] Modest; bashful; easily put out of countenance.

Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasing, and pleasure shamefac'd, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.

Conscience is a blushing shamefac'd spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills one full of obstacles. Shakspeare.

A man may be shamefaced, and a woman modest,
to the degree of seandalous. L'Estrange.

Your shamefac'd virtue shunn'd the people's praise,
And senate's honours. Dryden.

From this time we may date that remarkable turn in the behaviour of our fashionable Englishmen, that makes them shamefaced in the exercise of those duties which they were sent into the world to perform. Addison.

SHAMEFA'CEDLY, shâme'fâste-lê. adv.
[from sham:fac'd.] Modestly; bashfully.

SHAMEFA'CEDNESS, shâme'fâste-nês. n. s.
[from sham:fac'd.] Modesty; bashfulness; timidity.

Dorus, having had all the while a free beholding of the fair Pamela, could well have defended the assault he gave unto her face with bringing a fair stain of shamefacedness into it. Sidney.

She is the fountain of your modesty;
You shamefac'd are, but shamefac'dness itself is
she. Fairy Queen.

None but fools, out of shamefacedness, hide their ulcers, which, if shown, might be healed. Dryden.

SHAMEFUL, shâme'fûl. adj. [shame and full.]

1. Disgraceful; ignominious; infamous;
reproachful.

This all through that great prince's pride did fall,
And came to shameful end. Fairy Queen.

For this he shall live hated, be blasphem'd,
Seiz'd on by force, judg'd, and to death condemn'd,
A shameful and accurst! Milton.

His naval preparations were not more surprising than his quick and shameful retreat; for he returned to Carthage with only one ship, having fled without striking one stroke. Arbuthnot.

The knave of diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins, O shameful chance! the queen of hearts.
Pope.

2. Full of indignity or indecency; raising shame in another.

Phœbus flying so most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies,
And hides for shame. Fairy Queen.

SHAMEFULLY, shâme'fûl-lê. adv. [from shameful.]

1. Disgracefully; ignominiously; infam-ously; reproachfully.

But I his holy secret
Presumptuously have publish'd, impiously,
Weakly at least, and shamefully. Milton.

Would he shamefully fail in the last act in this contrivance of the nature of man? More.

Those who are ready enough to confess him, both in judgment and profession, are, for the most part, very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings.
South.

2. With indignity; with indecency; so as ought to cause shame.

None but that saw, quoth he, would ween for truth,
How shamefully that maid he did torment
Fairy Queen.

SHA'MELESS, shâme'lês. adj. [from shame.]

Wanting shame; wanting modesty; impudent; frontless; immodest; audacious.

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not
shameless. Shakspeare.

Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.
Shakspeare.

The shameless denial hereof by some of their friends, and the more shameless justification by some of their flatterers, makes it needful to exemplify, which I had rather forbear. Raleigh.

God deliver the world from such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion, and the shameless subverters of morality. South.

Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad, abandon'd critics too. Pope.

SHA'MELESSLY, shâme'lês-lê. adv. [from shameless.] Impudently; audaciously;
without shame.

The king, to-day, as one of the vain fellows, shamelessly uncovereth himself 2 Samuel.

He must needs be shamelessly wicked that abhors not this licentiousness. Hale.

SHA'MELESSNESS, shâme'lês-nês. n. s.
[from shameless.] Impudence; want of shame; immodesty.

Being most impudent in her heart, she could, when she would, teach her cheeks blushing, and make shamefacedness the cloak of shamelessness.

He that blushes not at his crime, but adds shame- lessness to his shame, hath nothing left to restore him to virtue. Taylor.

SHAMMER, shâm'mûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from sham.]

A cheat; an impostor. A low word.

SHAMOIS, shâm'mê. n. s. [chamois, Fr.

Young shamois from the rocks. Shakspeare.

SHAMROCK, shâm'rûk.¹⁶⁶ n. s. The Irish name for three leaved grass.

If they found a plot of watercresses, or sham- rocks, there they flocked as to a feast for the time.
Spenser.

SHANK, shânk. n. s. [ſceanca, Saxon;
ſchenckel, Dutch.]

1. The middle joint of the leg; that part which reaches from the ankle to the knee.

Eftsoons her white straight legs were altered—
To crooked crawling shanks, of marrow emptied;
And her fair face to foul and loathsome hue,
And her fine corps to a bag of venom grew.
Spenser.

The sixth age shifts

Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shanks. Shakspeare.

A stag says, if these pitiful shanks of mine were but answerable to this branching head, I can't but think how I should defy all my enemies. L'Estrange.

2. The bone of the leg.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With recky shanks, and yellow chapless skulls.
Shakspeare.

part. pass. shaped and shapten. [ſcÿp- pan, Saxon; ſcheppen, Dutch.]

1. To form; to mould with respect to external dimensions.

I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph.
Shakspeare.

Those nature hath shaped with a great head, narrow breast, and shoulders sticking out, seem much inclined to a consumption. Harvey.

Mature the virgin was, of Egypt's race;
Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face. Prior.

2. To mould; to cast; to regulate; to adjust.

Drag the villain hither by the hair,
Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege.
Shakspeare.

Mr. Candish, when without hope, and ready to shape his course by the east homewards, met a ship which came from the Philippines. Raleigh.

To the stream, when neither friends, nor force,
Nor speed, nor art avail, he shapes his course.
Denham.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

3. To image; to conceive.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakspeare.

It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuse, and oft my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not. Shakspeare.

When fancy hath formed and shaped the perfect-est ideas of blessedness, our own more happy experiences of greater must disabuse us. Boyle.

4. To make; to create. Obsolete.

I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. Psalms.

SHAPE, shâpe. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Form; external appearance.

He beat me grievously in the shape of a woman;
for in the shape of a man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam. Shakspeare.

The shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared for battle. Revelation.

The other shape,

If shape it may be call'd that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

In vegetables and animals the shape we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. Make of the trunk of the body.

First a charming shape enslav'd me,
An eye then gave the fatal stroke;
Till by her wit Corinna sav'd me,
And all my former fetters broke. Addison.

Fathers and mothers, friends and relations, seem to have no other wish towards the little girl, but that she may have a fair skin, a fine shape, dress well, and dance to admiration. Law.

3. Being, as moulded into form.

Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable shape. Milton.

4. Idea; pattern.

Thy heart
Contains of good, wise, just, the perfect shape.
Milton.

5. It is now used in low conversation for manner.

SHA'PELESS, shâpe'lês. adj. [from shape.] Wanting regularity of form; wanting symmetry of dimensions.

You are born
To set a form upon that indigest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere;
Ill fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where.

Thrice had I lov'd thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipping'd be.

Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand,
Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand;
A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight,
Like forms in clouds, or visions of the night!

Some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice.

SHA'PELINESS, shâpe'lê-nês. n. s. [from shapely.] Beauty or proportion of form.

SHA'PELY, shâpe'lê. adv. [from shape.] Symmetrical; well formed.

SHA'PESMITH, shâpe'smith. n. s. [shape and smith.] One who undertakes to improve the form of the body. A burlesque word.

To mend the work that providence had made.

SHARD, shârd. n. s. [schaerde, Frisick.]

1. A fragment of an earthen vessel.

For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;

Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chants,
Her maiden strewments.

2. [chard.] A plant.

Shards or mallows for the pot
Keep the loosen'd body sound.

3. It seems in Spenser to signify a frith or strait. It is used, says Upton, in the west, for a gap.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand,
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phædria's fleet bark, over that per'lous shard.

4. A sort of fish.

SHA'RDBORN, shârd'bôrn. adj. [shard and born.] Born or produced among broken stones or pots. Perhaps shard, in Shakespeare, may signify the sheaths of the wings of insects.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shardborn beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

SHA'RDED, shârd'êd. adj. [from shard.] Inhabiting shards.

Often shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle.

TO SHARE, shâre. v. n. [pcean, Saxon.]

1. To divide; to part among many.

Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.

Any man may take trial of his fortune, provided he acknowledge the lord's right, by sharing out unto him a toll.

Well may he then to you his cares impart,
And share his burden where he shares his heart.

In the primitive times the advantage of priesthood was equally shared among all the order, and none of that character had any superiority.

Though the weight of a falsehood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations when it is shared among many.

Suppose I share my fortune equally between my children and a stranger, will that unite them?

2. To partake with others; to seize or possess jointly with another.

The captain, half of whose soldiers were dead, and the other quarter never mustered or seen, comes shortly to demand payment of his whole account; where, by good means of some great ones, and privy sharings with the officers of other some, he receiveth his debt.

In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land.

Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me.

Wav'd by the wanton winds his banner flies,
All maiden white, and shares the people's eyes.

This was the prince decreed,
To share his sceptre.

Not love of liberty nor thirst of honour,
Drew you thus far; but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns and plunder'd provinces.

