For he went sickly forth. Shakespeare.

A pleasing cordial, Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. Shaksp.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryden.

Would we know what health and ease are worth, let us ask one that is sickly, or in pain, and we have the price. Grew.

There affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheeks the roses of eighteen;
Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride. Pope.

When on my sickly couch I lay,
Impatient both of night and day,
Then Stella ran to my relief. Swift.

Your bodies are not only poor and perishing, like your clothes; but like infected clothes; fill you with all diseases and distempers, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings. Law.

2. Faint; weak; languid.

The moon grows sickly at the sight of day,
And early cocks have summon'd me away. Dryden.

To animate the doubtful fight,
Namur in vain expects that ray;
In vain France hopes the sickly light
Should shine near William's fuller day. Prior.

To SICKLY, sik'lè. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make diseased; to taint with the hue of disease. Not in use.

The native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought. Shakespeare.

Commit their woolly sides. Thomson.

2. Any part of any body opposed to any other part.

The tables were written on both their sides, on the one side and on the other. Exodus.

The force of these outward streams might well enough serve for the turning of the screw, if it were so that both its sides would equiponderate. Wilkins.

3. The right or left.

The lovely Thais by his side
Sat, like a blooming eastern bride,
In flow'r of youth, and beauty's pride. Dryden.

4. Margin; edge; verge.

Or where Hydaspes' wealthy side
Pays tribute to the Persian pride. Roscommon.

Poor wretch! on stormy seas to lose thy life;
For now the flowing tide
Had brought the body nearer to the side. Dryden.

The temple of Diana chaste
A sylvan scene with various greens was drawn,
Shades on the sides, and in the midst a lawn. Dryden.

I could see persons dressed in glorious habits, with garlands upon their heads, lying down by the sides of fountains. Addison.

5. Any kind of local respect.

They looking back, all th' eastern side beheld
Of Paradise. Milton.

If our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing. Milton.

6. Party; interest; faction; sect.

Their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but for their spirits and souls,
This word rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. Shaksp.

Favour, custom, and at last number, will be on the side of grace. Sprat.

Men be always took to be
His friends, and dogs his enemy;
Who never so much hurt had done him,
As his own side did falling on him. Hudibras.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chaucer's side. Dryden.

That person, who fills their chair, has justly gained the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour. Addison.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons half the fair. Tickel.

Some valuing those of their own side, or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

He from the taste obscene reclaim our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart. Pope.

7. Any part placed in contradistinction or opposition to another. It is used of persons, or propositions, respecting each other.

There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides. Knolles.

The plague is not easily received by such as continually are about them that have it; on the other side, the plague taketh soonest hold of those that come out of a fresh air. Bacon.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written; but, on the other side, my reason tells me, that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn. Dryden.

My secret wishes would my choice decide;
But open justice bends to neither side. Dryden.

It is granted on both sides, that the fear of a Deity doth universally possess the minds of men. Tillotson.

Two nations still pursued Peculiar ends, on each side resolute
To fly conjunction. Philips.

8. It is used to note consanguinity: as, he is cousin by his mother or father's side.

Yet here and there we grant a gentle bride,
Whose temper hethers by the father's side;
Unlike the rest that double human care,
Fond to relieve, or resolute to share. Parne!

SIDE, side. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Lateral.

Take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts, and on the upper door post of the houses. Exodus.

2. Oblique; indirect.

a surprize, than by downright admonition. L'Estr.

One mighty squadron with a side wind sped. Dryden.

The parts of water, being easily separable from each other, will, by a side motion, be easily removed, and give way to the approach of two pieces of marble. Locke.

What natural agent could turn them side, could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a-falling? Bentley.

He not only gives us the full prospects, but several unexpected peculiarities, and side views, unoh-served by any painter but Homer. Pope.

My secret enemies could not forbear some expressions, which by a side wind reflected on me. Swift.

To SIDE, side. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To lean on one side.

All rising to great place is by a winding stair;
and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when placed. Bacon.

2. To take a party; to engage in a faction.

Vex'd are the nobles who have sided
In his behalf. Shaksp.

As soon as discontents drove men into sidings, as ill humours fall to the disaffected part, which causes inflammations, so did all who affected novelties, adhere to that side. King Charles.

Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors' sakes, before they be well understood. Digby.

Not yet so dully desperate
To side against ourselves with fate;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Hudibras.

The princes differ and divide;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side. Granville.

It is pleasant to see a verse of an old poet revolting from its original sense, and siding with a modern subject. Addison.

All side in parties, and begin th' attack. Pope.

Those who pretended to be in with the principles upon which her majesty proceeded, either absented themselves where the whole cause depended, or sided with the enemy. Swift.

The equitable part of those who now side against the court, will probably be more temperate. Swift.

TO SID DL, sí'dl.⁴⁰⁵ v. n. [from side.]

1. To go with the body the narrowest way.

The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and sidling, and squeezing his body. Swift.

I passed very gently and sidling through the two principal streets. Swift.

2. To lie on the side.

A fellow nailed up maps in a gentleman's closet, some sidling, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the pannels. Swift.

SID DE LONG, side'lóng. adj. [side and long.] Lateral; oblique; not in front; not direct.

She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as she spoke, and like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do. Dryd.

The deadly wound is in thy soul:
When thou a tempting harlot dost behold,
And when she casts on thee a sidelong glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dance. Dryd.

The reason of the planets' motions in curve lines is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or sidelong impulse. Locke.

The kiss snatch'd hasty from the sidelong maid. Thomson.

SID DE LONG, sí'dlóng. adv.

1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit; not in opposition.

As if on earth
Winds underground, or waters, forcing way
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton.

As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sidelong to seize. Dryden.

2. On the side.

If it prove too wet, lay your pots sidelong; but shade those which blow from the afternoon sun. Evelyn.

SID ER WISE, side'wíze. } and way, or wise.] Laterally; on one side.

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew she wears
Prove to be presaging tears. Milton.

If the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction sideways. Newton.

SIE GE, sédje. n. s. [siege, French.]

1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a leaguer.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, Till famine eat them up. Shakspeare.

It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town. Knolles.

The more I see
Pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries. Milton.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair. Shakspeare.

Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife. Shakspeare.

Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast. Dryden.

3. [siege, French.] Seat; throne. Obsolete.
Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siege began these words aloud to sound. Fairy Queen.

4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.
I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege. Shakspeare.

Your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siege. Shaksp.

5. [siege, French.] Stool.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, as the mouths of the meseracks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siege. Brown.

TO SIE GE, sédje. v. a. [sieger, French.]
To besiege. Not in use.

Him he had long opprest with tort,
And fast imprisoned in sieged fort. Fairy Queen.

SIE VE, sív.²⁷⁷ n. s. [from sift.] Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a searce.

Thy counsel
Falls now into my ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Shaksp.

In a sieve I'll bither sail
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do. Shaksp.

An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to stopping the holes. L'Estrange.

If life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself you liv'd not while you might. Dryden.

TO SIFT, síft. v. a. [siften, Sax. siften, Dutch.]

2. To separate; to part.
When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show. Dryden.

3. To examine; to try.
We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal. Hooker.

All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all christian churches ought to have their elderships. Hooker.

I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart. Shaksp.

As near as I could sift him on that argument. Shakspeare.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
Proof against all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton.

One would think that every member, who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects. Addison.

SIF TER, síft'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from sift.] He who sifts.

SIG, síg, was used by the Saxons for victory; Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper: and almost in the same sense are Nicocles, Nicomyachus, Nicander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincenius, &c. Gibson.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath. Shakspeare.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

He sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Mark.

For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, will I rise. Psalms.

Happier he,
Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slippery thrones were plac'd,
And, chasing, sigh to think themselves are chas'd. Dryden.

The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one. Prior.
TO SIGH, sí. v. a. To lament; to mourn.
Not in use.

Agès to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate. Prior.

SIGH, sí.³⁹⁷ n. s. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.

Full often has my heart swola with keeping my sights imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes turned back to drown my heart.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sights; Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes Shak.

What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely enlarg'd. Shakespeare.

Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sung in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face. Taylor.

In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen Issuing sights, that smok'd along the wall. Dryden.

SIG-*H*T, site³⁵³ n. s. [zei'fide, Saxon; sicht, gesicht, Dutch.]

Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitude, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton.

Similitude to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitude of one face can be found in the other. South.

Fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine;
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile.

Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education. Wotton.

Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SI'MITAR, sim'ê-târ.⁸⁸ n. s. [See CIMETER.]

A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

To SI'MMER, sim'mûr.⁸⁸ v. n. [a word made probably from the sound, but written, by Skinner, simber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

Place a vessel in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little.

Boyle.

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simber in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion.

SI'MNEL, sim'nél. n. s. [simnellus, low Latin.] A kind of sweet bread or cake.

SIMO'NIACK, sim-mô'né-âk. n. s. [simoniague, Fr. simoniacus, Latin.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.

If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniack, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial.

Ayliffe.

SIMON'ACAL, sim-mô'né-â-kâl. adj. [from simoniack.] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

Add to your criminals the simoniacal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth.

Spectator.

SIM'ONY, sim'ûn-ê. n. s. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion

Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law.

Shakespeare.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable

Walton.

No simony nor sinicure is known;
There works the bee no honey for the drone.

Garth.

To SI'MPER, sim'pûr.⁸⁸ v. n. [from rymbelan, Saxon, to keep holiday, Skinner. He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples or water gently boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness

Sidney.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your sinpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them.

Shakespeare.

Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine.

Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or drest in smiles of sweet Cœlia shine,
With sinp'ring angels, palms, and harps divine.

Pope.

SI'MPER, sim'pûr.⁸⁸ n. s. [from the verb.] Smile; generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow stared him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh

Addison.

Great Tibbald nods: the proud Parnassian sneer,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look.

Pope.

SI'MPLE, sim'pl.⁴⁰⁶ adj. [simplex, Lat. simple, Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simpler sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them.

Hooker.

They meet upon the way

A simple husbandman in garments grey. Hub Tule.
I am a simple woman, much too weak

To oppose your cunning. Shakespeare.

O Ethelinda,

My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness

Rowe.

In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise.

Young.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting

Bacon.

Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish.

Watts.

Among substances, some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures: so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them.

Watts.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy.

Thomson.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going.

Proverbs.

Dick, simple odes too many show ye

My servile complaisance to Chloe.

Prior.

SI'MPLE, sim'pl. n. s. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

Of simples in these groves that grow,

We'll learn the perfect skill;

The nature of each herb to know,

Which cures, and which can kill.

Drayton.

Our foster nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Shakespeare.

He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.

Milton.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies.

Temple.

Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains.

Dryden.

Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their pow'rs I know.

Dryden

To SI'MPLE, sim'pl. v. n. To gather simples.

As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simples on the flow'ry hills he stray'd.

Garth.

SI'MPLENESS, sim'pl-nés. n. s. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play:

For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it.

Shakespeare.

Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simpleness of the elements.

Digby.

SI'MPLER, sim'pl-ûr.⁸⁸ n. s. [from simple.] A simplist; an herbalist.

SI'MPLESS, sim'plés. n. s. [simplesse, Fr.]

Simplicity; silliness; folly. Obsolete.

Their weeds been not so highly were,
Such simplesse mought them shend,
They been yclad in purple and pall,
They reign and ruler over all.

Sponser.

SI'MPLETON, sim'pl-tôn. n. s. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a trifler; a foolish fellow. A low word.

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down.

L'Estrange.

Those letters may prove a diseredited, as lasting as mercenary scribbles, or curious simpletons, can make it.

Pope.

SIMPLI'CITY, sim-plis'ê-tê. n. s. [simplicitas, Latin; simplicité, French.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The sweet-minded Philocelea was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it.

Sidney.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times.

Hooker.

In low simplicity,

He lends out money gratis, and brings down

The rate of usance.

Shakespeare.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither disliked nor much regarded, was created duke.

Hayward.

Suspicion sleeps

At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity

Resigns her charge.

Milton.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;

In wit a man, simplicity a child.

Pope.

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart.

Female Quixote.

2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

Those enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself.

Hammond.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity.

Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture.

Brown.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials.

Burnet.

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot.

Hooker.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge?

Proverbs.

SI'MPLIST, sim'plist. n. s. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplists for anomonum.

Brown.

SI'MPLY, sim'plé. adv. [from simple.]

1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly; artlesly.

Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak,

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise

By simply meek.

Milton.

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws concerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hooker.

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth. Hooker.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Shakespeare.

To say or to do aught with memory and imitation no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milton.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

SIM'ULAR, sim-'ù-lâr.⁹⁵ n. s. [from simulo, Latin.] One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjurer, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakespeare.

SIMULA'TION, sim-'ù-là'shùn. n. s. [simulation, French; simulatio, from simulo, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fearfulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which, because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Wolton.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South.

SIMULTA'NEOUS, si-mùl-tà-né-ùs.¹³⁶ adj. [simultaneus, Lat.] Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville.

SIN, sîn. n. s. [rÿn, Saxon.]

1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakespeare.

How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin absolver, and my friend profest,
To mangle me with that word banishment? Shaksp.

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them. Shakespeare.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him. Shakespeare.

Dishonest shame
Of nature's works: honour dishonourable,
Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind!
Milton.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould.
Milton.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a boist'rous hand?
Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world.
Watts.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.

3. It is used by Shakspeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Henry VIII.

To SIN, sîn. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.

Stand in awe and sin not. Psalms.

that sin not unto death. 1 John.

2. To offend against right.

I am a man
More sinned against than sinning. Shakespeare.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' eternal cause. Pope.

SINCE, sînce. adv. [formed by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from rÿðe, Sax.] Because that.

Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Locke.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason, can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Granville.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? Numbers.
He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was. Pope.

3. Ago; before this.

About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house. Sidney.

Spies held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since, brought my report. Shaksp.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the eighth. Davies.

How many ages since has Virgil writ! Roscom.

SINCE, sînce. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

He since the morning hour set out from heav'n.
Milton.

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients. Dryden.

SINCE'RE, sîn-sère'. adj. [sincerus, Lat. sincere, Fr.]

1. Unhurt; uninjured.

He tried a tough well chosen spear;
Th' inviolable body stood sincere. Dryden.

2. Pure; unmingled.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow,
A joy which never was sincere till now;
That which my conquest gave I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect, till I saw your eyes. Dryden.

The pleasures of sense, beasts taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy; without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that,
being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice. Arbutnot.

In English I would have all gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence
I do know to be corrupt. Shakespeare.

Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent;

Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.
Milton.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove.
Waterland.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life, as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid. Law.

SINCE'RELY, sîn-sère'lé. adv. [from sincere.] Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the wor-thier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and sincere- ly embrace it. Hooker.

That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you. Shakespeare.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincere- ly intent in the pursuit of truth. Watts.

SINCE'RENESS, sîn-sère'nés. } n. s. [sincere- SINCE'RITY, sîn-sér'é-té. } rité, French;
from sincere.]

1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.

Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost. Rogers.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.

In thy consort cease to fear a foe;
For thee she feels sincerity of woe. Pope.

SIN'DON, sîn'dûn.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [Lat.] A fold; a wrapper.

There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen. Bacon.

SINE, sine. n. s. [sinus, Latin.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the cord of twice the arch. Harris.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.
Cheyne.

SIN'ECURE, sîn-èkûre. n. s. [sine, without, and cura, care.] An office which has revenue without any employment.

A sinecure is a benefice without cure of souls.
Ayliffe.

No simony nor sinecure were known,
Nor would the bee work honey for the drone. Garth.

SIN'EW, sîn'ù.²⁶⁶ n. s. [renpe, Saxon;
senewen, Dutch.]

1. A tendon; the ligament by which the joints are moved.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinevs. Shakespeare.

The rooted fibres rose, and from the wound
Black bloody drops distill'd upon the ground:
Mute and amaz'd, my hair with terror stood;
Fear shrunk my sinevs, and congeal'd my blood.
Dryden.

A sinew cracked seldom recovers its former strength. Locke.

2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: as, money is the sinevs of war.

Some other sinevs there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise.
Hooker.

Such discouraging of men in the ways of an active conformity to the church's rules, cracks the si-

news of government; for it weakens and damps the spirits of the obedient. South.

In the principal figures of a picture, the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauties of his work. Dryden

3. Muscle or nerve.

The feeling pow'r, which is life's root,

Through ev'ry living part itself doth shed

By sinews, which extend from head to foot;

And, like a net, all o'er the body spread. Davies.

I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous moan

Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song

With thee conspires to do the singer wrong. Waller.

The birds know how to chuse their fare;

To peck this fruit they all forbear:

Those cheerful singers know not why

They should make any haste to die. Waller.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers. Dryden.

SINGINGMASTER, sing'ing-mâs-tür. n. s.

[sing and master.] One who teaches to sing.

He employed an itinerant singingmaster to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the psalms.

Addison.

SINGLE, *sing'gl.*⁴⁰⁵ adj. [singulus, Lat.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are of single signification without any ambiguity.

South.

Some were single acts, though each complete;

But ev'ry act stood ready to repeat. Dryden.

Then Theseus join'd with bold Pirithous came,

A single concord in a double name. Dryden.

High Alba,

A lonely desert, and an empty land,

Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,

A single house to their benighted guest. Addison.

Where the poesy or oratory shines, a single reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper views. Watts.

2. Particular; individual.

As no single man is born with a right of controul-

ing the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one single word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished: the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual

word to distinguish single from simple. Watts.

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought

The better fight, who single hast maintain'd

Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth.

Milton.

His wisdom such,
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear,
Whilst single he stood forth. Denham.
In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single, and conscious to myself alone
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden.

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore blessed? no: as a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shakspeare.
Pygmalion

Abhor'd all womankind, but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed. Dryden.

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.

To make flowers double, is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon.

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double-minded; simple. A scriptural sense.

The light of the body is the eye: if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. Matthew.

8. That in which one is opposed to one.

He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Punick bands affright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight. Dryden.

To SINGLE, sing'gl. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To choose out from among others.

I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he singled Clifford forth. Shakspeare.

Dost thou already single me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.
Every man may have a peculiar savour, which, although not perceptible unto man, is yet sensible unto dogs, who hereby can single out their master in the dark. Brown.

Begin, auspicious boy, to cast about Thy infant eyes, and with a smile thy mother single out. Dryden.

Single the lowliest of th' am'rous youth;
Ask for his vows, but hope not for his truth. Prior.

2. To sequester; to withdraw.

Yea, simply, saith Basil, and universally, whether it be in works of nature, or of voluntary choice, I see not any thing done as it should be, if it be wrought by an agent singling itself from consorts. Hooker.

3. To take alone.

Many men there are, than whom nothing is more commendable when they are singled; and yet, in society with others, none less fit to answer the duties which are looked for at their hands. Hooker.

4. To separate.

Hardly they herd, which by good hunters singled are. Sidney.

SINGLENESS, sing'gl-nēs. n. s. [from single.]

1. Not duplicity or multiplicity; the state of being only one.

2. Simplicity; sincerity; honest plainness.

It is not the deepness of their knowledge, but the singleness of their belief, which God accepteth. Hooker.
Men must be obliged to go through their business with singleness of heart. Law.

SINGLY, sing'glè. adv. [from single.]

1. Individually; particularly.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and therefore bound to restitution singly and entirely. Taylor.

They tend to the perfection of human nature, and to make men singly and personally good, or tend to the happiness of society. Tillotson.

2. Only; by himself.

Look thee, 'tis so; thou singly honest man,

Here take: the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Shakspeare.

3. Without partners or associates.

Belinda
Burns to encounter two advent'rous knights,
At ombre singly to decide their doom. Pope.

4. Honestly; simply; sincerely.

SINGULAR, sing'gù-lâr-lè. adj. [singularier, Fr. singularis, Latin.]

1. Single; not complex; not compound.

That idea which represents one particular determinate thing, is called a singular idea, whether simple, complex, or compound. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Expressing only one; not plural

If St. Paul's speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural has a greater latitude. Locke.

3. Particular; unexampled.

So singular a sadness
Must have a cause as strange as the effect. Denham.
Doubtless, if you are innocent, your case is extremely hard, yet it is not singular. Female Quixote

4. Having something not common to others. It is commonly used in a sense of disapprobation, whether applied to persons or things.

His zeal
None scconded, as singular and rash. Milton.
It is very commendable to be singular in any excellency, and religion is the greatest excellency; to be singular in any thing that is wise and worthy, is not a disparagement, but a praise. Tillotson.

5. Alone; that of which there is but one.

These busts of the emperors and empresses are all very scarce, and some of them almost singular in their kind. Addison.

SINGULARITY, sing-gù-lâr-è-tè. n. s. [singularité, Fr. from singular.]

1. Some character or quality by which one is distinguished from all, or from most others.

Pliny addeth this singularity to that soil, that the second year the very falling down of the seeds yieldeth corn. Raleigh.

2. Any thing remarkable; a curiosity; uncommon character or form.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my daughter came to look upon,
The statue of her mother. Shakspeare.

I took notice of this little figure for the singularity of the instrument: it is not unlike a violin. Addison.

3. Particular privilege or prerogative.

St. Gregory, being himself a bishop of Rome, and writing against the title of universal bishop, saith thus: None of all my predecessors ever consented to use this ungodly title: no bishop of Rome ever look upon him this name of singularity. Hooker.

Catholicism, which is here attributed unto the church, must be understood in opposition to the legal singularity of the Jewish nation. Pearson.

4. Character or manners different from those of others.

The spirit of singularity in a few ought to give place to publick judgment. Hooker.

Though, according to the practice of the world, it be singular for men thoroughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this matter is a singular commendation of it. Tillotson.

Singularity in sin puts it out of fashion, since to be alone in any practice seems to make the judgment of the world against it: but the concurrence of others is a tacit approbation of that in which they concur. South.

To SINGULARIZE, sing'gù-lâr-ize. v. a.

[se singulariser, Fr. from singular.] To make single.

SINGULARLY, sing'gù-lâr-lè. adv. [from singular.] Particularly; in a manner not common to others.

Solitude and singularity can neither daunt nor disgrace him, unless we could suppose it a disgrace to be singularly good. South.

SINGULT, sing'gùlt. n. s. [singultus, Lat.]

SINISTER, sin'nis-tûr. adj. [sinister, Latin.]

1. Being on the left hand; left; not right; not dexter. It seems to be used with the accent on the second syllable, at least in the primitive, and on the first in the figurative sense.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my sire's. Shakspeare.

Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister check. Shakspeare.

But a rib,
Crooked by nature, bent as now appears,
More to the part sinister from me drawn. Milton.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

In his sinister hand, instead of ball
He placed a mighty mug of potent ale. Dryden.

2. Bad; perverse; corrupt; deviating from honesty; unfair.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bridle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning? Hooker.

The duke of Clarence was soon after by sinister means made clean away. Spenser.

When are there more unworthy men chosen to offices, when is there more strife and contention about elections, or when do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitgift.

He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice. Shakspeare.

Those may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinths. Bacon.

The just person has given the world an assurance, by the constant tenor of his practice, that he makes a conscience of his ways, and that he scorns to undermine another's interest by any sinister or inferior arts. South.

3. [sinistre, Fr.] Unlucky; inauspicious. The accent is here on the second syllable.

Tempt it again; that is thy act, or none:
What all the several ills that visit earth,
Brought forth by night with a sinister birth,
Plagues, famine, fire, could not reach unto,
The sword, nor surfeits, let thy fury do. B. Jonson.

SINISTROUS, sin'nis-trûs. adj. [sinister, Lat.] Absurd; perverse; wrong-headed: in French, gauche.

A knave or fool can do no harm, even by the most sinistrous and absurd choice. Bentley.

SINISTROUSLY, sin'nis-trûs-lè. adv. [from sinistrous.]

1. With a tendency to the left.

Many in their infancy are sinistrously disposed, and divers continue all their life left-handed, and have but weak and imperfect use of the right. Brown.

2. Perverse; absurdly.

To SINK, singk. v. n. pret. I sunk, anciently sank; part. sunk or sunken.

[Frencau, Saxon; senken, German.]

1. To fall down through any medium; not to swim; to go to the bottom.

As is the oozy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures. Shaksp.
In with the river sunk, and with it rose
Satan, involv'd in rising mist; then sought
Where to lie hid. Milton.
He swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton.

The pirate sinks with his ill-gotten gains,
And nothing to another's use remains. Dryden.
Supposing several in a tempest will rather perish than work, would it not be madness in the rest to chuse to sink together, rather than do more than their share? Addison.

2. To fall gradually.
The arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down in his chariot. 2 Kings.
3. To enter or penetrate into any body.
David took a stone and slang it, and smote the Philistine, that the stone sunk into his forehead. 1 Samuel.

4. To lose height; to fall to a level.
In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march,
The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him. Addison.

5. To lose or want prominence.
What were his marks?—A lean cheek, a blue eye and sunken. Shaksp.
Deep dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden.

6. To be overwhelmed or depressed.
Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakespeare.
They arraign'd shall sink
Beneath thy sentence. Milton.
But if you this ambitious pray'r deny,
Then let me sink beneath proud Arcite's arms;
And, I once dead, let him possess her charms. Dryden.

7. To be received; to be impressed.
Let these sayings sink down into your ears. Luke.
Truth never sinks into these men's minds, nor gives any tincture to them. Locke.
8. To decline; to decrease; to decay.
Then down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes which in ages rose. Dryden.
This republic has been much more powerful than it is at present, as it is still likelier to sink than increase in its dominions. Addison.
Let not the fire sink or slacken, but increase. Mortimer.

9. To fall into rest or indolence.
Wouldst thou have me sink away
In pleasing dreams, and lose myself in love,
When every moment Cato's life's at stake? Addison.
10. To fall into any state worse than the former; to tend to ruin.
Nor urg'd the labours of my lord in vain,
A sinking empire longer to sustain. Dryden.
To SINK, singk.⁴⁰⁸ v. a.

1. To put under water; to disable from swimming or floating.
A small fleet of English made an hostile invasion or incursion upon their havens and roads, and fired, sunk, and carried away ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

2. To delve; to make by delving.
At Saga in Germany they dig up iron in the fields by sinking ditches two feet deep, and in the space of ten years the ditches are digged again for iron since produced. Boyle.
Near Geneva are quarries of freestone, that run under the lake: when the water is at lowest, they make within the borders of it a little square, inclosed within four walls: in this square they sink a pit, and dig for freestone. Addison.

3. To depress; to degrade.
A mighty king I am, an earthly god;
I raise or sink, imprison, or set free;
And life or death depends on my decree. Prior.

Trifling painters or sculptors bestow infinite pains upon the most insignificant parts of a figure, till they sink the grandeur of the whole. Pope.

4. To plunge into destruction.
Heav'n bear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the ax falls, if I be not faithful. Shaksp.

5. To make to fall.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some before standing, and undermine others, sinking them into the abyss.
Woodward.

6. To bring low; to diminish in quantity.
When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream,
You sunk the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted?
Addison.

7. To crush; to overbear; to depress.
That Hector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may. Pope.

8. To diminish; to degrade.
They catch at all opportunities of ruining our trade, and sinking the figure which we make. Addison.
I mean not that we should sink our figure out of covetousness; and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure. Rogers.

9. To make to decline.
Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
And made him wither in a green old age. Rowe.
To labour for a sunk corrupted state. Lytleton.
10. To suppress; to conceal; to intervert.
If sent with ready money to buy any thing, and you happen to be out of pocket, sink the money, and take up the goods on account. Swift.

SINK, singk.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [Finc, Saxon.]

1. A drain; a jakes.
Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd
Who is the sink o' th' body. Shakespeare.
Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Haycard.
Gather more filth than any sink in town. Granville.
Returning home at night, you'll find the sink
Strike your offended sense with double stink. Swift.

2. Any place where corruption is gathered.

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
Wearied and gall'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben Jonson.
Our soul, whose country's heav'n, and God her father,
Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent:
Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That she returns home wiser than she went. Donne.

- SINLESS*, sín'lés. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know
What nearer might concern him. Milton
At that tasted fruit
The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course intended; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat? Milt.
Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,

Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou Satt'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace. Milt.

No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane,
Observant of the right. Dryden.

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas!
who should live if God did this? Rogers.

SINLESSNESS, sín'lés-nés. n. s. [from sinless] Exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious conde-scensions to those, the sinlessness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle.

SINNER, sín'núr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religi'usly good.

Let the holdest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men; but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial. Law.

2. An offender; a criminal.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakespeare.

Over the guilty then the fury shakes
The sounding whip, and brandishes her snakes,
And the pale sinner with her sisters takes. Dryden.
Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphick glow. Pope.

Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

SINOFFERING, sín'òf-fúr-ing. n. s. [from sin and offering.] An expiation or sacrifice for sin.

The flesh of the bullock shalt thou burn without the camp: it is a sinoffering. Exodus.

the margin, and more sinuated. Woodward.

SINUA'TION, sín-yù-à'shùn.¹¹³ n. s. [from sinuate.] A bending in and out.

The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractus, or sinu-uations. Hale.

SINUOSITY, sín-yù-òs'è-tè. n. s. [from sinuous.] The quality of being sinuous.

SINUOUS, sín'yù-ùs.¹¹³ adj. [sinueux, Fr.
from sinus, Latin.] Bending in and out.

Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in a horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous. Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton.

In the dissections of horses, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance. Brown.

SINUS, sín'ùs. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.

Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea: whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinuses, might have had such an original. Burnet.

2. Any fold or opening.

To SIP, sip. v. a. [sipan, Saxon; siphien, Dutch.]

1. To drink by small draughts; to take, at one apposition of the cup to the mouth, no more than the mouth will contain.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

2. To drink in small quantities.

Find out the peaceful hermitage;
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To drink out of.

The winged nation o'er the forest flies:
Then stooping on the meads and leafy bow'rs,
They skim the floods, and sip the purple flow'rs. Dryden.

To SIP, sip. v. n. To drink a small quantity.

She rais'd it to her mouth with sober grace;
Then sipping, offered to the next. Dryden.

SIP, sip. n. s. [from the verb.] A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.

Her face o' fire

With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
She would to each one sip. Shakspeare.

One sip of this

Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
Beyond the bliss of dreams. Milton.

SIPHON, sifun. ¹⁶⁶ n. s. [σιφων; sifho, Lat. siphon, French.] A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of these drains
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of stiff compacted clay. Thomson.

SIPPER, sip'pur. ⁹⁹ n. s. [from sip.] One that sips.

SIPPET, sip'pit. ⁹⁹ n. s. [soft, sif, sif'fict.] A small sop.

SIR, sir. ¹⁰⁹ n. s. [sire, French; seignior, Italian; senor, Spanish; senior, Latin.]

1. The word of respect in compellation.

Speak on, sir,

I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakspeare.
But, sirs, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead. Shakspeare.

Sir king,

This man is better than the man he slew. Shakspeare.
At a banquet the ambassador desired the wise men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did: only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displease you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace. Bacon.

2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part. Bacon.

The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs. Pope.

3. It is sometimes used for man.

I have adventur'd

To try you taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment,
In the election of a sir so rare. Shakspeare.

4. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humour.

He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sir-loin which was served up. Addison.

And the strong table groans

Beneath the smoaking sir-loin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson.

It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit, which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark. Swift.

SIRE, sire. n. s. [sire, French; senior, Latin.]

1. A father. Used in poetry.

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shakspeare.
A virgin is his mother, but his sire
The pow'r of the Most High. Milton.

And now I leave the true and just supports
Of legal princes and of honest courts,
Whose sires, great partners in my father's cares,
Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd. Prior.

Whether his hoary sire he spies,
While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
Or meets his spouse's fonder eye. Pope.

