A DICTIONARY

OF

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

LAB

L, él. A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated; as, hlaf, loaf; hlæfdig, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall, still, full; except after a diphthong: as, fail, feel, veal, cool. In a word of more syllables it is written single; as, channel, canal, tendril. It is sometimes put before e, and sounded feebly after it; as bible, title.

LA, lāv. interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unless it be the French la.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil, How he takes it at heart. Shakspeare.

LA'BDANUM, lāb'dā-nūm. n. s. A resin, of a strong not unpleasant smell, and an aromattick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub in Crete. Hill.

To LA'BEFY, lāb'è-fi. v. a. [labefacio, Latin.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LA'BEL, lā'bèl. n. s. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A small slip or scrip of writing. When wak'd, I found This label on my bosom; whose containing Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakspeare.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Ayliffe.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands; And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd, Shall be the label to another deed, Or my true heart with treacherous revolt Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shakspeare.

LA'BIAL, lā'bè-āl. adj. [labialis, Latin.] Uttered by the lips.

VOL. II.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Holder.

LA'BIATED, lā'bè-ā-téd. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

LA'BIODENTAL, lā-bè-ò-dèn'tāl. adj. [labium and dentatis.] Formed or pronounced by the cooperation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very easy; and first the labiodentals, f, v, also the linguadentals, t h, d h. Holder.

LABO'RANT, lāb'bò-rānt. n. s. [laborans, Latin.] A chymist. Not in use.

I can shew you a sort of sixt sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY, lāb'bò-rā-tūr-è. n. s. [laboratoire, Fr.] A chymist's workroom.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the furnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABORIOUS, lā-bò-rè-ūs. adj. [laborieux, Fr. laboriosus, Lat.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and, lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South.

A spacious cave within its farmost part, Was heav'd and fashion'd by laborious art, Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war, And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy. Do'st thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil, Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Addison.

LABORIOUSLY, lā-bò-rè-ūs-lè. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

I chuse laboriously to bear A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABORIOUSNESS, lā-bò-rè-ūs-nès. n. s. [from laborious.]

1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness, as well as the laboriousness of the work, those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LABOUR, lā'būr. n. s. [labour, Fr. labor, Latin.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work. If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakspeare.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thess.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules, Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd Your husband so much sweat. Shakspeare.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

5. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of women's labours thou hast charge, And generation goodly doest enlarge, Incline thy will to affect our wishful vow. Spenser.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain; My throws come thicker, and my cries encrease'd, Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Grant.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South.

To LABOUR, lā'būr. v. n. [laboro, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort. When shall I come to th' top of that same hill? —You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakspeare.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd, More than mine own. Shakspeare.

Who is with him? —None but the fool, who labours to out-jest His heart-struck injuries. Shakspeare.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exodus.

He is so touch'd with the memory of her benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression to represent it. Notes on the Odyssey.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect.

Colossians.

2. To do work; to take pains.

The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for.

Clarendon.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich.

Eccles.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

Nehemiah.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of.

Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.

The stone that labours up the hill,

Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love.

Granville.

4. To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Latin.] Not in use.

They abound with horse,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour.

B. Jonson.

I was called to another, who in childbed laboured of an ulcer in her left hip.

Wiseman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this infernal lake the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and frees the lab'ring skies,

Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon.

Dryd.

This exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you.

Wake.

6. To be in childbirth; to be in travail.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in the throws of birth;
For th' unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and toss'd it on the flame.

Dryd.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring god.

Pope.

To LABOUR, lá'búr. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment.

2 Maccabees.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,

Th' artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy.

Dryden.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information.

Pope.

2. To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke.

Dryd.

LA'BOURER, lá'búr-úr. n. s. [laboureur, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their workfolks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot.

Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,

To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels from the Belgian shore.

Dryden.

Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets.

Arbutnot.

Not balmy sleep to lab'ers faint with pain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy sight to me.

Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,

Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears.

Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee.

Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness.

Shaksp.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love.

Granville.

LA'BOURSOME, lá'búr-súm. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not in use.

Forget

Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein You made great Jove angry.

Shaksp.

He hath, my lord, by laboursome petition,
Wrung from me my slow leave.

Shaksp.

LA'BRA, lá'brá. n. s. [Spanish.] A lip. Not used.

Hammer.

Word of denial in thy labras here;
Word of denial, froth and scum thou liest.

Shaksp.

LA'BYRINTH, lá'bér-inth. n. s. [labyrinthus, Lat.] A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.

Suffolk, stay;

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There minotaurs and ugly treasons lurk.

Shaksp.

Words which would tear

The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear.

Donne.

My clamours tear

The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air.

Sandys.

The earl of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself.

Clarendon.

My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I th' maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world.

Denham.

LAC, lák. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable, and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom.

Hill.

LACE, láse. n. s. [lacet, French; laqueus, Latin.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain:

For striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain

In limy snares, the subtil loops among.

Spenser.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had snared been in love's strong lace.

Fairfax.

3. A plaited string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O! eut my lace, lest, my heart cracking, it Break too.

Shaksp.

Doll ne'er was call'd to eut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face.

Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem.

Bacon.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,
But trimm'd with curious lace.

Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word; now out of use.

If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;

He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace.

Prior.

To LACE, láse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a string run through eyelet holes.

I caused a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened.

Wiseman.

At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his erected helm, and strode away.

These glittering spoils, now made the victor's gain,

He to his body suits; but suits in vain:
Messapus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest.

Like Mrs Primly's great belly; she may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips.

Congreve.

When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist.

Prior.

2. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver.

Shaksp.

3. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains tops.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front.

Pope.

4. To beat; whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lash.

Go you, and find me out a man that has no enriosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye.

L'Estrange.

LACED Mutton, láse-mút'n. An old word for a whore.

Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her a lac'd mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour.

Shaksp.

LA'CEMAN, láse'mán. n. s. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a nonjuror, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Cæsar, or Nero.

Addison.

LA'CERABLE, lá'sér-á-bl. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composure.

Harvey.

To LA'CERATE, lá'sér-ác. v. a. [lacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my sons lacerate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth.

Howel.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and cause th boiling.

Here lacerrated friendship claims a tear.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

LACERATION, lá'sér-á-shún. n. s. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacérations upon small causes.

Arbutnot.

LA'CERATIVE, lá'sér-á-tív. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerrated humours.

Harvey.

LA'CHRYMAL, lák'krè-mál. adj. [lachrymal, Fr.] Generating tears.

It is of an exquisite sense, that upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it. Cheyne.

LA'CHRYMARY, lāk'kré-má-ré. adj. [lachryma, Latin.] Containing tears.

How many dresses are there for each particular deity! what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels! Addison.

LACHRYMA'TION, lāk-kré-má'shún. n. s. [from lachryma, Lat.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.

LA'CHRYMATORY, lāk'kré-má-túr-é.⁵¹² n. s. [lachrimatoire, French.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

LACI'NIATED, lâ-sin'nè-à-téd. adj. [from lacinia, Latin.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LACK, lāk. v. a. [laecken, to lessen, Dut.] To want; to need; to be without.

Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force, of prayer, who regardeth the very meanings, groans, and sighs of the heart. Hooker.

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack any thing in it. Deuteronomy.

One day we hope thou shalt bring back, Dear Bolingbroke, the justice that we lack. Daniel.
Intreat they may; authority they lack. Daniel.

To LACK, lāk. v. n.

1. To be in want.
The lions do lack and suffer hunger. Com. Prayer.

2. To be wanting.
Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? Genesis.

There was nothing lacking to them: David recovered all. 1 Samuel.
That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied. 1 Corinthians.

LACK, lāk. n. s. [from the verb.] Want; need; failure.

In the Scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life. Hooker.

Many that are not mad
Have sure more lack of reason. Shakespeare.

He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

The trenchant blade, toledo trusty,
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And eat into itself, for lack
Of somebody to hew and lack. Hudibras.

LA'CKBRAIN, lāk'bráne. n. s. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.

What a lackbrain is this! Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakespeare.

LA'CKER, lāk'kúr.⁹⁸ n. s. A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LA'CKER, lāk'kúr. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear over with lacker.

What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope.

LA'CKEY, lāk'ké. n. s. [laquais, Fr.] An attending servant; a footboy.

They would shame to make me
Wait else at door: a fellow counsellor,
'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys! Shakespeare.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He's cautious to avoid the coach and six,
And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden.

Lackqueys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison's Spectator.

To LA'CKEY, lāk'ké. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lackqueying the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion. Shakespeare.

So dear to heav'n is saintly chastity,
That when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton.

To LA'CKEY, lāk'ké. v. n. To act as a footboy; to pay servile attendance.

Oft have I servants seen on horses ride,
The free and noble lackey by their side. Sandys.
Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a footpoet; he lackeys by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden.

LA'CKLINEN, lāk'lin-nín.⁹⁹ adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.

You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away. Shakespeare.

LA'CKLUSTRE, lāk'lús-túr.⁴¹⁶ adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lacklustre eye,
Says very wisely, It is ten o'clock. Shakespeare.

LACO'NICK, lâ-kôn'ík.⁵⁰⁹ adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr.] Short; brief; from Lacones, the Spartans, who used few words.

I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope.

LA'CONISM, lāk'kò-níz-m. n. s. [laconisme, Fr. laconismus, Lat.] A concise style: called by Pope, laconicism. See LACO-NICK.

As the language of the face is universal, so it is very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it. It is the short-hand of the mind, and crowds a great leal in a little room. Collier of the Aspect.

LACO'NICALLY, lâ-kôn'nè-kái-é. adv. [from laconick.] Briefly; concisely.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and desirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot laconically. Camden's Remains.

LA'CTARY, lāk'tá-ré.⁵¹² adj. [lactareus, Lat.] Milky; full of juice like milk.

From lactary, or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice dispersed through every part, there arise flowers blue and yellow. Brown.

LA'CTARY, lāk'tá-ré. n. s. [lactarium, Lat.] A dairy-house.

LACTA'TION, lāk'tá'shún. n. s. [lacto, Lat.] The act or time of giving suck.

LA'CTEAL, lāk'té-ál, or lāk'tshé-ál.⁴⁶⁴ adj. [from lac, Lat.] Milky; conveying chyle of the colour of milk.

As the food passes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is separated from the excrementitious by the lacteal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood. Locke.

LA'CTEAL, lāk'té-ál, or lāk'tshé-ál.⁴⁶⁴ n. s. The vessel that conveys chyle.

The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment, acrimonious or not sufficiently attenuated, to enter in people of lax constitutions, whereas their sphincters will shut against them in such as have strong fibres. Arbuthnot.

LACTE'OUS, lāk'té-ús, or lāk'tshé-ús. adj. [lacteus, Lat.]

1. Milky.

Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions. Brown.

2. Lacteal; conveying chyle.
The lungs are suitable for respiration, and the lacteous vessels for the reception of the chyle.

LACTE'SCENCE, lāk-tés'sénsé.⁵¹⁰ n. s. [lactesco, Lat.] Tendency to milk, or milky colour.

This lactescence does commonly ensue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the solution. Boyle on Colours.

LACTE'SCENT, lāk-tés'sént. adj. [lactescens, Lat.] Producing milk, or a white juice.

Amongst the pot-herbs are some lactescens plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholesome juice. Arbuthnot.

LACTY'FEROUS, lāk-tíf'fèr-ús.⁵¹⁸ adj. [lactiferos, Lat.] What conveys or brings milk.

He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct. Ray on the Creation.

LAD, lād. n. s. [leode, Saxon, which commonly signifies people, but sometimes, says Mr. Lye, a boy.]

1. A boy; a stripling, in familiar language.
We were

Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal. Shakespeare.

The poor lad who wants knowledge must set his invention on the rack, to say something where he knows nothing. Locke.

Too far from the ancient forms of teaching several good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of such lads as have been removed to other schools. Watts.

2. A boy; a young man, in pastoral language.

For grief, whereof the lad would after joy,
But pin'd away in anguish, and self-will'd annoy. Spenser.

The shepherd lad,
Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat
So many ages. Milton.

LA'DDER, lād'dúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [hladpe, Saxon.]

1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.

Whose compost is rotten, and carried in time,
And spread as it should be, thrift's ladder may climb. Tusser.

Now streets grow through'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play,
And some more bold mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

Easy in words thy style, in sense sublime;
'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,
Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Prior.

I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it. Gulliver's Travels.

2. Any thing by which one climbs.

Then took she help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a hasty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief. Sidney.

I must climb her window,

The ladder made of cords. Shaksp.

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which

My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shaksp.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,

Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shak.

3. A gradual rise.
Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift.

LADDE, lādē.^{73 75} n. s.

Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon laec, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river. Gibson.

To LADE, lādē.⁷⁵ v. a. preter. laded; part. passive, laded or laden. [from hlāden, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burden.

And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence. Genesis.

The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burden they will bear. Bacon.

The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea
With prosperous wind; a woman leads the way. Dryden.

Though the peripatetic doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke.

2. [hlādan, to draw, Saxon.] To heave out; to throw out.

He chides the sea that sunders him from them, Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way. Shaksp.

They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too fast, there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allay all heats of the blood by abstinence, and cooling herbs. Temple.

If there be springs in the slate marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out. Mortimer.

LA'DING, lā'ding.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from lade.] Weight; burden.

Some we made prize, while others burnt and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went. Waller.

The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens the utter loss of the ship: there is but one way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South.

It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves. L'Estrange.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

LA'DLE, lā'dl.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [hlādle, Saxon, from hlādan; leaugh, Erse.]

1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid from the vessel containing it.

I am much afraid, my lady, his mother play'd false with a smith. Shaksp.

I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady.—I your lady, Sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady. Shaksp.

I am sorry my relation to so deserving a lady should be any occasion of her danger and affliction. King Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.

O foolish fairy's son, what fury mad
Hath thee ineens'd to haste thy doleful fate?

Were it not better I that lady had,
Than that thou hadst repented it too late? Spenser.

Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of. Raleigh.

May every lady an Evadne prove,
That shall divert me from Aspasia's love. Waller.

Should I shun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans would reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains. Dryden.

We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face. Addison.

3. A word of complaisance used of women.

Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity
As we great modern friends withal. Shaksp.

I hope I may speak of women without offence to the ladies. Guardian.

4. Mistress, importing power and dominion; as, lady of the manor.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champaigns rich'd
With pleuteous rivers, and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shaksp.

To LAMENT, lám-mént'. v. n. [lamentor, Lat. lamentor, Fr.] To mourn; to wail; to grieve; to express sorrow.

The night has been unruly where we lay;
And chimneys were blown down: and, as they say,
Lamentings heard i' th' air, strange screams of death. Shaksp.

Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice. John.

Jeremiah lamented for Josiah, and all the singing men and women spake of Josiah in their lamentations. 2 Chronicles.

Far less I now lament for one whole world
Of wicked sons destroyed, than I rejoice

For one man found so perfect and so just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton.

To LAMENT, lá-mént'. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to express sorrow for.

As you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shak.
The pair of sages praise,
One pity'd, one contemn'd the woful times,
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.

LAMENT, lá-mént'. n. s. [lamentum, Lat. from the verb.]

1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.

We, long ere our approaching, heard within Noise, other than the sound of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milt.
The loud *lament*s arise
Of one distress'd, and mastif's mingled cries. Dryden.

2. Expression of sorrow.

To add to your *lament*s,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal sight. Shaksp.

LAMMAS, lám'más.⁸⁸ n. s. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged at the time of mass, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may else be corrupted from lattermath.] The first of August.

In 1578 was that famous lammass day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria. Bacon.
LAMP, lám. n. s. [lampe, French; lampas, Latin.]

1. A light made with oil and a wick.

O thievish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

In lamp furnaces I use spirit of wine instead of oil, and the same flame has melted foliated gold. Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quick'ning spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.

Cynthia, fair regent of the night,

O may thy silver lamp from heav'n's high bow'r,
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

To th' Indies of her arms he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain assay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepedade
With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore. Cleaveland.

LANCE'T, lám'sít.⁹⁹ n. s. [lancette, French.] A small pointed surgical instrument.

I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wiseman.

A vein, in an apparent blue, runneth along the body, and if dexterously prick'd with a lancet, emitteth a red drop. Brown.

Hippocrates saith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses. Arbuthnot.

To LANCH, lánsh. v. a. [lancer, Fr.] This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lanch the surer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore;
When Jove tremendous in the sable deeps,
Lanch'd his red lightning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.

LANCINA'TION, lán-sé-ná'shùn. n. s. [from lancino, Lat.] Tearing; laceration.

To LANCINATE, lán'sé-náte.⁹¹ v. a. [lancino, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

LAND, lánd. n. s. [land, Gothick, Sax. and so all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. A country; a region distinct from other countries.

The nations of Seythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people. Spenser.

Thy ambition,

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shaksp.

What had he done to make him fly the land? Shak.

The chief men of the land had great authority: though the government was monarchial, it was not despotick. Broome.

2. Earth, distinct from water.

By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.

Yet if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But, ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dryd.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land,
And greet with greedy joy th' Italian strand. Dryd.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land-carrack;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shak.

With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale.

I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Addison.

The Phœnicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stopt not short without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbuthnot.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbuthnot.

Beneath his steely casque he felt the blow,
And roll'd with limbs relax'd, along the land. Pope.

5. An estate real and immoveable.

To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements, Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection. Shaksp.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knolles.

This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:

Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.
6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryd.
7. Urine. [blond, Saxon.] As

Probably land-damn was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hanmer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damu'd for't; would I knew the villain;

I would land-damn him. Shaksp.
To LAND, lând. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.

The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In Britain. Shaksp.

He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryden.

Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

To LAND, lând. v. n. To come to shore.

Let him land,
And solemnly set him set on to London. Shaksp.

Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast, within sixteen days. Bacon.

LANDLORD, lând'lórd.⁸⁸ n. s. [land and lord.]

1. One who owns lands or houses, and has tenants under him.

This regard shall be had, that in no place, under any landlord, there shall be many of them placed together, but dispersed. Spenser.

It is a generous pleasure in a landlord, to love to see all his tenants look fat, sleek, and contented. Clarissa.

2. The master of an inn.

Upon our arrival at the inn, my companion fetched out the jolly landlord, who knew him by his whistle. Addison.

LANDMARK, lând'mârk. n. s. [land and mark.] Any thing set up to preserve the boundaries of land.

In th' midst, an altar, as the land-mark stood, Rustick, of grassy sod. Milton.

The land-marks by which places in the church had been known, were removed. Clarendon.

Then land-marks limited to each is right;
For all before was common as the light. Dryden.

Though they are not self-evident principles, yet if they have been made out from them by a wary and unquestionable deduction, they may serve as land-marks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

LANDSCAPE, lând'skápe. n. s. [landschape, Dutch.]

1. A region; the prospect of a country.

Lovely seem'd,
That landscape! and of pure, now purer air,
Meets his approach. Milton.

The sun scarce up risen,
Shot parallel to th' earth his dewy ray,
Discovering in wide landscape all the east
Of paradise, and Eden's happy plains. Milton.

Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,

Whilst the landscape round it measures,
Russet lawns and fallows grey,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray. Milton.

We are like men entertained with the view of a spacious landscape, where the eye passes over one pleasing prospect into another. Addison.

2. A picture, representing an extent of space, with the various objects in it.

LANGUAGE, lâng'gwídjé.^{331 90} n. s. [langage, French; lingua, Latin.]

1. Human speech.

We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and producing words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is act signs for communication of thoughts. Holder.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

O! good my Lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in. Shakspere.

He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of th' others, as his own was known. Denham.

3. Style; manner of expression.

Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent. Roscommon.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women, men, for dress:
Their praise is still—the style is excellent;
The sense, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

LANGUAGED, lâng'gwídj'd.³³⁹ adj. [from the noun.] Having various languages.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
And many languag'd nations has survey'd. Pope.

To LA'NGUISE, lãng'gwísh.³⁴⁰ v. n. [lan-guir, French; languere, Latin.]

1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish
A drop of blood a-day; and, being aged,
Dic of this folly.

Shakespeare.

We and our fathers do languish of such diseases.
What can we expect, but that her languishings should end in death?

2 Esdras.

His sorrows bore him off; and softly laid
His languish'd limbs upon his homely bed.

Dryden.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

The troops with hate inspir'd,
Their darts with clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languish'd war alive.

Dryden.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

What man who knows
What woman is, yea, what she cannot chuse
But must be, will his free hours languish out
For assur'd bondage?

Shakespeare.

The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein, shall languish.

Hosca.

I have been talking with a snitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Shaksp.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chuse for myself, and have ever since languished under the displeasure of an inexorable father.

Spectator.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which she languishes for the loss of her deceased lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck.

Spectator.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

What poems think you soft, and to be read
With languishing regards, and bending head?

Dryden.

LA'NGUISE, lãng'gwísh. n. s. [from the verb.] Soft appearance.

And the blue languish of soft Allia's eye.

Pope.

Then forth he walks,
Beneath the trembling languish of her beam,
With soften'd soul.

Thomson.

LA'NGUISHINGLY, lãng'gwísh-ìng-lè. adv.
[from languishing.]

Leave such to tune their own dull rhimes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow.

Pope.

2. Dully; tediously.

Alas! my Dorus, thou seest how long and languishingly the weeks have past over since our last talking.

Sidney.

LA'NGUISHMENT, lãng'gwísh-mènt. n. s.
[languissamment, French; from languish.]

1. State of pining.

By that count which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains;
Which I have wasted in long languishment,
That seem'd the longer for my greater pains.

Spenser.

2. Softness of mien.

Humility it expresses, by the stooping or bending of the head; languishment, when we hang it on one side.

Dryden.

LA'NGUOR, lãng'gwúr.^{166 344} n. s. [languor,
Latin; languor, French.]

1. Faintness; wearisomeness.

Well hoped I, and fair beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeem. Spens.
For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.

Shakespeare.

2. Listlessness; inattention.

Academical disputation gives vigour and brisk-ness to the mind thus exercised, and relieves the languor of private study and meditation.

Watts.

3. Softness; laxity.

To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales
Diffusing languor in the parting gales.

Dunciad.

4. [In physick.]

Latin.] Bearing wool.

LANK, lãngk. adj. [lancke, Dutch.]

1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakespeare.
Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack,
Lank, as an unthrif't's purse.

Donne.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much.

Boyle.

Moist earth produces corn and grass, but both
Too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.

Let not my land so large a promise boast,
Lest the lank ears in length of stem be lost.

Dryd.

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
Till his lank purse declares his money gone.

Dryd.

Meagre and lank with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together.

Swift.

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphodil.

Milton.

French; laterna, Latin: it is by mistake often written lanthorn.]

1. A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, my lanthorn to my feet.

Shak.

Thou art our admiral; thou hearest the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Shakespeare.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom.

Bacon.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil?

Milton.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lanthorn-maker.

More.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle.

Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Capra, where the lanthorn fix'd on high
Shines like a moon through the benighted sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers.

Addis.

LA'NTERN JAWS, lãn'túr-jãwz. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws,
he wrung his face into a hideous grimace.

Spect.

German.]

1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish.

Swift.

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid sap,
And fills with flow'rs fair Flora's painted lap.

Spenser.

Upon a day, as Love lay sweetly slumbering
All in his mother's lap,

A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murmur'ing,
About him flew by hap.

Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,

And 'twich sweet ladies with my words and looks.

Shakespeare.

She bids you

All on the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you.
Shakspeare.

Our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-wearied Antony.
Shakspeare.

Heaven's almighty sire
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours
Himself into her lap in fruitful show'rs.
Crashaw.
Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps.
Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began:
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne.
Dryd.

To LAP, lâp, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himself from falling.
Grew.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stiff like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk.
Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flowering forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did en-wrap.
Spenser.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him.
Shakspeare.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb cold night.
Shak.
Ever against eating cares,

Lap me in soft Lydian airs.
Millon.
Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling, broods upon the naked boy;
Her garment spreads; and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds.
Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wise contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula.
Swift.

To LAP, lâp, v. n. To be spread or turned over any thing.

The upper wings are opacous; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly.
Grew.

To LAP, lâp, v. n. [lappian, Sax. lappien, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciproca-tions of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore.
Digby.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fox fell to lapping himself, and bade his guest heartily welcome.
L'Estrange.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, but for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking: in the dog and cat kind by lapping.
Ray.

To LAP, lâp, v. a. To lick up.

For all the rest

They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk.
Shaksp.
Upon a bull

Two horrid Lyons rapt, and seiz'd, and tugg'd off, bellowing still,

Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide,
and lapt their fill.
Chapman.

LA'PDOG, lâp'dôg, n. s. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog,
to improve his interest with the lady.
Collier.

These, if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lap-dog sooner than their lord.
Dryden.

Lap-dogs give themselves the rowing shake,
And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake.
Pope.

LA'PFUL, lâp'fûl⁴⁰⁶ n. s. [lap and full.]

As much as can be contained in the lap.
One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage.
2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders?
if it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole lapfuls on poor credulous girls.
Locke.

LA'PICIDE, lâp'ê-side, n. s. [lapicida, Lat.]

A stone-cutter.
Dict.
LA'PIDARY, lâp'ê-dâr-ê, n. s. [lapidare, French.] One who deals in stones or gems.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied
a diamond: Well (says he) this sparkling foolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't.
L'Estrange.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original.
Woodward.

To LA'PIDATE, lâp'ê-dâte, v. a. [lapido,
Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning.

LA'PIDATION, lâp'ê-dâ'shûn, n. s. [lapidatio, Latin; lapidation, French.] A stoning.

LA'PIDEUS, lâ-pîd'ê-ûs, adj. [lapideus,
Latin.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter, before it was concreted into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned, till the matter about it were condensed.
Ray.

LA'PIDE'SCENCE, lâp'ê-dês'sense⁵¹⁰ n. s.
[lapidesco, Lat.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis ceratites, or cornu fossile, in subterra-neous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescences, and putrefactive mutations, of hard bodies.
Brown.

LA'PIDE'SCENT, lâp'ê-dês'sênt, adj. [lapidescens, Latin.] Growing or turning to stone.

soft is another degree of condensation.
Bacon.

LA'PIDI'FICK, lâp'ê-dîffik⁵⁰⁹ adj. [lapidifique, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifick, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones.
Grew.

LA'PIDIST, lâp'ê-dist, n. s. [from lapides,
Lat.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stones of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.
Ray.

LA'PIS, lâ'pîs, n. s. [Latin.] A stone.

LA'PIS Lazuli, lâ-pîs-lâzh'û-î.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, of an elegant blue colour, variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour: so it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli.
Hill.

other's lappets, and ruffles, and mantuas.
Swift.

LAPSE, lâpse, n. s. [lapsus, Lat.]

1. Flow; fall; glide; smooth course.

Round I saw

Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapse of murmuring streams.
Milton.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time.
Hale.

2. Petty error; small mistake; slight offence; little fault.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth.
Brown.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from other's lapses than their own.
Glunville.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us.
Rogers.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in style or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece.
Swift.

3. Translation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right happens.
Ayliffe.

To LAPSE, lâpse, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrencing the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages all labour under the same defect.
Swift.

2. To fail in any thing; to slip; to commit a fault.

I have ever verified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer.
Shakspeare.

To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars.
Shakspeare.

3. To slip, as by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Ther-sites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epick poem.
Addison.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning; no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it.
Watts.

4. To lose the proper time.

Myself stood out:

For which if I be lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear.
Shakspeare.

As an appeal may be deserted by the appellant's lapsing the term of law, so it may also be deserted by a lapse of the term of a judge.
Ayliffe's Parerg.

5. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king.
Ayliffe.

6. To fall from perfection, truth, or faith.

Once more I will renew

His lapsed pow'rs, though forfeit, and intrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires.
Milton.

A sprout of that fig-tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam.
Decay of Piety.

All public forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsing state of human corruption.
Decay of Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra.
Stillingfleet.

LA'PWING, lâp'wîng, n. s. [lap and wing.]

A clamorous bird with long wings.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others eyes were worse:
Far from her nest the lapping cries away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.
Shakspeare.

And how in fields the lapping Tereus reigns,
The warbling nightingale in woods complains.
Dryden.

LAPWORK, lăp'wûrk. n. s. [lap and work.]

Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills: the ground is a pack-thread caul woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lapwork, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves.
Grew's Musæum.

LARBOARD, lăr'bôrd. n. s. The left-hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head: opposed to the starboard.

Veer starboard sea and land.
Dryden.

LARROENY, lăr'sé-né. n. s. [larcin, Fr. larcin, Lat.] Petty theft.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chastise murder and petty larroeny with the same punishment.
Spectator.

LARCH, lăr'tsh.³⁶³ n. s. [larix, Lat.] A tree.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaëton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees: for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the Po.
Addison.

LARD, lărd.⁸¹ n. s. [lardum, Lat. lard, French.]

1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry feasts,
As suddenly as lard, fat thy lean beasts.
Donne.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smoking lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A sav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine.
Dryden.

The sacrifice they sped;
Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd
T' involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard.
Dryden.

To LARD, lărd. v. a. [larder, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cock eel.
King.

And lards the lean earth as he walks along.
Brave soldier, doth he lie
Shakspeare.

Larding the plain?
3. To mix with something else by way of improvement.

An exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons.
Let no alien interpose
Shakspeare.

To lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose.
He lards with flourishes his long harangue,
'Tis fine, sayst thou.
Dryden.

Swearing by heaven; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much larded with it.
Collier.

LARDER, lăr'dăr.⁹⁸ n. s. [lardier, old Fr. from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.

The similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house.
Ascham.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool; where-as in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer.
Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,
Of veal a lucid loin.
Dorset.

Old age
Morose, perverse in humour, diffident
The larder he still abounds, the less content:
His larder and his kitchen too observes,
And now, lest he should want hereafter, starves.
King.

LARDERER, lăr'dăr-ăr. n. s. [from larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LARDON, lăr'dûn. n. s. [Fr.] A bit of bacon.

Felton on the Classics.

5. At LARGE. Without restraint; without confinement.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large.
Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
Reduce'd their shapes immense; and were at large,
Though without number still.
Milton.

The children are bred up in their father's way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large.
Sprat.

Your zeal becomes importunate;
I've hitherto permitted it to rave
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it.
Addison.

6. At LARGE. Diffusely; in the full extent.

Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.
Shakspeare.

It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large.
Watts.

LARGEELY, lărdje'lè. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely; amply.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations.
Watts.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:
How largely gives; how splendidly he treats.
Those, who in warmer climes complain
Dryden.

From Phoebus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own that pain is largely paid
By gen'rous wines beneath the shade.
Swift.

4. Abundantly; without sparing.

They their fill of love, and love's disport,
Took largely; of their mutual guilt the seal.

The ample proposition that hope makes,
In all designs begun on earth below,
Falls in the promis'd largeness.
Shakspeare.

Knowing best the largeness of my own heart toward my people's good and just contentment.
King Charles.

Shall grief contract the largeness of that heart,
In which nor fear nor anger has a part?
Wallen.

Man as far transcends the beasts in largeness of desire, as dignity of nature and employment.
Glan.

If the largeness of a man's heart carry him beyond prudence, we may reckon it illustrious weakness.
L'Estrange.

4. Wideness.

Supposing that the multitude and largeness of rivers ought to continue as great as now; we can easily prove that the extent of the ocean could be no less.
Bentley.

LARGESS, lăr'jès. n. s. [largesse, French.]

A present; a gift; a bounty.

Our coffers with too great a court,
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light.
Shakspeare.

He assigned two thousand ducats, for a bounty to me and my fellows: for they give great largesses where they come.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

A pardon to the captain, and a largess
Among the soldiers, had appeas'd their fury.
Denh.

The paltry largess too severely watch'd,
That no intruding guests usurp a share.
Dryden.

Irus's condition will not admit of largesses.
Addison.

LARGITION, lăr-jish'un. n. s. [largitio, Lat.] The act of giving.

LARK, lărk. n. s. [lapejce, Saxon; lark, Danish; lavrack, Scottish.] A small singing bird.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn.
Look up a height, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard.
Shakspeare.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark.
Cowley.

Mark how the lark and linnet sing;
With rival notes
They strain their warb'ling throats,
To welcome in the spring.
Dryden.

LARUM, lăr'rûm.⁸¹ n. s. [from alarum or alarm.]

1. Alarm; noise noting danger.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time.
Spens.

The peaking comute, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the instant of our encounter.
Shakspeare.

How far off lie these armies?

—Within a mile and half.

—Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours. Shakspeare.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours, as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and have a continual larum bell in his ears. Howel.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, and those that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five. Locke.

The young Æneas, all at once let down, Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town. Pope.

LASCIVIOUS, lâ-siv've-ûs.⁶⁴² adj. [lascivus, Lat.]

1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?

—Not like a woman; for I would prevent The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shaksp.

He on Eve

Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn. Milton.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the lascivious man to throw off his lewd amours, and all their giant-like objections against christianity shall presently vanish. South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front:

And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds, To fright the souls of fearful adversaries, He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,

To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shaksp.

LASCIVIOUSLY, lâ-siv've-ûs-lé. adv. [from lascivious.] Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

LASCIVIOUSNESS, lâ-siv've-ûs-nés. n. s. [from lascivious.] Wantonness; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his Elegies, and his Art of Love. Dryd.

LASH, lâsh. n. s. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence slash and lash.]

1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryd.

Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail, Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.

2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of cricket's bone, her lash of film, Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat. Shaksp.

I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it. Addison.

3. A leash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare. Out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lash With losses on every side. Tusser's Husbandry.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.

The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. L'Estrange.

To LASH, lâsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again, Lash hence these over-weening rags of France. Shakspeare.

He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.

And limping death, lash'd on by fate, Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.

Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard, We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Leaning on his lance he mounts his ear, His fiery coursers lashing through the air. Garth.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.

The club hung round his ears and batter'd brows; He falls; and lashing up his heels, his rider throws. Dryden.

Now was the time for vig'rous lads to show What love or honour could invite them to;

A goodly theatre, where rocks are round With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Waller.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. L'Estrange.

They sometimes an hasty kiss Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn, And neck reclin'd, resent. Philips.

LA'SSITUDE, lâs'sé-tùde. n. s. [lassitudo, Latin; lassitude, French.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation. Bacon.

Assiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glanville.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired. Watts.

From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran, And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope.

2. [In physick.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distempred state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest: it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.

LA'SSLORN, lâs'lörn. n. s. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Brown groves, Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor loves, Being lass-lorn. Shakspeare.

LAST, lâst.⁷⁹ adj. [λατεστ, Saxon; laetste, Dutch.]

1. Latest; that follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back? Sam.

O, may some spark of your celestial fire, The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire! Pope.

To LAVE, lãve. v. a. [lavo, Latin.]

1. To wash; to bathe.

Unsafe, that we must lave our honours

In these so flatt'ring streams. Shaksp.

But as I rose out of the laving stream,

Heav'n open'd her eternal doors, from whence

The spirit descended on me like a dove. Milton.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,

Whose low-laid mouths each mountain billow laves,

Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,

She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryd.

2. [lever, Fr.] To throw up; to lade; to draw out.

Though hills were set on hills,

And seas met seas to guard thee, I would through:

P'd plough up rocks, steep as the Alps, in dust,

And lave the Tyrrhene waters into clouds,

Eut I would reach thy head. Ben Jonson.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,

Another bolder, yet the yard bestrides,

And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves

Th' intruding seas, and waves eject on waves. Dryden.

To LAVE, lãve. v. n. To wash himself; to bathe.

In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,

And with celestial tears augments the waves. Pope.

To LAVE'ER, lã-vêér'. v. n. To change the direction often in a course.

How easy 'tis when destiny proves kind,

With full spread sails to run before the wind:

But those that 'gainst stiff gales laving go,

Must be at once resolv'd, and skilful too. Dryden.

LA'VENDER, lãv'vên-dũr.⁹⁸ n. s. [lavendula, Latin.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper lip, standing upright, is roundish, and, for the most part, bifid; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorles, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Miller.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aromatièk smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalicèk, nervous, and uterine medicine. Hill.

And then again he turneth to his play,
To spoil the pleasures of that paradise:

The wholesome sage, and lavender still grey,

Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes. Spenser.

LA'VER, lã'vũr.⁹⁸ n. s. [lavo, Fr. from lave.] A washing vessel.

Let us go find the body where it lies

Soak'd in his enemies' blood, and from the stream

With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off

The cloddid gore. Milton.

He gave her to his daughters, to imbathè

In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphodil. Milton.

Young Aretus from forth his bridal bow'r

Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour. Pope's Odyssey.

To LAUGH, lãf.²¹⁵ ³⁹¹ v. n. [hlapan, Saxon; lachen, German and Dutch; lach, Scotch.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.

There's one did laugh in 's sleep, and one cried

Murther!

They wak'd each other. Shaksp.

At this fusty stuff

The large Achilles, on his prest-bed lolling,

From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakspere.

Laughing causeth a continued expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughing, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if it be violent. Bacon.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray

You use her well; the world may laugh again,

And I may live to do you kindness, if

You do it her. Shakspere.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets

crown'd. Dryden.

The plenteous board, high-heap'd with eates divine,

And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.

3. To LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule.

Presently prepare thy grave;

Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat

Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,

That death in thee at others lives may laugh. Shakspere.

'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laughed at. Shakspere.

The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find, that they are merry at their own expence. Addison.

No wit to flatter left of all his store;

No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

To LAUGH, lãf. v. a. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn

The pow'r of man. Shaksp.

A wicked soul shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies. Ecclesiasticus.

LAUGH, lãf. n. s. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

LA'UGHABLE, lãf'ã-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [from laugh.]

Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;

Some that will evermore peep through their eye,

And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;

And others of such vinegar aspect,

That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,

Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Shaksp.

Casaubon confesses Persius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer. Dryden.

LA'UGHER, lãf'ũr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

I am a common laugher. Shaksp.

Some sober men cannot be of the general opinion, but the laughers are much the majority. Pope.

LA'UGHINGLY, lãf'ing-lê. adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

LA'UGHINGSTOCK, lãf'ing-stòk. n. s.

[laugh and stock.] A butt; an object of ridicule.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen the laughing-stock of fortune's mockerie. Spenser.

Pray you, let us not be laughing-stocks to other men's humours. Shakspere.

Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughing-stock at once. L'Estrange.

LA'UGHTER, lãf'ũr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from laugh.]

Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be worst,

The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,

Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear.

The lamentable change is from the best,

The worst returns to laughter. Shaksp.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves. Brown.

We find not that the laughter-loving dame

Mourn'd for Anchises. Waller.

Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH, lãv'ish. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology. It may be plausibly derived from lave, to throw out; as profundere opes, is to be lavish.]

1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,

Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,

Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence. Dryden.

The dame has been too lavish of her feast,

And fed him till he loadis. Rowe.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse: as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,

Confronted him, curbing his lavish spirit. Shaksp.

To LA'VISH, lãv'ish. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,

Might not th' impartial world with reason say,

We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands? Addison.

LA'VISHER, lãv'ish-ũr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from lavish.]

A prodigal; a profuse man.

LA'VISHLY, lãv'ish-lê. adv. [from lavish.]

Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook,

And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority. Shaks.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.
Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives;
but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him.
Pope.

LA'VISHMENT, lāv'ish-mēt. } n. s. [from LA'VISHNESS, lāv'ish-nēs. } lavish.]

Prodigality; profusion.

First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,

And after spent with pride and lavishness. F. Queen.

To LAUNCH, lānsh.²¹⁴ v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.

Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke.

So short a stay prevails;

He soon equips the ships, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.

For general history, Raleigh and Howel are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whear. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind. Davies.

Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with submissive imitation: he launches out into very flowery paths, which still conduct him into one great road.
Prior.

He had not acted in the character of a suppliant
if he had launched out into a long oration. Broom.
I have launched out of my subject on this article.
Arbutnot.

To LAUNCH, lānsh.³⁶² v. a.

1. To push to sea.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England. King Charles.

With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on levers, launch'd her in the deep.
Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written lanch or lance.

The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His written bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook.
Dryden.

LAUND, lāwnd. n. s. [lande, French; lawn, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Hammer.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;

For through this laund anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand. Shak.

LA'UNDRESS, lān'drēs.²¹⁴ n. s. [lavandiere,

To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear, Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair. Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A saint in erape is twice a saint in lawn. Pope.

What awe did the slow solemn kuell inspire;
The duties by the lawn rob'd prelate pay'd,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd!

Tickell.
LA'WSUIT, lãw'sûte. n. s. [law and suit.]

A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the priest a right to the tithe would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide. Scift.

LA'WYER, lãw'yër.⁹⁸ n. s. [from law.]

Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It is like the breath of an enfee'd lawyer, you gave me nothing for it. Shaksp.

Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office swerve from it? Whitgift.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and reverend discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers. Bacon.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's counsel rose;
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact. Scift.

3. Looseness; not costiveness.

If sometimes it cause any laxity, it is in the same way with iron unprepared, which will disturb some bodies, and work by purge and vomit. Brown.

4. Slackness; contrariety to tension.

Laxity of a fibre, is that degree of cohesion in its parts which a small force can alter, so as to increase its length beyond what is natural. Quincy.

In consideration of the laxity of their eyes, they are subject to relapse. Wiseman.

5. Openness; not closeness.

Hold a piece of paper close by the flame of a candle, and by little and little remove it further off, and there is upon the paper some part of that which I see in the candle, and it grows still less and less as I remove; so that if I would trust my sense, I should believe it as very a body upon the paper as in the candle, though enfeebled by the laxity of the channel in which it flows. Digby.

LA'XNESS, lãks'nës. n. s. Laxity; not tension; not precision; not costiveness.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched; otherwise the laxness of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound. Holder.

should invade those parts where the numbers and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay, they would sit still. Swift.

To LAY, lã. v. a. [lecgan, Sax. leggen,
Dutch.]

1. To place; to put; to reposit. This word being correlative to lie, involves commonly immobility or extension; a punishment laid is a punishment that cannot be shaken off; in immobility is included weight. One house laid to another, implies extension.

He laid his robe from him. Jonah.
They have laid their swords under their heads.
Ezekiel.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid. Milton.
He sacrificing laid

The catrils on the wood. Milton.

2. To place along.

of dust; but an hour or two before a refreshing fragrant shower of rain had laid the dust. Ray.

5. To fix deep; to dispose regularly: either of these notions may be conceived from the following examples; but regularity seems rather implied; so we say, to lay bricks; to lay planks.

Schismaticks, outlaws, or criminal persons, are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony. Bacon.

I lay the deep foundation of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden.

Men will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued lays those foundations surer.
Locke.

6. To put; to place.

Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again; but, to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it. Shaksp.

The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryden.

17. To reposit any thing.

The sparrow hath found an house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young. Psalms.

18. To exclude eggs.

After the egg is lay'd, there is no further growth or nourishment from the female. Bacon.
A hen mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it; she is insensible of an increase or diminution in the number of those she lays. Spectator.

19. To apply with violence: as, to lay blows.

Lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it. Ezekiel.
Never more shall my torn mind be heal'd,
Nor taste the gentle comforts of repose!
A dreadful band of gloomy cares surround me,
And lay strong siege to my distracted soul. Philips.

20. To apply nearly.

She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff. Proverbs.
It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for that is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to his heart. Ecclesiastes.

The peacock laid it extremely to heart, that, being Juno's darling bird, he had not the nightingale's voice. L'Estrange.

He that really lays these two things to heart, the extreme necessity that he is in, and the small possibility of help, will never come coldly to a work of that concernment. Duppa.

21. To add; to conjoin.

Wo unto them that lay field to field. Isaiah.

22. To put in a state; implying somewhat of disclosure.

If the sinus be distant; lay it open first, and cure that aperture before you divide that in ano. Wiseman.

The wars have laid whole countries waste. Add.

23. To scheme; to contrive

Every breast she did with spirit inflame,

Yet still fresh projects lay'd the grey-ey'd dame. Chapman.

Homer is like his Jupiter, has his terrors, shaking Olympus; Virgil, like the same power in his benevolence, counselling with the gods, laying plans for empires. Pope.

Don Diego and we have laid it so, that before the rope is well about thy neck, he will break in and cut thee down. Arbutnot.

24. To charge as a payment.

A tax laid upon land seems hard to the landholder, because it is so much money going out of his pocket. Locke.

25. To impute; to charge.

Preoccupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him consul,
Lay the fault on us. Shakspeare.
How shall this bloody deed be answered?

It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,
This mad young man. Shakspeare.

We need not lay new matter to his charge. Shakspeare.

Men groan from out of the city, yet God layeth not folly to them. Job.

On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton.
The lowing herds wind slowly o'er the lea. Gray.

LEAD, léd.³³⁴ n. s. [læð, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11,322 to 1,000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off in form of scoræ, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shaksp.
Of lead, some I can shew you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common ceruss with vinegar; of ceruss, red lead; of plumbum ustum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; because houses are covered with lead.
Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shaksp.
I would have the tower two stories, and goodly leads upon the top, raised with statues intersposed.
Bacon.

To LEAD, léd. v. a. [from the noun.]

To fit with lead in any manner.

1. One that leads, or conducts.

2. Captain; commander.
In my tent
I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakespeare.

I have given him for a leader and commander to the people. Isaiah.

Those escaped by flight, not without a sharp jest against their leaders, affirming, that, as they had followed them into the field, so it was good reason they should follow them out. Hayward.

When our Lycians see
Our brave examples, they admiring say,
Behold our gallant leaders. Denham.

The brave leader of the Lycian crew. Dryden.

3. One who goes first.
Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, now you are a leader. Shaksp.
4. One at the head of any party or faction: as, the detestable Wharton was the leader of the whigs.

The understandings of a senate are enslaved by three or four leaders, set to get or to keep employments. Swift.

LE'ADING, léd'ding.⁴¹⁰ participial adj. Principal; chief; capital.

In organized bodies, which are propagated by seed, the shape is the leading quality, and most characteristic part, that determines the species. Locke.

Mistakes arise from the influence of private persons, upon great numbers stiled leading men and parties. Swift.

LEADING-STRINGS, léd'ding-stringz. n. s. [lead and string.] Strings by which children, when they learn to walk, are held from falling.

Sound may serve such, ere they to sense are grown,
Like leading-strings, till they can walk alone.

Dryden.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or swim without bladders, without being discovered by his hobbling and his sinking?

Swift.

LE'ADMAN, léd'e'mán. n. s. [lead and man.]

One who begins or leads a dance.

Such a light and mettled dance
Saw you never,

And by leadmen for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle stones.

Ben Jonson.

LE'ADWORT, léd'wúrt.²³⁴ n. s. [plumbago.]

LEAF, léf.²²⁷ n. s. leaves, plural. [leaf, Saxon; leaf, Dutch.]

1. The green deciduous parts of plants and flowers.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms.

Shakespeare.

A man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which his incision is made, if his graft have blossom buds; whereas if it were only leaf buds, it will not bear fruit till the second season.

Boyle.

Those things which are removed to a distant view, ought to make but one mass: as the leaves on the trees, and the billows in the sea.

Dryden.

2. A part of a book, containing two pages.

Happy ye leaves, when as those lily hands
Shall handle you.

Spenser.

Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou seest my owner's heart
Scrawl'd o'er with trifles.

Swift.

3. One side of a double door.

The two leaves of the one door were folding.

1 Kings.

4. Any thing foliated, or thinly beaten.

Eleven ounces two pence sterling ought to be of so pure silver, as is called leaf silver, and then the meller must add of other weight seventeen pence halfpenny farthing.

Camden.

Leaf gold, that flies in the air as light as down, is as truly gold as that in an ingot.

Digby.

To LEAF, léf. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring leaves; to bear leaves.

Most trees fall off the leaves at autumn; and if not kept back by cold, would leaf about the solstice.

Brown.

LE'AFLESS, léf'lés. adj. [from leaf.] Naked of leaves.

Bare honesty, without some other adornment, being looked on as a leafless tree, nobody will take himself to its shelter.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Where doves in flocks the leafless trees o'er shade,
And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade.

Pope.

LE'AFY, lè'fè. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves.

The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer was first leafy.

Shaksp.

What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?

—Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth.

Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontrol'd and boundless reign.

Dryd.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs.

Dryden.

So when some swelt'ring travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool sulless verge
Of Paraba, Brazilian stream; her tail
A grisly hydra suddenly shoots forth.

Philips.

LEAGUE, léég.²²⁷ n. s. [ligue, French; ligo, Latin.] A confederacy; a combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.
And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Shakespeare.

We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be.

Shaks.

Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.

Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me.

2 Chronicles.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts or leagues: there are other bands of society and implicit confederations.

Bacon.

I, a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bound, presum'd
Single rebellion, and did hostile acts.

Milton.

Oh Tyrians, with immortal hate Pursue this hated race; and let there be 'Twixt us and them no league nor amity.

Denham.

To LEAGUE, léég. v. n. To unite on certain terms; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade society the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependances.

South.

LEAGUE, léég. n. s. [lieuë, Fr.]

1. A league; leuca, Latin; from lech, Welsh; a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league.

Camden.

2. A measure of length, containing three miles.

Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encount'ed by a mighty rock.

Shaksp.

Ev'n Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echoes answer'd.

Addison.

LE'AGUED, léég'ú.²²⁹ adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs?

Phil.

LE'AGUER, lé'gúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [belggeren, Dutch.] Siege; investment of a town.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents.

Shaksp.

LEAK, lék.²²⁷ n. s. [leck, leke, Dutch.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no art of man can cure; breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop.

Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship.

Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went.

Dryd.

To LEAK, lék. v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your ebimney.

Shaksp.

His feet should be washed every day in cold water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak, and let in water.

Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discontinuity.

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several parts, may be emptied out again.

Wilkins.

Golden stars hung o'er their heads,
And seem'd so crowded, that they burst upon 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence
In leaking fire.

Dryden.

LE'AKAGE, lé'kídje.⁰⁰ n. s. [from leak.]

Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LE'AKY, lé'kè. adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou 'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee.

Shaksp.

If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might.

Dryden.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could not hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret.

L'Estrange.

To LEAN, léne.²²⁷ ²³⁸ v. n. preter. leaned or leant. [hlanan, Saxon; lenen, Dutch.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Lean thine aged back against mine arm,
And in that ease I'll tell thee my disease.

Shaksp.

Security is expressed among the medals of Gordianus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a sceptre in her hand, before an altar.

Peacham.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto so good supporters.

Wolton.

Upon his iv'ry sceptre first he leant,
Then shook his head, that shook the firmament.

Dryden.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'erspent,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leant.

Dryd.

If God be angry, all our other dependencies will profit us nothing; every other support will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most.

Rogers.

Then leaning o'er the rails he musing stood.

Gay.

'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around
Leans the huge elephant.

Thomson.

2. To propend; to tend toward.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient.

Spenser.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

Proverbs.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely.

Watts.

3. To be in a bending posture.

She leans me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night.

Shaksp.

Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down; and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries.

Dryden.

The gods came downward to behold the wars,
Sharp'ning their sights, and leaning from their stars.

Dryden.

LEAN, léne.²²⁷ adj. [hlæne, Saxon.]

1. Not fat; meager; wanting flesh; bare-boned.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.

Shaksp.

Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose,
They had such courage and audacity!

Shaksp.

Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change.

Shaksp.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave.

Shaksp.

Seven other kine came up out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed.

Genesis.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation.

Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the cynic tub,
Praising the lean, and sallow, abstinence.

Milton.

Swear that Adrastus, and the lean-look'd prophet,
Are joint conspirators.

Dryden.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the vessels.

Arbuth.

No laughing graces wanton in my eyes,
But hagger'd grief, lean-looking sorrow care,
Dwell on my brow. Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.
There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthly, like common water. Burnet.

3. Low; poor: in opposition to great or rich.
That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. Shaksp.

4. Jeune; not comprehensive; not embellished: as, a lean dissertation.

LEAN, léne. n. s. That part of flesh which consists of the muscle without the fat.
With razors keen we cut our passage clean
Through rills of fat, and deluges of lean. Farquhar.

LEANLY, léne'lé. adv. [from lean.] Meagerly; without plumpness.

LEANNESS, léne'nés. n. s. [from lean.]
1. Extenuation of body; want of flesh;
meagerness.

If thy leanness love such food,
There are those, that, for thy sake,
Do enough. Ben Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspirations, sweat, urine, liquid dejectures, leanness, and weakness. Arbuth.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.
The poor king Reigner, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Shaksp.

To LEAP, lépe.²³⁹ v. n. [hleanpan, Sax.
loup, Scotch.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vanling into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shaksp.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon.

In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowley.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd, was seen to wield

Her brandish'd lance. Dryden.

2. To rush with vehemence.
God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a fear leaped from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again. Esther.
After he went into the tent, and found her not, he leaped out to the people. Judith.

He ruin upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Sandys.
Strait leaping from his horse, he rais'd me up.
Rowe.

3. To bound; to spring.
Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. Luke.
I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory.
Addison.

4. To fly; to start.
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shaksp.
Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job.

To LEAP, lépe.²³⁹ v. n.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.
Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.
As one condemn'd to leap a preeipice,

Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden.

She dares pursue if they dare lead:
As their example still prevails,
She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.
Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden.

LEAP, lépe. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.
After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded? L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.
Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue, and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of chusing a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear.
Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.
The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.
How she cheats her bellowing lover's eye;
The rusling leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.
Methinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon.
Shaksp.

You take a preeipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shaksp.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where you old fisher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryden.

LEAP-FROG, lépe'fróg. n. s. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shaksp.

LEAP-YEAR, lépe'yère. n. s.

Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year. so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28.
To find the leap-year you have this rule:
Divide by 4; what 's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past 1, 2, 3. Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed, as, if on one year the first of March, be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown.