All night it rains, the shews return with day,
Great Jove with Cæsar shares his sov'reign sway.

3. To cut; to separate; to sheer. [from pcean, Saxon.]

With swift wheel reverse deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side.

Scalp, face, and shoulders the keen steel divides,
And the shar'd visage hangs on equal sides.

TO SHARE, shâre. v. n. To have part; to have a dividend.

I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more.

Had greater haste these sacred rites prepar'd,
Some guilty mouths had in your triumphs shar'd;
But this untainted year is all your own.

A right of inheritance gave every one a title to share in the goods of his father.

This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs.

SHARE, shâre. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Part; allotment; dividend obtained.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and be seeming share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some with vast excess.

The subdued territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince.

I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy:
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that she shall be mine.

While fortune favour'd,
I made some figure; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame.

The youths have equal share
In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister.

In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic's share.

He who doth not perform that part assigned him, is a very mischievous member of the publick; because he takes his share of the profit, and yet leaves his share of the burden to be born by others.

5. To go shares; to partake.

They went a hunting, and every one to go share and share alike in what they took.

By being desirous that every one should have their full share of the favours of God, they would not only be content, but glad, to see one another happy in the little enjoyments of this transitory life.

3. A part contributed.

These, although they bear a share in the discharge, yet have different offices in the composition.

4. [pcean, Sax.] The blade of the plough that cuts the ground.

Nor laws they knew, nor manners, nor the care
Of lab'ring oxen, nor the shining share.

Great cities shall with walls be compass'd round,
And sharpen'd shares shall vex the fruitful ground.

Incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes th' obstructive clay.

For clay the coulter is long and bending, and the share narrow.

SHA'REBONE, shâre'bône. n. s. [share and bone.] The os pubis; the bone that divides the trunk from the limbs.

The cartilage bracing together the two ossa pubis, or sharebones, Bartholine saith, is twice thicker and laxer in women than men.

SHA'NER, shâ'nêr. n. s. [from share.]

1. One who divides or apporions to others; a divider.

2. A partaker; one who participates any thing with others.

Most it seem'd the French king to import,
As sharer in his daughter's injury.

People not allow'd to be sharers with their companions in good fortune, will hardly agree to be sharers in bad.

An overgrown estate falling into the hands of one that has many children, it is broken into so many portions as render the sharers rich enough.

—Indeed I did, then favour'd by the king,
And by that means a sharer in the secret.

If, by taking on himself human nature at large, he hath a compassionate and tender sense of the infirmities of mankind in general, he must needs, in a peculiar manner, feel and commiserate the infirmities of the poor, in which he himself was so eminent a sharer.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof in your days of probation you have been a sharer.

SHARK, shârk. n. s. [canis charcharias, Latin.]

1. A voracious sea fish.

His jaws horri-fick arm'd with threefold fate,
The direful shark.

2. A greedy artful fellow; one who fills his pockets by sly tricks. A low word.

David's messengers are sent back to him, like so many sharks and runnagates, only for endeavouring to compliment an ill nature out of itself, and seeking that by petition which they might have commanded by their sword.

3. Trick; fraud; petty rapine. A low word.

Wretches who live upon the shark, and other men's sins, the common poisoners of youth, equally desperate in their fortunes and their manners, and getting their very bread by the damnation of souls.

blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are a larger, and scissors a smaller, instrument of the same kind. Pope uses shears
for scissors.

Alas! thought Philoela to herself, your sheers come too late to clip the hird's wings that already is flown away. Sidney.

Why do you hend such solemn brows on me?

Think you I hear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakspeare.

The fates prepar'd their sharpen'd sheers. Dryden.

When the fleece is shorn,

Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;
Short of their wool, and naked from the sheer.

Dryden.

That people live and die, I knew,
An hour ago, as well as you;
And if fate spins us longer years,
Or is in haste to take the shears,
I know, we must both fortunes try,
And bear our evils, wet or dry. Prior.

How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the sheers, for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half-crowns! Swift.

Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in twain,
But airy substance soon unites again. Pope.

Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart;

They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. Gay.

2. The denomination of the age of sheep.

When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight; and, after that, their mouths break. Mortimer.

The painful service, and the drops of blood shed for my thankless country, are requir'd But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shakspeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear

In all my miseries. Shakspeare.

For this is my blood which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. St. Matthew.

Some think one gen'ral soul fills ev'ry brain,

As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star. Davies.

Around its entry nodding poppies grow,

And all cool simples that sweet rest hestow;

Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,

And passing sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.

You seem'd to mourn another lover dead,

My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed. Dryden.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws

Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:

'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;

The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,

These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd,

Where awful arches make a noon-day night,

And the dim windows shed a solemn light,

Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,

And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.

2. To scatter; to let fall.

Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them hetimes. Bacon.

So the returning year be blest,

As his infant months hestow

Springing wreaths for William's brow;

As his summer's youth shall shed

Eternal sweets around Maria's head. Prior.

To SHED, shéd. v. n. To let fall its parts.

to be corrupted from shade.]

1. A slight temporary covering.

The first Aletes horn in lowly shed,

Of parents hase, a rose sprung from a bride. Fairfax.

Though he his house of polish'd marble build,

With jasper floor'd, and carved cedar ceil'd;

Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell,

Or sheds of reeds which summer's heat repel. Sandys.

In such a season horn, when scarce a shed

Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me

From the bleak air. Milton.

So all our minds with his conspire to grace

The gentiles great apostle, and deface

Those state-obscuring sheds, that like a chain

Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Waller.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds

With twining osiers fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

An hospitable house they found,

A homely shed; the roof, nor far from ground,

Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound. Dryden.

Then out he steals, and finds where by the head

Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed. Bellerton.

Her various kinds, by various fortunes led,

Commence acquaintance underneath a shed. Swift.

Weak as the Roman chief, who strove to hide

His father's cot, and once his father's pride,

By casing a low shed of rural mould

With marble walls, and roof adorn'd with gold. Harte.

2. In composition, effusion; as, blood-shed.

Pure; clear; unmingled.

If she say, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying'st rogue in christendom. Shakspeare.

Sheer argument is not the talent of the man; little wrested sentences are the bladders which hear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.

SHEER, shère.²⁴⁶ adv. [from the adjective.]

Clean; quick; at once. Not now in use, except in low language.

Thrown by angry Jove

Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn

To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,

A summer's day; and with the setting sun

Dropp'd from the zenith, like a falling star,

On Lemnos. Milton.

The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite

Descending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.

Due entrance he disdain'd, and in contempt

At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound

Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within

Lights on his feet. Milton.

Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escaped the numerous rocks, shelves, and quicksands. Boyle.

Near the shelves of Circe's shores they run,
A dang'rous coast. Dryden.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon split him on the former shelf;
He put it out again. Dryden.

3. The plural is analogically shelves; Dryden has shelves, probably by negligence.

He seiz'd the helm; his fellows eheer'd,
Turn'd short upon the shelves, and madly steer'd
Dryden.

SHE'LFY, shélf'è. adj. [from shelf.]

1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.

Long infamous for ships and sailors lost,
And white with bones. Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage; perhaps rocky.

The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some so shelfy, that the corn hath much ado to fasten its roots. Carew.

SHELL, shél. n. s. [rcyll, pceall, Sax. schale, schelle, Dutch.]

1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.

The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the eolipile, and the abyss as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierced through the shell and reached the waters, it rarefied them. Burnet.

Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth. Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.

Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,
And in their loose attires do swell. Ben Jonson.

Was to Neptune recommended;
Peace and plenty spread the sails:
Venus, in her shell before him,
From the sands in safety bore him. Dryden.

The shells served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all times just but when he sign'd the shell. Pope.

3. The covering of the seeds of siliquous plants.

Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants. Arbutnot.

4. The covering of kernels.

Chang'd loves are but chang'd sorts of meat;
And, when he hath the kernel eat,
Who doth not throw away the shell? Donne.

5. The covering of an egg.

Think him as a serpent's egg,
Which hatch'd would, as his kind, grow mischievous,

And kill him in the shell. Shakspeare.

6. The outer part of a house.

The marquis of Medina Sidonia made the shell of a house, that would have been a very noble building, had he brought it to perfection. Addison.

Fish invested with a hard covering; either testaceous, as oysters; or crustaceous, as lobsters.

The shells being sound, were so like those they saw upon their shores, that they never questioned but that they were the exuviae of shellfish, and once belonged to the sea. Woodward.

SHE'LLY, shél'lè. adj. [from shell.]

1. Abounding with shells.

The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautiful objects, shall delight no more. Prior.

2. Consisting of shells.

The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men, and all animals, were bred in some warm moisture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as lobsters; and so continued, till their shelly prisons growing dry, and breaking, made way for them. Bentley.