2. It is used in common speech of beasts: as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.

3. It is used in composition: as, grand-sire, great grandsire.

To SIRE, sire. v. a. To beget; to produce.
Cowards father cowards, and have things sire the base. Shakspeare

SIREN, sir'én. n. s. [Latin.] A goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them; any mischievous alluring woman.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears:
Sing, siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a hed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakspeare.

SIRIASIS, sê-ri'â-sis. ^{183 503} n. s. [σιριασις.] An inflammation of the brain and its membrane, through an excessive heat of the sun. Dict.

Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise, Sirocco and Libecchio. Milton.

SIRRAH, sâr'râ. n. s. [sir, ha! Minsheu.] A compellation of reproach and insult.

Go, sirrah, to my cell;

Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakspeare.
Sirrah, There's no room for faith, truth, or honesty in this bosom of thine. Shakspeare

It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. L'Esrange.

Guess how the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; no, begone. Prior.

SIRUP, sûr'rûp. ¹⁶⁶ } n. s. [Arabick.] The SIRUP, sûr'rûp. } juice of vegetables boiled with sugar.

Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,
Her words in sirup laid of sweetest breath, Relent. Sidney.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakspeare

And first, behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,

With spirits of balm, and fragrant sirups mixt.

Milton.

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant; for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot upon the sides of the vessels. Arbutnot.

SIRUPED, sûr'rûpt. ⁸⁰⁹ adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.

Yet when there happens a honey fall,
We'll lick the sirup leaves:
And tell the bees that theirs is gall. Drayton.

SIRUPY, sûr'rûp-ê. adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.

Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature. Mortimer.

SIZE, size. n. s. [contracted from assize.] You said, if I return'd next size in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace. Donne.

SISTER, sîs'tûr. ⁹⁸ n. s. [gheorten, Sax. zuster, Dutch.]

1. A woman born of the same parents; correlative to brother.

Her sister began to scold. Shakspeare.
I have said to corruption, thou art my father: to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. Job.

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian; one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; notwithstanding, you give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? James.

3. A female of the same kind.

He chid the sisters,
And hade them speak to him. Shakspeare.

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wrest the laws
Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attent to brothers of the bar,
Cried, one and all, the suppliant should have right,
And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the night. Dryden.

There grew two olives, closest of the grove,
With roots intwin'd, and branches interwove;
Alike their leaves, but not alike they smil'd
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope.

SISTER in Law, sîs'tûr-in-lâw. n. s. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people;
return thou after thy sister in law. Ruth.

SISTERHOOD, sîs'tûr-hûd. n. s. [from sister.]

1. The office or duty of a sister.

She abhor'd
Her proper blood, and left to do the part
Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife. Daniel.

2. A set of sisters.

3. A number of women of the same order.

I speak,
Wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare. Shakspeare.

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, amidst that spite and rancour which prevails among her exasperated sisterhood, appears more amiable.

Addison.

SISTERLY, sîs'tûr-lê. adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. Shakspeare.

To SIT, sit. v. n. preterit, I sat. [sitan, Gothic; sittan, Saxon; setten, Dut.]

1. To rest upon the buttocks.

Their wives do sit beside them, carding wool.
May's Virgil.

Aloft, in awful state,
 The godlike hero sat
 On his imperial throne.

Dryden.

2. To perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
 I will have them whether I thrive or thee;
 Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
 What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
 What do I care if all the world me fail,
 I will have a garment reach to my tail.

Bowd.

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.

Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?

Numbers.

4. To be in any local position.

I should be still

Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind:
 Peering in maps for ports.

Shakspeare.

Those

Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milt.
 The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair.

A. Philips.

5. To rest as a weight or burden.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shaksp.
 When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us

Taylor.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only galls our sores, and makes the burden that is upon us sit more uneasy

Tillotson.

Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
 And horror heavy sat on every mind

Dryden.

Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us.

Locke.

6. To settle; to abide.

That this new comer, shame,
 There sit not and reproach us.

Milton.

When 't'hetis blush'd in purple not her own,
 And from her face the breathing winds were blown;
 A sudden silence sate upon the sea,
 And sweeping oars with struggling urg'd their way.

Dryden.

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
 Pale horror sat on each Arcadian face.

Dryden.

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days

Jeremiah.

The egg laid, and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen;
 but only a quickening heat when she sitteth.

Bacon.

She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner.

Addison.

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think.

Shakspeare.

Heav'n knows

By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
 I won this crown; and I myself know well,
 How troublesome it sate upon my head;

Shaksp.

To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
 Your preferring that to all other considerations, does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you

Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome.

Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury

Bacon.

Suppose all the church lands were thrown up to the laity; would the tenants sit easier in their rents than now?

VOL. II.

Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a publick or authoritative kind; to hold a session: as, the parliament sits; the last general council sat at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table

Whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth?

Luke.

13. To exercise authority.

The judgment shall sit, and take away his dominion.

Daniel.

Asses are ye that sit in judgment.
 Down to the golden Chersonese, or where Judges.

The Persian in Echatan sate.
 One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice.

Milton.

Addison.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgment sit,
 Your ancient empire over love and wit.

Rowe.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.

Three hundred and twenty men sat in council daily.

1 Maccabees.

15. To SIT down. Down is little more than emphatical.

Go and sit down to meat.

Luke.

When we sit down to our meal, we need not suspect the intrusion of armed uninvited guests.

Decay of Piety.

16. To SIT down. To begin a siege.

Nor would the enemy have sate down before it, till they had done their business in all other places.

Clarendon.

17. To SIT down. To rest; to cease as satisfied.

Here we cannot sit down, but still proceed in our search, and look higher for a support.

Rogers.

18. To SIT down. To settle; to fix abode.

From besides Tanais, the Goths, Huns, and Getes sat down.

Spenser.

19. To SIT out. To be without engagement or employment.

They are glad, rather than sit out, to play very small game, and to make use of arguments, such as will not prove a bare inexpediency.

Bp. Sanderson.

20. To SIT up. To rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak.

Luke.

21. To SIT up. To watch; not to go to bed.

Be courtly,

And entertain, and feast, sit up, and revel;
 Call all the great, the fair, and spirited dames
 Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
 Of freedom.

Ben Jonson.

Some sit up late at winter-fires, and fit
 Their sharp-edg'd tools.

May.

Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night.

Locke.

To SIT, sit. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.

Hardly the muse can sit the head-strong horse,
 Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force.

Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows sit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through
 What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
 Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

Shakspeare.

He came to visit us, and, calling for a chair, sat him down, and we sat down with him.

Bacon.

Thus fene'd,
 But not at rest or ease of mind,
 They sat them down to weep.

Milton.

3. To be settled to do business. This is rather neuter.

The court was sat before sir Roger came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them.

Addison.

SITE, site. n. s. [situs, Latin.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city self he strongly fortifies,
 Three sides by site it well defended has.

Fairfax.

Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environ'd the same site and temple.

Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart.

Bentley.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair;
 Its site uncertain, if on earth or air.

Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture or situation of a thing, with respect to itself; but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
 In melancholy site, with head declin'd,
 And love-dejected eyes.

Thomson.

SITFAST. sit'fast. n. s. [sit and fast.] A hard knob growing under the saddle.

Farrier's Dictionary.

SITH, sith. adv. [siðe, Sax.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intombed.

Hooker.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
 I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence.

Shakspeare.

SITHE, sithe. n. s. [siðe, Saxon. This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology.] The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
 Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
 And then grace us in the disgrace of death:
 When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
 Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
 That honour, which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge,

Shakspeare.

Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged,
 with a sithe and an hour-glass.

Peacham.

Their rude impetuous rage does storm and fret;
 And there, as master of this murder'ing brood,
 Swinging a huge scithe stands impartial death,
 With endless business almost out of breath.

Crashaw.

While the milk-maid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scithe,

Milton.

The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
 But useless lances into sythes shall bend,
 And the broad falchion in a ploughshare end.
 Grav'd o'er their seats the form of time was found,
 His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound.

Pope.

But, Stella, say what evil tongue
 Reports you are no longer young?
 That time sits with his scythe to mow
 Where erst sat Cupid with his bow?

Swift.

SITHE. sithe. n. s. Time. Obsolete.

The foolish man thereat woxe wond'rous blithe,
 And humbly thanked him a thousand sith

Spenser.

SIT'HTENCE, sith'htence. adv. [now contracted to sincer. See SINCE.] Since; in latter times.

This over-running and wasting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sithence have afflicted that land. Spenser.

SITHNESS, sith'nēs. adv. Since. Spenser.

SITTER, sit'tūr. n. s. [from sit.]

1. One that sits.

The Turks are great sitters, and seldom walk; whereby they sweat less, and need bathing more. Bacon.

2. A bird that broods.

The oldest hens are reckoned the best sitters; and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer.

SITTING, sit'ting. n. s. [from sit.]

1. The posture of sitting on a seat.

2. The act of resting on a seat.

Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine up-rising. Psalms.

3. A time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.

Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting; neither can a good play be produced at a heat. Dryden.

4. A meeting of an assembly.

I'll write you down;

The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say. Shakspeare.

I wish it may be at that sitting concluded, unless the necessity of the time press it. Bacon.

5. A course of study uninterrupted.

For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting. Locke.

6. A time for which one sits, as at play, or work, or a visit.

What more than madness reigns,
When one short sitting many hundred drains!
And not enough is left him to supply
Board-wages, or a footman's livery. Dryden.

7. Incubation.

SITUATE, sit'tshū-āte. n. s. [from situs, Latin.]

1. Placed with respect to any thing else.

He was resolv'd to chuse a war, rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being so great and opulent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England. Bacon.

With a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.

The eye is a part so artificially composed, and commodiously situate, as nothing can be contrived better for use, ornament, or security. Ray.

2. Placed; consisting

Earth hath this variety from heav'n,
Of pleasure situate in hill and dale. Millon.

SITUATION, sit'tshū-ā'shūn. n. s. [from situate; situation, French.]

1. Local respect; position.

Prince Cesarini has a palace in a pleasant situation, and set off with many beautiful walks. Addison.

2. Condition; state.

Though this is a situation of the greatest ease and tranquillity in human life, yet this is by no means fit to be the subject of all men's petitions to God. Rogers.

3. Temporary state; circumstances. Used of persons in a dramatick scene.

SIX, siks. n. s. [six, Fr.] Twice three; one more than five.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature can do her work with five. Dryden.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number. Brown.

SIX and seven, siks'ānd-sēv'n. n. s. To be at six and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression that has been long in use.

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven. Shakspeare.

In 1588 there sat in the see of Rome a fierce thundering friar, that would set all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name. Bacon.

What blinder bargain e'er was driv'n,
Or wager laid at six and seven. Hudibras.

John once turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at six and seven. Arbutnot.

The goddess would no longer wait;
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harness'd her doves, and flew to heav'n. Swift.

SIXPENCE, siks'pēnsē. n. s. [six and pence.] A coin; half a shilling.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?
Oh!—sixpence that I had. Shakspeare.

The wisest man might blush,
If D— lov'd sixpence more than he. Pope.

SIXSCORE, siks'skōre. adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit. Sandys.

The crown of Spain hath enlarged the bounds thereof within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans. Bacon.

SIXTEEN, siks'tēen. adj. [ἕξάκοντα, Sax.] Six and ten.

It returned the voice thirteen times; and I have heard of others that it would return sixteen times. Bacon.

If men lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about sixteen or eighteen. Taylor.

SIXTEENTH, siks'tēenth. adj. [ἕξάκοντα, Saxon.] The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the sixteenth to Iimmer. 1 Chronicles.

SIXTH, siks'th. adj. [ἕξτα, Saxon.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take
A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakspeare.

There succeeded to the kingdom of England James the sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH, siks'th. n. s. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable seat for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless. Cheyne.

SIXTHLY, siks'th'lē. adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH, siks'tē-ēth. n. s. [ἕξάκοντα, Sax.] The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three feet diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby.

SIXTY, siks'tē. adj. [ἕξάκοντα, Sax.] Six times ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther. Bacon.

Of which seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown.

SIZE, size. n. s. [perhaps rather cise, from incisa, Lat. or from assise, French.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever verified my friends,

With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakspeare.

If any decayed ship be new made, it is more fit to make her a size less than bigger. Raleigh.

The distance judg'd for shot of ev'ry size,
The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires. Dryden.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

The martial goddess,
Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,
With speed divine, from street to street she flies. Pope.

2. [assise, old Fr.] A settled quantity. In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table: whence they say a sizer at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee
To cut off my train, to scant my sizes,
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakspeare.

3. Figurative bulk; condition.

This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality. L'Estrange.

They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people. Swift.

4. [sisa, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.

TO SIZE, size. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjust or arrange according to size.
The foxes weigh the geese they carry,
And, ere they venture on a stream,
Know how to size themselves and them. Hudibras.

Two troops so match'd were never to be found,
Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,
In stature size'd. Dryden.

2. [from assise.] To settle; to fix.

There was a statute for dispersing the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to size weights and measures. Bacon.

3. To cover with glutinous matter; to besmear with size.

SIZED, size'd. n. s. [from size.] Having a particular magnitude.

What my love is, proof hath made you know,
And as my love is size'd, my fear is so. Shakspeare.

That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several sized ideas, to which they compare their great and their little. Locke.

SIZABLE, si'zā-bl. adj. [from size.] Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.

He should be purged, sweated, vomited, and starved, till he come to a sizeable bulk. Arbutnot.

SIZER or Servitor, si'zūr. n. s. A certain rank of students in the universities.

They make a scramble for degree:
Masters of all sorts and of all ages,
Keepers, sub-sizers, lackeys, pages. Bishop Corbet.

SIZERS, si'zūr. n. s. See SCISSARS.

A buttrice and pincers, a hammer and naile,
An apron and sizers for head and for taile. Tusser.

SKAINSMATE, skânz'mâte. n. s. [I suppose from skain, or skean, a knife, and mate.] A messmate. It is remarkable that mes, Dutch, is a knife.

Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills;
I am none of his skainsmates Shakspeare.

SKATE, skâte. n. s. [ƿceadda, Sax.]

1. A flat sea fish.

2. A sort of shoe armed with iron, for sliding on the ice.

They sweep

On sounding skates a thousand different ways,
In circling poise swift as the winds. Thomson.

SKEAN, skéne. n. s. [Irish and Erse; ƿægene, Sax.] A short sword; a knife.

Any disposed to do mischief may under his mantle privily carry his head piece, skean, or pistol, to be always ready. Spenser.

The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, but being only armed with darts and skeines, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them. Bacon.

SKEG, skég. n. s. A wild plum.

SKEGGER, skég'gúr. n. s.

Little salmon, called skeggers, are bred of such sick salmon that might not go to the sea; and though they abound, yet never thrive to any bigness. Walton.

SKEIN, skâne. n. s. [escaigne, French.]

A knot of thread or silk wound and doubled.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of fley'd silk, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse? Shakspeare.

Our stile should be like a skein of silk, to be found by the right thread, not ravelled or perplexed. Then all is a knot, a heap. Ben Jonson.

Besides, so lazy a brain as mine is, grows soon weary when it has so entangled a skein as this to unwind. Digby.

SKELETON, skél'lè-tùn. n. s. [σκελετος.]

1. [In anatomy.] The bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation. Quincy.

When rattling bones together fly,

From the four corners of the sky,

When sinews o'er the skeletons are spread,
Those cloth'd with flesh, and life inspires the dead. Dryden.

Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skeleton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denominates a consumption. Blackmore.

I thought to meet, as late as heav'n might grant,
A skeleton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt,
Whose loose teeth in their nasal sockets shook,
And grin'd terrific, a Sardonian look. Harte.

2. The compages of the principal parts.

The great structure itself, and its great integrals, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are framed in such a position and situation, the great skeleton of the world. Hale.

The schemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analysed in a sort of skeleton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependencies of their several parts. Watts.

SKE'LLUM, skél'lùm. n. s. [skelm, Germ.]

A villain; a scoundrel. Skinner.

SKEP, skép. n. s. [ƿcephen, lower Saxon, to draw.]

A pitchfork, a doongfork, scève, skep, and a bin. Tusser.

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is still called skept.

SKE'PTICK, skép'tik. n. s. [σκηπτικός; sc'ptique, Fr.] One who doubts, or pretends to doubt, of every thing.

Bring the cause unto the bar; whose authority none must disclaim, and least of all those skepticks in religion. Decay of Piety.

Survey

Nature's extended face, then skepticks say,
In this wide field of wonders can you find
No art? Blackmore.

With too much knowledge for the skeptick's side,
With too much weakness for the stoick's pride,
Mau hangs between. Pope.

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the skeptick believes nothing. Watts.

SKE'PTICAL, skép'tè-kâl. adj. [from skeptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the sceptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley.

SKE'PTICISM, skép'tè-sizm. n. s. [scepticisme, French; from skeptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.

SKETCH, skétsh. n. s. [schedula, Lat.]

An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.

As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd,
So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

TO SKETCH, skétsh. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watts.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketched, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden.

SKE'WER, skùre. n. s. [skere, Danish.]

A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweetthreads and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides. Dryden.

I once may overlook

A skewer sent to table by a cook. King

From his rug the skewer he takes,

And on the stick ten equal notches makes. Swift.

Send up meat well stuck with skewers to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsomer. Swift.

TO SKE'WER, skùre. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with skewers.

SKIFF, skíf. n. s. [esquife, Fr. scapha, Latin.] A small light boat.

If in two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other standing still; but both steer into each other. Brown.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
Choak'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train. Dryden.

On Garrway cliffs

A savage race, by shipwreck fed,
Lie waiting for the founder'd skiffs,
And strip the bodies of the dead. Swift.

SKIL'FUL, skil'fùl. adj. [skill and full.]

Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able. It is, in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill. Of seems poetical, at ludicrous, in popular and proper.

His father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold and silver. 2 Chronicles.

They shall call the husbandmen to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing. Amos.

Will Vafer is skilful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light. Tatler.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,
Reflecting on a life well spent;
Your skilful hand employ'd to save
Despairing wretches from the grave:
And then supporting with your store

Those whom you dragg'd from death before. Swift.

Instructors should not only be skilful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice. Watts.

SKIL'FULLY, skil'fùl-è. adv. [from skilful.]

With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in fit distance, with much fury, but with fury skilfully guided, he ran upon me. Sidney.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skilfully as a shipwright. Broome.

SKIL'FULNESS, skil'fùl-nès. n. s. [from skilful.] Art; ability; dexterousness.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands. Psalms.

SKILL, skil. n. s. [skil, Islandick.]

1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack. Shakspeare.

You have

As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you to't. Shakspeare.

Oft nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head. Milton.

I will from wond'rous principles ordain
A race unlike the first, and try my skill again. Dryden.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour. Swift.

2. Any particular art.

Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskilful. Hooker.

TO SKILL, skil. v. n. [skilia, Islandick.]

1. To be knowing in; to be dexterous at; with of

They that skill not of so heavenly matter,
All that they know not, envy or admire. Spenser.

The overseers were all that could skill of instruments of music. 2 Chronicles.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of, than ten thousand others that he ignores. Whitgift.

2. [skilia, Islandick, signifies to distinguish.] To differ; to make difference; to interest; to matter. Not in use.

Whether the commandments of God in scripture be general or special, it *skill*th not. Hooker.

What skills it, if a bag of stones or gold
About thy neck do drown thee; raise thy head,

Take stars for money, stars not to be told
By any art: yet to be purchas'd.
None is so wasteful as the scraping dame;
She loseth three for one; her soul, rest, fame.

Herbert.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter.

Bacon.

SKI'LED, skil'd.³⁶⁹ adj. [from skill.]

Knowing; dexterous; acquainted with:
with of poetically, with in popularly.

Of these nor skill'd nor studious.

Milton.

Moses in all the Egyptian arts was skill'd,
When heav'nly power that chosen vessel fill'd.

Denham.

He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany only a good understanding.

Locke.

SKI'LESS, skil'less. adj. [from skill.]

Wanting skill; artless. Not in use.

Nor have I seen

More that I may call men than you:

How features are abroad I'm skillless of.

Shaksp

Jalously what might befall your travel,

Being skillless in these parts; which to a stranger,

Unguided and unfriended, often prove

Rough and inhospitable.

Shakespeare.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,

Mishapen in the conduct of them both,

Like powder in a skillless soldier's flask

Is set on fire.

Shakespeare.

SKI'LET, skil'let.⁹⁹ n. s. [escuellette, Fr.]

A small kettle or boiler.

When light wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dulness

My speculative and offic'd instruments,

Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,

And all indigu and base adversities

Make head against my estimation.

Shakespeare.

Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire.

Mortimer.

SKILT, skilt. n. s. [a word used by Cleave- land, of which I know not either the etymology or meaning.]

Smeitymnus! ha! what art?

Syriack? or Atabick? or Welsh? What skilt?

Ape all the bricklayers that Babel built.

Cleavel.

To SKIM, skim. v. a. [properly to scum,

from scum; escume, French.]

1. To clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My coz Tom, or his coz Mary,

Who hold the plough or skim the dairy,

My fav'rite books and pictures sell.

Prior.

2. To take by skimming.

She boils in kettles must of wine, and skims

With leaves the dregs that overflow the brims.

His principal studies were after the works of Titian, whose cream he has skimmed.

Dryden.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles, while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in pots.

Addison.

Whilome I've seen her skim the clouted cream,

And press from spongy curds the milky stream.

Gay.

3. To brush the surface slightly; to pass very near the surface.

Nor seeks in air her humble flight to raise,

Content to skim the surface of the seas.

Dryden.

The swallow skims the river's wat'ry face.

A winged eastern blast just skimming o'er

The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore.

Prior.

4. To cover superficially. Improper.

Perhaps originally skin.

Dang'rous flats in secret ambush lay,

Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,

And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

Dryd.

To SKIM, skim. v. n. To pass lightly; to glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,

A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow;

Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,

Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skim- ming over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will fix nothing in their memory.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it.

SKI'MBLESKAMBLE, skim'bl-skam-bl. adj.

[a cant word formed by reduplication from scamble.] Wandering; wild.

A couching lion and a ramping cat,

And such a deal of skimbleskamble stuff,

As puts me from my faith.

SKI'MMER, skim'mur.⁹⁸ n. s. [from skim.]

A shallow vessel with which the scum is taken off.

Wash your wheat in three or four waters, stirring it round; and with a skimmer, each time, take off the light.

SKIMMILK, skim-milk'. n. s. [skim and milk.] Milk from which the cream has been taken.

Then cheese was brought; says Slouch, this e'en shall roll;

This is skimmilk, and therefore it shall go.

SKIN, skin. n. s. [skind, Danish.]

1. The natural covering of the flesh. It consists of the cuticle, outward skin, or scarfskin, which is thin and insensible;

and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

The body is consumed to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather

The priest on skins of offerings takes his ease.

And nightly visions in his slumbers sees.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

On whose top he strow'd

A wild goat's shaggy skin; and then bestow'd

His own couch on it.

3. The body; the person: in ludicrous speech.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein 'tis hard for a man to save both his skin

and his credit.

4. A husk.

To SKIN, skin. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To flay; to strip or divest of the skin.

The beavers run to the door to make their escape, are there entangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned.

2. To cover with the skin

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,

Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,

Infects unseen.

Authority, though it err like others,

Has yet a kind of medicine in itself,

That skins the vice o' th' top.

The wound was skinned; but the strength of his thigh was not restored.

It only patches up and skins it over, but reaches not to the bottom of the sore.

The last stage of healing, or skinning over, is called cicatrization.

3. To cover superficially.

What I took for solid earth was only heaps of rubbish, skinned over with a covering of vegetables.

SKI'NFLINT, skin'flint. n. s. [skin and flint.] A niggardly person.

SKINK, skink. n. s. [scenc, Saxon.]

1. Drink; any thing potable.

2. Pottage.

Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also of knuckles of veal.

Bacon.

To SKINK, skink. v. n. [scencan, Sax.]

To serve drink. Both noun and verb are wholly obsolete.

SKI'NKER, skink'kr. n. s. [from skink.]

One that serves drink.

I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than eight shillings and six-pence, and you are welcome, sir.

Shakespeare.

Hang up all the poor hop-drinkers,

Cries old Sym, the king of skinkers.

His mother took the cup the clown had fill'd:

The reconciler bowl went round the board,

Which, emptied, the rude skinker still restor'd.

DRYDEN.

SKI'NNED, skin'd.³⁶⁹ adj. [from skin.]

Having skin.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a nasty ichor, the edges in process of time tuck in,
and, growing skinned and hard, give it the name of callous.

Sharp.

SKI'NNER, skin'nur.⁹⁸ n. s. [from skin.]

A dealer in skins, or pelts.

SKI'NNINESS, skin'nè-nès. n. s. [from skin- ny.] The quality of being skinny.

SKI'NNY, skin'nè. adj. [from skin.] Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

Her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips.

Least the asperity of these cartilages of the windpipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, these annulary gristles are not made round; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way.

His fingers meet

In skinny films, and shape his oary feet.

To SKIP, skip. v. n. [squittire, Italian;

esquiver, Fr. I know not whether it may not come, as a diminutive, from scape.]

1. To fetch quick bounds; to pass by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy.

The queen, bound with love's powerful'st charm,

Sat with Pigwiggan arm in arm:

Her merry maids, that thought no harm,

About the room were skipping.

At spur or switch no more he skipt,

Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt.

The carth-born race

O'er ev'ry hill and verdant pasture stray,

Skip o'er the lawns, and by the rivers play.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny

And quick sensations skip from vein to vein.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day;

Had he thy reason would he skip and play?

2. To SKIP over. To pass without notice.

Pope Pius II. was wont to say, that the former popes did wisely to set the lawyers a-work to debate, whether the donation of Constantine the great to Sylvester of St Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the better to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no.

Bacon.

A gentleman made it a rule in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. Swift.

To SKIP, skíp. v. a. [esquiver, French.]

1. To miss; to pass.

Let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;

He is an usurer. Shakspeare.

They who have a mind to see the issue, may skip these two chapters, and proceed to the following Burnet.

2. In the following example skip is active or neuter, as over is thought an adverb or preposition.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to explicate fluidity, yet we dare not quite skip it over, lest we be accused of overseeing it. Boyle.

SKIP, skíp. n. s. [from the verb.] A light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.

You will make so large a skip as to east yourself from the land into the water. Moré.

SKI'PJACK, skíp'ják. n. s. [skip and jack.]

An upstart.

The want of shame or brains does not presently entitle every little skipjack to the board's end in the cabinet. L'Estrange.

SKI'PKENNEL, skíp'kên-níl. n. s. [skip and kennel.] A lackey; a footboy.

SKI'PPER, skíp'pûr.⁹⁹ n. s. [schipper, Dut.] A shipmaster or shipboy.

Are not you afraid of being drowned too? No, not I, says the skipper. L'Estrange.

No doubt you will return very much improved. —Yes, refined like a Dutch skipper from a whale fishing. Congreve.

SKI'PPET, skíp'pít. n. s. [probably from skip.] A small boat. Not used.

Upon the bank they sitting did espy

A dainty damsel dressing of her hair,

By whom a little skippet floating did appear. F. Qu.

SKI'RMISH, skêr'mish.¹⁰⁹ n. s. [from ys and carm, Welsh, the shout of war: whence ysgarm, and ysgarmes, old British words. Mævs a naw 'sgarmes a wnan, says an ancient writer. Escar-mouche, French.]

1. A slight fight; less than a set battle.

One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was
With adverse fortune fought by Cartismand;
Her subjects most revolt. Philips.

2. A contest; a contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit. Shakspeare.

The skirmishes expire not with the first progners of the opinions: they perhaps began as single duellers; but then they soon have their partisans and abettors, who not only enhance, but entail the feud to posterity. Decay of Piety.

To SKI'RMISH, skêr'mish. v. n. [escarmoucher, Fr. from the noun.] To fight loosely; to fight in parties before or after the shock of the main battle.

Ready to charge, and to retire at will;
Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish still. Fairfax.

A gentleman volunteer. skirmishing with the enemy before Worcester, was run through his arm in the middle of theiceps with a sword, and shot with a musket-bullet in the same shoulder. Wisem.

P'll pass by the little skirmishings on either side. Atterbury.

SKI'RMISHER, skêr'mish-ûr. n. s. [from skirmish.] He who skirmishes. Ainsworth.

To SKIRRE, skêr. v. a. [This word seems to be derived from ꝥcꝥ, Saxon, pure, clean; unless it should be rather deduced from σκιρτάω.] To scour; to ramble over in order to clear.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round;

Hang those that talk of fear. Shakspeare.

To SKIRRE, skêr. v. n. To scour; to scud; to run in haste.

We'll make them skirre away as swift as stones

Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakspeare.

SKI'RRET, skêr'rit.⁹⁹ n. s. [sisarum, Lat.] A plant.

Skirrets are a sort of roots propagated by seed. Mortimer.

SKIRT, skêrt.¹⁰⁹ n. s. [skiorte, Swedish.]

1. The loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.

It's but a nightgown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, side sleeves and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel. Shakspeare.

As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent. 1 Sam.

2. The edge of any part of the dress.

A narrow lace, or a small skirt of ruffled linen, which runs along the upper part of the stays before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.

3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.

He should seat himself at Athie, upon the skirt of that unquiet country. Spenser.

Ye mists, that rise

From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,

Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,

In honour to the world's great Author rise. Milton.

Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd

To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now

Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts

Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the four great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other is, the stony and sandy deserts, through which no army can pass. Temple.

Upon the skirts

Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies. Dryd.

To SKIRT, skêrt. v. a. [from the noun.] To border; to run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the waste side. Carew.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,

With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads,

We make thee lady. Shakspeare.

The middle pair

Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold. Milton.

A spacious circuit on the hill there stood,

Level and wide, and skirted round with wood. Addison.

Dark cypresses the skirting sides adorn'd,

And gloomy eugh trees, which for ever mourn'd. Harte.

SKI'TTISH, skít'tish. adj. [skyc, Danish; schew, Dutch.]

1. Shy; easily frightened.

A restiff skittish jade had gotten a trick of rising, starting, and flying out at her own shadow. L'Estrange.

2. Wanton; volatile; hasty; precipitate.

Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,

Sets all on hazard. Shakspeare.

He still resolv'd, to mend the matter,

T' adhere and cleave the obstinate;

And, still the skittisher and looser

Her freaks, appear'd to sit the closer. Hudibras.

3. Changeable; fickle.

Some men sleep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the ideots in her eyes. Shakspeare.

Such as I am, all true lovers are;

Unstaid and skittish in all notions else,

Save in the constant image of the creature

That is belov'd. Shakspeare.

SKI'TTISHLY, skít'tish-lê. adv. [from skittish.] Wantonly; uncertainly; ficklely.

SKI'TTISHNESS, skít'tish-nês. n. s. [from skittish.] Wantonness; fickleness.

SKONCE, skônse. n. s. [See SCONCE.]

Reynard ransacketh every corner of his wily skonce, and bestirreth the utmost of his nimble stumps to quit his coat from their jaws. Carew.

SKREEN, skrêen.²⁴⁶ n. s. [escran, escrein, French, which Minshew derives from secerniculum, Latin. Nimis violenter, ut solet, says Skinner; which may be true as to one of the senses: but if the first sense of skreen be a kind of coarse sieve or riddle, it may perhaps come, if not from cribrum, from some of the descendants of cerno.]

1. A riddle or coarse sieve.

A skuttle or skreen to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.

2. Any thing by which the sun or weather is kept off.

To cheapen fans, or buy a skreen. Prior.

So long condemn'd to fires and skreens,

You dread the waving of these greens. Anon.

3. Shelter; concealment.

Fenc'd from day by night's eternal skreen;

Unknown to heav'n, and to myself unseen. Dryd.