To LEARN, lérn.²³⁴ v. a. [leornman, Sax.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.
Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Matthew.
He in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue.
Knolles.

Learn, wretches! learn, the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of human kind. Dryden.
You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Philips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]
This sense is now obsolete.

He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser.

You taught me language, and my profit on 't
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shaksp.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shak.
Hast thou not learn'd me how To unak perfumes? Shaksp.

To LEARN, lérn. v. n. To take pattern;
with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly. Matthew.

In imitation of sounds, that Man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon.

LEARNED, lérn'éd.³⁶² adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.
It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way
the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.
Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbuthnot.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing; with in.
Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,

Thou elusest not to conquer men but hearts. Gran.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

LEARNEDLY, lérn'éd-lé. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad.
Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shaksp.
Ev'ry coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNING, lérn'ning.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from learn.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile;
then its strength of years, when solid; and, lastly,
its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.

As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.

An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long sithence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LEARNER, lérn'nür. n. s. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Graunt.

LEASE, lésc.²²⁷ n. s. [laisser, French;
Spelman.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, cousin, wer't thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shaksp.

Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Den.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishop's leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shaksp.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'ned hast thy own life's lease. Milton.

To LEASE, lése. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropiator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliffe.

To LEASE, léze.²²⁷ v. n. [lesen, Dutch.]
To glean; to gather what the harvest-men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to charc-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence was her daily hire.
Dryden.

LE'ASER, lé'zúr. n. s. [from lease.] Glean-er; gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.

LEASH, lèsh.²²⁷ n. s. [lésse, French;
lèse, Dutch; laccio, Italian.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shaksp.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shaksp.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their christian names. Shaksp.

Some thought when he did gabble
Th' ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.
Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being shewn such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.

To LEASH, lèsh. v. a. [from the noun.]
To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels, Leash in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shaksp.

LE'ASING, lé'zing.²²⁷ ⁴¹⁰ n. s. [leape, Sax.]
Lies; falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasings? Psalms.
He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Hubb.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubbcrd.

That false pilgrim which that leasings told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Fairy Queen.

I have ever verified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasings. Shaksp.

As folks, noth Richard, prone to leasings,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have oncè asserted,
Nor care to have their lie desert'd:

Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.

Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lowd aflight the owain. Gay.

LEAST, lèést.²²⁷ adj. the superlative of little. [læpt, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write lest, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.]

Little beyond others; smallest.
I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Genesis.

A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST, lèést. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to wave his suit,
Or for a while play least in sight. Hudibras.
Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
But taste it as the least unhappy lot. Dryden.

No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it. Pope.

At LEAST, ât-lèést'.

At the LEAST, ât-thè-lèést'.

At LEASTWISE, ât-lèést'wize. } To say } no more;
} not to demand or affirm more than is barely sufficient; at the lowest degree.

He who tempts, though in vain, at least asperses
The tempted with dishonour. Milton.

He from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bestowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show
Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton.

Upon the mast they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat as on horseback. Sidney.

Every effect doth after a sort contain, at leastwise resemble, the cause from which it proceedeth.

Hooker.

Honour and fame at least the thund'rer ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a God. Pope.

The remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the Omniscient Being. Dryden.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created. Milton.

Let useful observations be at least some part of the subject of your conversation. Watts.

LE'ASY, lè'sé. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left loose and leasy. Ascham.

LE'ATHER, lèth'úr.⁹⁸ ²³⁴ n. s. [lēðer,

and coat.] An apple with a tough rind.

There is a dish of leathercoats for you. Shaksp.

LE'ATHERDRESSER, lèth'úr-drès'súr. n. s.
[leather and dresser.] He who prepares leather; he who manufactures hides for use.

He removed to Cumæ; and by the way was entertained at the house of one Tichius, a leatherdresser. Pope.

LEATHER-MOUTHED, lèth'úr-mòuth'd.
adj. [leather and mouth.]

By a leather-mouth'd fish, I mean such as have their teeth in their throat; as, the chub or eleven.
Walton.

LE'ATHERN, lèth'úr'n. adj. [from leather.]
Made of leather.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand,
A free-stone colour'd hand: I verily did think
That her old gloves were on. Shaksp.

The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shaksp.

In silken or in leathern purse retain
A splendid shilling. Philips.

LE'ATHERSELLER, lèth'úr-sèl'lúr. n. s.
[leather and seller.] He who deals in leather and vends it.

ther*.] Resembling leather.

Wormius calls this crust a leathery skin. Grew.

LEAVE, léve.²²⁷ n. s. [lepe, Saxon; from lýpan, to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.

By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful foresight, methinks I see an evil lurk unspied. Spenser.

When him his dearest Una did behold,
Disdaining life, desiring leave to dye. Spenser.

I make bold to press upon you.
—You're welcome; give us leave, drawr. Shaksp.

The days
Of Sylla's sway, when the free sword took leave
To act all that it would. Ben Jonson.

Thrice happy snake! that in her sleeve
May boldly creep; we dare not give
Our thoughts so unconfin'd a leave. Waller.

No friend has leave to bear away the dead. Dryd.

Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to shew. Dryden.

One thing more I crave leave to offer about syllogism, before I leave it. Locke.
I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party: nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of asking this leave. Pope.

2. Farewel; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forlwith.
Shaksp.

Evils that take leave,
On their departure, most of all show evil. Shaksp.

There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him. Shaksp.

Here my father comes;
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave. Shaksp.

But my dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Suckling.

Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations. Brown.

To LEAVE, léve. v. a. pret. I left; I have left. [Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account.]

1. To quit; to forsake.

A man shall leave his father and his mother, and cleave unto his wife. Genesis.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine.

Ben Jonson.

2. To desert; to abandon.

He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him. Ecclesiasticus.

3. To depart from, without action: as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great diseases. 2 Chronicles.

4. To have remaining at death.

There be of them that have left a name behind them. Ecclesiasticus.

5. Not to deprive of.

They still have left me the providence of God,
and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too. Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind compre-hendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed. Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages. Abbot.

Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves out of the reach of any one to discover from his writings. Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel. Judges.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattle; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil. Deut.

Vastius gave strict commandment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage.
Knolles' History.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life,
I am superiour, I can take or leave. Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my reader, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, O bappy shade! be ever thine. Dryd.

11. To give up; to resign.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger. Leviticus.

If a wise man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this. That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Samuel.

14. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.

In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting. Spectator.

15. To LEAVE off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets: he put on a serious air. Arbuthnot.

16. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shaks.

You may partake: I have told 'em who you are.
—I should be loth to be left out, and here too.
Ben Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.

Befriued till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,

Ere nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin loop-hole peep.

Milton.

We ask, if those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert

That we the world's existence may conceive
Though we one atom out of matter leave? Blackm.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Theop and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison.

To LEAVE, lève. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence

Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shaks.

And since this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shaks.

He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest Genesis.

2. To LEAVE off. To desist.

Gritus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed. Knolles.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait. Koscom.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Dan.

To LEAVE, lève. v. a. [from levy; lever,
French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.

An army strong she leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd. Spenser.

LE'AVED, lèèv'd.²²⁷ adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

2. Made with leaves or fols.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isaiah.

LE'AVEN, lèv'vèn.^{103 254} n. s. [levain,
Fr. levere, Lat.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of sour dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baked with leaven. Leviticus.

All fermented meats and drinks are easiest digested; and those unfermented, by barm or leaven, are hardly digested. Floyer.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass: it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions savour very strongly of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

To LE'AVEN, lèv'vèn. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

You must tarry the leav'ning. Shaks.

Whosoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exodus.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon.

2. To taint; to imbue.

That cruel something unpossesst,
Corrodes, and leavens all the rest. Prior.

LE'AVER, lè'vùr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive. Shaks.

LEAVES, lèèvz. n. s. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon.

LE'AVINGS, lè'vingz.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from leave.]

Remnant; relicks; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharsalia. Addison.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Chloe's head, Swift.

With scraps and leavings to be fed. Full of leaves; covered with leaves; leafy is more used.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosn was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitsontide to bear. Sidney.

Now, near enough: your leavy screens throw down, Shaks.

And show like those you are. Shaks.

To LECH, létsh. v. a. [lecher, Fr.] To lick over. Hanmer.

Hast thou yet leched the Athenian's eye
With the love juice? Shaks.

LE'CHER, létsh'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French: luxu-ria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whoremaster.

I will now take the leacher; he 's at my house;
he cannot 'scape me. Shaks.

You, like a leacher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shaks.

The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In Jo's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The sleepy leacher shuts his little eyes,
About his eburning chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope.

To LE'CHER, létsh'úr. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? no. The wren goes to 't, and the small gilded fly does lecher in my sight. Shaks.

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night.
Ben Jonson.

LE'CHEROUS, létsh'úr-ús. adj. [from lech-er.] Lewd; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

LE'CHEROUSLY, létsh'úr-ús-lè. adv. [from lecherous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LE'CHEROUSNESS, létsh'úr-ús-nès. n. s.
[from lecherous.] Lewdness.

LE'CHERY, létsh'úr-è.⁵⁶⁷ n. s. [from lech-er.] Lewdness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ascham.

Against such lewdsters and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shaks.

LE'CTION, lèk'shùn. n. s. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.

Every critick has his own hypothesis; if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentick. Watts.

LE'CTURE, lèk'tshùr.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [lecture,
Fr.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney.

Wrangling pedant,
When in musick we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shaks.

When letters from Cæsar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Taylor.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there. Locke.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantick discourse.

Nomidia will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addis.
To LECTURE, lĕk'tshûre. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.

2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.

To LECTURE, lĕk'tshûre. v. n. To read in public; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse: as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LECTURER, lĕk'tshûr-ŭr. n. s. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.

2. A preacher in a church, hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LECTURESHIP, lĕk'tshûr-shĭp. n. s. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.

LED, lĕd. The part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezekiel.

The leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Isaiah.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDGE, lĕdje. n. s. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in a building contiguous to board. Wotton.

2. A ridge rising above the rest, or projecting beyond the rest.

The four parallel sticks, rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.

3. Any prominence, or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides, The bending brow above a safe retreat provides. Dryden.

LEDHORSE, lĕd'hôrse. n. s. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEE, lĕe. n. s. [lie, French.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse: commonly lees.

My clothes, my sex, exchang'd for thee, I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.

2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from l'eau, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A lee-ward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as she might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way. Dict.

If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Raleigh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north-west, making a lee shore in all weathers. Raleigh.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. K. Charles.

Him, haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam, The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff, Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell, With fixed anchor in his scaly rind, Moors by his side under the lee, while night invests the sea. Milton.

Batter'd by his lee they lay, The passing winds through their torn canvass play. Dryden.

LEECH, lĕetsh. n. s. [læc, Saxon.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cowleech.

A leech, the which had great insight In that disease of grieved conscience, And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

His words prevail'd, and then the learned leech His cunning hand 'gan to his wounds to lay, And all things else the which his art did teach. Fairy Queen.

Physic is their bane. The learned leeches in despair depart, And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude: Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill, Till some safe crisis. Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd, Tried every health-restoring herb and gum, And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Rowe.

A skilful leech, They say, had wrought this blessed deed; This leech-Arbutnot was yeapt. Gay's Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wiseman. Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood, Without remorse insatiably. Roscommon.

To LEECH, lĕetsh. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medicaments.

LEECHCRAFT, lĕetsh'krâft. n. s. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others we persuade: We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it. Davies.

LEEF, lĕef. adj. [lieve, leve, Dutch.] Kind; fond.

Whilome all these were low and leefe, And lov'd their flocks to feed;

They never strove to be the chief, And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastorals.

LEEK, lĕek. n. s. [leac, Saxon; loock, Dutch; leechk, Erse; porrum, Latin.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fluellen?—Yes. —Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate, Upon St. David's day. Shakspeare.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Gay.

We use acrid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlic, or leek pottage. Floyer on Humours.

LEER, lĕre. n. s. [hleaþe, Saxon.]

1. An oblique view.

I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shakspeare.

Aside the devil turn'd For envy, yet with jealous leer malign Ey'd them askance. Milton.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.

Damn with faint praise, concede with civil leer. Pope.

I place a statesman full before my sight; A bloated monster in all his geer, With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

To LEER, lĕre. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shaks.

I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

2. To look with a forced countenance.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts, To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryden.

LEES, lĕez. n. s. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.

The memory of king Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine, Envy them not their palates with the swine. Ben Jonson.

Those lees that trouble it, refine The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEESE, lĕese. v. a. [lesen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.

Then sell to thy profit both butter and cheese, Who bueth it sooner the more he shall leese. Tusser. No cause, nor client fat, will Chev'ril leese, But as they come on both sides he takes fees; And pleaseth both: for while he melts his grease For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. Ben Jonson.

How in the port our fleet dear time did leese, Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees. Donne.

LEET, lĕet. n. s.

Leete, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon leese, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirthing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowel.

Who has a breast so pure, But some uncleanly apprehensions Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit With meditations lawful? Shakspeare.

You would present her at the leet, Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakspeare.

LEWARD, lĕe'wârd.^{as} adj. [lee and peard, Saxon.] Toward the wind. See LEE.

The classicæ were called long ships, the oncrariæ round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way except when they sailed full before the wind. Arbutnot.

Let no statesmen dare, A kingdom to a ship compare; Lest he should call our commonweal A vessel with a double keel; Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd And got about a league from land, By change of wind to leeward side, The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEFT, lĕft. The participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shaksp.
Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Spectator.

LEFT, léft. adj. [lusite, Dutch; lævus, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.

That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak:
That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dry.

The man who struggles in the fight,
Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

The limbs are used most on the right side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left hand most. Bacon.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left side is very monstrous. Brown.

B' ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne.

LEG, lég. n. s. [leg, Danish; leggur, Islandick.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haste; and what their tardy feet deny'd,
The trusty staff, their better leg supply'd. Dryden.

Purging comits, and ants eggs,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison.

2. An act of obeisance; a bow with the leg drawn back.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shaksp.

Their horses never give a blow,
But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras.

If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Swift.

3. To stand on his own LEGS. To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Collier.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LEGACY, lég'á-sé. n. s. [legatum, Latin.] Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Covell.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shaksp.
Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange.

When he thought you gone
T' augment the number of the bless'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd his brother's portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LEGAL, lég'gál. adj. [legal, Fr. leges, Lat.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.
Whatsoever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

2. Lawful; not contrary to law.

3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits
To save them, not their own, though legal, works. Milton.

LEGALITY, lég'gál'è-té. n. s. [legalité, Fr.] Lawfulness.

To LEGALIZE, lég'gál-íz. v. a. [legaliser, Fr. from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.

If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South.

LEGALLY, lég'gál-lé. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Taylor.

LEGATARY, lég'á-tár-é. n. s. [legataire, Fr. from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary. Ayliffe.

LEGATE, lég'gáte.⁹¹ n. s. [legatus, Lat. legat, Fr. legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassador.
The legates from th' Ætolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost,
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassador deputed by the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heav'n. Shak.

Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him. Atterbury.

LEGATE'E, lég'gá-téé'. n. s. [from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden.

My will is, that if any of the above-named legatees should die before me, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself. Swift.

LEGATINE, lég'gá-tine.¹⁴⁹ adj. [from legate.]

1. Made by a legate.
When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a præmunire. Shaksp.

LEGATION, lég'gá-shún. n. s. [legatio, Lat.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

In attiring, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion costly, as in his legations. Wotton.

LEGATOR, lég'gá-tòr'.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [from lego, Lat.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debate
Betwixt pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden.

LEGEND, lég'jénd. n. s. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which bred them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison.

2. Any memorial or relation.
And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentick narrative.
Who can show the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd? Blackmore.

It is the way of attaining to Heaven, that makes profane scorners so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent, incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison.

LEGER, léd'júr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from legger, Dutch. To lie or remain in a place.]

Any thing that lies in a place: as, a leger ambassador, a resident, one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the counting-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to Heav'n,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shaksp.

I've giv'n him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leiders for her sweet. Shaksp.

If leiger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant. Bacon.

Who can endear
Thy praise too much? thou art Heav'n's leiger here, Working against the states of death and hell. Herb.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leiger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon.

I call that a leiger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton

LEGERDEMAIN, léd-jûr-dè-màne'. n. s. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, Fr.] Slight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.

He so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again.

Hubberd.

Of all the tricks and legerdmain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South.

LEGERITY, lè-jér'è-tè. n. s. [legereté, Fr.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. Not in use.

When the mind is quicken'd
The organs though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shaksp.

LEGGED, lèg'g'd. adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs.

LEGIBLE, léd'jè-bl. n. s. [legibilis, Latin.]
1. Such as may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.

2. Apparent; discoverable.

People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face. Collier.

LEGIBLY, léd'jè-blè. adv. [from legible.]

In such a manner as may be read.

LEGION, lè'jûn. n. s. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the christian legion. Addison.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd.

Shakspere.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY, lè'jûn-âr-è. adj. [from legion.]

1. Relating to a legion.

2. Containing a legion.

3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown.

LEGISLA'TION, léd-jîs-lá'shûn. n. s. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton.

LEGISLA'TIVE, léd'jîs-lá-tîv. adj. [from legislator.] Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.
The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LEGISLA'TOR, léd'jîs-lá-tûr. n. s. [legislator, Latin; legislateur, French.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.

Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLA'TURE, léd'jîs-lá-tûre. n. s. [from legislator, Latin.] The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made. Hale.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power; but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift.

LEGITIMACY, lè-jît'tè-mâ-sè. n. s. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.

In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.

The legitimacy or reality of these marine bodies vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward.

LEGITIMATE, lè-jît'tè-mâte. n. s. [legitimus, Lat. legitime, French.]

Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shak.

An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion. Taylor.

TO LEGITIMATE, lè-jît'tè-mâte. v. a. [legitimer, French; from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.

Legitimate him that was a bastard. Ayliffe.

2. To make lawful.

It would be impossible for any enterprize to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Decay of Piety.

LEGITIMATELY, lè-jît'tè-mâte-lè. adv. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfully.

2. Genuinely.

By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat;
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

LEGITIMA'TION, lè-jît'tè-mâ'shûn. n. s. [legitimation, Fr. from legitimate.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaim'd my land,

Legitimation, name, and all is gone.
Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakspere.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine. Locke.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

LEGUME, lèg'gûme. n. s. [legume, Fr. legumen, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans; in general, all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbutnot.

LEGUMINOUS, lè-gû'mè-nûs. adj. [legu- mineux, Fr. from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds: as oats, barley, and wheat: or of some of the siliquose or leguminous; as peas or beans. Arbutnot.

LEISURABLY, lè'zhûr-â-blè. adv. [from leisureable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisureably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity. Hooker.

LEISURABLE, lè'zhûr-â-bl. adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inexcusable in his works of leisureable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.

LEISURE, lè'zhûre. n. s. [loisir, Fr.]

1. Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You may enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can discompose your mind. Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisures to attend on yours. Shakspere.

They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer. Shakspere.

O happy youth!

For whom thy fates reserve so fair a bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakspere.

LEISURELY, lè'zhûr-lè. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.

He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely
That, if the rule be true, he should be gracious. Shakspere.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Hayward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threescore and ten intire arches. Addison.

LEISURELY, lè'zhûr-lè. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;

Or if with caution leisurely we past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.

LE'MAN, lè'mân. n. s. [Generally supposed to be l'aimant, the lover, Fr. but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leaf, Dut. or leaf, Sax. beloved and man.

This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress.

Hanmer.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take.

Spenser.

A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine.

Shakspeare.

LE'MMA, lém'má. n. s. [λημμα; lemme, Fr.]

A proposition previously assumed.

LE'MON, lém'mún. n. s. [limon, Fr. limonium, low Latin.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges.

Arbuthnot.

The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours.

Mortimer.

Bear me, Pomona!

To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend.

Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty.

Miller.

LEMONÁDE, lém'mún-áde'. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Thou, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade.

Arbuthnot.

To LEND, lénd. v. a. preterit, and part. pass. lent. [Ænan, Sax. leenen, Dut.]

1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heaven.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury,
nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

Leviticus.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend.

Dryden.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me.

Shakspeare.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend.

Dryden.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back again.

Decay of Piety.

Painting and poesy are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poesy, and the other a speaking picture.

Dryden.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor.

Dryden.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak.

Cephisa, thou

Phil.

LE'NDER, lénd'úr. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade.

Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers' doors,
To call in money.

Dryden.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger.

Addison.

LENGTH, léngth. n. s. [from lenz, Sax.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times.

Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Aëron overthrows;
Stretch'd at his length he spurns the swarthy ground.

Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay.

Shaksp.

To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;
Left danger, fears, and foes, behind,
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind.

Hudib.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past.

Dryden.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd,
What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast?

Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths.

Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss,

With length of days, and every day like this.

Dryden.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame.

Dryden.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands.

Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced.

Watts.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

If Lætitia, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with the worthy gentleman's name, I will insert it at length in one of my papers.

Spectator.

8. Distance.

He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging.

Clarendon.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.

Churches purged of things burthensome, all was brought at the length unto that wherein we now stand.

Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both.

Hooker.

10. At LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder.

Dryden.

To LENGTHEN, léng'th'n. v. a. [from length.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture.

Arbuthnot.

Falling dews with spangles deck'd the glad,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade.

Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Shakspeare.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity.

Daniel.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity.

Atterbury.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them.

Dryden.

4. To LENGTHEN out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate?

Dryden.

I'd board up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears.

Dryden.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words.

Addison.

To LENGTHEN, léng'th'n. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value.

Locke.

Still 'tis farther from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way.

Prior.

LENGTHWISE, léng'th'wize. adv. [length and wise.] According to the length; in a longitudinal direction.

LENIENT, lé'nè-ènt. adj. [leniens, Lat.]

1. Assuasive; softening; mitigating.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last saud.

Pope.

2. With of.

Consolatories writ
With study'd argument, and much persuasion sought

Lenient of grief and anxious thought.

Milton.

3. Laxative; emollient.

Oils relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamick, and abate acrimony in the blood.

Arbuthnot.

LENIENT, lé'nè-ènt. n. s. An emollient, or assuasive application.

I dressed it with lenients.

Wiseman.

To LENIFY, lé'né-fi. v. n. [lenifier, old French; lenio, Latin.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.

Bacon.

All soft'ning simples, known of sovereign use,
He presses out, and pours their noble juice;
These first infus'd, to lenify the pain,
He tugs with pincers, but he tugs in vain.

Dryden.

LENITIVE, lé'né-tiv. adj. [lenitif, Fr. lenio, Lat.] Assuasive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive.

Bacon.

There is aliment lenitive expelling the faces without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils.

Arbuthnot.

LENITIVE, lé'né-tiv. n. s.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

2. A palliative.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it would be brought to decreterory rigours. South.
LE'NITY, lén'é-té. n. s. [lenitas, Lat.]
 Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent,
 Of meer compassion and of lenity,
 To ease your country. Shakspeare.

Lenity must gain
 The mighty men, and please the discontent. Daniel.
 Albeit so ample a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated. Hayward.

These jealousies

Have but one root, the old imprison'd king,
 Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd;
 But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
 Like Æsop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryden.

LENS, lénz. ⁴³⁴ n. s. [from resemblance to the seed of a lentil.]

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually called a lens; such is a burning-glass, or spectacle-glass, or an object-glass of a telescope. Newton.

According to the difference of the lenses, I used various distances. Newton.

LENT, lént. The part. pass. from lend.
 By Jove the stranger and the poor are sent,
 And what to those we give, to Jove is lent. Pope.

LENT, lént. n. s. [Lenten, the spring, Sax.] The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ashwednesday to Easter.

Lent is from springing, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitors, the Germans, use glent. Camden.

LENTEN, lén'tén.¹⁰³ adj. [from lent.]
 Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you! Shakspeare.

She quench'd her fury at the flood,
 And with a lenten salad cool'd her blood,
 Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing seant. Dryden.

LENTICULAR, lén-tik'kú-lâr. adj. [lenticulaire, French.] Doubly convex; of the form of a lens.

The crystalline humour is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on Creation.

Charibdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians.

Broome.

LIBRARY, lí-brá-ré. n. s. [librarie, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to advise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book, hight Britou's monuments.

Fairy Queen.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read.

Dryden.

To LIBRATE, lí-brá-te.⁹¹ v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.LIBRATION, lí-brá-shûn.¹²⁸ n. s. [libratio, Lat. libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration of the body.

Dryden.

Their piunions still

In loose librations stretch'd, to trust the void
Trembling refuse.

Thomson.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that at full moon they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does.

Dict. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis.

Grew.

LI'BRATORY, lí-brá-tûr-é.⁶¹² adj. [from libro, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, lise. the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way.

Dryden.

LI'CEBANE, líse-báne. n. s. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LI'CENSE, lí'sense. n. s. [licentia, Lat. licence, Fr.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief.

Sidney.

Taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter.

Shaksp.

They baul for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free;
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty.

Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to license by too just a name.
Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of license; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself.

Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate.

Judith.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged,
And put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of public approbation.

Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery.

Addison.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself.

Acts.

To LI'CENSE, lí'sense. v. a. [licencier, French.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

Wit's Titans brav'd the skies,
And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies.

Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts.

Wotton.

LI'CENSER, lí'sén-sûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from licenser.] A granter of permission; commonly a tool of power.LICENTATE, lí-sén'shè-áte.⁹¹ n. s. [licentiatius, low Lat.]

1. A man who uses license. Not in use.

The licentiate, somewhat licentiously, lest they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly.

Canden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of licentiate or master in this faculty.

Ayliffe.

To LICENTATE, lí-sén'shè-áte. v. a. [licentier, French.] To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse.

L'Estrange.

LICENTIOUS, lí-sén'shûs.¹²⁸ adj. [licentieux, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat-swoll encrease,
To all licentious lust, and 'gan exceed
The measure of her mean, and natural first need.

Fairy Queen.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate?

Shaksp.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.

The Tiber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course.

Roscom.

LICENTIOUSLY, lí-sén'shûs-lé. adv. [from licentious.] With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiate, somewhat licentiously, will pardon themselves.

Canden's Remains.

LICENTIOUSNESS, lí-sén'shûs-nês. n. s. [from licentious.] Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained.

Raleigh.

This custom has been always looked upon by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty.

Swift.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted.

Swift.

LICH, lítsh. n. s. [lice, Saxon.] A dead carcass; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred Christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LI'CHOWL, lítsh'ôul. n. s. [lich and owl.]

A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretel death.

To LICK, lík. v. a. [licean, Saxon; lecken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Æsculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs.

Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame.

Hudibras.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews.

Dryden.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste.

Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison.

Shakspere

3. To LICK up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numbers.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
Think how postcrity will treat thy name. Pope.

LICK, lik. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; rough usage; a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar,
and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH, lik'ér-ish. } adj. [lickere, }
LICKEROUS, lik'ér-ús. } a glutton, Sax.

This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor, but with like.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gust.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commination, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know

That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;

But lick'rous, poison'd, fain to her would go.

Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware.

Wotton.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save

His body, destin'd to that living grave;

The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,

And nothing but the man would serve her turn.

Dryden.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This sense I doubt.

Would'st thou seek again to trap me here,
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS, lik'ér-ish-nés. n. s. [from lickerish.] Niceness of palate.

LICORICE, lik'kúr-ís.¹⁴² n. s. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Italian.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The insipidated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill.

LICTOR, lik'túr.¹⁶⁸ n. s. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors Shakspeare.

Will catch at us like strumpets.

Proconsuls to their provinces lasting, or on return, in robes of state,

Lictors and rods, the ensigns of their power. Milton.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake

His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;

Though in his country-town no lictors were,

Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden.

LID, lid. n. s. [hlið, Saxon; licid, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,

Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakspeare.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Davies.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,

As any muse's tongue could speak;

When from its lid a pearly tear

Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes

To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,

And drive departed souls to Styx:

That rod was just a type of Sid's,

Which o'er a British senate's lids

Could scatter opium full as well,

And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE, li.²⁷⁶ n. s. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakspeare.

All lyed things conected by heat become yellow, as lye, wort, &c. Peacham on Draving.

LIE, li.²⁷⁶ n. s. [lige, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword

I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakspeare.

A lye is properly an otiose signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lye. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will, and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lye, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie is a formulary phrase.

That lie shall lye so heavy on my sword,

That it shall render vengeance and revenge;

Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest

In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakspeare.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;

The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To LIE, li. v. n. [ieogan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, He lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspeare.

If a soul lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered. Leviticus.

Should I lye against my right? Job.

2. To exhibit false representation.

Inform us, will the emp'r or treat?

Or do the prints and papers lie. Swift.

To LIE, li. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [hegan, Saxon; liggen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

Death lies on her like an untimely show'r

Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakspeare.

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Van.

3. To be reposed in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isaiah.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying-place. Genesis.

4. To be in a state of decumbiture.

How many good young princes would do so; their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is? Shak.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. Mark.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller,

That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,

Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted here;

Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or reposed.

I have seen, where copperas is made, great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lied at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen.

9. To be placed or situated, with respect to something else.

Deserts where there lay no way. Wisdom.

I fly

To those happy climes that lie

Where day never shuts his eye. Milton.

There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier of Envy.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon afflictively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psalms.

He that commits a sin shall find

The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,

Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause. Creech.

Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Addison.

11. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addison's Guardian.

12. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shak.

13. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shaks.

The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watts.

14. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight. Locke.

15. To be in prison.

- Your imprisonment shall not be long; I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakspeare.
16. To be in a bad state.
Why will you lie pining and pinching yourself in such a lonesome, starving course of life? L'Estr.
The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces. L'Estrange.
Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie bellying with your finger in your mouth? L'Estr.
17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.
To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.
It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson.
As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addison.
The maintenance of the clergy is precarious; and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded. Swift.
18. To consist.
The image of it gives me content already, and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.— It lies much in your holding up. Shakspeare.
He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntsmen. Locke.
19. To be in the power; to belong to.
Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies, to preserve the lives of all men? Duppa.
He shows himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies. Stillingfleet.
Mars is the warrior's God; in him it lies
On whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.
20. To be valid in a court of judicature: as, an action lieth against one.
21. To cost: as, it lies me in more money.
22. To LIE at. To importune; to tease.
23. To LIE by. To rest; to remain still.
Ev'ry thing that heard him play,
Ev'n the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by;
In sweet music is such art,
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shakspeare.
24. To LIE down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.
The leopard shall lie down with the kid. Isaiah.
The needy shall lie down in safety. Isaiah.

Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
And with your best endeavour have stirred up
My lieftest liege to be mine enemy. Shakspeare.
- LIEF, lèéf.²⁷⁵ adv. Willingly; now used only in familiar speech.
If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shakspeare.
- LIEGE, lèédje.²⁷⁵ adj. [lige, Fr. ligio, Italian; ligius, low Latin.]
1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liegeman for subject.
2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]
Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry VIII. for their king and liege lord? Spenser.
My lady liege, said he,
What all your sex desire is sovereignty.
So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be stiled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Grew's Cosmology.
- LIEGE, lèédje. n. s. Sovereign; superior lord: scarcely in use.
O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shaks.

[from lieutenant.] The rank or office of lieutenant.

LIFE, life. n. s. plural lives. [Lĭpian, to live, Saxon.]

1. Union and co-operation of soul with body; vitality; animation, opposed to an inanimate state.

On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thy foes. Shakspeare.

She shews a body rather than a life,
A statue than a breather. Shakspeare.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Genesis.

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!
Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falsher than the former day;
Lies more; and when it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, takes off what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasur in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

How'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverse meanders errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then avarice 'gan through his veins to inspire
His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire. Spenser.

Their complot is to have my life;
And, if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakspeare.
Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to Heav'n. Milton.

He entreated me not to take his life, but exact a sum of money. Broome on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, supposed the vehicle of life.

His gushing entrails smoak'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might Be wrong; his life I'm sure was in the right. Cowley.

Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;

After a life of glorious toils endur'd,
Clos'd their long glories with a sigh. Pope.

I'll teach my family to lead good lives. Mrs. Barker.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.

Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;
So Remus and his brother god were bred. Dryden.

7. Continuance of our present state; as, half his life was spent in study.
Some have not any clear ideas all their lives. Locke.

Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains,
And tires his life with biting on his chains. Prior.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison.

8. The living form: opposed to copies.

That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express, no, nor the first sight of the life. Bacon's Essays.

Let him visit eminent persons of great name abroad, that he may tell how the life agreeth with the fame. Bacon.

He that would be a master, must draw by the life as well as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together. Collier.

9. Exact resemblance: with to before it.

I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn to the life than this. Denham.

Rich carvings, portraiture, and imag'ry,
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden.

He saw in order painted on the wall
The wars that fame around the world had blown,
All to the life, and every leader known. Dryden.

10. General state of man.

Studios they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare!
Unmindful of their Maker. Milton.

All that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

11. Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.

This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Ascham.

Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton.

12. Living person.

Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On my own sword? whilst I see lives the gashes
Do better upon them. Shakspeare.

13. Narrative of a life past.

Plutarch, that writes his life,
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.

The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure, is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.

Not with half the fire and life,
With which he kiss'd Amphytion's wife. Prior.

15. Animal; animated existence; animal being.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.

16. System of animal nature.

Lives through all life. Pope.

17. Life is also used of vegetables, and whatever grows and decays.

LIFEBLOOD, life'blūd. n. s. [life and blood.]
The blood necessary to life; the vital blood.

This sickness doth infect
The very lifeblood of our enterprize. Shakspeare.

How couldst thou drain the lifeblood of the child?
Shakspeare.

His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound. Dryden.

They lov'd with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood. Spectator.

Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation

Its motion and its heat maintains. Swift.

LIFEEVERLASTING, life'ĕv-vûr-lâst-ing.
An herb. Ainsworth.

LIFEGIVING, life'gĭv-ing. adj. [life and giving.] Having the power to give life.

His own heat,
Kindled at first from heaven's life-giving fire. Spens.

He sat devising death
To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought
Of that life-giving plant. Milton.

LIFEGUARD, life-gyârd'. n. s. [life and guard.] The guard of a king's person.

LIFELESS, life'lĕs. adj. [from life.]

1. Dead; deprived of life.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp onc part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier. Prior.

2. Unanimated; void of life.

Was I to have never parted from thy side?
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib! Milton.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things. Milton.

The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves: if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless unactive heap of matter. Cheyne.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain,
But senseless, lifeless! idol void and vain. Pope.

3. Wanting power, force, or spirit.

Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakspeare.

Unknowing to command, proud to obey
A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay. Prior.

4. Wanting or deprived of physical energy.

The other victor-flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood. Dryden.

LIFELESSLY, life'lĕs-lĕ. adv. [from lifeless.] Without vigour; frigidly; jejune-ly.

LIFE LIKE, life'like. adj. [life and like.]

Like a living person.

Minerva, life-like, on embodied air
Impress'd the form of Iphthema the fair. Pope.

LIFE STRING, life'string. n. s. [life and string.] Nerve; string imagined to convey life.

These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifestrings of those hearts
That still shall pant, and still shall exercise
The motion spirit and nature both impart. Daniel.

LIFETIME, life'time. n. s. [life and time.]

Continuance or duration of life.

Jordain talked prose all his life-time, without knowing what it was. Addison.

LIFEWEARY, life'wĕ-rĕ. adj. [life and weary.] Wretched; tired of living.

Let me have
A dram of poison, such soon speeding geer
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead. Shakspeare.

To LIFT, lift. v. a. [lyfta, Swedish; lofter, Danish. I lifted, or lift; I have lifted, or lift.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave; to elevate; to hold on high.

Filial ingratitude!
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand
For lifting food to 't? Shakspeare.

- Your guests are coming;
Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial. Shaksp.
Propp'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,
In summer living, and in winter dead. Dryden.
2. To bear; to support. Not in use.
So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did groan, as feeble so great load to lift. F. Queen.
3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shoplifter.
So weary bees in little cells repose,
But if night robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.
4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.
My heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord. 2 Chronicles.
Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,
To bright Cæcilia greater pow'r is given,
His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,
Hers lifts the soul to heav'n. Pope.
5. To raise in fortune.
The eye of the Lord lifted up his head from misery. Ecclesiasticus.
6. To raise in estimation.
Neither can it be thought, because some lessons are chosen out of the Apocrypha, that we do offer disgrace to the word of God, or lift up the writings of men above it. Hooker.
7. To exalt in dignity.
See to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man! Addison.
8. To elevate; to swell, as with pride.
Lifted up with pride. Timothy.
Our successes have been great, and our hearts have been too much lifted up by them, so that we have reason to humble ourselves. Atterbury.
9. Uti is sometimes emphatically added to lift.
He lift up his spear against eight hundred, whom he slew at one time. 2 Samuel.
Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand. Genesis.
- To LIFT, lift. v. n. To strive to raise by strength
Pinch cattle of pasture while summer doth last,
And lift at their tails ere a winter be past. Tusser.
The muid, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken. Locke.
- LIFT, lift. n. s. [from the verb.]
- The manner of lifting.
In the lift of the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees. Bacon.
In races, it is not the large stride, or high lift, that makes the speed. Bacon.
 - The act of lifting.
The goat gives the fox a lift, and out he springs. L'Estrange.
 - Effort; struggle. Dead lift is an effort to raise what with the whole force cannot be moved; and figuratively any state of impotence and inability.
Myself and Trulla made a shift
To help him out at a dead lift. Hudibras.
Mr. Doctor had puzzled his brains
In making a ballad, but was at a stand,
And you freely must own, you were at a dead lift. Swift
 - Lift*, in Scotland, denotes a load or surcharge of any thing; as also, if one be disguised much with liquor, they say,
He has got a great lift.
 - [In Scottish.] The sky: for in a starry night they say, How clear the lift is!
 - Lifts* of a sail, are ropes to raise or lower them at pleasure.

- LIFTER, lift'ür. n. s. [from lift.] One that lifts.
Thou, O Lord, art my glory, and the lifter up of mine head. Psalms.
To LIG, lig. v. n. [leggen, Dutch.] To lie.
Thou kenst the great care
I have of thy health and thy welfare,
Which many wild beasts liggen in wait,
For to entrap in thy tender state. Spenser.
- LIGAMENT, lig'gâ-mément. n. s. [liga- mentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, Fr.]
- Ligament* is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any sense, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise. Quincy.
Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandys.
The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes. Holder.
 - [In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.
Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break. Denham.
 - Bond; chain; entanglement.
Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasous like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality. Addison.
- LIGAMENTAL, lig-â-mén'tâl. } n. s.
LIGAMÉNTOUS, lig-â-mén'tus. } [from ligament.] Composing a ligament.
The urachos or ligamental passage, is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it dischargeth the watery and urinary part of its aliment. Brown.
The clavicle is inserted into the first bone of the sternon, and bound in by a strong ligamentous membrane. Wiseman.
- LIGATION, li-gâ'shûn. n. s. [ligatio, Lat.]
- The act of binding.
 - The state of being bound.
The slumber of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason. Addison.
- LIGATURE, lig'gâ-tûre. n. s. [ligature,
Fr. ligatura, Latin.]
- Any thing tied round another; bandage.
He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms,
and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases. Brown.
If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strait ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the li- gature; but do but take off the ligature, it will beat immediately. Ray on the Creation.
The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Spectator.
I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my armpits to my thighs. Gulliver's Travels.
 - The act of binding.
The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face. Arbutnot.
Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropsy, as by strong ligature or compression. Arbutnot.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.
Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- LIGHT, lite.³⁹³ n. s. [leohc, Saxon.]
- That material medium of sight; that body by which we see; luminous matter.
Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time,
and spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth. Newton.
 - State of the elements, in which things become visible: opposed to darkness.
God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Genesis.
So alike thou driv'st away
Light and darkness, night and day. Carew.
 - Power of perceiving external objects
by the eye: opposed to blindness.
My strength faileth me; as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me. Psalms.
If it be true that light is in the soul,
She all in every part, what was the sight
To such a slender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through ev'ry pore? Milton.
 - Day.
The murderer rising with the light killeth the poor. Job.
Ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave, fresh as the dawning light. Mill.
 - Life.
Infants that never saw light. Job.
Swift roll the years, and rise the expected morn,
O spring to light, auspicious babe be born! Pope.
 - Artificial illumination.
Seven lamps shall give light. Numbers.
 - Illumination of mind; instruction; knowledge.
Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be discerned by the light of nature itself, are there not many which few men's natural capacity hath been able to find out? Hooker.
Light may be taken from the experiment of the horse-tooth ring, how that those things which assuage the strife of the spirits, do help diseases contrary to the intention desired. Bacon.
I will place within them as a guide
My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear,
Light after light well us'd they shall attain,
And to the end persisting safe arrive. Milton.
I opened Ariosto in Italian, and the very first two lines gave me light to all I could desire. Dryden.
If internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it. Locke.
The ordinary words of language, and our common use of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention. Locke.
The books of Varro concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Arbutnot.
 - The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.
Never admit two equal lights in the same picture;
but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are;
diminishing as it comes nearer the borders. Dryd.
 - Reach of knowledge; mental view.
Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him. Daniel.
We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light. Bacon.

They have brought to light not a few profitable experiments. Bacon.

10. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.

Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind. South.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Spectator.

An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in his confusion. Spectator.

11. Publick view; publick notice.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light?

Heav'n! was I born for nothing but to write. Pope.

12. The publick.

Grave epistles bring vice to light,
Such as a king might read, a bishop write. Pope.

13. Explanation.

I have endeavoured, throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before. Hooker.

We should compare places of scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another. Locke.

14. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper; any luminous body.

That light you see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shaksp.

Then he called for a light, and sprang in and fell down before Paul. Acts.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts.

Let them be for signs,
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of heav'n,
To give light on the earth. Milton.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and a meteor. Glanville.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

I will make some officers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which the ships may avoid at least known rocks. Temple.

He must still mourn
The sun, and moon, and ev'ry starry light,
Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night. Prior.

LIGHT, lite. adj. [teohc, Saxon.]

1. Not tending to the centre with great force; not heavy.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the golden balance, insomuch that I could not guess which was light or heavy whilst I held them in my hand. Spectator.

2. Not burdensome; easy to be worn, or carried, or lifted; not onerous.

Horse, oxen, plough, tumbril, cart, waggon, and wain,
The lighter and stronger the greater thy gaine. Tusser.

It will be light, that you may bear it
Under a cloke that is of any length. Shakespeare.

A king that would not feel his crown too heavy, must wear it every day; but if he think it too light, he knoweth not of what metal it is made. Bacon.

3. Not afflictive; easy to be endured.

Every light and common thing incident into any part of man's life. Hooker.

Light suff'rings give us leisure to complain,
We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain. Dryden.

4. Easy to be performed; not difficult.

Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was light,
The father, mother, daughter, they invite. Dryden.

5. Easy to be acted on by any power.

Apples of a ripe flavour, fresh and fair,
Mellow'd by winter from their cruder juice,
Light of digestion now, and fit for use. Dryden.

6. Not heavily armed.

1. To flash, with thunder.

This dreadful night,
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion. Shakspeare.

Although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night;
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden,
Too like the light'ning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens. Shakspeare.

The lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, sheweth unto the other part. Luke.

2. To shine like lightning.

Yet looks he like a king: behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth

Suppose many degrees of littleness and lightness in particles, so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.

For, unto knight there is no greater shame,
Than lightness and inconstancy in love. F. Queen.

Of two things they must chuse one; namely, whether they would, to their endless disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, dismiss him, whose restitution they had in so importunate manner desired, or else condescend unto that demand. Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shaksp.

3. Unchastity; want of conduct in women.

Is it the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that emboldened such base fancies towards me? Sidney.

Can it be,

That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than woman's lightness? Shakspeare.

4. Agility; nimbleness.

LI'GHTNING, lite'ning. n. s. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]

1. The flash that attends thunder.

Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Muschenbroek.

Sense thinks the lightning born before the thunder;

What tells us then they both together are? Davies.
Salmoncus, suff'ring cruel pains I found

For emulating Jove; the rattling sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glitt'ring blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their forky rays. Dryd.

No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld. Granville.

2. Mitigation; abatement. [from to lighten, to make less heavy.]

How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shakspeare.

Call up, unbound, In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea, Drain'd through a limbeck to his naked form. Milton.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Hovel.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes, Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise, It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.

LI'MBED, lìm'd.³⁵³ adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A steer of five years age, large limb'd and fed, To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope.

LI'MBER, lìm'bùr.⁶⁸ adj. Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithic.

You put me off with limber vows. Shaksp.

I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Atheling could subsist, being the indubitate heir of the Saxon huc: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Wotton.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground, insect, or worm: those warr'd their limber fans for wings; and smallest lineaments exact in all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride. Milton.
She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her. Mora.

The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the œsophagus, very limber. Ray.

LIMBERNESS, lim'bûr-nês. n. s. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

LIMBO, lim'bô. n. s. [Eo quod sit limbus inferorum. Du Cange.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Particularly hell.

No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shaksp.

Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss. Shaksp.

All these up-whirl'd aloft,
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
The paradise of fools. Milton.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self same limbo put
The knight and squire, where he was shut. Hudibras.

Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo. Dryden.

LIME, lime. n. s. [lim, gelyman, Saxon, to glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shaksp.

You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with servicable vows. Shaksp.

Jollier of this state
Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, wheresoe'er he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench. Donne.

A thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs. L'Estrange.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widow's hearts. Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side. Bacon.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen prais'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold. Mortimer.

3. The linden tree. [lind, Saxon; tilia, Latin.]

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes testiculated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one in Norfolk sixteen yards in circuit. Miller.

For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

4. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson.

TO LIME, lime. v. a. [from lime.]

1. To entangle, to ensnare.
O bosom, black as death!

O limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged. Shaksp.

Example, that so terribly shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shaksp.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth ev'ry bush,
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shaksp.

2. To smear with lime.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shaksp.

Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them. L'Estrange.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shaksp.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming. Child.

All sorts of pease love limed or marled land. Mortimer.

LIMEKILN, lime'kil. n. s. [lime and kiln.]

Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.
The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the reek of a lime-kiln. Shaksp.

They were found in a lime-kiln, and having pass'd the fire, each is a little vitrified. Woodward.

LIMESTONE, lime'stone. n. s. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer.

LIME-WATER, lime'wâ-tûr. n. s.

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally, in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs. Hill.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime-water alone, and some in brandy and lime-water mixed, and had from each grain a great increase. Mortimer.

LIMIT, lim'mit. n. s. [limité, French; limitor, Latin.] Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round about shall be most holy. Exodus.

Proud liminary cherub! Millon.

LIMITA'TION, lim-mè-tâ'shûn. n. s. [limitation, Fr. limitatio, Lat.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof. Hooker.

Am I yourself,

But, as it were, in sort of limitation? Shaksp.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir. This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour, who would look for him among the race of brutes, but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men. Locke.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure. Swift.

2. Confinement from a lax or undetermined import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable. Hooker.

LIMNER, lim'nûr. n. s. [corrupted from enlumineur, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

Poets are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;
Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,

And nature is their object to be drawn. Glanville.

LIMOUS, li'mûs. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land. Brown.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy fœculent part of the blood. Floyer.

LINK, língk.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [gelencke, German.]

1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong links asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment. Shaksp.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependance; you cannot draw one link without attracting others. Glanville.

While she does her upward flight sustain, Touching each link of the continued chain, At length she is oblig'd and fore'd to see A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together. Make a link of horse hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer.

3. A chain; any thing connecting. Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.

I feel

The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh,
Bone of my bone thou art. Milton.

Fire, flood and earth, and air, by this were bound,
And love, the common link, the new creation
crown'd. Dryden.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellectual ratiocination is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes. Hale.

5. A series: this sense is improper. Ad-dison has used link for chain.

Though I have here only chosen this single link of martyrs, I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive tradition. Addison.

6. [from λόγνος.] A torch made of pitch and hards.

O, thou art an everlasting bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern. Shakspeare.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Hovel.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he sails behind his link. Dryden.

One that bore a link

On a sudden clapp'd his flaming edgel,
Like linstock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lampblack.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat. Shaksp.

To LINK, lingk. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down,
Thus drooping; or with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton.

Against eating eares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs;
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so linked in friendship,
That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter. Shaksp.

3. To join; to connect.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,

So from the first eternal order ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man. Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in so near a bond. Hooker.

Be advised for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band
Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. F. Queen.

Blood in princes link'd not in such sort,
As that it is in any pow'r to tie. Daniel.

5. To connect, as concomitant.

New hope to spring
Out of despair; joy, but with fear yet link'd. Milton.

God has linkt our hopes and our duty together. Decay of Piety.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained

one to another: we labour to eat, and we eat to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as seed sown, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker.

Tell me, which part it does necessitate?
I'll chuse the other: there I'll link th' effect;
A chain, which fools to catch themselves project! Dryden.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

LI'NKBOY, lingk'boé. } n. s. [link and LI'NKMAN, lingk'mán. } boy.] A boy that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous disusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy. More.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Gay.

In the black form of einder-wench she came.
O may no linkboy interrupt their love! Gay.

King Richard's surname was Cor-de-Lion, for his lion-like courage. Carden's Remains.

Be lion mettled; proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;
Maebeth shall never vanquish'd be. Shakspeare.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peaciam.

They rejoice
Each with their kind, lion with lioness;
So fitly them in pairs thou hast combin'd. Milton.

See lion hearted Richard,
Piously valiant, like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves
Within its sweep, trees, houses, men, he press'd, Amidst the thickest battle. Philips.

2. A sign in the zodiack.

The lion for the honour of his skin,
The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shine

- LI'TERAL, lit'têr-âl. adj. [literal, Fr. litera, Lat.]

1. According to the primitive meaning; not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we see that the words which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the latter, is accomplished in the truth. Hooker.

A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building; nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for publick audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrasts, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker.

3. Consisting of letters: as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the ciphers.

- LI'TERAL, lit'têr-âl. n. s. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession. Brown.

- LITERALITY, lit-têr-râl'è-tê. n. s. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuteroscopia and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not sometimes persuaded beyond their literalities. Brown.

- LITERALLY, lit'têr-râl-ê. adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible. Swift.

2. With close adherence to words; word by word.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

- LITERARY, lit'têr-â-rê. adj. [literarius, Latin.] Respecting letters; regarding learning. Literary history, is an account of the state of learning and of the lives of learned men. Literary conversation, is talk about questions of learning. Literary is not properly used of missive letters. It may be said, this epistolary correspondence was political oftener than literary.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude. Spectator.

- LITERATURE, lit'têr-râ-tûre. n. s. [literatura, Latin.] Learning; skill in letters.

This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supplies. Bacon.

When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison.

- LI'THARGE, lith'ârjê. n. s. [litharge, Fr. lithargyrum, Latin.]

Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver. It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. Hill.

I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge. Boyle.

If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver. Boyle.

- LITHE, lithê. adj. [lithe, Saxon.] Limber; flexible; pliant; easily bent.

Th' unwieldy elephant,
To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wreath'd

His lithe proboscis. Milton.

A wolf came to a sow, and very kindly offered to take care of her litter. L'Estrange.

Full many a year his hateful head had been
For tribute paid, nor since in Cambria seen:
The last of all the litter seap'd by chance,
And from Geneva first infested France. Dryden.

4. A birth of animals.

Fruitful as the sow that carry'd
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd.

5. Any number of things thrown sluttishly about.

Strepion, who found the room was void,
Stole in, and took a strict survey
Of all the litter as it lay. Swift.

To LITTEER, lit'tûr.⁹⁸ v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring forth: used of beasts, or of human beings in abhorrence or contempt.

Then was this island,
Save for the son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hag-born, not honour'd with A human shape. Shaksp.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

To LIVE, liv.¹⁰⁷ v. n. [λύψαν, λύψιζαν, Saxon.]

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

Is 't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth entomb,
When living day should kiss it? Shaksp.

To save the living, and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms, all Troy they led. Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits, good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest! Ecclesiasticus.

Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully lived and died in. Hammond.

A late prelate, of a remarkable zeal for the church, were religions to be tried by lives, would have lived down the pope, and the whole consistory. Atterbury.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Spectator.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.

Our high-plac'd Maebeth
Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shaksp.

See the minutes how they run;
How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shaksp.

The way to live long must be, to use our bodies
so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on the Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.

What greater curse could envious fortune give,
Than just to die when I began to live? Dryden.

Now three and thirty rolling years are fled
Since I began, nor yet begin to live. Brown.

Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And snatch the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,

And give to God each moment as it flies:

Lord, in my views let both united be,
I live to pleasure when I live to thee. Doddridge.

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.

My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Leviticus.

we should live together with him. 1 Thessalonians.

6. To remain undestroyed.

It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill-manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Buruel.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues,
We write in water. Shaksp.

Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace.
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit: followed by with.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For their delight each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shaksp.

With pow'r imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.

Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryd.

LIVE, liv.¹⁰⁷ adj. [from alive.]

1. Quick; not dead.

If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exod.

2. Active; not extinguished

A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the saltpetre upon easting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

LI'VELESS, live'lès. adj. [from live.]

Wanting life; rather, lifeless.
Description cannot suit itself in words,

To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so liveless as it shews itself. Shaksp.

LI'VELIHOOD, live'lè-hùd.¹⁰⁷ n. s. [It appears to me corrupted from livelode.] Support of life; maintenance; means of living.

Ah! luckless babe! born under cruel star,
And in dead parents baleful ashes bred;
Full little weenest thou what sorrows are Left thee for portion of thy livelihood! Spenser.

That rebellion drove the lady from thence,
to find a livelihood out of her own estate. Clarendon.

He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a livelihood in that strolling way of eating and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and livelihood to get their living by practices for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South.