SHE'LTÉR, shél'tûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [Of this word the etymology is unknown: Skinner deduces it from shell; Davies from rcýld, a shield, Saxon.]

1. A cover from any external injury or violence.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakspeare

They wish the mountains now might be again
Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire. Milton

Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought;
But he, who meets all dangers with disdain,
E'en in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And steeple high stood propt upon the main. Dryden.

They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shelter from rain, when they have a lover in company. Dryden.

The healing plant shall aid,
From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade. Pope.

2. A protector; a defender; one that gives security.

Thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy. Psalms.

5. The state of being covered; protection; security.

Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
While the kind river wealth and beauty gives.

Denham.

Who into shelter takes their tender bloom,
And forms their minds to fly from ills to come. Young.
To SHE'LTÉR, shél'túr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover from external violence.

shelter.] Harbourless; without home or refuge.

Now sad and shelterless, perhaps, she lies,
Where piercing winds blow sharp. Rowe.

SHE'LVING, shélv'ing. adj. [from shelf.]

Sloping; inclining; having declivity.
Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it Without apparent hazard of his life. Shakspeare.
Amidst the brake a hollow den was found,
With rocks and shelving arches vaulted round.
Addison.

SHE'LVY, shél'vè. adj. [from shelf.] Shallow; rocky; full of banks.

I had been drown'd, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow. Shakspeare.

To SHEND, shénd. v. a. pret. and part. pass. shent. [scendan, Saxon; schenden, Dutch.]

1. To ruin; to spoil; to mischief.

Provide for thy wife, or else look to be shent,
Good milchcow for winter, another for lent. Tusser.

Shepherds, should it not yshent
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, that Colin made? Spenser.

Such a dream I had of dire portent;
That much I fear my body will be shent;
It bodes I shall have wars. Dryden.

2. To disgrace; to degrade; to blame; to reproach.

Debateful strife, and cruel enmity,
The famous name of knighthood foully shend.
Fairy Queen.

Sore bruised with the fall, be slow uprose,
And all enraged thus him loudly shent:
Disleal knight! whose coward courage chose
To wreak itself on least. Fairy Queen.

My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites;
How in my words soever she be shent,
To give them scals never my soul consent. Shakspeare.

3. To overpower; to crush; to surpass.

She pass'd the rest as Cynthia doth shend
The lesser stars. Spenser.

4. It is, though used by Dryden, wholly obsolete.

SHE'PHERD, shép'púrd. n. s.

[rceap, sheep, and hýrd, a keeper,
Sax. rceapahýrd.]

1. One who tends sheep in the pasture.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. Shakspeare.

A shepherd next,
More meek, came with the firstlings of his flock. Milton.

2. A swain; a rural lover.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.

Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
'Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd.
Prior.

SHE'PHERDESS, shép'púr-dèss. n. s. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep;
a rural lass.

She puts herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise liv'd many years; but discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him she first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction. Sidney.

These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. Shakspeare.

She like some shepherdess did shew,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side. Dryden.

His doric dialect has incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in country russet. Dryden.

SHEPHERDS Needle, shép'púrdz-nè-dl.
n. s. [scandix, Lat.] Venus' comb. An herb.

SHEPHERDS Purse, or Pouch, shép'púrdz-púrse. n. s. [bursa pastoris, Latin.] A common weed.

SHEPHERDS Rod, shép'púrdz-ród. n. s.
Teasel, of which plant it is a species.

SHE'PHERDISH, shép'húrd-ish. adj. [from shepherd.] Resembling a shepherd;
suing a shepherd; pastoral; rustick.
Not in use.

her match for beauty, in her shepherdish attire. Sidney.

She saw walking from her ward a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

SHE'RBET, shér-bét'. n. s. [sharbat, Ara-bick.] The juice of lemons or oranges mixed with water and sugar. Dict.

They prefer our beer above all other drinks; and considering that water is with the rarest, especially in this climate, the dearest of sherbets, and plenty of barley, it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the use thereof. Sandys.

SHERD, shérd. n. s. [rceapd, Sax.] A fragment of broken earthen ware. See SHARD.

The trivet-table of a foot was lame;
She thrusts beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryden.

SHE'RIF, shér'íf. n. s. [rcýne gere-pa, Sax. from rcýne, a shire, and re-ve, a steward. It is sometimes pronounced shrieve, which some poets have injudiciously adopted.] An officer to whom is intrusted, in each county, the execution of the laws.

A great pow'r of English and of Scots
Arc by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown. Shakspeare.

Concerning ministers of justice, the high sheriffs of the counties have been very ancient in this kingdom. Bacon.

Now may'r's and shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay. Pope.

SHE'RIFALTY, shér'íf-ál-tè. } n. s. [from SHE'RIFDOM, shér'íf-dòm. } SHE'RIFSHIP, shér'íf-shíp. } sheriff.

SHE'RIFFWICK, shér'íf-wík. } The office or jurisdic- } tion of a sheriff.

There was a resumption of patents of gaols, and reannexing of them to the sherrifwicks; privileged officers being no less an interruption of justice than privileged places. Bacon.

SHE'RRIS, shér'ris. } n. s. [from SHERRIS Sack, shér'ris-sák. } SHE'RRY, shér'rè. } Xeres, a town of Andalusia, in Spain.] A kind of sweet Spanish wine.

Your sherris warms the blood, which, before cold and settled, left the liver white, which is the badge of pusillanimity; but the sherris makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakspeare.

Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish dull vapours, and makes it apprehensive. Shakspeare.

SHEW, shò. See SHOW.

SHIDE, shide. n. s. [from rceadan, to divide, Saxon.] A board; a cutting. Skinner.

SHIELD, shéeld. n. s. [rcýld, Saxon.]

1. A buckler; a broad piece of defensive armour held on the left arm to ward off blows.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields. Shakspeare.

His pond'rous shield,
Ethereal temper, massy, large and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon. Milton.

2. Defence; protection.

3. One that gives protection or security.

The terror of the Trojan field,
The Grecian honour, ornament, and shield,
High on a pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd. Dryden.

To SHIELD, shéeld. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: howe'er a woman's shape
Doth shield thee. Shakspeare.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield. Dryden.

Hear one that comes to shield his injur'd honour,
And guard his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

3. To keep off; to defend against.

Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold to which they had been inured. Spenser.

My lord I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakspeare.

To SHIFT, shift. v. n. [Of this word the original is obscure; skifta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.

Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and so not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their increment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Woodward.

2. To change; to give place to other things. If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke

3. To change clothes, particularly the linen. She begs you just would turn you while she shifts. Young.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty. We cannot shift: being in we must go on. Daniel. Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can. L'Estrange

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods. All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their distinctions. Raleigh.

6. To take some method for safety. Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

To SHIFT, shift. v. a.

1. To change; to alter. It was not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift their condition. L'Estrange. Come, assist me, muse obedient; Let us try some new expedient; Shift the scene for half an hour, Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

2. To transfer from place to place. Pare saffron between the two St. Mary's days, Or set or go shift it that knowest the ways. Tusser.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way. I shifted him away, And laid good 'scuses on your ecstasy. Shakespeare. The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.

4. To change in position. Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon their sides; but carrying the oar loose, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Raleigh. Where the wind Veers oft, as oft she steers and shifts her sail. Milton.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind; Now shift your sails. Dryden.

5. To change, as clothes. I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare.

6. To dress in fresh clothes. As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shakespeare.

7. To SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient. The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserving of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised. Rogers

SHIFT, shift. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means. She redoubling her blows, drave the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocency against violence. Sidney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away. Shakespeare. This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water. More.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift How to regain my sever'd company, Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo, To give me answer from her mossy couch. Milton.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a shift somewhat to legitimate the abuse. L'Estrange

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make shift without it. Addison.

Our heralds are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to classes. Baker.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource. The very custom of seeking so particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek. Hooker.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick; So true, that he was aukward at a trick; For little souls, on little shifts rely. Dryden.

3. Fraud; artifice; stratagem. Know ye not Ulysses' shifts? Their swords less danger carry than their gifts. Denham.

4. Evasion; elusory practice. As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any shift, be it never so slight, whereby to escape out of the hands of present contradiction, they are never at a stand. Hooker.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautious and wily-headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and sly shifts. Spenser.

Here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions: this is your reward, if you perform it; this your doom, if you decline it. South.

5. A woman's under linen. SHIFTER, shift'är.⁹³ n. s. [from shift.] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice. 'Twas such a shifter, that, if truth were known, Death was half glad when he had got him down. Milton.

*SHIFTL*ESS, shift'lés. adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act or live. For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are already furnished with such clothing. Derham.

SHILLING, shil'ling.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [rçy'lling, Sax. and Erse; schelling, Dutch.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence. Five of these pence made their shilling, which they called scilling, probably from scillingus, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of these scillings made their pound; and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of king Alfred. Camden.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

Who, with much pains exerting all his sense,

Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence. Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I, shil'lé-shál'é. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating. I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it: I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then: If I say 't, I'll do 't. Congreve.