To SKREEN, skrêen. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To riddle; to sift. A term yet used among masons when they sift sand for mortar.

2. To shade from sun or light, or weather.

3. To keep off light or weather.

The curtains closely drawn, the light to skreen:

Thus cover'd with an artificial night,

Sleep did his office. Dryden.

The waters mounted up into the air: their interposition betwixt the earth and the sun skreen and fence off the heat, otherwise insupportable. Woodward.

4. To shelter; to protect.

Ajax interpos'd

His sevenfold shield, and skreen'd Lacertes' son,

When the insulting Trojans urg'd him sore. Philips.

He that travels with them is to skreen them and get them out when they have run themselves into the briars Locke.

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreened them from punishment. Spectator.

The scales, of which the scarf-skin is composed,

are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to skreen the nerves from external injuries. Cheyne.

SKUE, skû.³³⁶ adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; sidelong. It is most used in the adverb askue.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing, and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Bentley.

To SKULK, skûlk. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,

You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,
And private interest skulks behind the shield.

Young.

SKULL, skûl. n. s. [skiola, Islandick; skatti, Islandick, a head.]

1. The bone that encloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain.

Quincy.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shaksp.

With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains.

Dryden.

2. [recole, Saxon, a company.] A shoal. See SCULL.

Repair to the river, where you have seen them swim in skulls or shoals. Walton.

SKULLCAP, skûl'kâp. n. s. [cassida, Lat.] A plant.

SKY, skêi.¹⁶⁰ n. s. [sky, Danish.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.

The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky. Milton.

The maids of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Roscommon.
Raise all thy winds, with night involve the skies.
Dryden.

2. The heavens.

The thunderer's bolt, you know,
Sky planted, batters all rebelling coasts. Shaksp.
What is this knowledge but the sky stol'n fire,
For which the thief still chain'd in ice doth sit?

Davies.

Wide is the fronting gate, and, rais'd on high,
With adamantine columns threatens the sky. Dryden.

3. The weather; the climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.
Shaksp.

We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;
Nor at the coarseness of our heav'n repine,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shine.

Addison.

SKY'FY, skêi'ê. adj. [from sky. Not very elegantly formed.] Ethereal.

A breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyy influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Hourly afflict. Shaksp.

SKY'COLOUR, skêi'kûl-ûr. n. s. [sky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver. Boyle.

SKY'COLOURED, skêi'kûl-ûr'd. adj. [sky and colour.] Blue: azure; like the sky.

This your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in sky-coloured garments. Addison.

Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins;
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains.

Davies.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings.

Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slacken'd, they grow more loose. Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerness.

My guards
Are you, great powers, and th' unabated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace. Ben Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course. Milton.

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbrance. if not snare; mor- apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise. Milton.

Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the sm'rous youth bestow'd the race.

Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way.

Dryden.

5. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his eares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour.

Denham.

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance.

Shakspeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslacked lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together.

Mortimer.

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them.

Shakspeare.

This good chance, that thus much favour'eth,
He slack's not.

Daniel.

Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires.

Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.

I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence

Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms

Addison.

SLACK, slák. n. s. [from the verb.] Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as slack'd lime turns to powder.

SLACKLY, slák'lé. adv. [from slack.]

1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them.

Shakspeare.

SLACKNESS, slák'nés. n. s. [from slack.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be un-executed.

Hooker

These thy offices,

So rarely kind, are as interpreters

Of my behind-hand slackness.

Shakspeare.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,

Who should better hold his place

By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd.

Milton.

3. Want of tendency; tardiness.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected.

Sharp.

4. Weakness; not force; not intensesness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy.

Brerewood.

SLAG, slág. n. s. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the caleses but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper.

Boyle.

SLAIE, slá. n. s. A weaver's reed.

Ainsworth

SLAIN, sláne. The participle passive of slay.

The slain of the Lord shall be many.

Isaiah.

The king grew vain,
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain.

Dryden.

To SLAKE, sláke. v. a. [from slack, Skinner; from stock, Islandick, to quench, Lye.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore.

Spenser.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Shakspeare.

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart.

Crashaw.

From Iulus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed:
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair.

Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake,
And with the chrystal stream their thirst at pleasure
slake.

Blackmore.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the clace;
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst

Addison.

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime,
and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it.

Woodward.

To SLAKE, sláke. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If she the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay,
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay.

Davies.

2. To go out: to be extinguished.

She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake.

Brown

To SLAM, slám. v. a. [tem, Islandick;

falsely; to belie.

Slander Valentine

With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent,

Shakspeare.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king.

2 Samuel

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it.

Whitgift.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade;
Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills befall,
And spitt'ring under specious names thy gall.

Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But eares not if a thousand are undone.

Pope.

SLANDER, slán'dúr. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs.

Shakspeare.

Since that, we hear he is in arms,

We think not so;

Yet charge the consul with our harms,

That let him go:

So in our censure of the state

We still do wander,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander.

Ben Jonson.

We are not to be dejected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment.

Nilson.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's toins.

Shaksp.

Prior.

SLA'YER, slá'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from slay.] Killer; murderer; destroyer.

Witness the guiltless blood pour'd off on ground;
The crown'd often slain, the slayer crown'd.

Fairy Queen.

They slew those that were slayers of their countrymen.

Abbot.

The slayer of himself yet saw I there;
The gore congeal'd was clotting in his hair;

With eyes half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his sullen soul away.

Dryden.

SLEAVE, sléév.²⁴⁶ n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning; sleave silk is explained by Gouldman, floccus sericus, a lock of silk; and the women still say, sleave the silk, for untwist it. Ans-worth calls a weaver's shuttle or reed a slay. To sley is to part a twist into single fibres.]

On a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was platted,
The banks with daffadillies dight
With grass like sleave was matted.

Drayton.

SLE'AZY, slé'zè.²²⁷ adj. [often written sleezy.] Weak; wanting substance.

This seems to be of the same race with sleave, or from to sley.

SLED, sléd. n. s. [slæd, Danish; stedde, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.

The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles, and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd.

Dryden.

SLE'DDED, sléd'did.⁹⁹ adj. [from sled.] Mounted on a sled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He smote the stedded Polack on the ice.

Shaksp.

SLEDGE, slédje. n. s. [pleeg, Saxon; sleg-gia, Islandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him beset,

With strokes of mortal steel without remorse,
And on his shield like iron sledges bet.

Fairy Q.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardest iron soon doth mollify,

That with his heavy sledge he can it beat,
And fashion to what he it list apply.

Spenser.

The uphand sledge is used by under-workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out; they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head.

Moxon.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge.

Wilkins.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a sled. See SLED.

In Lancashire they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horse.

Mortimer.

SLEEK, sléék.²⁴⁶ adj. [sleych, Dutch.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek headed men, and such as sleep a-nights.

Shakespeare.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear in every thing may bring my ruin.

Shakespeare.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all drest in flowers,
And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen
To seek their summer bowers.

Drayton.

As in gaze admiring, oft he how'd
His turret erect, and sleek enamell'd neck, Fawning.

Milton.

Thy head and hair are sleek,
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek.

Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take
To see so fair a rival.

Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp.

Milton.

To SLEEK, sléék. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd and rubb'd, and trimm'd,
More sleek'd, more soft, and slacker limb'd.

Ben Jonson.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
And fair Ligea's golden comb,
Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks
Sleeking her soft alluring locks.

Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

Shakespeare.

She does sleek
With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights
In her neat gloves.

Ben Jonson.

The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eye,
So little here, nay lost.

Milton.

A sheet of well sleeked marble paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall.

Boyle.

A cruse of fragrance form'd of buruish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams
Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs.

Pope.

SLEEK'LY, sléék'lè. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their blue coats brush'd.

Shakespeare.

SLEEK'KSTONE, sléék'stòne. n. s. [sleek and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The purest pasteboard with a sleekstone rub smooth, and as even as you can.

Peacham.

To SLEEP, sléép.²⁴⁶ v. n. [slepan, Gothick; pleepan, Saxon; slaepfen, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle.

Shakespeare.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,

That, ere she sleep, had thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy;
But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,

Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

Shakespeare.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge.

Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;
Peace! the lovers are asleep;
They, sweet turtles! folded lie
In the last knot that love could tie.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,

Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light
Whose day shall never sleep in night.

Crashaw.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it.

Locke.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hobnails.

Shakespeare.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears.

Shakespeare.

The giddy ship, betwixt the wind and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots again,
Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again.

Dryden.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it.

Atterbury.

4. To be dead: death being a state from which man will sometime awake.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

1 Thessalonians.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave, though he only sleeps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death.

Ayliffe.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heav'n will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have sleep upon
This bold, bad man.

Shakespeare.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.

You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business, never Desir'd it to be stirr'd.

Shakespeare.

SLEEP, sléép. n. s. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental and corporal powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care;
The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Shakespeare.

That sleeps might sweetly scale
His restful eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed
In silence took.

Chapman.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep; and darkness furthereth sleep.

Bacon.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep wax very fat, though they eat nothing.

Bacon.

His fasten'd hands the rudder keep,
And, fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading sleep.

Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand the sleep compelling rod.

Dryden.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it.

Locke.

SLEEPER, sléép'úr.²⁴⁶ n. s. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.

Sound, musick; come, my queen, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.
Shakspeare.

What's the business,
That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house?
Shakspeare.

In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth. There be sleepers enow then; for almost all flowers do the like.
Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain.
Dryden.

2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleeper, that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind; every worthy undertaking requires both.
Greiv.

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Lct penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution.
Bacon.

4. [exocætus.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SLEE'PLY, slêp'è-lê. adv. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dull; lazily.

I rather choose to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings.
Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before.
Atterbury.

SLEE'PINESS, slêp'è-nês. n. s. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most ill-boding symptom of a fever.
Arbutnot.

SLEE'PLESS, slêp'lês. adj. [from sleep.]

Wanting sleep; always awake.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
Though after sleepless night.
Millon.

While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep.
Pope.

SLEE'PY, slêp'è. adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there. Go, carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.
Shakspeare.

She wak'd her sleepy crew,
And, rising hasty, took a short adieu.
Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.
Shakspeare.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still.
Millon.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine.
Gulliver.

SLEET, slêet²⁴⁸ n. s. [perhaps from the Danish slet.] A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hast'ning up behind,
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind.
Dryd.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below.
Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wint'ry walls
Of snow congeal'd.
Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice.
Cheyne.

To SLEET, slêet. v. n. [from the noun.]
To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEE'TY, slêet'è. adj. [from the noun.]
Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE, slêév²⁴⁸ n. s. [rlif, Saxon.]

1. The part of the garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my treasure,
With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,
Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure.
Sidney.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armory, the fashion of the manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms: sir Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney.
Spenser.

Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation.
Shakspeare.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve band, and the work about the square on't.
Shakspeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape.
Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same.
Dryden.

2. SLEEVE, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEAVE.]

The innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care.
Shakspeare.

3. Sleeve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over: which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase.

A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves.
L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing.
South.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire.
Arbutnot.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine.
Hooker.

5. [Iolligo, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SLEE'VED, slêév'd²⁴⁹ adj. [from sleeve.]
Having sleeves.

SLEE'VELESS, slêév'lês. adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

His cloathes were strange tho' coarse, and black tho' hare;
Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen,
Become tufftuffaty.
Donne.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton.
Sandys.

Behold yon isle by palmers, pilgrims, trod,
Grave mummings! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.
Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained. Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleeve, a knot or skein, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together? or from sleeve, a cover, and therefore means plainly absurd, foolish without palliation?

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipresence.
Hall.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it.
Spectator.

SLEIGHT, slite.²⁴⁸ n. s. [slagd, cunning, Islandick.] Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice: as, sleight of hand, the tricks of a juggler. 'His is often written, but less properly, slight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be overreached by cunning sleights.
Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betrothed is with joy;
Though false Duessa, it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ.
Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magick sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion.
Shakspeare.

Out stept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes' son,
That crafty one as huge in sleight.
Chapman.

She could not so convey
The massy substance of that idol great;
What sleight had she the wardens to betray?
What strength to heave the goddess from her seat?
Fairfax.

In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding.
Millon.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight.
Hudibras.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths.
L'Estrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us.
Dryden.

While innocent he scorns ignoble flight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight.
Swift.

SLE'NDER, slên'dûr.²⁴⁸ adj. [slinder, Dut.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.

So thick the roses bushing round
About her glow'd; half stooping to support
Each flow'r of slender stalk.
Millon.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape.

What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours,
Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave?
Millon.

Beauteous Helen shines among the rest,
Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces blest.
Dryden.

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.

Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.
Pope.

4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.

Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentences upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hooker.

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shaksp
Positively to define that season, there is no slender difficulty. Brown.

It is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tillotson.

6. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate, and slender parts.

At my lodging,
The worst is this, that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance. Shaksp.

6. Not amply supplied.

The good Ostorius often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence. Philips.
In obstructions inflammatory, the aliment ought to be cool, slender, thin, diluting. Arbutnot.

SL'NDERLY, slèn'dùr-lè. adv. [from slender.]

1. Without bulk.

2. Slightly; meanly.

If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded. Hayward.

If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to. 2 Maccabees.

SL'NDERNESS, slèn'dùr-nès. n. s. [from slender.]

1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.

Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slenderness, the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of their feathers; that is, from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillamenta, which grow out of the sides of the grosser lateral branches or fibres of those feathers. Newton.

2. Want of bulk or strength.

It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its aerimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness and weakness of the vessels. Arbutnot.

3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderableness.

The slenderness of your reasons against the book, together with the inconveniences that must of necessity follow, have procured a great credit unto it. Whitgift.

4. Want of plenty.

SLEPT, slèpt. The preterit of sleep.

Silence; coeval with eternity,
Thou wert ere nature first began to be,
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee. Pope.

SLEW, slù.²⁶⁵ The preterit of slay.

He slew Hamet, a great commander among the Numidians, and chas'd Benchades and Amida, two of their greatest princes out of the country. Knolles.

To SLEY, slà.²⁶⁹ v. n. [See SLEAVE.] To part or twist into threads.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou immaterial skein of sley'd silk? Shaksp.

To SLICE, slise. v. n. [From slitan, Saxon.]

1. To cut into flat pieces.

Their cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull pikes and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

2. To cut into parts.

Nature lost one by thee, and therefore must Slice one in two to keep her number just. Cleaveland.

3. To cut off in a broad piece.

When hungry thou stood staring like an oaf,
I slic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf. Gay.

4. To cut; to divide.

Princes and tyrants slice the earth among them. Burnet.

SLICE, slise. n. s. [From slite, Saxon; from the verb.]

1. A broad piece cut off.

Hacking of trees in their bark, both downright and across, so as you may make them rather in slices than in continued hacks, doth great good to trees. Bacon.

You need not wipe your knife to cut bread; because in cutting a slice or two it will wipe itself. Swift.

He from out the chimney took
A sitch of bacon off the hook,
And freely, from the fattest side,
Cut out large slices to be fried. Swift.

2. A broad piece.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't;
That, lac'd with bits of rustick, makes a front. Pope.

3. A broad head fixed in a handle; a peel; a spatula.

The plectan hath a beak broad and flat, much like the slice of apothecaries, with which they spread plasters. Hakewill.

When burning with the iron in it, with the slice clap the coals upon the outside close together, to keep the heat in. Moxon.

SLICK, slik. adj. [slickt, Dutch. See SLEEK.]

Whom silver-bow'd Apollo bred, in the Pierian mead,
Both slicke and daintie, yet were both in warre of wond'rous dread. Chapman.

Glass attracts but weakly; some slick stones, and thick glasses, indifferently. Brown.

SLID, slid. The preterit of slide.

At first the silent venom slid with ease,
And seiz'd her cooler senses by degrees. Dryden.

From the tops of heav'n's steep hill she slid,
And straight the Greeks swift ships she reacht. Chapman.

SLI'DDEN, slid'd'n.¹⁰⁰ The participle passive of slide.

Why is this people slidden back, by a perpetual backsliding? Jeremiah.

To SLI'DDER, slid'dùr.⁹⁸ v. n. [slidderen, Dutch.] To slide with interruption.

Go thou from me to fate,
Now die: with that he dragg'd the trembling sire,
Slid'd'ring through clotted blood. Dryden.

The tempter saw the danger in a trice;
For the man slidder'd upon fortune's ice. Harte.

To SLIDE, slide. v. n. preterit, slid; participle pass. slidden. [From slidan, slidende, sliding, Saxon; slijden, Dutch; ys-lithe, Welsh.]

1. To pass along smoothly; to slip; to glide.

To SLIP, slip. v. n. [slipan, Sax. slifstien, Dut.]

1. To slide; not to tread firm.

If a man walks over a narrow bridge when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he sees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution.

South.

A skilful dancer on the ropes slips willingly and makes a seeming stumble, that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity. Dryden.

If after some distinguish'd leap,
He drops his pole and seems to slip,
Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length. Prior.

perceptibly.

The banks of either side seeming arms of the loving earth, that fain would embrace it, and the river a wanton nymph, which still would slip from it.

Sidney.

The blessing of the Lord shall slip from thee, without doing thee any good, if thou hast not ceased from doing evil. Taylor.

Slipping from thy mother's eye, thou went'st
Alone into the temple; there was found
Among the gravest rabbies disputant,
On points and questions fitting Moses' chair. Mill.
Thrice around his neck his arms he threw
And thrice the fitting shadow slipp'd away,
Like winds or empty dreams that fly the slip. Dryden.

Though with pale cheeks, wet ward, and dropping hair,

None but my Ceyx could appear so fair,
I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;

But through my arm he slipt, and vanish'd from the place. Dryden.

When a man slips out of their paws, they take hold of it again. Spectator.

Or satiate fury yield it from our foe. Milton.

One ill man may not think of the mischief he could do, or slip the occasion. L'Estrange.

To slip the market, when thus fairly offered, is great imprudence. Collier.

For watching occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not to slip any opportunity of shew-ing their talents, scholars are most blamed. Locke.

Thus far my author has slipt his first design; not a letter of what has been yet said promoting any ways the trial. Atterbury.

3. To part twigs from the main body by laceration.

The runners spread from the master-roots, and have little sprouts or roots to them, which, being cut four or five inches long, make excellent sets:
the branches also may be slipped and planted.

Mortimer.

4. To escape from; to leave sliely.

This bird you aim'd at, though you hit it not.
—Oh, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his greyhound,

Which runs himself, and catches his master.

planted in man, would be the most enormous slip she could commit. More.

One casual slip is enough to weigh down the faithful service of a long life. L'Estrange.

Alonzo, mark the characters;
And if th' impostor's pen have made a slip
That shews it counterfeit, mark that and save me.

Lighting upon a very easy slip I have made, in putting one seemingly indifferent word for another, that discovery opened to me this present view.

Any little slip is more conspicuous and observable in a good man's conduct than in another's, as it is not of a piece with his character. Spectator.

3. A twig torn from the main stock.

In truth they are fewer, when they come to be discussed by reason, than otherwise they seem, when by heat of contention they are divided into many slips, and of every branch an heap is made.

The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain. Abbot.

Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds. Shakespeare.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed

When you fell your underwoods, sow haws and sloes in them, and they will furnish you, without doing of your woods any hurt. Mortimer.

SLOOP, slòp. n. s. A small vessel, furnished with one mast. Falconer's Dict.

To SLOP, slóp. v. a. [from slap, loft, slop.] To drink grossly and greedily.

SLOP, slóp. n. s. [from the verb.] Mean and vile liquor of any kind. Generally some nauseous or useless medicinal liquor.

The sick husband here wanted for neither slops nor doctors. L'Estrange.

But thou, whatever slops she will have bought,
Be thankful. Dryden.

SLOP, slóp. n. s. [slöp, Saxon; sloove, Dutch, a covering.] Trowsers; open breeches.

What said Mr. Dumbledon about the satfin for my short cloak and slops? Shakspeare.

SLOPE, slòpe. adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original.

Junius omits it: Skinner derives it from slaf, lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner.]

Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity, forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.

Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a sloper rise and fall. Bacon.

Murm'ring waters fall

Down the slope hills dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her chrystal mirror holds, unite their streams. Milt.

SLOPE, slope. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moss, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestick mien,
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,
Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope.

SLOPE, slope. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Uriel

Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd

Bore him slope downward to the sun, now fall'n. Milton.

To SLOPE, slope. v. a. [from the adjective.] To form to obliquity or declivity; to direct obliquely.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations. Shakespeare.

On each hand the flames

Driv'n backward, slope their pointed spires, and roll'd

In billows, leave i' th' midst a horrid vale. Milton.

The star, that rose at evening bright,
Toward heav'n's descent had slop'd his westering wheel. Milton.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd and Phœbus shin'd in vain;
Nor, till oblique he slop'd his evening ray,
Had Somnus dried the balmy dews away. Pope.

To SLOPE, slope. v. n. To take an oblique or declivous direction.

Between the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats for human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway. Dryden.

There is a handsome work of piles made sloping
athwart the river, to stop the trees which are cut down, and cast into the river. Brown.

Up starts a palace, lo! th' obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace. Pope.

There is a straight hole in every ant's nest half an inch deep; and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine. Spectator.

On the south aspect of a sloping hill,
Whose skirts meand'ring Peneus washes still,
Our pious lab'rer pass'd his youthful days
In peace and charity, in pray'r and praise. Harte.

SLO'PENESS, slope'nés. n. s. [from slopte.]

Obliquity; declivity; not perpendicularly.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pence of slopeness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest ridge. Wotton.

SLO'PEWISE, slope'wize. adj. [slope and wise.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

The wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the ose from the land to low-water mark, and having in it a bent or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ose. Carew.

SLO'PINGLY, slò'ping-lé.⁴¹⁰ adv. [from sloping.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

These atoms do not descend always perpendicularly, but sometimes slopingly. Digby.

Industry approach'd,

And rous'd him from his miserable sloth. Thomson.

3. An animal.

The sloth is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree: and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day. Grew.

SLO'THFUL, slòth'fùl. adj. [sloth and full.] Idly; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.

He that is slothful in his work, is brotler to him that is a great waster. Proverbs.

The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour. Proverbs.

To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.

The very soul of the slothful does effectually but lie drowsing in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses. L'Strange.

Another is deaf to all the motives to piety, by indulging an idle slothful temper. Law.

SLO'THFULLY, slòth'fùl-é. adv. [from slothful.] Idly; lazily; with sloth.

SLO'THFULNESS, slòth'fùl-nés. n. s. [from slothful.] Idleness; laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness; it maketh light of the providence of God; and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slothfulness, and neglect of convenient labour. Hooker.

Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Proverbs.

SLOUCH, slòtsh.³¹³ n. s. [slaff, Danish, stupid.]

1. A downcast look; a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.

Our doctor has every quality that can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of slouch in his walk. Swift.

2. A man who looks heavy and clownish.

Begin thy carols then, thou vaunting slouch;

Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gay.

To SLOUCH, slòtsh. v. n. [from the noun.]

To have a downcast clownish look.

SLO'VEN, slùv'vén.¹⁰³ n. s. [slœf, Dut. yslyvn, Welsh, nasty, shabby.] A man indecently negligent of cleanliness; a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a flow'r:

Slovens take up their stock of noisomeness
Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

You laugh, half beau, half sloven, if I stand;
My wig half powder, and all snuff my hand. Pope.

Their methods various but alike their aim;
The sloven and the fopling are the same. Young.

SLO'VENLINESS, slùv'vén-lé-nés. n. s. [from slovenly.] Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slovenliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the remiss; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy. Wotton.

SLO'VENLY, slùv'vén-lé. adj. [from sloven.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly.

Esop at last found out a slovenly lazy fellow, lolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do. L'Strange.

SLO'VENLY, slùv'vén-lé. adv. [from slovenly.] In a coarse inelegant manner.

SLO'VENERY, slùv'vén-rè. n. s. [from sloven.] Dirtiness; want of neatness.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slovenry. Shakespeare.

SLOUGH, slòt.³¹³ n. s. [plæg, Saxon.]

1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough, in passing whereof many of the English horse were plunged, and some mired. Hayward.

The ways being foul, twenty to one
He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrow'n. Milt.

A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough. L'Strange.

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Shakespeare.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted slough, and fresh legerity. Shakespeare.

Oh! let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speckled pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;
And in his summer liv'ry rolls along
Erect, and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall, the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Grew.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Grew.

3. It is used by Shakespeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Henry VI.

4. The part that separates from a foul sore. [This word when used in either of the three last significations, is pronounced sluff.⁹²¹]

At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings which was the sordes. Wiseman.

To SLOUGH, sluff. v. n. [from the noun.] To part from the sound flesh. A chiralurgical term.

SLOUGHY, slou'è. adj. [from slough.] Miry; boggy; muddy.

That custom should not be allowed, of cutting scraws in low grounds sloughly underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.

SLOW, slò.⁹²⁴ adj. [slap, pleap, Sax. sleeww, Frisick.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, distance inexpressible! Milton.

Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.

2. Late; not happening in a short time.
These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produce'd

Like change on sea and land, sidereal blast. Milton.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue. Exodus.
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut. Milton.

The slow of speech make in dreams unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I know thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison.

4. Dull; inactive; tardy; sluggish.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.

5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation; not vehement.

The Lord is merciful and slow to anger.
Common Prayer.

He that is slow to wrath, is of great understanding. Proverbs.

The politick and wise

Are sly slow things with circumspective eyes. Pope.

6. Dull; heavy in wit.
The blockhead is a slow worm. Pope.

SLOW, slò. in composition, is an adverb; slowly.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
'Twixt heav'n and earth. Donne.

To the shame of slow-endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers flow. Milton.

This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,
Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton.

For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost. Pope.

Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile, Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile. Pope.

To SLOW, slò. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was *for*slow.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?
—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd. Shakspeare.

SLOWLY, slò'lè. adv. [from slow.]

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day. Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.
The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon.

Our fathers bent their painful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew;
But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,
Whose rising pow'r to swift dominion flew. Dryden.

We oft our slowly growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not hastily; not rashly: as, he determines slowly.

4. Not promptly; not readily: as, he learns slowly.

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial-place is finished. Addison.

SLOWNESS, slò'nès. n. s. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.

Providence hath confined these human hearts, that what any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts.

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hooker.

3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.

Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and slowness of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley.

4. Want of promptness; want of readiness.

5. Deliberation; cool delay.

6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.

SLOWWORM, slò'wùrm. n. s. [slap'pym, Saxon.] The blind worm; a large viper, not mortal, scarcely venomous.

Though we have found formed snakes in the belly of the cæcilia, or slowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown.

To SLUBBER, slúb'bùr.⁹²⁸ v. a. [probably from lubber.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shewed she doth not like men who slubber up matters of mean account. Sidney.

Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd, do not so,
Slubber not business for my sake. Shakspeare.

As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will shew itself in some chronic disease. Wiseman.

2. To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slobber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and hoisterous expedition. Shakspeare.

3. To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends, and proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Wotton.

SLUBBERDEGULLION, slúb-bùr-dè-gùl'-yùn. n. s. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd,
Base slubberdegullion, to be serv'd
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the victory. Hudibras.

SLUDGE, slúdjè. n. s. [I suppose from plog, slough, Sax.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge, or mud. Montimer.

SLUG, slùg. n. s. [slug, Danish, and slock, Dutch, signify a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton.]

Fie! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not! Shakspeare.

2. A hinderance; an obstruction.

Usury dulls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

3. A kind of slow creeping snail.

4. [plecg, a hammerhead, Sax.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs, there the scalp and cranium are driven in together. Wiseman.

As, fore'd from wind-guns, lead itself eau fly,
And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky. Pope.

To SLUG, slùg. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
To slug in sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irrenowned shame. Fairy Queen.

He lay not all night slugging in a çabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares. L'Estrange.

SLUGGARD, slùg'gùrd.⁹²⁸ n. s. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here. Shakspeare.

This mightier sound shall make
The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,
To the long sluggards of five thousand years. Cowley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
Stretchest thy limbs, and yawn'st, but all in vain:
The tyrant Lucre no denial takes;
At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes. Dryden.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep. Dryden.

To SLUGGARDIZE, slùg'gùr-dize. v. a. [from sluggard.] To make idle; to make drowsy.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. Shakspeare.

SLUGGISH, slùg'gish. adj. [from slug.]

Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin, Upon a slothful ass he chose to ride. Fairy Queen.
The dull hillows, thick as troubled mire, Whom neither wind out of their seat could force, Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source.

One, bolder than the rest, With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast.

Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Woodward.
SLUGGISHLY, slûg'gîsh-lê. adv. [from sluggish.] Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly; slowly.

SLUGGISHNESS, slûg'gîsh-nês. n. s. [from sluggish.] Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; inertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and horses to run: which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means becomes her prodigies, not her children.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what reason shall direct.

SLUICE, slûse.³⁴² n. s. [sluysc, Dutch; escluse, Fr. scusa, Italian.] A water-gate; a floodgate; a vent for water.

Two other precious drops, that ready stood Each in their chrystal sluice, be, ere they fell, Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remors, And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended.

Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice, Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse.

If we receive them all, they were more than seven; if only the natural sluices, they were fewer.

To SLUICE, slûse. v. a. [from the noun.] To omit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward, Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood.

Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake.

You wrong me; if you think I'll sell one drop Within these veins for pageants; but let honour Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams; Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit, And let me hunt her through embattled focs, In dusty plains; there will I be the first.

SLUICY, slû'sê. adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain, Suck'd by the spongy clouds from off the main: The lofty skies at once come pouring down, The promis'd crop, and golden labours down.

To SLUMBER, slûm'bûr. v. n. [plu-mejan, Saxon; sluymeren, Dutch.]

1. To sleep lightly; to be not awake, nor in profound sleep.

He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

2. To sleep; to repose. Sleep and slumber are often confounded.

God speaketh, yet man perceiveth it not: in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed.
Have ye chosen this place, After the toil of battle, to repose

Your wearied virtue, for the use you find To slumber here?

3. To be in a state of negligence and supineness.

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuncful train, Nor hears that virtue which he loves complain?

To SLUMBER, slûm'bûr. v. a.

1. To lay to sleep.

2. To stupify; to stun.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse, And, ere he could out of his swoon awake, Him to his castle brought.

To honest a deed after it was done, or to slumber his conscience in the doing, he studied other incentives.

SLUMBER, slûm'bûr.⁶⁸ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond To trust the mock'ry of unquiet slumbers.

From carelessness it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep; till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one, that nothing but bell and judgment shall awaken it.

Labour and rest, that equal periods keep; Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep.

2. Sleep; repose.

Boy! Lucius! fast asleep! It is no matter; Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber.

Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes: Three days I promis'd to attend my doom, And two long days and nights are yet to come.

SLUMBEROUS, slûm'bûr-ûs. } adj. [from SLUMBERY, slûm'bûr-ê. } slumber.]

1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep, Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines Our eyelids.

While pensive in the silent slumberous shade, Sleep's gentle pow'rs her drooping eyes invade; Minerva, life-like, on embodied air Impress'd the form of Iphthema.

There every eye with slumberous chains she bound, And dash'd the flowing goblets to the ground.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching: in this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say?

SLUNG, slûng. The pret. and part. pass. of sling.

SLUNK, slûngk. The pret. and part. pass. of slink.

Silence accompany'd; for beast and bird, They to their grassy couch, these to their nests, Were slunk.

1. To sully; to soil; to contaminate.

2. To pass lightly; to balk; to miss.

The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph, to see the cause of theism thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument slurred by them, and so their work done to their hands.

Studious to please the genius of the times, With periods, points, and tropes, he slurs his crimes;

He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor, And took but with intention to restore.

3. To cheat; to trick.

What was the public faith found out for, But to slur men of what they fought for?