They have been as often banished out of most other places, which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihood where they can find it. Spectator.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow-subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelihood: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addis.

LI'VELINESS, live'lè-nès. n. s. [from lively.]

1. Appearance of life.

That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness.

Extravagant young fellows that have liveliness
and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and so make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke.

LI'VELODE, live'lòde. n. s. [live and load, from lead; the means of leading life.]

Maintenance; support; livelihood.
She gave like blessing to each creature,
As well of wordly livelode as of life,
That there might be no difference nor strife. Hubberd's Tale.

LI'VELONG, liv'lòng.¹⁰⁷ adj. [live and long.]

1. Tedious; long in passing.

Many a time, and oft,
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Your infants in your arms; and there have sate
The livelong day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass. Shaksp.

The obscur'd bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakespeare.

Young and old come forth to play
On a sun-shine holiday,
Till the livelong day-light fail. Milton.

LI'VERWORT, liv'vûr-wûrt. n. s. [liver and wort; lichen.] A plant.

That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is short, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour. Miller.

LI'VERY, liv'vûr-ê.⁹⁸ n. s. [from livrer, Fr.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.

You do wrongfully scize Hereford's right,
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His livery, and deny his offered homage. Shaksp.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment. King Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.
What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink: and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse meat, like as by the coigny is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their coignies not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning. Spen.

5. The clothes given to servants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth. Hooker.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery. Shaksp.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery;
That see I by our faces. Shaksp.

Ev'ry lady cloath'd in white,
And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,
Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known
Of innocuee. Dryden.

On others' int'rest her gay liv'ry flings,
Interest that waves on party-colour'd wings;
Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes,
And as she turns the colours fall or rise. Dunciad.

If your dinner miscarries, you were teized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liveries. Swift.

6. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green
Proudly bedeck'd, in April's livery. Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour and near bred. Shaksp.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,
With spots of gold and purple, azure, green. Milton.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey
Had in her sober livery all things clad. Milton.

LI'VERYMAN, liv'vûr-ê-mân.⁹⁸ n. s. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferiour kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistress. Arbuthnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVES, livz. n. s. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,
In a farm house or field, to have three lives. Donne.

LI'VID, liv'id. adj. [lividus, Lat. livide, Fr.]

Discoloured as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss? Dryden.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,

Till they turn livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

LI'VIDITY, lê-vid'ê-tê. n. s. [lividité, Fr.

from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance. Arbuthnot.

LI'VING, liv'ving.⁴¹⁰ participial adj.

1. Vigorous; active; as, a living faith.

2. Being in motion; having some natural energy, or principle of action: as, the living green, the living springs.

LI'VING, liv'ving.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

The Arcadians fought as in an unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children. Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. Mark.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting somebody or other, in some cases. L'Esrange.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make. Hubberd.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Shaksp.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your liver,
Or shortly you'll dig for your living. Denham.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, by which both they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden.

4. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections. Arbuthnot.

LI'VINGLY, liv'ving-lê. adv. [from living.]

In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown.

LIVRE, liv'vûr.⁴¹⁶ n. s. [Fr.]

The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our ten-pence.

LIXI'VIAL, lik-siv'ê-âl. adj. [from lixivium, Lat.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine. Arbuthnot.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alecalzate form. Boyle.

LIXI'VIATE, lik-siv'ê-âte.⁹¹ adj. [lixivieux, Fr. from lixivium.]

Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder. Brown.

Lixivate salts, to which pot ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose them to part readily with their tincture. Boyle.

LIXI'VIUM, lik-siv'ê-ûm. n. s. [Lat.]

Lie; water impregnated with alkaline salt, produced from the ashes of vegetables; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants. Boyle.

LI'ZARD, liz'zârd.⁸⁸ n. s. [lisarde, Fr. la- certus, Lat.] An animal resembling a serpent with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards. It is very probable likewise that they were eaten in Arabia and Judæa, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures. Calmet.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatiek,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venomous toads, or lizards dreadful stings. Shakspeare.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing. Shakspeare.

LI'ZARDSTONE, liz'zârd-stone. n. s. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

LI'ZARDTAIL, liz'zârd-tâle. n. s. A plant.

LL.D, êl-êl-dê'. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the cannon and civil laws.

Lo, lô. interject. [la, Sax.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakspeare.

Now must the world point at poor Catherine,

And say, lo! there is mad Petruccio's wife. Shakspeare.

Lo! I have a weapon,

A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh. Shakspeare.

Thou did'st utter,

I am yours for ever.

—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twicë.

Shakspeare.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth.

Roscommon.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine

To blast our bold design. Dryden.

LOACH, lôth. n. s. [loche, Fr.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattles like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gesner and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel. Walton.

LOAD, lôde. n. s. [hlade, Sax.]

1. A burden; a freight; lading.

Fair plant with fruit surcharg'd,

Deigns, none to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet? Milton.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,

And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we

The weeping amber, and the balmy tree;

While by our oaks the precious loads are born,

And realms commanded which these trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.

Jove lighten'd of its load

Th' enormous mass, the labour of a god. Pope.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.

Like lion mov'd they laid on load,

And made a cruel fight. Chevy Chace.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel

From my prevailing arm. Milton.

And Mnestheus laid hard load upon his helm. Dryden.

4. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind,

under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not,

unless he be very ignorant. Ray.

5. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Strange.

The thund'ring god,

Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryd.

To LOAD, lôde. v. a. pret. loaded; part.

loaden or laden. [hladan, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,

Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shakspeare.

Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the beast. Isaiah.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading

it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wiseman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still sounds

in my stunn'd ears. Addison.

LOAD, lôde. n. s. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written; from hladan, Sax. to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes

amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Carew.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew.

LO'ADER, lô'dûr. n. s. [from load.] He who loads.

LO'ADSMAN, lôdz'mân. n. s. [load or lode

and man.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

LO'ADSTAR, lôde'stâr. n. s. [more properly

as it is in Mandeville, lodestar, from hladan, to lead.] The polestar; the cy-nosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!

Morc uncable than lark to shepherd's ear

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

Shakspeare.

That clear majesty

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,

Lodestone to hearts, and lodestar to all eyes. Davies.

LO'ADSTONE, lôde'stône. n. s. [properly

lodestone or leading-stone. See LOAD-

STAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariner's compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron grey were fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour; it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron.

This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal.

Hill.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF, lôfe. n. s. [from hlaf or lap, Sax.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakspeare.

The bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion;

and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day. Hayneard.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may botle

it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mortimer.

LOAM, lôme. n. s. [lm, laam, Sax. li- mus, Lat. from λιμνη, a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious earth; marl.

The purest treasure

Is spotless reputation; that away,

Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shakspeare.

Alexander returneth to dust: the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel? Shakspeare.

To LOAM, lômc. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar. Moxon.

LO'AMY, lô'mê. adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding. Bacon.

Auricula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded. Evelyn.

LOAN, lône. n. s. [hlæan, Saxon.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another,

on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be paid, the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the fret,

Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,

Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown

The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dryden.

LOATH, lôth. adj. [lað, Saxon.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes, half loth to look so low,

She thanked them in her disdainful wise,

Nc other grace vouchsafed them to show

Of princess worth. Spenser.

When he heard her answers loth he knew

Some secret sorrow did her heart distract. Spenser.

To speak so indirectly, I am loth;

I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,

That is your part. Shakspeare.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,

From whose soft side she first doth issue make;

She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,

Her flow'ry banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth

To leave this paradise, but shalt possess

A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;

You strike with one hand, but you heal with both:

Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve

You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Æneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature. Dryden.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,

First views the torrent he would venture o'er;

And then his inn upon the farther ground,

Loth to wade through, and lother to go round:

Then dipping in his staff doth trial make

How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dryden.

I know you shy to be oblig'd;

And still more loath to be oblig'd by me. Southerne.

To LOATH, lôth. v. a. [from loath.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own nother loath'd their beastliness.
Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath.
For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood.
Waller.

Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and clothes.
Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.
Loathing the honey'd cakes, I loag'd for bread.
Cowley.

Our appetite is extinguished with the satisfaction,
and is succeeded by loathing and satiety.
Rogers.

3. To see food with dislike.
Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause.
Quincy.

To LOATHE, lôthê. v. n.
1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence.
Obsolete.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see,
And loathing paddocks lording on the sanc.
Spens.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.
The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall lothe to drink of the water.
Exodus.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes?
Rowe.

LO'ATHER, lôth'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from loath.]
One that loathes.

LO'ATHFUL, lôth'fûl. adj. [loath and full.]
Abhorring; hating.

Which he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure.
Hubberd.

2. Abhorred; hated.
Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven flie.
Spenser.

LO'ATHINGLY, lôth'ing-lê. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLY, lôth'lê.²⁰⁶ adj. [from loath.]
Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.

An huge great dragon, horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
With murder'ous ravin.
Spenser.

The people fear me; for they do observe
Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature.
Shak.

Sour-ey'd disdain and discord shall bestow,
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it.
Shaksp.

LO'ATHLY, lôth'lê. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them.
Sidney.

Lothly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose.
Shaksp.

This shews that you from nature loathly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day.
Donne.

LO'ATHNESS, lôth'nês. n. s. [from loath.]
Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow.
Shaksp.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The lothness to depart would grow.
Shaksp.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and lothness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon.
Bacon.

LO'ATHSOME, lôth'sûm. adj. [from loath.]
1. Abhorred; detestable.
The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject his desire

To loathsome sloth, or hours in ease to waste:
Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness.
Milton.

If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being?
South.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.
The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite.
Shaksp.

LO'ATHSOMENESS, lôth'sûm-nês. n. s.
[from loathsome.] Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches.
Addison.

LOAVES, lôvz.²⁹⁵ plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past.
Bacon.

LOB, lôb. n. s.

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.
Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll begone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon.
Shak.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.
Crowdero, whom in irons bound,
Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound.
Hudibras.

3. A big worm.
For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief.
Walton.

To LOB, lôb. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
And their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips.
Shaksp.

LO'BBY, lôb'bê. n. s. [laube, German.] An opening before a room.
His lobbies fill with 'tendance.

Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup.
Shaksp.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him.
Wotton.

Try your backstairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stratagem in war is no deceit.
King.

LOBE, lôbe. n. s. [lobe, Fr. lobes.] A division; a distinct part: used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal.
Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs.
Arbuthnot.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death.
Sewel.

LO'BSTER, lôb'stûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [lobjcrer, Sax.]
A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell, are the lobster, the crab, and craw fish.
Bacon.

It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other.
Brown.

LO'CAL, lô'kâl. adj. [local, Fr. locus,
Latin.]

1. Having the properties of place.
By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you.
Hooker.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world and local skies.
Prior.

2. Relating to place.
The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other.

Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed.
Stillingfleet.

3. Being in a particular place.
Dream not of their fight,
As of a duel, or of the local wounds
Of head or heel.
Milton.

How is the change of being sometimes here,
sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum,
without a change in the body moved?
Digby.

LOCA'LITY, lô-kâl'ê-tê. n. s. [from local.]
Existence in place; relation of place or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opined.
Glanv.

LO'CALLY, lô'kâl-lê. adv. [from local.]
With respect to place.

Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers.
Glanville.

LOCA'TION, lô-kâ'shûn. n. s. [locatio, Lat.]
Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist, this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location.
Locke.

LOCH, lôk. n. s. A lake. Scottish.
A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn it into a stinking puddle.
Cheyne.

LOCK, lôk. n. s. [loc, Sax. in both senses.]

1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.
No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
But with that piercing noise flew open quit or brast.
Spenser.

We have locks, to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
Shaksp.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards.
Maxon.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.

A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder, a little before the lock, another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock.
Grew.

3. A hug; a grapple.
They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close.
Milton.

4. Any inclosure.
Sergesthus, eager with his beak to press
Betwixt the rival galley and the rock,
Shuts up the unwieldy centaur in the lock.
Dryd.

5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.

Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in lock, some curled, and some forgotten.
Sidney.

A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemeth she looked into it, and dressed her green locks by that running river.
Sidney.

His grizly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disorder'd hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser.

The bottom was set against a lock of wool, and the sound was quite dead.
Bacon.

They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads.
Sandys.

A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope.
Grew.

Behold the locks that are grown white
Beneath a helmet in your father's battles.
Addison.

Two locks that graceful hung behind
In equal curls; and well-conspir'd, to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth iv'ry neck.
Pope.

6. A tuft.

I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.

To LOCK, lók. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with locks.

The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
Thought all secure. Dryden.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.

I am lockt in one of them;
If you do love me, you will find me out. Shakspeare.

We do lock
Our former sample in our strong-barr'd gates. Shakspeare.

Then seek to know those things which make us blest,
And having found them, lock them in thy breast. Denham.

The frighted dame
The log in secret lock'd. Dryden.

If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those within is infringed, and all their acts are as void as if they were locked in. Dryden.

One conduces to the poet's completing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle. Dryden.

The father of the gods
Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,
And lock'd 'em safe within, oppress'd with mountain loads. Dryden.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less? Locke.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them. Swift.

Your wine lock'd up,
Plain milk will do the feat. Pope.

3. To close fast.

Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes. Gay.

To LOCK, lók. v. n.

1. To become fast by a lock.

For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,
Doubly parted it did lock and close,
That when it locked, none might through it pass. Spenser.

2. To unite by mutual insertion.

Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface; as much of their surfaces touches as makes them cohere. Boyle.

ЛО́СКЕР, lók'kúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from lock.]

Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.

I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat. Robinson Crusoe.

ЛО́СКЕТ, lók'kit.⁹⁹ n. s. [loquet, French.]

A small lock; any catch or spring to fasten a necklace, or other ornament.

Where knights are kept in narrow lists,
With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists. Hudibras.

ЛО́СКИНА, lók'krúm.⁹⁸ n. s. A sort of coarse linen. Hanmer.

The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockran about her reeky neck,
Clamb'ring the walls to eye him. Shakspeare.

ЛО́СКРОН, lók'krúm. n. s. A kind of ranunculus.

ЛО́КОМО'ТИОН, ló-kò-mò'shún. n. s. [locus and motus, Latin.] Power of changing places.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet. Brown.

ЛО́КОМО'ТИВЪ, ló-kò-mó'tív. adj. [locus and moveo, Latin.] Changing place; having the power of removing or changing place.

I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham.

In the night too oft he kicks,
Or shows his locomotive tricks. Prior.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular, organical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks. Arbuthnot.

ЛО́КУСТ, lók'kúst. n. s. [locusta, Latin.]

A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africk, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Calmet.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast. Exodus.

Air replete with the steams of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers; such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts. Arbuthnot.

ЛО́КУСТ-ТРЕЕ, lók'kúst-tréé. n. s.

The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pincial, which afterwards becomes an unieapsular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance. Miller.

ЛО́ДЕСТАР, lóde'stár. See LOADSTAR.

ЛО́ДЕСТОНЕ, lóde'stóné. See LOADSTONE.

ТО ЛОДЖЕ, lódje. v. a. [logian, Saxon; loger, French.]

1. To place in a temporary habitation.

When he was come to the court of France, the king stiled him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him, and accommodated him in great state. Bacon.

2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with a harbour for the night.

Ev'ry house was proud to lodge a knight. Dryden.

3. To place; to plant.

When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear,
The desprate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Otway.

He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast,
That had so often to his own been prest. Addison.

In viewing again the ideas that are lodged in the memory, the mind is more than passive. Locke.

4. To fix; to settle.

By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd. Shakspeare.

I can give no reason,
More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio. Shakspeare.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodg'd it, and noted it, in some particulars. Bacon.

6. To harbour or cover.

The deer is lodg'd, I 've track'd her to her covert;
Rush in at once. Addison.

7. To afford place to.

The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne.

8. To lay flat.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders' heads. Shakspeare.

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land. Shakspeare.

ТО ЛОДЖЕ, lódje. v. n.

1. To reside, to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie. Shakspeare.

Something holy lodges in that breast,
And with these raptures moves the vocal air
To testify his hidden residence. Milton.

And dwells such rage in softest bosoms then?
And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shakspeare.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspeare.

Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.

My lords
And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night. Shakspeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people! Jer.
Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way. Taylor.

4. To lie flat.

Long cone wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildew'd. Mortimer.

ЛОДЖЕ, lódje. n. s. [logis, French.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.

He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges. Sidney.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakspeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shakspeare.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood,
Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
The God that made both sky, air, earth. Milton.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited family. Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a great-er; as, the porter's lodge.

ЛО́ДЖЕМЕНТЪ, lódje'mént. n. s. [from lodge; logement, French.]

1. Disposition or collocation in a certain place.

The curious lodgement and inosulation of the auditory nerves. Derham.

2. Accumulation; collection.

An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter. Sharp.

3. Possession of the enemy's work.

The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other. Addison.

ЛО́ДЖЕР, lódje'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now, I scorn the term, nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. Shakspeare.

There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers. Graunt.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowd-ed with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families. Harvey.

The gentlewoman begged me to stop; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad. Tattler.

Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and fivepence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. Arbuthnot.

2. One that resides in any place.

Look in that breast, most dirty deer;

Say, can you find but one such lodger there? Pope.
LODGING, lódjé'ing.⁴²⁰ n. s. [from lodge.]
 1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.
 I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
 And let him find it. Shaksp.
 Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.
 At night he came
 To his known lodgings, and his country dame. Dryden.
 He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. Addison.
 Wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow. Pope.
 2. Place of residence.
 Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,
 The nest of love, the lodging of delight,
 The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure,
 The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright. Spenser.
 3. Harbour; covert.
 The hounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.
 4. Convenience to sleep on.
 Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray.
LOFR, lóft. n. s. [loft, Welsh; or from lift.]
 1. A floor.
 Eutychus fell down from the third loft. Acts.
 There is a traverse placed in a loft above. Bacon.
 2. The highest floor.
 To lull him in a slumber soft,
 A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
 And ever drizzling rain upon the loft,
 Mixt with a murmuring wind. Spenser.
 3. Rooms on high.
 Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
 And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder. Milton.
 A weasel once made shift to sink
 In at a corn loft through a chink. Pope.
LOFTILY, lóft'è'le. adv. [from lofty.]
 1. On high; in an elevated place.
 2. Proudly; haughtily.
 They speak wickedly concerning oppression; they speak loftily. Psalms.
 3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.
 My lowly verse may loftily arise,
 And lift itself unto the highest skies. Spenser.
LOFTINESS, lóft'è'nés. n. s. [from lofty.]
 1. Height; local elevation.
 2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.
 Three poets in three distant ages born,
 The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
 The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.
 3. Pride; haughtiness.
 Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Collier.
LOFTY, lóft'è. adj. [from loft or lift.]
 1. High; hovering; elevated in place.
 Cities of men with lofty gates and tow'rs. Milton.
 See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
 Sec nodding forests on the mountains dance. Pope.
 2. Elevated in condition or character.
 Thus saith the high and lofty One. Isaiah.
 3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.
 He knew
 Himself to sing and build the lofty rhimc. Milton.
 4. Proud; haughty.
 The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled. Isaiah.
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
 But to those men that sought him, sweet as summer. Shaksp.
 Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
 A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden.

LOG, lóg. n. s. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lizzan, Sax. to lie; Junius, from logge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin, lignum, is the true original.]
 1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.
 Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injoin'd to pile. Shaksp.
 The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.
 Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
 An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
 And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
 And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
 2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. Calmet.
 A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Leviticus.
LOGARITHMS, lóg'á-ríthmz. n. s. [logarithme, French; λόγος and ἀριθμός.]
Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchison, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one; for instance,
 0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
 1 2 4 8 16 32 64 128 256 512
 Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dissecting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trisecting them for the cube, and so on. Harris.
LOGGATS, lóg'gáts.⁸⁴ n. s.
Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kittle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. Hanmer.
 Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them. Shaksp.
LOGGERHEAD, lóg'gúr'héd. n. s. [loggc, Dut. stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thick-skull.
 Where hast been, Hal?
 —With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. Shaksp.
 Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires? L'Estrange.
 To fall to LOGGERHEADS, lóg'gúr'hédz. }
 To go to LOGGERHEADS, lóg'gúr'hédz. }
 To scuffle; to fight without weapons.
 A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads, which should be his master. L'Estrange.
LOGGERHEADED, lóg'gúr'héd'éd. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; doltish.
 You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what! no attendance? Shaksp.
LOGICK, lód'jik. n. s. [logique, Fr. logica, Lat. from λόγος.] The art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts.
 Talk logick with acquaintance,
 And practise rhetorick in your common talk. Shak.
 By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.
 Here foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound,
 There stript fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground. Pope.
LOGICAL, lód'jik-ál. adj. [from logick.]
 1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.
 The heretick complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hooker.
 Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden.
 We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.
 2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.
 A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. Spectator.
LOGICALLY, lód'jè-kál-è. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.
 How can her old good man
 With honour take her back again?
 From hence I logically gather,
 The woman cannot live with either. Prior.
LOGICIAN, ló-jísh'ún. n. s. [logician, Fr. logicus, Lat.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick.
 If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.
 If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. Addison.
 Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
 Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
 Came whip and spur. Pope.
 A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. Swift.
 The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author. Baker.
LOGMAN, lóg'mán.⁸⁸ n. s. [log and man.]
 One whose business is to carry logs.
 For your sake
 Am I this patient logman. Shaksp.
LOGOMACHY, ló-góm'á-kè.⁵¹⁸ n. s. [λογομαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.
 Foreed terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a mere kind of sophistry and logomachy. Hovel.
LOGWOOD, lóg'wú'd. n. s.
Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. Hill.
 To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. Peucham.
LOHOCK, ló'hók. n. s.
Lohock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called elegmas, lambatives, or linctuses. Quincy.
Lohocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venesection repeated. Wiseman.
LOIN, lóin.²⁹⁹ n. s. [llwyn, Welsh.]
 1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.
 2. Loins; the reins.
 My face I'll grime with filth,
 Blanket my loins. Shaksp.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins! Shakspeare.
Virgin mother, hail!

High in the love of Heav'n! yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
Of God most high. Milton.

A multitude! like which the populous north
Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danav, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south. Milton.

To LO'ITER, lô'ê'tûr.²⁰⁹ v. n. [loteren, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. Shakspeare.
Whence this long delay?

You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away. Dryden.
Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. Locke.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity. Rogers.

LO'ITERER, lô'ê'tûr-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from loiter.]
A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry.
And daily to loiterers have a good eye. Tusser.
The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. Hayward.

Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?
Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd,

To search if thou wert come. Otway.
Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. More.

Ever listless loit'ers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. Pope.

To LOLL, lôl.⁴⁰⁸ v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me. Shakspeare.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakspeare.

Close by a softly murr'ring stream,
Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. Hudibras.
To loll on couches, rich with citron beds.

And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dryden.
Void of care he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his business to be done by fate. Dryden.

But wanton now, and lolling at our ease,
We suffer all the invet'rate ills of peace. Dryden.
A lazy, lolling sort
Of ever listless loit'ers. Dunciad.

2. To hang out: used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet. Dryd.
With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd,
And with his lolling tongue assay'd the taste. Dryd.

To LOLL, lôl. v. a. To put out: used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadst thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when splay mouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden.

By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,

Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden.

LOMP, lômp.¹⁶⁶ n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LONE, lône. adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Here the lone hour a blank of life displays. Savage.

Thus vanish sceptres, coronets, and balls,
And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls. Pope.

2. Single; not conjoined or neighbouring to others.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

LO'NELINESS, lône'lê-nês. n. s. [from lone- ly.]

1. Solitude; want of company.

The huge and sportful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody since Daiphantus was lost. Sidney.

2. Disposition to solitude.

I see
The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears head. Shakspeare.

LO'NELY, lône'lê. adj. [from lone.]

1. Solitary.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shaksp.

Why thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd in your lonely cell. Dryden.

2. Addicted to solitude.

When, fairest princess,
You lonely thus from the full court retire,
Love and the graces follow to your solitude. Rowe.

LO'NENESS, lône'nês. n. s. [from lone.]

Solitude; dislike of company.

If of court life you knew the good,
You would leave loneliness. Donne.
I can love her who loves loneliness best. Donne.

LO'NESOME, lône'sûm. adj. [from lone.]

Solitary; dismal.

You either must the earth from rest disturb,
Or roll around the heavens the solar orb;
Else what a dreadful face will nature wear!
How horrid will these lonesome seats appear! Blackmore.

LONG, lông. adj. [long, Fr. longus, Lat.]

1. Not short: used of time.

He talk'd a long while, even till the break of day. Acts.
He was desirous to see him of a long season. Luke.

2. Not short: used of space.

Empress, the way is ready, and not long. Milton.

3. Having one of its geometrical dimensions in a greater degree than either of the other.

Death will not be long in coming, and the covenant of the grave is not shewed unto thee. Eccclus.

7. Tedious in narration.

Chief mastery to dissect,
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights. Milton.

Reduce, my muse, the wand'ring song,
A tale should never be too long. Prior.

8. Continued by succession to a great series.

But first a long succession must ensue. Milton.

9. [from the verb. To long.] Longing; desirous: or perhaps long continued, from the disposition to continue looking at any thing desired.

Praying for him, and casting a long look that way, he saw the galley leave the pursuit. Sidney.
By ev'ry circumstance I know he loves;
Yet he but doubts, and parlies, and casts out
Many a long look for succour. Dryden.

10. [In musick and pronunciation.] Protracted: as, a long note; a long syllable.

LONG, lông. adv.

1. To a great length in space.

The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
On which the planted grove and pensile garden grows. Prior.

2. Not for a short time.

With mighty barres of long-enduring brass. Fairfax.
When the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount. Exodus.

The martial Ancus
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Resum'd the long-forgotten shield. Dryden.

One of these advantages, which Corneille has laid down, is the making choice of some signal and long-expected day, whereon the action of the play is to depend. Dryden.

So stood the pious prince unmov'd, and long Sustain'd the madness of the noisy throng. Dryden.
The muse resumes her long-forgotten lays,
And love, restor'd, his ancient realm surveys. Dryden.

No man has complained that you have discoursed too long on any subject, for you leave us in an eagerness of learning more. Dryden.

Persia left for you
The realm of Candahar for dow'r I brought,
That long-contended prize for which you fought. Dryden.

It may help to put an end to that long-agitated and unreasonable question, whether man's will be free or no? Locke.

Heav'n restores
To thy fond wish the long-expected shores. Pope.

women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

4. Not soon.

Not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind. Acts.

5. At a point of duration far distant.

If the world had been eternal, those would have been found in it, and generally spread long ago, and beyond the memory of all ages. Tillotson.

Say, that you once were virtuous long ago?
A frugal, hardy people. Philips.

6. [for along; au long, Fr.] All along;
throughout: of time.

Them among
There sat a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. F. Queen.
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is eelchtrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, no witch bath pover to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time Shakspeare.
He fd me all my life long to this day. Genesis.

there are blunderbusses planted in every loophole, that go off at the squeaking of a fiddle. Dryden.

2. A shift; an evasion.

Needless, or needful, I not now contend, For still you have a loophole for a friend. Dryden.
LO'OPHOLED, lôôp'hôl'd.³⁵⁹ adj. [from loophole.] Full of holes; full of openings, or void spaces.

This uneasy loophol'd gaol, In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock, Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras.

LOORD, lôôrd. n. s. [loerd, Dutch; lourdant, French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevoux derives lourdant from Lorde or Lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortun'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw a Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dullness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.

Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord, And rekes much of thy swinke, That with fond terms and witless words To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser.

To LOOSE. ôôse. v. a. [tejan, Saxon.]

7. Vague; indeterminate; not accurate. It is but a loose thing to speak of possibilities, without the particular designs; so is it to speak of lawfulness, without the particular cases. Bacon.
 It seems unaccountable to be so exact in the quantity of liquor where a small error was of little concern, and to be so loose in the doses of powerful medicines. Arbutnot.

8. Not strict; not rigid. Because conscience, and the fear of swerving from that which is right, maketh them diligent observers of circumstances, the loose regard whereof is the nurse of vulgar folly. Hooker.

9. Unconnected; rambling. I dare venture nothing without a strict examination; and am as much ashamed to put a loose indigested play upon the publick, as to offer brass money in a payment. Dryden.

Vario spends whole mornings in running over loose and unconnected pages, and with fresh curiosity is ever glancing over new words and ideas, and yet treasures up but little knowledge. Watts.

10. Lax of body; not costive. What hath a great influence upon the health, is going to stool regularly: people that are very loose have seldom strong thoughts, or strong bodies. Locke.

11. Disengaged; not enslaved. Their prevailing principle is, to sit as loose from pleasures, and be as moderate in the use of them, as they can. Atterbury.

12. Disengaged from obligation: commonly with from; in the following line with of.

Now I stand Loose of my vow; but who knows Cato's thoughts? Addison.

13. Free from confinement. They did not let prisoners loose homeward. Isa.
 Wish the wildest temper loose; That thrown again upon the coast, I may once more repeat my pain. Prior.

14. Remiss; not attentive.

15. To break LOOSE. To gain liberty. If to break loose from the conduct of reason; and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chusing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

Like two black storms on either hand, Our Spanish army and the Indians stand; This only space betwixt the clouds is clear, Where you, like day, broke loose from both appear. Dryden.

16. To let LOOSE. To set at liberty; to set at large; to free from any restraint.

And let the living bird loose into the open field. Leviticus.

We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity sits heavy upon us. Taylor.

In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

If improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made surfeit of it. Locke.

LOOSE, lôôse. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liberty; freedom from restraint. Come, and forsake thy cloying store, And all the busy pageantry That wise men scorn, and fools adore Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poor. Dryden.

Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out.
Shaksp.

2. To decline; to fail.

Wisdom in discourse with her
Loses discountenance'd, and like folly shews. Millon.

LO'SEABLE, lóðz'á-bl.⁴⁰⁶ adj. [from lose.]
Subject to privation.

Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it,
be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general,
and not loseable by them. Boyle.

LO'SEL, ló'zil. n. s. [from loþian, to perish.] A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow. Obsolete.

Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

A losel wandering by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Fairy Queen.

Be not with work of losels wit defam'd,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hubberd.

By Cambridge a townc I do know,
Whose losses by losels doth shew
More heree than is needful to tell. Tusser.

A gross hag!
And, losel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shaksp.

LOSER, lóðz'úi.⁹⁸ n. s. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope: the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shak.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor.

It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief:
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief.
Dryden.

Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South.

Loss, lós. n. s. [from lose.]

1. Detriment; privation; diminution of good: the contrary to gain.

The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hooker.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Ecclesiasticus.

The abatement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss.
Locke.

Lo'UDNESS, lôud'nès. n. s. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or fierceness of clamour.
 Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of provocation: it would not have sallied out into complaint or loudness. South.

To LOVE, lûv. v. a. [lupian, Sax.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.
 Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
 —It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
 It is to be made all of faith and service;
 It is to be all made of fantasy,
 All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
 All adoration, duty, and obedience;
 All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
 All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakspeare.
 I could not love I'm sure
 One who in love were wise. Cowley.
 The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.
 None but his brethren he, and sisters knew,
 Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,
 And much above myself i lov'd them too. Cowley.

 The dewie leaves among! Spenser.
 While idly I stood looking on,
 I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shaksp.
 My tales of love were wont to weary you;
 I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shaksp.
 I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
 That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
 Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shaksp.
 What need a vermil-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn? Millon.
Love quarrels off in pleasing concord end,
 Not wedlock treachery, endang'ring life. Millon.
 A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier.
 You know y' are in my power by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
 And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.
 Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
 And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.
 2. Kindness; good-will; friendship
 What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
 My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
 That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakspeare.

Low, ló. The termination of local names.

Low, loe, comes from the Saxon hleap, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick hlain is a monument or harrow. Gibson.

To Lo'WER, ló'úr. v. a. [from low.]

1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.

As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the ascribed power. Prior.

2. To suffer to sink down.

When water issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall. Woodward.

3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.

The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money. Locke.

Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest. Child on Trade.

To Lo'WER, ló'úr. v. n. To grow less; to fall; to sink.

The present pleasure,
By revolution, low'ring does become
The opposite of itself. Shaksp.

To Lo'WER, ló'úr. v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word: if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch lorren, to look askance: the ow sounds as ou in hour; in the word lower, when it means to grow, or make low, the ow sounds as o in more.]

1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shaksp.
The low'ring spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes. Addison.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.
If on Swithin's feast the welkin lours,
And ev'ry pethouse streams with hasty show'rs,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain. Gay.

2. To frown; to pout; to look sullen.

There was Diana when Actæon saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to set forth tears of anger. Sidney.

He mounts the throne, and Juno took her place,
But sullen discontent sat low'ring on her face,
Then impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

Lo'WER, ló'úr. n. s. [from the verb.]

2. Meanly; without dignity.

Lo'WLINESS, ló'lè-nès. n. s. [from lowly.]

1. Humility; freedom from pride.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shak.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakspere.

With lowliness majestick, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose. Milton.

If with a true christian lowliness, of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust. Atterbury.

2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in that lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose. Spenser.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice; it is my duty to give testimony to virtue. Dryden.

Lo'WLY, ló'lè. adj. [from low.]

1. Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart. Mathew.

He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad: we on our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death. Bacon.

With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilionus began. Dryden.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a nature so much superior to our own! Rogers.

2. Mean, wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims. Pope.

3. Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see. Dryden.

Lo'WLY, ló'lè. adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.

I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught;
I know my business is but to the court. Shakspere.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspere.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heav'n is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wise:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being. Milton.

Another erowd
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd. Pope.

Lo'WN, lóón. n. s. [liun, Irish; lo n, Dut. a stupid drone.] A scoundrel; a rascal. Not in use.

King Stephen was a worthy peer,

To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakspere.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness of style or sentiment.

His stile is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lowness, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors. Dryden.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politick a king as his father. Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection.

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person. Swift.

Lo'WTHOUGHTED, ló-thàwt'éd. adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts withheld from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow-minded.

Above the smook and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton.

Oh grace scene! Oh virtue heav'nly fair!
Divine oblation of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality! Pope.

Lo'WSPIRITED, ló-spí'rit-éd. adj. [low and spirit.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspirited moped creature. Locke.

LoXODRÓMICK, lók-sò-dróm'ík. n. s. [λοξός and δρόμος.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them; hence the table of rhombs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick. Harris.

Lo'YAL, ló'é'ál. adj. [loyal, Fr.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloster's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot. Shak.
The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties. Knolles.

Loyal subjects often seize their prince,

Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.

Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail, wedded love! by thee

Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure. Milton.

There Laodamia with Evadne moves,

Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves. Dryden.

Lo'YALIST, lô'âl-list. n. s. [from loyal.]

Lo'YALLY, lô'âl-lé. adv. [from loyal.]

With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

The circling year I wait, with ample stores,

And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;

Then by my realms due homage would be paid,

For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd. Pope.

Lo'YALTY, lô'âl-tè. n. s. [loialté, Fr.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make

Our faith mere folly; yet he that can endure

To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,

Does conquer him that did his master conquer.

Shakspeare.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required. Clarendon.

Abdiel faithful found

Unshaken, unsecur'd, unterrify'd,

His loyalty he kept. Milton.

For loyalty is still the same,

Whether it win or lose the game;

True as the dial to the sun,

Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

Lo'ZENGE, lôz'zènjè. n. s. [lozenge, Fr.]

Of unknown etymology.]

1. A rhomb.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or lozenge. Wotton.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

A lazy sturdy fellow.

Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbers

Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

LUBBER, lùb'bùr.^{ss} n. s. [Of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbed, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat bulky losel; a booby.

For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,

And lingering lubbers loose many a penie. Tusser.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath. Carew.

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,

As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,

And great Troy shrinking. Shakspeare.

A notable lubber thou reportest him to be. Shak.

Tell how the drudging goblin sweat;

His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,

That ten day labourers, could not end;

Then lies him down the lubber send. Milton.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,

Than did your lubber state mankind bestride. Dryd.

How can you name that superannuated lubber?

Congreve.

LUBBERLY, lùb'bùr-lé. adj. [from lubber.]

Lazy and bulky.

I came to Eton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy. Shakspeare.

LUBBERLY, lùb'bùr-lé. adv. Awkwardly;

bricus, Catin; lubricité, French.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.

2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature;

the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation. Ray.

3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniencies in any modification. More.

He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconstancy of human affairs, and the lubricity

of his subject. Glanville.

A state of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune. L'Estrange.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.

From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided. Dryden.

LUBBRICK, lùb'brik. adj. [lubricus, Lat.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.

A throng

Of short thick sobs, whose thund'ring volleys float

And roul themselves over her lubrick throat

In panting murmurs. Crashaw.

deep and lubrick waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulph of fatality. Wotton.

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]

Why were we hurry'd down

This lubrick and adult'rate age;

Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,

T' increase the steaming ordures of the stage? Dry.

LUBRICOUS, lùbrè-kùs. adj. [lubricus,

Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth.

The parts of water being voluble and lubricous

as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it. Woodward.

2. Uncertain.

The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them,

the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions.

Glanville.

LUBRIFICA'TION, lù-brè-fè-ká'shùn. n. s.

[lubricus and facio, Lat.] The act of

They give the dozen white luces in their coat.

Shakspeare.

LU'CENT, lù'sènt. adj. [lucens, Latin.]

Shining; bright; splendid.

I meant the day-star should not brighter rise,

Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat. Ben Jonson.

A spot like which perhaps

Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb,

Through his glaz'd optick tube yet never saw. Milton.

LU'CCERN, lù'sèrn. n. s. [medica.] An herb remarkable for quick growth.

LU'CID, lù'sid. adj. [lucidus, Lat. lucide,

French.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd;

Livelier than Melibœan. Milton.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light. Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation

as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm. Newton.

The pearly shell its lucid globe misfold,

And Phœbus warm the rip'ning ore to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the fertile banks,

Of Abbana and Phaphar, lucid streams. Milton.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. Gulliver's Travels.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect;

not darkened with madness.

The long dissensions of the two houses, which,

although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,

Strike through and make a lucid interval;

But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,

His rising fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired he would please to let me see his book. Tattler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that,

at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience. Bentley.

LU'CIDITY, lù-sid'è-tè. n. s. [from lucid.]

Splendour; brightness. Dicit.

LUCIFEROUS, lù-sif'fêr-ûs.⁵¹⁹ adj. [lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser.

Farewel, good, luck go with thee. Shakspeare.
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me, that rebellion had ill luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. Shakspeare.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent. Temple.

Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat, but all, it seems, who had the luck to eat, swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat. Tate.

LUCILLY, lûk'ké-lé. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form. Dryden.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications. Addis.

LUCINESS, lûk'ké-nés. n. s. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding. Locke.

LUCLESS, lûk'lés. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser.

Never shall my thoughts be base,
Though luckless, yet without disgrace. Suckling.
What else but his immoderate lust of pow'r,
Prayers made and granted in a luckless hour? Dryden.

LUCKY, lûk'ké. adj. [from luck; geluckig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky wight,
Dismay'd with that deformed, dismal sight,
Fled fast away. Spenser.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. Addison.

LUCRATIVE, lûk'krá-tiv. adj. [lucratus, Fr. lucratus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate: other contracts not so. Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture. Broome.

LUCRE, lû'kûr.⁴¹⁶ n. s. [lucrum, Lat.]

Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. Shakspeare.

They all the sacred mysteries of Heav'n
To their own vile advantages shall turn
Of lucre and ambition. Milton.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of pow'r, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death. Pope.

LUCRIFEROUS, lû-krif'fêr-ûs. adj. [lucrum and fero, Lat.] Gainful; profitable.

Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the costs and pains considered, was not lucriferous. Boyle.

LUCRIFICK, lû-krif'fik.⁵⁰⁹ adj. [lucrum and facio, Lat.] Producing gain.

LUCRATION, lûk-tá-shûn. n. s. [luctor, Lat.] Struggle; effort; contest.

To LUCUBRATE, lû'kû-bráte.⁶⁰³ v. a. [lucubror, Latin.] To watch; to study by night.

LUCUBRATION, lû-kû-brá'shûn.⁶³³ n. s. [lucubratio, Latin.] Study by candlelight; nocturnal study; any thing composed by night.

Thy lucubrations have been perused by several of our friends. Tatler.

LUCUBRATORY, lû'kû-brá-tûr-ê.⁶¹² adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubror, Latin.] Composed by candlelight.

You must have a dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend. Pope.

LUCULENT, lû'kû-lént.⁶⁰⁸ adj. [luculentus, Latin.]

1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer.

And luculent along
The purer rivers flow. Thomson.

2. Certain; evident.

They are against the obstinate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that christian religion hath. Hooker.

LUDICROUS, lû'dé-krûs. adj. [ludicer, Lat.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter.

Plutarch quotes this instance of Homer's judgment, in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Broome.

LUDICROUSLY, lû'dé-krûs-lé. adv. [from ludicrous.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

LUDICROUSNESS, lû'dé-krûs-nés. n. s. [from ludicrous.] Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

LUDIFICATION, lû-dé-fê-ká'shûn. n. s. [ludificor, Lat.] The act of mocking; or making sport of another. Dict.

LUFF, lûf. n. s. [In Scotland.] The palm of the hand.

To LUFF, lûf. v. n. [or loof.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind. Dryden.

To LUG, lûg. v. a. [aluccan, Saxon, to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand.]

1. To hale or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

Your gods! why this
Will lug your priests and servants from your sides. Shakspeare.

Thy hear is safe, and out of peril,
Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill. Hudibras.

When savage bears agree with bears,
Shall secret ones lug saints by th' ears? Hudibras.

See him drag his feeble legs about Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still Through hedges. Dryden.

Whose pleasure is to see a strumpet tear
A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair. Dryden.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one his share. Collier.

2. To LUG out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But buff and beltmen never know these cares,
No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;
They will be heard, or they lug out and out. Dryden.

To LUG, lûg. v. n. To drag; to come heavily: perhaps only misprinted for lags.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air, too damp and lugs along,
As if she were a body in a body. Dryden.

LUG, lûg. n. s.

1. A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchantable pilchards, tag worms, lugs, and little crabs. Carew.

2. [In Scotland.] An ear.

3. Lug, a land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd
For the large leap which Debon did compel Ceaulin to make, being eight lugs of ground. Spens.

LUGGAGE, lûg'gidje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from lug.] Any thing cumbrous and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back. Shakspeare.

What do you mean
To doat thus on such luggage? Shakspeare.

Think not thou to find me slack, or need
Thy politic maxims, or that cumbersonie
Luggage of war there shewn me. Milton.

How durst thou with that sullen luggage
O' th' self, old ir'n, and other baggage,
T' oppose thy lumber against us? Hudibras.

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the ruffling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked. Glanville.

A lively faith will hear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dryden.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LUGUBRIOUS, lûg-gû-brê-ûs. adj. [lugubre, French; lugubris, Latin.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many men's humiliations. Decay of Piety.

LUKEWARM, lûke'wârm. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is hleod; in old Frisick hlij; in Dutch lieuwe; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

All dreary corse, whose life away did pass,
 All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
 That from his wound yet welled fresh alas! Spenser.
 May you a better feast never behold,
 You knot of mouth friends: smoke and lukewarm
 water

Is your perfection. Shakspeare.
 Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to temperate hot and sharp humours.
Wise man.

Whence is it but from this attractive power, that water, which alone distils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue stedfast, it is an obedience so lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue
 In lukewarm patriots. Addison.

LU'KEWARMLY, lûke'wârm-lê. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth.

2. With indifference.

LU'KEWARMNESS, lûke'wârm-nês. n. s.
 [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Sprat.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL, lûl. v. a. [lulu, Danish; lallo,
 Latin.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down

A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play
 Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
 To lull him soft asleep, that by it lay. Fairy Queen.

Such sweet compulsion doth in musick lie,
 To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

These lull'd by nightingales embracing slept.
Milton.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find a foe it shall not be his hap,
 And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap. Milton.
 No more these scenes my meditations aid,
 Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
 And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson.

LU'LLABY, lûl'lâ-bi. n. s. [lallus, Latin;
Quem nutricum fuisse deum contendit
Turnebus, from lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest,
 Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.

Philomel, with melody,
 Sing in your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shakspr.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.

—Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakspeare.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still cry-

LUMBA'GO, lûm-bâ'gò. n. s. [lumbi, Lat.
 the loins.]

Lumbagos are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and errattick pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers.

LU'MBER, lûm'bûr.⁸⁸ n. s. [loma, ἡλο- μα, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering- the dirt of a house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated
 By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
 And thrown amongst the common lumber. Othway.

One son at home
 Concerns thee more than many guests to come.

If to some useful art he be not bred,
 He grows mere lumber, and is worse than dead.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,
 Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor. Dryden.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber. Grew.

The poring scholiasts mark;
 Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;
 A lumber-house of books in ev'ry head. Pope.

To LU'MBER, lûm'bûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Rollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. Rymer.

To LUMBER, lûm'bûr. v. n. To move heavily, as burdened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,
 Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood.

LU'MINARY, lû'mê-nâ-rê. n. s. [luminare,
 Latin; luminaire, French.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary
 Dispenses light from far. Milton.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island.

LUMINA'TION, lû-mê-nâ'shûn. n. s. [from lumen, Lat.] Emission of light. Dict.

LU'MINOUS, lû mê-nûs.⁸⁰³ adj. [lumineux,
 French.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate.

Its first convex divides
 The luminous inferior orbs inclos'd,
 From chaos. Milton.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bentley.

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
 Travelling east; and with her part averse
 From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton.

3. Shining; bright.

The most luminous of the prismatic colours are the yellow and orange; these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together. Newton.

LUMP, lûmp. n. s. [lompe, Dutch.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.

A wretch is pris'ner made;
 Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe

In morsels cut. Tate.

Ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
 Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-pint, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, when on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Locke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
 As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakspr.

Why might there not have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together?
Keil. v. Burne.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All men's honours
 Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
 Into what pinch he please. Shakspeare.

It is rare to find any of these metals pure: but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward.

4. The whole together; the gross.

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump.

Other epidemical vices are rife and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.

To LUMP, lûmp. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expences ought to be lumped together.

Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counter-poise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Addison.

LU'MPISH, lûmp'fish. n. s. [lumfi and fish.] A sort of fish.

LU'MPING, lûmp'ing.⁴¹⁰ adj. [from lumf.]
 Large; heavy; great. A low word.

Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth.

Arbutnot.

LU'MPISH, lûmp'pish. adj. [from lumf.]
 Heavy; gross; dull; unactive; bulky.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man,
 and therefore heavy and lumpish. Raleigh.

Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy. Shakspr.

Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may
 Be taken tardy, when they night-tricks play,
 Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.

Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast
 Is man, who yet wou'd lord it o'er the rest?
 Philosophers and poets vainly strove

In every age the lumpish mass to move. Dryden.

LU'MPISHLY, lûmp'pish-lê. adv. [from lumf.] With heaviness; with stupidity.

LU'MPISHNESS, lûmp'pish-nês. n. s. [from lumf.] Stupid heaviness.

LU'MPY, lûmp'ê. adj. [from lumf.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer.

L'UNACY, lù'ná-sé. n. s. [from luna, Lat. the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and curd is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too.

Your kindred shun your house,

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shaksp.

There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.

LUNAR, lù'nár. ⁹⁸ } adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunary, Latin.]

1. Relating to the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Raleigh.

Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go,

And view the ocean leaning on the sky;

From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,

And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

2. Being under the dominion of the moon.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon.

The figure of its seed much resembles a horse-shoe, which Baptist Porta had thought too low a signification, and raised the same into a lunary representation. Brown.

LUNARY, lù'nár-é. n. s. [lunaria, Latin; lunaire, Fr.] Moonwort.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue

With nine drops of the midnight dew,

From lunary distilling.

Drayton.

LUNATED, lù'ná-téd. adj. [from luna, Latin.] Formed like a half moon.

LUNATIC, lù'ná-tík. ⁹⁹ adj. [lunaticus, Lat.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms,

Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers,

Enforce their charity. Shaksp.

LUNATICK, lù'ná-tík. n. s. A madman.

The lunatick, the lover, and the poet.

Are of imagination all compact.

One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;

The madman. Shaksp.

I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Graunt's Bills.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,

The sot a hero, lunatick a king.

Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon a hospital for the reception of idiots and lunaticks. Swift.

LUNATION, lù'ná-shún. n. s. [lunaison, French; luna, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever. Holder.

LUNON, lúnsh. } n. s. [Minsherv

LUNcheon, lún'shún. } derives it from louja, Spanish; Skinner from kleinken, a small piece, Tcutonick. It probably comes from clutch or clunch.] As much food as one's hand can hold.

When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,

I slic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;

With crumbled bread I thick'n'd well the mess. Gay.

LUNE, lúne. n. s. [luna, Latin.]

1. Any thing in the shape of a half moon.

A troop of janizaries strew'd the field,

Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes, or squares,

Finn as they stood. Watts.

2. Fits of lunacy or frenzy; mad freaks.

The French say of a man fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes. Hanmer.

Bestrew them

These dangerous, unsafe lunes, i' th' king;

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office

Becomes a woman best. Shaksp.

3. A leash: as, the lune of a hawk.

LUNE'TTE, lù-nét'. n. s. [French.] A small half moon

Lunette is a covered place made before the court-

ine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fosses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six toises in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trevoeur.

LUNGS, lúngz. n. s. [lungen, Sax. long, Dutch.] The lights; the party by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,

That strength of speech is utterly denied me. Shaksp.

The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,

Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel. Dryden.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,

And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;

I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,

Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

LUNGED, lúng'd. ⁹⁹ adj. [from lungs.]

Having lungs, having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,

While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

LUNG-GROWN, lúng'gròne. adj. [lung and grown.]

The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harvey.

LUNGWORT, lúng'wúrt. n. s. [pulmonaria, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

LUNISOLAR, lù-nè-sò'lár. ⁹⁸ adj. [lunisolaire, French; luna and solaris, Latin.]

Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.

LUNT, lúnt. n. s. [lonte, Dutch.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.

LUPINE, lù'pín. ¹⁴⁰ n. s. [lupin, Fr. lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose em-palement rises the pale, which afterwards turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds:

the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.

When Protogenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peach.

Where stalks of lupines grew,

Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear

The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden.

LURCH, lúrtsh. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from l' ourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch;

ourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.

Will you now to peace incline,

And languish in the main design,

And leave us in the lurch. Denham.

But though thou'rt of a different church,

I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. l' Estrange.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is base to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbutn.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison.

To LURCH, lúrtsh. v. n. [loeren, Dutch, or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself sometimes leaving goodness on my left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shaksp.

2. To lie in wait: we now rather use lurk.

While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. l' Estrange.

To LURCH, lúrtsh. v. a. [lurcor, Latin.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business;

or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea;

And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,

He lurcht all swords o' th' garland. Shaksp.

God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South.

3. To steal privately; to filch; to pilfer.

LURCHER, lúrtsh'úr. ⁹³ n. s. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

His thefts some tradesman spies,

Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;

Whilst ev'ry honest tongue Stop thief resounds. Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Taller.

3. [lurco, Lat.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not used.

LURE, lúre. n. s. [lurre, French; lore, Dutch.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,

And, till she stoop, she must not be full gorg'd,

For then she never looks upon her lure. Shaksp.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fame and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon.

A great estate to an heir is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor forec can bend,

Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

A false'er Henry is, when Emma hawks;

With her of tarsels, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account

Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd

All her assaults, on worthier things intent? Milton.

Luxury

Held out her lure to his superiour eye,

And griev'd to see him pass contemptuous by.
Mudden.
 To LURE, lûre. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing.
Bacon.

To LURE, lûre. v. a. To attract; to entice; to draw.

As when a flock Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote, Against the day of battle, to a field Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd With scent of living eareses.
Milton.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lur'd on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour, he would provide for as many days as he could.
Temple.

Should you lure From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook, Believes you then to ply your finest art,
Thomson.
 Volums on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,

[machinatio, Latin; machination, Fr. from machinate.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you misearry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Shaksp.

O from their machinations free
That would my guiltless soul betray,
From those who in my wrongs agree,
And for my life their engines lay! Sandys.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Milton.

How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry. Sprat.

MACHIN'E, mâ-shêèn'.¹³² n. s. [machina, Lat. machine, Fr.] This word is pronounced masheen.

1. Any complicated work in which one part contributes to the motion of another.

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials. Burnet.

In a watch's fine machine,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary pow'r
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side,
Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryden.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

MACHINERY, má-shéén'ér-é.¹¹² n. s. [from machine.]

1. Enginery; complicated workmanship; self-moved engines.

2. The machinery signifies that part which the deities, angels, or demons, act in a poem. Pope.

MA'CHINIST, má-shéén'ist. n. s. [machineste, Fr. from machina, Lat.] A constructor of engines or machines.

MA'GILENCY, má's'é-lén-sé. n. s. [from macilent.] Leanness. Dict.

MA'GILENT, má's'é-lént. adj. [macilentus, Latin.] Lean.

MA'CKEREL, mák'kér-íl. n. s. [mackerel, Dut. maquereau, Fr.] A sea fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whitening and mackerel. Cureo.

Law ordered that the Sunday should have rest; And that no nymph her noisy food should sell. Except it were new milk or mackerel. King.

Sooner shall cats disport in water clear,
And speckled mackerels graze the meadows fair,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.

MACKEREL-GALE, mák'kér-íl-gále, seems to be, in Dryden's cant, a strong breeze; such, I suppose, as is desired to bring mackerel fresh to market.

They put up every sail,
The wind was fair, but blew a mackerel-gale. Dryden.

MA'GROCOSM, má'krò-kòzm. n. s. [macrocosme, Fr. μακρός and κοσμος.] The whole world, or visible system, in opposition to the microcosm, or world of man.