SHI'LY, shi'lé. adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly; not frankly.

SHIN, shin. n. s. [rçina, Saxon; schien, German.] The forepart of the leg. I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shakespeare.

The shin bone from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peacham.

His leg, then broke, Had got a deputy of oak; For when the shin in fight is cropt, The knee with one of timber's propt. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come, To know if any one's at home, We knock; so one must kick your shin, Ere he can find your soul's within. Anonymous.

To SHINE, shine. v. n. preterit I shone, I have shone; sometimes I shined, I have shined. [rçinan, Saxon; schijnen, Dutch.]

1. To have bright resplendence; to glitter; to glisten; to gleam. To-day the French, All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English; and to-morrow Made Britain India: ev'ry man that stood Shew'd like a mine. Shakespeare.

True paradise inclos'd with shining rock. Mil. We can dismiss thee ere the morning shine. Milton.

Fair daughter, blow away these mists and clouds, And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre. Denham.

The sun shines when he sees it. Locke.

2. To be without clouds. The moon shines bright: in such a night as this, When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees, And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.

How bright and goodly shines the moon! The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now. Shakespeare.

Clear pools greatly comfort the eyes, when the sun is overcast, or when the moon shineth. Bacon.

3. To be glossy. They are waxen fat, they shine. Jeremiah. Fish with their fins and shining scales. Milton.

The colour and shining of bodies is nothing but the different arrangement and refraction of their minute parts. Locke.

4. To be gay; to be splendid. So proud she shined in her princely state, Looking to heaven, for earth she did disdain, And sitting high. Fairy Queen.

5. To be beautiful. Of all th' enamell'd race, whose silv'ry wing Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring, Or swims along the fluid atmosphere, Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air. Pope.

6. To be eminent or conspicuous. If there come truth from them, As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine, Why, by the verities on thee made good, May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fancied sight; Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shin'd So clear, as in no face with more delight. Milton.

Cato's soul Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks; While winning mildness and attractive smiles

Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Softened the rigours of her father's virtues. Addison.
The reformation, in its first establishment, produced its proper fruits, and distinguished the whole age with shining instances of virtue and morality.

Addison.
The courtier smooth, who forty years had shin'd
An humble servant to all human kind. Pope.
Few are qualified to shine in company; but it is in most men's power to be agreeable. Swift.

7. To be propitious.

The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious. Numbers.

3. To give light real or figurative.

The light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the sun of righteousness rose not upon us. Wisdom.

Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers irradiate. Milton.

SHINE, shine. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fair weather.

Be it fair or foul, or rain or shine. Dryden.
He will accustom himself to heat and cold, and shine and rain; all which if a man's body will not endure, it will serve him to very little purpose. Locke.

2. Brightness; splendour; lustre. It is a word, though not unanalogical, yet ungraceful, and little used.

He that has inured his eyes to that divine splendour which results from the beauty of holiness, is not dazzled with the glittering shine of gold, and considers it as a vein of the same earth he treads on. Decay of Piety.

Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow?
Fair opening to some court's propitious shine,
Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine? Pope.

SHININESS, shin'ness. n. s. [from shy.] Unwillingness to be tractable or familiar.

An incurable shininess is the vice of Irish horses, and is hardly ever seen in Flanders, because the winter forces the breeders there to house and handle their colts. Temple.

They were famous for their justice in commerce, but extreme shininess to strangers: they exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, and then retired. Arbutnot.

SHINGLE, shing'gl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [schindel, Germ.] A thin board to cover houses.

The best to cleave, is the most useful for pales, laths, shingles, and wainscot. Mortimer.

SHINGLES, shing'glz. n. s. Wants the singular. [cingulum, Latin; zona morbus, Plinio.] A kind of tetter or herpes that spreads itself round the loins.

Such are used successfully in erysipelas and shingles, by a slender diet of decoctions or farinaceous vegetables, and copious drinking of cooling liquors. Arbutnot.

SHINY, shi'nè. adj. [from shine.] Bright; splendid; luminous.

When Aldeboran was mounted high,
Above the shiny Cassiopeia's chair,
One knocked at the door, and in would fare. Fairy Queen.

The night

Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By th' second hour o' th' morn. Shakespeare.

While from afar we heard the cannons play,
Like distant thunder on a shiny day,
For absent friends we were asham'd to fear. Dryden.

SHIP, ship. n. s. [ʃɪp, ʃɛp, Sax. schaf, Dutch.] A termination noting quality or adjunct, as lordship; or office, as stewardship.SHIP, ship. n. s. [ʃɪp, Saxon; schiffen, Dutch.] A ship may be defined a large hollow building, made to pass over the sea with sails. Watts.

All my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind. Shakespeare.

There made forth to us a small boat, with about eight persons in it, whereof one of them had in his hand a tipstaff, who made aboard our ship. Bacon.
Two other ships loaded with victuals were burnt, and some of the men saved by their shipboats. Knolles.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden.

Instead of a ship he should levy upon his country such a sum of money, and return the same to the treasurer of the navy: hence that tax had the denomination of ship-money, by which accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds. Clarendon.

A ship carpenter of old Rome could not have talked more judiciously. Addison.

TO SHIP, ship. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a ship.

My father at the road
Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd. Shakespeare.

The emperor, shipping his great ordnance, departed down the river. Knolles.

All the timber was cut down in the mountains of Cilicia, and shipped in the bay of Attalia, from whence it was by sea transported to Pelusium. Knolles.

A breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall. Dryden.

2. To transport in a ship.

Andronicus, would thou wert shipt to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts. Shakespeare.

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence. Shakespeare.

In Portugal, men spent with age, so as they cannot hope for above a year, ship themselves away in a Brazil fleet. Temple.

3. It is sometimes enforced by off.

A single leaf can waft an army o'er,
Or ship off senates to some distant shore. Pope.
The canal that runs from the sea into the Arno, gives a convenient carriage to all goods that are to be shipped off. Addison.

SHIPBOARD, ship'bòrd. n. s. [ship and board.] See BOARD.1. This word is seldom used but in adverbial phrases: a shipboard, on shipboard, in a ship.

Let him go on shipboard, and the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard. Bramhall.

Friend,
What dost thou make a shipboard? To what end? Dryden.

Ovid, writing from on shipboard to his friends, excused the faults of his poetry by his misfortunes. Dryden.

2. The plank of a ship.

They have made all thy shipboards of fir trees, and brought cedars from Lebanon to make masts. Ezekiel.

SHIPBOY, ship'bòè. n. s. [ship and boy.] Boy that serves in a ship.

Few or none know me: if they did,
This shipboy's semblance bath disguis'd me quite. Shakespeare.

SHIPMAN, ship'mán.⁸⁸ n. s. [ship and man.] Sailor; seaman.

I myself have the very points they blow,
All the quarters that they know
P' th' shipman's card. Shakespeare.

Hiram sent in the navy shipmen that had knowledge of the sea. 1 Kings.

SHIPMASTER, ship'más-túr. n. s. Master of the ship.

The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him,
What meanest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God. Jonah.

SHIPPING, ship'ping.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from shift.] 1. Vessels of navigation; fleet.

Before Cæsar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides. Raleigh.

The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea. Temple.

Fishes first to shipping did impart;
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

2. Passage in a ship.

They took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus. John.

SHIPWRECK, ship'rèk. n. s. [ship and wreck.]

Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the worst. Waller.

We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks. L'Estrange.

This sea war cost the Carthaginians five hundred quinquiremes, and the Romans seven hundred, including their shipwrecks. Arbutnot.

2. The parts of a shattered ship.

They might have it in their own country, and that by gathering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman theatres. Dryden.

3. Destruction; miscarriage.

Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck. 1 Timothy.

TO SHIPWRECK, ship'rèk. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or shallows.

Whence the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break. Shakespeare.

2. To make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.

Thou that canst still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gusts
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts. Prior.

A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little pagan monument of two persons who were shipwreck'd. Addison.

3. To throw by loss of the vessel.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me. Shakespeare.

SHIPWRIGHT, ship'rite. n. s. [ship and wright.] A builder of ships.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week. Shakespeare.

A miserable shame it were for our shipwrights, if they did not exceed all others in the setting up of our royal ships. Raleigh.

Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our sea-port towns. Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians. Arbutnot.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimple some huge beam to bore,
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, till it scoops it out. Pope.

SHIRE, shére.⁸ 106 n. s. [ſcīr, from ſcī-pan, to divide, Saxon.] A division of the kingdom; a county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames far off to every shire.

Fairy Queen.

The noble youths from distant shires resort.

Prior.