Cries Ganymede: the usual trick: Seven, slur a six; eleven, a nick.

SLUR, slûr. n. s. [from the verb.] Faint reproach; slight disgrace.

Here is an ape made a king for shewing tricks; and the fox is then to put a slur upon him, in exposing him for sport to the scorn of the people.

No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety to his affairs, or without a slur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence but to be accounted a fool for his pains.

SLUT, slût. n. s. [slodde, Dutch.]

1. A dirty woman.

Cricket, to Windsor chimnies shalt thou leap: Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry; Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttery.

The veal's all rags, the butter's turn'd to oil; And thus I buy good meat for sluts to spoil.

2. A word of slight contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you sluts, Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable, Although I know you'll swear.

The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, till one crafty old slut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't.

SLUTTERY, slût'tûr-ê.⁶⁶⁷ n. s. [from slut.]

The qualities or practice of a slut.

Slutt'ry to such neat excellence oppos'd, Should make desire vomit emptiness.

These make our girls their slutt'ry ruc, By pinching them both black and blue; And put a penny in their shoe,

The house for cleanly sweeping.

A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather slutt'ry than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him no cleaner.

SLUTTISH, slût'tîsh. adj. [from slut.]

1. Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty; indecently negligent of cleanliness.

All preparations both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so sluttish a vice.

Albeit the mariners do covet store of cabins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with their splinters.

The nastiness of that nation, and sluttish course of life, hath much promoted the opinion, occasioned by their servile condition at first, and inferior ways of parsimony ever since.

Slothful disorder fill'd his stable, And sluttish plenty deck'd her table.

2. It is used sometimes for meretricious.

She got a legacy by sluttish tricks.

The curled whirlpools suck, smack, and embrace,
Yet drown them. Donne.

2. To make to emit any quick smart noise.

More than one steed must Delia's empire feel,
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel;
And, as she guides it through th' admiring throng,
With what an air she smacks the silken thong!
Young.

SMACK, smák. n. s. [smacck, Dutch; from the verb.]

1. Taste; savour.
2. Tincture; quality from something mixed.

The child, that sucketh the milk of the nurse, learns his first speech of her; the which, being the first inured to his tongue, is ever after most pleasing unto him; insomuch, that though he afterwards be taught English, yet the smack of the first will always abide with him. Spenser.

Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltness of time, and have a care of your health.
Shakspeare.

It caused the neighbours to rue, that a petty smack only of popery opened a gap to the oppression of the whole. Carew.

As the Pythagorean soul
Runs through all beasts, and fish, and fowl,
And has a smack of ev'ry one;
So love does, and has ever done. Hudibras.

3. A pleasing taste.
Stack pease upon hovel;
To cover it quickly let owner regard,
Lest dove and the cadow there finding a smack,
With ill stormy weather do perish thy stack.
Tusser.

Dutch; smaar, Islandick.]

1. Little in quantity; not great.
For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. Isaiah.

Death only this mysterious truth unfolds,
The mighty soul how small a body holds. Dryden.
All numeration is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole together a distinct name, whereby to distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

The ordinary smallest measure we have is looked on as an unit in number. Locke.

The danger is less when the quantity of the fluids is too small, than when it is too great: for a smaller quantity will pass where a larger cannot, but not contrariwise. Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide fiddling work: such is the dressing of small birds, requiring a world of cookery. Swift.

2. Slender; exile; minute.
After the earthquake a fire, and after the fire a still small voice. 1 Kings.

Your sin and calf I burnt, and ground it very small, till it was as small as dust. Deuteronomy.

Those way'd their limber fans
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact. Milton.
Small-grained sand is esteemed the best for the tenant, and the large for the landlord and land.
Mortimer.

Brown.

If you have a silver saucepan, and the butter smells of smoke, lay the fault upon the coals.

Swift.

3. To have a particular tincture or smack of any quality.

My unsoil'd name, the austereness of my life,
Will so your accusation outweigh,
That you shall accuse in your own report,
And smell of calumny.

Shakspeare.

A man so smelling of the people's lee,
The court received him first for charity.

Dryden.

4. To practise the act of smelling.

Whoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall be cut off.

Erodus.

I had a mind to know, whether they would find out the treasure, and whether smelling enabled them to know what is good for their nourishment.

Spectator.

5. To exercise sagacity.

Down with the nose, take the bridge quite away,
Of him that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the general weal.

Shakspeare.

SMELL, smiell. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Power of smelling; the sense of which the nose is the organ.

Next, in the nostrils she doth use the smell,
As God the breath of life in them did give:
So makes he now this pow'r in them to dwell,
To judge all airs whereby we breathe and live.

Davies.

2. Scent; power of affecting the nose.

The sweetest smell in the air is the white double violet, which comes twice a-year.

Bacon.

All sweet smells have joined with them some earthy or crude odours.

Bacon.

Pleasant smells are not confined unto vegetables, but found in divers animals.

Brown.

There is a great variety of smells, though we have but a few names for them; the smell of a violet and of musk, both sweet, are as distinct as any two smells.

Locke.

SME'LLER, smiell'ûr. n. s. [from smell.] He who smells.

SME'LLFEAST, smiell'fêste. n. s. [smell and feast.] A parasite; one who haunts good tables.

Her rosy progress smiling. Milton.

All things smil'd,
Birds on the branches warbling. Milton.

The river of bliss through midst of heaven
Rolls o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream;
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams;

Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses smil'd. Milton.

The desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

4. To be favourable; to be propitious.

Then let me not let pass Occasion, which now smiles. Milton.

Me all too mean for such a task I weet;
Yet, if the sovereign lady deigns to smile,
I'll follow Horace with impetuous heat,
And clothe the verse in Spenser's native style. Prior.

SMILE, smile. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A slight contraction of the face; a look of pleasure or kindness: opposed to who works in metals.

He doth nothing but talk of his horse, and can shoe him. I am afraid his mother played false with a smith. Shakspeare.

Lawless man, the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain;
Which earth at first for ploughshares did afford;
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate.

The ordinary qualities observable in iron, or a diamond, that make their true complex idea, a smith or a jeweller commonly knows better than a philosopher. Locke.

2. He that makes or effects any thing.

The doves repented, though too late,
Become the smiths of their own foolish fate. Dryden.

SMI'THCRAFT, smith'kráft. n. s. [smið- ther; for if the one he smitten against the other, it shall be broken. Ecclesiasticus.

We did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. Isaiah.

By the advantages of a good person and a pleasing conversation, he made such an impression in her heart as could not be effaced; and he was himself no less smitten with Constantia. Addison.

SMOCK, smók. n. s. [smoc, Saxon.]

1. The under garment of a woman; a shift.

Her body covered with a light taffeta garment, so cut, as the wrought smock came through it in many places. Sidney.

How dost though look now? oh ill-starr'd wench!
Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt;
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n. Shakspeare.

Their apparel was linen breeches, and over that a smock close girt unto them with a towel. Sandys.

Though Artemisia talks by fits
Of councils, classicks, fathers, wits;
Reads Malbranche, Boyle, and Locke:
Yet in some things, methinks, she fails;
'Twere well if she would pare her nails,
And wear a cleaner smock. Pope.

2. Smock is used in a ludicrous kind of composition for any thing relating to women.

At smock-treason, matron, I believe you,
And if I were your husband; but when I Trust to your cobweb bosoms any other,
Let me there die a fly, and feast yon spider. Ben Jonson.

Plague on his smock-loyalty!

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey, by love.

Dryden.

SMO'CKFACED, smòk'fàste.³⁶⁹ adj. [smock
and face.] Palefaced; maidenly.

Old chiefs reflecting on their former deeds,
Disdain'd to rust with batter'd invalids;

1. Emitting smoke; fumid.

Victorious to the top aspires
Involving all the wood in smoky fires. Dryden.

2. Having the appearance or nature of smoke.

London appears in a morning drowned in a black cloud, and all the day after smothered with smoky fog, the consequence whereof proves very offensive to the lungs. Harvey.

If blast septentrional with brushing wings
Sweep up the smoky mists, and vapours damp,
Then woe to mortals! Philips.

3. Noisome with smoke.

O he's as tedious
As a tir'd horse, or as a railing wife;
Worse than a smoky house. Shakspeare.

Courtesy
Is sooner found in lowly sheds,
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes.

Milton.

Morpheus, the humble god that dwells
In cottages and smoky cells,
Hates gilded roofs and beds of down;
And, though he fears no prince's frown,
Flies from the circle of a crown. Denham.

SMOOTH, smòòth.^{368 467} adj. [ꝥmeð, ꝥmoeð, Saxon; mwyth, Welsh.]

1. Even on the surface; not rough; level;
having no asperities.

When sage Minerva rose,
From her sweet lips smooth elocution flows. Gay.
So, Dick adept, tuck back thy hair;
And I will pour into thy ear
Remarks which none did e'er disclose

In smooth-pac'd verse or hobbling prose. Prior.

6. Bland; mild; adulatory.

The subtle fiend,
Though inly stung with anger and disdain,
Dissembled, and this answer smooth return'd. Milton.

This smooth discourse and mild behaviour oft Conceal a traitor. Addison.

He was smooth-tongued, gave good words, and seldom lost his temper. Arbuthnot.

The madding monarchs to compose,
The Pylian prince, the smooth-speech'd Nestor, rosc.
Tickel.

To SMOOTH, smòòth. v. a. [from the ad- jective.]

1. To level; to make even on the surface.

The carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smootheth with the hammer him that smote the anvil. Isaiah.

Smiling she seem'd, and full of pleasing thought;
From ocean as she first began to rise,
And smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies.
Dryden.

Now on the wings of winds our course we keep;
The god hath smooth'd the waters of the deep. Pope.

2. To work into a soft uniform mass.

It brings up again into the mouth that which it had swallowed, and chewing it, grinds and smooths
it, and afterwards swallows it into another stomach. Ray.

tions.

Thou, Abelard! the last sad office pay,
And smooth my passage to the realms of day. Pope.

4. To make flowing; to free from harshness.

In their motions harmony divine
So smooths her charming tones. Milton.
All your muses softer art display;
Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay;
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine,
And sweetly flow through all the royal line. Pope.

5. To palliate; to soften.

Had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault, I would have been more mild. Shakspeare.

6. To calm; to mollify.

Now breathe we, lords; good fortune bids us pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks.
Shakspeare.

Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calm. Milton.

7. To ease.

Restor'd it soon will be; the means prepar'd,
The difficulty smooth'd, the danger shar'd:
Be but yourself. Dryden.

8. To flatter; to soften with blandishments.

Because I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy. Shakspeare.

This man's a flatt'rer? if one be,
So are they all; for every greeze of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below. Shakspeare.

To SMO'OTHEN, smòòth'èn. v. a. [a bad word among mechanics for smooth.]

To make even and smooth.
With edged grooving tools they cut down and

SMO'OTHFACED, smòòth'fàste.³⁶⁹ adj.
[smooth and face.] Mild looking; having a soft air.

O, shall I say I thank you, gentle wife?
—Not so, my lord; a twelvemonth and a day,
I'll mark no words that smoothfac'd woovers say. Shakspeare.

Let their heirs
Enrich their time to come with smoothfac'd peace,
With smiling plenty, and fair prosp'rous days. Shakspeare.

SMO'OTHLY, smòòth'lè. adv. [from smooth.]

1. Not roughly; evenly.

2. With even glide.
The musick of that murmur'ing spring

Is not so mournful as the strains you sing;
Nor rivers winding through the vales below
So sweetly warble, or so smoothly flow. Pope.

3. Without obstruction; easily; readily.

Had Joshua been mindful, the fraud of the Gibeonites could not so smoothly have past unespied, till there was no help. Hooker.

4. With soft and bland language.

SMOOTHNESS, smóóth'nés. n. s. [from smooth.]

1. Evenness on the surface; freedom from asperity.

A countryman feeding his flock by the sea-side, it was so delicate a fine day, that the smoothness of the water tempted him to set up for a merchant. I'Estrange.

The nymph is all into a laurel gone,
The smoothness of her skin remains alone. Dryden.

2. Softness or mildness on the palate.

Fallacious drink! ye honest men, beware,
Nor trust its smoothness, the third circling glass
Suffices virtue. Philips.

3. Sweetness and softness of numbers.

As French has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's age. Temple.

Virgil, though smooth, where smoothness is required, is so far from affecting it, that he rather disdains it; frequently using synalephas, and concluding his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

4. Blandness and gentleness of speech.

She is too subtle for thee; and her smoothness,
Her very silence, and her patience,
Speak to the people, and they pity her. Shakspeare.

SMOTE, smóte. The preterit of smite.

Death with a trident smote. Milton.

To SMO'THER, smúth'úr.⁴⁶⁹ v. a. [from smother, Saxon.]

1. To suffocate with smoke, or by exclusion of the air.

She might give passage to her thoughts, and so as it were utter out some smoke of those flames, wherewith else she was not only burned but smothered. Sidney.

We smother'd
The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd. Shakspeare.

We are enow yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throngs. Shakspeare.

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies. Addison.

2. To suppress.

Lewd and wicked custom, beginning perhaps at the first among few, afterwards spreading into greater multitudes, and so continuing; from time may be of force, even in plain things, to smother the light of natural understanding. Hooker.

She was warmed with the graceful appearance of the hero: she smothered those sparkles out of decency, but conversation blew them up into a flame. Dryden.

SMO'THER, smúth'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A state of suppression. Not in use.

This unfortunate prince, after a long smother of discontent, and hatred of many of his nobility and people, breaking forth at times into seditions, was at last distressed by them. Bacon.

A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should procure to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother. Bacon.

2. Smoke; thick dust.

Thus must I from the smoke into the smother,
From tyrant duke into a tyrant brother. Shakspeare.

Where yon disorder'd heap of ruin lies,

Stones rent from stones, where clouds of dust arise,
Amid that smother Neptune holds his place. Dryden.

The greater part enter only like mutes to fill the stage, and spend their taper in smoke and smother. Collier.

To SMO'THER, smúth'úr. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To smoke without vent.

Hay and straw have a very low degree of heat; but yet close and smothering, and which drieth not. Bacon.

2. To be suppressed or kept close.

The advantage of conversation is such, that, for want of company, a man had better talk to a post than let his thoughts lie smoking and smothering. Collier.

SMO'ULDERING, smó'dúr-ing. } [This SMO'ULDRY, smó'drè. } word seems a participle; but I know not whether the verb smoulder be in use:

ymogan, Saxon, to smother; smoel, Dutch, hot.] Burning and smoking without vent.

None can breathe, nor see, nor hear at will,
Through smouldry cloud of dusky stinking smoke,
That th' only breath him daunts who hath escap'd the stroke. Fairy Queen.

In some close pent room it crept along,
And, smould'ring as it went, in silence fed;
Till th' infant monster, with devouring strong,
Walk'd holdly upright with exalted head. Dryden.

SMUG, smúg. adj. [smuck, dress; mucken, to dress; Dutch.] Nice; spruce; dressed with affectation of niceness, but without elegance.

There I have a bankrupt for a prodigal, who dares scarce shew his head on the Rialto; a heggar, that used to come so smug upon the mart. Shakspeare.

He who can make your visage less horrid, and your person more smug, is worthy some good reception. Spectator.

To SMUG, smúg. v. a. To adorn; to spruce.

My men,
In Cince's house, were all, in severall baine
Studiously sweeten'd, smug'd with oile, and deckt
With in and outweeds. Chapman.

To SMUGGLE, smúg'gl.⁴⁰⁵ v. a. [smoc-kelen, Dutch.] To import or export goods without paying the customs.

SMUGGLER, smúg'gl-úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from smuggle.] A wretch who, in defiance of justice and the laws, imports or exports goods either contraband or without payment of the customs.

SMUGLY, smúg'lè. adv. [from smug.] Neatly; sprucely.

Lilies and roses will quickly appear,
And her face will look wondrous smugly. Gay.

SMUT, smút. n. s. [from smette, Dutch.]

1. A spot made with soot or coal.

2. Must or blackness gathered on corn; mildew.

Farmers have suffered by smutty wheat, when such will not sell for above five shillings a bushel; whereas that which is free from smut will sell for ten. Mortimer.

3. Obscenity.

To SMUT, smút. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stain; to mark with soot or coal.

He is far from being smutted with the soil of atheism. More.

A fuller had invitation from a collier to live with him: he gave him a thousand thanks, but, says he, as fast as I make any thing clean, you'll be smutting it again. L'Estrange.

The inside is so smutted with dust and smoke, that neither the marble, silver, nor brass works shew themselves. Addison.

I am wonderfully pleased to see my tenants play their innocent tricks, and smutting one another. Addison.

2. To taint with mildew.

Mildew falleth upon corn, and smutteth it. Bacon.

To SMUT, smút. v. n. To gather must.

White red-eared wheat is good for clays, and bears a very good crop, and seldom smutts. Mortimer.

To SMUTCH, smútsh. v. a. [from smut.]

To black with smoke.

Have you seen but a soft lily grow,
Before rude hands have touch'd it?
Ha' you mark'd but the fall o' the snow,
Before the soil hath smutch'd it? Ben Jonson.

SMUTTILY, smút'tè-lè. adv. [from smutty.]

1. Blackly; smokily.

2. Obscenely.

SMUTTINESS, smút'tè-nés. n. s. [from smutty.]

1. Soil from smoke.

My vines and peaches, upon my best south walls were apt to a soot or smuttiness upon their leaves and upon their fruits, which were good for nothing. Temple.

2. Obsceneness.

SMUTTY, smút'tè. adj. [from smut.]

1. Black with smoke or coal.

The smutty grain,
With sudden blaze diffus'd, inflames the air. Milt.

The place is a censure of a profane and smutty passage in the Old Bachelor. Collier.

SNACK, snák. n. s. [from snatch.] A share; a part taken by compact.

If the master gets the better on't, they come in for their snack. L'Estrange.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, "Do, and we go snacks." Pope.

SNA'COT, snák'ót. n. s. [acus, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SNA'FFLE, snáf'fl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [snavel, Dutch, the nose.] A bridle which crosses the nose.

The third o' th' world is yours, which with a snaffle
You may pace easy; but not such a wife. Shakspeare.

Sooth him with praise;
Th'is, with his weaning, let him well be taught,
And then betimes in a soft snaffle wrought. Dryden.

To SNA'FFLE, snáf'fl. v. a. [from the noun.] To bridle; to hold in a bridle; to hold; to manage.

SNAG, snág. n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology or original.]

1. A jag, or sharp protuberance.

The one her other leg had lame,
Which with a staff all full of little snags,
She did disport; and Impotence her name. Fairy Queen.

The coat of arms,

- Now on a naked snag in triumph born,
Was hung on high. Dryden.
2. A tooth left by itself, or standing beyond the rest; a tooth, in contempt.
In China none hold women sweet,
Except their snags are black as jet:
King Chihu put nine queens to death,
Convict on statute, iv'ry teeth. Prior.
- SNA'GGED, sná'g'géd.³⁶⁶ } adj. [from snag.]
SNA'GGY, sná'g'gè.³⁶³ } Full of snags; full of sharp protuberances; shooting into sharp points.
His stalking steps are stay'd
Upon a snaggy oak, which he had torn
Out of his mother's bowels, and it made His mortal mace, wherewith his foeman he dis-may'd. Spenser.
- Naked men helahouring one another with snag- ged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fisty-cuffs. More.
- SNAIL, sná'le.³⁰² n. s. [ɪnæɪl, Saxon; snac- gel, Dutch.]
1. A slimy animal which creeps on plants, some with shells on their backs; the emblem of slowness.
I can tell why a snail has a house.—Why?—
Why, to put's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case. Shakespeare.
- Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd hoggary. Shakespeare.
- The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder:
Snail slow in profit, but he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat. Shakespeare.
- Seeing the snail, which every where doth roam,
Carrying his own house still, still is at home,
Follow, for he is easy-pac'd, this snail,
Be thine own palace, or the world's thy goal. Donne.
- There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we ourselves are superior to all the ranks of being beneath us in this visible world, even though we descend below the snail and the oyster. Watts.
2. A name given to a drone, from the slow motion of a snail.
Why prat'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!
Shakespeare.
- SNAIL-CLAVER or Snail-trefoil, sná'lekláv'úr. n. s. [trifolium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- SNAKE, sná'ke. n. s. [ɪnaca, Sax. snake, Dutch.] A serpent of the oviparous kind, distinguished from a viper. The snake's bite is harmless. Snake in poetry is a general name for a serpent.
Glo'ster's shew beguiles him;
As the snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
With shining chequer'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shaksp.
- We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it:
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice Remains in danger of her former teeth. Shaksp.
- The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling the gliding of a snake upon the ground:
they must be smooth and even. Dryden.
- Nor chalk, nor crumbling stones, the food of snakes,
That work in hollow earth their winding tracks. Dryden.
- SNA'KEROOT, sná'ke'róót. n. s. [snake and root.] A species of birthwort growing in Virginia and Carolina.
- SNA'KESHEAD Iris, sná'k's'héd-i-rís. n. s.
[hermodactylus, Latin.] A plant.
The characters are: it hath a lily-shap'd flower,

- of one leaf, shaped exactly like an iris; but has a tuberose root, divided into two or three dug, like oblong bulbs. Miller.

[bistorta, Latin.] A plant.
- SNA'KEWOOD, sná'ke'wú'd. n. s. [from snake and wood.]
What we call snakewood is properly the smaller branches of the root of a tall straight tree growing in the island of Timor, and other parts of the East.
It has no remarkable smell; but is of an intensely bitter taste. The Indians are of opinion, that it is a certain remedy for the bite of the hooded serpent, and from thence its name of lignum colubri- num, or snakewood. We very seldom use it. Hill.
- SNA'KY, sná'ké. adj. [from snake.]
1. Serpentine; belonging to a snake; resembling a snake.
Venomous tongue, tipt with vile adder's sting,
Of that self kind with which the furies fell
Their snaky heads do comb. Spenser.

He took caduceus, his snaky wand. Hub. Tale.
- What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquered virgin!
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone?
Milton.
- His flying hat was fasten'd on his head;
Wings on his heels were hung, and in his hand
He holds the virtue of the snaky wand. Dryden.
- To SNAP, snáp. v. a. [the same with knaph.]
1. To break at once; to break short.
If the chain of necessity be no stronger, but that it may be snapped so easily in sunder; if his will was no otherwise determined from without himself, but only by the signification of your desire, and my modest intreaty, then we may conclude, human affairs are not always governed by absolute necessity.
Bramhall against Hobbes.
- Light is broken like a body, as when 'tis snapped in pieces by a tougher body. Digby.
- Dauntless as death, away he walks;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study,
Nor stops till he has culprit's body. Prior.
2. To strike with a knocking noise, or sharp sound.
The bowzy sire
First shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire,
Then snapt his box. Dunciad.
3. To bite.
A gentleman passing by a coach, one of the horses snapt off the end of his finger. Wiseman.
- All mungrel curs bawl, snarl, and snap, where the foe flies before him. L'Estrange.
- A notion generally received, that a lion is dangerous to all women who are not virgins, may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived as to snap the hands of any of the female sex, who are not thus qualified
Addison.
- He snaps deceitful air with empty jaws,
The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws. Gay
4. To catch suddenly and unexpectedly.
Sir Richard Graham tells the marquis he would snap one of the kids, and make some shift to carry him close to their lodgings. Wotton.

- Some with a noise and greasy light
Are snapt, as men catch larks at night. Butler.
- You should have thought of this before you was taken; for now you are in no danger to be snapt singing again. L'Estrange.
- Did I not see you, rascal, did I not,
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden.
- Belated seem on watch to lie,
And snap some eully passing by. Swift.
5. [snaphen, Dutch.] To treat with sharp language.
Capoeh'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapp'd their canons with a why not. Hudibras.
- A surly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word. Granville.
- To SNAP, snáp. v. n.
1. To break short; to fall asunder; to break without bending.
Note the ship's sicknesses: the mast
Shak'd with an ague, and the hold and waist
With a salt dropsy clogg'd; and our tacklings Snapping, like to too high-stretch'd treble strings. Donne.
- The backbone is divided into so many vertebres for commodious bending, and not one intire rigid bone, which, being of that length, would have been often in danger of snapping in sunder. Ray.
- If your steel be too hard, that is, too brittle, if it be a spring, it will not bow; hut with the least bending it will snap asunder. Mozon.
- The makers of these needles should give them a due temper: for if they are too soft, they will bend;
and if they are too brittle, they snap. Sharp.
2. To make an effort to bite with eagerness.
If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason but I may snap at him. Shakespeare.
- We snap at the bait without ever dreaming of the hook that goes along with it. L'Estrange.
- Towzer snaps
At people's heels with frothy chaps. Swift.
- SNAP, snáp. n. s. [from the verb.]

ún. n. s. [antirrhinum, Latin.]
1. A plant.
2. A kind of play, in which brandy is set on fire, and raisins thrown into it, which those who are unused to the sport are afraid to take out; but which may be safely snatched by a quick motion, and put blazing into the mouth, which being closed, the fire is at once extinguished.
- SNA'PPER, snáp'púr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from snaph.]
One who snaps.
My father named me Autoliceus, being letter'd under Mercury; who, as I am, was likewise a snap- per up of unconsider'd trifles. Shakespeare.
- SNA'PPISH, snáp'pish. adj. [from snaph.]
1. Eager to bite.
The snappish cur, the passenger's annoy,
Close at my heel with yelping treble flies. Swift.
- They lived in the temple; but were such snappish
curs, that they frighted away most of the votaries. Spectator.
2. Peevish; sharp in reply.

SNA'PPISHLY, snáp'pish-lé. adv. [from snappish.] Peevishly; tartly.

SNA'PPISHNESS, snáp'pish-nés. n. s. [from snappish.] Peevishness; tartness.

SNARE, snáre. n. s. [snara, Swed. and Islandick; snare, Danish; snoor, Dutch.]

1. Any thing set to catch an animal; a gin; a net; a noose.

O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare!
Milton.

2. Any thing by which one is entrapped or entangled.

This I speak for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you. 1 Corinthians.

A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul. Proverbs.

Propound to thyself a constant rule of living, which, though it may not be fit to observe scrupulously, lest it become a snare to thy conscience, or endanger thy health, yet let not thy rule be broken.
Taylor.

For thee ordain'd a help, became thy snare.
Milton.

Beauty, wealth, and wit,
And prowess, to the pow'r of love submit;
The spreading snare for all mankind is laid,
And lovers all betray, or are betray'd. Dryden.

To SNARE, snáre. v. a. [from the noun.]
To entrap; to entangle; to catch in a noose.

Glo'ster's shew
Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow *snar*es relenting passengers. Shaksp.
The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Psalms.

Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth, lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton.

To SNARL, snárl. v. n. [snarren, Dut.]

1. To growl as an angry animal; to gnar.
What! were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me? Shaksp.
He is horn with teeth!

And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Shakespeare.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace. Shaksp.

The shes even of the savage herd are safe;
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden.

An angry cur
Snarls while he feeds. Dryden and Lee.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declined from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage noose,
As almost ev'ry couple does:

Sometimes my plague! sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.

Where hast thou been snarling odious truths, and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? Congreve.

To SNARL, snárl. v. a. To entangle; to embarrass. I know not that this sense is well authorized.

Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread. Decay of Piety.

SNA'RLER, snár'lúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from snarl.]

One who snarls; a growling, surly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.

Should stupid libels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find;
Lie down obscure, like other folks,
Below the lash of snarler's jokes. Swift.

SNA'RY, sná'ré. adj. [from snare.] Entangling; insidious.

Spiders in the vault their snary webs have spread.
Dryden.

SNAST, snást. n. s. The snuff of a candle.

It first burned fair, till some part of the candle was consumed, and the sawdust gathered about the snast; but then it made the snast big and long, and burn duskily, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure. Bacon.

To SNATCH, snátsh. v. a. [snacken,
Dutch.]

1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth.
Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain.
Milton.

Life's stream hurries all too fast;
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope.

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd immediately by the quick-eyed trout,
Or darting salmon. Thomson.

2. To transport or carry suddenly.

He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the diocese of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury.
Clarendon.

O nature!
Inrich me with the knowledge of thy works,
Snatch me to heaven. Thomson.

To SNATCH, snátsh. v. n. To bite or catch eagerly at something.

Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly of fool, they would have part on't; nay, the ladies too will be snatching. Shakespeare.

He shall snatch on the right hand, and play the dog.
Isaiah.

Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden.

SNATCH, snátsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A hasty catch.

2. A short fit of vigorous action.
After a shower of weeding a snatch;
More easily weed with the root to dispatch.
Tusser.

3. A small part of any thing; a broken part.

She chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress. Shakespeare.
In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vocations would permit. Brown.

4. A broken or interrupted action; a short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. Shakespeare.
They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal. Wilkins.

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Spectator.

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.

Come, leave your snatches, yield me a direct answer. Shakespeare.

SNA'TCHER, snátsh'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.

They of those marches
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
—We do not mean the coursing snatches only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot. Shaksp.

SNA'TCHINGLY, snátsh'ing-lé.⁴¹⁰ adv.
[from snatching.] Hastily; with interruption.

To SNEAK, snéke.²²⁷ v. n. [snican, Sax.
snige, Danish.]

1. To creep slyly; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs.
Shakespeare.

Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shaksp.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.
Dryden.

I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off in silence, and leave the truth to lie haffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.

He sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.
Dunciad.

Are you all ready? Here's your musick here:
Author, sneak off; we'll tickle you, my dear. More.

2. To behave with meanness and servility; to crouch; to truckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience. South.
Nothing can support minds drooping and sneak- ing, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as had. South.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell.
Pope.

Tom struts a soldier, open, bold and brave;
Will sneaks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave. Pope.

SNE'AKER, sné'kúr.⁹⁸ n. s. A small vessel of drink.

I have just left the right worshipful and his myr-midons about a sneaker of five gallons. Spectator.

SNE'AKING, sné'king. participial adj. [from sneak.]

1. Servile; mean; low.
When the smart dialogue grows rich,
With sneaking dog, and ugly hitch. Rocce.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.

SNE'AKINGLY, sné'king-lé.⁴¹⁰ adv. [from sneaking.]

1. Meanly; servilely.
Do all things like a man, not sneakingly:
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.
While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

SNE'AKINGNESS, sné'king-nés. n. s. [from sneaking.]

1. Niggardliness.
2. Meanness; pitifulness.

SNE'AKUP, sné'kúp. n. s. [from sneak.] A cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel.
Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup; and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. Shakspeare.

To SNEAP, snêpe.²²⁷ v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snib, or of snaf, to reprimand. Perhaps snaf is in that sense from snib, snibbe, Danish.

Men shulde him snibbe bitterly.

Chaucer.]

1. To reprimand; to check.

2. To nip.

What may

Breed upon our absence, may three blow
No sneaping winds at home. Shakspeare.

SNEAP, snêpe. n. s. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply: you call honourable holdness impudent sauciness: if a man will court'sy and say nothing, he is virtuous. Shakspeare.

To SNEB, snêb. v. a. [properly to snib. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish briar wax so hold,
That on a time he cast him to scold
And snebbe the good oak, for he was old. Spenser.

To SNEER, snêre.²⁴⁶ v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snort.]

1. To show contempt by looks: naso suspenderè adunco.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pope.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering or daring writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fulsome lics, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.

4. To show awkward mirth.

I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other. Taller.

SNEER, snêre. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all agen? Pope.

2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.

Soerates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat elapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one, nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a sneer. Watts.

SNE'ERER, snêre'ûr. n. s. [from sneer.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

To SNEEZE, snêeze.²⁴⁰ v. n. [from snep, Saxon; niesen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.