MACTA'TION, mák-tá'shùn. n. s. [mactatus, Latin.] The act of killing for sacrifice.

MA'GULA, mák'kù-lá. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A spot.
And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or maculae greater than usual, and by that means be darkened. Burnet.

2. [In physick.] Any spots upon the skin, whether those in fevers or scorbutick habits.

To MA'GULATE, mák'kù-láte. v. a. [maculo, Lat.] To stain; to spot.

MACULA'TION, mák-kù-lá'shùn. n. s. [from maculate.] Stain; spot, taint.

I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart. Shaksp.

MA'GULE, mák'úle. n. s. [macula, Latin.] A spot; a stain.

MAD, mád. adj. [gemaad, Saxon; matto, Italian.]

1. Disordered in the mind; broken in the understanding; distracted; delirious without a fever.

Alack, sir, he is mad.
—'Tis the time's plague when madmen lead the blind. Shaksp.

This musick mads me, let it sound no more;
For though it have help'd madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad. Shak.

Cupid, of thee the poets sung,
Thy mother from the sea was sprung,
But they were mad to make thee young. Denham.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad folks they break their locks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can. Taylor.

A bear, enraged at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad into the bee-garden, and over-tur'd all the hives. L'Estrange.

Madmen ought not to be mad;
But who can help his frenzy? Dryden.
But some strange graces and odd flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

2. Expressing disorder of mind.

His gestures fierce
He mark'd, and mad demeanour when alone. Milt.

3. Overrun with any violent or unreasonable desire: with on, after, of, perhaps better for, before the object of desire.

It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Jeremiah.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatick writing. Dryden.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons. Rymer.

4. Enraged; furious.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havoc of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them. Decay of Piety.

To MAD, mád. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to enrage.

O villain! cried out Zelmane, *madd*ed with finding an unlooked-for rival. Sidney.

This will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. Shakspere.

This mads me, that perhaps ignoble hands
Have overlaid him, for they could not conquer. Dryden.

To MAD, mád. v. n. To be mad; to be furious.

The madding wheels
Of brazen chariots rag'd: dire was the noise
Of conflicts! Milton.

She, mixing with a throng
Of madding matrons, bears the bride along. Dryd.

MAD, mád. n. s. [maðu, Sax.] An earth-worm. Ainsworth.

MA'DAM, mád'ám.⁸⁸ n. s. [ma dame, Fr. my dame.] The term of compliment used in address to ladies of every degree. It was anciently spoken as in French, with the accent upon the last syllable.

Certes, madam, ye have great cause of plaint. Spenser.

Madam, once more you look and move a queen! Philips.

MA'DBRAIN, mád'bráne. } adj. [mad
MA'DBRAINED, mád'brán'd. } and brain.]

Disordered in the mind; hotheaded.

I give my hand oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a madbrain rudesby, full of spleen. Shaksp.

He let fall his book,

And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
This madbrain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book. Shakspere.

MA'DCAP, mád'káp. n. s. [mad and cap]; either taking the cap for the head, or alluding to the caps put upon distracted persons by way of distinction.] A madman; a wild hotbrained fellow.

That last is Biron, the merry madcap lord;
Not a word with him but a jest. Shakspere.

The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakspere.

To MADDEN, mád'd'n.¹⁰³ v. n. [from mad.]

To become mad; to act as mad
The dog-star rages, nay 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out;
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land. Pope.

To MA'DDEN, mád'd'n. v. n. To make mad.

Such *mad'n*ing draughts of beauty,
As for a while o'erwhelm'd his raptur'd thought. Thomson.

MA'DDER, mád'dúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [madepe, Sax.] A plant.

The flower of the madder consists of one single leaf, which is cut into four or five segments, and expanded at the top; the flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit, composed of two juicy berries closely joined together, containing seed for the most part hollowed like a navel; the leaves are rough, and surround the stalks in whorles. Miller.

Madder is cultivated in vast quantities in Holland: what the Dutch send over for medicinal use is the root, which is only dried; but the greatest quantity is used by the dyers, who have it sent in coarse powder. Hill.

MADE, máde.⁷⁶ The participle preterit of make.

Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest. John.

MADEFA'CTION, mád-dé-fák'shùn. n. s. [madefacio, Latin.] The act of making wet.

To all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

To MA'DEFY, mád'dé-fi. v. a. [madefacio, Latin.] To moisten; to make wet.

MA'DGEHOWLET, mádje'hòu-lét. n. s. [bubo.] An owl. Ainsworth.

MA'DHOUSE, mád'hòuse. n. s. [mad and house.] A house where madmen are cured or confined.

A fellow in a madhouse being asked how he came there? Why, says he, the mad folks abroad are too many for us, and so they have mastered all the sober people, and cooped them up here. L'Estrange.

MA'DLY, mád'lé. adv. [from mad.] Without understanding; furiously.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

MA'DMAN, mád'mán.⁸⁹ n. s. [mad and man.] A man deprived of his understanding.

They shall be like madmen, sparing none, but still sporting. 2 Esdras.

He that eagerly pursues any thing, is no better than a madman. L'Estrange.

He who ties a madman's hands, or takes away his sword, loves his person while he disarms his frenzy. South.

MA'DNESS, mád'nés. n. s. [from mad.]

1. Distraction; loss of understanding; perturbation of the faculties.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old limes again: he so buffets himself on the forehead, that any madness I ever yet beheld, seemed but tame-ness and civility to this distemper. Shaksp.

There are degrees of madness as of folly, the disorderly jumbling ideas together, in some more, some less. Locke.

2. Fury; wildness of passion; rage.

The power of God sets bounds to the raging of the sea, and restrains the madness of the people. King Charles.

He rav'd with all the madness of despair,
He roar'd, he beat his breast, and tore his hair. Dryden.

MADRIER, mād-rêrô'. n. s.

Madrier, in war, is a thick plank arm'd with iron plates, having a cavity sufficient to receive the mouth of the petard when charged, with which it is applied against a gate, or other thing intended to be broken down. Bailey.

MA DRIGAL, mād'drê-gâl. n. s. [madrigal, Spanish and French, from mandra, Lat. whence it was written anciently mandriale, Italian.] A pastoral song; any light airy short song.

A madrigal is a little amorous piece, which contains a certain number of unequal verses, not tied to the scrupulous regularity of a sonnet, or subtilty of an epigram: it consists of one single rank of verses, and in that differs from a canzonet, which consists of several strophes, which return in the same order and number. Bailey.

Waters, by whose falls
Birds sing melodious madrigals. Shaksp.
His ariful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal. Milton.

Their tongue is light and trifling in comparison of the English; more proper for sonnets, madrigals, and elegies, than heroick poetry. Dryden.

MA'DWORT, mād-wûrt. n. s. [mad and wort.] An herb.

MÆRE, mære. adv. It is derived from the Saxon mep, famous, great, noted: so ælmere is all famous; æthelmere, famous for nobility. Gibson's Camden.

To MA'FFLE, máf'fl. v. n. To stammer. Ainsworth.

MA'FFLER, máf'fl-ûr. n. s. [from the verb.] A stammerer. Ainsworth.

MAGAZINE, mág-gâ-zêen'.¹¹² n. s. [magazine, Fr. from the Arabick machsan, a treasure.

1. A storehouse, commonly an arsenal or armoury, or repository of provisions.

If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and ammunitions. Raleigh.

Plain heroick magnitude of mind
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

Useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pope.
His head was so well stor'd a magazine, that nothing could be proposed which he was not master of. Locke.

2. Of late this word has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany called the Gentleman's Magazine, and published under the name of Sylvanus Urban, by Edward Cave.

MAGE, mādje. n. s. [magus, Lat.] A magician. Spenser.

MA'GGOT, mág'gût.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [magrod, Welsh; millepeda, Latin; mađu, Sax.]

1. A small grub, which turns into a fly. Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots. Ray.

From the sore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth.

2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy. A low word.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shaksp.

To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unite them and their diff'rent maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots. Hudibras.

She pricked his maggot, and touch'd him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.

MA'GGOTTINESS, mág'gût-tê-nês. n. s. [from maggotty.] The state of abounding with maggots.

MA'GGOTTY, mág'gût-ê. adj. [from maggot.]

1. Full of maggots.

2. Capricious; whimsical. A low word.

To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggotty unsettled head, is as ridiculous as to think to write strait in a jumbling coach. Norris.

MA'GICAL, mād'jê-kâl. adj. [from magick.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.

I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shak.
They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.

By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambriek, upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler.

MA'GICALLY, mād'jê-kâl-ê. adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick; by enchantment.

In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring, magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.

MA'GICK, mād'jik.⁵⁴⁴ n. s. [magia, Lat.]

1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful: sorcery; enchantment.

She once being loof,
The noble ruin of her magick, Antony
Claps on his sea-wing. Shakspere.

What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives? Rogers.

2. The secret operations of natural powers.

The writers of natural magick attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse immaterial virtue into the part severed. Bacon.

MA'GICK, mād'jik. adj.

1. Acting or doing by powers superiour to the known power of nature; enchanted; necromantick.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick slights
Shall raise such artificial sights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakspere.

Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Granville.

2. Done or produced by magick.

And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magick structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.

MAGI'CIAN, mǎ-jish'ân.⁸⁸ n. s. [magician, Latin.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakspere.

An old magician, that did keep
Th' Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lists, makes calmest souls to grieve. Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.

MAGISTE'RIAL, mǎd-jis-tê-rê-âl. adj. [from magister, Lat.]

1. Such as suits a master.

Such a government is paternal, not magisterial. King Charles.

He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotick.

We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown.

Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words and magisterial looks for current payment. L'Estrange.

Those men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chymically prepared, after the manner of a magistery.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew.

MAGISTE'RIALLY, mǎd-jis-tê-rê-âl-ê. adv. [from magisterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.

A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon.

Over their pots and pipes, they claim and engross all wholly to themselves, magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new-modelling the world. South.

MAGISTE'RIALNESS, mǎd-jis-tê-rê-âl-nês. n. s. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.

Peremptoriness is of two sorts: the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Gov. of the Tongue.

MAGISTERY, mǎd'jis-têr-ê. n. s. [magisterium, Latin.]

Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes resin and resinous substances; as those of jalap, seamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, exposing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.

The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MA'GISTRACY, mǎd'jis-trá-sê. n. s. [ma-

gistratus, Lat.] Office or dignity of a magistrate.

You share the world, her magistracies, priest-hoods,
Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends.

Ben Jonson.

He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistracy, or undertaking the public offices of state.

Brown.

Some have disputed even against magistracy itself.

Atterbury.

Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government.

Clarissa.

MA'GISTRALLY, mǎd'jís-trál-è. adv. [magistralis, low Lat.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.

What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a licence to controul so magistrally.

Bramhall.

MA'GISTRATE, mǎd'jís-tràtè.⁹¹ n. s. [magistratus, Latin.] A man publicly invested with authority; a governour; an executor of the laws.

They chuse their magistrate!

And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece.

Shakespeare.

I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects.

Decay of Piety.

MAGNA'LITY, mǎg-nǎl'è-tè. n. s. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.

Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths.

Brown.

MAGNANIMITY, mǎg-nǎ-ním'è-tè. n. s. [magnanimité, French; magnanimus, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.

With deadly hue, an armed corse did lie,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity.

Spenser.

Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match.

Hooker.

They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears;
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd.

Milton.

Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame.

Swift.

MAGNA'NIMOUS, mǎg-nǎn'è-mûs. adj. [magnanimus, Lat.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume.

Milton.

All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage, and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits.

Milton.

Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work.

Grew.

MAGNA'NIMOUSLY, n.ǎg-nǎn'è-mûs-lè. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war.

Milton.

MA'GNET, mǎg-nèt. n. s. [magnes, Lat.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.

Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this.

Dryden.
It may be reasonable to ask, Whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron?

Locke.

MAGNE'TICAL, mǎg-nèt'tè-kál. } adj.
MAGNE'TICK, mǎg-nèt'tik.⁶⁰⁹ } [from magnet.]

1. Relating to the magnet.

Review this whole magnetic scheme.

Blackm.

Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it.

Newton.

2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water.

Newton.

3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.

The moon is magnetic of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture.

Bacon.

She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetic force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one.

Donne.

They, as they move tow'rd's his all-cheering lamp,
Turn swift their various motions, or arc turn'd
By his magnetic beam.

Milton.

4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resolute breast,
As the magnetic hardest iron draws.

Par. Reg.

MA'GNETISM, mǎg-nèt-izim. n. s. [from magnet.]

1. Power of the loadstone.

Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature.

Brown.

2. Power of attraction.

By the magnetism of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted.

Glanville.

MAGNIFI'ABLE, mǎg-nè-fi-á-bl.¹⁸³ adj. [from magnify.] Worthy to be extolled or praised. Unusual.

Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjectives from the multiplying conceits of men.

Brown.

MAGNI'FICAL, mǎg-níf'fè-kál. } adj. [magnifical, Latin.] Illustrious; grand; great; noble. Proper, but little used.

The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and glory, throughout all countries.

1 Chronicles.

Thrones, dominations, principdoms, virtues, pow'rs!

If these magnifick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular.

Milton.

O parent! these are thy magnifick deeds;
Thy trophies!

Milton.

MAGNI'FICENCE, mǎg-níf'fè-sènsè. n. s. [magnificentia, Lat.] Grandeur of appearance; splendour.

This desert soil

Wants not her hidden lustre, gems, and gold,
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence.

Milton.

Not Babylon
Nor great Aleairo, such magnificence
Equall'd in all her glories to inshrine
Belus or Scrapis, their gods; or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury.

Milton.

One may observe more splendour and magnificence in particular persons' houses in Genoa, than in those that belong to the public.

Addison.

MAGNI'FICIENT, mǎg-níf'fè-sènt. adj. [magnificus, Latin.]

1. Grand in appearance; splendid; pompous.

Man he made, and for him built

Magnificent this world.

Milton.

It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downward.

Locke.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauty I desery,
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie.

Addison.

2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to show.

If he were magnificent, he spent with an aspiring intent: if he spared, he heaped with an aspiring intent.

Sidney.

MAGNI'FICENTLY, mǎg-níf'fè-sènt-lè. adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.

Beauty a monarch is,
Which kingly power magnificently proves,
By crowds of slaves and peopled empires loves.

Dryden.

We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handy work.

Grew.

MA'GNIFICO, mǎg-níf'fè-kò. n. s. [Ital.] A grandee of Venice.

The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him.

Shakespeare.

MA'GNIFIER, mǎg-nè-fi-úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from magnify.]

The primitive magnifiers of this star were the Egyptians, who notwithstanding chiefly regarded it in relation to their river Nilus.

Brown.

2. A glass that increases the bulk of any object.

To MAGNIFY, mǎg-nè-fi.¹⁸³ v. a. [magnifico, Lat.]

1. To make great; to exaggerate; to amplify; to extol.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers.

Bacon.

2. To exalt; to elevate; to raise in estimation.

Greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant angels: thee that day
Thy thunder's magnify'd; but to create
Is greater than created to destroy.

Milton.

3. To raise in pride and pretension.

He shall exalt and magnify himself above every god.

Daniel.

If ye will magnify yourselves against me, know now that God hath overthrown me.

Job.

He shall magnify himself in his heart.

Daniel.

4. To increase the bulk of any object to the eye.

How these red globules would appear, if glasses could be found that could magnify them a thousand times more, is uncertain.

Locke.

By true reflection I would see my face;
Why brings the fool a magnifying glass?
The greatest magnifying glasses in the world are a man's eyes, when they look upon his own person.

Pope.

As things seem large which we through mists desery,
Dulness is ever apt to magnify.

Pope.

5. A cant word for to have effect.

My governess assured my father I had wanted for nothing; that I was almost eaten up with the green sickness: but this magnified but little with my father. Spectator.

MA'GNITUDE, mág'né-túde. n. s. [magnitudo, Lat.]

1. Greatness; grandeur.

He with plain heroick magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton.

2. Comparative bulk.

This tree hath no extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest. Raleigh.

Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion, and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgment. King Charles.

When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heav'n and earth consisting; and compute
Their magnitudes; this earth, a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milton.

Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

Conceive these particles of bodies to be so disposed amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be composed of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton.

MA'GPIE, mág'pí. n. s. [from pie, pica, Latin, and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot.] A bird sometimes taught to talk.

Augurs, that understood relations, have
By magpies and by thoughts, and rooks brought forth
The secret'st man of blood. Shakspeare.

Disimulation is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Peacham on Drawing.

So I have seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie hight,
Majestically stalk;
A stately worthless animal,
That plies the tongue and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shaksp.

I am not solely led,
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes. Shakspeare.
She employed the residue of her life to repairing of highways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidens. Carew.

Your deluded wife had been a maid;
Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
A maid she rose at the approaching day. Dryden.

Let me die, she said,
Rather than lose the spotless name of maid. Dryd.

2. A woman servant.

My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Shakspeare.
Old Tancred visited his daughter's bow'r;
Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
Then bless'd her kneeling, and her maids dismiss'd. Dryden.

Her closet and the gods share all her time,
Except when, only by some maids attended,
She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.

A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.

MA'IDENHOOD, má'd'n-hùd. }

1. Virginity; virginal purity; freedom from contamination.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood,
Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
Oh whither shall I fly; what sacred wood
Shall hide me from the tyrant? or what den? Fairfax.

She hated chambers, closets, secret mewes,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead. Fair.

Example, that so terrible shews in the wreck o.
maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shaksp

Maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
To aid a virgin. Milton.

2. Newness; freshness; uncontaminated state. This is now become a low word.

The devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs. Shaksp.

Some who attended with much expectation, at their first appearing have stained the maidenhead of their credit with some negligent performance. Wotton.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no joy's maidenhead,
Then spousal rites prejudge the marriage-bed. Crashaw.

The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit
Up to the ears in blood. Shakspeare.

2. To bundle in a wrapper.
I am thy married wife,
And thou a prince, protector of this land;
Methinks I should not thus be led along,
Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back. Shakspeare.

To MAIM, mâme. v. a. [maitan, Gothick, to cut off; mehaigner, to maim, old Fr. mehaina, Armorick; mancus, Latin.] To deprive of any necessary part; to cripple by loss of a limb: originally written from the French mayhem.
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shakspeare.
The multitude wondered when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, and the lame to walk;
and they glorified God. Matthew.

MAIM, mâme. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Privation of some essential part; lameness, produced by a wound or amputation.
Surely there is more cause to fear, lest the want thereof be a maim, than the use a blemish. Hooker.
Humphry, duke of Glo'ster, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a maim; two pulls at once;
A lady banish'd, and a limb lopt off! Shakspeare.

2. Injury; mischief.
Not so deep a maim,
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserved. Shakspeare.

3. Essential defect.
A noble author esteems it to be a maim in history,
that the acts of parliament should not be recited.
Hayward.

MAIM, mâme.²⁰² adj. [magne, old Fr. mag-nus, Lat.]
1. Principal; chief; leading.
In every grand or main publick duty which God requireth of his church, there is, besides that matter and form wherein the essence thereof consisteth, a certain outward fashion, whereby the same is in decent manner administered. Hooker.
There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased;
The which observ'd a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life. Shakspeare.
He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he had once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shakspeare.
There arose three notorious and main rebellions, which drew several armies out of England. Davies.
The nether flood,
Which now divided into four main streams,
Runs diverse. Milton.
I should be much for open war, O peers,
If what was urg'd

Main reason to persuade immediate war,
Did not dissuade me most. Milton.
All creatures look to the main chance, that is food and propagation. L'Estrange.

Our main interest is to be as happy as we can,
and as long as possible. Tillotson.

Nor tell me in a dying father's tone,
Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands;
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden.

Whilst they have busied themselves in various learning, they have been wanting in the one main thing. Baker.

Nor is it only in the main design, but they have followed him in every episode. Pope.

2. Mighty; huge; overpowering; vast.
Think, you question with a Jew,
You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main flood bate his usual height. Shak.
Seest thou what rage
Transports our adversary, whom no bounds,
Nor yet the main abyss,
Wide interrupt can hold? Milton.

3. Gross; containing the chief part.
We ourself will follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse. Shak.
All abreast
Charg'd our main battle's front. Shakspeare.

4. Important; forcible
This young prince, with a train of young noblemen and gentlemen, but not with any main army, came over to take possession of his new patrimony.
Davies.
That, which thou a right
Believ'st so main to our success, I bring. Milton.

MAIM, mânc. n. s.

church of England as to the main. King Charles.
These notions concerning coinage have, for the main, been put into writing above twelve months.
Locke.

3. The ocean; the great sea, as distinguished from bays or rivers.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare.
Where 's the king?
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea;
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change. Shakspeare.
He fell, and struggling in the main,
Cry'd out for helping hands, but cry'd in vain.
Dryden.

Say, why should the collected main,
Itself within itself contain?
Why to its caverns should it sometimes creep,
And with delightful silence sleep
On the lov'd bosom of its parent deep? Prior.

4. Violence; force.
He 'gan advance
With huge force, and importable main,
And towards him with dreadful fury prance. Spens.
With might and main,
He hasted to get up again. Hudibras.
With might and main they chas'd the murderous fox
With brazen trumpets and inflated box. Dryden.

5. [from manus, Lat.] A hand at dice.
Were it good,
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one cast; to set so rich a main
In the nice hazard of one doubtful hour? Shakspeare.
To pass our tedious hours away,
We throw a merry main. Earl Dorset's Song.
Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise:

That jumbled words, if fortune throw 'em,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

6. The continent.
In 1589 we turned challengers, and invaded the main of Spain. Bacon.

7. A hamper. Ainsworth.

MA'INLAND, mâne-lând'. n. s. [main and in the bodies of those strata, being interspersed amongst the matter, whereof the said strata mainly consist. Woodward.

2. Greatly; hugely.
It was observed by one, that himself came hardly to a little riches, and very easily to great riches: for when a man's stock is come to that, that he can expect the prime of markets, and over-come those bargains, which, for their greatness, are few men's money, and be partner in the industries of younger men, he cannot but increase mainly. Bacon.

MA'INMAST, mâne-mâst. n. s. [main and mast.] The chief or middle mast.
One dire shot,
Close by the board the prince's mainmast bore.

Theodosius having mann'd his soul with proper reflections, exerted himself in the best manner he could, to animate his penitent. Addison.

4. To tame a hawk.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her. Shaks.

5. To attend; to serve; to wait on as a man or servant.

Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels: I was never mann'd with agate till now. Shaks.

They distil their husbands land
In decoctions, and are mann'd
With ten empiricks in their chamber,
Lying for the spirit of amber. Ben Jonson.

6. To direct in hostility; to point; to aim.

Obsolete.

Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires. Shaks.

MA'NACLES, mán'ná-klz.¹⁰⁶ n. s. [manicles, French, manica, from manus, Latin.] Chain for the hands; shackles.

For my sake wear this glove;
It is a manacle of love. Shaks.

Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our streets. Shaks.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand. Ecclesiasticus.

The law good men count their ornament and protection; others, their manacles and oppression. King Charles.

To MA'NACLE, mán'ná-kl. v. a. [from the noun.] To chain the hands; to shackle.

We'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shaks.

I'll manacle thy neck and feet together. Shaks.
Is it thus you use this monarch, to manacle and shackle him hand and foot. Arbutnot and Pope.

To MA'NAGE, mán'idje.⁹⁰ v. a. [menager, Fr.]

1. To conduct; to carry on.

The fathers had managed the charge of idolatry against the heathens. Stillingfleet.

Let her at least the vocal brass inspire,
And tell the nations in no vulgar strain,
What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.

The less he had to lose, the less he car'd To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryden.

6. To treat with caution or decency: this is a phrase merely gallick, not to be imitated.

Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country, he made over his principality to France. Addison.

To MA'NAGE, mân'idje.⁹⁰ v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact.

Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant What their unerring wisdom sees thee want. Dryden.

MA'NAGE, mân'idje. n. s. [mesnage, menage, French.]

1. Conduct; administration.

To him put

The manage of my state. Shaksp.

This might have been prevented,

With very easy arguments of love,

Which now the manage of two kingdoms must

With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shaksp.

For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,

Expedient manage must be made, my liege,

Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shakespeare.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon.

The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South.

2. Use; instrumentality.

To think to make gold or quicksilver is not to be hoped; for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.

3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers

I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,

Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shaksp.

The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curvetto. Peacham.

4. Discipline; governance.

Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange.

MA'NAGEABLE, mân'idje-â-bl. adj. [from manage.]

1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.

The conditions of weapons and their improvement are, that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon.

Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton.

2. Governable; tractable.

MA'NAGEABLENESS, mân'idje-â-bl-nés. n. s. [from manageable.]

1. Adaptation to easy use.

This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.

2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.

MA'NAGEMENT, mân'idje-mént. n. s. [management, Fr.]

The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift.

2. Prudence; cunning practice.

Mark with what management their tribes divide; Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryd.

3. Practice; transaction; dealing.

He had great managements with ecclesiastics in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison.

MA'NAGER, mân'idje-âr.⁹⁵ n. s. [from manager.]

1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.

A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to bear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South.

The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.

An artful manager, that crept between His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.

2. A man of frugality; a good husband.

A prince of great aspiring thoughts; in the main, a manager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

MA'NAGERY, mân'idje-ré. n. s. [menagerie, French.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.

They who most exactly describe that battle, give so ill an account of any conduct or discretion in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon.

2. Husbandry; frugality.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Decay of Piety.

3. Manner of using.

No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloody skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Decay of Piety.

MANA'TION, mâ-nâ'shûn. n. s. [manatio, Latin.] The act of issuing from something else.

MANCHINE'EL tree, mânsh-in-èèl'trèè. n. s. [manzanilla, Lat.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West Indies, and grows to the size of an oak: its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun; for it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should fly into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippin; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature; cattle never shelter themselves, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Miller.

To MA'NCIPATE, mân'sé-pâte. v. a.

[mancipio, Latin.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less mancipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale.

MANCIPA'TION, mân-sé-pâ'shûn. n. s. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.

MA'NCIPLE, mân'sé-pl.¹⁰⁵ n. s. [manceps, Latin.] The steward of a community; the purveyor of a college.

Their manciple fell dangerously ill,

MANDI'LION, mân-dé'lé-ûn. n. s. [mandig-lione, Italian.] A soldier's coat. Skinner.

A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Ainsworth.

MA'NDRAKE, mân'drâke. n. s. [mandragoras, Latin, mandragôre, French.] A plant.

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the root is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotick of the most powerful kind. Hill.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shaksp.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep. Shaksp.

And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shaksp.

Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root. Donne.

MA'NDREL, mân'drîl. n. s. [mandrin, Fr.] An instrument to hold in the lathe the substance to be turned.

Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work that is to be turned; this mandrel is a shank, or pin-mandrel. Mozon.

To MA'NDUCATE, mân'dù-kâte. v. a. [manduco, Lat.] To chew; to eat.

MANDUCA'TION, mân-dù-kâ'shûn. n. s. [manducatio, Lat.] Eating.

Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.

As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore so must the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Taylor.

MANE, mâne. n. s. [maene, Dutch.] The hair which hangs down on the neck of horses, or other animals.

Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney.

To MA'NGLE, mâng'gl.⁴⁰⁵ v. a. [mangelen, Dutch, to be wanting; mancus, Lat.] To lacerate; to cut or tear piece-meal; to butcher.

Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that thus have mangled you? Shaksp.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.
Thoughts, my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exculcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton.

Mangle mischief. Don Sebastian.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat. Dryden.

What could swords or poisons, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame!
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read her own tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift.

Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and curtailing authors. Baker.

MA'NGLER, mâng'gl-ûr. n. s. [from man- gle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine;
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickel.

MA'NGO, mâng'gô. n. s. [mangostan, Fr.] A fruit of the isle of Java, brought to Europe pickled.

The fruit with the husk, when very young, makes a good preserve, and is used to pickle like mangoes. Mortimer.

What lord of old wou'd bid his cook prepare Mangoes, potargo, champignons, caviare? King.

MA'NGY, mâne'je. adj. [from mange.] Infected with the mange; scabby.

Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!
I swoon to see thee. Shaksp.

MANHA'TER, mân'hâte-ûr. n. s. [man and hater.] Misanthrope; one that hates mankind.

MAN'HOOD, mân'hûd. n. s. [from man.] 1. Human nature.

MANNISH, mân'nîsh. adj. [from man.]

Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.

Nature had proportioned her without any fault: yet altogether seemed not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a mannish countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of womankind, far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle. Sidney.

A woman, impudent and mannish grown, Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man. Shak.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore, Astride on horse-back hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryden.

MA'NOR, mân'nûr.⁴¹⁸ n. s. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; maner, Armorick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterwards this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, injoining them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these mansions and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to their king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowel.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had, Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands Is nothing left me. Shaksp.

Kinsmen of mine By this so sicken'd their estates, that never They shall abound as formerly. O many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them For this great journey. Shaksp.

MANQUELLER, mân-kwêl'lûr. n. s. [from man and cpellan, Saxon.] A murderer; a mankiller; a manslayer.

By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Sandys.

Before the sun,
Before the heav'ns thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton.
Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Estrange.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has wad'd
A silken web; and we'er shall fade
Its colours gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.

To MANTLE, mân'tl. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloak; to cover; to disguise.

As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so the rising seuses
Begin to chase the ign'rant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shaksp.

I left them
I th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins. Shaksp.

To MANTLE mân'tl. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinuer considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; she spreads her wings like a mantle.]

1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.

The swan with arched neck
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

2. To joy; to revel.

Of the rottenest maple wood burnt to ashes they make a strong lye. Mortimer.

MAPPERY, máp'pûr-é. n. s. [from map.] The art of planning and designing.

Hanmer.

The still and mental parts, That do contrive how many hands shall strike When fitness calls them on; They call this bedwork, mapp'ry, closet war. Shak.

TO MAR, mâr. v. a. [amýrran, Saxon.] To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage. Obsolete.

Loss is no shame, nor to be less than foe, But to be lesser than himself, doth mar Both loser's lot, and victor's praise also. F. Queen.

The master may here only stumble, and perchance fall in teaching, to the marring and maiming of the scholar in learning. Ascham.

When priests are more in words than matter, When brewers marr their malt with water. Shaksp.

I pray you marr no more trees with writing songs in their barks.—I pray you marr no more of my verses with reading them ill-favour'dly. Shaksp.

Beware thine honour, be not then disgrac'd, Take care thou marr not, when thou think'st to mend. Fairfax.

Aumarle became the man that all did marr, Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse. Daniel.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and marr's business, when great in dependencies. Bacon.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring; How mutually they link'd and folded are:

And hear how oft one disagreeing string The harmony doth rather make than marr. Davies.

Ire, envy, and despair, Marr'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd Him counterfeit. Milton.

Had she been there, untimely joy through all Men's hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral. Waller.

Mother! 'Tis much unsafe my sire to disobey: Not only you provoke him to your cost, But mirth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.

MARANA'THA, mâr-â-nâth'â. n. s. [Syrriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maran-tha, which is as much as to say, May'st thou be devoted to the greatest of evils, and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Calmet.

MARAS'MUS, mâr-râz'mûs. n. s. [μαρασμός, from μαρῆνω.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance. Quincy.

Pining atrophy, Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence. Milton.

A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Harvey.

MARBLE, mâr'bl. n. s. [marbre, Fr. marmor, Lat.]

1. Stone used in statutes and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble. Shaksp.

Thou marble hew'st, ere long to part with breath, And houses rear'st, unmindful of thy death. Sandys.
Some dry their corn infected with the brine,

Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine.
Dryden.
 The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water, being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble. Locke.

2. Little balls supposed to be of marble, with which children play.
Marbles taught them percussion, and the laws of motion; nutcrackers the use of the lever.
Arbutnot and Pope.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription: as, the Oxford marbles.
MA'RBLE, mâr'bl. adj.

1. Made of marble.
 Pygmalion's fate revert is mine,
 His marble love took flesh and blood;
 All that I worshipp'd as divine,
 That beauty, now 'tis understood,
 Appears to have no more of life,
 Than that whereof he fram'd his wife. Waller.

2. Variegated, or stained like marble.
 Shall I see far-fetch'd invention? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the pureness of my virgin mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word.
Sidney.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover.
Swift.
TO MA'RBLE, mâr'bl. v. a. [marbrer, Fr. from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.

Very well sleeked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion.
Boyle.

Marbled with sage the hard'ning cheese she press'd,
 And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd. Gay.

MARBLEHE'ARTED, mâr'bl-hârt-éd. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; insensible; hardhearted.

Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
 More hideous when thou shew'st thee in a child,
 Than the sea monster. Shaksp.

MA'RCASITE, mâr'kâ-site. ¹⁵⁵ n. s.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it.
Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures.
Woodward.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals.

Newton.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
 To ripen to a true metallic state. Garth.

MARCH, mâr'tsh. ³⁵² n. s. [from Mars.]
 The third month of the year.

March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars.
Peacham.

TO MARCH, mâr'tsh. v. n. [marcher, Fr. for varicare, Menage; from Mars, Junius.]

1. To move in military form.
 Well march we on,
 To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd. Shaksp.

He marched in battle array with his power against Arphaxad. Judges.

Maccabeus marched forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons. ² Maccabees.

My father, when some days before his death
 He ordered me to march for Utica, Wept o'er me. Addison.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.

Plexirtus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march. Sidney.

Doth York intend no harm to us,
 That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm? Shak.

Our bodies, ev'ry footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die. Davies.

Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee,
 When clad in rising majesty,
 Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills. Prior.

The power of wisdom march'd before.
Pope.

TO MARCH, mâr'tsh. v. a.

1. To put in military movement.
 Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendour of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers. Boyle.

2. To bring in regular procession.

March them again in fair array,
 And bid them form the happy day;
 The happy day design'd to wait
 On William's fame, and Europe's fate. Prior.

MARCH, mâr'tsh. n. s. [marche, Fr.]

1. Military movement; journey of soldiers.

These troops came to the army harassed with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and fought in their shirts. Bacon.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
 These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
 And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
 Their marches to begin, and thither lead. Blackm.

2. Grave and solemn walk.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
 The varying verse, the full resounding line,
 The long majestic march, and every divine. Pope.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.
Addison.

4. Signals to move.

The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly.
Knolles.

5. Marches, without singular. [marcu, Gothic; mearc, Saxon; marche, French.]

Borders; limits; confines.

They of those marches
 Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
 Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shaksp.

The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them.
Davies.

It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas. Davies.

MA'RCHER, mâr'tsh'ûr. ⁹⁸ n. s. [from mar- cheur. Fr.] President of the marches or borders.

Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.

MA'RCHIONESS, mâr'tshûn-ês. ²⁸⁸ n. s. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio.] The wife of a marquis.

The king's majesty
 Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke. Shaksp.

From a private gentlewoman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen, and now he intends to crown my innocence with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

The lady marchioness, his wife, solicited very diligently the timely preservation of her husband.

Clarendon.

MA'RCHPANE, mâr'tsh'pâne. n. s. [massépane, Fr.] A kind of sweet bread, or biscuit.

Along whose ridge such bones are met,
 Like comfits round in marchpane set. Sidney.

MA'RCID, mâr'sid. adj. [marcidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.

A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil;
 That to your marcid dying herbs assign'd,
 By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind.
Dryden.

MA'RCCOUR, mâr'kûr. ³¹⁴ n. s. [marcor, Latin.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the extenuation and marcour in others, it much abridgeth our days.
Brown.

A marcour is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure.
Harvey.

MARE, mâre. n. s. [mape, Saxon.]

1. The female of a horse.

A pair of courses born of heav'nly breed,
 Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire,
 By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
 Whose wounds conceiv'd a more than mortal birth. Dryden.

2. [from marâ, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mab, his merry queen, by night,
 Bestrides young folks that lie upright,
 In elder times the mare that height,
 Which plagues them out of measure. Drayton.

Muslirooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.
Bacon.

MA'RESCHAL, mâr'shâl. n. s. [mareschal, Fr. derived by Junius from mare, the female of a horse.] A chief commander of an army.

O William, may thy arms advance,
 That he may lose Dinant next year,
 And so be mareschal of France. Prior.

MA'RGARITE, mâr'gâ-rite. ¹⁵⁵ n. s. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French.] A pearl.

Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl. Peacham

MA'RGARITES, mâr'gâ-rites. n. s. [bellis.] An herb. Ainsworth.

MARGE, mârje. } n. s. [margo
MA'RGENT, mâr'jênt. } Latin; marge, MA'RGIN, mâr'jin. } French.]

1. The border; the brink; the edge; the verge.

He drew his flaming sword, and struck
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took. F. Queen.
Never since

Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
Or on the beached margent of the sea. Shaksp.

An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood. Dryden.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or filled with a short note.

As much love in rhyme,
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper
Write on both sides the leaf, margent and all. Shaksp.

Reconcile those two places, which both you and the margins of our Bibles acknowledge to be parallel. Hammond

He knows in law, nor text, nor margent. Swift.

3. The edge of a wound or sore.

All the advantage to be gathered from it is only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only. Sharp.

MA'RGINAL, mâr'jê-nâl. adj. [marginal,
Fr. from margin.] Placed, or written on the margin.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expoundeth them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

What remarks you find worthy of your ripper observation note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review. Watts.

MA'RGINATED, mâr'jê-nâ-têd. adj. [margi- natus, Latin, from margin.] Having a margin.

MA'RGRAVE, mâr'grâve. n. s. [marck and graff, German.] A title of sovereignty in Germany; in its original import, keeper of the marches or borders.

rianæ.] A kind of violet. Dict.

MA'RIGOLD, mâr'rê-gôld.⁸¹ 503 538 516 n. s.
[Mary and gold; caltha, Lat.] A yellow flower, devoted, I suppose, to the virgin.

The marigold hath a radiated discous flower; the petals of them are, for the most part, crenated, the seeds crooked and rough; those which are uppermost long, and those within short; the leaves are long, intire, and for the most part succulent. Miller.

Your circle will teach you to draw truly all spherical bodies. The most of flowers; as, the rose and marigold. Peacham.

The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise. Cleveland.

Fair is the marigold, for pottage meet. Gay.

To MA'RINATE, mâr'rê-nâte. v. a. [marin- ner, French.] To salt fish, and then preserve them in oil or vinegar.

Why am I styl'd a cook, if I'm so loath
To marinate my fish, or season broth? King's Cook.

MAR'INE, mâr-rêên'.¹¹² adj. [marinus,
Lat.] Belonging to the sea.

The king was desirous that the ordinances of England and France, touching marine affairs, might be reduced into one form. Hayward.

Vast multitudes of shells, and other marine bodies, are found lodged in all sorts of stone. Woodward.

No longer Circe could her flame disguise,
But to the suppliant god marine replies. Garth.

MAR'INE, mâr-rêên'. n. s. [la marine, Fr.]

1. Sea affairs.

Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet;
and Onesicrates his intendant-general of marine, have both left relations of the state of the Indies at that time. Arbuthnot.

2. A soldier taken on shipboard to be employed in descents upon the land.

MA'RINER, mâr'in-ûr.⁹⁶ n. s. [from mare,
Lat. marinier, Fr.] A seaman; a sailor.

The merry mariner unto his word
Soon hearkened, and her painted boat straightway Turn'd to the shore. Fairy Queen.

We oft deceive ourselves, as did that mariner who, mistaking them for precious stones, brought home his ship fraught with common pebbles from the Indies. Glanville.

His busy mariners he hates,
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore. Dryden.

What mariner is not afraid,
To venture in a ship decay'd? Swift.

MA'RJORAM, mâr'jûr-ûm. n. s. [marjorana,
Lat. marjolaine, Fr.] A fragrant plant of many kinds; the bastard kind only grows here.

The nymphs of the mountains would be drawn, upon their heads garlands of honeysuckles, woodbine, and sweet marjoram. Peacham.

MA'RISH, mâr'ish. n. s. [marais, French;
meerp, Sax. maersche, Dutch.] A bog;
a fen; a swamp; watery ground; a marsh;
a morass; a moor.

The flight was made towards Dalkeith; which way, by reason of the marsh, the English horse were least able to pursue. Hayward.

When they had avenged the blood of their brother, they turned again to the marsh of Jordan.

1 Maccabees.
Lodronius, carried away with the breaking in of the horsemen, was driven into a marsh; where being sore wounded, and fast in the mud, he had done
the uttermost. Knolles.

His limbs he coucheth in the cooler shades;
Oft, when heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes resort. Sandy's Paraphrase.

From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended; on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel. Milton.

MA'RISH, mâr'ish. adj. Moorish; fenny;
boggy; swampy.

It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marsh and unwholesome grounds.

The fen and quagmire so marsh by kind,
Are to be drained. Tusser's Husbandry.

MA'RITAL, mâr'rê-tâl.⁸⁸ adj. [maritus,
Lat. marital, Fr.] Pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.

If any one retains a wife that has been taken in the act of adultery, he incurs the guilt of the crime of bawdry. But because repentance does consist in the mind, and since christian charity, as well as marital affection, easily induces a belief thereof, this law is not observed. Ayliffe.

It has been determined by some unpolite professors of the law, that a husband may exercise his marital authority so far, as to give his wife moderate correction. Art of Tormenting.

MA'RITATED, mâr'rê-tâ-têd. adj. [from maritus, Lat.] Having a husband. Dict.

MA'RITIMAL, mâr'ri'tê-mâl } adj. [mar-
MA'RITIME, mâr'rê-tim.¹⁴⁶ } timus, Lat. maritime, Fr.]

I discoursed of a maritimal voyage, and the passages and incidents therein. Raleigh.

2. Relating to the sea; naval.

At the parliament at Oxford his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched. Wotton.

3. Bordering on the sea.

The friend, the shores maritimal
Sought for his bed, and found a place upon which play'd

The murmuring billows. Chapman's Iliad.
Ereoco, and the less maritime kings
Monbaza and Quiloa. Milton.

Neptune upbraided them with their stupidity and ignorance, that a maritime town should neglect the patronage of him who was the god of the seas.

MARK, mârkc.⁸¹ n. s. [marc, Welsh;
mearc, Sax. mercke, Dutch; marque,
French.]

1. A token by which any thing is known.

Once was proclaimed throughout all Ireland, that all men should mark their cattle with an open several mark upon their flanks or buttocks, so as if they happened to be stolen, they might appear whose they were. Spenser on Iceland.

In the present form of the earth there are certain marks and indications of its first state; with which,
if we compare those things that are recorded in sacred history, we may discover what the earth was in its first original. Burnet.

The urine is a lixivium of the salts in a human body, and the proper mark of the state and quantity of such salts: and therefore very certain indications for the choice of diet may be taken from the state of urine. Arbuthnot.

2. A stamp; an impression.

But cruel fate, and my more cruel wife,
To Grecian swords betray'd my sleeping life:
These are the monuments of Helen's love,
The shame I bear below, the marks I bore above. Dryden.

T'was then old soldiers cover'd o'er with scars,
The marks of Pynrick, or the Punick wars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If to their share at least two acres fell. Dryden.

At present there are scarce any marks left of a subterraneous fire; for the earth is cold, and overrun with grass and shrubs. Addison.

3. A proof; an evidence.

As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language is a mark of union. Bacon.

The Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatic, carrying their ship Argo upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography among the writers of that time. Arbuthnot.

4. Notice taken.

The laws
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much for moek as mark Shaksp.

5. Conveniency of notice.

Upon the north sea bordereth Stow, so called per eminentiam, as a place of great and good mark and scope. Carew.

6. Any thing at which a missile weapon is directed.

France was a fairer mark to shoot at than Ireland, and could better reward the conqueror. Davies.

Be made the mark
For all the people's hate, the prince's curses. Denham.

7. The evidence of a horse's age.

At four years old cometh the mark of tooth in horses, which hath a hole as big as you may lay a pea within it; and weareth shorter and shorter every year, till at eight years old the tooth is smooth. Bacon.

8. [marque, Fr.] License of reprisals.

9. [marc, Fr.] A sum of thirteen shillings and four pence.

We give thee for reward a thousand marks.

Shakspeare.

Thirty of these pence make a mancus, which some think to be all one with a mark, for that manca and mancus is translated, in ancient books, by marca

Camden's Remains.

Upon every writ for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble is paid to fine; and so for every hundred marks more a noble.

Bacon.

10. A character made by those who cannot write their names.

Here are marriage vows for signing;

Set your marks that cannot write.

Dryden.

Lorenzo sign'd the bargain with his mark.

To MARK, mårk. v. a. [merken, Dutch; markau, Sax. marquer, Fr.]

1. To impress with a token, or evidence. Will it not be received,

When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers, That they have don't?

Shakspeare.

For our quiet possession of things useful, they are naturally marked where there is need.

Grew.

2. To notify as by a mark.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides.

Decay of Piety.

3. To note; to take notice of.

Alas, poor country!

Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rend the air, Are made, not mark'd.

Shakspeare.

Mark them which cause divisions contrary to the doctrines which ye have learned; and avoid them.

Romans.

4. To heed; to regard as valid or important.

Now swear and call to witness

Heav'n, hell, and earth, I mark it not from one That breathes beneath such complicated guilt.

Smith.

To MARK, mårk. v. n. To note; to take notice.

Mea mark when they hit, and never mark when they miss, as they do also of dreams.

Bacon.

Mark a little why Virgil, is so much concerned to make this marriage; it is to make way for the divorce which he intended afterwards.

Dryden.

MA'RKER, mårk'ür.⁹⁸ n. s. [marqueur, Fr. from mark.]

1. One that puts a mark on any thing.

2. One that notes, or takes notice.

MA'RKET, mår'kit. n. s. [anciently written mercat, of mercatus, Lat.]

1. A publick time, and appointed place, of buying and selling.

It were good that the privilege of a market were given, to enable them to their defence: for there is nothing doth sooner cause civility than many market-towns, by reason the people repairing often thither will learn civil manners.

Spenser.

Mistress, know yourself, down on your knees, And thank Heav'n, fasting, for a good man's love: For I must tell you friendly in your ear, Sell when you can, you are not for all markets.

Shakspeare.

They counted our life a pastime, and our time here a market for gain.

Wisdom.

If one bushel of wheat and two of barley will, in the market, be taken one for another, they are of equal worth.

Locke.

2. Purchase and sale.

With another year's continuance of the war, there will hardly be money left in this kingdom to turn the common markets, or pay rents.

Temple.

The precious weight

Of pepper and Sabaean incense take,

And with post haste thy running market make,

Be sure to turn the penny.

Dryden's Persius.

3. Rate; price. [marché, Fr.]

'Twas then old soldiers, cover'd o'er with scars, Thought all past services rewarded well, If, to their share, at least two acres fell, Their country's frugal bounty; so of old Was blood and life at a low market sold.

Dryden.

To MA'RKET, mår'kit. v. n. To deal at a market; to buy or sell; to make bargains.

MA'RKET-BELL, mår-kit-bél'. n. s. [market and bell.] The bell to give notice that trade may begin in the market.

Shakspeare.

MA'RKET-DAY, mår-kit-dá'. n. s. [market and day.] The day on which things are publicly bought and sold.

Fool that I was, I thought imperial Rome, Like Mantua, where on market-days we come, And thither drive our lambs.

Dryden.

He ordered all the Lucquese to be seized that were found on a market-day in one of his frontier towns.

Addison.

MA'RKET-FOLKS, mår'kit-fòks. n. s. [market and folks.] People that come to the market.

Poor market-folks that come to sell their corn.

Shakspeare.

MA'RKET-MAN, mår'kit-mån.⁹⁹ n. s. [market and man.] One who goes to the market to sell or buy.

Be wary how you place your words, Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men,

That come to gather money for their corn.

The market-man should act as if his master's whole estate ought to be applied to that servant's business.

Swift.

MA'RKET-MAID, mår'kit-måde. n. s. [market and maid.] A woman that goes to buy or sell.

You are come

A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented

The ostentation of our love.

Shakspeare.

MA'RKET-PLACE, mår'kit-plåse. n. s. [market and place.] Place where the market is held.

The king, thinking he had put up his sword, because of the noise, never took leisure to hear his answer, but made him prisoner, meaning the next morning to put him to death in the market-place.

Sidney.

The gates he order'd all to be unbar'd, And from the market-place to draw the guard.

Dryden.

Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread,

The man of Ross divides the weekly bread.

Pope.

MA'RKET-PRICE, mår'kit-prise. } n. s.
MA'RKET-RATE, mår'kit-råte. } [market and price or rate.] The price at which any thing is currently sold.

Money governs the world, and the market-price is the measur of the worth of men as well as of fishes.

L'Estrange.

He that wants a vessel, rather than lose his market will not stick to have it at the market-rate.

Locke.

MA'RKET-TOWN, mår'kit-tòun'. n. s. A town that has the privilege of a stated market; not a village.

Nothing doth sooner cause civility in any country than market-towns, by reason that people repairing often thither will learn civil manners of the better sort.

Spenser.

No, no, the pope's mitre my master sir Roger seized, when they would have burnt him at our market-town.

Gay.

MA'RKETABLE, mår'kit-å-bl. adj. [from market.]

1. Such as may be sold; such for which a buyer may be found.

A plain fish, and no doubt marketable.

Shakspeare.

2. Current in the market. The pretorian soldiers arrived to that impudence, that after the death of Pertinax they made open sale of the empire, as if it had been of common marketable wares.

Decay of Piety.

The marketable value of any quantities of two commodities are equal, when they will exchange one for another.

Locke.

MA'RKMAN, mårk'mån. } n. s. [mark and MA'RKSMAN, mårks'mån. } man.] A man skilful to hit a mark.

In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

—I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.

—A right good marksman.

Shakspeare.

Whom nothing can procure, When the wide world runs bias from his will, To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill:

This is the marksman, safe and sure,

Who still is right, and prays to be so still.

An ordinary marksman may know certainly when he shoots less wide at what he aims.

Dryden.

MARL, mår'l. n. s. [marl, Welsh; mergel, Dutch; marga, Lat. marle, marne, Fr. in Saxon, merg is marrow, with an allusive signification, marle being the fatness of the earth.] A kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its fertilizing quality by any product. It is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and oily quality.

We understand by the term marls simple native earths, less heavy than the holcs or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusible in water.

Hill.

Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much.

Bacon.

Uneasy steps

Over the burning marl, not like those steps

On heaven's azure.

Milton.

To MARL, mår'l. v. a. [from the noun.]

To manure with marl.

Improvements by marling, liming, and draining, have been since money was at five and six per cent.

1. The act of uniting a man and woman for life.

The marriage with his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.

Shakspeare.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow.

Shakspeare.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception that he should not marry her himself.

Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great examples of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities.

Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be
In marriage join'd with beauteous Emily.

Dryden.

2. State of perpetual union.

MARRIAGE, mâr'ridje. is often used in composition.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases.

Spectator.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur claim this land for mine.

Shakspeare.

To these whom death again did wed,
This grave's the second marriage-bed,
For though the hand of fate could force

'Twixt soul and body a divorce,
It could not sever man and wife,

Crashav.

Because they both liv'd but one life,
Their hon his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey.

Denham.

Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber.

Tobias.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fetter his fickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained.

Sidney.

Virgin, awake! the marriage-hour is nigh.

Pope.

Give me, to live and die,

A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie.

Dryden.

MARRIAGEABLE, mâr'ridje-â-bl. adj.

[from marriage.]

1. Fit for wedlock; of age to be married.

Every wedding, one with another, produces four children, and that is the proportion of children which any marriageable man or woman may be presumed shall have.

Graunt.

I am the father of a young heiress, whom I begin to look upon as marriageable.

Spectator.

When the girls are twelve years old, which is the marriageable age, their parents take them home.

Swift.

2. Capable of union.

They led the vine

To wed her elm; she spous'd, about him twines
Her marriageable arms, and with her brings
Her dow'r, th' adopted clusters, to adorn
His barren leaves.

Milton.

MARRIED, mâr'rid.²⁸³ adj. [from marry.] Conjugal; connubial.

Thus have you shunn'd the marry'd state.

Dryd.

MARROW, mâr'rò.³²⁷ n. s. [meþꝛ, Saxon, smerr, Erse; smerngh, Scottish.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other there is an oleaginous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vesicles or membranes, like the fat: in the larger bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supple the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break.

Qincy.

Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring.

Shakspeare.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body have another: the jaw-bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused.

Bacon.

Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal
With marrow puddings many a meal.

Hudibras.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
The point still buried in the marrow lay.

Addison.

MARROW, mâr'rò. in the Scottish dialect, to this day, denotes a fellow, companion, or associate; as also equal match, he met with his marrow. [mar, husband. Fr.]

Though buying and selling doth wonderful well,
Yet elopping and changing I cannot commend
With thee or his marrow for fear of ill end.

Tusser.

MARROWBONE, mâr'rò-bòne. n. s. [bone and marrow.]

1. Bone boiled for the marrow.

2. In burlesque language, the knees.

Upon this he fell down upon his marrowbones, and begged of Jupiter to give him a pair of horns.

L'Estrange.

Down on your marrowbones, upon your allegiance; and make an acknowledgment of your offences; for I will have ample satisfaction.

Dryden.

MARROWFAT, mâr'rò-fât. n. s. A kind of pea.

MARROWLESS, mâr'rò-lès. adj. [from marrow.] Void of marrow.

Avaunt!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with.

Shakspeare.

To MARRRY, mâr'rè.⁸¹ v. a. [marier, Fr. maritor, Latin.]

1. To join a man and woman, as performing the rite,

What! shall the curate controul me? Tell him, that he shall marry the couple himself.

Gay.

2. To dispose of in marriage.

When Augustus consulted with Mecænas about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mecænas took the liberty to tell him, that he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great.

Bacon.

3. To take for husband or wife.

You'd think it strange if I should marry her.

Shakspeare.

As a mother shall she meet him, and receive him as a wife married of a virgin.