SHIRT, shúrt.¹⁰⁸ n. s. [shiert, Danish; ſcýrt, ſcýrtic, Sax.] The under linen garment of a man.

Shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice.

Shakspeare.

I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily.

Shakspeare.

When we lay next us what we hold most dear,
Like Hercules, evenom'd shirts we wear,
And cleaving mischiefs.

Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts.

Addison.

To SHIRT, shúrt. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cover; to clothe as in a shirt.

Ah! for so many souls, as but this morn
Were cloth'd with flesh, and warm'd with vital blood

But naked now, or shirted but with air.

Dryden.

SHIRTLESS, shúrt'lés. adj. [from shirt.]

Wanting a shirt.

Linsey-woolsey brothers,
Grave nummers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

Pope.

SHITTAN, shít'tá. } n. s. A sort of pre-

SHITTIM, shít'tím. } cious wood, of which Moses made the greatest part of the tables, altars, and planks belonging to the tabernacle. The wood is hard, tough, smooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful. It grows in Arabia.

Calmet.

I will plant in the wilderness the shittah-tree.

Isaiah.

Bring me an offering of badgers' skins and shittim-wood.

Exodus.

SHUTTLECOCK, shít'tl-kók. n. s. [commonly, and perhaps as properly, shuttlecock.

Of shuttle or shuttle the etymology is doubtful: Skinner derives it from schutteln, German, to shake; or ſceatan, Saxon, to throw. He thinks it is called a cock from its feathers. Perhaps it is properly shuttlecock, a cork driven to and fro, like the instrument in weaving, and softened by frequent and rapid utterance from cork to cock.] A cork stuck with feathers, and driven by players from one to another with battledoors.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shuttlecock, or the creaking of a jack, will do his business.

Collier.

SHIVE, shive. n. s. [schyve, Dutch.]

1. A slice of bread.

Easy it is

Off a cut loaf to steal a shive.

Shakspeare.

2. A tick splinter, or lamina, cut off from the main substance.

Shavings made by the plane are in some things differing from those shives, or thin and flexible pieces of wood, that are obtained by borers.

Boyle.

To SHIVER, shiv'úr.⁹⁸ v. n. [schawren, German.] To quake; to tremble; to shudder, as with cold or fear.

Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge, and make all the body shiver.

Bacon.

What religious palsy's this,
Which makes the boughs divest their bliss?

And that they might her footsteps draw,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe.

Cleaveland.

Why stand we longer shivering under fear?

Milton.

The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in.

Dryden.

He described this march to the temple with so much borrow, that he shiver'd every joint.

Addison.

Give up Laisus to the realms of day,
Whose ghost, yet shiv'ring on Cocytus' sand,

Expects its passage to the farther strand.

Pope.

Prometheus is laid
On icy Caucasus to shiver,

While vultures eat his growing liver.

Swift.

To SHIVER, shiv'úr. v. n. [from shive.]

To fall at once into many parts or shives.

Hadst thou been aught but goss'mer, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst shiver'd like an egg.

Shaksp.

Upon the breaking and shivering of a great state,
you may be sure to have wars.

Bacon.

The natural world, should gravity once cease or be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms.

Woodward.

To SHIVER, shiv'úr. v. a. To break by one act into many parts; to shatter.

The ground with shiver'd armour strown.

Milton.

Show'rs of granados rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel;

A thousand ways at once the shiver'd orbs
Fly divers, working torment.

Philips.

SHIVER, shiv'úr.⁹¹⁸ n. s. [from the verb.]

One fragment of many into which any thing is broken.

He would pound thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Shakspeare.

As brittle as the glory is the face;
For there it is crack'd in an hundred shivers.

Shakspeare.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters.

Bacon.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, the assault renew,
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end.

Milton.

SHIVERY, shiv'úr-è. adj. [from shiver.]

Loose of coherence; incompact; easily falling into many fragments.

There were observed incredible numbers of these shells thus flatted, and extremely tender, in shivery stone.

Woodward.

SHO'ADSTONE, shòde'stone. n. s.

Shoadstone is a small stone, smooth without, of a dark liver colour, and of the same colour within, only with the addition of a faint purple. It is a fragment broke off an iron vein.

Woodward.

Certain tin stones lie on the face of the ground, which they call shoad, as shed from the main load, and made somewhat round by the water.

Carew.

The loads or veins of metal were by this action of the departing water made easy to be found out by the shoads, or trains of metallick fragments borne off from them, and lying in trains from those veins towards the sea, in the same course that water falling thence would take.

Woodward.

SHOAL, shòle.²⁹⁵ n. s. [ſcole, Saxon.]

1. A crowd; a great multitude; a throng.

When there be great shoals of people which go on to populate without foreseeing means of sustentation, once in an age they discharge their people upon other nations.

Bacon.

A league is made against such routs and shoals of people as have utterly degenerated from nature.

Bacon.

The vices of a prince draw shoals of followers, when his virtue leaves him the more eminent, because single.

Decay of Piety.

A shoal of silver fishes glides
And plays about the barges.

Waller.

God bad the command of famine, whereby he could have carried them off by shoals.

Woodward.

Around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a sable shoal;

Thick, and more thick, the black blockade extends.

Pope.

2. A shallow; a sand-bank.

The baven's mouth they durst not enter, for the dangerous shoals.

Abbot.

He heaves them off the shoals.

Dryden.

The depth of your pond should be six foot; and on the sides some shoals for the fish to lay their spawn.

Martimer.

To SHOAL, shòle. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To crowd; to throng.

The wave-sprung entrails, about which fauns and fish did shoal.

Chapman.

2. To be shallow; to grow shallow.

What they met
Solid, or slimy, as in raging sea
Tost up and down, together crowded drove,
From each side shoaling tow'rs the mouth of hell.

Milton.

SHOAL, shòle. adj. Shallow; obstructed or incumbered with banks.

SHOALINESS, shòlè-nés. n. s. [from shoaly.] Shallowness; frequency of shallow places.

SHOALY, shòlè. adj. [from shoal.] Full of shoals; full of shallow places.

The tossing vessel sail'd on shoaly ground.

Dryden.

SHOCK, shòk. n. s. [choc, French; schocken, Dutch.]

1. Conflict; mutual impression of violence; violent concourse.

Thro' the shock
Of fighting elements, on all sides round
Environ'd, wins his way.

Milton.

2. Concussion; external violence.

It is inconceivable how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration without corruption or alteration, should after be corrupted or altered.

Judge Hale.

These strong unshaken mounds resist the shocks
Of tides and seas tempestuous, while the rocks,
That secret in a long continued vein
Pass through the earth, the pond'rous pile sustain.

Blackmore.

Such is the haughty man; his tow'ring soul,
Midst all the shocks and injuries of fortune,
Rises superior and looks down on Cæsar.

Addison.

Long, at the head of his few faithful friends,
He stood the shock of a whole host of foes.

Addison.

The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie
The prey of worms.

Philips.

3. The conflict of enemies.

The adverse legions not less hideous join'd
The horrid shock.

Milton.

Those that run away are in more danger than the others that stand the shock.

L'Estrange.

The mighty force
Of Edward twice o'erturn'd their desp'rate king:
Twice he rose, and join'd the horrid shock.

Philips.

4. Offence; impression of disgust.

Fewer shocks a statesman gives his friend.

Young.

5. [scheccke, old Dutch.] A pile of sheaves of corn.

Corn tithed, sir parson, together to get

And cause it on shocks to be by and by set.

Tusser.

In a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season.

Job.

Thou, full of days, like weighty shocks of corn, In season reap'd, shall to thy grave be borne.

Sandys.

Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks, Feels his heart heave with joy.

Thomson.

6. [from shag.] A rough dog.

These her princes are come home again:

Come the three corners of the world in arms,

And we will shock them.

Shaksp.

3. To offend; to disgust.

Supposing verses are never so beautiful, yet, if they contain any thing that shocks religion or good manners, they are Versus inopes rerum, nugæque canora. Dryden.

My son,

I bade him love, and hid him now forbear:

If you have any kindness for him, still

Advise him not to shock a father's will.

Dryden.

Julian, who lov'd each sober mind to shock,

Who laugh'd at God, and offer'd to a cock.

Harte.

Those who in reading Homer are shocked that 'tis always a lion, may as well be angry that 'tis always a man.

Pope.

7^o SHOCK, shók. v. n.

1. To meet with hostile violence.

And now with shouts the shocking armies clos'd,

To lances lances, shields to shields oppos'd;

Communal death the fate of war confounds,

Each adverse battle gor'd with equal wounds.

Pope.

2. To be offensive.

The French humour, in regard of the liberties

they take in female conversations, is very shocking

to the Italians, who are naturally jealous.

Addison.

7^o SHOCK, shók. v. n. [from the noun.]

To build up piles of sheaves.