If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes. Bacon.

If the pain be more intense and deeper within amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing. Wiseman.

To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.

If any thing oppress the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration; so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbutnot.

An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently. Swift.

SNEEZE, snêeze. n. s. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle; but
These flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone. Milton.

We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there passed acclamations successively through the city. Brown.

SNE'EZEWOIT, snêeze'wûrt. n. s. [starmica, Latin.] A plant.

SNET, snêt. n. s. [among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Dict.

SNEW, snû. The old preterit of To snow. Dict.

To SNIB, snib. v. a. [snibbe, Danish. See SNEAP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snib. Hüb. Tale.

SNICK and snee, snik'and-snêe'. n. s. A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snee was in fashion, a boatswain, with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men heat him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his sash, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wiseman.

To SNICKER or Snigger, snik'ûr. v. n. To laugh slyly, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Dict.

To SNIFF, snif. v. n. [sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly up the nose.

So then you look'd scornful and snift at the dean,
As, who should say, Now am I skinny and lean? Swift.

To SNIGGLE, snig'gl. v. n.

Snigging is thus performed: in a warm day when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will hite instantly and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Wallon.

To SNIP, snip. v. a. [snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissors.

The sinus should be laid open, which was snipt up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissors, and the incised lips dressed. Wiseman.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, sir Roger used to hargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of seissars for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbutnot.

Putting one blade of the seissars up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

SNIP, snip. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A single cut with scissors.

What! this a sleeve?

Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slish and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Wiseman.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of enplast, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wiseman.

3. A share; a snack. A low word.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. L'Estrange.

SNIPE, snipe. n. s. [snepfie, German; pnite, Sax. ysnit, Welsh.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

The external evident causes of the atra bilis are a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Floyer.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakspeare.

SNI'PPER, snip'pûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from snift.] One that snips.

SNI'PPET, snip'pit. n. s. [from snift.] A small part; a share.

Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from malefactors snippets;
Or from the pill'ry tips of ears. Hudibras.

SNI'PSNAP, snip'snâp. n. s. [a cant word formed by reduplication of snaf.] Tart dialogue, with quick replies.

Dennis and dissonance, and captious art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption smart. Pope.

SNITE, snite. n. s. [pnita, Saxon.] A snipe. This is perhaps the true name; but snifte prevails.

Of tame hirds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove. Carew.

To SNITE, snite. v. a. [pnýtan, Saxon.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew.

SNI'VEL, sniv'v'l.¹⁰³ n. s. [snavel, snevel, Germ.] Snot; the running of the nose.

To SNI'VEL, sniv'v'l. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves snivelling or singing, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his axe into the water. L'Estrange.

SNI'VELLER, sniv'v'l-ûr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamenter.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE, snôre. v. n. [snorcken, Dut.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. Ben Jonson.

Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods,
Make some suspect he snores as well as nods. Roscommon.

He may lie in his shades, and snore on to doomsday for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;

And snoring by
We may descry
The monsters of the deep. Dryden.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd. Addison.

SNORE, snóre. n. s. [ʒnopa, Saxon, from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their possets. Shakspeare

SNO'NER, snó'úr. n. s. [from snore.] He that snores

To SNOOT, snórt. v. n. [snorcken, Dut.] To blow through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The snorting of his horses was heard. Jeremiah.

The fiery war-horse paws the ground,

And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound. Addison.

From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire,
Dropping ambrosial foams, and snorting fire. Addison.

He with wide nostrils, snorting, skims the wave. Thomson.

SNOT, snót. n. s. [ʒnote, Saxon; snót, Dutch.] The mucus of the nose.

Thus, when a greedy sloven once has thrown

His snót into the mess, 'tis all his own. Swift.

SNO'TTY, snót'té. adj. [from snót.] Full of snót.

This squire South my husband took in a dirty snotty-nose hoy. Arbutnot.

SNOOUT, snóút. n. s. [snuyt, Dutch.]

1. The nose of a beast.

His nose in the air, his snout in the skies. Tusser.

In shape a heagle's whelp throughout,

With broader forehead, and a sharper snout. Dryden.

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.

Her subtle snout

Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.

But when the date of Nock was out,

Off dropt the sympathetick snout. Hudibras.

What Æthiop lips he has,

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryden.

Charm'd with his eyes, and chin and snout,

Her pocket-glass drew slyly out;

And grew enamour'd with her phiz,

As just the counterpart of his. Swift.

3. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.

SNO'UTED, snóút'éd. adj. [from snout.]

Having a snout.

Their dogs snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the logicians call proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark. Heylin.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.

SNOW, snó. n. s. [ʒnap, Saxon; snee, Dutch.]

The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke.

Drought and heat consume snow waters. Job.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,

And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth. Sandys.

Soft as the fleeces of descending snows. Pope.

To SNOW, snó. v. n. [ʒnap, Sax. sneuwen, Dutch.] To fail in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains. Brown.

To SNOW, snó. v. a. To scatter like snow.

If thou be'st horn to see strange sights,

Ride ten thousand days and nights,

Till age snow white hairs on thee. Donne.

SNO'WBALL, snó'báll. n. s. [snow and ball.]

A round lump of congelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,

And, rolling o'er you like a snowball grows. Dryd.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and, as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.

SNO'WBROTH, snó'b'róth. n. s. [snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood

Is very snowbroth, one who never feels

The wanton stings and motions of the sense. Shakspeare

SNO'WDEEP, snó'déep. n. s. [viola bulbosa, Latin.] An herb.

SNO'WDROP, snó'drôp. n. s. [narcissoleucium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle.

The little shape, by magick pow'r,

Grew less and less, contracted to a flow'r;

A flow'r, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,

To virgins sacred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Tickel.

SNOW-WHITE, snó'nwite. adj. [snow and white.] White as snow.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore he slain;

His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden.

SNO'WY, snó'è. adj. [from snow.]

1. White like snow.

So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,

As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews. Shakspeare.

Now I see thy jolly train:

Snowy headed winter leads,

Spring and summer next succeeds;

Yellow autumn brings the rear;

Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast

Render'd its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

These first in Crete

And Ida known; thence on the snowy top

Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milton.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foc,

By Astracan, over the snowy plains,

Retires. Milton.

SNUB, snúb. n. s. [from snebbe, Dutch, a nose; or knubel, a joint of the finger.]

A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful club on high,

All arm'd with ragged snubs, and knotty grain,

Him thought at first encounter to have slain. Fairy Queen.

To SNUB, snúb. v. a. [rather To snib. See

SNEAP, SNEB, SNIB.]

1. To check; to reprimand.

2. To nip.

Near the sea-shores, the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but towards the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their houghs had been pared or shaven off. Ray.

To SNUB, snúb. v. n. [snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.

To SNUDGE, snúdje. v. n. [sniger, Dan.]

To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;

Now eat his bread in peace,

And snuidge in quiet, now he scorns increase;

Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF, snúf. n. s. [snuf, Dutch, snót.]

! Snot. In this sense it is not used.

2. The useless excrescence of a candle:

whence moucher la chandelle.

My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakspeare.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!

Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:

Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;

For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances;

and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Wilkins.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace

I th' dungeon by a snuff. Shakspeare.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, snuff, and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addison.

5. Resentment expressed by snifing; perverse resentment. Not used unless in low language.

What hath been seen

Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,

Or the hard rain which both of them have borne

Against the old kind king. Shakspeare.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again. L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,

A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;

The gnomes direct, to ev'ry atom just,

The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

To SNUFF, snúf. v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell

Of mortal change on earth. Milton.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;

But when he stands collected in his might,

He roars, and promises a more successful fight. Dryden.

The youth,

Who holds the nearest station to the light,

Already seems to snuff the vital air,

And leans just forward on a shining spear. Dryden.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds

Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brackdenstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find

The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,

And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,

To scent, to view, to turn, and holdy kill!

His fellows vain alarms rejects with scorn,

True to the master's voice, and learned horn:

His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true;

Trace the sly felon through the tainted dew:

Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,

Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;

Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,

Springs on relentless, and to death pursues. Tickel.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!

To be her mistress' mistress!

This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,

And out it goes. Shakspeare.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor.

You have got

An office for your talents fit,

To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,

And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

To SNUFF, snúf. v. n.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.

The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent,

And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.

Says Hum'pus, sir, my master bad me pray

Your company to dine with him to-day:

He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. King.

2. To snift in contempt.

Ye said, what a weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it. Mal.

SNU'FFBOX, snúf'bóks. n. s. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.
If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table,
and goes away, loek it up as part of your vails.

Sir Plume, of amber snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane. Pope.

SNU'FFER, snúf'fúr. n. s. [from snuff.] He that snuffs.

SNU'FFERS, snúf'fúrz. n. s. [from snuff.]
The instrument with which the candle is copped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open. Swift.

TO SNU'FFLE, snúf'fl. v. n. [snufflen, Dutch.] To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdainng that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could espy the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound filthier than from the gut. Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and snuffed, and considered on't. L'Estrange.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat. Dryden.

SNU'FFLER, snúf'fl-úr. n. s. [from snuffle.]
He that speaks through the nose

TO SNUG, snúg. v. n. [sniger, Dutch.]
To lie close; to snudge.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be silent. Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together, Ven-nus, to try if the cat had changed her manner with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber. L'Estrange.

SNUG, snúg. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience, yet not splendid.

They spied a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.

At Will's

Lie snug, and hear what critics say. Swift.

3. Slyly or insidiously close.

Did I not see you, rascal! did I not,
When you lay snug, to snap young Damon's goat. Dryden.

TO SNU'GGLE, snúg'gl. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

So, sò. adv. [sapa, Saxon; soo, Dutch; so,
German]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn, that warr'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay. Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valumbrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrewn
Abject and lost lay these. Milton.

Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And sep'rate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming? Judges.

Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight
Will ruin it? Or is't blind chance
That still desires new states t' advance? Ben Jonson.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie,
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.

I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed. Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are. Spect.

We think our fathers fools, so wise we're grown:
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is mere cosenage all;
For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingle so and so,
That doth not tie me now from causing new. Suckling.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we, seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way; that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependent. Addison.

4. It is regularly answered by as or that,
but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell
Grew darker at their frown. Milton.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.

Does this deserve to be rewarded so?
Did you come here a stranger or a foe? Dryden.

It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters, whether they be so or not. Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad,
too deep, or too many rivers; they understand het-ter than so, how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his train. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd t'obey:
For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might suffer'd be to stay:

So back again him brought to living light. Spens.

Traflicke, or rove ye, and like thieves oppress
Poor strange adventurers; exposing so
Your soules to danger, and your lives to woe? Chapman.

If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him; and so all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Hammond.

It leaves instruction, and so instructors, to the sobriety of the settled articles and rule of the church. Holyday.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to deepest hell. Milton.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition; answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray;
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryden.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;

As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe.

So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that; modo.

Be not sad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unapprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton.

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind. Rowe.

10. In like manner: noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another; answering to as,

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition: as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,
The lean with love makes me too so. Cowley.

Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleased and patient till the truth he know. Denham.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them so. Crrech.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so. Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;

For having once been guilty, well they know,
To a revengeful prince they still are so. Dryden.
He was great ere fortune made him so. Dryden.
I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher; then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens. Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great poet.
Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so. Swift.
As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.

How sorrow shakes him!

So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.

When

With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,

And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakspeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning;
well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker, Madam? Ben Jonson.

15. It sometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison. In French, si.

An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary. Arbuth.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.

There is Percy: if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakspeare.

I will never bear a base mind: it is by my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shakspeare.

17. A form of petition,

Ready are th' appelland and defendand,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shaksp.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse,
his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after something done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cessez.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain;
So so. Shakspeare.
So so; it works: now, mistress, sit you fast.
Dryden.

20. So so. [cosi, cosi, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.

He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well. Shakspeare.
Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As and So, which some so so writers, I may call them so, are continually sounding in our ears. Felton.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.

So then the Volscians stand but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them to make road Upon 's again. Shakspeare.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then,
I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound designs. Bacon.

To SOAK, sòke.²⁹⁵ v. n. [rocian, Saxon.]

1. To lie steeped in moisture.
For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks. Shakspeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.

Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvass between, and pour water upon it, so as to soak through: It will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain, soaking into the strata which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately. This is a low term.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty; the least of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soak- ing club. Locke.

To SOAK, sòke. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes

Lie down'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakspeare.

Their land shall be soaked with blood. Isaiah.
There deep Galesus soaks the yellow sands.
Dryden.

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure:
'Tis all thy bus'n'ess, bus'n'ess how to shun;
To bask thy naked body in the sun,
Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for term.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater sparer than a saver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garrisons, and his feasting, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer.
Wotton.

SOAK'ER, sò'kúr. n. s. [from soak.]

1. He that macerates in any moisture.

2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP, sòpe.²⁹⁶ n. s. [rape, Saxon; sapo, Lat.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkali-line ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil;
its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap. Arbuthnot.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap.
Malachi.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours.
Newton.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodward.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap- boilers are done with them, for cold or sour lands.
Mortimer.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER, sòpe'bòil-úr. n. s. [soafi and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler condoles with me on the duties on castle-soap, Addison.

SO'APWORT, sòpe'wúrt. n. s. [jaftonaria,
Latin.] A species of campion. Miller.

To SOAR, sòre.²⁹⁵ v. n. [sorare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings. Milton uses it actively.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Shakspeare.

Feather'd soon and fleg'd,

They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime

With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shaksp.

Valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions.
Addison

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low

As high he soar'd. Milton.

Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more.
Dryden.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR, sòre. n. s. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

Within soar

Of tow'ring eagles, to all the fowls he seems

A phoenix. Milton.

To SOB, sòb. v. n. [reob, complaining,
Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomato- pæia copied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep.
Shakspeare.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobblings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying.
Fairfax.

She sigh'd, she sobb'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair.
Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sob- bings, maintain their title to it. Locke.

I sobb'd, and with faint eyes
Look'd upwards to the ruler of the skies. Harte.

SOB, sòb. n. s. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break, heart, or choak with sobs my hated breath;

Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryden.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall. Pope.

A wond'rous bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.
Pope.

To SOB, sòb. v. a. To soak. A cant word.
The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

SOBRIETY, sò-brí'è-tè. n. s. [from sobrietas, French; sobrius, Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against, than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking. Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitnes of an ignorant, minister, more than that be which describeth the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet. Hooker.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and sobriety to give up their religion. Rogers.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Enquire, with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature any such transmission of immaterial virtues, and what the force of imagination is. Bacon.

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well-concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and old infancy. Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the stayedness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty. Waterland.

Mirth makes them not mad;

Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SOCCAGE, sòk'kádje.⁸⁰ n. s. [soc, French; a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] A tenure of lands for certain inferiour or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee.

All services due for land being knight's service, or soccage; so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds; a soccage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services, Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such sockmen hold not by certain service. Cowell.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SOCCAGER, sòk'kâ-jùr. n. s. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SO'CIABLE, sò'shâ-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [sociable, French; sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which hindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild and sociable to man; To cultivate the wild licentious savage With wisdom, discipline. Addison.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age. Wotton.

SO'CIABLENESS, sò'shâ-bl-nès. n. s. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and feign To sociableness a name profane. Donne.

The two main properties of man are contemplation and sociableness, or love of converse. More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship well liked by many. Hayward.

SO'CIABLY, sò'shâ-blè. adv. [from sociable.] Conversibly, as a companion.

Yet not terrible,

That I should fear; nor sociably mild,

As Raphael, that I should much confide;

But solemn and sublime. Milton.

SO'CIAL, sò'shâl.³⁹⁷ adj. [socialis, Lat.]

1. Relating to general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves, is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality. Locke.

True self-love and social are the same. Pope.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gayety; companionable.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove

Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone, Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

SO'CIALNESS, sò'shâl-nès. n. s. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY, sò-sí'è-tè.⁴⁵⁰ n. s. [société, Fr. societas, Latin.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporals, or the state make laws hinding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other. Lesley.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so it is for the interest of private persons and publick societies. Tillotson.

3. Company; converse.

To make society

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself Till supper-time alone. Shakspeare.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man, Who having seen me in my worsor state, Shunn'd my abhorr'd society. Shakspeare.

Solitude is sometimes best society, And short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort? Milton. Heav'n's greatness no society can bear; Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here. Dryden.

SOCK, sòk. n. s. [soccus, Lat. pocc, Sax. socke, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shakspeare.

A physician that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon.

 2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.
 Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock be on,
 Or sweetest Shakspeare, fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.
 Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
 Nor greater Jonson darts in socks appear;
 But gentle Simkin just reception finds Amidst the monuments of vanish'd minds Dryden.
 On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva. Addison

SO'CKET, sôk'kit.⁹⁹ n. s. [souchette, Fr.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.
 Two goodly beacons, set in watches stead,
 Therein gave light, and flam'd continually;
 For they of living fire most subtilly
 Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Fairy Queen.
 She at your flames would soon tak' fire,
 And like a candle in the socket Dissolve. Hudibras.
 The nightly virgin sees
 When sparkling lamps their spurr'd light advance,
 And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.
 The stars amaz'd ran backward from the sight,
 And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light. Dryden.
 Two dire comets
 In their own plague and fire have breath'd their last,
 Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown. Dryden.
 To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry: it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it turns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.
 His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;
 Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink;
 He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
 As the pale spectre of a murder'd man. Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.
 The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured; as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers Bacon.
 Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Wiseman

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Wilkins.
 On either side the head produce an ear,
 And sink a socket for the shining share. Dryden.

SO'CKETCHISEL, sôk'kit-tshîz-zl. n. s. A stronger sort of chisel.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels; their shank made with a hollow socket a-top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket Maxon.

SO'CLE, sô'kl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [with architects.] A flat square member under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases: it serves as a foot or stand. Bailey.

He that smootheth with the hammer encourageth him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for soldering. Isaiah.

SO'DER, sôd'dûr. n. s. Metallick cement.
 Still the difficulty returns, how these books were made: what is it that fastens this soder, and links these first principles of bodies into a chain? Collier.

SOE, sô. n. s. [sae, Scottish.] A large wooden vessel with hoops for holding water; a cowl.

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it first, for one basin-full you may fetch up as many soe-fulls. More

SOE'VER, sô-èv'ûr.⁹⁸ adv. [so and ever.] A word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whosoever, whatsoever, howsoever.

What great things soever a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it by fifty. Temple.

What love soever by an heir is shown,
 Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love. Dryden

SO'FA, sô'fâ. n. s. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'Tis my Abdallah! Guardian.

SOFT, sôft.¹⁶³ adj. [roft, Saxon; saft, Dutch.]

1 Not hard.
 Hard and soft are names we gives things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.
 Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the jeuneness of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make not only hard, but fragil. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
 And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings' houses. Matthew.

3. Ductile; not changeable of form.
 Spirits can either sex assume; so soft
 And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.
 A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance. King Charles.
 One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.
 What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; though soft-conscienced men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakspeare.
 However soft within themselves they are,
 To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.
 Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
 That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
 Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
 Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.
 Would my heart were flint, like Edward's;
 Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine. Shakspeare.
 Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.
 Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
 His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; compaisant.
 Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
 Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess
 Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
 In asking their good loves. Shakspeare.

8. Placid; still; easy.
 On her soft axle while she paces even,
 She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milton.

There, soft extended to the murmuring sound
 Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

9. Effeminate; viciously nice.
 This sense is also mistress of an art
 Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
 Though this dear art doth little good impart,
 Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell, Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Broomer.

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.
 Her form more soft and feminine. Milton.
 Less winning soft, less amably mild. Milton.

11. Weak; simple.
 The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him. Glanville.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.
 Her voice was ever soft,
 Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in women. Shakspeare.
 The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

When some great and gracious monarch dies,
 Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs, rise
 Among the sad attendants; then the sound
 Soon gathers voice Dryden.
 Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
 His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

13. Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.
 The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milton.

Soft were my numbers; who could take offence,
 When smooth description held the place of sense? Pope.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear
 Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.
 Sleep falls with soft slumb'rous weight. Milton.

15. Mild; not glaring.
 The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool, and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable Brown.
 SOFT, sôft. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

But soft, I pray you; did king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakspeare.

Oh! come in, Æmilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakspeare
But soft, my muse; the world is wide,
And all at once was not described. Suckling.

To SO'FTEN, só'f'tn.⁴⁷² v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.
Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon.
Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And sounding hammers break its barbed frame. Gay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften stony hearts. Milton.
Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them,
or soften them by their representation. Addison.
I would correct the harsh expressions of one party,
by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire;
Bid her by all that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.
Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

6. To make tender; to enervate.

To SO'FTEN, só'f'tn. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.
Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften;
as iron in the forge. Bacon.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakspeare.

SO'FTLY, só'f'tlé. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.
Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound, as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.
Alab rent his clothes, and went softly. 1 Kings.
In this dark silence softly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.
Death will dismiss me,
And lay me softly in my native dust,
To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden.
She with a wreath of myrtle crowns his head,
And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden.

5. Mildly; tenderly.
The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SO'FTNER, só'f'tn-úr. n. s. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.
Those softners and expedient-mongers shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SO'FTNESS, só'f'tnès. n. s. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold.

Bacon.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness;
or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity.
Watts.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Holyday.
Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners,
and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softnesses of the court. Clarendon.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue; if without it, softness or obstinacy. Greav.

6. Quality contrary to harshness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they, whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seem'd evermore loth to give sentence against any thing publicly received in the church of God.
Hooker.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence.

Who but thyself the mind and ear can please,
With strength and softness, energy and ease? Harte.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness she and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
Her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

SOHO', só-hó'. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.

To SOIL, sóil.²⁹⁹ v. a. [filian, Sax. soelen, old German; souiller, French.]

1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to soil.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the long dried way. F. Qu.
Although some heretics have abused this text,
yet the sun is not soiled in passage. Bacon.

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys
I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this he to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milt.

One, who cou'd n't for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth,
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Tate.

If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bed they sought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

3. To soil a horse; to purge him by giving him grass in the spring. It is in Shakspeare to glut. [saouller, French.]

The soiled horse.

Shakspeare.

SOIL, sóil. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways

I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakspeare.

That would be a great soil in the new gloss of your marriage. Shakspeare.

Vex'd I am with passions,
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour.
Shakspeare.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermines, will not hear a soil. Dryd.

2. [sol, French; solum, Latin.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its ve-getative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the soil
whereupon they run. Bacon.

Her spots thou see'st
As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce
Fruits in her soften'd soil. Milton.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessaries and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance shall call home
To high promotions. Shakspeare.

O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise! thus leave
Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunts of gods. Milton.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there insensibly by the sea. Addison.

Improve land by dung, and other sort of soils.
Mortimer.

SOIL'INESS, sóil'-è-nès. n. s. [from soil.]
Stain; foulness.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver.
Bacon.

SOIL'URE, sóil'yúre.¹¹³ n. s. [from soil.]
Stain; pollution.

He merits well to have her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shakspeare.

To SO'JOURN, só'júrn.³¹⁴ v. n. [sojourner,
French; seggjornare, Italian.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home; to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.

If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return, and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shak.
Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's.

Shakspeare.
How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how creeps acquaintance? Shakspeare.

Here dwells he; though he sojourn every where
In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.
The sojourning of Ishael, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Exodus.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourn'd three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land
He comes invited. Milton.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home.
Atterbury.

SO'JOURN, só'júrn. n. s. [sojour, French;
from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn.
Shakspeare.

Ther I revisit now,
Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn.
Milton.

Scarcely view'd the Galilean towns,
And once a-year Jerusalem, few days
Short sojourn.
Milton.

SO'JOURNER, sò'jûrn-ûr. n. s. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow.
1 Chronicles.

Waves o'erthrew
Busiris, and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen.
Milton.
Not for a night, or quick revolving year,
Welcome an owner, not a sojourner.
Dryden.

To SO'LACE, sò'lâs.⁹¹ ⁹⁴⁴ v. a. [solaciac, old French; solazzare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.
We will with some strange pastime solace them.
Shakspeare.

The birds with song
Solac'd the woods.
Milton.
To SO'LACE, sò'lâs. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. Obsolete.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.
Shakspeare.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before.
Shakspeare.

SO'LACE, sò'lâs. n. s. [solatium, Lat.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Thercin sat a lady fresh and fair,
Making sweet solace to herself alone;
Sometimes she sung as loud as lark in air,
Sometimes she laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone.
Spenser.

If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this their solace; we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their tormentors.
Hooker.

Give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease.
Shakspeare.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new solace in her return.
Milton.

If I would delight my private hours
With musick or with poem, where so soon
As in our native language can I find
That solace?
Milton.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad.
Milton.
Through waters and through flames I'll go,
Suff'r'r and solace of thy woe.
Prior.

SOLA'NDER, sò-lân'dûr. n. s. [soulandres, French.] A disease in horses. Dict.

SO'LAR, sò'lâr.⁵⁴⁴ } adj. [solaire, French;
SO'LARY, sò'lâr-ê. } solaris, Latin.]

1. Being of the sun.

The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solary effluvioms, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrusting on one another from the lucid body.
Boyle.

Instead of golden fruits,
By genial show'rs and solar heat supplied,
Insufferable winter hath defac'd

Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste.
Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.
They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar.
Bacon.

Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solary miracles.
Brown.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.

The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,
And proud beside, as solar people are.
Dryden.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months.
Holder.

SOLD, sòld. The pret. and part. pass. of sell.

SOLD, sòld. n. s. [souldée, old Fr. Trevoux.] Military pay; warlike entertainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,
And number'd he 'mongst knights of maidenhead,
Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,
And in her favour high he reckoned.
Fairy Queen.

SO'LDAN, sòl'dân. n. s. [for sultan.] The emperour of the Turks.

They at the soldan's chair defied the best.
Milt.

SO'LDANEL, sòl'dâ-nêl. n. s. [soldanella, Latin.] A plant.
Miller.

To SO'LDER, sòl'dûr. v. a. [soudre, Fr. soldare, Italian; solidare, Latin.] See SODER.

1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement.

A coneave sphere of gold, filled with water, and soldered up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without hursting or cracking the body of the gold.
Newton.

2. To mend; to unite any thing broken.

It hooteth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, whereof their first and last discourses will fall asunder.
Hooker.

Wars 'twixt you twain would he
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men
Should solder up the rift.
Shakspeare.

Thou visible god,
That sold'st rest close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kiss.
Shakspeare.

Learn'd he was in med'c'nal lore;
For by his side a pouch he wore
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder.
Hudibras.

The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames; if broken,
'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new hespoken.
Dryden.

At the restoration the presbyterians, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church.
Swift.

SO'LDER, sòl'dûr. n. s. [from the verb.]

Metallick cement. A metallick body that will melt with less heat than the body to be soldered.

Goldsmiths say the coarsest stuff
Will serve for solder well enough.
Swift.

SO'LDERER, sòl'dûr-ûr. n. s. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.

SO'LDIER, sòl'jûr.²⁹³ ³⁷⁶ n. s. [soldat, Fr. from solidarius, low Latin, of solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier; souldée, French.]

1. A fighting man; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.

Your sister is the better soldier.
Shakspeare.

Good Siward,
An older and a better soldier none.
Shakspeare.
A soldier

Full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the cannon's mouth.
Shakspeare.

A hateful service, that dissolv'd the knees
Of many a soldier.
Chapman.

I have not yet forgot I am a king:
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier.
Dryden.

2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier.
Spenser.

SO'LDIERLIKE, sòl'jûr-like. } adj. [soldier
SO'LDIERLY, sòl'jûr-lê.⁴⁰⁴ } and like.]
Martial; military; becoming a soldier.

Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best.
Sidney.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command.
Shakspeare.

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the swords of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place.
Hayward.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side.
Clarendon.

SO'LDIERSHIP, sòl'jûr-shîp.⁴⁰⁴ n. s. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier; martial skill.

Thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership: he did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciple of the bravest.
Shakspeare.

By sea you throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land,
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen.
Shakspeare.

SO'LDIERY, sòl'jûr-ê. n. s. [from soldier.]

1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.

The Memphian soldiery,
That swell'd the Erythrean wave, when wall'd,
The unfrozè waters marvellously stood.
Philips.

I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions.
Swift.

2. Soldiership; military service.
Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiery, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philanax.
Sidney.

SOLE, sòle. n. s. [solum, Latin.]

1. The bottom of the foot.

I will only be bold with Benedict for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all mirth.
Shakspeare.

Tickling is most in the soles of the feet: the cause is, the rareness of being touched there.
Bacon.

The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach: as going wetshod, to those that use it not, affecteth both.
Bacon.
Such resting found the sole of unhlest feet.
Milton.

In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin, fit to travel in sandy places.
Ray.

2. The foot.

To redeem thy woful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet ceasest not thy weary soles to lead.
F. Queen.

3. [solea, Lat.] The bottom of the shoe.
Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

—Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles. Shakspeare.

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.—
Nor the soles of her shoes. Shakspeare.

The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs.
Arbutnot.

4. The part of any thing that touches the ground.

The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint.
Moxon.

Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pipes.
Mortimer.

5. A kind of sea fish.

Of flat fish, rays, thornbacks, soles, and flowks.
Carew.

To SOLE, sôle. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles: as, to sole a pair of shoes.

His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a close short tawny down. Grew.

SOLE, sôle. adj. [sol, old Fr. solus, Lat.]

1. Single; only.

Take not upon thee to be judge alone; there is no sole judge but only one: say not to others, Receive my sentence, when their authority is above thine. Hooker.

Orpheus every where expressed the infinite and sole power of one God, though he used the name of Jupiter. Raleigh.

To me shall be the glory sole among
Th' infernal pow'rs. Milton.

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent.
Dryden.

He, sole in power, at the beginning said,
Let sea and air, and earth, and heav'n be made;
And it was so: and, when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.

Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be sole and unmarried.
Ayaffe.

SO'LECIsm, sôl'é-sizm.⁵⁰³ n. s. [σολοικισμός.]

Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more.

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addis.

SO'LELY, sôle'lé. adv. [from sole.] Singly;
only.

You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands. Shakspeare.

This night's great business
Shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shaks.

That the intemperate heat of the clime solely occasions this complexion experience admits not.
Brown.

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury.

They all chose rather to rest the cause solely on logical disputation, than upon the testimonies of the ancients. Waterland.

SO'LEMN, sôl'ém.⁴¹¹ adj. [solemnel, Fr.
solemnis, Latin]

1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.

The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfl.

2. Solemnly grave; awful.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milt.

3. Formal; ritual; religiously regular.

The necessary business of a man's calling, with some, will not afford much time for set and solemn prayer. Duty of Man.

4. Striking with seriousness; sober; serious.

Then gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all. F. Queen.
To swage with solemn touches troubled thoughts.
Milton.

Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling
Milton.

5. Grave; affectedly serious.

When Steel reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession, of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanisheth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing; because, though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn coxcomb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier.
Swift.

SO'LEMNESS, sôl'lém-nès. } n. s. [solem- SOLE'MNITY, sô-lém'né-té. } nité, French;
from solemn.]

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.
Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church? Nelson.

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few,
must quickly finish that outward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same at length to perfection. Nelson.

Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.

3. Awful ceremony or procession.

The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shakspeare.

The moon like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shakspeare.

There may be greater danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraignments, plays, and solemnities. Bacon.

What fun'ral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity! Dryden.

Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different. Atterbury.

4. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With much more skilful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny. Sidney.

5. Gravity; steady seriousness.

The stateliness and gravity of the Spaniards shews itself in the solemnity of their language.
Spectator.

6. Awful grandeur; grave stateliness; sober dignity.

A diligent decency was in Polycletus, above others; to whom though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted so-lemness. Wolton.

7. Affected gravity.

Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o'door,
And go along with us. Shakspeare.