Ecclesiasticus.

To MARRRY, mâr'rè. v. n. To enter into the conjugal state.

He hath my good will,

And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.

Shak.

Let them marry to whom they think best.

Numbers.

Virgil concludes with the death of Turnus; for after that difficulty was removed, Aeneas might marry, and establish the Trojans.

Dryden.

MARSH, mârsh. } are derived from the MARS, mârsh. } Saxon meþꝛe, a fen,
MAS, mâs. } of fenny place.

Gibson's Camden.

MARSH, mârsh.⁹¹ n. s. [meþꝛe, Sax. See MARISH.] A fen; a bog; a swamp; a watery tract of land.

In their courses make that round,
In meadows and in marshes found,
Of them so called the fayry ground,
Of which they have the keeping.

Drayton.

Worms for colour and shape, alter even as the ground out of which they are got; as the marsh worm and the stag worm.

Walton.

We may see in more conterminous climates great variety in the people thereof; the up-lands in England yield strong, sinewy, hardy men; the marsh-lands, men of large and high stature.

Hale.

Your low meadows and marsh-lands you need not lay up till April, except the Spring be very wet, and your marshes very poachy.

Mortimer.

MARSH-MALLOW, mârsh-mâl'lò. n. s. [althæa, Lat.] It is in all respects like the mallow, but its leaves are more soft and woolly.

Miller.

MARSH-MARIGOLD, mârsh-mâr'rè-gòld. n. s. [hopulago, Latin.] This flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose, in the middle of which rises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous fruit, in which there are several cells, for the most part bent downward, collected into little heads, and full of seeds. Miller.

And set soft hyacinths with iron-blue, To shade marsh-marigolds of shining hue. Dryden.

MA'RSHAL, mâr'shâl. n. s. [mareschal, French; mareschallus, low Latin; from mar-scalc, old French; a word compounded of marc, which, in old French, signified a horse, and scale, a sort of servant; one that has the charge of horses.]

1. The chief officer of arms.

The duke of Suffolk claims

To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk

To be earl marshal. Shakspeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws, As in a listed field to fight their cause?

Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by,

As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the same,

Whose name was Appetite; he did bestow

Both guests and meats, whenever in they came,

And knew them how to order without blame. Spens.

4. A harbinger; a pursuivant; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fairest, had been but as a marshal to lodge the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

To MA'RSHAL, mâr'shâl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Glanville.

Anchises look'd not with so pleas'd a face, In numbring o'er his future Roman race, And marshalling the heroes of his name,

As, in their order, next to light they came. Dryd.

2. To lead as a harbinger.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going.

Shakspeare.

MA'RSHALLER, mâr'shâl-lûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from marshal.] One that arranges; one that ranks in order.

Dryden was the great refiner of English poetry, and the best marshaller of words. Trapp.

MA'RSHALSEA, mâr'shâl-sê. n. s. [from marshal.] The prison in Southwark belonging to the marshal of the king's household.

MA'RSHALSHIP, mâr'shâl-ship. n. s. [from marshal.] The office of a marshal.

MARSHRO'CKET, mârsh-rôk'kit.⁹⁹ n. s. A species of water-cresses.

MA'RSHY, mârsh'ê. adj. [from marsh.]

1. Boggy; wet; fenny; swampy.

Though here the marshy grounds approach your fields,

And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden.

It is a distemper of such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water. Arbuthnot.

2. Produced in marshes.

Feed

With delicates of leaves and marshy weed. Dryd.

VOL. II.

MART, mâr't. n. s. [contracted from market.]

1. A place of publick traffick.

Christ could not suffer that the temple should serve for a place of mart, nor the apostle of Christ that the church should be made an inn. Hooker.

If any born at Ephesus

Be seen at Syraeusian *mart*s and fairs,

He dies. Shakspeare.

Ezechiel, in the description of Tyre, and the exceeding trade that it had with all the East as the only mart town, reciteth both the people with whom they commerce, and also what commodities every country yielded. Raleigh.

Many come to a great mart of the best horses. Temple.

The French, since the accession of the Spanish monarchy, supply with cloth the best mart we had in Europe. Addison.

2. Bargain; purchase and sale.

I play a merchant's part,

And venture madly on a desperate mart. Shaksp.

3. Letters of mart. See MARK.

To MART, mâr't. v. a. [from the noun.]

To traffick; to buy or sell.

Sooth, when I was young I would have ransack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury; you've let him go,

And nothing marted with him. Shakspeare.

Cassius, you yourself

Do sell and mart your offices for gold

To undeserv. Shakspeare.

If he shall think it fit,

A saucy stranger in his court to mart,

As in a stew. Shakspeare.

MA'RTEN, mâr'tîn.⁹⁹ } n. s. [martie, mart- MA'RTERN, mâr'tûrn. } tre, Fr. martes, Latin.]

1. A large kind of weasel, whose fur is much valued.

2. [martelez, Fr.] A kind of swallow that builds in houses; a martlet.

A churchwarden, to express St. Martin's in the Fields, caused to be engraved, on the communion cup, a martin, a bird like a swallow, sitting upon a mole-hill between two trees. Peacham.

MA'RTIAL, mâr'shâl.⁹⁸ adj. [martial, Fr. martialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.

Into my feeble breast

Come gently, but not with that mighty rage

Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,

And hearts of great heroes dost enrage. F. Queen.

The queen of martials,

And Mars himself conducted them. Chapman.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise; whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region. Bacon.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;

But peaceful kings o'er martial people set,

Each other's poize and counterbalance are. Dryd.

2. Having a warlike show; suiting war.

See

His thousands, in what martial equipage

They issue forth! Steel bows and shafts their arms,

Of equal dread in flight or in pursuit. Milton.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,

How martial music every bosom warms. Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world. Shakspeare.

They proceeded in a kind of martial justice with enemies, offering them their law before they drew their sword. Bacon.

4. Borrowing qualities from the planet Mars.

The natures of the fixed stars are astrologically

differenced by the planets, and esteemed martial or jovial according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown.

5. Having parts or properties of iron, which is called Mars by the chymists.

MA'RTIALIST, mâr'shâl-ist. n. s. [from martial.] A warrior; a fighter.

Many brave adventurous spirits fell for love of her; amongst others the high-hearted martialist, who first lost his hands, then one of his chiefest limbs, and lastly his life. Howel.

MA'RTINGAL, mâr'tin-gâl. n. s. [martingale, French.] A broad strap made fast to the girths under the belly of a horse, and runs between the two legs to fasten the other end, under the noseband of the bridle. Harris.

MA'RTINMAS, mâr'tin-mûs.⁹⁸ n. s. [martin and mass.] The feast of St. Martin; the eleventh of November, commonly corrupted to martimass or martlemass.

Martimass beefe doth bear good taake,

When countrey-folke do dainties lacke. Tusser.

MA'RTINET, mâr'tin-ê't. } n. s. [martinet,
MA'RTLET, mâr'tlêt. } French.] A kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,

The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,

By his lov'd mansionry, that heaven's breath

Smells wooingly here. No jutting frieze,

Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle,

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd

The air is delicate. Shakspeare.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;

Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,

And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

MA'RTNETS, mâr'tnê'ts. n. s. Small lines fastened to the leetch of the sail, to bring that part of the leetch which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the sail is to be furled. Bailey.

MA'RTYR, mâr'tûr.⁴¹⁸ n. s. [μάρτυρ; martyr, French.] One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,

Like rising flames expanding in their height,

The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight. Dryden.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth then was so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South's Sermons.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered. Addison.

Socrates,

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thompson.

To MA'RTYR, mâr'tûr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue, or true profession.

2. To murder; to destroy.

You could not beg for grace.

Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you:

This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shak.

If to every common funeral,

By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,

Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud,

Martyr'd with the gout.

MARTYRDOM, mâr'tûr-dûm.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr; testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom?

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom.

Herod, whose unblest Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore A thousand sweet babes from their mothers' breast, The blooms of martyrdom.

Wars, hitherto the only argument Heroick deem'd, chief mast'ry to dissect With long and tedious havock, fabled knights In battles feign'd; the better fortitude Of patience and heroick martyrdom Unsung.

What mists of providence are these? So saints, by supernatural pow'r set free, Are left at last in martyrdom to die.

MARTYROLOGIST, mâr-tûr-rôl'lo-jist.⁶¹⁸ n. s. [martyrologiste, Fr.] A writer of martyrology.

MARTYROLOGY, mâr-tûr-rôl'lo-jè. n. s. [martyrologe, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out.

MARVEL, mâr'vêl.⁹⁹ n. s. [marveille, Fr.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could espy, in the whole Scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

I am scarce in breath, my lord. —No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour; You cowardly rascal!

My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shak.
MARVEL of Peru, mâr'vêl. A flower.

To MARVEL, mâr'vêl. v. n. [merveiller, Fr.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

You make me marvel.
Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied.

The army marvelled at it.
The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables.

MARVELLOUS, mâr'vêl-lûs. adj. [merveilleux, Fr.]

1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.
She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess.

This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes.

2. Surpassing credit.
The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

MARVELLOUSLY, mâr'vêl-lûs-lè. adv. [from marvellous.] Wonderfully; strangely.

You look not well, seignior Antonio; You have too much respect upon the world; They lose it that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd.
The encouragement of his too late successes, with which he was marvellously elated.

MARVELLOUSNESS, mâr'vêl-lûs-nês. n. s. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MASCULINE, mâs'kû-lîn.¹⁵⁰ adj. [masculin, French; masculus, Latin.]

1. Male; not female.
Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long!

His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operation upon nature, being the feminine.

O! why did God, Creator wise, that peopled highest heav'n With spirits masculine, create at last This novelty on earth, this fair defect Of nature?

2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

MASCULINELY, mâs'kû-lîn-lè. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.

Whoever saw a matachin dance to imitate fighting: this was a fight that did imitate the matachin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him, who struck the third.
Sidney.

MATCH, mǎtsh.³⁶³ n. s. [meche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mico, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner con-jectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is companion to a gun.]

1. Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.

Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without stench. Bacon.
He made use of trees as matches to set Druina a fire. Hoicel.

Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use. Boyle.

2. [from μάχη, a fight; or from maca, Sax.
one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.

Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
Shaksp.

A solemn match was made; he lost the prize. Dryden.

3. [from maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.

Government mitigates the inequality of power, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects. Addison.

The old man has met with his match. Spect.

The natural shame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue. Rogers.

4. One that suits or tallies with another.

5. A marriage.

The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter. Shak.

Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making. Boyle.

With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand.
Dryden.

6. One to be married.

She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the west. Clarendon.

To MATCH, mǎtsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be equal to.

No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shaksp.

What, though his heart be great, his actions gallant,

He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power.
Dryden.

The shepherd's kalendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.

4. To suit; to proportion.

Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Rose.

Mine have been still,
Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes.
Rowe.

Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours. Swift.

5. To marry; to give in marriage.

Great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shaksp.

Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show

By matching her, as she would match her foe.

Donne.

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince. Daniel.

When a man thinks himself matched to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South.

A senator of Rome while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king.
Addison.

To MATCH, mâtsh. v. n.

1. To be married.

A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blessing to match with some heroical-minded lady. Sidney.

I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shakspeare.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.
All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.

2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

MA'TCHABLE, mâtsh'â-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [from match.]

1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.

Ye, whose high worths surpassing paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly state? Spenser.

2. Correspondent.

Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea.
Woodward.

MA'TCHLESS, mâtsh'lês. adj. [from match.]
Having no equal.

This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse.
Dryden.

To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras.

2. One who makes matches to burn.

MATE, mâte.⁷⁷ n. s. [maca, Saxon; maet,
Dutch.]

1. A husband or wife.

I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy mate for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Spenser.

2. A companion, male or female.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.
My competitor

In top of all design, my mate in erpire,
Friend and companion in the front of wars. Shakspeare.
Ye knew me once no mate

For you; there sitting where you durst not soar.
Milton.

Damon, behold yon breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way.
Dryden.

Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play,
At sports more harmless till the break of day.
Dryden.

3. The male or female of animals.

Shakspeare.

Why this is strange; go call the abess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shakspeare.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds.
Bacon.

MATE'RIAL, mâ-tê-rê-âl.⁵⁰⁵ adj. [mate-riell, Fr. materialis, Lat.]

1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.

When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see.
Davies.

That these trees of life and knowledge were mate-riell trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.

2. Important; momentous; essential; with to before the thing to which relation is noted.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions, incident, and very material in causes of this nature.
Hooker.

Hold them for catholicks or hereticks, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this question, material. Hooker.

What part of the world soever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Christ. Hooker.

It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government. Spenser.

The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material. Whitgift.

He would not stay, at your petitions made,
His business more material. Shakspeare.

Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon.

I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds are less material to my theme. Dryden.
As for the more material faults of writing, though
I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them.
Dryden.

I shall in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.

In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.

3. Not formal: as, though the material

He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryden.

MATERIA'LITY, mâ-tê-rê-âl-ê-tê. n. s. [materiellité, French; from material.] Corporicity; material existence; not spirituality.

Considering that corporicity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species.
Digby.

MATE'RIALLY, mâ-tê-rê-âl-ê. adv. [from material.]

1. In the state of matter.

I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.

2. Not formerly.

Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil.
South.

3. Importantly; essentially.

All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially as well to reform those which are evil;
as to confirm and continue those which are good.
Spenser.

MATE'RIALNESS, mâ-tê-rê-âl-nês. n. s.
[from material.] State of being mate-riell.

MATE'RIALS, mâ-tê-rê-âl-z. n. s. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materiaux, Fr.] The substance of which any thing is made.

The West Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.

Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown.

David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the Temple, because he had dipt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.

That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestos, which being once enkindled, will burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them.
Tillotson.

Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Shakspeare.

Duly to have the ruins made
Materials for an house decay'd. Swift.
MATERIATE, mâ-tê-ré-ât. } adj. [ma-MATERIATED, mâ-tê-ré-â-téd. } teriatas,
Latin.] Consisting of matter.

After long enquiry of things immerse in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less materiale, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial.
Bacon.

MATERIA'TION, mâ-tê-ré-â-shûn. n. s. [from materia, Latin.] The act of forming matter.

Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself. Brown.

MATE'RNAL, mâ-têr'nâl.⁸⁸ adj. [materne,
Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.

The babe had all that infant care bequies,
And early knew his mother in her smiles:
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.

MATE'RNITY, mâ-têr'né-té. n. s. [maternité,

adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The east and west
Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham.

It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Boyle.

I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley.
MATHEMA'TICALLY, mâth-ê-mât'té-kâl-ê.
adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sunbeams, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley.

MATHEMATI'CIAN, mâth-ê-mâ-tish'ân. n. s.
[mathematicus, Latin; mathematicien,
French.] A man versed in the mathematicks.

One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map. Spectator.

MATHEMATI'CKS, mâth-ê-mât'tiks. n. s.
[μαθηματικη] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt; pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.

MA'TRICE, mâ'tris.^{140 142} n. s. [matrix,
Lat.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the fetus is formed.
If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling, and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.

2. A mould; that which gives form to something enclosed.
Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodw.

MATRO'SS, mâ-trôs'. n. s.
Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, sponging, firing and loading them: they carry fire-locks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bailey.

MA'TTER, mâ'tûr.⁶³ n. s. [matiere, Fr.
materia, Lat.]

1. Body; substance extended.
If then the soul another soul do make,
Because her pow'r is kept within a bound,
She must some former stuff or matter take,
But in the soul there is no matter found. Davies

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids, are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them; even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newton.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit. Shaksp.
Meager were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones. Shaksp.
Whatever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t' other meager.
L'Estrange.
Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,
In swarms th' offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground:
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.
2. Poor; hungry.
Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a Sabbath year to mend the meagre soil.
Dryden.
To ME'AGER, mè'gūr. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make lean.
It cannot be, that I should be so shamefully betrayed, and as a man meagered with long watching and painful labour, laid himself down to sleep.
Knolles.

Mean-time, in shades of night Æneas lies; Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes. Dryden.

Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison.
The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and harassed by inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.

To MEAN, mène. v. n. [meenen, Dutch.]

1. To have in the mind; to purpose.
These delights, if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton.
2. To think; to have the power of thought.
And he who now to scense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning. Pope.

To MEAN, mène. v. a.

1. To purpose; to intend; to design.
Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to save much people alive. Genesis.
And life more perfect have attain'd than fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot. Milton.
I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer
With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear:
So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.

When your children shall say, What mean you by this service? ye shall say, It is the passover.

I forsake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgment in your choice of friends. Dryden.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.

MEANDER, *mè-ân'-dûr.*⁹⁸ n. s. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale.

'Tis well that while mankind
Through fate's perverse meander errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
They scatter verdant life on either side;
The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace. Blackmore.

Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbuthnot.

MEANDROUS, *mè-ân'drûs.*³¹⁴ adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.

MEANING, *mé'ning.*⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from mean.]

1. Purpose; intention.
I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you. Shaksp.
2. Habitual intention.
Some whose meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair. Roscommon.
3. The sense; the thing understood.
The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the muses nine.
These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.
No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift.

4. Sense; power of thinking.

He was not spiteful though he wrote a satyr,
For still there goes some meaning to ill-nature. Dryden.

—True no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

ME'ANLY, mène'lè. adv. [from mean.]

1. Moderately; not in a great degree.
Dr. Metcalf, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affectioned to set forward learning in others. Aschan.
In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourished. Dryden.

2. Without dignity; poorly.
It was the winter wild,
While the heav'n born child,
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.
The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born. Denham.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.
Would you meanly thus rely
On power, you know, I must obey. Prior.

4. Without respect.
Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts.

ME'ANNESS, mène'nès. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Want of excellence.
The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of Common Prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.
This figure' is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison.

2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.
No other nymphs have title to men's hearts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts. Waller.
Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South.

3. Lowness of mind.
The names of servants has been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

4. Sordidness; niggardliness.

MEANT, mènt. perf. and part. pass. of
To mean.

By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
If friendship be thy virgin vows extent;
O! let me in Aminta's praises join;
Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.

MEASE, mèsc. n. s. [probably a corrup- tion of measure; as, a mease of herrings is five hundred.] Ainsworth.

ME'ASLES, mè'zls.^{227 359} n. s. [morbilli,
Latin.]

1. Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice. Quincy.

My lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shaksp.

Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbuthnot.

2. A disease of swine.
One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it; nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; the swine did of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. Ben Jonson.

3. A disease of trees.
Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles, by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer.

ME'ASLED, *mè'zld.*³⁵⁹ adj. [from measles.]
Infected with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
Thou tail of worship, that dost grow
On rump of justice, as of cow. Hudibras.
ME'ASLY, mè'zle. adj. [from measles.]

Scabbed with the measles.
Last trotted forth the gentle swine,
To ease her against the stump,
And dismally was heard to whine,
As she scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.
ME'ASURABLE, mèzh'ûr-â-bl. adj. [from measure.]

1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.
God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.

ME'ASURABLENESS, mèzh'ûr-â-bl-nès. n.
s. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

ME'ASURABLY, mèzh'ûr-â-blè. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclesiasticus.

MEASURE, *mèzh'ûre.*²³⁴ n. s. [measure,
French; mensura, Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.
A taylor's news,

Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shakespeare.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measure. Holder.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbuthnot.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence.
More.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glamville.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end which is not proportionable thereunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakespeare.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksp.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short
And every measure fail me. Shakespeare.

We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Corinthians.

If else thou seek'st
Aught, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoick, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson.

7. Degree; quantity.

I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot.
There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor.
The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and consummation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.
Burnet.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.

Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart heats measure to thy strains.
Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport.
Shakespeare.
As when the stars in their æthereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance.
Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure
full of state and anarchy. Shakespeare.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Shakespeare.

11. Moderation; not excess.

O love, he moderate, allay thy ecstasy;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakespeare.
Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isaiah.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is

Μετρον
Τρις ἑτάων δεκάδας τριαδίας δυο, μετρον ἑθδικα
Ἡμέτερος βίβλος μανίης αἰθεροί.
Ἄρχημα τυποισίη.
Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psalms.

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards.
Smalridge.

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.
The numbers themselves, though of the heroic measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet.
Spenser.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end. The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To have hard measure; to be hardly treated.

To ME'ASURE, mēzh'ûre. v. a. [mesurer,
Fr. mesuro, Lat.]

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Arelidamus, having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronea, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shaksp.
I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shaksp.
The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way.
Dryden.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy pow'r! What thought can measure thee, or tongue
Relate thee? Milton.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.
Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange, that he measures
the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Spectator.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. Matthew.
ME'ASURELESS, mēzh'ûr-lēs. adj. [from measure.] Immense; immeasurable.
He shut up in measureless content. Shakespeare.

ME'ASUREMENT, mēzh'ûr-mēnt. n. s.
[from measure.] Mensuration; act of measuring.

ME'ASURER, mēzh'ûr-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from measure.] One that measures.

ME'ASURING, mēzh'ûr-îng. adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.
When lusty shepherds throw
The bar by turns, and none the rest out-go
So far, but that the best are meas'ring casts,
Their emulation and their pastime lasts. Waller.

MEAT, mēte.²⁴⁶ n. s. [met, French.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.

To his father he sent ten she ashes laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way.
Genesis.

Carnivora; and birds of prey, are no good meat;
but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh; for pewets and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat.
Bacon.

There was a multitude of excises; as, the rectigal macelli, a tax upon meat. Arbutnot.

2. Food in general.

Never words were music to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake or carv'd. Shakespeare.
Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Corinthians.

ME'ATED, mēte'éd. adj. [from meat.] Fed;
foddered.

Strong oxen and horses, wel shod and wel clad,
Wel meated and used. Tusser.

MEATHE, MÉTHE. n. s. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwi ebbrius sum.] Drink, properly of honey.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive must, and meathes
From many a berry. Milton.

ME'AZLING, mēz'îng. part. generally called mizzling.

The air feels more moist when the water is in small than in great drops; in meazling and soaking rain, than in great showers. Arbutnot.

MECHA'NICAL, mē-kân'nē-kâl. } adj.

MECHA'NICK, mē-kân'nik.⁶⁰⁹ } [mecha-nicus, Latin; mechanique, French; from μηχανή.]

1. Constructed by the laws of mechanicks.

Many a fair precept in poetry, is like a seeming demonstration in mathematicks, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation.
Dryden.

The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these, and to such like questions. Newton.

2. Skilled in mechanicks; bred to manual labour.

3. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.

Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not to walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession. Shaksp.
Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue; I will

To meet the noise Of his almighty engine, he shall hear Infernal thunder. Milton.

So match'd they stood; For never but once more was either like To meet so great a foe. Milton.

3. To encounter unexpectedly.

So judge thou still, presumptuous, till the wrath, Which thou incur'st by flying, meet thy flight Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton.

4. To join another in the same place.

When shall we three meet again, In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakespeare.

Chance may lead where I may meet Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n by fountain side Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton.

I knew not till I met
My friends, at Ceres' now deserted seat. Dryden.
Not look back to see,
When what we love we ne'er must meet again.
Dryden.

5. To close one with another.
The nearer you come to the end of the lake, the mountains on each side grow higher, till at last they meet. Addison.

6. To find; to be treated with; to light on.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met.
Dryden.

Of vice or virtue, whether blest or curst,
Which meets contempt, or which compassion first.
Pope.
To me no greater joy,
Than that your labours meet a prosp'rous end.
Granville.

Their choice nobility and flower
Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton.
The materials of that building happily met together, and very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.

4. To MEET with. To light on; to find; it includes sometimes obscurely, the idea of something unexpected.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, he maketh as worthy a soldier as any nation he meeteth with. Spenser.
We met with many things worthy of observation.
Bacon.

Hercules' meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates.
Addison.

What a majesty and force does one meet with in these short inscriptions: are not you amazed to see so much history gathered into so small a compass?
Addison on Ancient Medals.

5. To MEET with. To join.
Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Shaksp.

6. To MEET with. To suffer unexpectedly.

Lascivious meeters, to whose venom'd sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen. Shaksp.
ME'ETING, mèet'ing.¹¹⁰ n. s. [from meet.]

1. An assembly; a convention.
If the fathers and husbands of those whose relief this your meeting intends, were of the household of faith, then their relicts and children ought not to be strangers to the good that is done in it, if they want it. Sprat.

Since the ladies have been left out of all meetings except parties of play, our conversation hath degenerated. Sveift.

2. An interview.
Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting; and lead him on with a fine baited delay.
Shaksp.

MELANAG'O'GUES, mè-lân-nâ-gôg'z'. n. s.
[from μέλανος and ἄγω.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.

MELANCHO'LICK, mèl'ân-kôl-lik. adj.
[from melancholy.]

1. Disordered with melancholy; fanciful;
hypochondriacal; gloomy.

If he be mad or angry, or melancholick, or sprightly, he will paint whatsoever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.

The commentators on old Ari-Stotle, 'tis urg'd in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholick eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.

2. Unhappy; unfortunate; causing sorrow.
The king found himself at the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.

MELANCHO'LY, mèl'ân-kôl-ê.⁸⁰³ n. s.
[melancolie, French, from μέλανος and χολη.]

1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundance of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical;
nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's,
which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politick; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shaksp.
Moonstruck madness, moping melancholy.
Milton.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him. Sidney.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy frost, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.
In those deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever musing melancholy reigns. Pope.

MELANCHO'LY, mèl'ân-kôl-ê.⁸⁰³ adj. [me- lancholique, Fr.]

1. Gloomy; dismal.

Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham.

If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade.
Pope.

2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful;
habitually dejected.

How now, sweet Frank, art thou melancholy?
Shaksp.

He observes Lamceh more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.

MELICE'RIS, mèl-ê-sê-ris. n. s. [μελι- κησις.]

Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey. If the matter resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a suety substance, steatoma. Sharp.

To ME'LIORATE, mè'lê-ô-râ-te. v. a. [melio- rer, French, from melior.] To better; to improve.

Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock, than in the crude earth. Bacon.

But when we graft, or buds inculate,
Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.

A man ought by no means to think that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness.
South.

Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.

Much labour is requir'd in trees;
Well must the ground be digg'd and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden.

MELIORA'TION, mè-lê-ô-râ'shùn. n. s. [me- lioration, French, from meliorate.] Improvement; act of bettering.

For the melioration of music there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite consorts, to try. Bac.

MELIOR'ITY, mè-lê-ô-rê-tê.¹¹³ n. s. [from melior.] State of being better. A word very elegant, but not used.

Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliority above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and henign agent. Bentley.

To MELL, mél. v. n. [meler, se meler, Fr.]

To mix; to meddle. Obsolete.

It fathers fits not with such things to mell. Spenser.

Here is a deal of good matter

Lost for lack of telling:

Now I see thou dost but clatter,

Harm may come of melling.

Spenser.

MELLI'FEROUS, mél-lif'fêr-ûs. adj. Productive of honey. Dict.

MELLIFICA'TION, mél-lê-fê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [mellifico, Latin.] The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.

In judging of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grass-hoppers, and want of mellification in bees. Arbuthnot.

MELLI'FLUENCE, mél-lif'flû-ênse. n. s. [mél and fluo, Latin.] A honied flow; a flow of sweetness.

MELLI'FLUENT, mél-lif'flû-ênt.⁵¹⁸ } adj.
MELLI'FLUOUS, mél-lif'flû-ûs.⁵¹⁸ } [mél and fluo, Latin.] Flowing with honey; flowing with sweetness.

A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight. Shak.

As all these things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into cholera and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows. Raleigh.

Innumerable songsters in the freshening shade
Of new sprung leaves, their modulations mix Mellifluous. Thomson.

ME'LLOW, mél'lô.³²⁷ adj. [meap, pa, Sax. Skinner; more nearly from mollis, molle, mollow, mellow; though r is indeed, easily changed into l in common speech.]

1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.

A storm, a robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay my leaves. Shakespeare.

An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet. Digby.

A little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm. Dryd.

2. Soft in sound.

Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his dying breath Dametas gave. Dryd.

3. Soft; unctuous.

Camomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat. Bacon.

4. Drunk; melted down with drink.

Greedy of physicians frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Rosc.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

To ME'LLOW, mél'lô. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.

Lord Aubrey Vere

Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shaksp.

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty. Shaksp.

On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Add.

2. To soften.

They plow in the wheat stubble in December;
and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer.

3. To mature to perfection.

This episode, now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æncis, was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.

To ME'LLOW, mél'lô. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good; till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay. Doime.

ME'LLOWNESS, mél'lô-nês. n. s. [from mellow.]

1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.

My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby.

The spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,

But autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:

So age a mature mellowness doth set

On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.

2. Maturity; full age.
MELOCO'TON, mê-lô-kô'tôn. n. s. [melocotone, Spanish; malum cotoneum, Latin.]

MELODY, mél'lô-dê. n. s. [μελωδία.]
Musick; harmony of sound.

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in public prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of men's hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. Hooker.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Ephesians.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And husht with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shaksp.

Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: O pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! Thomson.

ME'LOX, mél'lûn.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [melon, French; melo, Latin.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber; some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons. Numbers.

MELON-THI'STLE, mél'lûn-thîs-sl. n. s. [melocortus, Latin.]

When the melling fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Isaiah.

This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted tastes of brass, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.

The mighty master smil'd to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden.
Alas! the story melts away my soul. Addison.

4. To waste away.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust. Shaksp.

To MELT, mêlt. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalms.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shaksp.
Dighton and Forrest;

Albeit, they were flesh villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shaksp.

This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dryden.

Melting into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd so sad a sight. Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shaksp.

Against whose charms faith melts into blood. Shaksp.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul *melts*eth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psalms.

MELTER, mĕlt'ūr.⁹³ n. s. [from melt.]

One that melts metals.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Derham.

MELTINGLY, mĕlt'ing-lĕ. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.

Zelma lay upon a bank; that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought she began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney.

MELWEL, mĕl'wĕl. n. s. A kind of fish.

MEMBER, mĕm'bĕr.⁹⁸ n. s. [membre, Fr. membrum, Latin.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Mathew.

The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. James.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it. Watts.

3. Any part of an integral.

In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, should be great. Addison.

4. One of a community.

My going to demand justice, upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies. K. Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.

Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country. Addison.

MEMBRANE, mĕm'brānĕ.⁹¹ n. s. [membrane, French; membrana, Latin.]

A web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficulty united when wounded. Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown.

They obstacle find none Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars: Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace, Total they mix. Milton.

The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.

MEMBRANA'CEOUS, mĕm-brā'nā'shūs.¹⁰⁷

MEMBRANEOUS, mĕm-brā'nĕ-ūs.

Lat.]

1. Noon; midday.

He promis'd in his east a glorious race,
Now sunk from his meridian, sets apace. Dryden.

2. The line drawn from north to south, which the sun crosses at noon.

The true meridian is a circle passing through the poles of the world, and the zenith or vertex of any place, exactly dividing the east from the west.
Brown.

The sun or moon, rising or setting, our idea represents bigger than when on the meridian. Watts.

3. The particular place or state of any thing.

All other knowledge merely serves the concerns of this life, and is fitted to the meridian thereof;
they are such as will be of little use to a separate soul. Hale.

4. The highest point of glory or power.

I've touch'd the highest point of all my greatness,
And from that full meridian of my glory
I haste now to my setting. Shakspeare.

Your full majesty at once breaks forth
In the meridian of your reign. Waller.

MERIDIAN, mĕ-rid'ĕ-án. adj.

1. Being at the point of noon.

Sometimes tow'rd's Eden, which now in his view
Lay pleasant, his griev'd look he fixes sad;
Sometimes tow'rd's heav'n, and the full blazing sun
Which now sat high in his meridian tow'r. Milton.

2. Extended from north to south.

Compare the meridian line afforded by magnetical needles with one mathematically drawn, observe the variation of the needle, or its declination from the true meridian line. Boyle.

the meridian.

The Jews, not willing to lie as their temple stood,
do place their bed from north to south, and delight to sleep meridionally. Brown.

MERIT, mĕr'it. n. s. [meritum, Latin, mĕrite, French.]

1. Desert; excellence deserving honour or reward.

She deem'd I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty. Dryden.

Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,
With manners generous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And ev'ry author's merit but his own. Pope.

She valu'd nothing less
Than titles, figure, shape, and dress;

That merit should be chiefly plac'd
In judgment, knowledge, wit, and taste. Sicist.

2. Reward deserved.

Those laurel groves, the merits of thy youth,
Which thou from Mahomet didst greatly gain,
While bold assertor of resistless truth,
Thy sword did godlike liberty maintain. Prior.

3. Claim; right; character with respect to desert of good or evil.

You have the captives; use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakspeare.

As I am studious to promote the honour of my native country, I put Chaucer's merits to the trial, by turning some of the Canterbury Tales into our language. Dryden.

When a point hath been well examined, and our own judgment settled, after a large survey of the merits of the cause, it would be a weakness to continue fluttering. Watts.

To MÉRIT, mēr'it. v. a. [meriter, Fr.]

1. To deserve; to have a right to claim any thing as deserved.

Amplly have merited of me, of all
Th' infernal empire. Milton.

A man at best is uncapable of meriting any thing from God. South.

2. To deserve; to earn: it is used generally of good, but sometimes of ill.

Whatever jewels I have merited, I am sure I have received none, unless experience be a jewel;
that I have purchased at an infinite rate. Shaksp.

If such rewards to vanquish'd men are due,
What prize may Nisus from your bounty claim,
Who merited the first rewards, and fame? Dryden.

MÉRITO'RIOUS, mēr-ré-tò'rè ùs. adj.
[meritoire, French, from merit.] Deserving of reward; high in desert.

Instead of so great and meritorious a service, in bringing all the Irish to acknowledge the king for their liege, they did great hurt. Spenser.

The war that hath such a foundation will not only be reputed just, but holy and meritorious. Raleigh.
Sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever. Sanderson.

This is not only the most prudent, but the most meritorious charity, which we can practise. Adth.

MÉRITO'RIOUSLY, mēr-ré-tò'rè-ùs-lè. adv.
[from meritorious.] In such a manner as to deserve reward

He carried himself meritoriously in foreign employments in time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Wotton.

MÉRITO'RIOUSNESS, mēr-ré-tò'rè-ùs-nès.
n. s. [from meritorious.] The act or state of deserving well.

There was a full persuasion of the high meritori-ousness of what they did; but still there was no law of God to ground it upon, and consequently it was not conscience. South.

MÉRITOT, mēr-ré-tòt. n. s. [oscillum,
Lat.] A kind of play. Ainsworth.

MÉR'LIN, mēr'lin. n. s. A kind of hawk.

he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

MÉRMAID, mēr'màide. n. s. [mer, the sea, and maid.] A sea woman; an animal with a woman's head and fish's tail.

I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall.
Shakspeare.

Thou remembrest,
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shaksp.

Did sense persuade Ulysses not to hear
The mermaid's songs which so his men did please,

That they were all persuaded through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the seas? Davies.

Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid:
Horace his monster, with woman's head above and fish's extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient sirens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown.

MÉRMAID'S TRUMPET, mēr'màdz-trùm' pit. n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsw.

MÉR'RILY, mēr'rè-lè. adv. [from merry.]
Gayly; airily; cheerfully; with mirth;
with gayety; with laughter.

Merrily, merrily, shall we live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shak.

When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merrily. Shakspeare.

A pisan of France thinks of no more than his coarse bread and his onions, his canvas clothes and wooden shoes, labours contentedly on working days, and dances or plays merrily on holidays. Temple.

Merrily sing, and sport, and play,
For 'tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.

MÉR'RIMAKE, mēr'rè-màke. n. s. [merry and make.] A festival; a meeting for mirth; merry franks.

Thenot now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to heric, nor with love to play,
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

The knight did not forbear,
Her honest mirth and pleasure to partake,

But when he saw her gize, and toy, and geare,
And pass the bounds of modest merrymake,
Her dalliance he despised. Fairy Queen.

To MÉR'RIMAKE, mēr'rè-màke. v. a. To feast; to be jovial.

With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To toil all day, and merrymake at night. Gay.

They drank and were merry with him. Genesis.
The vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted sigh.
Isaiah.

Some that are of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come to be sad and ill-disposed; and others that are of a jovial nature, do dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon.

Man is the merriest species of the creation; all above and below him are serious. Addison.

2. Causing laughter.

You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest. Shaksp.

3. Prosperous.

In my small pinnace I can sail,
Containing all the blust'ring roar;
And running with a merry gale,
With friendly stars my safety seek,
Within some little winding creek,
And see the storm ashore. Dryden

To make MERRY. To junket; to be jo-via.

They trod the grapes and made merry, and went into the house of their god. Judges.

A fox spy'd a bevy of jolly gossiping wenches, making merry over a dish of pullets. L'Estran.

MERRY-ANDREW, mēr-rè-ân'dròò. n. s.
A buffoon; a zany; a jack-pudding.

He would be a statesman because he is a buffoon;
as if there went no more to the making of a counsellor than the faculties of a merry-andrew or tumbler. L'Estrange.

The first who made the experiment was a merry-andrew. Spectator.

MÉR'RYYTHOUGHT, mēr'rè-thàwt. n. s.
[merry and thought.] A forked bone on the body of fowls; so called because boys and girls pull in play at the two sides, the longest part broken off betokening priority of marriage.

Let him not be breaking merrythoughts under the table with my cousin. Echard.

The act of sinking, or thrusting over head. Ainsworth.

MESÉ'EMS, mé-séémz'. impersonal verb.
[me and seems, or it seems to me: for this word it is now too common to use methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word.] I think; it appears to me.

Alas, of ghosts I hear the ghastly cries;
Yet there, mesecms, I hear her singing loud. Sidn.

Mesecm'd by my side a royal maid,

Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Spenser.
To that general subjection of the land, mesecms that the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impeachment. Spenser.

MESENTE'RIK, mész-zèn-tér'rik.⁶⁰⁹ adj.
[mesenterique, French; from mesente-ry.] Relating to the mesentery.

They are carried into the glands of the mesente-ry, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes this chylous fluid, and scours its containing vessels, which, from the mesenterick glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Cheyne.

MÉ'SENTERY, mész-zèn-tér-è. n. s. [με-σεντέριον; mesentere, French.] That round which the guts are convolved.

When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph. Arbuthnot.

MESERA'ICK, mész-zè-rà'ik. n. s. [μεσάραικον; meseraique, French; analogy requires it mesaraick.] Belonging to the mesentery.

It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the meseraicks, and accompanieth the in-convertible portion into the sieve. Brown.

The most subtle part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves into the meseraick veins. Arbuthnot.

MESH, mész. n. s. [maesche, Dutch;
mache, old French; it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mesh.] The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.

The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, through which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes. Carric.

Such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. Shaksp.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray

The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden

With all their mouths the nerves the spirits mesh,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink
These all the channel'd fibres every way,
For motion and sensation, still convey:

The greatest portion of th' arterial blood,
By the close structure of the parts withstood

Whose narrow meshes stop the grosser flood.

Blackmore.

To MESH, mēsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

To catch in a net; to ensnare.

The flies by chance mesht in her hair,

By the bright radiance thrown

From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,

They so like diamond shone. Dryden.

ME'SHLY, mēsh'ē. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of network.

Some build his house, but thence his issue barre,
Some make his meshy bed, but leave his rest.

Carew.

Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat
Their idie wings.

Thomson.

ME'SLIN, mēs'lin. n. s. [from mésler, Fr.]

to mix; or rather corruptedly pronounced for miscellane. See MASLIN.]

Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of old dissimilitude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with mestlin.

Hooker.

If worke for the thresher ye mind for to have,
Of wheat and of mestlin unthreshed go save.

Tusser.

MESOLEU'CYS, mē-sò-lù'sis. n. s. [μεσολευκος.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Dict.

logarithms of the cosines and tangents,
so denominated by Kepler.

Harris.

MESO'MELAS, mē-sòm'mè-làs. n. s. [μεσο-μέλας.] A precious stone with a black vein parting every colour in the midst.

Bailey.

ME'SPISE, mēs'pize. n. s. [probably mis-printed for mesprise; mespris, Fr.]
Contempt; scorn.

Mammon was much displeas'd, yet not he chose
But bear the rigour of his bold mesprise,
And thence him forward led, him further to entice.

Spenser.

MESS, mēs. n. s. [mes, old French; nesso, Italian; missus, Latin; mes, Gothick; mere, Saxon, a dish.] A dish; a quantity of food sent to table together.

The bounteous housewife nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you.

Shakspeare.

Now your traveller,
He and his toothpick at my worship's mess. Shaks.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge.

Shakspeare.

Herbs and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phyllis dresses. Milton.
Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes.

Decay of Piety.

From him he next receives it thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in.

Pope.

To MESS, mēs. v. n. To eat; to feed.

ME'SSAGE, mēs'sidje.⁹⁰ n. s. [message,
French.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.

She doth display

The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,

To bear the message of her gentle spright. Spenser.

May onc, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears!

Shakspeare.

She is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wond'rous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.

Shakspeare.

Gently hast thou told

Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing end us.

Milton.

Let the minister be low, his interest inconsiderable, the word will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger.

South.

The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd;
'Twas to be wish'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd.

Dryden.

ME'SSENGER, mēs'sèn-jûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [messager, French.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; a harbinger; a forerunner.

Came running in, much like a man dismaid,
A messenger with letters, which his message said.

Spenser.

Yon grey lines,

That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakspeare.

The earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw, and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer.

Clarendon.

Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.

MESSIAH, mēs-si'á. n. s. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.

gium*, law latin; formed perhaps from mesnage by mistake of the n in court-hand for u, they being written alike;
mesnage from maison, Fr.] The house and ground set apart for household uses.

MET, mēt. The preterit and part. of meet.

A set of well meaning gentlemen in England not to be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be wrong so long as they oppose ministers of state.

Addison.

METAGRAMMATISM, mēt-à-grám-á-tizm.
n. s. [μετα and γραμμα.]

Anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements; and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition; without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named.

Camden.

META'BASIS, mē-táb-á-sis. n. s. [Gr.]

In rhetoric, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another.

Dict.

joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiseman.

ME'TAL, mēt'tl. n. s. [metal, Fr. metal-lum, Lat.]

1. A firm, heavy, and hard substance, opaque, fusible by fire, and concreting again when cold into a solid body, such as it was before, which is malleable under the hammer, and is of a bright, glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3.
copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin:
some have added mercury or quicksilver, to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi-metals.

Hill.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels
for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out,

Moxon.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it.

Clarendon.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal be prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse.

Hudibras.

METAL'PSIS, mēt-tál'p'sis. n. s. [μετά-λψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations.

Bailey.

META'LLICAL, mē-tál'lè-kál. } adj. [from META'LLICK, mē-tál'lik.⁶⁰⁹ } metallum,
Lat. metallique, Fr.] Partaking of metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or fusibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost.

Wotton.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of min'ral treasure, and metallick oar. Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS, mēt-tál-lif'fèr-ús. adj.
[metallum and fero, Lat.] Producing metals.

Dict.

META'LLINE, mēt'tál-line.^{148 149} adj. [from metal.]

1. Impregnated with metal.

Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden.

Bacon.

2. Consisting of metal.

Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interspersed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves.

Boyle.

ME'TALLIST, mēt'tál list. n. s. [from metal];
metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals;
one skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels
for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out;
it is made of quick lime and ox blood.

Moxon.

[metallum and ἔργον.] A worker in metals.

ME'TALLURGY, mêt-tâl-lûr-jê. n. s. [metallum and ἔργον.] The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore.

TO METAMO'RPHOSE, mêt-tâ-môr'fûs. v. a. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφώω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me; Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shak. They become degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nehuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Davies.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers with no train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

From such rude principles our form began, And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden.

METAMO'RPHOSIS, mêt-tâ-môr'fô-sis. ⁶²⁰ n. s. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμόρφωσις.]

1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney. Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the hrutes did not only poetically but really speak Government of the Tongue.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis? On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden.

There are probable machines in epic poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Broome.

2. It is applied by Harvey to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm, and the like. Quincy.

ME'TAPHOR, mêt-tâ-fûr. ¹⁶⁸ n. s. [metaphore, Fr. μετάφορα.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put: as he bridles his anger; he deadens the sound; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprised in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopea delights. Dryden.

One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

METAPHORICAL, mêt-tâ-fôr'ê-kâl. } adj.
METAPHORICAL, mêt-tâ-fôr'ik. } [metaphorique, Fr.] from metaphor. Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hooker.

METAPHRA'SE, mêt-tâ-frâze. n. s. [μετάφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase. Dryden.

METAPHRA'ST, mêt-tâ-frâst. n. s. [metaphraste, Fr. μεταφραστής.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICAL, mêt-tâ-fiz'ê-kâl. } adj.

1. Versed in metaphysicks; relating to metaphysicks.

2. In Shakspeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

Hie thee hither,

To chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem,
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakspeare.

METAPHYSICK, mêt-tâ-fiz'ik. } n. s.
METAPHYSICKS, mêt-tâ-fiz'iks. } [metaphysique, Fr. μαθησικη.] Ontology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematicks and the metaphysicks,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakspeare.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say she tortures wits as quartans vex Physicians. Cleveland.

If sight he caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which, how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysicks. Peacham.

See physick beg the Stagyrte's defence!
See metaphysicks call for aid on sense! Pope.

The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watts' Logick.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychos'd, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their honcs. Peachment on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHO'SIS, mêt-têmp-sê-kô'sis. ⁶²⁰ n. s. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigratation of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigratation of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ME'TEOR, mêt-tê-ûr, or mêt'tshê-ûr. ²⁶³ n. s. [meteor, Fr. μέτεωρα.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face? Shaksp.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor strong influence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

These hurning fits hut meteors he,
Whose matter in thee soon is spent:

Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament. Donne.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryden.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then east downward
To he trod out by Cæsar. Dryden.

O poet, thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst duhh'd thy star a meteor,

Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

METEOROLOGICAL, mêt-tê-ô-rô-lô-jê-kâl. ⁶¹⁸ adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Others are considerable in meteorological divinity. Brown.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights he new come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Hovel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGIST, mêt-tê-ô-rô-lô-jist. n. s. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studios of them.

The meteorologists observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency. Hovel.

METEOROLOGY, mêt-tê-ô-rô-lô-jê. n. s. [μετεωρα and λόγος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown.

METEOROUS, mêt-tê-ô-rûs. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fixt station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as ev'ning mist
Ris'n from a river. Milton.

ME'TER, mêt'tûr. ⁹⁸ n. s. [from mete.] A measurer: as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHEGLIN, mêt-thêg'lin. n. s. [meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, to glue, Minshew; or medclyg, a physician, and llyn, drink; because it is a medicinal drink.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.

—Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice,
Metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakspeare.

T' allay the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new metheglin join. Dryden.

METHINKS, mê-thînk's. verb impersonal. [me and thinks. This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I.] I think; it it seems to me; meseems. See ME-SEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise meseems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryden.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Spectator.

Methinks already I your tears survey. Pope.

METHOD, mêth'ôd.¹⁶⁸ n. s. [methode, Fr. méthode.] The placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill, the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hooker.

If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks, Or I will beat this method in your scone. Shaksp.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Spect.

METHODOICAL, mê-thôd'ê-kâl. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Spectator.

Let me appear, great sir, I pray, Methodical in what I say. Addison.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irremediable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

METHODOICALLY, mê-thôd'ê-kâl-ê. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryd.

To METHODISE, mêth'ô-dîze. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer, The royal spy retir'd again unseen, To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen, And methodize revenge. Dryden.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spectator.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in the reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Spectator.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd, Are nature still, but nature methodis'd. Pope.

METHODIST, mêth ô-dist. n. s. [from method.]

1. A physician who practises by theory. Our warriest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, mê-thâw'. the preterit of methinks. [See METHINKS and MESEEMS.] I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has meseemed, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meseems.

Methought a serpent eat my heart away, And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakespeare.

Since I sought By pray'r th'offended deity t' appease; Kneel'd, and before him humb'd all my heart, Methought, I saw him placable and mild, Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew That I was heard with favour; peace return'd Home to my breast; and to my memory His promise, "That thy seed shall bruise our foe." Milton.

In these I found not what, methought, I wanted still. Mill. Methought I stood on a wide river's bank, Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METONYMICAL, mêt-tô-nîm'mê-kâl. adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY, mêt-tô-nîm'mê-kâl-ê. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle.

METONYMY, mê-tôn'ê-mê, or mêt'ô-nîm-ê. n. s. [metonymie, Fr. μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which, by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPSCOPY, mêt-tô-pôs'kô-pê.⁵¹⁸ n. s. [metoposcopie, Fr. μέτωπον and σκέπτω.]

The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE, mê'têr.⁴¹⁸ n. s. [metrum, Lat. μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Abuse the city's best good men in metre, To laugh at lords. Pope.

METRICAL, mêt'trê-kâl. adj. [metricus, Lat. metrique, French.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.
2. Consisting of verses; as, metrical precepts.

METROPOLIS, mê-trôp'pô-lîs.⁵¹⁸ n. s. [metropolis, Lat. metropole, Fr. μητηρ and πολις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware The goodly prospect of some foreign land, First seen: or some renown'd metropolis, With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Mil.
Reduc'd in careful watch Round their metropolis. Milton.
We stopp'd at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town. Addison on Italy.

METROPOLITAN, mêt-trô-pôl'ê-tân. n. s. [metropolitanus, Lat.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.

METROPOLITAN, mêt-trô-pôl'ê-tân. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

Their patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops. Raleigh.

METROPOLITICAL, mê-trô-pô-lit'ê-kâl. adj. [from metropolis.] Chief or principal of cities.

He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitcal city of Stiria. Knolles.

METTLE, mêt'tl. n. s. [corrupted from metal, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spriteliness; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be? He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shak.

I had rather go with sir priest than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shaksp. Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditious. Hayward.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's steed, Restrain his fury than provoke his speed; The winged courser, like a gen'rous horse, Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.

2. Substance: this at least should be metal. Oh thou! whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed, Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shaksp.

METTLED, mêt'tl'd.³⁵⁹ adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and metall'd dance Saw you never. Ben Jonson.

Nor would you find it easy to compose The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

METTLESOME, mêt'tl-sûm. adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.

Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Talter.

METTLESOMELY, mêt'tl-sûm-lê. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spriteliness.

MEW, mû. n. s. [muc, French.]

1. A cage; an enclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome mew, Where she all day did hide her hated bew. Spenser. There then she does transform to monstrous hues, And horribly mis-shapes with ugly sights, Captiv'd eternally in iron mews, And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shevs. Spenser.

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse To touch the dainty needle or nice thread; She hated chambers, closets, secret mews,

And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead.

Fairfax.

2. [mæp, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first sort we reckon coots, sanderlings, and mewes.

Carew.

The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the mewes in triumph ride.

Dryden.

To MEW, mû. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to enclose.

He in dark corners mew'd,
Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd.

Hubberd.

Why should your fears, which, as they say attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman.

Shakespeare.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon.

Shakespeare.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Shakspeare.

Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air.

Dryd.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company.

Locke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayres, mewings, custing, and renovation of their feathers.

Watson.

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp.

Cleaveland.

Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsupply'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabeen fields afford her needful rest.

Dryden.

3. [miauler, Fr.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day.

Shaks.

They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark.

Grew.

To MEWL, mûle. v. n. [miauler, Fr.] To squall as a child.

The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.

Shakspeare.

MEZE'REON, mé-z'é-ré-ûn.¹⁶⁶ n. s. A species of spurge laurel.

Mezereon is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat.

Hill.

MEZZOTINTO, mét-sò-tin'tò. n. s. [Italian.] A kind of graving, so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted: it is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT, mént. adv. Mingled. Obsolete.

The salt Medway, that trickling streams
Adown the dales of Kent,
Till with the elder brother Thames
His brackish waves be meynt.

Spenser.

MÍ'ASM, mí'áz. n. s. [from μιασμα, inquino, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from distempered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential miasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body.

Harvey.

MICE, míse. The plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the laud.

1 Samuel.

MÍ'CHÆLMASS, mík'kêl-mûs.²⁰¹ n. s. [Michael and mass.] The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmas for thirty pounds price.

Carew.

To MICHE, mítsh. v. n. To be secret or covered; to lie hid.

Marry this is mitching unalicho; it means mischief.

Shakespeare.

MÍ'CHER, mítsh'ûr. n. s. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight; a hedge-creeper. Mich or mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western counties for a truant boy.

How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage she did the micher bind.

Sidney.

Shall the blessed son of heav'n prove a micher, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked.

Shakespeare.

MÍ'CKLE, mík'kl.³⁰⁵ adj. [micel, Sax.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This reade is rife that oftentime
Great cumbers fall unsoft:

In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,

And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his miss not mickle.

Spenser.

Many a little makes a mickle.
If I to-day don't die with Freuchen's rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age.

Shakspeare.

O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.

Shakespeare.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge.

Milton.

MÍCROC'ISM, mí'krò-kòsm. n. s. [μικροσμος and κόσμος.] The little world. Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm.

Shakespeare.

She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how lame a creple this world is.

Shakespeare.

As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part;
So Rome's victorious influence did dispesc
All her own virtues through the universe.

Denham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politick.

Swift.

MÍCROGRAPHY, mí'kròg'rá-fè. n. s. [μικρογραφία and γράφω] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.

The honey bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter; a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrography.

Grew.

MÍCRO'METER, mí-krò'm'é-tûr.^{129 518} n. s.

[μικρομετρον and μέτρον; micrometre, Fr.]

An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MÍ'CROSCOPE, mí'krò-skòpe. n. s.

[μικροσκοπία and σκοπία; microscope, Fr.]

An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs.

Bentley.

The critick eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit.

Dunciad.