Reap well, scatter not, gather clean that is shorn,

Bind fast, shock apace, have an eye to thy corn.

Your hose should be ungartered, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation.

Shakspere.

Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon,

For they are thrifty honest men.

Shakspere.

This hollow cylinder is fitted now with a sucker, upon which is nailed a good thick piece of tanned shoe-leather.

Boyle.

Unknown and like esteem'd, and the dull swain

Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon,

And yet more medic'nal than that moly

That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave;

He call'd it hæmony.

Milton.

I was in pain, pulled off my shoe, and some ease that gave me.

Temple.

7^o SHOE, shód. v. a. preterit I shod; participle passive shod. [from the noun.]

1. To fit the foot with a shoe: used commonly of horses.

The smith's note for shoeing and plough irons.

Shakspere.

He doth nothing but talk of his horse; and makes it a great approbation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself.

Shaksp.

Tell your master that the horses want shoeing.

Swift.

2. To cover at the bottom.

The wheel compos'd of cricket's bones,

And daintily made for the nonce,

For fear of rattling on the stones,

With thistle down they shod it.

Drayton.

SHOE'BOY, shód'boè. n. s. [shoe and boy.]

A boy that cleans shoes.

If I employ a shoebuy, is it in view to his advantage, or my own convenience?

1. A horn used to facilitate the admission of the foot into a narrow shoe.

2. Any thing by which a transaction is facilitated; any thing used as a medium: in contempt.

Most of our fine young ladies retain in their service supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whifflers, and commonly call shoeing-horns.

Spectator.

I have been an arrant shoeing-horn for above these twenty years. I served my mistress in that capacity above five of the number before she was shod. Though she had many who made their applications to her, I always thought myself the best shoe in her shop.

Spectator.

SHO'EMAKER, shód'má-kúr. n. s. [shoe and maker.] One whose trade is to make shoes.

A cobbler or shoemaker may find some little fault with the latchet of a shoe that an Apelles had painted, when the whole figure is such as none but an Apelles could paint.

Watts.

SHO'ETYE, shód'ti. n. s. [shoe and tye.]

The riband with which women tie their shoes.

Madam, I do, as is my duty,

Honour the shadow of your shoetye.

Hudibras.

SHOG, shóg. n. s. [from shock.] Violent concussion.

Another's diving bow he did adore,

Which, with a shog, casts all the hair before.

Dryden.

He will rather have the primitive man to be produced in a kind of digesting balneum, where all the heavier lees may subside, and a due equilibrium be maintained, not disturbed by any such rude and violent shogs that would ruffle and break all the little stamina of the embryo.

Bentley.

7^o SHOG, shóg. v. a. To shake; to agitate by sudden interrupted impulses.

After it is washed, they put the remnant into a wooden dish, the which they softly shog to and fro in the water, until the earthy substance be flitted away.

Carew.

Light

Shoots far into the bosom of dim night

A glimmering dawn.

Milton.

2. To discharge as from a bow or gun.

I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,

That which I owe is lost; but if you please

To shoot an arrow that self way

Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt To find both.

Shakspere.

This murderous shaft that shot

Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way

Is to avoid the aim.

Shakspere.

A pomp of winning graces waited still,

And from about her shot darts of desire

Into all eyes to wish her still in sight.

Milton.

A shining harvest either host displays,

And shoots against the sun with equal rays.

Dryden.

When you shoot, and shut one eye,

You cannot think he would deny

To lend the other friendly aid,

Or wink, as coward and afraid.

Prior.

2. To germinate; to increase in vegetable growth.

Such trees as love the sun do not willingly descend far into the earth; and therefore they are commonly trees that shoot up much.

Bacon.

Onions, as they hang, will shoot forth.

Bacon.

The tree at once both upward shoots,
And just as much grows downward to the roots.

Cleaveland.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees.

Dryden.

Nor will the wither'd stock be green again,
But the wild olive shoots, and shades the ungrateful plain.

Dryden.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings.

Dryden.

The corn laid up by ants would shoot under ground, if they did not bite off all the huds; and therefore it will produce nothing.

Addison.

A wild where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous
shoot,

Or garden tempting with forbidden fruit. Pope.

3. To form itself into any shape, by emissions from a radical particle.

into crystals.

Bacon.

Although exhaled, and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glaucious bodies.

Brown.

That rude mass will shoot itself into several forms, till it make an habitable world: the steady hand of providence being the invisible guide of all its motions.

Burnet.

Expressed juices of plants, boiled into the consistence of a syrup, and set into a cool place, the essential salt will shoot upon the sides of the vessels.

Arbuthnot.

4. To be emitted.

There shot a streaming lamp along the sky,
Which on the winged lightning seem'd to fly.

Dryden.

Tell them that the rays of light shoot from the sun to our earth at the rate of one hundred and eighty thousand miles in the second of a minute, they stand aghast at such talk.

Watts.

The grand ethereal bow
Shoots up immense.

Thomson.

5. To protuberate; to jet out.

The land did shoot out with a very great promontory, hending that way.

This valley of the Tirol lies enclosed on all sides by the Alps, though its dominions shoot out into several branches among the breaks of the mountains.

Addison.

6. To pass as an arrow.

Thy words shoot thro' my heart,
Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love.

Addison.

7. To become any thing by sudden growth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spiritous fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, opening to the ambient light.

Milton.

Let me but live to shadow this young plant
From blites and storms: be'll soon shoot up a hero.

Dryden.

8. To move swiftly along.

A shooting star in autumn thwarts the night.

Where Tigris at the foot of Paradise
Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
Rose up a fountain by the tree of life.

Milton.

At first she flutters, but at length she springs
To smother flight, and shoots upon her wings.

Dryden.

The broken air loud whistling as she flies,
She stops and listens, and shoots forth again,
And guides her pinions by her young ones cries.

Dryden.

Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

Dryden.

She downward glides,
Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the tide

Gay.

Where the mob gathers, swiftly shoot along,
Nor idly mingle in the noisy throng.

Gay.

Not half so swiftly shoots along in air
The gliding lightning.

Pope.

9. To feel a quick glancing pain.

SHOOT, shòót. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act or impression of any thing emitted from a distance.

The Turkish how giveth a very forcible shoot, insomuch as the arrow bath pierced a steel target two inches thick; but the arrow, if headed with wood, bath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick.

Bacon.

2. The act of striking, or endeavouring to strike, with a missive weapon discharged by any instrument.

The noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

Shakspeare.

But come the bow; now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot;
Not wounding, pity would not let me do't.

Shakspeare.

As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that hit him.

L'Estrange.

3. [scheuten, Dut.] Branches issuing from the main stock.

They will not come just on the tops where they were cut, but out of those shoots which were water-boughs.

Bacon.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots.

Milton.

Prune off superfluous hranches and shoots of this second spring; but expose not the fruit without leaves sufficient.

Evelyn.

The book she bore
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the lawless shoots to bring,
And teach th' obedient branches where to spring.

Pope.

Now, should my praises owe their truth
To beauty, dress, or paint, or youth,
'Twere grafting on an annual stock,
That must our expectations mock;

And, making one luxuriant shoot,
Die the next year for want of root.

Swift.

Pride push'd forth buds at ev'ry branching shoot,
And virtue sbrunk almost beneath the root.

Harte.

- SHOOTER, shòót'úr. n. s. [from shoot.]

To enter combat with us, and contest
With thine own clay.

Herbert.

The king with gifts a vessel stores;
And next, to reconcile the shooter god,
Within her hollow sides the sacrifice he stow'd.

Dryden.

- SHOP, shóp. n. s. [scop, Saxon, a magazine; eschoppe, Fr. shopa, low Latin.
Ainsworth.]

1. A place where any thing is sold.

Our windows are broke down,
And we for fear compell'd to sbut our shops.

Shaks.

In bis needy shop a tortoise bung,
An alligator stuff, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about bis shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes.

Shakspeare.

Scarce any sold in shops could he relied on as faithfully prepared.

Boyle.

His shop is his element, and he cannot with any enjoyment of himself live out of it.

South.

What a strange thing is it, that a little health, or the poor business of a shop, should keep us so senseless of these great things that are coming so fast upon us!

Law.

2. A room in which manufactures are carried on.

Your most grave belly thus answer'd:
True is it, my incorporate friends,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the storehouse and the shop
Of the whole body.

Shakspeare.

We have divers mechanical arts and stuffs made by them; and shops for such as are not brought into vulgar use.

Bacon.

- SHOPBOARD, shóp'bòrd. n. s. [shop and board.] Bench on which any work is done.

That beastly rabble that came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls, and shopboards, in vast swarms,

With new-chalk'd bills and rusty arms. Hudibras.

It dwells not in shops or workhouses; nor till the late age was it ever known that any one served seven years to a smith or a taylor, that he should commence doctor or divine from the shopboard or the anvil; or from whistling to a team come to preach to a congregation.