Be this truth eternal ne'er forgot,
Solemnity's a cover for a sot.
This speech ended with a solemnity of accent.
Young.

Female Quixote.

SOLEMNIZA'TION, sôl-lém-nè-zâ'shûn. n. s.
[from solemnize.] The act of solemnizing; celebration.

Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne dutchess of Brctagne, with whom he received the dutchy of Bretagne
Bacon.

To SO'LEMNIZE, sôl'lém-nize. v. n. [sol- emnizer, French; from solemn.]

1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.

Dorilus in a great battle was deprived of life;
his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies.
Sidney.

Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemnized in another. Hooker.
Then 'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day.
Fairy Queen.

The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize his miraculous birth. Boyle.
Their choice vobility and flower
Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton.

2. To perform religiously once a year.

What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication, is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself.
Hooker.

SO'LEMNLY, sôl'lém-lé. adv. [from so- lemn.]

1. With annual religious ceremonies.

2. With formal gravity and stateliness;
with affected gravity.

There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly. Bacon.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw,
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds ere hurricanes arise. Dryd.

3. With formal state.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakspeare.

4. With religious seriousness.

To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.

To SOLI'CIT, sô-lîs'sît. v. a. [solicito, Latin.]

1. To importune; to entreat.

If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shakspeare.

We heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land. Shakspeare.

How he solicits heav'n
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakspeare.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milton.

The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love. Dryden.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake;
to excite.

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shakspeare.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount
Her nat'ral graces, that extinguish art. Shakspeare.

That fruit solicited her longing eye. Milton.

Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses, and force an entrance to the mind.
Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in forbidden liberties. Rogers.

3. To implore; to ask.

With that she wept again; till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, then must you, said she, know the story of Amphialus? Sidney.

4. To attempt; to try to obtain.

I view my crime, but kindle at the view;
Repent old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.

5. To disturb; to disquiet. A latinism.

Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid. Milt.

I find your love, and would reward it too;
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryden.

SOLICITA'TION, sò-lis-è-tá'shùn. n. s.
[from solicit.]

1. Importunity; act of importuning.

I can produce a man
Of female seed, far abler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive him back to hell.

Milton.

2. Invitation; excitement.

Children are surrounded with new things, which by a constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them.

Locke.

SOLICITOR, sò-lis'it-úr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [from solicit.]

1. One who petitions for another.

Be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die
Than give thy cause away.

Shakspeare.

Honest minds will consider poverty as a recommendation in the person who applies himself to them, and make the justice of his cause the most powerful solicitor in his behalf.

Addison.

2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.

For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit.

Bacon.

SOLICITOUS, sò-lis'it-ús.³¹⁴ adj. [solicitus, Latin.] Anxious; careful; concerned. It has commonly about before that which causes anxiety; sometimes for or of. For is proper before something to be obtained.

Our hearts are pure, when we are not solicitous of the opinion and censures of men, but only that we do our duty.

Taylor.

Enjoy the present, whatsoever it be, and be not solicitous for the future.

Taylor.

The colonel had been intent upon other things,
and not enough solicitous to finish the fortifications.

Clarendon.

In providing money for disbanding the armies, upon which they were marvellously solicitous, there arose a question.

Clarendon.

They who were in truth zealous for the preservation of the laws, were solicitous to preserve the king's honour from any indignity, and his regal power from violation.

Clarendon.

Laud attended on his majesty, which he would have been excused from, if that design had not been in view, to accomplish which he was solicitous for his advice.

Clarendon.

There kept their watch the legions, while the grand

In council sat solicitous what chance
Might intercept their emperour sent.

Without sign of boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began.

Milton.

No man is solicitous about the event of that which he has in his power to dispose of.

South.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, the effect of your nobleness; but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness.

Dryden.

The tender dame solicitous to know
Whether her child should reach old age or no,
Consults the sage Tiresias.

Addison.

How lawful and praiseworthy is the care of a family! And yet how certainly are many people rendered incapable of all virtue, by a worldly solicitous temper!

Law.

SOLICITOUSLY, sò-lis'it-ús-lè. adv. [from solicitous.] Anxiously; carefully.

The medical art being conversant about the health and life of man, doctrinal errors in it are to be solicitously avoided.

soliditus, Lat. from solid.]

1. Fulness of matter; not hollowness.

2. Firmness; hardness; compactness; density; not fluidity.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies, when they are moving one towards another, I call solidity.

Locke.

The stone itself, whether naked or invested with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down.

Woodward.

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; certainty.

The most known rules are placed in so beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity.

Locke.

His fellow-peers have attended to his cloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning.

Prior.

This pretence has a great deal more of art than of solidity in it.

Waterland.

SO'LIDLY, sòl'id-lè. adv. [from solid.]

1. Firmly; densely; compactly.

2. Truly; on good grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end he is in the world for.

Digby.

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his religion upon, and which I defy the subtlest atheist in the world solidly to answer; namely, that it is good to be sure.

South.

SO'LIDNESS, sòl'id-nés. n. s. [from solid.]

Solidity; firmness; density.

It beareth missestoe: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and pith of the oak.

Bacon.

It is built with that unusual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contest with the iron teeth of time.

Howel.

SOLIDUNGULOUS, sòl-lè-dúng'gù lûs. adj.
[solidus and ungula, Lat.] Whole-hoof-mals, have no gall; which we find repugnant unto reason.

Brown.

SOLIF'DIAN, sò-lè-fid'yân. n. s. [solus and fides, Latin] One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of funda-mentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions.

Hammond.

SOLILOQUY, sò-lil'ò-kwè. n. s. [soliloque,
French; solus and loquor, Latin.] A discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy: Solomon is the person that speaks: he is at once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him.

Prior.

He finds no respite from his anxious grief,
Then seeks from his soliloquy relief.

Garth.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy.

Spectator.

solitary.] In solitude; with loneliness;
without company.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it?

Hooker.

Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage which dwell solitarily in the wood.

Micah.

SO'LITARINESS, sòl'lè-tà-rè-nés. n. s. [from solitary.] Solitude; forbearance of company; habitual retirement.

There is no cause to blame the prince for sometimes hearing them: the blame-worthiness is, that to hear them he rather goes to solitariness, than makes them come to company. Sidney.

You subject yourself to solitariness, the sly enemy that doth most separate a man from well-doing. Sidney.

At home, in wholesome solitariness, My piteous soul began the wretchedness Of suitors at the court to wreath. Donne.

Him fair Lavinia Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life. Dryden.

3. Gloomy; dismal.

Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein. Job.

4. Single.

Nor did a solitary vengeance serve: the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved. King Charles.

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual concurrences supporting their solitary instabilities. Brown.

SOLITARY, sôl'lê-tâ-rê. n. s. [from the adjective.] One that lives alone; a hermit.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave with a spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary. Pope.

SOLITUDE, sôl'lê-tû-de. n. s. [solitudo, Fr. solitudo, Latin.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone.

It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech, Whosoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth With various living creatures, and the air, Replenish'd, and all these at thy command, To come and play before thee? Milton.

Such only can enjoy the country, who are capable of thinking when they are there: then they are prepared for solitude, and in that solitude is prepared for them. Dryden.

2. Loneliness; remoteness from company.

The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to heaven. Law.

The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson.

SONNET, sŏn'nĕt.⁹⁹ n. s. [sonnet, Fr. sonnetto, Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and stile;
The subject new; it walk'd the town a-while,
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on;
Cries the stall-reader, Bless us, what a word on
A title-page is this! and some in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, sirs, than Gordon, Colkitto, or Maedonnel, or Galasp?

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow
sleek,

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp:
Thy age, like ours, soul of sir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,
When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek. Milton.

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shaksp.

SONNETTEER, sŏn-nĕt-tĕér'. n. s. [sonnetier, Fr. from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.

Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetteer. Shakespeare
There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry;
your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art. Spectator.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney sonnetter or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

SONIFEROUS, sŏ-nĭf'ĕr-ŭs. adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.] Giving or bringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONORIFICK, sŏn-ŏ-rĭf'ĭk.⁶⁰⁹ adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts.

SONOROUS, sŏ-nŏ'rŭs.⁶¹² adj. [sonore, Fr. sonorus, Latin.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;
At which the universal host up sent
A shout that tore hell's concave. Milton.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.
The vowels are sonorous. Dryden.

SONOROUSLY, sŏ-nŏ'rŭs-lĕ. adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONOROUSNESS, sŏ-nŏ'rŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SOON, sŏŏn.³⁰⁶ adv. [suns, Gothick; rona, Sax. saen, Dutch.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milt.

You must obey me, soon or late;
Why should you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shaksp.
Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner. Hebrews.

How is it that you are come so soon to-day? Exodus.

The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. Bacon.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is tossed up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentious or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

5. Soon as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Exodus.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryden.
Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.

SOONLY, sŏŏn'lĕ. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A mason meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.

SOOPBERRY, sŏŏp'bĕr-rĕ. n. s. [saphindus, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

SOOT, sŏŏt.³⁰⁹ n. s. [rot, Saxon; soot, Islandick; soet, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howel.

Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, with'd their jaws,
With soot and einders fill'd. Milton.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again. Dryden.

SOOTED, sŏŏt'ĕd. adj. [from soot.] Smear'd, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

SOOTERKIN, sŏŏt'ĕr-kĭn. n. s. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sootherkin. Swift.
SOOTH, sôôth.⁴⁶⁷ n. s. [roð, Sax.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the elder sister first be wed. Shakspeare.
He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter;
I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakspeare.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill-habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd. Rowe.

SOOTH, sôôth.⁴⁶⁷ adj. [roð, Sax.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton.

SOOTH, sôôth. n. s. Sweetness; kindness.
This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakspeare.

To SOOTH, sôôth.⁴⁶⁷ v. a. [geroðian,
Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakspeare.

Can I sooth tyranny?
Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryden.

By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind:
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothling?
Rowe.

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato. Addison.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beddame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SO'OTHER, sôôth'ûr. n. s. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter; I defy
The tongues of soothers. Shakspeare.

To SOOTHSA, sôôth'sa. v. n. [from sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. Acts.

SOOTHSA, sôôth'sa-ûr. n. s. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarce was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon.

SOOTINESS, sôôt'è-nês. n. s. [from sooty.]
The quality of being sooty; fuliginous-
ness.

SOOTY, sôôt'tè. adj. [from soot.]

1. Breeding soot.
By fire of sooty coal th' alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton.

2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.
There may be some chymical way so to defecate
this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.
All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and hydras, and all monstrous forms. Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.

To SOOTY, sôôt'tè. v. n. [from soot.] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent,
Tann'd and all sootied with noisome smoke
She put him on; and over all a cloke. Chapman.

SOP, sôp. n. s. [rop, Sax. sopha, Spanish;
sopfie, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakspeare.

Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of
you. Shakspeare.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the soft given to Cerberus.

The prudent Sybil had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard;
Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.

Ill nature is not cured with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His triple barking mouth to stop. Swift.

To SOP, sôp. v. a. To steep in liquor.

SOPE, sôpe. n. s. [Sec SOAP.]

SOPH, sôf. n. s. [from sophista, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophs and three pert templars came,

The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate,
And smit with love of poesy and prate. Pope.

SOPHI, sôfè. n. s. [Persian.] The emperour of Persia.

By this scimitar
That slew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shaksp.

A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.

SOPHISM, sôffizm. n. s. [sophisma, Lat.]
A fallacious argument; an unsound subtlety; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

I, who as yet was never known to show
False pity to premeditated woe,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Harte.

SOPHIST, sôffist.⁵⁴⁴ n. s. [sophista, Lat.]

A professor of philosophy.
The court of Cræsus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

SOPHISTER, sôffis-tûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [sophiste,
Fr. sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shakspeare.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians. Rogers.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist.

This sense is antiquated.
Aleimus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.

SOPHISTICAL, sô-fis'tè-kâl.⁸⁸ adj. [sophistique, Fr. from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical couzenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublimary world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical evils. Stillingfleet.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot. More.

SOPHISTICALLY, sô-fis'tè-kâl-è. adv.
[from sophistical.] With fallacious subtily.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

To SOPHISTICATE, sô-fis'tè-kâte. v. a.
[sophistiquer, French; from sophist.]
To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth where scarce any probable shew appareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are sophisticated. Shakspeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tired with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticated nature and philosophy, were the stoicks;
who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicite acts of man's will. South.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare;
They purchase but sophisticated ware:
'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.

The eye hath its coats and honours transparent and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophisticate
the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Bentley.

SOPHISTICATE, sô-fis'tè-kâte.⁹¹ part. adj.
[from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far than she,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,
And that no woman e'er will be;
No, they are all sophisticate. Cowley.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examcn of the touchstone. Glanville.

So truth, when only one supplied the state,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticate. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATED, sò-fis-té-ká-shùn. n. s. [sophistication, French; from sophisticate.] Adulteration; not genuineness. Quincy.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain.

The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.

Besides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons. Glanville.

SOPHISTICAL, sò-fis-té-ká-túr.²¹ n. s. [from sophisticate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY, sòl-fis-tré. n. s. [from sophist.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

2. Logical exercise.

The more youthful exercises of sophistry, themes and declamations. Fulton

TO SOPORATE, sò-pò-ráte. v. n. [soporato, Latin.] To lay asleep. Dict.

SOPORIFEROUS, sòp-ò-rif-úr-ús. adj. [sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleeps. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Swift.

SOPORIFEROUSNESS, sòp-ò-rif-úr-ús-nés.^{518 527} n. s. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORIFICK, sòp-ò-rif-ík.^{530 500} adj. [sopor and ficio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.

SOPPER, sòp-púr. n. s. [from soft.] One that steeps any thing in liquor.

SORB, sòrb. n. s. [sorbum, Latin.] The berry of the sorb or service tree.

SORBILE, sòr-bìle. adj. [from sorbeo, Latin.] That may be drunk or sipped.

SORBITION, sòr-bìsh-ún. n. s. [sorbitio, Latin.] The act of drinking or sipping.

SORCERER, sòr-sér-úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [sortier, Fr. sortarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspeare.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon.

He saw a sable sorcerer arise,
All sudden gorgons hiss, and dragons glare,
And ten-horn'd fiends. Pope.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses; but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts.

SORCERESS, sòr-sér-és. n. s. [female of sorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn. Shakspeare.

Divers witches and sorceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky sorceress that sat
Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Milton.

SORCEROUS, sòr-sér-ús. adj. Containing enchantments. Not used.

Th' art ent'ring Circe's house,
Where by her medicines, black and sorceroous
Thy souldiers all are shut in well-arm'd sties,
And turn'd to swine. Chapman.

SORCERY, sòr-sér-é.⁵⁵⁵ n. s. Magick; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Scyrorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible,
Was banish'd. Shakspeare.

Adders' wisdom I have learn'd,
To fence my ears against thy sorceries. Milton.

Actæon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of sorcery. Tatler

SORD, sòrd. n. s. [corrupted from sward.] Turf; grassy ground.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever ran on the green sord. Shakspeare.

An altar of grassy sord. Milton.

SORDES, sòrdz. n. s. [Lat.] Foulness; dregs.

The sea washes off the soil and sordes wherein mineral mosses were involved and concealed, and thereby renders them more conspicuous. Woodw.

SORDET, sòr-dét. } n. s. [sourdine, Fr. sordine, Italian.]

A small pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet, to make it sound lower or shriller. Bailey.

SORDID, sòr-díd. adj. [sordidus, Lat.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty.

There Charon stands,
A sordid god; down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

2. [sordide, French.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not those exceptions make,
Which vulgar sordid mortals take. Cowley.

It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid. South.

3. [sordide, Fr.] Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,

And yet not sordid, who refuses gold. Denham.

If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

SORDIDLY, sòr-díd-lé. adv. [from sordid.] Measly; poorly; covetously.

SORDIDNESS, sòr-díd-nés. n. s. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madnesses of Caligula's delights, and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius. Cowley.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deters people from sluttishness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Ray.

SORE, sòre. n. s. [γάρ, Sax. saur, Dan.]

A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued, or from internal cause: to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happen.

Let us hence provide
A salve for any sore that may betide. Shakspeare.

Receipts abound; but searching all thy store,
The best is still at hand, to lance the sore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed and gathers ground. Dryden.

By these all fest'ring sores her councils heal,
Which time or has disclos'd or shall reveal. Dryden.

Lice and flies which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishing of their young, lay their eggs upon sores. Bentley.

SORE, sòre. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Tender to the touch. It has sometimes of before the causal noun.

We can ne'er be sure,
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are sore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd. Hudibras.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why should we tempt the doubtful die again? Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that bad sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexatious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy; but he that can moderate these afflictions will find ease in his mind. Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more. Pope.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement. See SORE, adverb.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakspeare.

I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood. Shakspeare.

My loins are filled with a sore disease; and there is no whole part in my body. Common Prayer.

Sore hath been their fight,
As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd. Milton.

Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have;
After this day's travel sore,
Sweet rest seize thee evermore. Milton.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconveniences should attend the discharge of their duty. Atterbury.

4. Criminal. Out of use.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lye for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakspeare.

SORE, sòre. n. s. [from saur, French.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a sorel; and the fourth year, a sore. Shakspeare.

SORE, sòre. adv. [This the etymologists derive from seer, Dutch: but seer means only an intenseness of any thing; sore almost always includes pain.] With painful or dangerous vehemence; in a very painful degree; with afflictive violence or pertinacity. It is now little used.

Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore. Common Prayer.

The knight then lightly leaping to the prey, With mortal steel him smote again so sore, That headless his unwieldy body lay. F. Queen.

He this and that, and each man's blow Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore. Daniel.

Though iron hew and mangle sore, Would wounds and bruises honour more. Hudibras.
Distrust shook sore their minds. Milton.

So that, if Palamon were wounded sore, Arcite was hurt as much. Dryden.

Sore sigh'd the knight who this long sermon heard: At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd. Dryden.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd, Greet your arrival to this distant isle? How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

SO'REHON, } n. s. [Irish and Scot-
SORN, } sörn. } ish.] A kind of arbitrary exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands giliwifits, and lived on free quarters: so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn, or be a sorner. Macbean.

They exact upon them all kinds of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coignie, livery, and sorehon; by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them. Spenser.

SO'REL, *só'ril.*⁹⁹ n. s. [diminutive of sore.] The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second a pricket; the third a sorel. Shakspeare.

SO'RELY, sò're'lé. adv. [from sore.]
1. With a great degree of pain or distress. Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there! the heart is sorely overcharged. Shakspeare

Of the warrior train, Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive. I have done ill, Of which I do accuse myself so sorely, That I will enjoy no more. Shakspeare.

SO'RENESS, sò're'nés. n. s. [from sore.] Tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the soreness of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain asswaged, though it left such a soreness, that I could hardly suffer the clothes of my bed. Temple.

SORI'TES, *sò-rítéz.*⁴³³ n. s. [σραϊτες.] Properly a heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sorites, or a heap. Dryden.

Sorites is when several middle terms are chosen, to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its pre-dicare with the first subject. Thus, All men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts.

SORO'RICIDE, *sò-ròr'ré-side.*⁴⁴³ n. s. [soror and cædo.] The murder of a sister.

SO'RRAGE, sòr'râdjé. n. s. The blades of green wheat or barley. Dict.

SO'RRANCE, sòr'rânse. n. s. [In farriery.] Any disease or sore in horses. Dict.

SO'RRREL, *sòr'rîl.*⁹⁹ n. s. [rûpe, Saxon; sorel, French; oxalis, Latin.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of sorrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb, that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali. Arbutnot.

SO'RRILY, sò'r'rê-lé. adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; despicably; wretchedly; pitiably. Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing sorriely. Sidney.

O let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakspeare.
By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
Oft our alliance other lands desired. Dryden.

SO'VEREIGNLY, sŭv'êr-in-lê. adv. [from sovereign.] Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

SO'VEREIGNTY, sŭv'êr-in-tê. n. s. [souveraine, French.] Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,
That I your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty. Shakspeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shaksp.
To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty.
Davies.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be stil'd
Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty.
Milton.

Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren.
Government of the Tongue.

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his topmost boughs to heaven ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend. Dryden.

I well foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much-lov'd sovereignty shall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade. Dryden.
Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God. Rogers.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrococtus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus. Arbuthnot.

SOUGH, sŭf. n. s. [from sous, French.] A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delfs would be so flowa with waters, it being impossible to make any addits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.

Ray.

Another was found in digging a sough-pit.
Woodward.

SOUGHT, sâwt.³¹⁹ The preterit and participle passive of seek.

I am sought of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that sought me not. Isaiah.

SOUL, sôle.³¹⁸ n. s. [apel, Saxon; sael,
Danish; sual, Islandick; siel, Dutch.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle for the souls of either.
Hooker.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and good,
Since all God's creatures, mortal and divine,
Since God himself, is her eternal food. Davies.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage; that these, being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any politick act of state be dissolved. Hayward.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some ubi for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations. Heylin.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul, song charms the sense. Milt.
The eyes of our souls only then begin to see,
when our bodily eyes are closing. Law.

To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves into the trunks of men. Shakspeare.

Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul.
Milton.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise.
Milton.

In common discourse and writing we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles.
Watts.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty. Shakspeare.
Charity, the soul of all the rest. Milton.

Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
Honours the princely chiefs. Dryden.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the deep. Dryden.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts.

2. Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know be life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence. Hooker.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes. Psalms.
Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetick institution.
Felton.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion. Wake.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.

Bacon.

The warlike sound of trumpets loud.

Milton.

Whene'er he spoke, his voicc was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound.

Dryden.

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion.

Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.

He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in men's ears.

Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle.

Locke.

O lavish land! for sound at such expence?

But then, she saves it in her bills for sense.

Young.

To SOUND, sòund. v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.

SOUR, sóúr. n. s. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.

A thousand soures to temper with one sweet,
To make it seem more dear and dainty.

Spenser.

To SOUR, sóúr. v. a.

1. To make acid.
His angelick nature had none of that carnal leven which ferments to the souring of ours.

Decay of Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new-made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
Till knowledge misapplied, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood.

Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,
Makes wit inflame or anger burn:
So the sun's heat, with different pow'rs,
Ripens the grape, the liquor sours.

Swift.

Dryden.

SO'URNNESS, sôur'nè. n. s. [from sour.]
1. Acidity; austereness of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body;
and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste.

Bacon.

P th' spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste.

Denham.

He knew

For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
And tame to plumbs the sourness of the sloes.

Dryden.

Of acid or sour one has a notion from taste, sour- ness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe.

Arbuthnot.

Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end?

Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.
Pelagius carped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereof.

Hooker.

He was never thought to be of that superstitious
sourness, which some men pretend to in religion.

King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind.

Nelson.

Pope.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies.

Shakespeare.

Who those were that ran away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day;

Although the rabble sous'd them for't
O'er head and ears in mud and dirt.

Butler.

They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides.

Addison.

To SOUSE, sôuse. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original: it must come from sous, or dessous, down, Fr.] To fall as a bird on its prey.

Thus on some silver swan or tim'rous hare,
Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air;

Her crooked talons truss the fearful prey,
Then out of sight she soars.

Dryden.

Jove's bird will souse upon th' tim'rous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear.

Dryden, jun.

To SOUSE, sôuse. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his

Oh, undistinguish'd space of woman's wit! Shakespeare.
This which yields or fills all space. Milton.
Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.
Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end: so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.
2. Any quantity of place.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare.
There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles' space to Walpo. Knolles.
In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.
Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.
3. Quantity of time.
There is a competent time allowed every man, and, as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. Hammond.
Nine times the space that measures day and night,
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.
In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins.
God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance; he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space.

Compassion quell'd

His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.

SPACIOUS, spá'shûs.³⁵⁷ adj. [spacicus, French; spatiosus, Latin.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.

Many learned men affirm, that some isthms have been eat through by the sea, and others cut by the spade.

His next advance was to the soldier's trade,
Where, if he did not nimbly ply the spade,

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back.

Here nature never difference made
Between the sceptre and the spade.

2. A deer three years old.

3. A suit of cards.

SPADEBONE, spáde'bône. n. s. [named from the form.] The shoulderblade.

By th' shoulder of a ram, from off the right side par'd,

Which usually they boil, the spade-bone being bar'd.

SPADICEOUS, spá-dîsh'ûs. adj. [spadiceus, Latin.] Of a light red.

Of those five Scaliger beheld, though one was spadiceous, or of a light red, and two inclining to red, yet was there not any of this complexion among them.

SPADILLE, spá-dîl'. n. s. [spadille, or espadille, French.] The ace of spades at ombre.

SPAGYRICK, spá-jér'rik. adj. [spagyricus, Latin.] A word coined by Paracelsus from spaher, a searcher, Teutonick.] Chymical.

SPAGYRIST, spá-jér'rist. n. s. A chymist. This change is so unexampled, that though among the more curious spagyrist it be very well known, yet many naturalists cannot easily believe it.

SPEAKE, spáke. The old preterit of speak.

So spake the archangel Michael, then paus'd.

SPALL, spáwl. n. s. [espaule, Fr.] Shoulder. Out of use.

Their mighty strokes their habergions dismay'd,
And naked made each other's manly spalles.

SPALT or spelt, spált. n. s. A white, scaly, shining stone, frequently used to promote the fusion of metals.

SPAN, spán. n. s. [span, spanne, span, Italian; span, Dutch.] Perhaps originally the expansion of the hand.]

1. The space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended; nine inches.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a fore-finger's breadth, one ninety-sixth.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite,
And buckle in a waste most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons?

Sum how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar.

2. Any short duration.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit.

The virgin's part, the mother, and the wife,
So well she acted in this span of life.

Then conscience, unrestrain'd by fears, began
To stretch her limits, and extend the span.
Life's but a span, I'll every inch enjoy.

To SPAN, spán. v. a.

1. To measure by the hand extended.

Of't on the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies.

2. To measure.

My surveyor is false; the over-great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spann'd already.

This soul doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;

Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent
He lies warm, and without adventure.

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
First taught our English musick how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, counting short and long.

SPAN, spán. The preterit of spin.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmet's span,
So sharp were their encounters.

SPANNCOUNTER, spán'kòun-tûr. } n. s.

SPANNFARTHING, spán'fâr-thing. }
[from span, counter, and fartthing.] A play at which money is thrown within a span or mark.

Tell the king, that for his father's sake, Henry V. in whose time boys went to spanncounter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign.

Boys shall not play
At spanncounter or blowpoint, but shall pay Toll to some courtier.

His chief solace is to steal down, and play at spannfartthing with the page.

To SPANNE, spáne. v. a. To wean a child.

SPANG, spáng. n. s. [spange, Dutch.]

This word seems to have signified a cluster of shining bodies.

The colours that shew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory.

SPANGLE, spáng'gl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [spange, German; a buckle, a locket; whence oherspangen, ear-rings.]

1. A small plate or boss of shining metal.

2. Any thing sparkling and shining.

As hoary frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy branches of an oak half dead.

Thus in a starry night fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky.
The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence: vulgar spectators see them but as a confused bundle of petty illuminants.

That now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found.

To SPA'NGLE, spáng'gl. v. a. [from the noun.] To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

They never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled starlight shewn.

What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face.

Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
That the eyes of busy fools may be stopt there.

Four faces each
Had, like a double Janus; all their shape
Spangled with eyes more numerous than those Of Argus.

Then appear'd
Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd,
With the bright luminaries that set and rose.

He cuts out a silk mantle from the skies,
Where the most sprightly azure pleas'd the eyes;
This he with stary vapours spangles all,
Took in their prime, ere they grow, rise, and fall.

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heav'ns, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.

SPANIEL, spán'yèl.^{113 281} n. s. [hispaniolus, Latin; espagneul, French.]

1. A dog used for sports in the field, remarkable for sagacity and obedience.

Divers days I followed his steps till I found him, having newly met with an excellent spaniel belonging to his dead companion.

There are arts to reclaim the wildest men, as there are to make spaniels fetch and carry; chide 'em often, and feed 'em seldom.

2. A low, mean, sneaking fellow; a courtier; a dedicator; a pensioner; a dependant; a placeman.

I mean sweet words,
Low-crook'd curtesies, and base spaniel-fawning.

I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me I will fawn on you.

To SPA'NIEL, spán'yèl. v. n. [from the noun.] To fawn; to play the spaniel.

SPANISH BROOM, spán'nîsh-bròóm. n. s. [genista juncea, Lat.] A plant so called, as being a native of Spain.

consume.

Thou thy father's thunder didst not sparre. Milton.
2. To have unemployed; to save from any particular use.

All the time he could sparre from the necessary cares of his weighty charge, he bestowed on prayer, and serving of God: he oftentimes spent the night alone in church, praying; his head-piece, gorget,
and gauntlets lying by him. Knolles.

He had no bread to sparre. L'Estrange.
Only the foolish virgins entertained this foolish conceit, that there might be an overplus of grace sufficient to supply their want; but the wise knew not of any that they had to sparre, but supposed all that they had little enough. Tillotson.

Let a pamphlet come in a proper juncture, and every one who can sparre a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.

3. To do without; to lose willingly.

I could have better spar'd a better man. Shakspeare.
For his mind I do not care,
That 's a toy that I could sparre;
Let his title be but great,
His clothes rich, and band sit neat. Ben Jonson.

Sense of pleasure we may well
Sparre out of life perhaps, and not repine;
But pain is perfect misery. Milton.

Now she might sparre the ocean, and oppose
Your conduct to the fiercest of her foes. Waller.
The fair blessing we vouchsafed to send;
Nor can we sparre you long, tho' often we may lend.
Dryden.

4. To omit; to forbear.

We might have sparred our coming. Milton.
Be pleas'd your politicks to sparre;
I'm old enough, and can myself take care. Dryden.

5. To use tenderly; to forbear; to treat with pity; not to afflict; not to destroy;

to use with mercy.

Spare us, good Lord. Common Prayer.
Who will set the discipline of wisdom over mine heart, that they sparre me not for my ignorances?
Ecclesiasticus.

Doth not each look a flash of lightning feel,
Which sparres the body's sheath, but melts the steel?
Cleveland.

Dim sadness did not sparre
Celestial visages. Milton.

Less pleasure take have minds in battles won
Than in restoring such as are undone:
Tygers have courage, and the rugged bear;
But man alone can whom he conquers sparre.
Waller.

6. To grant; to allow; to indulge.

Set me in the remotest place
That Neptune's frozen arms embrace;
Where angry Jove did never sparre
One breath of kind and temperate air. Roscommon.

7. To forbear to inflict or impose.

Spare my remembrance; 'twas a guilty day;
And still the blush hangs here. Dryden.
O sparre this great, this good, this aged king,
And sparre your soul the crime. Dryden.

Spare my sight the pain
Of seeing what a world of tears it costs you. Dryden.

To SPARE, spåre. v. n.

1. To live frugally; to be parsimonious; to be not liberal.

H' has wherewithal: in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Shakespeare.

Those wants, which they rather feared than felt,
would well enough be overcome by sparing and patience. Knolles.

In these relations, although he be more sparing, his predecessors were very numerous. Brown.

Our labours late and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts; then, clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toil. Onyay.

God has not been so sparing to men to make them barely two-legged creatures, and left it to Aristotle to make them rational. Locke.

When they discover the passionate desire of fame in the ambitious man, they become sparing and saving in their commendations; they envy him the satisfaction of an applause. Addison.

Now a reservoir, to keep and sparre;
The next a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

No statute in his favour says
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I who at sometimes spend, at others, sparre,
Divided between carelessness and care. Pope.

2. To forbear; to be scrupulous.

His soldiers sparred not to say that they should be unkindly dealt with, if they were defrauded of the spoil. Knolles.

ceiving than delivering; equally stout and kind.
Carew.