MÍCROSCO'PICAL, mí-krò-skòp'è-kál. }
MÍCROSCO'PICK, mí-krò-skòp'pík.⁵⁰⁹ }

adj. [from microscope.]

1. Made by a microscope.
Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids.

Arbuthnot.

2. Assisted by a microscope.
Evading even the microscopick eye!
Full uature swarms with life.

Thomson.

3. Resembling a microscope.
Why has not man-a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly;
Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n?

Pope.

MÍD, míd. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.

No more the mounting larks, while Dapline sings,
Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings.

Pope.

Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,
Unweary'd through the num'rous host he past.

Rowe.

2. It is much used in composition.

MÍD-COURSE, míd'kòrse. n. s. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.

Why in the east
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white.

Milton.

MÍ'DDAY, míd'dá. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional; being at noon.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush.

Sidney.

His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.

Shakespeare.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Addison.

MÍ'DDAY, míd'dá. n. s. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly laboured, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day.

Donne.

MÍ'DDEST, míd'dést. superl. of mid, middest, midst.

Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in nightly view.

Spens.

MÍ'DDLE, míd'dl.⁵⁰⁵ adj. [middle, Sax.]

1. Equally distant from the two extremes.
The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people; the middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues they have no sense.

Bacon.
A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness.

Rogers.
To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines.

Arbutnot.
I like people of middle understanding and middle rank.

2. Intermediate; intervening.
Will, seeking good, finds many middle ends.

3. Middle finger; the long finger.
You first introduce the middle finger of the left-hand.

MI'DDLE, mîd'dl. n. s.

1. Part equally distant from two extremities; the part remote from the verge.

There come people down by the middle of the land.

With roof so low that under it
They never stand, but lie or sit;
And yet so foul, that whoso is in,
Is to the middle leg in prison.

2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties are the end.

MIDDLE-AGED, mîd'dl-âdj'd. adj. [middle and age.] Placed about the middle of life.

A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives.

The middle-aged support fasting the best, because of the oily parts abounding in the blood.

I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one; you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one.

MI'DDLEMOST, mîd'dl-môst. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.

Why have not some beasts more than four feet, suppose six, and the middlemost shorter than the rest?

The outmost fringe vanished first and the middlemost next, and the innermost last.

The outward stars, with their systems of planets must necessarily have descended towards the middlemost system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a finite space.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale.

MILDEW, mil'dú. n. s. [mildeape, Sax.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant; or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the spring and summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the east, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration: whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are enticed thereto. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words.

Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildews blacken'd all the grain. Dryden.

To MIL'DEW, mil'dū. v. a. To taint with mildew.

4. Soft; gentle; tender; timorous.

Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights? Shakspere.

This milky gentleness and course of yours, You are much more at task for want of wisdom, Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shaksp.

MILKY-WAY, milk'é-wâ. n. s. [milky and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but by the telescopic observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. Harris.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey The distant skies to find the milky-way: It forcibly intrudes upon our sight. Creech.

How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

MILL, mil. n. s. [μόλη; mola, Lat. melin, Welsh; mÿln, Sax. moulin, Fr. molen, Dutch.] An engine or fabrick in which corn is ground to meal, or any other body is comminuted. In general an engine in which any operation is performed by means of wind or water; sometimes it is used of engines turned by the hand, or by animal force.

The table, and we about it, did all turn round by water which ran under and carried it about as a mill. Sidney.

Olives ground in mills their fatness boast. Dryd. A miller had his arm and scapula torn from his body by a rope twisted round his wrist, and suddenly drawn up by the mill. Sharp.

To give the square root of the number two, he laboured long in millesimal fractions, till he confessed there was no end. Watts.

MILLET, mil'lît.⁹⁹ n. s. [milium, Latin; mil and millet, French.]

1. A plant.

The millet hath a loose divided panicle, and each single flower hath a calyx, consisting of two leaves, which are instead of petals, to protect the stamina and pistillum of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oval, shining seed. This plant was originally brought from the eastern countries, where it is still greatly cultivated, from whence we are annually furnished with this grain, which is by many persons much esteemed for puddings. Miller.

In two ranks of cavities is placed a roundish studd, about the bigness of a grain of millet. Woodward.

Millet is diarrhetic, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbuthnot.

2. A kind of fish; unless it be misprinted for millet.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting, mackarel, millet. Carew.

MILLINER, mil'lîn-nûr.⁹⁵ n. s. [I believe from milaner, an inhabitant of Milan, as a Lombard is a banker.] One who sells ribands and dresses for women.

He was perfum'd like a milliner, And, 'twixt his finger and his thumb, he held A pouncet box, which ever and anon He gave his nose. Shaksp.

The mercers and milliners complain of her want of publick spirit. Tatler.

If any one asks Flavia to do something in charity, she will toss him half a crown, or a crown, and tell him, if he knew what a long milliner's bill she had just received, he would think it a great deal for her to give. Kear.

MI'LLION, mil'yûn.¹¹³ n. s. [million, Fr. milliogne, Italian.]

1. The number of a hundred myriads, or ten hundred thousand.

Within thine eyes, sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers. Shaksp.

2. A proverbial name for any very great number.

That the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones, is a truth more evident than many of those propositions that go for principles; and yet there are millions who know not this at all. Locke.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know. Locke.

She found the polish'd glass, whose small convex Enlarges to ten millions of degrees
The mite, invisible else. Philips.

Mid'st thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd;
And glad all heaven with millions thou hast sav'd. Prior.

MI'LLIONTH, mil'yûnth. adj. [from million.] The ten hundred thousandth.

The first embriom of an ant is supposed to be as big as that of an elephant; which nevertheless can never arrive to the millionth part of the other's bulk. Bentley.

MI'LLSTONE, mil'stone. n. s. [mill and stone.] The stone by which corn is comminuted.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge. Deuteronomy.

MIME, mime. n. s. [mime, Fr. mîme; mimus, Lat.] A buffoon who practises gesticulations, either representative of some action, or merely contrived to raise mirth.

Think'st thou, mime, this is great? Ben Jonson.

To MIME, mime. v. n. To play the mime.

Think'st thou, mime, this is great? or that they strive

Whose noise shall keep thy miming most alive,
Whilst thou dost raise some player from the grave,
Out-dance the babion, or out-boast the brave? Ben Jonson.

MI'MER, mî'mûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from mime.] A mimick; a buffoon.

Jugglers, and dancers, anticks, mummers, mimers. Milton.

MI'MICAL, mîm'mê-kâl. adj. [mimicus, Lat.] Imitative; befitting a mimick; acting the mimick.

Man is of all creatures the most mimical in gestures, styles, speech, fashion, or accents. Walton.

A mimical daw would needs try the same experiment; but his claws were shackled. L'Estrange.

Singers and dancers entertained the people with light songs and mimical gestures, that they might not go away melancholy from serious pieces of the theatre. Dryden.

MI'MICALLY, mîm'mê-kâl-ê. adv. [from mimical.] In imitation; in a mimical manner.

MI'MICK, mîm'mîk.⁶⁴³ n. s. [mimicus, Lat.]

1. A ludicrous imitator; a buffoon who copies another's act or manner so as to excite laughter.

Like poor Andrew I advance,
False mimick of my master's face:
Around the cord awhile I sprawl,
And thence, though slow, in earnest fall. Prior.

2. A mean or servile imitator.

Of France the mimick, and of Spain the prey. Anon.

MI'MICK, mîm'mîk. adj. [mimicus, Lat.] Imitative.

In reason's absence mimick fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams. Mill.

The busy head with mimick art runs o'er
The scenes and actions of the day before. Swift.

To MI'MICK, mîm'mîk. v. a. [from the noun.] To imitate as a buffoon; to ridicule by a burlesque imitation.

Morpheus express'd
The shape of man, and imitated best;
The walk, the words, the gesture, could supply,
The habit mimick, and the mien belye. Dryden.

Who wou'd with care some happy fiction frame,
So mimicks truth, it looks the very same. Granville.

MI'MICKRY, mîm'mîk-rê. n. s. [from mimick.] Burlesque imitation.

By an excellent faculty in mimickry, my correspondent tells me he can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a slyness which diverts more than any thing I could say. Spectator.

MIMO'GRAPHER, mê-môg'grâf-fûr. n. s. [minus and γράφω.] A writer of farces. Dict.

To MINCE, mînse. v. a. [contracted as it seems, from minish, or from mincer; mince, French; small.]

1. To cut into very small parts.

She saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shaksp.

With a good chopping knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon.

What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves, read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscriptions? South.

Revive the wits;

But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Dunc.

2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.

I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Shaksp.

Iago,

Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Shaksp.

These gifts,

Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive;
If you might please to stretch it. Shaksp.

I'll try to force you to your duty:

For so it is, howe'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hudibras.

Siren; now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase,
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

If, to mince his meaning, I had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression, I certainly had wronged him. Dryden.

These, seeing no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.

3. To speak with affected softness; to clip the words.

Behold you simpering dame, whose face between her forks presages snow; that minces virtue, and does shake the head to hear of pleasure's name. Shaksp.

To MINCE, mînse. v. n.

1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicety.

By her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. F. Queen.

Into a manly stride. Shaksp.

A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye. Dunciad.

2. To speak small and imperfectly.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other, as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking wife of Bath. Dryden.

MI'NOINGLY, mîn'sîng-lê.³¹⁰ adv. [from mince.] In small parts; not fully.

Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker.

MIND, mind. n. s. [gemind, Sax.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very foolish fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shaksp.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion: as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for men's conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences: but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object, or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ free from passion coming from without, and apt to be dissevered, as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

I thought th' eternal Mind
Had made us masters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's endless, and blame fate
For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination, propension; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God? Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
Aud come some other time to know our mind. Shaksp.

Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind.
Shaksp.

I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shaksp.
Be of the same mind one toward another. Rom.
Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forsake her not.
Ecclesiasticus.

They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit. Bacon.

Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton.

Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.

He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson.

Suppose that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make?
Addison.

4. Thoughts; sentiments.

Th' ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind exprest,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest.
Dryden.

5. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose, as fearing you, it shook. Shaksp.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Granville.

6. Memory; remembrance.

The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton.

These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menaleas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path disus'd was out of mind. Dryden.

They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury.

A wholesome law time out of mind,
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift.

To MIND, mind. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark; to attend.

His mournful plight is swallowed up unawares,
Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares.
Fairy Queen.

Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft, and mind thou me!
Milton.

If, in the raving of a frantick muse,
And *mind*ing more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Roscommon.
Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.

He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers, and inward suggestions of the Holy Spirit, to attend to those prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.

2. To put in mind; to remind.

Let me be punished, that have *mind*ed you
Of what you should forget. Shaksp.
I desire to mind those persons of St. Austin.
Burnet.

This minds me of a cobbling colouel. L'Estrange.
I shall only mind him that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Locke.

To MIND, mind. v. n. To incline; to be disposed.

When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion, he will convey away all his lordships to feoffees in trust. Spenser.

MINDED, *mind'*ed. adj. [from mind.]

1. Disposed; inclined; affected.

We come to know
How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty diff'rence
Between the king and you. Shaksp.
Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so *mind*ed still. Milton.

If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design but very much for its advancement. Tillotson.

Pyrrhus is nobly *mind*ed; and I fain
Would live to thank him. Philips.

2. Minded is used in compounds: as, high- *mind*ed.

I am not *high-mind*ed, I have no proud looks.
Psalms.

3. We say likewise *low-mind*ed.

MINDFUL, *mind'*ful. adj. [mind and full.]

Attentive; heedful; having memory.

*mind*ful.] Attention; regard.

MINDLSS, *mind'*lès. adj. [from mind.]

1. Inattentive; regardless.

Cursed Athens, *mind*less of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.
Shaksp.

As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
*Mind*less of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.

2. Not endowed with a mind; having no in- tellectual powers.

God first made angels bodiless, pure minds;
Then other things, which *mind*less bodies be:
Last, he made man. Davies.

3. Stupid; unthinking.

Pronounce thee a gross lout, a *mind*less slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shaksp.

MIND-STRIKEN, *mind'*strik-k'n. adj.
[mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.

He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney.

MINE, mine. pronoun possessive. [mÿn,
Sax. mein, German; mien, Fr. meus, Lat.
It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant, and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat; this cat is mine.] Belonging to me.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shaksp.

When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again. Shaksp.
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghost will haunt me still.

ing to set before him. Luke.
That palm is mine. Dryden.

MINE, mine. n. s. [mine, Fr. mwyn or mwn, Welsh, from maen lapis, in the plural
meini.]

1. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals or minerals.
Though streighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine.
Waller.

A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which was little esteemed.
Boyle.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.

The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible.
Boyle.

2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support; or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a prop- er time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What sacrilege hath such a saint disgrac'd?
Sidney.

Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have dugged. Whitgift.

Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamped; by batt'ry, scale and mine
Assaulting. Milton.

To MINE, mine. v. n. [from the noun.] To dig mines or burrows; to form any hollows under ground.

The ranging stork in stately beeches dwells;
The climbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining coney's shroud in rocky cells. Wotton.
Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists from its surface to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine. Woodward.

To MINE, mine. v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines; to destroy by slow degrees, or secret means.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unscen. Shaksp.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and raimed the mouth; but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.

MIN'ER, *mine'*ér.⁸⁸ n. s. [mineur, Fr. from mine.]

1. One who digs for metals.

By me kings palaces are push'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found.
Dryden.

2. One who makes military mines.

As the bombardeer levels his mischief at cities,
the miner busies himself in ruining private houses.
Tatler.

MIN'ERAL, *min'*ér-âl.⁸⁸ n. s. [mineralc, Latin.] Fossil body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals. Minerals in the restrained sense are bodies that may be melted, but not malleated.

She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shaksp.

The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin are of great value. Bacon.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with al-lum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward.

MIN'ERAL, *min'*ér-âl. adj. Consisting of fossile bodies.

By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward.

MINERALIST, mìn'nêr-âl-ist. n. s. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shews it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.

The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.

MINERALOGIST, mìn-nêr-âl'lô-jist. n. s. [mineralogie, French; from mineral and λογος.] One who discourses on minerals. Many authors deny it, and the exactest mineralogists have rejected it. Brown.

MINERALOGY, mìn-nêr-âl'lô-jê. n. s. [from mineral and λογος.] The doctrine of minerals.

MINE'VER, mìn-êv'vûr. n. s. A skin with specks of white. Ainsworth.

of their mingling with the Gentiles. 2 Maccabees.
Nor priests, nor statesmen,
Could have completed such an ill as that,
If women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.
She, when she saw her sister nymphs, suppress'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addis.

MI'NGLE, ming'gl. n. s. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shaksp.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural mingle. Dryd.

MI'NGLER, ming'gl-ûr. n. s. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

MI'NIATURE, mìn'ê-tûre. n. s. [miniature, Fr. from minimum, Lat.]

1. Painting by powders mixed with gum and water. A mode of painting almost appropriated to small figures.

2. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.

The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison.

The hidden ways

Of nature would'st thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature, thy specular orb
Apply to well disscoted kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its houghs; observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd. Philips.

3. Gay has improperly made it an adjective.

Here shall the pencil bid its colours flow,
And make a miniature creation grow. Gay.

MI'NIKIN, mìn'nê-kin. adj. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shaksp.

MI'NIKIN, mìn'nê-kin. n. s. A small sort of pins.

MI'NIM, mìn'nim. n. s. [from minimum, Latin.]

1. A small being; a dwarf.

Not all
Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind,
Wondrous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their snaky folds, and added wings. Milton.

2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small sort of fish, which they pronounce mennim. See MINNOW.

MI'NIMUS, mìn'nê-mûs. n. s. [Latin.] A being of the least size.

Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hind'ring knot grass made;
You head, you acorn. Shaksp.

MI'NION, mìn'yûn. n. s. [mignon, Fr.]

A favourite; a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt; or of slight and familiar kindness.

Minion, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days; I see a number of lads that love you. Sidney.

They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions, when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, stirred up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.

One, who had been a special minion of Andromanas, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney.

Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shaksp.

His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look. Shaksp.
Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the person of his minion Piers Gaveston. Davies.

If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estr.

The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.

MI'NIUS, mìn'yûs. adj. [from minium, Lat.] Of the colour of red lead or vermilion.

Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and minious tincture from springs that fall into it. Brown.

impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon.

MINISTER, mìn'nis-tûr. n. s. [ministre, Lat. ministre, French.]

1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

You, whom virtue hath made the princess of felicity, he not the minister of ruin. Sidney.

Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shaksp.

Th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Sciz'd the due victim. Dryden.

Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restrains or sends his ministers abroad. Blackmore.

2. One who is employed in the administration of government.

Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are, must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.

3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.

Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Col.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.

The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station renders their conduct more observable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.

Calidus contents himself with thinking, that he never was a friend to hereticks and infidels; that he has always been civil to the minister of his parish, and very often given something to the charity-schools. Law.

4. A delegate; an official.

If wrongfully
Let God revenge: for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shaksp.

5. An agent from a foreign power without the dignity of an ambassador.

To MI'NISTER, mìn'nis-tûr. v. a. [ministro, Lat.] To give; to supply; to afford.

The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Otway.

To MI'NISTER, mìn'nis-tûr. v. n.

1. To attend; to serve in any office.

At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton.

2. To give medicines.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain? Shaksp.

3. To give supplies of things needful; to give assistance; to contribute; to afford.

Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke.

He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should set his soul to learn of his hody; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South.

There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to our pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little farther into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.

Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.

Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues. Smalbridge.

4. To attend on the service of God.

Whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering. Romans.

MINISTERIAL, mĭn-nĭs-tĕr-ĕ-Āl. adj. [from minister.]

1. Attendant; acting at command.

Understanding is in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox. Brown.

From essences unseen, celestial names, Enlight'ning spirits, and ministerial flames, Lift we our reason to that sovereign Cause, Who hless'd the whole with life. Prior.

2. Acting under superiour authority.

For the ministerial offices, in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects; as it reveals us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Rogers.

3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiasticks or their office.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.

4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.

MINISTERIALLY, mĭn-nĭs-tĕr-ĕ-Āl-lĕ. adv.

In a ministerial manner. Supremacy of office, by mutual agreement and voluntary œconomy, belongs to the Father; while the Son, out of voluntary condescension, submits to act ministerially, or in capacity of mediator. Waterland.

MINISTRY, mĭn-nĭs-tĕr-ĕ. n. s. [from ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.

They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants' mouths that are dexterous in that ministry. Digby.

This temple to frequent With ministeries due, and solemn rites. Milton.

MINISTRAL, mĭn-nĭs-trāl. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.

MINISTRANT, mĭn-nĭs-trānt. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command. Pope accents it, not according to analogy, on the second syllable.

Him thrones, and pow'rs, Princdoms, and dominations ministrant, Accompany'd to heav'n gate. Milton.

Ministrant to their queen with busy care, Four faithful handmaids the soft rites prepare. Pope.

MINISTRANTION, mĭn-nĭs-trā-shŭn. n. s. [from ministro, Latin.]

1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.

God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own land to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministrantion to me, intends to do him a favour. Taylor.

Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministrantion of angels. Hale.

2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function.

The profession of a clergyman is an holy profession, because it is a ministrantion in holy things, an attendance at the altar. Lavo.

If the present ministrantion be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterbury.

MINISTRY, mĭn-nĭs-trĕ. n. s. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Lat.]

1. Office; service.

So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more sacred than others. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run, Their doctrine and their story written left, They die. Milton.

Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.

3. Agency; interposition.

The natural world, he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of second causes. Atterbury.

To all but thee in fit's he seem'd to go, And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow. Parnel.

The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existance of human souls. Bentley.

4. Business.

He safe from loud alarms, Ahhord the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden.

5. Persons employed in the publick affairs of a state.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

MINIUM, mĭn'yŭm. n. s. [Lat.]

Red lead. Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called masticot or massicot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill.

MINNOCK, mĭn'nŏk. n. s. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word.

An ass's nose I fixed on his head; Anou his 'Thibe must be answered, And forth my minnock comes. Shakspeare.

MINNOW, mĭn'nŏ. n. s. [from menue, Fr.] A very small fish; a pink: a corruption of minim, which see.

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakspeare.

The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the spring they make excellent minnow tansies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses and tansy. Walton.

The nimble turning of the minnow, is the perfection of minnow fishing. Walton.

MINOR, mĭ'nŭr. adj. [Latin.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there arc petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet it is not safe to contemn inferior falsities. Brown.

2. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.

The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in minor and less mistakeable numbers. Brown.

MINOR, mĭ'nŭr. n. s.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. Davies.

He and his muse might be minors, but the liberties are full grown. Collier.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run, When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.

The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.

A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardiau. Ayliffe.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbutnot.

TO MINORATE, mĭ'nŏ-rāte. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.

This it doth not only by the advantage of assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minorates the object. Glanville.

MINORATION, mĭ'nŏ-rā-shŭn. n. s. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.

Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiencies are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINORITY, mĕ-nŏr-ĕ-tĕ. n. s. [from minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakspeare.

He is young, and his minority Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakspeare.

These changes in religion should he staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no. Hayward.

Henry the eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon.

If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet.

Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown.

3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MI'NOTAUR, mìn'nò-tàvur. n. s. [minotaure, French; minos and taurus, Latin.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus' labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth, There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shaksp.

MI'NSTER, mìn'stûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [minstere, Saxon.] A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

MI'NSTREL, mìn'strîl.⁹⁹ n. s. [menestril, Spanish; menestrallus, low Latin.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.
I will give you the minstrel.

—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shaksp.

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country town;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-checks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our scers and poets have confess'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MI'NSTRELSEY, mìn'strêl-sê. n. s. [from minstrel.]

1. Musick; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelsey. Davies.
That loving wretch that swears,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsey, the spheres. Donne.

I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsey,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.

2. A number of musicians.

Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsey of heaven. Milton.

MINT, mînt. n. s. [mintæ, Saxon; mentha, French; mentha, Latin.] A plant. Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gathered mint, A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT, mînt. n. s. [munte, Dutch; mynetian, to coin, Saxon.]

1. The place where money is coined.

What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shaksp.
As the *mint*s of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison.

To MINT, mînt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon.

MI'NTAGE, mînt'idje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from mint.]

1. That which is coined or stamped.

Its pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
Character'd in the face. Milton.

2. The duty paid for coining. Ainsworth.

MI'NTER, mînt'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from mint.]

With whom she danc'd a minuet so late. Stepney.
John has assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spectator.

MI'NUM, mîn'nûm. n. s.

1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter.

2. [With musicians.] A note of slow time, two of which make a semibrief, as two crotchets make a minum; two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver. Bailey.

He's the courageous captain of compliments; he fights as you sing pricksongs, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests his minum, one, two, and the third in your bosom. Shaksp.

MI'NU'TE, mè-nûte'. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.

Some minute philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.

Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of Providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things. South.

Into small parts the wond'rous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minutest size express
The same propension which the large possess. Blackmore.

The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minutest channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbutnot.

In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watts' Logick.

MI'NUTE, mîn'nît. n. s. [minutum, Lat.]

1. The sixtieth part of an hour.

This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with list'ning ravis'd, could not find
His hour of speech a minute. Shaksp.

2. Any small space of time.

They walk'd about me ev'ry minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shaksp.

The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes
wing'd. Milton.

Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham.

Experience does every minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South.

Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden.

To MI'NUTE, mîn'nît. v. a. [minuter, Fr.] To set down in short hints.

I no sooner heard this critick talk of my works, but I minuted what he had said, and resolv'd to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spectator.

MI'NUTE-BOOK, mîn'nît-bôôk. n. s. [minute and book.] Book of short hints.

MI'NUTE-GLASS, mîn'nît-glâs. n. s. [minute and glass.] Glass of which the sand measures a minute.

MI'NU'TELY, mè-nûte'lê. adv. [from minute.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part; nicely.

In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that slow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious perspicuity. Locke.

Change of night and day,
And of the seasons ever-stealing round,
Minutely faithful. Thomson.

MI'NU'TELY, mîn'nît-lê. adv. [from minute, the substantive.]

1. Every minute; with very little time intervening.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our cars? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from so mortiferous a state. Hammond.

2. [In the following passage it seems rather to be an adjective, as hourly is both the adverb and adjective.] Happening every minute.

Now minutely revolts upbraids his faith-breach,
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shaksp.

MI'NU'TENESS, mè-nûte'nês. n. s. [from minute.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.

1. A wonder; something above human power.

Nothing almost sees miracles

But misery. Shakespeare.

Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,

To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakespeare.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,

Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me. Shakespeare.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley.

MIRACULOUS, mê-râk'kù-lûs. adj. [miraculeux, French; from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.

Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Raleigh.

Restore this day, for thy great name,
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.

Why this strength

Miraculous yet remaining in those locks?

His might continues in thee not for naught. Milton.

At the first planting of the christian religion, God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotson.

MIRACULOUSLY, mê-râk'kù-lûs-lê. adv. [from miraculous.] By miracle; by power above that of nature.

It was a singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those christian parts, where they might receive christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser.

Turnus was to be slain that very day; and Aeneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.

MIRACULOUSNESS, mê-râk'kù-lûs-nês. n. s. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.

MIRADO'R, mir'â-dôre. n. s. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shows.

Mean time your valiant son, who had before

Gain'd fame, rode round, to ev'ry mirador;

Beneath each lady's stand a stop he made,

And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid. Dryden.

MIRE, mirê. n. s. [moer, Dut.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.

He his rider from her lofty steed
Would have cast down, and trod in dirty mire.

Spenser.

Here's that, which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire.

Shakespeare.

I'm Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire.

Hudibras.

I appeal to any man's reason, whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mire and water.

More.

Now plung'd in mire, now by sharp brambles torn.

Roscommon.

To MIRE, mirê. v. a. [from the noun.]

To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,

Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?

Who smeared thus, and mir'd with infamy,

I might have said no part of it is mine. Shaksp.

MIRE, mirê. n. s. [myr, Welsh; mýra, Saxon; mier, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

MIR'INESS, mir'ê-nês. n. s. [from miry.] Dirtiness; fulness of mire.

MIR'KSOME, mêrk'sûm. adj. [morck, dark, Danish.] In the derivatives of this set, no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform.] Dark; obscure.

Through mirksome air her ready way she makes.

Fairy Queen.

MIR'ROR, mir'rûr.^{109 166} n. s. [miroir, Fr. mirar, Spanish, to look.]

1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.

And in his waters which your mirror make,

Behold your faces as the crystal bright. Spenser.

That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,

To view myself infus'd an inward light,

Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,

Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.

Less bright the moon,

But opposite in levell'd west was set

His mirror, with full face borrowing her light

From him. Milton.

Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,

Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,

Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures

A remedy like those whom music cures. Waller.

By chance she spy'd a miroir while he spoke,

And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;

Wond'ring, he saw his features and his hue

So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew. Dryden.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,

In the clear miroir of thy ruling star,

I saw, alas! some dread event depend. Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glass to adjust their mien or dress; an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no less exact, than if she did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker.

O goddess, heavenly bright,

Mirror of grace and majesty divine. Fairy Queen.

How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?

Shakespeare.

Mirror of ancient faith in early youth. Dryden.

MIR'ROR-STONE, mir'rûr-stônê. n. s. [selénites, Latin.] A kind of transparent stone. Ainsworth.

MIRTH, *mêrth.*¹⁰⁸ n. s. [mýrthê, Sax.] Merriment; jollity; gayety; laughter.

To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave. Shaksp.

His eye begets occasion for his wit;

For every object that the one doth catch,

The other turns to a mirth-moving jest. Shaksp.

Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South.

With genial joy to warm the soul,

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl. Pope.

MIR'THFUL, mêrth'fûl. adj. [mirth and full.] Merry; gay; cheerful.

No simple word,

That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,

Shall make us sad next morning. Ben Jonson.

The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;

To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.

MIR'THLESS, mêrth'lês. adj. [from mirth.] Joyless; cheerless.

MIR'RY, mir'ê. adj. [from mirê.]

1. Deep in mud; muddy.

Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled. Shakespeare.

All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.

Deep through a miry lane she pick'd her way,

Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay.

So have I seen ill-coupled hounds

Drag dif'rent ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Consisting of mire.

Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain

Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,

How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,

With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shaksp.

MIS, mîs. an inseparable particle used in composition, to mark an ill sense, or deprivation of the meaning: as, chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended: from mes in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples; but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.

MISACCEPT'ATION, mîs-âk-sêp-tâ'shûn. n. s. [mis and acceptation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVE'NTURE, mîs-âd-vên'tshûre. n. s. [mesaventure, French; mis and adventure.] Misclance; misfortune; ill luck; bad fortune.

Your locks are pale and wild, and do import

Some misadventure. Shakespeare.

When a commander, either upon necessity or misadventure, falleth into danger, it much advanceth both his reputation and euterprize, if bravely he behaveth himself. Hayward.

The body consisted, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than six thousand foot.

Clarendon.

Distinguish betwixt misadventure and design.

L'Estrange.

The trouble of a misadventure now and then, that reaches not his innocenc or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution.

Locke.

MISADVE'NTURED, *mîs-âd-vên'tshûr'd.*³⁶⁹ adj. [from misadventure.] Unfortunate.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,

A pair of starcross lovers take their life;

Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrow

Do with their death bury their parents strife. Shakspeare.
MISADVI'SED, mis-ád-viz'd'.³⁵⁹ adj. [mis and advised.] Ill directed.
MISA'IMED, mis-ám'd'.³⁵⁹ adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.
 The idle stroke enforcing furious way,
 Missing the mark of his misaimed sight,
 Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen.
MISANTHROPE, mis-án'thròpè.⁶⁰³ n. s.
MISA'NTHROPOS, mis-án'thrò-pòs. } [mi- santhrope, French; μισάνθρωπος.] A hater of mankind.
 I am misanthrosos, and hate mankind. Shaksp.
 Alas, poor dean! his only scope
 Was to be held a misanthrope;
 This into gen'ral odium drew him. Swift.
MISANTHROPY, mis-án'thrò-pè.⁶¹⁸ n. s.
 [misanthrope, French; from misan- thrope.] Hatred of mankind.
MISAPPLICA'TION, mis-áp-plé-ká'shún.
n. s. [mis and application.] Application to a wrong purpose.
 The indistinction of many in the community of name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof. Brown.
 The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the misappli- cation of their bounty. Atterbury.
 It is our duty to be provident for the future, and to guard against whatever may lead us into misap- plications of it. Rogers.
To MISAPPLY', mis-áp-plí'. v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.
 Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied,
 And vice sometimes by actions dignified. Shaksp.
 The holy treasure was to be reserved, and issued for holy uses, and not misapplied to any other ends.
Howel.
 He that knows, that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not misapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.
To MISAPPREHEND, mis-áp-prè-hénd'.
v. a. [mis and apprehend.] Not to understand rightly.
 That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my misapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.
MISAPPREHENSION, mis-áp-prè-hén'shún.
n. s. [mis and apprehension.] Mistake;
 not right apprehension.
 It is a degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our misappre- hensions and errors. Glanville.
To MISASCRIBE, mis-ás-skríbe'. v. a. [mis
 and ascribe.] To ascribe falsely.
 That may be misascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.
To MISASSIGN, mis-ás-síne'. v. a. [mis
 and assign.] To assign erroneously.
 We have not misassigned the cause of this phenomenon. Boyle.
To MISBECOME, mis-bé-kúm'. v. a. [mis
 and become.] Not to become; to be unseemly; not to suit.
 Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves need not misbe- come me. Sidney.
 What to the dauphin from England?
 —Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
 And any thing that may not misbecome
 The mighty sender. Shakspeare.
 That boldness which lads get amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turned confidence, that those misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
 Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.
MISBEGOT'T, mis-bé-gót'. } adj.
MISBEGOT'TEN, mis-bé-gót't'n. } [begot or begotten with mis.] Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.
 Contaminated, base,
 And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shaksp.
 Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
 To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
 Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
 Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
 When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakspeare.
 The misbegotten infant grows,
 And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes
 The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
 To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.
To MISBEHAVE, mis-bé-háve'. v. n. [mis
 and behave.] To act or behave improperly.
MISBEHAV'ED, mis-bé-háv'd'. adj. [mis and behaved.] Untaught; ill-bred; un-civil.
 Happiness courts thee in her best array;
 But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
 Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shaksp.
MISBEHAV'IOUR, mis-bé-háve'yûr. n. s.
 [mis and behaviour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.
 The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not so in others. Addison.
MISBELIEF, mis-bé-lééf'. n. s. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.
MISBELIEVER, mis-bé-léé'vûr. n. s. [mis
 and believer.] One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.
 Yes, if I drew it with a curst intent
 To take a misbeliever to my bed,
 It must be so. Dryden.
To MISCAL, mis-káwl.⁴⁰⁶ v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.
 My heart will sigh when I miscal it so. Shaksp.
 The third act, which connects propositions and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscal it if we name it reason. Glanville.
 What you miscal their folly is their care. Dryden.
To MISCALCULATE, mis-kál'kù-láte. v. a.
 [mis and calculate.] To reckon wrong.
 After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated. Arbuthnot.
MISCA'RRIAGE, mis-ká'r'ridje.⁹⁰ n. s. [mis
 and carriage.]
 1. Unhappy event of an undertaking; failure; ill conduct.
 Resolutions of reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former miscar- riages. King Charles.
 When a counsellor, to save himself,
 Would lay miscarriages upon his prince,
 Exposing him to public rage and hate,
 O, 'tis an act as infamously base,
 As, should a common soldier skulk behind,
 And thrust his general in the front of war. Dryden.
 If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.
 A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the excess of fertility which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retracted and cut off. Woodward.

 Your cures aloud you tell,
 But wisely your miscarriages conceal. Garth.
 How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and miscarriages of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers.
 2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.
 There must be miscarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child. Grant.
To MISCA'RRY, mis-ká'r'rè. v. n. [mis and carry.]
 1. To fail; not to have the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the effect intended.
 Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea? Shaksp.
 Our sister's man is certainly miscarried. Shaksp.
 Is it concluded he shall be protector?
 —It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
 But so it must be if the king miscarry. Shaksp.
 If you miscarry,
 Your business of the world hath so an end,
 And machination ceases. Shaksp.
 Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low. Shakspeare.
 I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have miscar- ried. Addison.
 No wonder that this expedient should so often miscarry, which requires so much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it. Swift.
 2. To have an abortion.
 Give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts. Hosea.
 So many politick conceptions so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive.
South.
 His wife miscarried; but the abortion proved a female fœtus. Pope and Arbuthnot.
 You have proved yourself more tender of another's embryos, than the fondest mothers are of their own;
 for you have preserved every thing that I miscarried
 of. Pope.
To MISCA'ST, mis-kást'. v. a. [mis and cast.] To take a wrong account of.
 Men miscast their day; for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born. Brown.
MISCELLA'NE, mis-sél-láne'. n. s. [miscel- laneus, Latin.] This is corrupted into mastlin or mestlin.] Mixed corn; as, wheat and rye.
 It is thought to be of use to make some miscellane in corn; as if you sow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better. Bacon.
MISCELLA'NEOUS, mis-sél-láne-ús. adj.
 [miscellaneous, Latin.] Mingled; composition of various kinds.
 Being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion; for such as amass all relations must err in some, and without offence be unbeliev'd in many. Brown.
 And what the people but a herd confus'd,
 A miscellaneous rabble, who extol Things vulgar, and well weigh'd scarce worth the praise. Milton.
MISCELLA'NEOUSNESS, mis-sél-láne-ús-
 nés. n. s. [from miscellaneous.] Composition of various kinds.
MISCELLANY, mis-sél-lèn-é.⁶⁰³ adj.

compounded of miscellany forces of all nations.

Bacon.

MISCELLANY, mis'sél-lèn-è. n. s. A mass formed out of various kinds.

I acquit myself of the presumption of having lent my name to recommend miscellanies or works of other men. Pope.

When they have joined their perierianies, Out skips a book of miscellanies. Swift.

MISCHANCE, mis-tshânce'. n. s. [mis and chance.] Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.

The lady Ceeropia sent him to excuse the mis-chance of her beasts ranging in that dangerous sort. Sidney.

Extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her family. Sidney.

View these letters full of had mischance, France is revolted. Shaksp.

Sleep rock thy brain, And never come mischance between us twain.

Shakespeare.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him; and nothing can be a fault that is not naturally in a man's power to prevent; otherwise it is a man's unhappiness, his mischance or calamity, but not his fault. South.

MISCHIEF, mis'tshif.²⁷⁷ n. s. [meschef, old French.]

1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and injuriously done.

The law in that case punisheth the thought; for better is a mischiefe than an inconvience. Spenser.

Wherever in your sightless substances You wait on nature's mischiefe. Shaksp.

Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs. Psalms.

Was I the cause of mischiefe, or the man, Whose lawless lust the fatal war began? Dryden.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.

States call in foreigners to assist them against a common enemy; but the mischiefe was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued. Swift.

To MISCHIEF, mis'tshif. v. a. [from the noun.] To hurt; to harm; to injure.

If the greatest inward heat be not sweetened by meekness, or not governed by prudence, can it bring to our souls any benefit? rather it mischiefs them. Sprat.

MISCONCEPTION, mis-kôn-sêp'shûn. } False opinion; wrong notion.

The other which instead of it we are required to accept is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ; no one proof being as yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

It cannot be that our knowledge should be other than a heap of misconception and error. Glanville.

Great errors and dangers result out of a misconception of the names of things. Harvey.

It will be a great satisfaction to see those pieces of most ancient history, which have been chiefly preserved in Scripture, confirmed anew; and freed from those misconceptions or misrepresentations which made them sit uneasy upon the spirits even of the best men. Burnet.

To MISCONCEIVE, mis-kôn-sêve'. v. a.

[mis and conceive.] To misjudge; to have a false notion of.

Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden fears, Break gentle sleep with misconceived doubt. Spens.

Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes of those things, which, for want of due consideration heretofore, they misconceived. Hooker.

Misconceived Joan of Arc hath been A virgin from her tender infancy. Shaksp.

MISCONDUCT, mis-kôn-dûkt. n. s. [mis and conduct.] Ill behaviour; ill management.

They are industriously proclaimed and aggravated by such as are guilty or innocent of the same slips or misconducts in their own behaviour. Addison.

It highly concerned them to reflect, how great obligation both the memory of their past misconduct, and their present advantages, laid on them, to walk with care and circumspection. Rogers.

To MISCONDUCT, mis-kôn-dûkt'. v. a.

[mis and conduct.] To manage amiss; to carry on wrong.

MISCONJECTURE, mis-kôn-jêk'tshûre. n. s. [mis and conjecture.] A wrong guess.

MISCREANCY, mis'krê-ân-sê. } mescrance or mescroiance, French.] Unbelief; false faith; adherence to a false religion.

If thou wilt renounce thy miscreance, And my true liegeman yield thyself for ay, Life will I grant thee for thy valiance. Spenser.

The more usual causes of deprivation are murder, man-slaughter, heresy, miscreancy, atheism, simony. Ayliffe.

MISCREANT, mis'krê-ânt. n. s. [mescrant, Fr.]

1. One that holds a false faith; one who believes in false gods.

Their prophets justly condemned them as an adulterous seed, and a wicked generation of miscreants, which had forsaken the living God. Hooker.

2. A vile wretch.

Now by Apollo, king, Thou swear'st thy gods in vain. —O vassal! miscreant! Shaksp.

If extraordinary lenity proves ineffectual, those miscreants ought to be made sensible that our constitution is armed with force. Addison.

MISCREA'TE, mis-kre-àtè'. } adj. [mis
 MISCREA'TED, mis-kre-à-téd. } and creat- ed.] Formed unnaturally or illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
 And Ymner slew or Logris miscreate. Fairy Queen.
 Eftsoons he took that miscreated fair,
 And that false other sprite, on whom he spread
 A seeming body of the subtle air. Spenser.
 God forbid, my lord,
 That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading;

With opening titles miscreate, whose right
 Suits not in native colours with the truth. Shaksp.
 MISDE'ED, mis-dééd'. n. s. [mis and deed.]
 Evil action.

O God,
 If thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
 Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shaksp.
 Evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought. Milton.

Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd, and exil'd
 For foul misdeeds were punishments too mild. Dryden.

To MISDE'EM, mis-déém'. v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.

All unweeting an enchanter bad
 His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
 My loyalty, not such as it did seem. Fairy Queen.
 Besides, were we unchangeable in will,
 And of a wit that nothing could misdeem;
 Equal to God, whose wisdom shineth still,
 And never errs, we might ourselves esteem. Davies.

To MISDEME'AN, mis-dé-mène'. v. a. [mis
 and demean.] To behave ill.

From frailty
 And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
 Have misdemean'd yourself. Shaksp.

MISDEME'ANOR, mis-dé-mé'nûr.¹⁶⁶ n. s.
 [mis and demean.] Offence; ill behaviour; something less than an atrocious crime.

The house of commons have only power to censure the members of their own house, in point of election, or misdeemeanors in or towards that house. Bacon.

It is no real disgrace to the church merely to lose her privileges, but to forfeit them by her fault or misdeemeanor. South.

These could never have touched the head, or stopped the source of these unhappy misdeemeanors, for which the punishment was sent. Woodward.

MISDEVO'TION, mis-dé-vô'shûn. n. s. [mis
 and devotion.] Mistaken piety.

A place, where misdevotion frames
 A thousand prayers to saints, whose very names
 The church knew not, heav'n knows not yet. Donne.

MISDI'ET, mis-dî'êt. n. s. [mis and diet.]
 Improper food.

A dropsy through his flesh did flow,
 Which by misdiel daily greater grew. Fairy Queen.

To MISDISTI'NGUISH, mis-dis-ting'gwish.
v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.

If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish. Hooker.

To MISDÔ', mis-dôô'. v. a. [mis and do.]
 To do wrong; to commit a crime.

Afford me place to shew what recompence
 T'wards thee I intend for what I have misdone. Milton.

To MISDÔ', mis-dôô'. v. n. To commit faults.

Try the erring soul
 Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Mised. Milton.

I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
 Loth to acknowledge, but more loth to part. Dryden.

MISDÔ'ER, mis-dôô'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from mis- do.] An offender; a criminal; a male-factor.

Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing. Spenser.

MISDÔ'ING, mis-dôô'ing. n. s. [from mis-
do.] Offence; deviation from right.

The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings. L'Estrange.

To MISDÔ'UBT, mis-dôô't'. v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.

If she only misdoubted me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance. Sidney.
 I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident. Shakspeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
 With trembling wings misdoubleth every bush;
 And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
 Have now the fatal object in my eye,
 Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shaksp.

If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
 I know not how I shall assure you farther. Shaksp.
 To believe his wives my truth can move,
 Is to misdoubt my reason or my love. Dryden.

MISDÔ'UBT, mis-dôô't'. n. s. [mis and doubt.]

1. Suspicion of crime or danger.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,
 As his misdoubts present occasion;
 His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
 That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
 He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shaksp.

2. Irresolution; hesitation.
 York, steel thy fearful thoughts,
 And change misdoubt to resolution. Shaksp.

MISE, mize. n. s. [French.] Issue. Law term. Dict.

To MISEMPLÔ'Y, mis-ém-plôé'. v. a. [mis

 poses.

Their frugal father's gains they misemploy,
 And turn to point and pearl, and every female toy. Dryden.

Some taking things upon trust, misemploy their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.

That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed
 on temporal objects, produces many sorrows. Addison.

They grew dissolute and prophane: and by mis- employing the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them. Atterbury.

MISEMPLÔ'YMENT, mis-ém-plôé'mént. n. s.
 [mis and employment.] Improper application.

An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties. Hale.

MISER, mî'zûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [miser, Latin.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.

Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the scender. Sidney.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous fore-token of misfortune to have met with such a miser
 as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
 And great achievements, great yourself to make, Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake. Spenser.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.

Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
 I am descended of a gentler blood. Shaksp.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though she be dearer to my soul than rest
 To weary pilgrims, or to miser's gold,
 Rather than wrong Castalio, I'd forget her. Otway.

No silver saints by dying miser's giv'n,
 Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited Heav'n;
 But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
 And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE, mîz'zûr-â-bl.⁶⁶⁷ adj. [miser- able, French; miser, Latin.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.

O nation miserable,
 With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
 When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Shakspeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakspeare.

What's more miserable than discontent? Shaksp.
 There will be a future state, and then how miser- able is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch. South.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden.

2. Wretched; worthless.

Miserable comforters are ye all. Job.

3. Culvably parsimonious; stingy. In low language.

4. Despicable; wretched; mean: as, a mi- serable person.

MISERABLENESS, mîz'zûr-â-bl-nês. n. s.
 [from miserable.] State of misery.

MISERABLY, mîz'zûr-â-blé. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.

Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrelled, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death. South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.

As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you,
 so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained. Sidney.

3. Covetously. Ainsworth.

MISERY, mîz'zûr-ê.^{440 667} n. s. [miseria, miser, Fr.]

1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
 My body round engirt with misery. Shaksp.
 Happiness, in its full extent is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain. Locke.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in misery. Lavo.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes,
 We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Shaksp.
 The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
 And mourn the miseries of human life. Dryden.

3. [from miser.] Covetousness; avarice.

Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy, but a covetous man; yet misery now signifies not covetousness
 but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
 The common muck o' th' world: he covets less Than misery itself would give. Shaksp.

In a fabrick of forty thousand pounds charge, I wish thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge. Wotton.

MISESTE'EM, mis-ê-stéém'. n. s. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.

To MISFA'SHION, mis-fâsh'ûn. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.

A thing in reason impossible through their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God. Hakevill.

To MISFO'RM, mis-fôrm'. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.

His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore, And that misformed shape misshaped more. Spenser.
MISFO'RTUNE, mis-fôr'tshûne.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.

Fortune thus 'gan say, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune fortune hath only the gift. Sidney.
What world's delight, or joy of living speech Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach? Spenser.

Consider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault. Addison.
To MISGIV'VE, mis-giv'. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.

As Henry's late presaging prophecy Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm or ours. Shaksp.
This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me. Shakspere.
Yet oft his heart divine of something ill,
Misgave him. Milton.

His heart misgave him, that these were so many meeting-houses; but upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy. Addison.

MISGIV'ING, mis-giv'ing. n. s. [from mis-give.] Doubt; distrust.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his absolution, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward. South.

To MISGO'VERN, mis-gûv'ûrn. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.

Solyman charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own use. Knolles.

MISGO'VERNED, mis-gûv'ûrn'd. adj. [from misgovern.] Rude; uncivilized.

Rude, misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head. Shakspere.

MISGO'VERNANCE, mis-gûv'ûrn-ânsê. n. s. [mis and governance.] Irregularity.

Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.

MISGO'VERNMENT, mis-gûv'ûrn-mênt. n. s. [mis and government.]

1. Ill administration of publick affairs.
Men lay the blame of those evils whercof they know not the ground, upon public misgovernment. Raleigh.

2. Ill management.
Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskillfulness make them fall into vicious company. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Shaksp.
MISGUID'ANCE, mis-gy'dânsê. n. s. [mis and guidance.] False direction.

The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter; which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts. Holder.

Whosoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself: and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction. South.

To MISGUID'E, mis-gyide'. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war. Prior.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

MISHA'P, mis-hâp'. n. s. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.

To tell you that miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors. Sidney.

Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests, wherein she has thus wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser.

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might. Spenser.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shak.
It cannot be

But that success attends him: if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers, since no place like this
Can fit his punishment, or your revenge. Milton.
If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself. Denham.

MI'SHMASH, mish'mâsh. n. s. Ainsworth. A low word. A mingle, or hotchpotch.

To MISINF'ER, mis-in-fêr'. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.

Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person. Hooker.

To MISINFO'RM, mis-in-fôrm'. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.

Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed. ² Maccabees.

By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.

Bid her well beware,
Lest by some fair appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid. Milton.

MISINFORM'ATION, mis-in-fôr-mâ'shûn. n. s. [from misinform.] False intelligence; false accounts.

Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and set on by misinformation. South.

To MISINTE'RPRET, mis-in-têr'prêt. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthi-est works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocentest life traduced. Ben Jonson.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted. Arbuthnot.

To MISJO'IN, mis-jôin'. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.

In reason's absence mimick fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late. Milton.

Luther, more mistaking what he read,
Misjoins the sacred body with the bread. Dryden.

To MISJU'DGE, mis-jûdje'. v. n. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions; to judge ill.

You misjudge;
You see through love, and that deludes your sight;
As what is straight, seems crooked through the water. Dryden.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour. Atterbury.

Insensate!
Too long misjudging have I thought thee wise;
But sure relentless folly steals thy breast. Pope.

To MISJU'DGE, mis-jûdje'. v. a. To mistake; to judge ill of.

Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door. L'Estrange.

To MISLA'Y, mis-lâ'. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.

Mean time my worthy wife our arms mislay'd,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd. Dryden.

The fault is generally mislay'd upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in a want of a due improvement. Locke.

If the huter he the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it. Swift.

MISLA'YER, mis-lâ'ûr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from mis-lay.] One that puts in the wrong place.

The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but the unjust judge is the capital remover of land marks, when he defineth amiss of lands. Bacon.

To MIS'LE, mis's'l. v. n. [from mist.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly mistle.

Ynough, thou mourned hast,
Now ginnes to mizzle, hie we homeward fast. Spenser.

The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles. Grew.

This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops. Bacon.

In misling days, when I my thresher heard,
With nappy heer I to the barn repair'd. Gay.

To MISLE'AD, mis-lêde'. v. a. preterit and part. passive misled. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way; to betray to mischief or mistake.

Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn. Shaksp.

Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity:
If you would hear, and change your savage moods,
Leave to be mad. Ben Jonson.

Trust not servants who mislead or misinform you. Bacon.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil to give due light
To the misted and lonely traveller? Milton.
What can they teach and not mistlead;
Ignorant of themselves, of God much more? Milton.
Thou who hadst taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompense, as friends, the good misted;
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head. Dryden.
The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mistlead us, yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception. Glanville.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mistlead us from it. Locke.

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill:
But of the two less dang'rous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mistlead our sense. Pope.

MISLEADER, mîs-lè'dûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from mis- lead.] One that leads to ill.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my mistleaders. Shaksp.

They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasies touching our Saviour, wherein by their mistleaders they had been anciently plunged.
Brewerwood.

MISLEN, mîs'lin. n. s. [corrupted from miscellane.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

They commonly sow those lands with wheat,
mislen, and barley. Mortimer.

TO MISLIKE, mîs-like'. v. a. [mis and like.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.

It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or mislaked the effect of his doings. Sidney.
Tertullian was not deceived in the place; but Aquinas, who mislaked this opinion, followed a worse.
Raleigh.

Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge,
If thou mislake him, thou conceiv'st him not.
Herbert.

MISLIKE, mîs-like'. n. s. [from the verb.]
Disapprobation; dislike.

Setting your scorns and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray
Should not become my wife. Shaksp.

Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,
How much his speech offends their noble ears.
Fairfax.

MISLIKER, mîs-li'kûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from mis- like.] One that disapproves.

Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances.
Ascham.

TO MISLIVE, mîs-liv'. v. n. [mis and live.]
To live ill.

Should not thilke God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child if in his ways he stood,
For if he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust. Spenser.

TO MISMANAGE, mîs-mân'idje. v. a. [mis
and manage.] To manage ill.

The debates of princes' councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism. Locke.

MISMANAGEMENT, mîs-mân'idje-mênt.
n. s. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.

It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ. Locke.

The falls of favourites, projects of the great,

Of old mismanagements, taxations new,
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

TO MISMARK, mîs-mârk'. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.

Things are mismarked in contemplation and life for want of application or integrity. Collier.

TO MISMATCH, mîs-mâtsh'. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unsuitably.

What at my years forsaken! had I
Ugly, or old, mismatched to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me
To set me down contented. Southern.

TO MISNAME, mîs-nâme'. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.

They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unohsequiousness to their incogitancy, presumption. Boyle.

MISNOMER, mîs-nô'mûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [Fr.]
In law, an indictment. or any other act vacated by a wrong name.

TO MISOBSERVE, mîs-ôb-zêrv'. v. a. [mis
and observe.] Not to observe accurately.

They understand it as early as they do language;
and, if I misobserve not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined. Locke.

MISO'GAMIST, mè-sôg'gâ-mîst.¹²⁹ n. s.
[μισῶ and γάμος.] A marriage hater.

MISO'Gyny, mè-sôd'jè-nè.¹²⁹ n. s. [μισῶ
and γυνή.] Hatred of women.

TO MISORDER, mîs-ôr'dûr. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.

If the child miss either in forgetting a word, or misordering the sentence, I would not have the master frown. Ascham.

Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young.
Ascham.

The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shaksp.

MISORDER, mîs-ôr'dûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.

When news was brought to Richard the second,
that his uncles, who sought to reform the misorders of his counsellors, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? Issue out, quoth sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England. Camden.

MISORDERLY, mîs-ôr'dûr-lè. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular; unlawful.

His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some misorderly shift, to be helped by some other and part. pass. mispend. [mis and spend.]

1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend
the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news.
Ben Jonson.

Let him now endeavour to redeem what he hath mispend by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. Duty of Man.

First guilty conscience doth the mirror bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long mispend, luxurious life. Dryden.
I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply mispend in vain. Blackm.
He who has lived with the greatest care will find,
upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispend much has still a greater concern. Rogers.

Wise men retrieve as far as they are able, every mispend or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

2. To waste: with a reciprocal pronoun.

Now let the arched knife their thirsty limbs

MISSION, mîsh'ûn.⁴⁹ n. s. [missio, Latin.]

1. Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority.

Her son tracing the desert wild,

All his great work to come before him set,

How to begin, how to accomplish best,

His end of being on earth, and mission high. Mill.

The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high priest of our profession,

Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied.

Atterbury.