South.

- SHOPBOOK, shóp'bòók. n. s. [shop and book.] Book in which a tradesman keeps his accounts.

In monstrous length, a mighty crocodile.

Spenser.

3. A drain: properly sewer.

4. [schooren, Dutch, to prop.] The support of a building; a buttress.

When I use the word shore, I may intend thereby a coast of land near the sea, or a drain to carry off water, or a prop to support a building.

Watts.

- TO SHORE, shòre. v. a. [schooren, Dutch.]

1. To prop; to support.

They undermined the wall, and, as they wrought, shored it up with timber.

Knolles.

He did not much strengthen bis own subsistence in court, but stood there on his own feet, for the most of his allies rather leaned upon him than shored him up.

Wotton.

There was also made a shoring or under-propping act for the benevolence; to make the sunis which any person had agreed to pay leviable by course of law.

Bacon.

2. To set on shore. Not in use.

I will bring these two blind ones aboard him; if be think it fit to shore them again, let him call me rogue.

Shakspeare.

shore.] The felt or skin of a sheep shorn.

SHORN, shórne. The participle passive of shear: with of.

So rose the Danite strong,

Shorn of his strength.

Milton.

Vile shrubs are shorn for browze: the tow'ring height

Of unctuous trees are torches for the night. Dryd.

He plunging downward shot his radiant head;

Dispell'd the breathing air that broke his flight;

Shorn of his beams, a man to mortal sight. Dryden.

SHORT, shórt.¹⁰⁷ adj. [ꝛeoꝛt, Sax.]

1. Not long; commonly, not long enough.

Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,

Far from a lynx, and not a giant quite,

I'll do what Mead and Cheselden advise,

To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.

Pope.

2. Not long in space or extent.

This less voluble earth,

By shorter flight to the east, had left him there.

Among th' immortals, who with nectar feast;

That poor would seem, that entertainment short

Of the true splendour of her present court. Waller.

We err, and come short of science, because we are so frequently misled by the evil conduct of our imaginations. Gianville.

As in many things the knowledge of philosophers was short of the truth, so almost in all things their practice fell short of their knowledge: the principles by which they walked were as much below those by which they judged, as their feet were below their head. South.

He will's not death should terminate their strife;

And wounds, if wounds ensue, he short of life.

Dryden

Virgil exceeds Theocritus in regularity and brevity, and falls short of him in nothing but simplicity and propriety of style. Pope.

A summary account.

The short and long is, our play is prefer'd.

Shakspeare.

In short, she makes a man of him at sixteen, and a boy all his life after. L'Estrange.

Repentance is, in short, nothing but a turning from sin to God; the casting off all our former evils, and, instead thereof, constantly practising all those christian duties which God requireth of us.

Duty of Man.

If he meet with no reply, you may conclude that I trust to the goodness of my cause: the short on 't is, 'tis indifferent to your humble servant, whatever your party says. Dryden.

From Medway's pleasing stream

To Severn's roar be thine:

In short, restore my love, and share my kingdom.

Dryden.

The proprieties and delicacies of the English are known to few: 'tis impossible even for a good wit to understand and practise them, without the help of a liberal education and long reading; in short, without wearing off the rust which he contracted while he was laying in a stock of learning. Dryden.

The short is, to speak all in a word, the possibility of being found in a salvable state cannot be sufficiently secured, without a possibility of always persevering in it.

Norris.

To see whole bodies of men breaking a constitution; in short, to be encompass'd with the greatest dangers from without, to be torn by many virulent factions within, then to be secure and senseless, are the most likely symptoms, in a state of sickness unto death.

Dryden.

SHOR'THAND, shórt'hánd. n. s. [short and hand.] A method of writing in compendious characters.

Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage;
Unless each vice in shorthand they indite,
Ev'n as notcht 'prentices whole sermons write.

Dryden.

Boys have but little use of shorthand, and should by no means practise it, till they can write perfectly well.

Locke.

In shorthand skill'd, where little marks comprise Whole words, a sentence in a letter lies.

Creech.

As the language of the face is universal, so 'tis very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it: 'tis the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room.

Collier.

SHO'RTLIVED, shòrt'liv'd.³⁵⁹ adj. [short and live.] Not living or lasting long.

New shot up from a vernal show'r.

Milton.

From before her vanish'd night,
Shot through with orient beams.

Milton.

Sometimes they shot out in length, like rivers;
and sometimes they flew into remote countries in colonies.

Burnet.

The same metal is naturally shot into quite different figures, as quite different kinds of them are of the same figure.

Woodward.

He, prone on ocean in a moment flung,
Stretch'd wide his eager arms, and shot the seas along.

Pope.

SHOT, shòt. n. s. [schot, Dutch; from shoot.]

1. The act of shooting.

A shot unheard gave me a wound unseen.

Sidney.

Proud death!
What feast is tow'r'd in thy infernal cell,
That thou so many princes at a shot
So bloodily hast struck?

Shaksp.

He caused twenty shot of his greatest cannon to be made at the king's army.

Clarendon.

2. The missile weapon emitted by any instrument.

I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes.

Impatient to revenge the fatal shot,
His right hand doubly to his left succeeds.

Dryden.

3. The flight of a missile weapon.

She sat over against him, a good way off, as it were a bow shot.

Genesis.

4. [escot, French.] A sum charged; a reckoning.

A man is never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say welcome.

Shakspere.

As the fund of our pleasure, let each pay his shot;
Far hence be the sad, the lewd fop, and the sot.

Ben Jonson.

Shepherd, leave decoying,
Pipes are sweet a summer's day;

But, a little after toying,

Women have the shot to pay.

Dryden.

He touch'd the pence when others touch'd the pot;
The hand that sign'd the mortgage paid the shot.

Swift.

SHOTE, shòte. n. s. [γροτα, Sax. truita mmor, Latin.] A fish.

The shote, peculiar to Devonshire and Cornwall,

To SHOW, shô.³²⁴ v. a. pret. showed and shown; part. pass. shown. [ſceayan, Saxon; schowen, Dutch. This word is frequently written shew; but since it is always pronounced, and often written, show, which is favoured likewise by the Dutch schowen, I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation.]

1. To exhibit to view, as an agent.

If I do feign,

O let me in my present wildness die,

And never live to shew the incredulous world

The noble change that I have purpos'd. Shakspeare.

Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Psalms.

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if singing, dancing, and shewing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor. L'Estrange

I through the ample air in triumph high, Shall lead hell captive, maugre hell, and show

The pow'rs of darkness bound. Milton.

2. To afford to the eye or notice, as a thing containing or exhibiting.

Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can heav'n shew more? Milton.

A mirrour in one hand collective shews, Varied and multiplied, the groupe of woes. Savage.

3. To make to see. Not a higher hill, nor wider, looking round, Whereon for different cause the tempter set Our second Adam in the wilderness, To show him all earth's kingdoms and glory. Milt.

Yet him, God the most high vouchsafes To call by vision from his father's house His kindred and false gods, into a land Which he will show him. Milton.

The kindred of the slain forgive the deed; But a short exile must for show precede. Dryden.

8. External appearance. Shall I say O Zelmae? Alas, your words be against it. Shall I say prince Pyrocles? Wretch that I am, your show is manifest against it. Sidney.

Fierce was the fight on the proud Belgians side, For honour, which they seldom sought before; But now they by their own vain boasts were tied, And forc'd, at least in shew, to prize it more. Dryden.

9. Exhibition to view. I have a letter from her; The mirth whereof so larded with my matter, That neither singly can be manifested, Without the shew of both. Shakspeare.

10. Pomp; magnificent spectacle. As for triumphs, masks, feasts, and such shews, men need not be put in mind of them. Bacon.

11. Phantom; not reality.

What you saw was all a fairy show;
And all those airy shapes you now behold
Were human bodies once.

Dryden.

2. Representative action.

Florio was so overwhelmed with happiness, that he could not make a reply; but expressed in dumb show those sentiments of gratitude that were too big for utterance.

Addison.

SHO'WBREAD or SHE'WBREAD, shò'bréd.

n. s. [show and bread.] Among the Jews, they thus called loaves of bread that the priest of the week put every Sabbath day upon the golden table, which was in the sanctum before the Lord. They were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They served them up hot, and at the same time took away the stale ones, which could not be eaten but by the priest alone. This offering was accompanied with frankincense and salt.

Calmet.

Set upon the table showbread before me. Exodus.

SHO'WER, shò'u'úr.²²³ n. s. [scheure, Dutch.]

1. Rain either moderate or violent.

If the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakspeare.
The ancient cinnamon was, while it grew, the driest; and in showers it prospered worst. Bacon.

2. Storm of any thing falling thick.

I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail Rich pearls upon thee. Shakspeare.
Give me a storm; if it be love,
Like Danae in the golden shower,
I swim in pleasure. Carew.