Men ought to beware, that they use not exercise and a sparre diet both. Bacon.

Join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Sparre fast, that oft with gods doth diet. Milton.

The masters of the world were bred up with sparre diet; and the young gentlemen of Rome felt no want of strength, because they ate but once a day. Locke.

2. Superfluous; unwanted.

If that no sparre clothes he had to give,
His own coat he would cut, and it distribute glad.
Spenser.

As any of our sick waxed well, he might he removed; for which purpose there were set forth ten sparre chambers. Bacon.

Learning seems more adapted to the female world than to the male, because they have more sparre time upon their hands, and lead a more sedentary life. Addison.

In my sparre hours you've had your part;
Ev'n now my servile hand your sovereign will obeys.
Norris.

3. Lean; wanting flesh; macilent.

O give me your sparre men, and sparre me the great ones. Shakespeare.

Our victuals failed us, though we had made good sparre of them. Bacon.

SPA'RER, spår'úr. n. s. [from sparre.]
One who avoids expense.

By nature far from profusion, and yet a greater sparer than a saver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, garrisons, and his feastings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Wotton.

SPA'RERIB, spåre'rib. n. s. [sparre and rib.] Ribs cut away from the body, and having on them sparre or little flesh: as, a sparerib of pork.

Bacon.

SPARK, spârk.⁷⁸ n. s. [rpearca, Saxon; sparke, Dutch.]

1. A small particle of fire, or kindled matter.

If any marvel how a thing, in itself so weak, could import any great danger, they must consider not so much how small the spark is that flieth up, as how apt things about it are to take fire.
Hooker.

I am about to weep; but thinking that
We are a queen, my drops of tears I'll turn
To sparks of fire.
Shakspeare.

I was not forgetful of the sparks which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments.
King Charles.

In this deep quiet, from what source unknown
Those seeds of fire that fatal birth disclose;
And first few scatt'ring sparks about were blown,
Big with the flames that to our ruin rose.
Dryden.

Oh, may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire!
Pope.

2. Any thing shining.

We have, here and there, a little clear light,
some sparks of bright knowledge.
Locke.

3. Any thing vivid or active.

If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee thither.
Shakspeare.

4. A lively, showy, splendid, gay man. It is commonly used in contempt.

How many huffing sparks have we seen, that in the same day have been both the idols and the scorn of the same slaves.
L'Estrange.

A spark like thee, of the mankilling trade,
Fell sick.
Dryden.

As for the disputes of sharpeners, we don't read of any provisions made for the honours of such sparks.
Collier.

The finest sparks and cleanest beaux,
Drip from the shoulders to the toes.
Prior.

I, who have been the poet's spark to-day,
Will now become the champion of his play.

A daw, to be sparkish, trick'd himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster.
L'Estrange.

SPARKLE, spârk'kl.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [from spark.]

1. A spark; a small particle of fire.

He, with repeated strokes
Of clashing flints, their hidden fires provokes;
Short flame succeeds; a bed of wither'd leaves
The dying sparkles in their fall receives:
Caught into life, in fiery fumes they rise,

And, fed with stronger food, invade the skies.
Dryden.

2. Any luminous particle.

To detract from the dignity thereof, were to injure even God himself, who, being that light which none can approach unto, hath sent out these lights whereof we are capable, even as so many sparkles resembling the bright fountain from which they rise.
Hooker.

When reason's lamp, which, like the sun in sky,
Throughout man's little world her beams did spread,
Is now become a sparkle, which doth lie
Under the ashes, half extinct and dead.
Davies.

Ah! then thy once-lov'd Eloisa see!
It will be then no crime to gaze on me:
See from my cheek the transient roses die,
See the last sparkle languish in my eye.
Pope.

To SPARKLE, spârk'kl. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To emit sparks.

castrate female animals.

Be dumb, you beggars of the rhyming trade;
Geld your loose wits, and let your muse be spay'd.
Cleveland.

The males must be gelt, and the sows spayed;
the spayed they esteem as the most profitable; because of the great quantity of fat upon the inwards.
Mortimer.

To SPEAK, spéke.²²⁷ v. n. preterit spake
or spoke; participle passive spoken.
[ƿpecan, Sax. sprecken, Dutch.]

1. To utter articulate sounds; to express thoughts by words.

Speaking is nothing else than a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies. Holder

Hannah spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard. 1 Samuel.

2. To harangue; to make a speech.

Many of the nobility made themselves popular by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed, notwithstanding their contradiction.
Clarendon.

Thersites, though the most presumptuous Greek,
Yet durst not for Achilles' armour speak. Dryden.

3. To talk for or against; to dispute.

A knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. Shakespeare.

The general and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly. Shakespeare.

When he had no power,
He was your enemy; still spake against
Your liberties and charters. Shakespeare.

4. To discourse; to make mention.

Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner? Shakespeare.

Lot went out, and spake unto his sons in law.
Genesis.

The fire you speak of,
If any flames of it approach my fortunes,
I'll quench it not with water, but with ruin.
Ben Jonson.

The scripture speaks only of those to whom it speaks.
They could never be lost but by an universal deluge, which has been spoken to already.
Tillotson.

Lucan speaks of a part of Cæsar's army, that came to him from the Leman-lake, in the beginning of the civil war. Addison.

Had Luther spoke up to this accusation, yet Chrysostom's example would have been his defence.
Atterbury.

Make all your trumpets speak, give them all
breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death.
Shakespeare.

6. To SPEAK with. To address; to converse with.

Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails,
We'll speak with thee at sea. Shakespeare.

I spake with one that came from thence,
That freely render'd me these news for true.
Shakespeare.

Nicholas was by a herald sent for to come into the great bassa; Solyman disdainingly to speak with him himself. Knolles.

To SPEAK, spéke. v. a.

1. To utter with the mouth; to pronounce.

Mordecai had spoken good.
Consider of it, take advice, and speak your minds.
Esther.

They sat down with him upon the ground, and none spake a word. Job.

When divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed. Acts.

You from my youth
Have known and tried me, speak I more than truth?
Sandys.

What you keep by you, you may change and mend,
But words once spake can never be recall'd. Waller.

Under the tropick is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke.
Waller.

He no where speaks it out, or in direct terms calls them substances. Locke.

Colours speak all languages, but words are understood only by such a people or nation. Spectator.

2. To proclaim; to celebrate.

It is my father's musick
To speak your deeds, not little of his care
To have them recompensed. Shakespeare.

3. To address; to accost.

If he have need of thee, he will deceive thee, smile upon thee, put thee in hope, speak thee fair,
and say, What wastest thou? Ecclesiasticus.

4. To exhibit; to make known.

Let heav'n's wide circuit speak
The maker's high magnificence. Milton.

SPEA'KABLE, spé'ká-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [from

Say,
How can'st thou speakable of mute? Milton.

SPEA'KER, spé'kúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from speak.]

1. One that speaks.

These fames grew so general, as the authors were lost in the generality of speakers. Bacon.

In conversation or reading, find out the true sense, the idea which the speaker or writer affixes to his words. Watts.

Common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to clothe them in; and these are always ready at the mouth. Swift.

2. One that speaks in any particular manner.

Horace's phrase is, "torret jecur;"
And happy was that curious speaker. Prior.

3. One that celebrates, proclaims, or mentions.

After my death, I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption. Shakespeare.

4. The prolocutor of the commons.

I have disabled myself, like an elected speaker of the house. Dryden.

SPEAKING Trumpet, spé'king-trúmp-it.⁹⁹
⁴¹⁰ n. s. A stentorophonick instrument; a trumpet by which the voice may be propagated to a great distance.

That with one blast through the whole house does hound,
And first taught speaking-trumpet how to sound.
Dryden.

SPEAR, spére.²²⁷ n. s. [ys-fer, Welsh;
ƿpepe, Saxon; spere, Dutch; spare, old Fr. sparum, low Latin.]

1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.

Those brandishers of speares,
From many cities drawn, are they that are our hinderers. Chapman.

Th' Egyptian, like a bill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seemed a spear.
Cowley.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear. Milton.

The flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

The rous'd-up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the protended spear. Thomson.

2. A lance, generally with prongs, to kill fish.

The horderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ehh have abandoned them to the hunters mercy, who, by an old custom, share them with such indifferency, as, if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear hunters in taking of salmon. Carew.

To SPEAR, spére. v. a. [from the noun.]

To kill, or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR, spére. v. n. To shoot or sprout.

This is commonly written spire.
Let them not lie lest they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot. Mortimer.

SPEA'RGRASS, spére'grás. n. s. [sphear and grass.] Long stiff grass.

Tickle our noses with speargrass to make them bleed; and then beslobber our garments with it.
Shakespeare.

SPEA'RMAN, spére'mán.⁸⁶ n. s. [sphear and man.] One who uses a lance in fight.

The spearman's arm, by thee, great God, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound. Prior.

1. Noting a sort of species.

A special idea is called by the schools a species.
Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling.

Sidney.

The several books of scripture, having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended.

Hooker.

Of all men alive,

I never yet beheld that special face,
Which I could fancy more than any other.

Shaksp.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.

Shaksp.

The fourth commandment, in respect of any one definite and special day of every week, was not simply and perpetually moral.

White.

Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members.

Atterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made a denizen by a special act of parliament

Davies.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of mutual society, may know and be sufficiently assured of without the help of any special revelation.

Wilkins.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free.

Hooker.

The other scheme takes special care to attribute all the work of conversion to grace.

Hammond.

Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities.

Sprat.

He bore

A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare.

Hudibras.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn

The special head of all the land together.

Shaksp.

SPE'CIALLY, spèsh'ál-è. adv. [from special.]

If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attain, find it specially.

Hale.

SPE'CIALTY, spèsh'ál-tè. } n. s. [specialité,
SPE'CIALITY, spèsh-è-ál-è-tè. } cialité,
Fr. from special.] Particularity.

On these two general heads all other specialities are dependent.

Hooker.

The packet is not come

Where that and other specialities are bound.

Shaksp.

Speciality of rule hath been neglected.

Shaksp.

When men were sure, that, in case they rested upon a bare contract without speciality, the other party might wage his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a speciality, which accorded many suits.

Hale.

SPE'CIES, spèsh'èz.⁴³³ n. s. [species, Lat.]

1. A sort; a subdivision of a general term.

A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot and Snowball.

Watts.

2. Class of nature; single order of beings.

He intendeth the care of species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies.

Brown.

The Phenix Pindar is a whole species alone.

Cowley.

For we are animals no less,
Although of different species.

Hudibras.

Thou nam'st a race that must proceed from me,
Yet my whole species in myself I see.

Dryden.

A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human, would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion.

Bentley.

3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth.

Bacon.

It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species.

Ray.

The species of the letters illuminated with blue, were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red, by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them.

Newton.

4. Representation to the mind.

Wit in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent.

Dryden.

5. Show; visible exhibition. Not in use; and perhaps, in the following quotation, misprinted for spectacles.

Shews and species serve best with the people.

Bacon.

6. Circulating money.

As there was in the splendour of the Roman empire a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city.

Arbuthnot.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

SPE'CI'FICAL, spè-siff'è-kál. } adj. [specifical, SPE'CI'FICK, spè-siff'èk.⁶⁰⁹ } cifique, Fr.
species and facio, Latin.]

1. That makes a thing of the species of which it is.

That thou to truth the perfect way may'st know,
To thee all her specifick forms I'll show.

Denham.

The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specifick nature of its acts, it is determined by the object.

South.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specifick uniformities?

These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specifick forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered.

Newton.

As all things were formed according to these spe-cifical platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them.

Norris.

Specifick gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds.

Quincy.

The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth, appear to be the same in all plants.

Arbuthnot.

Specifick difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generick difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specifick difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears.

Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a specifical virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance.

Bacon.

If she would drink a good decoction of sarsa, with the usual specificks, she might enjoy a good health.

Wiseman.

SPE'CI'FICALLY, spè-siff'è-kál-è. adv. [from specifick.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty.

South.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple conceits, nor of any other universal.

Greav.

He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an axe head be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural.

Bentley.

To SPE'CI'FICATE, spè-siff'è-kàte. v. a. [from species and facio, Latin.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imperate act of the divine special providence.

Hale.

SPE'CI'FICATION, spès-sè-fè-ká'shûn. n. s. [from specifick; specification, Fr.]

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question, hinders the disputes from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry.

Watts.

2. Particular mention.

The constitution here speaks generally, without the specification of any place.

Ayliffe.

To SPE'CI'FY, spès-sè-fl.¹⁸³ v. a. [from species; specifier, French.] To mention; to show by some particular mark of distinction.

As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such must be great.

Hooker.

St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were.

Burnet.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils, are specified.

Pope.

SPE'CIMEN, spēs'sé-mèn.⁵⁰³ n. s. [specimen, Latin.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited that the rest may be known.

Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Spectator.

SPE'CIOSUS, spēs'shūs.³⁶⁷ adj. [speciosus, French; speciosus, Latin.]

1. Showy; glorious to the view.

The rest, far greater part,
Will deem its outward rites and specious forms Religion satisfied. Milton.

She next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond wish too late!
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare.

Milton.

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.

Bad men boast
Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.

This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. Atterbury.

SPE'CIOSUSLY, spēs'shūs-lè. adv. [from speciosus.] With fair appearance.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity; especially to that personated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciosusly. Hammond.

SPECK, spék. n. s. [rpecec, Saxon.] A small discoloration; a spot.

Every speck does not blind a man.
Government of the Tongue.

Then are they happy, when
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure æther of the soul remains. Dryden.

To SPECK, spék. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.

Flow'r
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold.
Milton.

SPE'CKLE, spék'kl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [from speck.] Small speck; little spot.

To SPE'CKLE, spék'kl. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest.
Fairy Queen.

Speckled vanity
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould.
Milton.

Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent rear
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested hasilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play
Pope.

The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transformed to combs, the speckled and the white.
Pope.

SPECKT or Speight, spékt. n. s. A woodpecker. Ainsworth.

SPE'CTACLE, spék'tá-kl.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [spectacle, French; spectaculum, Latin.]

1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.

In open place produc'd they me,
To be a publick spectacle to all. Shakspeare.
We are made a spectacle unto angels and men.
1 Corinthians.

2. Any thing perceived by the sight.

Forth riding underneath the castle wall,
A dunghill of dead carcases he spy'd,
The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride.
Fairy Queen.

When pronouncing sentence, seem not glad;
Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad.
Denham.

3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side. Shakspeare.
We have helps for sight above spectacles and glasses.
Bacon.

Shakspeare was naturally learned: he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there. Dryden.

The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets. Græv.

This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles. Newton.

This day then let us not be told,
That you are sick, and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ills,
And talk of spectacles and pills. Swift.

SPE'CTACLED, spék'tá-kl'd.³⁶⁰ adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with spectacles.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Shakspeare.

SPECTA'TION, spék-tá'shûn. n. s. [spectatio, Latin.] Regard; respect.

This simple spectation of the lungs is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.

SPECTA'TOR, spék-tá'tûr.^{76 521} n. s. [spectateur, French; spectator, Latin.] A looker-on; a beholder.

More
Than history can pattern, though devis'd
And play'd to take spectators. Shakspeare.

If it proves a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot. Shakspeare.

An old gentleman mounting on horseback, got up heavily, but desired the spectators that they would count fourscore and eight before they judged him. Dryden.

He mourns his former vigour lost so far,
To make him now spectator of a war. Dryden.

What pleasure hath the owner more than the spectator? Seed.

SPECTA'TORSHIP, spék-tá'tûr-shîp. n. s. [from spectator.] Act of beholding.

Thou stand'st i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and cruel in suffering. Shakspeare.

SPE'CTRE, spék'tûr.⁴¹⁶ n. s. [spectre, Fr. spectrum, Latin.]

1. Apparition; appearance of persons dead.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatick spectres to rejoice. Dryden.

The very poetical use of a word, for a spectre doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stillingsfleet.

These are nothing but spectres the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.

2. Something made preternaturally visible.

SPE'CTRUM, spék'trûm. n. s. [Latin.] An image; a visible form.

This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in increasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton.

SPE'GLAR, spék'kû-lâr.⁸⁸ adj. [specularis, Latin.]

1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking glass.

It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone. Donne.

Quicksilver may, by the fire alone, in glass vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular as before. Boyle.

A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from the specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.

2. Assisting sight. Improper.

The hidden way
Of nature wouldst thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature, thy specular orb
Apply to well-dissected kernels; lo!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees. Philips.

To SPE'GULATE, spék'kû-lâte.⁹¹ v. n. [speculer, French; specular, Latin.] To meditate; to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.

Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intriniscal relation. Digby.

As news-writers record facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and, by their variety of conjectures, become consummate statesmen. Addison.

To SPE'GULATE, spék'kû-lâte. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.

Man was not meant to gape, or look upward, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding. Brown.

SPECULA'TION, spék-kû-lá'shûn. n. s. [speculation, French; from speculate.]

1. Examination by the eye; view.

2. Examiner; spy. This word is found nowhere else, and probably is here misprinted for specuiator.

They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars

Throne and set high? servants
Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state. Shakspeare.

3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.

In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained, after speculation, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed. Hooker.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible. Milton.

News-writers afford matter of speculation. Addison.

4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.

From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations. Temple.

5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only round in speculation, has since been surrounded by the fortune and holdness of many navigators. Temple.

This is a consideration not to be neglected, or thought an indifferent matter of mere speculation.

Lesley.

6. Power of sight. Not in use.

Thy bones are marrowless; thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Thou star'st with.

Shakspeare.

SPE'CATIVÉ, spēk'kù-lâ-tiv.⁵¹² adj. [speculatif, French; from speculate.]

1. Given to speculation; contemplative.

If all other uses were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative, and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for mere knowledge sake. Hooker.
It encourages speculative persons, who have no turn of mind to encrease their fortunes. Addison.

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not practical.

Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would that the best should govern, but nowise to create a right. Bacon.

These are not speculative flights, or imaginary notions, but are plain and undeniable laws, that are founded in the nature of rational being. Law.

SPE'CATIVELY, spēk'kù-lâ-tiv-lé. adv. [from speculative.]

1. Contemplatively; with meditation.

Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear. Addison.

2. Mute; dumb.

I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said rise: dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand. Shakspeare.

From her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakspeare.

He that never hears a word spoken, it is no wonder he remain speechless; as any one must do, who from an infant should be bred up among mutes. Holder.

To SPEED, spēéd.²⁴⁸ v. n. pret. and part. pass. sped and speeded. [schoeden, Dut.]

1. To make haste; to move with celerity.

So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay
Devoid of outward sense and native strength,
Cover'd with charmed cloud from view of day. Fairy Queen.

Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought? I speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility. Shakspeare.

If pray'r's
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard. Milton.

See where Idwall speeds! a trusty soldier. A. Philips.

2. [speedian, to grow rich, Saxon.] To have good success.

Timon is shrunk, indeed;
And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed. Shakspeare.

Now if this suit lay in Bianca's pow'r,
How quickly should you speed. Shakspeare.

When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell,
I told you then he should prevail, and speed
In his bad errand. Milton.

3. To succeed well or ill.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk;
I've look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakspeare.

Macieaus shewed them what an offence it was rashly to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well. Knolles.

These were violaters of the first temple; and those that profaned and abused the second, sped no better. South.

Show him this letter. Shakspeare.

Send speedily to Bertran; charge him strictly Not to proceed. Dryden.
SPE'EDINESS, spéd'è-nés. n. s. [from speedy.] The quality of being speedy.
SPE'EDWELL, spéd'wèll. n. s. [veronica,
Latin.] A plant; fluellin.
In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small hen-bit. Derham.

SPE'EDY, spéd'è. adj. [from speed.]
Quick; swift; nimble; quick of despatch.

How near's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot: the main descry
Stands on the hourly thought. Shakspeare.

Back with speediest sail
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing,
Came flying. Milton.

Let it be enough what thou hast done,
When spotted deaths ran arm'd through ev'ry street,
With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.

SPEIGHT, spète. n. s. [picus martius, Latin.]
A bird.

SPELL, spél. n. s. [rpel, Sax. a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:
Sunt verba et voces quibus hunc le-nire dolorem

Possis.

Start not; her actions shall be holy:
You hear my spell is lawful; do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double. Shakspeare.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dashes. Brown.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Had not spells
And black enchantments, some magician's art,
Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milton.
Begin, begin; the mystick spell prepare. Milton.
Yourself you so excel,

When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell
Of my own teaching I am caught. Waller.
Mild Lucina

Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And spoke the pow'rful spells that babes to birth diselose. Dryden.

2. A turn of work; a vicissitude of labour.
A low word.

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.

To SPELL, spél. v. a. pret. and part. pass.
spelled or spelt. [spellen, Dutch.]

1. To write with the proper letters.
In the criticism of spelling, the word satire ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden.

2. To read by naming letters singly.
I never yet saw man,

How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakspeare.

3. To charm.
I have you fast:

Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty. Shakspeare
This, gather'd in the planetary hour,
With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,

Diré stepdames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden.

To SPELL, spél. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.
What small knowledge was, in them did dwell;
And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden.
By pasting on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats has played himself into spelling. Locke.
The Latin being written of the same character with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book it is legible. Spectator.
Another cause, which hath maimed our language is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift.

2. To read.
If I read aught in heaven,
Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrrows and labours, opposition, hate,
Attend thee. Milton.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
The fierce Epirote, and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milton.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To read unskilfully.
As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion; a rude unwritten blank, sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation. South.

To SPELT, spélt. v. n. To split; to break.
A bad word.

Feed geese with oats, spelled beans, barley meal, or ground malt mixed with beer. Mortimer.
SPE'LTR, spélt'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. A kind of semi-metal.

Metals in fusion do not flame, for want of a copious fume; except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton.

To SPEND, spénd. v. a. [rpendan, Sax.
spendere, Italian.]

1. To consume; to exhaust; to waste.
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds. Shakspeare.
I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. 2 Corinthians.

There is oil in the dwelling of the wise, but a foolish man spendeth it up. Proverbs.

We must exasperate
The almighty Victor to spend all his rage. Milton.
Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

2. To bestow, as expense; to expend, as cost.

Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Isaiah.

3. To bestow for any purpose: often with upon.

When we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakspeare.

Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opinion. Boyle.

4. To effuse.
Coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten.

Runs far before them. Shakspeare.

5. To squander; to lavish.

The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend, their estates. Wake.

6. To pass; to suffer to pass away.
In those pastoral pastimes a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.

They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job.

He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. 1 Esdras.

Say, for you saw us, ye immortal lights!
How oft unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledæan stars, so fam'd for love,
Wonder'd at us from above. Cowley.

When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waste; to wear out; to exhaust of force

The waves ascended and descended, till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last. Burnel.

They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around,
Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground. Dryden.

The winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury, and direct it right,
Till it has spent itself on Cato's head. Addison.

8. To fatigue; to harass.

Nothing but only the hope of spoil did relieve them, having scarce clothes to cover their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst. Knolles.

Or come your shipping in our ports to lay,
Spent and disabled in so long a way? Dryden.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd, Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames consum'd the rest. Dryden.

Thou oft hast seen me
Wrestling with vice and faction; now thou see'st me
Spent, overpower'd, despairing of success. Addison.

To SPEND, spénd. v. n.

1. To make expense.
Henceforth your tongue must spend at lesser rate,
Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryden.

He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning. South.

2. To prove in the use.
Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil. Temple.

3. To be lost or wasted.
The sound spendeth, and is dissipated in the open air; but in such concaves it is conserved and contracted. Bacon.

On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that spend before they come to the valleys. Bacon.

4. To be employed to any use.
There have been cups and an image of Jupiter, made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wines are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes. Bacon.

SPEN'DER, spénd'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from spend.]

1. One who spends.
Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh
you. Taylor.

2. A prodigal; a lavisher.
Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were sparing, to tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up; and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living. Bacon.

SPEN'DTHRIFT, spénd'thrift. n. s. [spend and thrift.] A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spendthrift. L'Estrange.

Some fawning usurer does feed

With present sums th' unwary spendthrift's need.

Dryden.

Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.

The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar.

Swift.

SPE' RABLE, spér'á-bl. adj. [sperabilis, Lat.] Such as may be hoped. Not in use.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not sperable. Bacon.

SPERM, spérm. n. s. [sperme, Fr. sperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one: this may be caused by the quantity of sperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may sever the sperm. Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the sperm of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations.

Ray

SPERMACE'TI, spér-mâ-sè'té. n. s. [Lat.] Corruptedly pronounced parmasitty.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is, to shoot into flakes, not much unlike the crystallization of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. Quincy.

SPERMA'TICAL, spér-mât'té-kál. } adj.
SPERMA'TICK, spér-mât'tik.⁵⁰⁹ } [spermatique, Fr. from sperm.]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but spermatical or vital. More.

Metals and sundry meteors rude shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the sperm; containing sperm.

The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatick vessels, wherein the more spirituous parts of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray.

TO SPERMATIZE, spér-mâ-tize. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield seed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle, rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCE'LE, spér-mâ-tò-sé'le'. n. s. [σπέρμα and κηλη.] A rupture caused by the contraction of the seminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

SPERMO'LOGIST, spér-môl'lô-jist. n. s. [σπερμολόγος.] One who gathers or treats of seed. Dict.

TO SPERSE, spérse. v. a. [sperus, Lat.] To disperse; to scatter. Not in use.

The wrathful wind,
Which blows cold storms, hurst out of Scythian mew
That sperst those clouds, and in so short as thought

This dreadful shape was vanished to nought.

Spenser.

He making speedy way through spersed air,
And through the world of waters wide and deep,
To Morpheus' house doth hastily repair. F. Queen.
TO SPET, spét. v. a. [spet in Scotland is a superabundance of water: as, that tide or fresh was a high spet.] To bring or pour abundantly.

Mysterious dame,

That ne'er art call'd but when the dragon womb
Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air,
Stop thy cloudy ebon chair. Milton.

TO SPEW, spù.²⁶⁵ v. a. [spepan, Sux. speuwen, Dutch.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,
That in his throat him pricking softly under
His wide abyss. him forced forth to spew,
That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue. Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places spew their wat'ry store. Dryden.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show;
And when the fouler bottom spews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land spew not you out. Leviticus.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon.

TO SPEW, spù. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in
The drunkards, and the noises of the inn:
But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew,
Than in the scene to offend or him or you. Jonson.

SPE'WY, spù'é. adj. [from speav.] Wet; foggy. A provincial word.

The lower vallies in wet winters are so spewy, that they know not how to seed them. Mortimer.

TO SPHA'CELATE, sfâs'sé-lâte. v. a. [from sphacelus, medical Lat.] To affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphacelates the brain. Sharp.

TO SPHA'CELATE, sfâs'sé-lâte. v. n. To mortify; to suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distention, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphacelate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer. Sharp.

SPHA'CELUS, sfâs'sé-lûs. n. s. [σφάκελος; sphacelle, French.] A gangrene; a mortification.

It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphacelus. Wiseman.

SPHERE, sfère. n. s. [sphere, Fr. sphæra, Lat.]

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the centre is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd. Milton.

2. Any globe of the mundane system.

What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unsecn,
Of other worlds be happily should hear? F. Queen.
And then mortal ears
Had heard the musick of the spheres. Dryden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky.

Two figures on the sides emboss'd appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere,
And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year? Dryd.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton.

5. [from the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.] Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't. Shakspeare.

Of enemies he could not but contract good store, while moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre. King Charles.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors, so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. Addison.

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to th' æthereal kind. Pope.

The hermit's pray'r permitted, not approv'd;
Soon in an higher sphere Eulogius mov'd. Harte.

TO SPHERE, sfère. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in a sphere.

The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the rest, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakspeare.

2. To form into roundness.

Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton.

SPHE'RICAL, sfêr'rè-kâl. } adj. [spherique,
SPHE'RICK, sfêr'rik.⁵⁰⁹ } French; from sphere.]

1. Round; orbicular; globular.

What descent of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low? Raleigh.

Though sounds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they go farthest in the forelines from the first local impulsion of the air. Bacon.

By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Glanville.

A fluid mass necessarily falls into a spherical surface. Keil.

Where the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherick; and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical. Woodward.

2. Planetary; relating to the orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shakspeare.

SPHE'RICALLY, sfêr'rè-kâl-é. adv. [from spherical.] In form of a sphere.

SPHE'RICALNESS, sfêr'rè-kâl-nés. } n. s.
SPHE'RICITY, sfè-ris-é-té. } [from sphere.] Roundness; rotundity; globosity.

Such bodies receive their figure and limits from such lets as hinder them from attaining to that sphericalness they aim at. Digby.

Water consists of small, smooth, spherical particles; their smoothness makes 'em slip easily upon one another: the sphericity keeps 'em from touching one another in more points than one. Touche.

SPHEROID, sfè'rôid. n. s. [σφαῖρα and εἶδος; spheroide, Fr.] A body oblong or oblate, approaching to the form of a sphere.

They are not solid particles, by the necessity they are under to change their figures into oblong spheroids, in the capillary vessels. Cheyne.

SPHEROIDICAL, sfè-rôid-é-kâl. adj. [from spheroid.] Having the form of a spheroid.

If these corpuscles be spheroidical, or oval, their shortest diameters must not be much greater than those of light. Cheyne.

SPIHERULE, sfēr'ule. n. s. [sphærule, Lat.] A little globe.

Mercury is a collection of exceeding small, vastly heavy spherules. Cheyne.

SPHINX, sfinks. n. s. [σφιγξ]. A famous monster in Egypt, that remained by conjoined Nilus, having the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peacham.

SPIAL, spî'ál. n. s. [espial, Fr.] A spy; a scout; a watcher. Obsolete.

His ears be as spials, alarm to cry. Tusser.

He privy spials plac'd in all his way,

To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Spenser.

For he by faithful spial was assur'd

That Egypt's king was forward on his way. Fairfax.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. Bacon.

SPICE, spise. n. s. [espices, French.]
1. A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate; an aromack substance used in sauces.

Dang'rous rocks,

Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,

Would scatter all the spices on the stream. Shaksp.

Is not manhood, learning, gentleness, and virtue,

the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shaksp.

Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request

among the Indians. Temple.

High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned.

Think what they have done,

And then run stark mad; for all

Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shaksp.

It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning. Brown.

So in the wicked there's no vice,

Of which the saints have not a spice. Hudibras.

To SPICE, spise. v. a. [from the noun.]
To season with spice; to mix with aromack bodies

His mother was a vot'ress of my order,

And in the spiced Indian air by night

Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shaksp.

With a festival

She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread

With flowrie poysons. Chapman.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so

May great-grandchildren of thy praises grow;

And so, though not revive, embalm and spice

The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a fraught

Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,

If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,

When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPI'CE, spî'sür. n. s. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPI'CE, spî'sür-è. n. s. [espiceries, Fr. from spice.]
1. The commodity of spices.

Their camels were loaden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh.

She in whose body

The western treasure, eastern spicery,

Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,

Were easily found. Donne.

2. A repository of spices.
The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison.

SPICK and SPAN, spik'ánd-spán'. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Saxon; expandere, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth newly extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.

While the honour thou hast got

Is spick and span new, piping hot,

Strike her up bravely. Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing.

I keep no antiquated stuff;

But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPI'CKNEL or Spignel, spîk'nél. n. s. [meum, Lat.] The herb maldmony or bearwort.

Dict.

SPICO'SITY, spè-kòs'sè-tè. n. s. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Dict.

SPI'CY, spî'sè. adj. [from spice.]
1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics.