2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.

In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad

till the new mission. Bacon.

3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.

In Caesar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mission. Bacon.

4. Faction; party. Not in use.

Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,

And drove great Mars to faction. Shaksp.

Tell o'er thy tale again. Shaksp.

MIST, mîst. n. s. [mîστ, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,

To us discovers day from far;

His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd

Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.

And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,

And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply.

Roscommon.

As a mist is a multitude of small hut solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else hut a con-geries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops, either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.

But hov'ring mists around his brows are spread,

And night with sable shades involves his head.

Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below.

Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My people's eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are misled in the most desperate ac-

His passion cast a mist before his sens,

And either made or magnify'd the offence. Dryd.

To MIST, mîst. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,

Why then she mists. Shaksp.

MISTA'EN, mîs-tâne'. pret. and part. pass.
of mistake, for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.

This dagger hath mista'en, for lo! the sheath

Lies empty on the back of Montague,

The point missheathed in my daughter's bosom.

Shaksp.

MISTA'KEABLE, mîs-tâ'kâ-bl.⁴⁰⁶ adj. [from mistake] Liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mis- takeable numbers. Brown.

To MISTA'KE, mîs-tâke'. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.

These did apprehend a great affinity between their invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken

for the other. Stillington.

This will make the reader very much mistake,

and misunderstand his meaning. Locke.

Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid. Locke.

Fools into the notion fall,

That vice or virtue there is none at all:

Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,

'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.

To MISTA'KE, mîs-tâke'. v. n. To err; not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels; men's judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Raleigh.

Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green.

Locke.

Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding among friends. Swift.

To be MISTA'KEN, mîs-tâ'k'n.¹⁰³ To err.

[To mistake has a kind of reciprocal sense; I mistake, je me trompe. I am mistaken, means, I misconceive, I am in an error; more frequently than I am ill understood; but, my opinion is mis- taken, means my opinion is not rightly understood.]

The towns, neither of the one side nor the other,

willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mista- ken. Sidney.

England is so idly king'd:

—You are too much mistaken in this king:

Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,

How modest in exception, and withal

How terrible in constant resolution. Shaksp.

Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,

But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.

MISTA'KE, mîs-tâke'. n. s. [from the verb.]

Misconception; error.

He never shall find out fit mate; but such

As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.

Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.

Those terrors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley.

MISTA'KINGLY, mîs-tâ'king-lè. adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.

To MISTAKE, mis-stàtè'. v. a. [mis and state.] To state wrong.

They mistake the question, when they talk of pressing ceremonies. Bishop Sanderson.

To MISTEACII, mis-tètsh'. v. a. [mis and teach.] To teach wrong.

Such guides shall be set over the several congregations as will be sure to misteach them. Sanderson.

The extravagance of the lowliest life are the more consummate disorders of a mistaught or neglected youth. L'Estrange.

To MISTELL, mis-tèl'. v. a. [mis and tell.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.

To MISTEMPER, mis-tèmp'pûr. v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to disorder.

To MISTIME, mis-time'. v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.

MISTINESS, mis'tè-nès. n. s. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy deprecation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon.

MISTION, mis'tshûn.⁴⁶⁴ n. s. [from mistus, Lat.] The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mision, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion. Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mision, produce colour. Boyle.

MISTLETOE, miz'zł-tò.⁴⁷² n. s. [mýrtel-tan, Saxon; mistel, Danish, birdlime; and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a superplant, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Miller.

If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that fare Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tusser.

A barren and detested vale, you see it is: The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean, O'ercome with moss, and baleful *misse*llo. Shaksp.

*Misse*ltoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks: the *misse*ltoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green winter and summer, and heareth a white glistering herry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples strow With laurel green, and sacred *misse*ltoe. Gay.

MISTLIKE, mis'tlike. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Harris.

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds.

The ancients made use of the monochord to determine the proportion of sounds to one another. When the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diatesseras; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatesseras; if as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce-major; but if as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce-minor; and lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze: the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris.

Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.

MONTH, mōnth. n. s. [monað, Sax.]

A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiack: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month,

Sojourn with my sister. Shaksp.

From a month old even unto five years old. Lev.

Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptick. Brown.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,

So many years is she condemn'd by fate

To daily death. Dryden.

MONTH'S MIND, mōnth's-mīnd'. n. s. Long-ing desire.

You have a month's mind to them. Shaksp.

For if a trumpet sound, or drum beat,

Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras.

MONTHLY, mōnth'lē. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heav'nly birth I view'd,

For whom our monthly victims are renew'd. Dryd.

MONTHLY, mōnth'lē. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker

O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,

That changes monthly in her circled orb;

Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shaksp.

MONTO'IR, mōn-tòir'. n. s. [French.]

In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup. Dict.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jasius. Raleigh.

He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Or monument to ages: and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton.

Of ancient British art

A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands Arose. Philips.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument

Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites

That appertain unto a burial. Shaksp.

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,

Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandys.

In a heap of slain,

Two youthful knights they found beneath a load op-

prest

Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,

The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument.

With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,

Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope.

MONUMENTAL, mōn-nū-mēnt'āl. adj.
[from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun begins to fling

His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring

To arched walks of twilight groves,

And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,

Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward.

The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,

A work outlasting monumental brass. Pope.

2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Perseverance keeps honour bright;

To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion

Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shaksp.

I'll not fear that whiter skin of her than snow,

And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shaksp.

Therefore if he needs must go,

And the fates will have it so,

Softly may he be possess'd

Of his monumental rest. Crashaw.

MOOD, mōd. n. s. [mode, French;

modus, Latin.]

1. The form of an argument.

Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. the universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts.

2. Style of musick.

They move

In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood

Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton.

Their sound seems a tune

Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke.

4. [from mod, Gothick; moð, Sax. moed, Dutch; and generally in all Tentonick dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.

The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide

With stony eyes. Fairy Queen.

The kingly beast upon her gazing stood,

With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood.

Fairy Queen.

Eyes unused to the melting mood,

Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare.

Clorinda chang'd to ruth her warlike mood,

Few silver drops her vermil cheeks depaint. Fairf.

Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walk'd up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knolles.

She was in fittest mood,

For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras.

These two kids t' appease his angry mood

I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.

He now profuse of tears,

In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addis.

5. Anger; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothick, signifies habitual temper.

That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.

MO'ODY, mōó'dē. adj. [from mood.]

1. Angry; out of humour.

How now, moody?

What is't thou can'st demand? Shakespeare.

Chide him rev'rently,

When you perceive his blood incline to mirth;

But being moody, give him line and scope,

Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,

Confound themselves with working. Shaksp.

Every peevish, moody malecontent

Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar. Rowe.

2. Mental; intellectual: moð in Saxon signifies the mind.

Give me some musick; musick, moody food

Of us that trade in love. Shaksp.

MOON, mōon. n. s. [μνη; mena, Gothick; mena, Saxon; mona, Islandick; maane, Danish; mane, German; maen, Dutch.]

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phœbe.

The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this,

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,

And they did make no noise. Shaksp.

Diana hath her name from moisten, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is feigned to be a goddess huntress. Peacham.

Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves;

Beneath th' eternal fountain of all waves,

Where their vast court the mother waters keep,

And undisturb'd by moons in silence sleep. Cowley.

Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth!

Dryden.

2. A month. Ainsworth.

3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.

MOON-BEAM, mōon'bēnie. n. s. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.

The division and quavering, which please so much in musiek, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave.

On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver.

MOON-CALF, mōōn'káf. n. s. [moon and calf.]

1. A monster; a false conception: supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.

How cam'st thou to be the siege of this moon-calf?

2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.

The potion works not on the part design'd,
But turns his brain, and stupefies his mind;
The sotted moon-calf gapes.

MOON-FISH, mōōn'fish. n. s.

Moon-fish is so called, because the tail fin is shaped like a half-moon, by which, and his odd trussed shape, he is sufficiently distinguished.

MOONLESS, mōōn'lēs. adj. [from moon.]

Not enlightened by the moon.

Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight.

MOONLIGHT, mōōn'lite. n. s. [moon and light.]

Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moon-light, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible.

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love.

MOONLIGHT, mōōn'lite. adj. Illuminated by the moon.

If you will patiently dancee in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us.

What beck'ning ghost along the moonlight shade
Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade?

MOONSEED, mōōn'sēed. n. s. [menispermum, Latin.]

The moon-seed hath a rosaceous flower: the pointal is divided into three parts at the top, and afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon.

MOONSHINE, mōōn'shine. n. s. [moon and shine.]

1. The lustre of the moon.

Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out.

I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
And, ere I was aware, sigh'd to myself.

2. [In burlesque.] A month.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother.

MOONSHINE, mōōn'shine. } adj. [moon
MOONSHINY, mōōn'shī-né. } and shine.]

Illuminated by the moon: both seem a popular corruption of moonshining.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshine revellers, and shades of night.

Although it was a fair moonshine night, the enemy thought not fit to assault them.

I went to see him in a moonshiny night.

MOONSTONE, mōōn'stōne. n. s. A kind of stone.

MOONSTRUCK, mōōn'strūk. adj. [moon and struck.] Lunatick; affected by the moon.

MOOSE, mōōsc. n. s. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.

To MOOT, mōōt. v. a. [from motian, mot, gemot, meeting together, Saxon; or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mot, French.] To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

MOOT case or point, mōōt'kāsē. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.

In this moot case your judgment to refuse,
Is present death.

Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws?

Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Strutt.

MO'OTED, mōōt'éd. adj. Plucked up by the root.

MO'OTER, mōōt'túr. n. s. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.

MOP, mōp. n. s. [mofha, Welsh; mafha, Latin.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.

Such is that sprinkling which some careless quean
Flirts on you from her mop, but not so clean.

You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
To rail; she singing still whirls on her mop.

2. [perhaps corrupted from mock.] A wry mouth made in contempt.

Each one tripping on his toe
Will be here with mop and mov.

up the happiness of their lives; mortality cannot bear it often. Dryden.

Take these tears, mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief. Pope.

MORTALLY, mòr-tál-é. adv. [from mor- tal.]

1. Irrecoverably; to death.

In the battle of Landen you were not only dangerously, but, in all appearance, mortally wounded.
Dryden.

2. Extremely; to extremity. A low ludicious word.

Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and arti-ficers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel.

Know all, who would pretend to my good grace,
I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

MORTAR, mòr-túr.^{ss 418} n. s. [mortarium,
Latin; mortier, French.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the comminution of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar.
Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.

Those arms which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd. Granville.

MORTAR, mòr-túr. n. s. [morter, Dutch; mortier, Fr.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is washed in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shaksp.

They had brick for stones, and slime for mortar.
Genesis.

Lime bot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

MORTGAGE, mòr'gádje.^{90 472} n. s. [mort and gage, French.]

1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

Th' estate runs out, and mortgages are made,
Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd.
Dryden.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages.
Arbuthnot.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-streets, and saves th' expensive coach.
Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.

The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon.

TO MORTGAGE, mòr'gádje. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to put to pledge;

to make over to a creditor as a security.

Let men contrive how they may disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Piety.

Sandys.

Their not abating of their expensive way of living,
has forced them to mortgage their best manors.
Arbuthnot.

Some have his lands, but none his treasure'd store, Lands unmanur'd by us, and mortgag'd o'er and o'er. Harte.

MORTGAGE'E, mòr-gá-jéé'. n. s. [from mortgage.] He that takes or receives a mortgage.

An act may pass for publick registries of land,
by which all purchasers or mortgagees may be secured of all monies they lay out. Temple.

MORTGAGER, mòr'gá-júr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFEROUS, mòr-tiffér-rús. adj. [mor- tifier, Latin.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortifer- ous a state, and permit him to give them life.
Hammond.

These murmurings, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring.

MORTIFICATION, mòr-té-fè-ká'shùn. n. s.
[mortification, French; from mortify.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.

It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiates or intense colds. Bacon.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene,
To black mortification. Milton.

2. Destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quick-silver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkaliescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbuthnot.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.

You see no real mortification, or self-denial, no eminent charity, no profound humility, no heavenly affection, no true contempt of the world, no christian weakness, no sincere zeal, or eminent piety, in the common lives of Christians. Law.

5. Vexation; trouble.

It is one of the vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disordered by a tedious visit. L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratisbon. Addison.

TO MORTIFY, mòr-té-fi. v. a. [mortifier,
French.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is morti- fied with turpentine or spittle. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drunk them up. Hakewill.

Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shakspere.

Suppress thy knowing pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust.
Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harass; in order to reduce the body to compliance with the mind.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakspere.

We mortify ourselves with fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from flesh. Brown.

Mortify'd was he to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.

With fasting mortify'd, worn out with tears,
And bent beneath the load of seventy years. Harte.

5. To humble; to depress; to vex.

Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Shakspere.

He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. Addison.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise so high as he thinks they ought. Addison.

TO MORTIFY, mòr-té-fi. v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.

Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flies with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrify. Bacon.

2. To be subdued; to die away.

3. To practise religious severities.

This makes him careful of every temper of his heart, give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness, and humanity. Law.

MORTISE, mòr-tis.^{240 441} n. s. [mortiste, mortoise, Fr.] A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakspere.

Under one skin are parts variously mingled, some with cavities, as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.

TO MORTISE, mòr-tis. v. a.

1. To cut a mortise; to join with a mor-tise.

'Tis a massy wheel,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd. Shakspeare.

The walls of spiders legs are made,
Well mortis'd and finely laid. Drayton.

2. It seems in the following passage improperly used:

The one half of the ship being finished, and by help of a screw launched into the water, the other half was joined by great brass nails mortis'd with lead. Arbuthnot.

MO'RTMAIN, môrt'mâne. n. s. [morte and main, French.] Such a state of possession as makes it unalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand, in a hand that cannot shift away the property.

It were meet that some small portion of lands were allotted, since no more mortmains are to be looked for. Spenser.

MO'RTPAY, môrt'pâ. n. s. [mort and pay.]
Dead pay; payment not made.

This parliament was merely a parliament of war, with some statutes concurring thereunto; as the severe punishing of mortpayses, and keeping back of soldiers' wages. Bacon.

MO'RTRESS, môrt'rêrs. n. s. [from mortier
de sagesse. Skinner.] A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak.
Bacon.

MO'RTUARY, môrt'shù-âr-rê. n. s. [mor-tuaire, French; mortuarium, Latin.] A gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompense of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his lifetime. Harris.

MOSA'ICK, mô-zâ'ik. adj. [mosaïque, Fr.]
supposed corrupted from musæus, Lat.]

Mosaick is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton.

Each beauteous flow'r,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin, Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

Mosaick. Milton.

The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mosaick pavement, the finest I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Addison.

MO'SCHATEL, môs'kâ-têl. n. s. [moscha-tellina, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

MOSQUE, môsk. n. s. [mosquée, French; moschit, Turkish.] A Mahometan temple.

MOSS, môs. n. s. [muscus, Latin; meos,
Saxon.] A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excrecence produced from the earth and trees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art: the botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees: the only remedy in such cases is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss.
Miller.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees;
but it may be better sorted as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining oziars fenc'd, and moss their beds.
Dryden.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places, have seeds that, when shaken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke.
Ray on the Creation.

To Moss, môs. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shaksp.

Will these moss'd trees,
That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out. Shaksp.

MO'SSINESS, môs'sè-nês. n. s. [from mossy.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.

The herbs withered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and so do the mossiness of trees.
Bacon.

MO'SSY, môs'sè. adj. [from moss.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

Old trees are more mossy far than young; for that the sap is not so frank as to rise all to the boughs, but tareth by the way, and putteth out moss. Bacon.

About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all inferior beauteous things. Cowley.

The mossy fountains and the sylvan shades Delight no more. Pope.

totally or mostly defaced, the right of government doth cease. Bacon.

MO'STWHAT, môst'hwôt. adv. [most and what.] For the most part. Obsolete.

God's promises being the ground of hope, and those promises being but seldom absolute, mostwhat conditionate, the christian grace of hope must be proportioned and temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tympany of hope. Hammond.

MOFA'TION, mô-tâ'shân. n. s. Act of moving. Dict.

MOTE, môte. n. s. [mot, Saxon; atomus, Latin.] A small particle of matter; any thing proverbially little.

1. The act of multiplying or increasing any number by addition or production of more of the same kind.

Although they had divers styles for God, yet under many appellations they acknowledged one divinity; rather conceiving thereby the evidence or acts of his power in several ways than a multiplication of essence, or real distractions of unity in any one. Brown.

2. [In arithmetick.] The increasing of any one number by another, so often as there are units in that number, by which the one is increased. Cocker.

A man had need be a good arithmetician to understand this author's works: his description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison.

MULTIPLICA'TOR, mûl'tê-plê-kâ'tûr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [multiplicateur, Fr. from multiplico, Lat.] The number by which another number is multiplied.

MULTIPLI'CIOUS, mûl'tê-plish'ûs. adj. [multiplex, Lat.] Manifold. Not used.

Amphibæna is not an animal of one denomination; for that animal is not one, but multiplicious, or many, which hath a duplicity or gemination of principal parts. Brown.

MULTIPLI'CIETY, mûl'tê-plis'ê-tê. n. s. [multiplicité, Fr.]

1. More than one of the same kind.

Had they discoursed rightly but upon this one principle, that God was a being infinitely perfect, they could never have asserted a multiplicity of gods:

for, can onc God include in him all perfection, and another god include in him all perfections too? Can there be any more than all? and if this all be in one, can it be also in another? South.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and abates the torrent of a common odium, by deriving it into many channels; and therefore if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of the object. South.

2. State of being many.
 You equal Donne in the variety, multiplicity, and choice of thoughts. Dryden.

MULTIPLIER, mûl'tê-pli-ûr.⁹³ n. s. [from multiply.]

1. One who multiplies or increases the number of any thing.

Broils and quarrels are alone the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries. Decay of Piety.

2. The multiplier in arithmetick.

Multiplication hath the multiplicand and the multiplier, or number given, by which the multiplicand is to be multiplied. Cocker.

To MULTIPLY, mûl'tê-pli. v. a. [multiplier, Fr. multiplico, Lat.]

1. To increase in number; to make more by generation, accumulation, or addition.

He clappeth his hands among us, and multiplieth his words against God. Job.

He shall not multiply horses. Deuteronomy.
 His birth to our just fear gave no small cause,
 But his growth now to youth's full flower displaying
 All virtue, grace, and wisdom, to achieve Things highest, greatest, multiplies my fears. Milton.

2. To perform the process of arithmetical multiplication.

From one stock of seven hundred years, multiplying still by twenty, we shall find the product to be one thousand three hundred forty-seven millions three hundred sixty-eight thousand four hundred and twenty. Brown.

To MULTIPLY, mûl'tê-pli. v. n.

1. To grow in number.

The multiplying brood of the ungodly shall not thrive. Wisdom.

2. To increase themselves.

The multiplying villanies of nature
 Do swarm upon him. Shakespeare.

We see the infinitely fruitful and productive power of this way of sinning; how it can increase and multiply beyond all bounds and measures of actual commission. South.

MULTI'POTENT, mûl-tip'pò-tênt. adj. [multus and potens, Latin.] Having manifold power; having power to do many things.

By Jove multipotent,
 Thou should'st not hear from me a Greekish member. Shakespeare.

MULTIPRE'SENCE, mûl'tê-prêz'êuse. n. s. [multus and præsentia, Latin.] The power or act of being present in more places than one at the same time.

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was surely brought into the world, and upon the stage, by that other fable of the multipresence of Christ's body. Hall.

MULTI'SCIOUS, mûl-tis'shûs. adj. [multiscius, Latin.] Having variety of knowledge.

MULTISILI'QUOUS, mûl-tê-sil'lê-kwûs. adj. [multus and siliqua, Latin.] The same with corniculate: used of plants, whose seed is contained in many distinct seed-vessels. Bailey.

MULTI'SONOUS, mûl-tis'sò-nûs. adj. [multisonus, Latin.] Having many sounds.

Dict.

MULTITUDE, mûl'té-tûde. n. s. [multitude, Fr. multitudo, Lat.]

1. The state of being many; the state of being more than one.

2. Number collective; a sum of many; more than one.

It is impossible that any multitude can be actually infinite, or so great that there cannot be a greater.

Hale.

3. A great number, loosely and indefinitely.

It is a fault in a multitude of preachers, that they utterly neglect method in their harangues.

Watts.

4. A crowd or throng; the vulgar.

He the vast hissing multitude admires.

Addison.

MULTITUDINOUS, mûl-té-tû-dé-nûs. adj. [from multitude.]

Dict.

MULTOCULAR, mûlt-ôk'kû-lâr. adj. [multus and oculus, Latin.] Having more eyes than two.

Flies are multocular, having as many eyes as there are perforations in their corneæ.

Derham.

MUM, mûm. interject. [Of this word the supposed original is mentioned in mome: it may be observed, that when it is pronounced it leaves the lips closed. Mumme, Danish, a mask; whence mummers and maskers are the same. Upton.] A word denoting prohibition to speak, or resolution not to speak; silence; hush.

But to his speech he answered nowhit,

But stood still mute, as if he had beene dum,

Ne signe of sence did shew, ne common wit,

As one with griebe and anguise over-cum,

And unto every thing did aunswere mum.

Shaksp.

Mum then, and no more proceed.

Well said, master; mum! and gaze your fill.

Shaksp.

The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Intrust it under solemn vows

Of mum, and silence, and the rose.

Hudibras.

Till all tun'd equal send a general hum.

Pope.

TO MUMBLE, mûm'bl.⁴⁰⁵ v. n. [momptelen, Dutch; mutio, Lat.]

1. To speak inwardly; to grumble; to mutter; to speak with imperfect sound or articulation.

As one then in a dream, whose drier brain

Is tost with troubled sights, and fancies weak,
He mumbled soft, but would not all his silence break.

Spenser.

Peace, you mumbling fool;

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl.

Shaksp.

A wrinkled hag, with age grown double,

Picking dry sticks, and mumbling to herself.

Otway.

2. To chew; to bite softly; to eat with the lips close.

The man, who laugh'd but once to see an ass

Mumbling to make the gross-grain'd thistles pass,

Might laugh again to see a jury chaw

The prickles of unpalatable law.

Dryden.

TO MUMBLE, mûm'bl. v. a.

1. To utter with a low inarticulate voice.

Some carry-tale, some pleasan, some slight zany,

Some mumble-news; told our intents before.

Shaksp.

Here stood he in the dark,

Mumbling of wicked charms, conj'ring the moon

To stand 's auspicious mistress.

He with mumbled pray'rs attones the deity.

Dryden.

2. To mouth gently.

Spaniels civilly delight

In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.

Pope.

3. To slubber over; to suppress; to utter imperfectly.

The raising of my rabble is an exploit of consequence; and not to be mumbled up in silence for all her pertness.

Dryden.

Peel'd, patch'd, and pyebald, linsey-woolsey brothers;

Grave mummers!

*MUMMERY, mûm'mûr-rè.⁵⁵⁷ n. s. [momerie, Fr.] Masking; frolick in masks; foolery. This is sometimes written* mommery.

Here mirth's but mummery,

And sorrows only real be.

This open day-light doth not shew the masques and mumneries, and triumphs of the world, half so stately as candle-light.

Your fathers

Disdain'd the mummery of foreign strollers.

MUMMY, mûm'mè. n. s. [numie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmasius from amomum, by Bochart from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials, or suffered to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second, in its liquid state, is a thick opaque, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhale, and the embalming matter has penetrated.

Hill's Mat. Med.

The silk
Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful
Conserv'd of maidens hearts.

Shaksp.

It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years.

Bacon.

Sav'd by spice, like mummies, many a year,
Old bodies of philosophy appear.

Dunciad.

TO MUNCH, mûnsh.³⁶³ v. a. [manger, Fr.]

To chew by great mouthfuls. This is likewise written to mounch; see MOUNCH.

Say, sweet love, what thou desir'st to eat:

—Truly a peck of provender; I could munch your good dry oats.

Shaksp.

TO MUNCH, mûnsh. v. n. To chew eagerly by great mouthfuls.

It is the son of a mare that's broken loose, and munching upon the melons.

Dryden.

MUNCHER, mûnsh'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from munch.] One that munches.

MUND, mûnd. n. s.

Mund is peace, from which our lawyers call a breach of the peace, mundbrech: so Eadmund is happy peace; Æthelmund, noble peace; Ælmond, all peace; with which these are much of the same import: Irenæus, Hiesychius, Lenis, Paeatus, Sedatus, Tranquillus, &c.

Gibson's Camden.

MUNDANE, mûn'dâne. adj. [mundanus, Lat.] Belonging to the world.

The platonick hypothesis of a mundane soul will relieve us.

Glanville.

The atoms which now constitute heaven and earth, being once separated in a mundane space, could never without God, by their mechanical affections, have convened into this present frame of things.

Bentley.

Evelyn.
A soldier would venture his life for a mural crown.
Addison.

MURDER, mûr'dâr.⁹⁵ n. s. [mordor, mordor, Saxon; murdrum, law Latin: the etymology requires that it should be written, as it anciently often was, murther; but of late the word itself has commonly, and its derivatives universally, been written with d.] The act of killing a man unlawfully; the act of killing criminally.

Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden time,
Ere human statute purg'd the general weal;
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for th' ear.
Shakspeare.

Slaughter grows murder when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war.
Dryden.

The killing of their children had, in the account of God, the guilt of murder, as the offering them to idols had the guilt of idolatry.
Locke.

TO MU'RDER, mûr'dâr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To kill a man unlawfully,

If he dies, I murder him, not they.
Dryden.

2. To destroy; to put an end to.

Can'st thou quake and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again.
Shaksp.

Let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars to the fiery sun;
Murder impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work.
Shakspeare.

MU'RDER, mûr'dâr. interj. An outcry when life is in danger.

Kill men i' th' dark! where be these bloody thieves?
Shakspeare.

Ho murder! murder!
Shakspeare.

MURDERER, mûr'dâr-ûr.⁵⁶⁷ n. s. [from murder.] One who has shed human blood unlawfully; one who has killed a man criminally.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood, and it grieves me not to die; but it grieves me that thou art the murderer.
Sidney.

I am his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself.
Shakspeare.

Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eyes;
'Tis pretty sure,
That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers.
Shakspeare.

The very horror of the fact had stupified all curiosity, and so dispersed the multitude, that even the murderer himself might have escaped.
Wolton.

Like some rich or mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold,
Who fresher for new mischiefs docs appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old.
Dryden.

This stranger having had a brother killed by the conspirator, and having sought in vain for an opportunity of revenge, chanced to meet the murderer in the temple.
Addison.

With equal terrors, not with equal guilt,
The murderer dreams of all the blood he spilt.
Swift.

MURDERESS, mûr'dâr-ês. n. s. [from murderer.] A woman that commits murder.

When by thy scorn, O murderess! I am dead,
Then shall my ghost come to thy bed,
And thee feign'd vestal in worse arms shall see.
Doime.

Diana's vengeance on the victor shown,
The murderess mother and consuming son.
Dryden.
Art thou the murderess then of wretched Laius?
Dryden.

To her came message of the murderment.
Fairfax.

MURDEROUS, mûr'dâr-ûs.⁵⁶⁵ adj. [from murder.] Bloody; guilty of murder; addicted to blood.

Upon thy eye-balls mur'drous tyranny
Sits in grim majesty to fright the world. Shaksp.
Oh mur'drous coxcomb! what should such a fool
Do with so good a wife. Shaksp.

Enfore'd to fly
Thence into Egypt, till the mur'drous king
Werc dead who sought his life; and missing, fill'd
With infant blood the streets of Bethchem. Milton.

If she has deform'd this earthly life
With mur'drous rapine and seditious strife;
In everlasting darkness must she lie. Prior.

MURE, mûre. n. s. [mur, Fr. murus, Lat.]
A wall. Not in use.

The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through and will break out. Shaksp.

To MURE, mûre. v. a. [murer, French;
murus, Latin.] To enclose in walls.

All the gates of the city werc mured up, except such as were reserved to sally out at. Knolles.

Moist Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp. Shaksp.

MURK, mûrk. n. s. Husks of fruit. Ainsworth.

MUR'KY, mûr'kê. adj. [morck, Danish.]
Dark; cloudy; wanting light.

The murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion
Shall never melt mine honour into lust. Shaksp.
So scented the grim feature, and up-turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air,
Sagacious of his quarry. Milton.

A murky storm deep low'ring o'er our heads
Hung imminent, that with impervious gloom
Oppos'd itself to Cynthia's silver ray. Addison.

MURMUR, mûr'mûr. n. s. [murmur,
Latin; murmure, French.]

1. A low shrill noise.
Flame as it moveth within itself, or is blown by a bellows, giveth a murmur or interieur sound. Bacon.

When the wing'd colonies first tempt the sky,
Or setting, seize the sweets the blossoms yield,
Then a low murmur runs along the field. Pope.
Black melancholy sits,

Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

2. A complaint half suppressed; a complaint not openly uttered.

Some discontents there are; some idle murmurs;
How idle murmurs!

The doors are all shut up; the wealthier sort,
With arms across, and hats upon their eyes,
Walk to and fro before their silent shops. Dryden.

To MURMUR, mûr'mûr. v. n. [murmuro,
Lat. murmure, Fr.]

1. To give a low shrill sound.

The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Can scarce be heard so high. Shaksp.

Amid an isle around whose rocky shore
The forests murmur, and the surges roar,
A goddess guards in her enchanted dome. Pope.

The busy bees with a soft murm'ring strain,
Invite to gentle sleep the lab'ring swain. Dryden.

2. To grumble; to utter secret and sullen discontent: with at before things, and against before persons.

The good we have enjoy'd from heav'n's free will;

And shall we murmur to endure the ill? Dryden.
Murmur not at your sickness, for thereby you will sin against God's providence. Wake.

The good consequences of this scheme, which will execute itself without murmuring against the government, are very visible. Swift.

MURMURER, mûr'mûr-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from murmur.] One who repines; one who complains sullenly; a grumbler; a re-piner; a complainer.

Heav'n's peace be with him!
That's christian care enough; for living murmurers
There's places of rebuke. Shaksp.

The murmurer is turned off to the company of those doleful creatures, which were to inhabit the ruins of Babylon. Government of the Tongue.

Still might the discontented murmurer cry,
Ah hapless fate of man! ah wretch doom'd once to die. Blackmore on the Creation.

MUR'NIVAL, mûr'nê-vâl. n. s. [morneste, French; from mornier, to stun.] Four cards of a sort. Skinner and Ainsworth.

MUR'RRAIN, mûr'rîn.²⁰⁸ n. s. [The etymol-ogy of this word is not clear; mur is an old word for a catarrh, which might well answer to the glanders; muriana, low Latin. Skinner derives it from mori,

MUSCLE, mûs'sl.^{351 406} n. s. [muscle,
French; musculus, Lat. muj'cula, Sax.]

1. Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, enclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vesicles or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries, and nerves to open; for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres. Quincy.

The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.

MU'SHROOM, músh'róóm. n. s. [muscheron, French.]

1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered.

The true champignon or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot-beds.

Miller.

2. An upstart; a wretch risen from a dunghil.

Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unsovn; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms.
Bacon.

1. The science of harmonical sounds.

The man that hath no musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons.
Shaksp.

Now look into the musick-master's gains,
Where noble youth at vast expence is taught,
But eloquence not valu'd at a groat.
Dryden.

2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.

When she spake,
Sweet words, like dropping honey she did shed;
And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make.
Fairy Queen.

Such musick
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung.
Milton.

By musick minds an equal temper know,
Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
Warriors she fires with animated sounds,
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds.
Pope.

We have dancing-masters and musick-masters.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. Entertainments of instrumental harmony.

What musick, and dancing, and diversions, and songs, are to many in the world, that prayers and devotions, and psalms are to you.
Law.

MU'SICAL, mú'zè-kál. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]

1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.

The merry birds
Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
And made amongst themselves a sweet consort,
That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort.
Fairy Queen.

Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy,
Thee chauntress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song.
Milton.

Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers.
Dryden

2. Belonging to musick.

Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern musick.
Addison.

MUSI'CIAN, mú-zish'ún.³²⁷ n. s. [musicus, Lat. musicien, French.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.

Though the musicians that should play to you,
Stand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet strait they shall be here.
Shaksp.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,

When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
Shaksp.

A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in musick, and not by rule.
Bacon.

The praise of Bæcehus then the sweet musician sung;

Of Bæcehus ever fair and ever young.
Dryden.

MUSK, músk. n. s. [muschio, Ital. musc, Fr.] A dry, light, and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat, but taller: the bag which contains the musk is three inches long, and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly.
Hill.

Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours, as civet and musk.

MU'TINY, mù'tè-nè. n. s. [from the verb.] Insurrection; sedition.

The king fled to a strong castle, where he was gathering forces to suppress this mutiny. Sidney.

I th' war,

Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spok not for them. Shaksp.

In most strange postures
We've seen him set himself.

—There's mutiny in 's mind. Shaksp.
Less than if this frame

Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn

The stedfast earth. Milton.

Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who be comes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditious.

Temple-

To MU'TTER, mù'túr.⁹⁸ v. n. [mutire, mussare, Lat.] To grumble; to murmur.

What would you ask me, that I would deny,
Or stand so mutt'ring on! Shaksp.

How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter? Shaksp.

Sky low'd, and mutt'ring thunder some sad drops
Wept, at completing of the mortal sin

Original! Milton.

They may trespass, and do as they please; no man dare accuse them, not so much as mutter against them. Burton.

Bold Britons, at a brave bear-garden fray,
Are rous'd; and clatt'ring sticks cry, play, play, play;

Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
And mutter to himself, ha, gens barbare!

And it is well he mutters, well for him;
Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.

When the tongue of a beautiful female was cut out, it could not forbear muttering. Addison.

To MU'TTER, mù'túr. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.

Amongst the soldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintain several factions. Shaksp.

A kind of men, so loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutter their affairs. Shaksp.

Your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness. Isaiah.

A hateful prattling tongue,
That blows up jealousies, and heightens fears,
By muttering pois'nous whispers in men's ears. Creech.

MU'TTER, mù'túr. n. s. [from the verb.]

Murmur; obscure utterance.

Without bis rod revers'd,
And backward mutters of dis severing power,
We cannot free the lady. Milton.

MU'TTERER, mù'túr-úr.⁵⁵⁶ n. s. [from mutter.] Grumbler; murmurer.

MU'TTERINGLY, mù'túr-ing-lè. adv. [from muttering.] With a low voice; without distinct articulation.

The fat of roasted mutton or beef, falling on the birds will baste them. Swift.

2. A sheep. Now only in ludicrous language.

Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons. Shaksp.

The flesh of muttons is better tasted where the sheep feed upon wild thyme and wholesome herbs. Bacon.

Within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.

MUTRONF'IST, mù't'u-fist. n. s. [mutton and fist.] A hand large and red.

Will he who saw the soldiers mutton list,
And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list
To witness truth? Dryden.

MU'TUAL, mù'tshù-ál.⁴⁶ adj. [mutuel, Fr. mutuus, Lat.] Reciprocally; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakspeare.

What should most excite a mutual flame
Your rural cares and pleasures are the same. Pope.
MUTUALLY, mù'tshù-ál-lè. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.

He never bore
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate. Shakspeare.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my affection. Shaksp.
The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write. Holder.

Pellucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in refracting, reflecting and inflecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton.

They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and security. Atterbury.

May I the sacred pleasures know
Of strictest amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.

MUTUALLY, mù'tshù-ál'lè-té. n. s. [from mutual.] Reciprocation.

Villanous thoughts, Roderigo! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakspeare.

MUZZLE, mù'z'zl. n. s. [museau, Fr.]
1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.

But ever and anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Cheyne.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift's Rules to Serv.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.

The fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent. Shaksp.

Greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;

With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound. Dryden.

To MUZZLE, mù'z'zl. v. n. To bring the mouth near.

The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.

To MUZZLE, mù'z'zl. v. a.

1. To bind the mouth.
This butcher's cur is venom mouth'd, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best
Not wake him in his slumber. Shakspeare.

The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour. Dryden.

Through town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay.

2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.

The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child. L'Estrange.

3. To restrain from hurt.

My dagger muzzled
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shakspeare.

MY, mì, or mè. pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.

Her feet she in my neck doth place. Spenser.
I conclude my reply with the words of a christian poet.

If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection. Waller.
I shall present my reader with a journal. Addis.

MY'NCHEN, mì'n'tshèn. n. s. [münchen, Sax.] A nun. Dict.

1. The number of ten thousand.
2. Proverbially any great number.
Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton.

Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MY'RMIDON, mè'r'mè-dùn.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.

The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYRO'BALAN, mè-ròb'á-lán, or mì-ròb'á-lán.¹⁸⁷ n. s. [myrobalanus, Latin.] A fruit.

The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet an astringent. Bacon.

MYRO'POLIST, mè-ròp'pò-list, or mì-ròp'pò-list.^{167 518} n. s. [μύρον and πωλείω.]
One who sells unguents.

MYRRH, mèr.^{108 109} n. s. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, Fr.] A gum.

Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper-corn to that of a walnut, and of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatic flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name. Hill.

The myrrhe sweet bleeding in the bitter wound. Spenser.

I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wiseman.

MY'RRHINE, mèr'rìn.¹⁴⁰ adj. [myrrhinus, Lat.] Made of the myrrhine stone.

How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups, imboss'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton.

MY'RTLE, mèr'tl.^{108 109} n. s. [myrtus, Lat. myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.

The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short starlike cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shaksp.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakspeare.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacham.

Nor can the muse the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson.

MYSE'LF, mì-sè'lf. n. s. [my and self.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it, that is, not I by proxy; not another.

As his host,
I should against his murth'rer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakspeare.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.

They have missed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift.

3. I is sometimes omitted, to give force to the sentence.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. Addison.

MYSTAG'OGUE, mìs'tá-góg.³³⁸ n. s. [μυσταγωγός; mystagogus, Lat.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers. Bailey.

MYSTE'RIARCH, mìs-tè'rè-àrk. n. s. [μυστήριον and ἀρχή.] One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTE'RIOUS, mìs-tè'rè-ús. adj. [mystereux, Fr. from mystery.]

1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

God at last
To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms. Milton.

Then the true Sun of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.

Those princes who were distinguished for mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift.

MYSTÉRIOUSLY, mîs-té-ré-ûs-lé. adv.

[from mysterious.]

1. In a manner above understanding.
2. Obscurely; enigmatically.

Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty.

Taylor.

Each stair mysteriously was meant.

Milton.

MYSTÉRIOUSNESS, mîs-té-ré-ûs-nés. n. s.

[from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.
My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor.
2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

To MYSTERIZE, mîs-té-rîze. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.

Mysterizing their ensigns, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown.

MYSTERY, mîs-té-rè. n. s. [μυστήριον; mystere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth, As I can of those mysteries, which heav'n Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare.

Upon holy days let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the Trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.

To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shaksp.

Important truths still let your fables hold, And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.

3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mistry, from mestier, French, a trade.

And that which is the noblest mysterie, Brings to reproach and common infamy. Spenser.

Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries. Shaksp.

MYSTICAL, mîs-té-kâl.^{ss} } adj. [mysticus, MYSTICK, mîs'tik. } Latin.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor, concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker.

From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker.

2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

Ye five other wand'ring fires! that move In mystick dance, not without song, resound His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton.

It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor.

It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet.

3. Obscure; secret.

Lest new fears disturb the happy state, Know, I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate. Dryden.

MYSTICALLY, mîs-té-kâl-lé. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Donne.

MYSTICALNESS, mîs-té-kâl-nés. n. s. [from mystical.] Involution of some secret meaning.

MYTHOLOGICAL, mîth-ò-lòd'jè-kâl. adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown.

MYTHOLOGICALLY, mîth-ò-lòd'jè-kâl-le.¹⁸⁷ adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

MYTHOLOGIST, mè-thòl'lò-jîst.¹⁸⁷ n. s. [from mythology.] A relator or expositor of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Creech.
It was a celebrated problem among the ancient mythologists, what was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest. Norris.

To MYTHOLOGIZE, mè-thòl'lò-jîze. v. n. [from mythology.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

MYTHOLOGY, mè-thòl'lò-je.^{187 518} n. s. [μύθος and λόγος; mythologie, French.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

N.

N, ên. is a semivowel, and has in English an invariable sound: as, no, name, net; it is sometimes after m almost lost; as, condemn, contemn.

To NAB, nâb. v. a. [nappa, Swedish.] To catch unexpectedly; to seize without warning. A word seldom used but in low language.

NA'CKER, or NAKER, nâk'kûr. n. s. [concha margaritifera, Latin.] A shell that contained a pearl.

NA'DIR, nâ'dûr.⁴¹⁸ n. s. [Arabick.] The point under foot directly opposite the zenith.

As far as four bright signs comprize,
The distant zenith from the nadir lies. Creech.

NAFF, nâf. n. s. [mergus cirrhatus.] A kind of tufted sea bird.

NAG, nâg. n. s. [nagge, Dutch.]

1. A small horse. A horse in familiar language.

A hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horse-flesh; but the nag would be too fleet. L'Estrange.

Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive. Prior.

2. A paramour: in contempt.
Your ribauld nag of Egypt
Hoists sails and flies. Shakspeare.

NAIL, nâle.²⁰² n. s. [nœg], Saxon; nagel, German.]

1. The hard crust or horny substance at the ends of the fingers and toes.

My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shaksp.

The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles. Dryden.

The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Ray.

2. The talons of birds; the claws or paws of beasts.

3. A spike of metal, by which things are fastened together.

As one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shaksp.

For the body of ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together. Bacon.

The load-stone mines in the shore of India are so placed in abundance and vigour, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown.

A beechen pail
Hung by the handle on a driven nail. Dryden.
An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.

4. A stud; a boss.
For not the desk, with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

5. A measure of length; two inches and a quarter.

6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I once supposed it from a counter studded with nails, but have since found in an old record, solvere super unguem. It therefore means into the hand.
We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift.
To NAIL, nále. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with nails.
To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton.
He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unesp'y'd,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

2. To stud with nails.
In golden armour glorious to behold,
The rivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

NA'KED, ná'kíd.⁹⁹ adj. [nacod, Saxon.]

1. Wanting clothes; uncovered; bare.
A philosopher being asked, in what a wise man differed from a fool? answered, Send them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive.
He pitying how they stood
Before him naked to the air, that now
Must suffer change;
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shaksp.
Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden.
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shaksp.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.
Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, save only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker.

NA'KEDLY, ná'kíd-lè. adv.

1. Without covering.

2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.
Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables. Holder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.
So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wise
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest-sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie. Daniel.

NA'KEDNESS, ná'kéd-nès. n. s. [from naked.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.
My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shakspere.
Nor he their outward only, with the skins

Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Arraying, cover'd from his Father's sight. Milton.
I entreat my gentle readers to sow on their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison.
Thou to be strong must put off every dress,
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.
Spies, to see the nakedness of the land are ye come. Genesis.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.
Why seek'st thou to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness. Shaks.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece. Wolton.

5. Following the stated course of things.

If solid piety, humility, and a sober sense of themselves, is much wanted in that sex, it is the plain and natural consequence of a vain and corrupt education. Law.

6. Consonant to natural notions.

Such unnatural connections become, by custom, as natural to the mind as sun and light: fire and warmth go together, and so seem to carry with them as natural an evidence as self-evident truths themselves. Locke.

7. Discoverable by reason; not revealed.

I call that natural religion, which men might know, and should be obliged unto, by the mere principles of reason, improved by consideration and experience, without the help of revelation. Wilkins.

8. Tender; affectionate by nature.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
 He wants the nat'ral touch. Shakespeare.

9. Unaffected; according to truth and reality.

What can be more natural than the circumstances in the behaviour of those women who had lost their husbands on this fatal day. Addison.

10. Opposed to violent: as, a natural death.

NA'TURAL, nât'tshû-râl. n. s. [from nature.]

1. An idiot; one whom nature debars from understanding; a fool.

That a monster should be such a natural. Shaksp.
 Take the thoughts of one out of that narrow compass he has been all his life confined to, you will find him no more capable of reasoning than a perfect natural. Locke.

2. Native; original inhabitant. Not in use.

The inhabitants and naturals of the place, should be in a state of freemen. Abbot.

Oppression, in many places, wears the robes of justice, which domineering over the naturals may not spare strangers, and strangers will not endure it. Raleigh.

3. Gift of nature; nature; quality. Not in use.

The wretcheder are the contemnners of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. Ben Jonson.

To consider them in their pure naturals, the earl's intellectual faculties were his stronger part, and the duke's, his practical. Wolton.

NA'TURALIST, nât'tshû-râl-ist. n. s. [from natural.] A student in physicks, or natural philosophy.

Admirable artifice! wherewith Galen, though a mere naturalist, was so taken, that he could not but adjudge the honour of a hymn to the wise Creator. More.

It is not credible, that the naturalist could be deceived in his account of a place that lay in the neighbourhood of Rome. Addison.

NATURALIZA'TION, nât'tshû-râl-lê-zâ'shûn. n. s. [from naturalize.] The act of investing aliens with the privileges of native subjects.

The Spartans were nice in point of naturalization; whereby, while they kept their compass, they stood firm; but when they did spread, they became a windfall. Bacon.

Encouragement may be given to any merchants that shall come over and turn a certain stock of their own, as naturalization, and freedom from customs the two first years. Temple.

Enemies, by taking advantage of the general naturalization act, invited over foreigners of all religions. Swift.

To NATURALIZE, nât'tshû-râl-ize. v. a. [from natural.]

1. To adopt into a community; to invest with the privileges of native subjects.

The lords informed the king, that the Irish might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown. Davies.

2. To make natural; to make easy like things natural.

He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labour to him. South.

NA'TURALLY, nât'tshû-râl-lê. adv. [from natural.]

1. According to the power or impulses of unassisted nature.

Our sovereign good is desired naturally; God, the author of that natural desire, hath appointed natural means whereby to fulfil it; but man having utterly disabled his nature unto these means, hath had other revealed, and hath received from heaven a law to teach him, how that which is desired naturally, must now supernaturally be attained. Hooker.

If sense be not certain in the reports it makes of things to the mind, there can be naturally no such thing as certainty of knowledge. South.

When you have once habituated your heart to a serious performance of holy intercession, you have done a great deal to render it incapable of spite and envy, and to make it naturally delight in the happiness of mankind. Law.

2. According to nature; without affectation; with just representation.

These things so in my song, I naturally may show;
 Now as the mountain high, then as the valley low;
 Here fruitful as the mead; there, as the heath be bare;

Then, as the gloomy wood, I may be rough, tho' rare. Drayton.

That part
 Was aptly fitted, and naturally performed. Shaksp.

This answers fitly and naturally to the place of the abyss before the deluge, inclos'd within the earth. Burnet.

The thoughts are to be measured only by their propriety; that is, as they flow more or less naturally from the persons and occasions. Dryden.

3. Spontaneously; without art; without cultivation: as, there is no place where wheat naturally grows.

NA'TURALNESS, nât'tshû-râl-nês. n. s. [from natural.]

1. The state of being given or produced by nature.

The naturalness of a desire, is the cause that the satisfaction of it is pleasur, and pleasure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refusing or forbearing it.

South.

2. Conformity to truth and reality; not affectation.

He must understand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalness of the eyebrows.

Dryden.

Horace speaks of these parts in an ode that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression.

Addison.

NA'TURE, nâ'tshûre.²⁹³ 459 460 461 n. s. [natura, Latin; nature, French.]

1. An imaginary being supposed to pre-side over the material and animal world.

Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law My services are bound

Shaksp.

When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die, he said, and nature them.

Bacon.

Let the postillion nature mount, and let The coachman art be set.

Cowley.

At home all riches that wise nature needs. Simple nature to his hope has giv'n,

Beyond the cloud-topt lull an humbler heav'n.

Pope.

2. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.

Why leap'd the hills, why did the mountains shake,

What ail'd them their fix'd natures to forsake?

Cowley.

Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the influxes of reason: so between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man partiepatung much of both natures.

Hale.

The nature of brutes, besides what is common to them with plants, doth consist in having such faculties, whereby they are capable of apprehending external objects, and of receiving pain or pleasure from them.

Wilkins.

3. The constitution of an animated body.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth, Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.

Shaks.

When nature, being oppress, commands the mind To suffer with the body.

Shaksp.

4. Disposition of mind; temper.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature To such a lowness but his unkind daughters.

Shaks.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,

Whose nature is so far from doing harms,

That he suspects none, on whose foolish honesty My practices ride easy.

Shaksp.

5. The regular course of things.

Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence.

Shaks.

6. The compass of natural existence.

If their dam may be judge, the young apes are the most beautiful things in nature.

Glanville.

7. The constitution and appearances of things.

The works, whether of poets, painters, moralists, or historians, which are built upon general nature, live for ever; while those which depend for their existence on particular customs and habits, a partial view of nature, or the fluctuation of fashion, can only be coeval with that which first raised them from obscurity.

Reynolds.

8. Natural affection or reverence; native sensations.

Have we not seen The murd'ring son ascend his parent's bed, Thro' violated nature force his way,

And stain the sacred womb where once he lay?

Pope.

9. The state or operation of the material world.

He binding nature fast in fate, Left conscience free and will.

Pope.

10. Sort; species.

A dispute of this nature caused mischief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbishop.

Dryden.

11. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.

Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined.

Addison.

Nature and Homer were, he found, the same.

Pope.

12. Physicks; the science which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night, God said, let Newton be, and all was light.

Pope.

13. Of this word which occurs so frequently, with significations so various, and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomised.

Nature sometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans; as, nature hath made man partly corporeal, and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whose account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature, as its nativity, or accures to it by its birth, as when we say, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be expressed by saying, the man was born so; or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature; for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things corporeal; as, nature makes the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order, or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one; as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or nature left to herself will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God; as, there is no phoenix or chimaera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use, the world, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of semideity. In this sense it is best not to use it at all.

Boyle.

NATU'RITY, nâ'tshû'rê-tê. n. s. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. Not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity.

Brown.

NA'VAL, nâ'vâl. adj. [naval, French; navalis, Latin.]

1. Consisting of ships.

Eneamping on the main, Our naval army had besieged Spain; They that the whole world's monarchy design'd, Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd.

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

Imbrasides address

His javeline at him, and so ript his navill, that the wound,

As endlessly it shut his eyes, so open'd on the ground, It pow'r'd his entrails.

Chayman.

As children, while within the womb they live, Feed by the navel: here they feed not so.

Davies.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments.

Brown.

Me from the womb the midwife muse did take, She cut my navel.

Cowley.

There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines and parted from the navel string.

Derham.

2. The middle; the interior part.

Being prest to the war,

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd, They would not thread the gates

A plant. It hath the appearance of houseleek.

Miller.

NA'VEW, nâ'vû. n. s. [nâfus, Latin; navet, naveau, Fr.]

A plant.

It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. In the isle of Ely the species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil.

Miller.

NAUGHT, nâwt.²¹³ 393 adj. [nâht, nâhilt, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.]

Bad; corrupt; worthless; it is now hardly used but in ludicrous language.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught.

Hooker.

Thy sister's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here.

Shakspere.

NAUGHT, nâwt. n. s. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly written nought.

See AUGHT and OUGHT.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench.

Shakspeare.

NA'UGHTILY, nâw'té-lé adv. [from naught-ty] Wickedly; corruptly.

NA'UGHTINESS, nâw'té-nés. n. s. [from naughtly.] Wickedness; badness. Slight wickedness or perverseness, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own; and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do.

Sidney.

NA'UGHTY, nâw'té. adj. The same with naught.

1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father.

Sidney.

These naughty times

Put bars between the owners and their rights.

Shakspeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!

So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shaksp.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,

But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,

Betake thee to thy bed.

Dryden.

Arbutnot.

NAVIGATION, nâv've-gâ'shûn. n. s. [navigation, French; from navigate.]

1. The act or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever

Bacon.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation.

More.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,

No useful compass or meridian known;

Coasting they kept the land within their ken,

And knew no north but when the polestar shone.

Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pœni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended.

Arbutnot on Coins

2. Vessels of navigation.

Tho' you untie the winds, and let them fight

Against the churches, tho' the yesty waves

Confound and swallow navigation up.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it.

Watts on the Mind.

To NAU'SEATE, nâw'shê-âte. v. a.

1. To loathe; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cry'd up in one age, which are decry'd and nauseated in another.

Brown.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on, Nauseates the praise, which in her youth she won, And hates the muse by which she was undone.

Dryden.

The patient nauseates and loaths wholesome foods.

Blackmore.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best, Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest.

Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail.

Swift.

NAU'SEOUS, nâw'shûs.⁴⁵⁰ adj. [from nausea, Latin; nausée, French.] Loathsome; disgusting; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,

Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.

And from those gaieties our youth requires

To exercise their minds, our age retires.

Denham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome.

Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers.

Swift.

NAU'SEOUSLY, nâw'shûs-lê. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomely; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve.

Dryden.

Their satire's praise;

So nauseously and so unlike they paint.

Garth.

NAU'SEOUSNESS, nâw'shûs-nés. n. s. [from nauseous.] Loathsomeness; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed.

Dryden.

NAU'TICAL, nâw'té-kâl. } adj. [nauticus,
NAU'TICK, nâw'tîk.²¹³ } Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold.

Dryden.

NAV, nâ. adv. [na, Saxon, or ne aye.]

1. No; an adverb of negation.

Disputes in wrangling spend the day,

Whilst one says only yea, and t' other nav.

Denham.

2. Not only so, but more. A word of amplification.

A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; nav, when dead, by his example and memory; so good authors in their stile.

Ben Jonson.

He catechized the children in his chamber, giving liberty nav invitation to as many as would, to come and hear.