With show'rs of stones he drives them far away;
The scatt'ring dogs around at distance bay. Pope.

3. Any very liberal distribution.

He and myself
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it. Shakspeare.

To SHO'WER, shò'u'úr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet or drown with rain.

Serve they as flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth. Milt.
The sun more glad impress'd his beams,
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath show'rd the earth. Milton.

2. To pour down.

These, lull'd by nightingales, embracing slept;
And on their naked limbs the flow'ry roof
Shower'd roses, which the morn repair'd. Milton.

3. To distribute or scatter with great liberality.

After this fair discharge, all civil honours having show'ed on him before, there now fell out occasion to action. Wotton.

Cæsar's favour

That show'rs down greatness on his friends, will raise me

To Rome's first honours. Addison.

To SHO'WER, shò'u'úr. v. n. To be rainy.

SHO'WERY, shò'u'úr-é. adj. [from shower.]

Rainy.
A hilly field, where the stubble is standing, set on fire in the showery season, will put forth mushrooms. Bacon.

Murranus came from Anxur's show'ry height
With ragged rocks and stony quarries white, Seated on hills. Addison.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward, when the show'ry winds arise.

Addison.

SHO'WISH, shò'ish. adj. [from show.]

1. Splendid; gaudy.

The escutcheons of the company are showish, and will look magnificent. Swift.

2. Ostentatious.

SHOWN, shòne. [pret. and part. pass. of
To show.] Exhibited.

Merey shown on man by him seduc'd. Milton.

SHO'WY, shò'é. adj. [from show.] Osten-tationous.

Men of warm imaginations neglect solid and substantial happiness for what is showy and superficial. Addison.

SHRANK, shránk. The preterit of shrink.

The children of Israel eat not of the shew which shrank upon the hollow of the thigh. Genesis.

To SHRED, shréd. v. a. pret. shred.

[ſcpeadan, Saxon.] To cut into small pieces. Commonly used of cloth or herbs.

It hath a number of short cuts or shreddings, which may be better called wishes than prayers.

Hooker.

One gathered wild gourds and shred them.

2 Kings.

Where did you whet your knife to-night, he cries,
And shred the leeks that in your stomach rise?

Dryden.

SHRED, shréd. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece cut off.

Gold, grown somewhat churlish by recovering, is made more pliant by throwing in shreds of tanned leather. Bacon.

The mighty Tyrian queen, that gain'd
With subtle shreds a tract of land,
Did leave it with a castle fair
To his great ancestor. Hudibras.

A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away. Pope.

2. A fragment.

They said they were an hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs,
That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat;
And with these shreds they vented their complain-ings. Shakspeare.

Shreds of wit and senseless rhimes
Blunder'd out a thousand times. Swift.

His panegyrick is made up of half a dozen shreds, like a schoolboy's theme, beaten general topics.

Swift.

SHREW, shrò.^{262 339} n. s. [schreyen,

German, to clamour.] A peevish, mallignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman. It appears in Robert of Gloucester, that this word signified anciently any one perverse or obstinate of either sex.

There dede of hem vor hunger a thousand and mo,
And yat nolde the screwen to none pes go.

Robert of Gloucester.

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews both short and tall. Shaksp.
By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.

Shakspeare.

A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her sallow cheeks, her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the shrew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Addison.

SHREWD, shròd. adj. [contracted from shrewed.]

1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.

Her eldest sister is so crust a shrewd,
That till the father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakspeare.

2. Maliciously sly; cunning; more artful than good.

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kinds of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.

A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist.

Addison.

Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.

3. Bad; ill-betokening.

Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South.

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.

Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune.

Shakspeare.

When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South.

No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body
a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

SHRE'WDLY, shròd'lè. adv. [from shrewd.]

1. Mischievously; destructively.

This practice hath most shrewdly past upon thee.

Shakspeare.

At Oxford, his youth and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were set open. Wotton.

2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression.

The obstinate and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they choose not to be of.

South.

This last allusion rubb'd upon the sore;
Yet seem'd she not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd.

Dryden.

3. With good guess.

Four per cent. increases not the number of lenders; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it. Locke.

SHRE'WDNES, shròd'nés. n. s. [from shrewd.]

1. Sly cunning; archness.

Her garboiles, which not wanted shrewdness of policy too, did you too much disquiet. Shakspeare.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness,
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.

2. Mischievousness; petulance.

SHRE'WISH, shrò'ish. adj. [from shrew.]

Having the qualities of a shrew; fro-ward; petulantly clamorous.

Anglo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours.

Shakspeare.

SHRE'WISHLY, shrò'ish-lè. adv. [from shrewish.] Petulantly; peevishly; clamorously; frowardly.

He speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. Shaksp.

SURE'WISNESS, shrò'ish-nés. n. s. [from shrewish.] The qualities of a shrew; frowardness; petulance; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewishness,
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me.

Shakspeare.

SHREWMOUSE, shrōō' mōuse. n. s. [ſc̄reapa, Saxon.] A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.

To SHRIEK, shrèék. ^{27^a} v. n. [skrieger, Dan. scricciolare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.

On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly owl,
Shrieking his baleful note.

Fairy Queen.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the sternest good night.

Shakspeare.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your ears should rift to hear me.

Shakspeare.

In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake.

Denham.

Hark! peace!

At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train
Echo'd her grief.

Dryden.

Why did you shriek out?

Dryden.

SHRIEK, shrèék. n. s. [skrieg, Danish; scriccio, Italian.] An inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.

Una hearing evermore

His rueful shrieks and groanings, often torc
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain.

Fairy Queen.

Time has been, my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't.

Shakspeare.

The corps of Almon and the rest are shown;
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town.

Dryden.

SHRIFT, shrift. n. s. [ſc̄riſt, Saxon.]

Confession made to a priest. Out of use.

Off with

Bernardine's head: I'll give a present shrift,
And will advise him for a better place.

Shakspeare.

My lord shall never rest;

I'll watch him tame, and talk him out:
His hed shall seem a school, his board a shrift.

Shakspeare.

The duke's commands were absolute;
Therefore, my lord, address you to your shrift,
And he yourself; for you must die this instant.

Rowe.

SHRIGHT, shrite. for shrieked.

Spenser.

SHRILL, shril. adj. [A word supposed to be made ſer onomatopœiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.

Thy bounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

Shakspeare.

The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill sounding throat
Awake the god of day.

Shakspeare.

Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far
Cannot he seen or heard.

Shakspeare.

Upsprings the lark, shrill voic'd and loud.

Thoms.

To SHRILL, shril. v. n. [from the adjective.] To pierce the air with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.

The sun of all the world is dim and dark;

O heavy here!

Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful verse!

Spenser.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,

The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling erowd,
That well agree withouten breach or jar.

Spenser.

A shrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address.

Shaksp.

Here no clarion's shrilling note
The muse's green retreat can pierce;

The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse.

Fent. Ode to L. Gower.

The females round,

Maids, wives, and matrons mix a shrilling sound.

Pope.

SHRILLY, shril'lè. adv. [from shrill.] With a shrill noise.

SHRILLNESS, shril'nèss. n. s. [from shrill.] The quality of being shrill.

Hawks and gulls can at a great height see mice on the earth, and shrimps in the waters.

Derham.

2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt.

It cannot be, this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies.

Shaksp.

He bath found,

Within the ground,

At last, no shrimp,

Whereon to imp

His jolly club.

Ben Jonson.

SHRINE, shrine. n. s. [ſc̄rin, Saxon; scrinium, Lat.] A case in which something sacred is reposit.

You living pow'rs, inclos'd in stately shrine
Of growing trees; you rural gods, that wield
Your scepters here, if to your ears divine

A voice may come, which trouhled soul doth yield.

Sidney.

All the world come

To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.

Come offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.

Shakspeare.

They often plac'd

Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
Abominations! and with cursed things
His holy rites profan'd.

Millon.

Falling on his knees before her shrine,
He thus implor'd her pow'rs.

Dryden.

Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they lavish out all their incense upon that shrine, and cannot hear the thought of admitting a blemish therein.

Watts.

And the fair light which gilds this new-made orb,
Shorn of his beams, shrinks in.

Dryden.

Love is a plant of the most tender kind,
That shrinks and shakes with ev'ry ruffling wind.

Granville.

All fibres have a contractile power, whereby they shorten; as appears if a fibre be cut transversely, the ends shrink, and make the wound gape.

Arbutnot.

Philosophy that touch'd the heav'n's before,
Shrinks to her hidden cause, and is no more.

Pope.

3. To express fear, horror, or pain, by shrugging, or contracting the body.

There is no particular object so good, but it may have the shew of some difficulty or unpleasant quality annexed to it, in respect whereof the will may shrink and decline it.

Hooker.

The morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

Shakspeare.

I'll embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.