Fell.

This is then the allay of Ovid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nav, this very fault is not without its beauties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased.

Dryd.

If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nav, the inhabitants of the place where he lived, would be put to the sword, nav, the place itself would be razed.

Spectator.

3. Word of refusal.

They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily; nav verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

Acts.

The fox made several excuses, but the stork would not be said nav; so that at last he promised him to come.

L'Estrange.

He that will not when he may,

When he would he shall have nav.

Proverbs.

NA'YWORD, nâ'wûrd. n. s. [nav and word.]

He serv'd great Hector, and was ever near,
Not with his trumpet only, but his spear. Dryden.

3. Within a little.

Self-pleasing and humorous minds are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.

This eagle shall go near, one time or other, to take you for a hare. L'Estrange.

He that paid a bushel of wheat per acre, would pay now about twenty-five pounds per annum; which would be near about the yearly value of the land. Locke.

The Castilian would rather have died in slavery than paid such a sum as he found would go near to ruin him. Addison.

NEAR, nère. adj.

1. Not distant in place, or time. [Sometimes it is doubtful whether near be an adjective or adverb.]

This city is near to flee unto. Genesis.

Accidents, which however dreadful at a distance, at a nearer view lost much of their terror. Fell.
The will free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his ideas as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

Whether they nearer liv'd to the blest times,
When man's Redeemer bled for human crimes;
Whether the hermits of the desert fraught
With living practice, by example taught. Harte.

2. Advanced toward the end of an enterprise or disquisition.

Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world should know them to be the best, and so know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said. Hooker.

3. Direct; straight; not winding.

Taught to live the nearest way. Milton.
To measure life, learn then betimes, and know
Tow'rd solid good what leads the nearest way. Milton.

4. Close; not rambling; observant of style or manner of the thing copied.

Hannibal Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Aeneid. Yet though he takes the advantages of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.

5. Closely related.

If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him. Leviticus.

Our assertions and negations should be eye and nay, for whatsoever is more than these is sin. Rogers.

2. Description by denial, or exclusion, or exception.

Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf. Watts.

Chance signifies, that all events called casual, among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and notions of those bodies, with this only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations. Bentley.

3. Argument drawn from denial.

It may be proved in the way of negation, that they came not from Europe, as having no remainder of the arts, learning and civilities of it. Heylin.

NE'GATIVE, nêg'gâ'tiv.¹⁶⁷ adj. [negatif, Fr. negativus, Latin.]

1. Denying: contrary to affirmative.
2. Implying only the absence of something; not positive; privative.

There is another way of denying Christ with our mouths which is negative, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South.

Consider the necessary connection that is between the negative and positive part of our duty. Tillotson.

3. Having the power to withhold, though not to compel.

Denying me any power of a negative voice as king, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. King Charles.

NE'GATIVE, nêg'gâ'tiv. n. s.

1. A proposition by which something is denied.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty; they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

2. A particle of denial: as, not.

A purer substance is defin'd,
But by an heap of negatives combin'd;
Ask what a spirit is, you'll hear them cry,
It hath no matter, no mortality. Clarendon.

NE'GATIVELY, nêg'gâ'tiv-lê. adv. [from negative.]

1. With denial; in the form of denial; not affirmatively.

When I asked him whether he had not drunk at all? he answered negatively. Boyle.

2. In form of speech implying the absence of something.

The fathers draw arguments from the scriptures negatively, in reproof of that which is evil; scriptures teach it not, avoid it therefore. Hocker.

To this I shall suggest something by way of answer, both negatively and positively. Wilkins.

I shall shew what this image of God in man is, negatively, by shewing wherein it does not consist; and positively, by shewing wherein it does. South.

To NEGLE'CT, nêg-lêkt'. v. a. [neglectus, Lat.]

1. To omit by carelessness.

Heaven,
Where honour due and rev'rence none neglects. Milton.

2. To treat with scornful heedlessness.

If he neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church. Matthew.

This my long suffer'ing and my day of grace,
Those who neglect and scorn shall never taste. Milton.

3. To postpone.

I have been long a sleeper; but I trust
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Shaksp.

NEGLE'CT, nêg-lêkt'. n. s. [neglectus, Latin.]

1. Instance of inattention.
2. Careless treatment; scornful inattention.

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence or purpose of unkindness. Shaksp.

3. Negligence; frequency of neglect.

Age breeds neglect in all, and actions
Remote in time, like objects remote in place,
Are not beheld at half their greatness. Denham.

4. State of being unregarded.

Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect,
With virgin honours let my horse be deck'd,
And decent emblem. Prior.

NEGLE'CTER, nêg-lêkt'ûr.⁹³ n. s. [from neglect.] One who neglects.

NEGLE'CTFUL, nêg-lêkt'fûl. adj. [neglect and full.]

1. Heedless; careless; inattentive: with of.
Moral ideas not offering themselves to the senses, but being to be framed to the understanding, people are neglectful of a faculty they are apt to think wants nothing. Locke.

Though the Romans had not great genius for trade, yet they were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbuthnot.

2. Treating with indifference.

If the father caress them when they do well, shew a cold and neglectful countenance to them upon doing ill, it will make them sensible of the difference. Locke.

NEGLE'CTFULLY, nêg-lêkt'fûl-lê. adv. [from neglectful.] With heedless inattention; with careless indifference.

Not used.

NEGLE'CTION, nêg-lêk'shûn. n. s. [from neglect.] The state of being negligent.

Sleeping neglection doth betray to loss
The conquests of our scarce cold conqueror. Shaksp.

NEGLE'CTIVE, nêg-lêk'tiv.⁶¹² adj. [from neglect.] Inattentive to; regardless of.

I wanted not probabilities sufficient to raise jealousies in any king's in art, not wholly stupid, and neglective of the publick peace. King Charles.

NE'GLIGENCE, nêg'lê-jênse. n. s. [negligence, French; negligentia, Lat.]

1. Habit of omitting by heedlessness, or of acting carelessly.

2. Instance of neglect.

She let it drop by negligence,
And, to th' advantage, I being here, took't up.
Shaksp.

NE'GLIGENT, nèg'lè-jènt. adj. [negligent,
French; negligens, Latin.]

1. Careless; heedless; habitually inattentive.

My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him. 2 Chronicles.

2. Careless of any particular: with of before a noun.

Her daughters see her great zeal for religion; but then they see an equal earnestness for all sorts of finery. They see she is not negligent of her devotion; but then they see her more careful to preserve her complexion. Law.

We have been negligent in not hearing his voice. Baruch.

3. Scornfully regardless.

Let stubborn pride possess thee long,
And be thou negligent of fame;
With ev'ry muse to grace thy song,
May'st thou despise a poet's name. Swift.

NE'GLIGENTLY, nèg'lè-jènt-lè. adv. [from negligent.]

1. Carelessly; heedlessly; without exactness.

Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; and whereas some of the ancients have said that their motion is indeterminate, and their imagination indefinite, it is negligently observed; for ants go right forward to their hills, and bees know the way to their hives. Bacon.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame.
In both our English genius is express,
Lofty and bold, but negligently drest. Waller.

In comely figure rang'd my jewels shone,
Or negligently plac'd for thee alone. Prior.

2. With scornful inattention.

To NEGOTIATE, nè-gò'shè-àte.⁵⁴² v. n.

[negocier, French; from negotium, Lat.]
To have intercourse of business; to traffick; to treat: whether of publick affairs, or private matters.

Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? Shaksp.

She was a busy negotiating woman, and in her withdrawing chamber had the fortunate conspiracy for the king against king Richard been hatched. Bacon.

It is a common error in negotiating; whereas men have many reasons to persuade, they strive to use them all at once, which weakeneth them. Bacon.

They that receive the talents to negotiate with, did all of them except one make profit of them. Hammond.

A steward to embezzle those goods he undertakes to manage; an ambassador to betray his prince for whom he should negotiate; are crimes that double their malignity from the quality of the actors. Decay of Piety.

I can discover none of these intercourses and negotiations, unless that Luther negotiated with a black boar. Atterbury.

NEGOTIATION, nè-gò-shè-à'shùn. n. s.

[negociation, French; from negotium.]
Treaty of business, whether publick or private.

Oil is slow, smooth, and solid; so are Spaniards observed to be in their motion: Though it be a question yet unresolved, whether their affected gravity and slowness in their negotiations have tended more to their prejudice or advantage. Howard.

They ceased not from all worldly labour and negotiation. White.

NEGOTIATOR, nè-gò'shè-à-tùr.⁶²¹ n. s.

[negociateur, French; from negotiate.]

One employed to treat with others.

Those who have defended the proceedings of our negotiators at Gertruydenburg, dwell much upon their zeal in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands; but say nothing to justify those demands. Swift.

NE'GRO, nè'grò. n. s. [Spanish; negre, Fr.] A blackmoor.

Negroes transplanted into cold and flegmatic habitations, continue their hue in themselves and their generations. Brown.

NEIF, nèéf. n. s. [néfi, Islandick; neef, Scot.] Fist. It is likewise written neaf.
Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif. Shakspere.

To NEIGH, ná. v. n. [hnægan, Saxon; negen, Dutch.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakspere.

They were as fed horses, every one neighed. Jeremiah.

Run up the ridges of the rocks amain;
And with shrill neighings fill the neigh'ring plain. Dryden.

The gen'rous horse, that nobly wild,
Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.

NEIGH, ná. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of a horse.

It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage. Shaksp.

NEIGHBOUR, ná'bùr.³¹⁴ n. s. [negebur, Saxon.]

1. One who lives near to another.

He sent such an addition of foot, as he could draw out of Oxford, and the neighbouring garrisons. Clarendon.

A kid sometimes for festivals he slew,
The choicer part was his sick neighbour's due. Harte.

2. One who lives in familiarity with another: a word of civility.

Masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,
Will you undo yourselves? Shaksp.

3. Any thing next or near.

This man shall set me packing;
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room. Shaksp.

4. Intimate confidant.

The deep-revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakspere.

5. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.

Sins against men are injuries; hurts, losses, and damages, whereby our neighbour is in his dignity, life, chastity, wealth, good name, or any way justly offended, or by us hindred. Perkins.

The gospel allows no such term as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Sprat.

You should always change and alter your intercessions, according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance seem to require. Law.

To NEIGHBOUR, ná'bùr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjoin to; to confine on.

Wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shaksp.

Give my thy hand,
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. Shakspere.

These grow on the leisurly ascending hills that neighbour the shore. Sandys.

Things nigh equivalent and neighbouring value, By lot are parted. Prior.

2. To acquaint with; to make near to.
That being of so young days brought up with him,
And since so neighbour'd to his youth and 'haviour. Shakspere.

NEIGHBOURHOOD, ná'bùr-hùd. n. s. [from neighbour.]

1. Place adjoining.

One in the neighbourhood mortally sick of the small-pox, desiring the doctor to come to him. Fell.

I could not bear
To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,
But flew in all the haste of love to find thee. Addison.

2. State of being near each other.

Consider several states in a neighbourhood; in order to preserve peace between these states, it is necessary they should be formed into a balance. Swift.

3. Those that live within reach of communication.

How ill mean neighbourhood your genius suits,
To live like Adam midst an herd of brutes! Harte.

NEIGHBOURLY, ná'bùr-lè. adj. [from neighbour.] Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.

The Scottish lord hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay when he was able. Shaksp.

The Woodberry so nigh, and neighbourly doth live,
With Abberley his friend. Drayton.

He steals my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge if this be neighbourly dealing. Arbutnot.

NEIGHBOURLY, ná'bùr-lè. adv. [from neighbour.] With social civility.

NEITHER, nè'thùr.²⁶² conjunct. [nap-ðer, Saxon; ne either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor.

Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. 1 Kings.

Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign merchandise, nor inquisitive after the lives and fortunes of their neighbours. Heylin.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it. Genesis.

This commandment standeth not for a cypher, neither is it read and expounded in vain among Christians. White.

3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and though not very grammatically, yet emphatically, after another negative; in old English two negatives denied.

If it be thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard, we see that lightnings and coruseations, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, 'till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither. Locke.

NEITHER, nè'thùr. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shaksp.

Which of them shall I take?
Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd
If both remain alive. Shaksp.

The balance, by a propensity to either side, inclined to neither. Fell.

Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him:

Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither.
Dryden.

Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither.
Locke.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother;
but independent of each other. Locke.

NE'NUPHAR, nè-nù-fâr. n. s. [nymphaea,
Latin.] Water lily, or water rose.

NEO'PHYTE, nè-ò-fite.¹⁶⁰ n. s. [neophyte, French; νεος and φυτό.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEOTE'RICK, nè-ò-tér'rik.⁶⁰⁹ adj. [neotericus, Latin.] Modern; novel; late.

We are not to be guided either by the misreports of some ancients, or the capricio's of one or two neotericks. Grev.

NEP, nèp. n. s. [nepheta, Latin.] An herb.

NE'PENTHE, nè-pén'thè. n. s. [ν and πένθη.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a court;
There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest, nor stir them from their place.
Pope.

NE'PHEW, nèv'yù. n. s. [nepos, Latin;
neveu, French.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.
Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryd.
I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.
With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly signify, after that my grandfather Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgment, he proposed also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom. Hooker.

Her sire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's case,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas.
Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.
All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Ev'n thrice eleven descends the crown retain'd.
Spenser.

NEPHR'I'TICK, nè-frit'tík.⁶⁰⁹ adj. [νεφριτις; nephretique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

2. Troubled with the stone.
The diet of nephritic persons ought to be opposite to the alkalescent nature of the salts in their blood. Arbuthnot.

3. Good against the stone.
The nephritic stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green; but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodward.

NE'POTISM, nèp-ò-tizm.^{603 636} n. s. [nepotisme, French; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendour; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison.

NERVE, nèrv. n. s. [nervus, Lat. nerf,
French.]

1. The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglio or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shaksp.

2. It is used by the poets for sinew or tendon.

If equal powers
Thou would'st inflame, amidst my nerves, as then
I could encounter with three hundred men. Chapm.

Strong Tharymed discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerves in two. Pope.

NE'RVELESS, nèrv'lès. adj. [from nerve.]
Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head. Dunciad.

NE'RVOUS, nèrv'vùs.³¹⁴ adj. [nervosus,
Latin.]

1. Well strung; strong; vigorous.
What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd. Pope.

2. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.
The venal torrent, murm'ring from afar,
Whisper'd no peace to calm this nervous war;
And Philomel, the siren of the plain,
Sung soporific unisons in vain. Hart.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheyne.

NE'R'VY, nèrv'vè. adj. [from nerve.] Strong;
vigorous. Not in use.
Death, that dark spirit, in his nervy arm doth lie,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die.
Shaksp.

NE'SCIENCE, nèsh'è-ènsè.⁶¹⁰ n. s. [from nescio, Latin.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience. Glanville.

NESH, nèsh. adj. [νεσ, Sax.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Skinner.

NESS, nès.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality: as, poisonous, poison-ousness; turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from nijsa, Saxon.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nejsa, Sax. a nose of land, or headland.

NEST, nèst. n. s. [νεστ, Saxon.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.
If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young.
Deuteronomy.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark,
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

2. Any place where animals are produced.
Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shaksp.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.
Spenser.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or repositories.

To NEST, nèst. v. n. [from the noun.]
To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves. Howel.

NE'STEGG, nèst'èg. n. s. [nest and egg.]
An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for shew,
Like nesteggs to make clients lay. Hudibras.

To NE'STLE, nès's'l.⁴⁷² v. n. [from nest.]
To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle 'till sue-cours came. Bacon.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horses. L'Estrange.

The king fisher wonts commonly by the waterside, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Flutt'ring there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the snails nestle all the winter. Addison.

Mark where the shy directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in your passing by. Swift.

To NE'STLE, nès's'l.³⁵⁹ v. a.
1. To house, as in a nest.
Poor heart!

That labour'st yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hov'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nest'd in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.
This Ithacus, so highly is endear'd
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother, nestles him. Chapman.

NE'STLING, nèst'ling. n. s. [from nestle.]
A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET, nèt. n. s. [nati, Gothick; net, Sax.]

1. A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.
Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shaksp.

Impatience entangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble.
Taylor.

2. Any thing made with interstitial va-cuidities.
He made nets of chequered work for the chapi-ters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thoms.

NETHER, nèth'ùr.⁹⁸ adj. [neoθερ, Sax. neder, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we say the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge.

Deuteronomy.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip.

Peachum.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd.

Milton.

The upper part whercof was whey,
The nether, orange mix'd with grey.

Hudibras.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts.

Roscommon.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall
Should gape immense, and rushing down o'er-whelm this nether ball.

Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe:
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world.

Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge.

Shakspeare.

Numberless were those bad angels, seen
Hov'ring on wing under the cope of hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires.

Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n.

Milton.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine.

Dryden.

NE'THERMOST, nĕt'ĕr-mōst. adj. [super. of nether.] Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell.

Psalms.

Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'r,
Or spirit, of the nethermost abyss
Might in that noise reside.

Milton.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him.

South.

Heracitus tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost.

Keil against Burnet.

NE'TTING, nĕt'ting. n. s. A reticulated piece of work.

NE'TTLE, nĕt't'l. n. s. [netel, Sax.] A stinging herb well known.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle.

Shakspeare.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve.

Waller.

To NE'TTLE, nĕt't'l. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate; to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself.

L'Estr.

Although at every part of the apostle's discourse some of them might be uneasy and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed.

Bentley.

NE'TWORK, nĕt'wĕrk. n. s. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,

Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare.

Spenser.

A large cavity in the sinciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network.

Addison.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful net-work of veins, must be transported with admiration.

Blackmore.

NE'VER, nĕv'ĕr. adv. [ne ever, næfpe, Saxon; ne æfpe, not ever.]

1. At no time.

Never, alas, the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame.

Cowley.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.

Congreve.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd.

Prior.

Death still draws nearer, never seeming near.

Pope.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think with justice, of solecism: as, he is mistaken though never so wise.

It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions.

Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say.

Genesis.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the effect of any one part of the body instantly make a transeursion throughout the whole body.

Bacon.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town.

Knolles.

Death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees.

Duty of Man.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him.

Atterbury.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second.

Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whosoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

He answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled.

Matthew.

5. It is much used in composition: as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability.

Raleigh.

But a smooth and stedfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires.

Carew.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude.

Milt.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace.

Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flows,
Revive and raise themselves with moderate showers,
But over-charg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist.

Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays.

Roscommon.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays.

Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryden.
Farewell, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food.

Blackm.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead.

Pope.

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools.

Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd-up front, thy stare grimace.

Swift.

NEVERTHELESS, nĕv'ĕr-thĕ-ies'. adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished.

Hooker.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them.

Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect.

South.

Addison.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar.

Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion, but some state or condition of being; as, sedeo, I sit.

Clarke.

NEUTER, nĕ'tĕr. n. s. One indifferent and unengaged.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent.

Addison.

NEUTRAL, nĕ'trāl. adj. [neutral, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.

Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man.

Shakspeare.

He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral.

Bacon.

The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states.

Addison.

2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.

Some things good, and some things ill do seem,

Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of publick danger, desert the interests of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind, These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth.

All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the publick is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

2. A state between good and evil.

There is no health: physicians say, that we At best enjoy but a neutrality. Donne.

NEUTRALLY, nù'trál-è. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on either part.

NEW, nù²⁶⁵ adj. [newyd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made, or had; novel. New is used of things, and young of persons.

What's the newest grief!— That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker; Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare.

2. Not being before.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

3. Modern; of the present time

Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple.

4. Different from the former.

Stedfastly purposing to lead a new life. Common Prayer.

5. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.

to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art. Prior.

2. Accurate performance, or observance.

As for the workmanship of the old Roman pillars, the ancients have not kept to the *nice*ty of proportion and the rules of art so much as the moderns.
Addison.

3. Fastidious delicacy; squeamishness.

He them with speeches meet
Does fair intreat; no courting *nice*ty,
But simple true, and eke unfeigned sweet. Spenser.
So love doth loath disdainful *nice*ty. Spenser.

4. Minute observation; punctilious discrimination; subtilty.

If reputation attend these conquests, which depend on the fineness and *nice*ties of words, it is no wonder if the wit of men so employed, should perplex and subtilize the signification of sounds. Locke.

His conclusions are not built upon any *nice*ties, or solitary and uncommon appearances, but on the most simple and obvious circumstances of these terrestrial bodies. Woodward.

5. Delicate management; cautious treatment.

Love such *nice*ty requires,
One blast will put out all his fires. Swift.

which a statue may be placed.

Niches, containing figures of white stone or marble, should not be coloured in their concavity too black. Wotton.

They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please. Dryden.

On the south a long majestic race
Of Ægypt's priests, the gilded niches grace. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high flying; whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a senator and a squire. Swift.

NICK, nîk. n. s. [nicke, Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]

1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.

That great instrument of state suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some politick respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick.
Howel.

What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick. Suckling.

That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick. Denham.

Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while,
She'll after shew him in the nick
Of all his glories a dog trick. Hudibras.

And some with symbols, signs, and tricks,
Engrav'd with planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them
From their own orbs, arrest and catch them.
Hudibras.

This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gaining of a point. L'Estrange.

2. A notch cut in any thing. [Corrupted from nock or notch.]

French.] A name given in scoff or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.

The time was when men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. Ben Jonson.

My mortal-enemy hath not only falsely surmised me to be a feigned person, giving me nicknames, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the princes with whom I have been retained. Bacon.

So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word got from her, but the same nickname in derision. L'Estrange.

To NI'CKNAME, nîk'nâme. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.

You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth. Shaksp.

Less seem these facts which treason's nickname
force,

Than such a fear'd ability for more. Denham.

To NI'CTATE, nîk'tâte. v. a. [nicito, Lat.]

To wink.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes, which are wanting in man; as the seventh or suspensory from nidor, Lat.] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.

Incense and nidorous smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contritiation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them. Bacon.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidorose, or fœtid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs. Arbutnot.

NIGGARDLINESS, nig'gúrd-lé-nés. n. s. [from niggardly.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.

Niggardliness is not good husbandry, nor generosity profusion. Addison.

NIGGARDLY, nig'gúrd-lé. adj. [from niggard.]

1. Avaricious; sordidly parsimonious.

Where the owner of the house will be bountiful, it is not for the steward to be niggardly. Hall.

Love, a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities, must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer. Dryden.

Why are we so niggardly to stop at one fifth?
Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and double our money? Locke.

Providence not niggardly but wise,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise. Gravv.
Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet. Arbutnot.

2. Sparing; wary.

I know your mind, and I will satisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no farther than the bounds of the question. Sidney.

NIGGARDLY, nig'gúrd-lé. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.

I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shaksp.

NIGGARDNESS, nig'gúrd-nés. n. s. [from niggard.] Avarice; sordid parsimony. Not used.

All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so slut-tish a vice. Sidney.

A cap worn in bed, or in undress.
The rattlement houted, and clapt their chopt hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shaksp.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the valleys below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon.

How did the humble swain detest
His prickly beard, and hairy breast!
His night-cap bordered round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face. Swift.

NIGHTCROW, nite'krò. n. s. [night and crow; nycticorax, Latin.] A bird that cries in the night.

The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time. Shaksp.

NIGHTDEW, nite'dú. n. s. [night and dew.]

Dew that wets the ground in the night.
All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dews sweat;
E'en lust and envy sleep. Dryden.

NIGHTDOG, nite'dòg. n. s. [night and dog.]

A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.

1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; Philomel.

I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

Although the wezon, throtle, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation; and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown.

Thus the wise nightingale that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
To foreign groves does her old musick bring. Waller.

2. A word of endearment.

My nightingale!
We'll beat them to their beds. Shakspeare.

In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon.

2. To cut off by any slight means.

The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nipt off. Mortimer.

3. To blast; to destroy before full growth.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honours thick upon him; The third day comes a frost, a killing frost, And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely His greatness is a ripening, nips his root; And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare.

A flower doth spread and dye, Thou would'st extend me to some good, Before I were by frost's extremity nipt in the bud. Herbert.

His delivery now proves Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring, Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milton.
 Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Addison.

From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been nipt in the bud. Arbuthnot.

4. To pinch as frost.

The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold.— It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare.

When icicles hang by the wall, And Dick the shepherd blows his nail; When blood is nipt, and ways be foul, Thou nightly sings the staring owl. Shakespeare.

NISI PRIUS, ní'sé-prí'ús. n. s. [In law.]

A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is panelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the ease of the county. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the man impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ. So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Cowell.

NIT, nit. n. s. [hnictu, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bomyblyous noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Denham.

NITENCY, ní'tén-sé. n. s. [nitentia, Lat.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [from nitor, Latin.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented: that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

NITING, ní'thíng. n. s. [or niding; see NIDING.] A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NITID, nít'id. ³⁴⁴ adj. [nitidus, Latin.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

NITRE, nít'úr. ³¹⁶ n. s. [nitre, French; nitrum, Latin.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline, pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acrid and bitterish taste, impressing a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earth, stones, and other fossil substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorescences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts; being a fixed alkali, plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not. It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spongy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. In scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an abstersive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt, but not with salt-petre, as do many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients. Hill.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton.
Some steep their seed, and some in cauldrons boil,

With vigorous nitre, and with lees of oil. Dryden.
NITROUS, nít'rús. ³¹⁴ adj. [nitreux, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally. Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackm.

NITRY, nít'rè. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind

Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind. Gay.
NITILY, nít'è-lè. adv. [from nitry.]

your nocturnal discoveries.

Addison.

NOCTU'RNAL, nòk-túr'nál. n. s. An instrument by which observations are made in the night.

That projection of the stars which includes all the stars in our horizon, and therefore reaches to the thirty-eighth degree and a half of the southern latitude, though its centre is the north pole, gives us a better view of the heavenly bodies as they appear every night to us; and it may serve for a nocturnal, and shew the true hour of the night.

Watts.

To NOD, nòd. v. n. [Of uncertain derivati^on: νεύω, Greek; nuto, Latin; amneidio, Welsh.]

1. To decline the head with a quick motion.

Your enemies with nodding of their plumes,

Fan you into despair.

Shakspeare.

Cleopatra hath nodded him to her.

Shakspeare.

On the faith of Jove rely,

When nodding to thy suit he bows the sky.

Dryden.

2. To pay a slight bow.

Cassius must bend his body,

If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.

Shakspeare.

3. To bend downward with quick motion:

When a pine is hevn upon the plains,

And the last mortal stroke alone remains,

Lab'ring in pangs of death, and threat'ning all,

This way and that she nods, considering where to fall.

Dryden.

He climbs the mountain rocks,

Fir'd by the nodding verdure of its brow.

Thomson.

4. To be drowsy.

Your two predecessors were famous for their dreams and visions, and contrary to all other authors, never pleased their readers more than when they were nodding.

Addison.

NOD, nòd. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick declination of the head.

Children being to be restrained by their parents only in vicious things; a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss.

Locke.

A mighty king I am, an earthly god;

Nations obey my word and wait my nod;

And life or death depend on my decree.

Prior.

2. A quick declination.

Like a drunken sailor on a mast,

Ready with every nod to tumble down

Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Shakspeare.

3. The motion of the head in drowsiness.

Every drowsy nod shakes their doctrine, who teach that the soul is always thinking.

Locke.

4. A slight obeisance.

Will he give you the nod?

Shakspeare.

Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my cap than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeity.

Shakspeare.

 Neither love will twine, nor hay. Marvel.
 2. Two negatives are sometimes joined, but not according to the propriety of our present language, though rightly in the Saxon.

Mine eyes,
 Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure there is no force in eyes
 That can do hurt. Shakespeare.

3. Neither is sometimes included in nor, but not elegantly.

Before her gates, hill wolves and lions lay,
 Which with her virtuous drugs so tame she made,
 That wolfe, nor lion, would one man invade.

Power, disgrace, nor death could aught divert
 Thy glorious tongue thus to reveal thy heart. Dan.
 Simois nor Xanthus shall be wanting there;
 A new Achilles shall in arms appear. Dryden.

4. Nor is in poetry used in the first branch for neither.

Idle nymph, I pray thee, be Modest, and not follow me,
 I nor love myself, nor thee. Ben Jonson.
Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
 Or the fierce pains not feel. Milton.

But how perplexed, alas! is human fate!
 I whom nor avarice, nor pleasures move;
 Yet must myself be made a slave to love. Walsh.

NORTH, nõrth. n. s. [nonð, Saxon.]
 The point opposite to the sun in the meridian.

More unconstant than the wind; who woos

[notable, French; notabilis, Latin.]

1. Remarkable; memorable; observable:
it is now scarcely used but in irony.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears; which, it seems, all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

The same is notified in the notablest places in the diocese. Whitgift.
At Kilkenny, many notable laws were enacted, which shew, for the law doth best discover enormities, how much the English colonies were corrupted.
Davies.

Two young men appeared notable in strength, excellent in beauty, and comely in apparel.
Maccabees.

They bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken.
Clarendon.

Both armies lay still, without any notable action,
for the space of ten days. Clarendon.
Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables which foreign nations record. Addison.

It is impossible but a man must have first passed this notable stage, and got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.

2. Careful; bustling; in contempt and irony.

This absolute monarch was as notable a guardian of the fortunes as of the lives of his subjects. When any man grew rich, to keep him from being dangerous to the state, he sent for all his goods. Addison.

NOT'TAILENESS, nôt'tá-bl-nés. n. s. [from notable.] Appearance of business; importance: in contempt.

NO'TABLY, nô'tá-blè, or nôt'á-blè. adv.

[from notable.]

evidence. Ayliffe.

NOTARY, nôt'tá-ré. n. s. [notaire, French; from notarius, Lat.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.

There is a declaration made to have that very book, and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorised notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own. Hooker.

Go with me to a notary. seal me there

Your bond. Shaksp.

One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act. Bacon.

So I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis

Not I, but you and fame that make this verse.

Donne.

They have in each province, intendants and no-taries. Temple.

NOTATION, nô'tá'shùn. n. s. [notatio,
Latin.]

1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks; as by figures or letters.

Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods. Cocker.

2. Meaning; signification.

A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building. Hammond.

Conscience, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action: and so is the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice. South.

NOTCH, nôtsh. n. s. [nocchia, Italian.]

1. A nick; a hollow cut in any thing; a nock.

The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin, of a pyramidal figure oppositlet set, and with transverse notches. Grew.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes:
There take my tally of ten thousand pounds. Swift.

2. It seems to be erroneously used for nich.

He shew'd a comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making bere a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch. Swift.

TO NOTCH, nôtsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cut in small hollows.
He was too hard for him directly: before Corioli
he scotch'd him and notcht him like a carbonado.
Shakspere.

The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancellated and transversely notched. Grew.

From him whose quill stands quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope

But yield his sense to be too blunt and base
That note without an hound fine footing trace.

Spenser.

NOTE, nôte. n. s. [nota, Latin; note,
French.]

1. Mark; token: as, Bellarmine's notes of the church.

Whosoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession whereby the world knoweth what they are.
Hooker.

2. Notice; heed.

Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence. Shaksp.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note. Shaksp.

3. Reputation; consequence.

Divers men of note have been brought into England. Abbot.
Andronicus and Junia are of note among the apostles. Romans.

As for metals, authors of good note assure us that even they have been observed to grow. Boyle.

4. Reproach; stigma.

The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat.

Shakspere.

5. Account; information; intelligence; notice. Not used.

She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man i' th' moon's too slow. Shaksp.

In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been hid but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery. Bacon.

6. State of being observed.

Small matters come with great commendation because they are continually in use and in note;
whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh
but on festivals. Bacon.

7. Tune; voice; harmonick or melodious sound.

These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude so many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls. Hooker.

The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note.
Milton.

I now must change
Those notes to tragick. Milton.

You that can tune your sounding string so well,
Of ladies' beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.

Waller.

One common note on either lyre did strike
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike.

Dryden.

8. Single sound in musick.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

9. Short hint; small paper; memorial register.

He will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Shakspere.

Shakspere.

In the body's prison so she lies,
As through the body's windows she must look,
Her divers powers of sense to exercise,
By gathering notes out of the world's great book.

Davies.

10. Abbreviation; symbol; musical character.

Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations.

Baker on Learning.

11. A small letter.

A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the coucave had inclos'd a note.

Dryden.

12. A written paper.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust.

Swift.

13. A paper given in confession of a debt.

His note will go further than my bond.

Arbut.

14. Explanatory annotation.

The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations.

Baker.

NOTER, nó'túr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from note.] He who takes notice.

NOTHING, nút'h'ing.¹⁶² n. s. [no and thing; naithing, Scotch.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation: opposed to something.

It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning.

Grev.

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it.

Bentley.

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it.

Watts.

2. Nonexistence.

Mighty states characterless are grated

To dusty nothing.

Shakespeare.

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

There shall nothing die.

Exodus.

Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,

But such a face as promis'd him sincere.

Dryden.

Philosophy wholly speculative is barren, and produces nothing but vain ideas.

Dryden.

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone.

Addison on the War.

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance.

Wake.

Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them.

Locke.

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows.

Clarendon.

6. No importance; no use; no value.

The outward shew of churches draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church.

Spens.

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught.

Isaiah.

7. No possession of fortune.

A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Shakespeare.

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts.

Ray.

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and otherwise, is great, but nothing to the profit.

Bacon.

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.

I had rather have one scratch my head 't' th' sun,

When the alarm was struck, than idly sit

To hear my nothings monster'd.

Shakespeare.

My dear nothings, take your leave,

No longer must you me deceive.

Crashaw.

'Tis nothing, says the fool; but says the friend,

This nothing, sir, will bring you to your end.

Do I not see your dropsy belly swell?

Dryden.

That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do.

Pope's Letters.

Narcissus is the glory of his race;

For who does nothing with a better grace?

Young.

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?

Jeb.

Auria, nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course.

Knolles.

But Adam, with such counsel nothing sway'd.

Milton.

NOTHINGNESS, nút'h'ing-nês. n. s. [from nothing.]

1. Nihilty; nonexistence.

His art did express

A quittance even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness.

Donne.

2. Nothing; thing of no value.

I a nothingness in deed and name,

Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcase.

Hudibras.

NO'TICE, nó'tis.¹⁴² n. s. [notice, Fr. notitia, Lat.]

1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.

The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from.

Locke.

This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed.

Locke.

How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons!

Watts.

2. Information; intelligence given or received.

I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his duchess will be here.

Shakespeare.

NOTIFICATION, nó-té-fè-ká'shûn. n. s. [notification, Fr. from notify.]

Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.

Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may by agreement, give great variety of notifications.

Holder.

TO NO'TIFY, nó-té-fi.¹⁸³ v. a. [notifier, French; notifico, Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.

There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God.

Hooker.

Good and evil operate upon the mind of man by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind.

South.

This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year: a kind of standard by which we measure time.

Holder.

NOTION, nó'shûn. n. s. [notion, French; notio, Lat.]

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the proper notion of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men.

Pearson.

The fiction of some beings which are not in nature, second notions as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being.

Dryden.

Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind.

South.

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write.

Newton.

There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and its laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words.

Cheyne.

That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c.

Watts.

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves,
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain.

Milton.

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours.

Addison.

Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come.

Atterbury.

3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakspeare, but not in use.

His notion weakens, his discernings are lethargy'd. Shakspeare
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milton
NO'TIONAL, nô'shûn-âl's adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.

The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon

Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior

We must be wary, lest we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.
The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glanville

NOTIONALITY, nô-shûn-âl'lè-té. n. s. [from notional.] Empty, ungrounded opinion.
Not in use.

I aimed at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative *notional*ity. Glanville

NO'TIONALLY, nô'shûn-âl-lè. adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.

The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute. Norris

NOTORI'ETY, nô-tò-ri'è-té. n. s. [notoriété, Fr. from notorious.] Publick knowledge; publick exposure.

We see what a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all those remarkable passages: and indeed of several, that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature so exposed to publick notoriety. Addison NOTO'RIOUS, nô-tò-rè-ûs. adj. [notorius, Lat. notoire, Fr.] Publickly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether public or secret.

What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notorious. Whitgift

The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.
Shakspeare

I shall have law in Epbesus,
To your notorious shame. Shakspeare
In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Davies

This presbyterian man of war congratulates a certain notorious murder, committed by a zealot of his own devotion. White
We think not fit to condemn the most notorious malefactor before he hath had licence to propose his plea. Fell

What notorious vice is there that doth not bluish a man's reputation?
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which arises partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate.

The bishops have procured some small advancement of rents; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Addison NO'TORIOUSLY, nô-tò-rè-ûs-lè. adv. [from notorious.] Publickly; evidently; openly.

The exposing himself notoriously, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarendon

This is notoriously discoverable in some differences of brake or fern. Brown

Ovid tells us, that the cause was notoriously known at Rome, though it be left so obscure to after-ages. Dryden

Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexity; which do all notoriously vary in every age. Swift

NOTO'RIOUSNESS, nô-tò-rè-ûs-nês n. s. [from notorious.] Publick fame; notoriety.

To NOTT, nôt. v. a. To shear. Ainsworth

NO'TWHEAT, nô'thwéte. n. s. [not and wheat.]

Of wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requirith the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbarbed, being contented with a meaner earth. Carew

NOTWITHSTA'NDING, nôt-with-stând'ing. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]

1. Without hinderance or obstruction from.

Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were so transported that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decay of Piety

2. Although; this use is not proper.

A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Addison

3. Nevertheless; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker

The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven; notwithstanding this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker

He bath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter Shakspeare

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation, produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it a more novercal way. Derham.

NOUGHT, nôwt.^{319 393} n. s. [ne auct, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write aught not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not nought for nothing; but a custom has irreversibly prevailed of using naught for bad, and nought for nothing.]

1. Not any thing; nothing.

Who cannot see this palpable device;

Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?

Bad is the world, and it will come to nought,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakespeare.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth ev'ry passion,
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shaksp.
Ye are of nothing, and your work of nought. Isaiah.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Milton.

2. In no degree. A kind of adverbial signification, which nothing has sometimes.

Hast sold me to this novice. Shaksp.

Bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place. Shaksp.

You are novices; 'tis a world to see
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew. Shaksp.

We have novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail. Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens into the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are plying his full purse and his empty pate. South.

I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade;
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.
And she I love, or laughs at all my pain,

Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain. Dryden.

In these experiments I have set down such circumstances, by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspicuous, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only. Newton.

NU'TMEG, nû'tmêg. n. s. [nut and ma-guêt, French.] The kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace, before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweetmeat, or as a curiosity.

There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. Hill.

The second integument, a dry and floseulous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.

NU'TSHELL, nû'tshêl. n. s. [nut and shell.]

1. The hard substance that encloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shaksp.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell I had never got off again. L'Estrange.

NU'TTREE, nû'ttrêe. n. s. [nut and tree.]

A tree that bears nuts: commonly a hazel.

Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak. Peacham.

Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICA'TION, nû-trê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [nutricatio, Latin.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition. Brown.

NU'TRIMENT, nû'trê-mênt. n. s. [nutrimentum, Lat.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutrition? Shakespeare.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift.

NUTRIMENTAL, nû-trê-mên'tâl.⁸⁵ adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arbutnot.

NUTRI'TION, nû-trîsh'ûn. n. s. [from nutritio, nutrio, Latin; nutrition, French.]

1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or increasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed.

Glanville.
 The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood.
Arbuthnot.

2. That which nourishes; nutriment. Less properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
 To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot.
Pope.

NUTRITIOUS, nû-trîsh'ûs.³¹⁴ adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing.

O may'st thou often see
 Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within.
Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities.
Arbuthnot.

NUTRITIVE, nû-trî-tîv.¹⁰³ adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Nourishing; nutrimental; alimential.

While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they suffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through.

Blackn.

NUTRITURE, nû-trê-tûre. n. s. [from nutrio, Lat.] The power of nourishing. Not used.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture.
Harvey.

To NUZZLE, nû'z'l.⁴⁰⁵ v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nursle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]

1. To nurse; to foster.

Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation.
Sidney.

2. To go with the nose down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud.
Arbuthnot.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work.
Arbuthnot.

The blessed benefit, not there confu'd,
 Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind.
Pope.
NYMPH, nîmf.⁴¹³ n. s. [νύμφη; nymphæ, Latin.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
 Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
 From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
 And runs a nymph along the grassy plains.
Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
 None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
 The nymph I dare not, need not name.
Waller.

NYMPHISH, nîm'fish. adj. [from nymphæ.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to nymphish war.
Drayton.

NYS, nîs. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.

Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
 And buildest strong work upon a weak ground.
Spenser.

O.

O, ò.¹⁶¹ Has in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, frong, long. It is usually denoted long by a servile a subjoined; as, moan; or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scroll, and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger!
Decay of Piety.

O! were he present, that his eyes and hands
 Might see, and urge, the death which he commands.
Dryden.

2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakspeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
 The vasty field of France! or may we cram
 Within this wooden O, the very casks
 That did affright the air at Agincourt.
Shaksp.

OAF, ôfe.²⁹⁶ n. s. [This word is variously written; auff, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouphæ, a demon or fairy; in German alf, from which elf; and means properly the same with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.

These, when a child haps to be got,
 Which after proves an idiot,
 When folk perceives it thriveth not,

The fault therein to smother:

Some silly doating brainless calf,
 That understands things by the half,
 Says that the fairy left this oaf,
 And took away the other.
Drayton.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OA'FISH, ôfe'ish. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

OA'FISHNESS, ôfe'ish-nês. n. s. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.

OAK, ôke.²⁹⁶ n. s. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to show how easy it is to play the fool, under a show of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from οικος, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shown his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critick, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἄλκη, strength; by taking the three first letters, and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five.
Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak.

Shakspeare.

He lay along
 Under an oak, whose antique root peps out
 Upon the brook that brawls along this wood.

Shakspeare.

No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk.

Bacon.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
 Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees:
 Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
 Supreme in state; and in three more decays.
Dryd.
 An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak.
Locke.

A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incrustated and affixed to oak leaves.
Woodward.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
 The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
 While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
 And realms commanded which those trees adorn.
Pope.

OAK Evergreen, ôke. n. s. [ilex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world.
Miller.

OAKA'PPLE, ôkc'âp-pl. n. s. [oak and aphle.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks.
Bacon.

OA'KEN, ô'k'n.¹⁰³ adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships.
Bacon.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
 Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r.
Milton.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addison.

He snatch'd a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot.

OAKENPIN, ó'k'n-pín. n. s. An apple.

Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OAKUM, ó'kúm. n. s. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they caulk
the seams of the ships, of old sear and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown so rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and washes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Ralceigh.

Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the caulking-iron guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR, óre.²⁹⁵ n. s. [ape, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of ploughing the water, from the same root with ear, to plough; aro, Latin.]
A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shakspeare.

So tow'rd's a ship the oar-finn'd galleys ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide, Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,

Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryd.
Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

TO OAR, óre. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.

He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

TO OAR, óre. v. a. To impel by rowing.

His bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes
To th' shore. Shakspeare.

OAR'Y, ó'rè. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

OAST, óste. n. s. A kiln. Not in use.

Empty the bin into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln to be dried. Mort.

OATCAKE, óte'kàke.²⁹³ n. s. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes
upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

OATEN, ó't'n.¹⁰³ adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shakspeare.

OATH, óth.²⁹⁵ n. s. [aith, Gothic; að, Saxon. The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very ob-servable, as it may show that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou then didst rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me. Shakspeare.

All the oath-rites said,
I then ascended her adorned bed. Chapman.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE, óth'a-bl. adj. [from oath. A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable,
Altho' I know you'll swear
Into strong shudders th' immortal gods. Shakspeare.

OATHBREAK'ING, óth'brà'king. n. s. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakspeare.

OATMALT, óte'màlt. n. s. [oat and malt.]
Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one-half oatmalt, and the other half barleymalt. Mortimer.

OATMEAL, ót'mèle, or óte'mèle.²⁹⁵ n. s.
[oat and meal.] Flower made by grind- ing oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbutnot.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of ashes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

OATMEAL, óte'mèle. n. s. [panicum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS, ótes. n. s. [aten, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.

It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. Shakspeare.

It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatbeard, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATTHISTLE, óte'this's'l. n. s. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OBAMBULA'TION, ób-ám-bù-lá'shùn. n. s.
[obambulatio, from obambulo, Latin.]

The act of walking about. Dict.

TO OBDUCE, ób-dùse'. v. a. [obduco, Lat.]

To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUCT'ION, ób-dùk'shùn. n. s. [from obductio, obduco, Lat.] The act of cov- ering, or laying a cover.

OBDURACY, ób'jú-rá-sè, or ób-dù'rá-sè.
^{293 294} n. s. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart.

Thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency. Shakspeare.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obduracy. South.

OBDURATE, ób'jú-ráte, or ób-dù'ráte.
^{91 293 294 503} adj. [obduratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakspeare.

If when you make your pray'rs,
God should be so obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls? Shakspeare.

Women are soft, mild pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakspeare.

To convince the proud what signs avail,
Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.

2. Hardened; firm; stubborn; always with some degree of evil.

Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing soreery could charm
Pain for a while, or ænguish, and excite
Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton.

No such thought ever strikes his marble obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged.

They joined the most obdurate consonants, without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OBDURATELY, ób'jú-rát-lè. adv. [from obdurate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; im- penitently.

OBDURATENESS, ób'jú-rát-nès. n. s. [from obdurate.] Stubbornness; inflexibility;
impenitence.

OBDURA'TION, ób-jù-rá'shùn. n. s. [from obdurate.] Hardness of heart; stub- bornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker.

This barren season is always the reward of obstinate obduration. Hammond.

OBDUR'ED, ób-dùr'd'.³⁵⁹ adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impeni- tent.

This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs Insensate. Milton.

OBE'DIENCE, ó-bé'jé-ènse.^{293 376 98} n. s. [obe- diencia, Fr. obediencia, Lat.] Obsequi- ousness; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obediencia. Shakspeare.

Thy husband

Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shaksp.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. Romans.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange *obedienc*e to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon.

In vain thou bid'st me to forbear,
Obedience were rebellion here. Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
Obedience to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death. Milton.

We must beg the grace and assistance of God's spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obedience to him. Duty of Man.

The *obedienc*e of men is to imitate the *obedienc*e of angels, and rational beings on earth are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him.
Law.

OBE'DIENT, ò-b'è-j'è-ènt. adj. [obediens,
Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition;
obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things.
2 Corinthians.

To this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise. Shaksp.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotson.

The chief his orders gives; th' obedient band,
With due observance, wait the chief's command.
Pope.

OBE'DIENTIAL, ò-b'è-j'è-ènt-shál. adj. [obe- dientiel, French; from obedient.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obedienc- tial submission to the command. Hammond.

Faith is then perfect when it produces in us a fi-ducary assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obediential submission to the commands.
Wake's Preparation for Death.

OBE'DIENTLY, ò-b'è-j'è-ènt-lé. adv. [from obedient.] With obedience.

We should behave ourselves reverently and obe- diently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Tillotson.

OBE'ISANCE, ò-b'á-sánsé.²⁶⁰ n. s. [obeisance, French. This word is formed by corruption from obaisance, an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Bartholomew my page,
See drest in all suits like a lady;
Then call him madam, do him all obeisance.
Shaksp.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king.
1 Kings.

The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
And scem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

O'BELISK, òb'è-lisk. n. s. [obeliscus, Lat.]
1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.
Pope.

2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].
He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant. Grew.

OBEQUITA'TION, òb-èk-kwè-tá'shùn. n. s.
[from obequito, Latin.] The act of riding about.

OBERRA'TION, òb-èr-rá'shùn. n. s. [from oberro, Latin.] The act of wandering about.

OBE'SE, ò-bè-sé'. adj. [obesus, Latin.]
Fat; loaden with flesh.

OBE'SENESS, ò-bè-sé'nés. } n. s. [from OBE'SITY, ò-bè-sé-té. } obese.] Morbid fatness; incumbrance of flesh.

On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phtisis; on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; on their smallness, obesity. Grew.

To OBE'Y, ò-bá'. v. a. [obeir, French; obe- dio, Latin.]

1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.

The will of Heav'n
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shaksp.
I am asham'd, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Shaksp.

Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Romans.
The ancient Britons yet a scepter'd king obeyed.
Drayton.

Was she thy god, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton.
Africk and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway,
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way.
Dryden.

2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms;
but it is frequent in old writers: when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obeir au roi.
He commanded the trumpets to sound; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their staves. Sidney.
The flit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as she did desire. Spenser.
His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Romans.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd.
Milton.

O'BJECT, òb'jèkt.⁴⁰² n. s. [objet, French, objectum, Latin.]

1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.

Pardon
The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shaksp.

They're her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their object send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end. Davies.
The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hammond.

The act of faith is applicated to the object according to the nature of it; to what is already past, as past; to what is to come, as still to come; to that which is present, as it is still present. Pearson.
Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praises. Sprat.
Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden.

As you have no mistress to serve, so let your own soul be the object of your daily care and attendance.

Lac.

2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.

Dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object. Shaksp.
Why else this double object in our sight,
Of flight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground.
Milton.

This passenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Atterbury.

3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.

The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called by grammarians, the object of the verb. Clarke.

O'BJECTGLASS, òb'jèkt-glás. n. s. Glass of an optical instrument remotest from the eye.

An objectglass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it.
Newton.

To O'BJE'CT, òb'jèkt'. v. a. [objecter, Fr.
objicio, objectum, Lat.]

1. To oppose; to present in opposition.

Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will show more so as that they be object to view at once.
Bacon.

Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.

2. To propose as a charge criminal, or a reason adverse: with to or against.

Were it not some kind of blemish to be likè unto infidels and heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Hooker.

The book requireth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered. Whitgift.

Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requireth a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. Bacon.

The old truth was, object ingratitude, and ye ob- ject all crimes: and is it not as old a truth, is it not a higher truth, object rebellion, and ye object all crimes? Hobday.

This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sprat.

It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like.
Dryden.

Speak on, sir,
I dare your worst objections. Shaksp.

3. Adverse argument.

There is ever between all estates a secret war.
I know well this speech is the objection, and not the decision: and that it is after refused. Bacon.

Whosoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet.

4. Fault found.
I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Walsh:

O'BJECTIVE, òb-jèk'tív. adj. [objectif, French; objectus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds.

Watts.

2. Made an object; proposed as an object; residing in objects.

If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe?

Hale.

O'BJECTIVELY, òb-jèk'tív-lè. adv. [from objective.]

1. In manner of an object.

This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that same object of the mind.

Locke.

2. In the state of an object.

The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense.

Brown.

O'BJECTIVENESS, òb-jèk'tív-nés. n. s. [from objective.] The state of being an object.

Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectiveness fitted to that faculty.

Hale.

OBJECTOR, òb-jèk'túr.¹⁸⁶ n. s. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.

But these objectors must the cause upbraid, That has not mortal man immortal made.

Blackmore.

Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism.

Bentley.

O'BIT, òb'ít. [a corruption of obit, or obivit.] Funeral obsequies.

Ainsw.

OBJURGA'TION, òb-júr'gá'shùn. n. s. [objurgatio, Latin.] Reproof; reprehension.

If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations?

Bramhall.

OBJURGATORY, òb-júr'gá-túr-rè.⁵¹² adj. [objurgatorius, Lat.] Reprehensory; culpatory; chiding.

OBLA'TE, òb-láte'. adj. [oblatus, Latin.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.

By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its centre, though not exactly thither, by reason of the oblata spheroidal figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis.

Cheyne.

OBLA'TION, òb-lá'shùn. n. s. [oblacion, Fr. oblatus, Lat.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence.

She looked upon the picture before her, and straight sighed, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations.

Sidney.

Many conceive in the oblacion of Jephtha's daughter, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world.

Brown.

The will gives worth to the oblacion, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest.

South.

The kind oblacion of a falling tear. Behold the coward and the brave, All make oblations at this shrine.

Swift.

Your father lost a father; That father his; and the survivor bound In filial obligation, for some term, To do obsequious sorrow.

Shaksp.

There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace.

Bacon.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction.

Wilkins.

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms.

Dryd.

No ties can bind, that from constraint arise, Where either's forc'd all obligation dies.

Granville.

2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen.

Taylor.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself?

L'Estrange.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people.

South.

OBLIGATORY, òb'lè-gá-túr-è.⁵¹² adj. [obligatoire, Fr. from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive: with to or on.

And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes and states.

Bacon.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due.

Taylor.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory.

Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void.

Swift.

White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called catholic, in reference to the universal obedience which it prescribeth; both in regard to the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands.

Pearson.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health.

Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law.

Rogers.

2. To indebt; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Since love *oblige*s not, I from this hour Assume the right of man's despotic power.

Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled, To think thy wit these godlike notions bred! These truths are not the product of thy mind, But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:

Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight, And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar, And would not be obliged to God for more.

Dryd.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train, When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain, She waits or to the scaffold or the cell.

Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals, and to them for all the conveniences and comforts of life.

Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by disdainning him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it.

South.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged.

L'Estrange.

Happy the people who preserve their honour, By the same duties that oblige their praise!

Addison.

OBLIGE'É, òb-lè-jèé'. n. s. [from oblige.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hale.

Let men consider themselves as ensnared in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Piety.

These simple ideas the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERATION, òb-lit'èr-à'shùn. n. s. [obliteratio, Lat.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale.

OBLIVION, ò-bliv'vè-ùn.¹¹³ n. s. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakspeare.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.

Can they imagine that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

O'BLIQUE, òb'lò-kwè.³⁴⁵ n. s. [obliquor, Latin.]

1. Censorious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obliquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions, so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hooker.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old deserts. David's Civil War.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounce'd and sworn?

Shall names, that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction? Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true geniuses, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.