Off at sea north-east winds blow

Sabæan odour, from the spicy shore

Of Araby the blest; with such delay

Well pleas'd they slack their course; and many a league,

Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.

For them the Idumæan balm did sweat,

And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromack; having the qualities of spice.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity. Arbuthnot.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,

Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPI'DER, spî'dür. n. s. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίζειν, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch, speyden, Danish, to spy, to lie upon the catch. Dop, δοπα, Sax. is a beetle, or properly a humble bee, or stingless bee. May not spider be spydor, the insect that watches the dor?] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that bated wretch,

Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shaksp.

The spider's web to watch we'll stand,

And, when it takes the bee,

We'll help out of the tyrant's hand

The innocent to free. Drayton.

Insidious, restless, watchful spider,

Fear no officious damsel's broom;

Extend thy artful fabrick wider,

And spread thy banners round my room.

While I thy curious fabrick stare at,

And think on hapless poet's fate,

Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,

And rudely hanish'd rooms of state. Dr. Littleton.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!

Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPI'DER-CATCHER, spî'dür-kâtsh'ür. n. s. [from spider and catcher; ficus murarius, Lat.] A bird.

SPI'DERWORT, spî'dür-würt. n. s. [spha- langium, Latin.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Miller.

SPI'GOR, spig'üt. n. s. [spijcker, Dut.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield? Shaksp.

Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth. Swift.

SPIKE, spike. n. s. [spica, Latin.]
1. An ear of corn.

Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes

Guard it from birds, as with a stand of pikers. Denham.

Suffering not the yellow beards to rear,

He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the ear. Dryden.

The gleaners,

Spike after spike, their sparing harvest pick. Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear of corn.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them. Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower. Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun. Addison.

SPIKE, spike. n. s. A smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated. Hill.

To SPIKE, spike. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with long nails.

Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked

down to the pieces of oak on which they lie. Moxon.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast. Mortimer.

2. To set with spikes.
A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frighted down, and in his falling he was catched by those spikes. Wiseman.

3. To make sharp at the end.

SPI'KENARD, spike'nård. n. s. [spica nardi, Lat.] A plant; and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

It grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages. Hill.

A woman, having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, brake and poured it on his head. Mark.

He casts into the pile bundles of myrrh, and sheaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy shrub. Spectator.

SPILL, spill. n. s. [spijlen, Dutch.]
1. A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron.

The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern. Carew.

Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole, stopp'd with a spill. Mortimer.

2. A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.

To SPILL, spill. v. a. [spillan, Saxon; spillen, Dutch; spilla, Islandick.]
1. To shed; to lose by shedding.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.
Shakspeare.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.
Shakspeare.

Themselves exact their cruelty,
And I constrained am this blood to spill.
They having spill'd much blood, and done much waste,
Daniel.

Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey; Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.
Milton.

Medea must not draw her murth'ring knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage.
Roscorr.mon.

Orbellan did disgrace
With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt,
What is it less than to partake his guilt?
Dryden.

Nor the Centaur's tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls
At feasting hour.
Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled,
Thus he our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled.
Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill.
Spenser.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ingrateful man.
Shakspeare.

Be not angry with these fires;
For then their threats will kill me:
Nor look too kind on my desires;
For then my hopes will spill me.
Ben Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:
Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either.
Davies.

3. To throw away.

This sight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest.
Tickel.

To SPILL, spill. v. n.

1. To waste; to be lavish.
Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling.
Sidney.

2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.
He was so topful of himself, that he let it spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long.
Watts.

SPILLER, spil'lâr. n. s. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fishing line.

In harbour they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait: this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunt.
Carew.

SPILTH, spilth. n. s. [from spill.] Any thing poured out or wasted.

Our vaults have wept with drunken spilth of wine.
Shakspeare.

To SPIN, spîn. v. a. pret. spun or span;
part. spun. [ɾpinnan, Saxon; spinnen,
Dutch.]

1. To draw out into threads.
The women spun goats' hair.
Exodus.

2. To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

You would be another Penelope; yet all the yarn
she spun, in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.
Shakspeare.

The Fates but only spin the coarser clue;
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Dryden.

3. To protract; to draw out.

By one delay after another, they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em.
L'Estrange.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last.
Addison.

4. To form by degrees; to draw out tedi- ously.

I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes.
Digby.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing he said against entangling property, spinning out causes, and squeezing clients.
Collier.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spun out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size.
Locke.

The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord, Fanny spins a thousand such a day.
Pope.

5. To put into a turning motion, as a boy's top.

To SPIN, spîn. v. n.

1. To exercise the art of spinning, or drawing threads.

We can fling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin.
More.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.
Prior.

For this Alcides leare'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin.
Prior.

2. [spingare, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The hood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters.
Drayton.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun;
He from the east his flaming road begin,
Or she from west her silent course advance
With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n
And hears thee soft with the smooth air along,
Solicit not thy thoughts.
Milton.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to hore;
Urg'd on all hands, it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out.
Pope.

SPINACH, } *spîn'ndje.*⁹⁰ { n. s. [spina- SPINAGE, } chia, Latin.] A plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants, which are harren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which,
in some sorts, have thorns adhering to them.
Miller.

Spinage is an excellent herb, crude or hoiled.
Mortimer.

SPINAL, *spî'nâl.*⁹⁸ adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a backbone, are somewhat analogous thereto.
Brown.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their hulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts.
Arbuthnot.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruis'd.
Philips.

SPINDLE, *spî'n'dl.*¹⁰⁶ n. s. [ɾpîndl, ɾpîn-del, Saxon.]

1. The pin by which the thread is form- ed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles.
Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital sheers,
And turn the adamant spindle round,
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.
Milton.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons.
Jasper Maine.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And, when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Resum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew,
Forgot the sceptre she so well had sway'd,
And, with that mildness she had rul'd, obey'd.
Stepney.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom?
A. Philips.

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break.
Mortimer.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.

Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next choir.
Dryden.

The marriage of one of our heireses with an eminent courtier, gave us spindle shanks, and cramps.
Taller.

To SPINDLE, spî'n'dl. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into a long small stalk.

Another ill accident in drought is the spindling
of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk.
Bacon.

When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each root, should be nipped off.
Mortimer.

SPINDLESHA'NKED, spî'n'dl-shântk. adj.
[spindle and shank.] Having small legs.

Her lawyer is a little ravelled, spindleshanked
gentleman.
Addison.

mus, Latin.] A plant; prickwood.

SPINE, spîne. n. s. [spina, Lat.] The backbone.

The rapier entered his right side, reaching within a finger's breadth of the spine.
Wiseman.

There are who think the marrow of a man,
Which in the spine, while he was living, ran;
When dead, the pith corrupted will become
A snake, and hiss within the hollow tomb.
Dryden.

SPINEL, spî'nêl. n. s. A sort of mineral.

Spinel ruby is of a bright rosy red; it is softer than the rock or balass ruby.
Woodward.

SPINE'T, spî-nêt'. n. s. [espinette, Fr.]

A small harpsichord; an instrument with keys.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may his fortune get.
Swift.

and fero, Latin.] Bearing thorns.

SPINK, spînk. n. s. A finch; a bird.

Want' sharpens poesy, and grief adorns;
The spink chaunts sweetest in a hedge of thorns.
Hart.

SPIN'NER, *spî'nûr.*⁹⁸ n. s. [from spin.]

1. One skilled in spinning.
A practised spinner shall spin a pound of wool worth two shillings for sixpence.
Graunt

2. A garden spider, with long jointed legs.

Weaving spiders come not here:

Hence, you long-legged spinners hence! Shaksp.

SPI'NNING Wheel, spín'ning-hwéél. n. s. [from spin.] The wheel by which, since the disuse of the rock, the thread is drawn.

My spinning wheel and rakeLet Susan keep for her dear sister's sake. Gay.

SPI'NNY, spín'é. adj. I suppose, small, slender. A barbarous word.

They plow it early in the year, and then there will come some spiny grass that will keep it from scalding. Mortimer.

SPI'NOSITY, spi-nós'sé-tè. n. s. [spinosus, Latin.] Crabbedness; thorny or briary perplexity.

Philosophy consisted of nought but dry spinosities, lean notions, and endless altercations about things of nothing. Glanville.

SPI'NOUS, spín'ús.³¹⁴ adj. [spinosus, Lat.] Thorny; full of thorns.

SPI'NSTER, spín'stúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from spin.]

1. A woman that spins.

The spinsters and the knitters in the sun, And the free maids that weave their thread with lones,Do use to chaunt it. Shaksp.

One Michael Cassio,

That never set a squadron in the field,

Nor the division of a battle knows

More than a spinster.Shaksp.

2. [In law.] The general term for a girl or maiden woman.

If a gentlewoman be termed spinster, she may abate the writ. *Lord Coke.*I desire that a yearly annuity of twenty pounds shall be paid to Rebecca Dingley, of the city of Dublin, spinster, during her life. Swift.

SPIRE, spíre. n. s. [spira, Lat. spira, Ital. spira, Swedish.]

1. A curve line; any thing wreathed or contorted, every wreath being in a different plane; a curl; a twist; a wreath
His head

Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes;
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect
Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass Floated redundant. Milton.

A dragon's fiery form belied the god,
Sublime on radiant spires he rode. Dryden.

Air seems to consist of spires contorted into small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass; it is light, the solid substance of the spires being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up. Cheyne.

2. Any thing growing up taper; a round pyramid, so called, perhaps, because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles would be a spire; a steeple.

With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd*Milton.*He cannot make one spire of grass more or less than he hath made.These pointed spires that wound the ambient sky, Inglorious change! shall in destruction lie. Prior.

3. The top or uppermost point.

'Twere no less than a traducement to silence, that

Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Shaksp.

TO SPIRE, spíre. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot up pyramically.

It is not so apt to spire up as the other sorts, being more inclined to branch into arms. Mortimer.

2. [spiro, Lat.] To breathe. Not in use. Spenser.

SPI'RIT, spír'ít.^{108 109 110} n. s. [spiritus, Latin.]

.. Breath; wind.

All purges have in them a raw spirit, or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach. *Bacon.*All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and braided in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow. *Bacon.*The balmy spirit of the western breeze. Anon.

2. [esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance; an intellectual being.

Spirit is a substance, wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, do subsist. *Locke.*She is a spirit; yet not like air or wind, Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain;

Nor like those spirits which alchemists do find, When they in ev'ry thing seek gold in vain:

For she all natures under heav'n doth pass, Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see;

Or like himself, whose image once she was, Though now, alas! she scarce his shadow be:

For of all forms she holds the first degree, That are to gross material bodies knit;

Yet she herself is bodyless and free, And though confin'd is almost infinite. *Davies.*I shall depend upon your constant friendship; like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us. *Pope.*If we exclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit.*Watts.*You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and clothing; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. Law.

3. The soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. *Bible.*Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul, Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will In the vile prison of afflicted breath. *Shaksp.*Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your clothing: sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die and wear away. Law.

4. An apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. *Luke.*Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass; the former appearing like a spirit in the air. *Bacon.*Whilst young, preserve this tender mind from all impressions of spirits and goblins in the dark. Locke.

5. Temper; habitual disposition of mind.

He sits

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise
Quite out their native language. *Milton.*That peculiar law of christianity, which forbids revenge, no man can think it grievous, who considers the restless torment of a malicious and revengeful spirit. *Tillotson.*Nor once disturb their heav'nly spirits
With Scapin's cheats, or Caesar's merits. *Prior.*Let them consider how far they are from that spirit which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves. *Law.*He is the devout man, who lives no longer on his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God. Law.

6. Ardour; courage; elevation; vehemence of mind.

'Tis well blown, lads;

This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes. Shaksp.

Farewel the big war,

The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife. *Shaksp.*The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.

7. Genius; vigour of mind.

density, reflect all the light incident upon them, and so be as opaque and splendent as it is possible for any body to be. Newton.

SPLENDID, splèn'did. adj. [splendide,
Fr. splendidus, Lat.] Shiny; magnificent;
sumptuous; pompous.

Unacceptable, though in heav'n, our state
Of splendid vassalage. Milton.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonnade:
Fast by his side Pisistratus lay - pread,
In age his equal, on a splendid bed. Pope.

SPLENDIDLY, splèn'did-lè. adv. [from splendid.] Magnificently; sumptuously;
pompously.

Their condition, though it look splendidly, yet when you handle it on all sides, it will prick your fingers. Taylor.

You will not admit you live splendidly, yet it cannot be denied but that you live neatly and elegantly. More.

How he lives and eats,
How largely gives, how splendidly he treats. Dryd.

He, of the royal store
Splendidly frugal, sits whole nights devoid
Of sweet repose. Philips.

SPLENDOUR, splèn'dùr.³¹⁴ n. s. [splendeur,
French; splendor, Lat.]

1. Lustre; power of shining.

Splendour hath a degree of whiteness, especially if there be a little repercussion; for a looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon.

The dignity of gold above silver is not much; the splendour is alike, and more pleasing to some eyes, as in cloth of silver. Bacon.

The first symptoms are a chillness, a certain splen-dour or shining in the eyes, with a little moisture.
Arbuthnot.

2. Magnificence; pomp.

Romulus, being to give laws to his new Romans, found no better way to procure an esteem and reverence to them, than by first procuring it to himself by splendour of habit and retinue. South.

'Tis use alone that sanctifies expence,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense.
Pope.

SPLENETICK, splèn'é-tik.⁵¹⁰ adj. [splenetique, Fr.] Troubled with the spleen;
fretful; peevish.

Horace purged himself from these splenetick reflections in odes and epodes, before he undertook his satires. Dryden.

This daughter silently lowers, t' other steals a kind look at you, a third is exactly well behaved, and a fourth a splenetick. Tatler.

You humour me when I am sick;
Why not when I am splenetic? Pope.

SPLE'NICK, splén'ík.⁵⁰⁸ adj. [splenique, French; splen, Latin.] Belonging to the spleen.

Suppose the spleen obstructed in its lower parts and splenick branch, a potent heat causeth the organism to boil. Harvey.

The splenick vein hath divers cells opening into it near its extremities in human bodies; but in quadrupeds the cells open into the trunks of the splenick veins. Ray.

SPLE'NISH, splén'ish. adj. [from spleen.] Fretful; peevish.

Yourselves you must engage
Somewhat to cool your splénish rage,
Your grievous thirst; and to assuage
That first, you drink this liquor. Drayton.

SPLE'NITIVE, splén'è-tiv.⁵¹² adj. [from spleen.] Hot; fiery; passionate. Not in use.

Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splénitive and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous. Shakspeare.

SPLÉNT, splént. n. s. [or perhaps splint; spinella, Italian.]

Splénts is a callous hard substance, or an insensible swelling, which breeds on or adheres to the shank-bone of a horse, and, when it grows big, spoils the shape of the leg. When there is but one, it is called a single splént; but when there is another opposite to it, on the outside of the shank-bone, it is called a pegged or pinned splént. Farrier's Dict.

To SPLICE, splise. v. a. [splissen, Dutch; plico, Latin.] To join the two ends of a rope without a knot.

SPLINT, splint. n. s. [splinter, Dutch.]

1. A fragment of wood in general.
2. A thin piece of wood, or other matter, used by chirurgeons to hold the bone newly set in its place.

The ancients, after the seventh day, used splints, which not only kept the members steady, but straight; and of these some are made of tin, others of scabbard and wood, sowed up in linen cloths. Wisemen.

To SPLINT, splint. } v. a. [from the
To SPLINTER, splint'úr. } noun.]

1. To secure by splints.
This broken joint intreat her to splinter, and this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before. Shakspeare.

2. To shiver; to break into fragments.

SPLINTER, splint'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [splinter, Dutch.]

1. A fragment of any thing broken with violence.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, one of the splinters of Montgomery's staff going in at his bever. Bacon.

Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a ball,
And now their odours arm'd against them fly;
Some preciously by shatter'd porcelain fall,
And some by aromattick splinters die. Dryden.

2. A thin piece of wood.
A plain Indian fan used by the meaner sort, made of the small stringy parts of roots, spread out in a round flat form, and so bound together with a splinter hoop, and strengthened with small bars on both sides. Grew.

To SPLINTER, splint'úr. v. n. [from the noun.] To be broken into fragments; to be shivered.

To SPLIT, split. v. a. pret. and part. pass. split. [spletten, splitten, Dutch.]

1. To cleave; to riv; to divide longitudinally in two.

Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou split'st thine own. Shakspeare.

That self hand
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it, Splitted the heart. Shakspeare.

Wert thou served up two in one dish, the rather
To split thy sire into a double father? Cleaveland.
Cold winter split the rocks in twain. Dryden.

A skull so hard, that it is almost as easy to split
a helmet of iron as to make a fracture in it. Ray.
This effort is in some earthquakes so vehement, that it splits and tears the earth, making cracks or chasms in it some miles. Woodward.

2. To divide; to part.

Their logick has appeared the mere art of wrangling, and their metaphysics the skill of splitting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference. Watts.

One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, dilated, and split, and spread into many diverging rays. Newton.

He instances Luther's sensuality and disobedience, two crimes which he has dealt with; and, to make the more solemn shew, he split 'em into twenty.
Atterbury.

Oh! would it please the gods to split
Thy beauty, size, and years, and wit,
No age could furnish out a pair
Of nymphs so graceful, wise, and fair;
With half the lustre of your eyes,
With half your wit, your years, and size. Swift.

3. To dash and break on a rock.

God's desertion, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbour, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably split.
Decay of Piety.

Those who live by shores with joy behold
Some wealthy vessel split or stranded nigh;
And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd
gold,
And seek the tempests which the others fly. Dryd.

4. To divide; to break into discord.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.
South.

To SPLIT, split. v. n.

1. To burst in sunder; to crack; to suffer disruption.

A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble split asunder by congealed water. Boyle.

What is 't to me,
Who never sail on her unfaithful sea,
If storms arise and clouds grow black,
If the mast split, and threaten wrack? Dryden.

The road that to the lungs this store transmits,
Into unnumber'd narrow channels splits. Blackmore.

2. To burst with laughter.

Each had a gravity would make you split,
And shook his head at M—y as a wit. Pope.

3. To be broken against rocks.

After our ship did split,
When you, and the poor number sav'd with you
Hung on our driving boat. Shakspeare.

These are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the politician, the alchemist, and projector are cast away. Spectator.

The seamen spied a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Swift.

SPLITTER, split'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from split.]
One who splits.

How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
Those splitters of parsons in sunder should burst!
Swift.

SPLUTTER, splút'úr. n. s. Bustle; tumult.
A low word.

To SPOIL, spóil.²⁰⁹ v. a. [spolio, Latin;
spolier, French.]

1. To seize by robbery; to take away by force.

Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven an enduring substance. Hebrews.

This mount,
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift. Milton.
2. To plunder; to strip of goods: with of before the thing taken.

Yielding themselves upon the Turks' faith, for the safeguard of their liberty and goods, they were most injuriously spoiled of all that they had. Knolles.

Thou shalt not gain what I deuy'd to yield,
Nor reap the harvest, though thou spoil'st the field.
Prior.

My sons their old unhappy sire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

3. To corrupt; to mar; to make useless.

[This is properly spoil; pillan, Sax.]
Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit. Colossians.

Spiritual pride spoils many graces. Taylor.
Women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety. Lac.

To SPOIL, spóil. v. n.

1. To practise robbery or plunder.

England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil. Spenser.

They which hate us spoil for themselves. Psalms.

2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.

He that gathered a hundred bushels of acorns, or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others. Locke.

SPOIL, spóil. n. s. [spolium, Lat.]

1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder; pillage; booty.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. Shakspeare.

2. That which is gained by strength or effort.

But grant our hero's hopes long toil
And comprehensive genius crown,
Each science and each art his spoil,
Yet what reward, or what renown? Bentley.

3. That which is taken from another.

Gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
These halmy spoils. Milton.

4. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.

The man that hath not musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils. Shakspeare.

Too late, alas! we find
The softness of thy sword, continued through thy soil,
To be the only cause of unrecover'd spoil. Drayton.

Go and speed!
Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton.

5. Corruption; cause of corruption.

Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil
of me. Shakspeare.

6. The slough; the cast-off skin of a serpent.

Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoil, live till they be old. Bacon.

SPOILER, spóil'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from spoil.]

1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Such ruin of her manners Rome
Doth suffer now, as she 's become Both her own spoiler and own prey. Ben Jonson.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places.
South.

Came you then here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,

To waste, to plunder, out of mere compassion?

Is it humanity that prompts you on?
Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world!

A. Philips.

2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.

SPO'ILFUL, spòil'fùl. adj. [spoil and full.]

Wasteful; rapacious.

Having oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful Picts, and swarming Easterlings,
Long time in peace his realm established.

Fairy Queen.

SPOKE, spòke. n. s. [spaca, Sax. speiche, German.] The bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.

All you gods,

In general synod take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies of her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

Shakespeare.

No heir e'er drove so fine a coach;
The spokes, we are by Ovid told,
Were silver, and the axle gold.

Swift.

SPOKE, spòke. The preterit of speak.

They spoke best in the glory of their conquest.

Sprat.

SPO'KEN, spò'k'n.¹⁰³ The participle passive of speak.

Dict.

SPO'LIATION, spò-lè-à'shùn. n. s. [spolia- tion, Fr. spoliatio, Lat.] The act of robbery or privation.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure et facto, and sometimes de facto, and not de jure; as when a man suffers a spoliation by his own act.

Ayliffe.

SPO'NDEE, spòn'dè. n. s. [spondée, Fr.
spondæus, Lat.] A foot of two long syllables.

We see in the choice of the words the weight of the stone and the striving to heave it up the mountain: Homer clogs the verse with spondees, and leaves the vowels open.

Broome.

SPO'NDYLE, spòn'dil. n. s. [σπονδυλῆς;
spondile, Fr. spondylus, Lat.] A vertebre; a joint of the spine.

It hath for the spine or back-bone a cartilaginous substance, without any spondyles, proccesses, or pro-tuberances.

Brown.

SPONGE, spúnje.¹⁶⁵ n. s. [spongia, Lat.]

A soft porous substance, supposed by some the nidus of animals. It is remarkable for sucking up water. It is too often written spunge. See SPUNGE.

Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks, being as a large but tough moss.

Bacon.

They opened and washed part of their sponges.

Sandys.

Great officers are like sponges: they suck till they are full, and when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood comes away.

L'Estrange.

To SPONGE, spúnje. v. a. [from the noun.]

To blot; to wipe away as with a sponge.

Except between the words of translation and the mind of scripture itself there be contradiction, very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out.

Hooker.

To SPONGE, spúnje. v. n. To suck in as a sponge; to gain by mean arts.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten;
whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smell-feast, that sponges upon other people's trenchers.

L'Estrange.

Here went the dean, when he's to seek,
To sponge a breakfast once a week.

Swift.

SPO'NGER, spún'júr.⁸⁸ n. s. [from sponge.]

One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-flies and spongers.

L'Estrange.

SPO'NGINESS, spún'jè-nés. n. s. [from spongy.] Softness, and fulness of cavities, like a sponge.

The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain: a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess.

Harvey.

SPO'NGIOUS, spún'jè-ús.³¹⁴ adj. [spongieux, French; from sponge.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongieous, and contain an oleaginous substance in little vesicles, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres.

Cheyne.

SPO'NGY, spún'jè. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.

The lungs are the most spongy part of the body,
and therefore ablest to contract and dilate itself.

Bacon.

A spongy excrescence groweth upon the roots of the laser-tree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called agarick.

Bacon.

The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily contrive into can-noes.

More.

Into earth's spongy veins the ocean sinks,
Those rivers to replenish which he drinks.

Denham.

Return, unhappy swain!

The spongy clouds are fill'd with gath'ring rain.

Dryden.

Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably those of a wild bird, which flies much, and long together.

Grew.

2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.

When their drench'd natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? What not upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt?

Shakespeare.

SPONK, spúnk.¹⁶⁵ n. s. [a word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire:
as, any sponks will ye buy?] Touch-

for another.

SPO'NSOR, spòn'súr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [Lat.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are called sponsors or sureties for their education in the true Christian faith.

Ayliffe.

The sponsor ought to be of the same station with the person to whom he becomes surety.

Broome.

The rash hermit, who with impious pray'r
Had been the sponsor of another's care.

Harte.

SPONTANE'ITY, spòn-tà-né'-è-tè. n. s. [spon- tancitas, school Latin; spontanéité, Fr.

from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; willingness; accord unimpelled.

Necessity and spontanéité may sometimes meet together, so may spontanéité and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never.

Bramhall.

Strict necessity they simple call;
It so binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontanéité, nor choice, are done.

Dryden.

SPONTA'NEOUS, spòn-tà-né-ús. adj.

[spontanée, Fr. from sponte, Latin.] Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many analog motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous:
I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical.

Hale.

They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within them spirit mov'd
Attendant on their lord.

Milton.

While John for nine-pins does declare
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove.

Prior.

Begin with sense, of ev'ry art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow.

Pope.

SPONTA'NEOUSLY, spòn-tà-né-ús-lè. adv.

[from spontaneous.] Voluntarily; of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it.

Bentley.

Why turns spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone.

Arbutnot.

SPONTA'NEOUSNESS, spòn-tà-né-ús-nés.³¹⁴

n. s. [from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; freedom of will; accord unforced.

The sagacities and instincts of brutes, the sponta- neousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable, without supposing some active de-terminate power connexed to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter.

Hale.

SPOOL, spòol.³⁰⁶ n. s. [spuhl, German;

spohl, Dutch.] A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; a quill.

To SPOOM, spòòm.³⁰⁶ v. n. [probably from spume, or foam, as a ship driven with violence spumes, or raises a foam.] To go on swiftly. A sea term.

When virtue spooms before a prosperous gale,
My heaving wishes help to fill the sail.

Dryden.

SPOON, spòon.³⁰⁶ n. s. [shaen, Dutch; spone, Danish; spoonn, Islandick.] A concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.

Wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.

Shakespeare.

This is a devil, and no monster; I will leave him;
I have no long spoon.

Shakespeare.

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dinc exact at noon.

Pope.

To SPOON, spòon. v. n. In sea language, is when a ship, being under sail in a storm, cannot bear it, but is obliged to put right before the wind.

Bailey.

SPO'NBILL, spòn'bíl. n. s. [spoon and bill; platea, Latin.] A bird.

The shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel, but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat. Græc.

Ducks and geese have such long broad bills to quaffer in water and mud; to which we may reckon the bill of the spoonbill. Derham.

SPOONFUL, spōōn'fūl. n. s. [spoon and full.]

1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon. A medical spoonful is half an ounce.

Prescribe him, before he do use the receipt, that he take such a pill, or a spoonful of liquor. Bacon.

2. Any small quantity of liquid. Surely the choice and measure of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls. Arbutnot.

SPOONMEAT, spōōn'méte. n. s. [spoon and meat.] Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.

We prescribed a slender diet, allowing only spoonmeats. Wiseman.

Wretched
Are mortals born to sleep their lives away!
Go back to what thy infancy began,
Eat pap and spoonmeat; for thy gawags cry,
Be sullen, and refuse the lullaby. Dryden.

Diet most upon spoonmeats, as veal or cock broths. Harvey.

SPOONWORT, spōōn'wūrt. n. s. Scurvy-grass.

Spoonwort was there, scorbutics to supply;
And centaury, to clear the jaundic'd eye. Harte.

SPORA'DICAL, spō-rád'è-kál. adj. [σποραδικός; sporadique, French.]

A sporadical disease is an endemial disease, what in a particular season affects but few people. Arbutnot.

SPORT, spōrt. n. s. [stott, a make-game, Islandick.]

1. Play; diversion; game; frolick and tumultuous merriment.

Her sports were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight. Sidney.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare.

When their hearts were merry, they said, call for Samson, that he may make us sport; and they called for him, and he made them sport. Judges.

As a mad-man who casteth firebrands, arrows, and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, am not I in sport? Proverbs.

The discourse of fools is irksome, and their sport is in the wantonness of sin. Ecclesiasticus.

2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest. Shakespeare.

They had his messengers in derision, and made a sport of his prophets. 1 Esdras.

To make sport with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous, by turning that holy book into raillery, is a direct affront to God. Tillotson.

3. That with which one plays.

Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and play
Of wrecking whirlwinds. Milton.

Commit not thy prophetick mind
To flitting leaves, the sport of every wind,
Lest they disperse in air. Dryden.

Some grave their wrongs on marble; he, more just,

Stoop'd down serene, and wrote them on the dust,
Tro'd under foot, the sport of every wind,
Swept from the earth, and blotted from his mind;
There scier'd in the grave he baded them lie.

And griev'd they could not 'scape th' Almighty's eye. Dr. Maden on Bp. Boulter.

4. Play; idle gingle.

An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

5. Diversion of the field, as of fowling, hunting, fishing.

Now for our mountain sport, up to yon hill,
Your legs are young. Shakespeare.

The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park, for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton Court. Clarendon.

TO SPORT, spōrt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divert; to make merry. It is used only with the reciprocal pronoun.

The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sported themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers, as the argument of their victory. Sidney.

Away with him, and let her sport herself
With that she's big with. Shakespeare.

Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isaiah.

What pretty stories these are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal! Atterbury.

Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves, in their own deceivings. Watts.

2. To represent by any kind of play.

Now sporting on thy lyre the love of youth,
Now virtuous age and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sappho's wanton art
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part. Dryden.

TO SPORT, spōrt. v. n.

1. To play; to frolick; to game; to wanton.

They, sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold. Milton.

Larissa, as she sported at this play, was drowned in the river Peneus. Broome.

2. To trifle.

If any man turn religion into raillery, by bold jests, he renders himself ridiculous, because he sports with his own life. Tillotson.

SPORTFUL, spōrt'fūl. adj. [sport and full.]

1. Merry; frolick; wanton; acting in jest.

How with a sportful malice it was followed,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge. Shakespeare.

Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four-footed kins. Milton.

2. Ludicrous; done in jest.

His highness, even in such a slight and sportful damage, had a noble sense of just dealing. Wolton.

Behold your own Ascanius, while he said,
He drew his glittering helmet from his head,
In which the youth to sportful arms he led. Dryden.

They are no sportful productions of the soil, but did once belong to real and living fishes; seeing each of them doth exactly resemble some other shell on the sea-shore. Bentley.

A catalogue of this may be had in Albcricus Gentilis; which, because it is too sportful, I forbear to mention. Baker.

SPORTFULLY, spōrt'fūl-è. adv. [from sportful.] Wantonly; merrily.

SPORTFULNESS, spōrt'fūl-nēs. n. s. [from sportful.] Wantonness; play; merriment; frolick.

The otter got out of the river, and inweeded himself so, as the ladies lost the further marking of his sportfulness. Sidney.

SPORTIVE, spōrt'iv. adj. [from sport.]

Gay; merry; frolick; wanton; playful; ludicrous.

I am not in a sportive humour now;
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money? Shakespeare.

Is it I

That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? Shakespeare.

While thus the constant pair alternate said,
Joyful above them and around them play'd
Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd, Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd. Prior.

We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers; nor make the gay pensive and grave, nor the melancholy sportive, without spoiling them. Locke.

No wonder savages or subjects slain,
Were equal crimes in a despotick reign;
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But subjects starv'd while savages were fed. Pope.

SPORTIVENESS, spōrt'iv-nēs. n. s. [from sportive.] Gayety; play; wantonness.

Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have? Walton.

SPORTSMAN, spōrts'mán. n. s. [sport and man.] One who pursues the recreations of the field.

Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron, as the Christians have their St. Hubert: he speaks of the constellation which makes a good sportsman. Addison.

SPORTULE, spōrt'shūle. ⁴⁶¹ n. s. [sportule, French; sportula, Latin.] An alms; a dole.

The bishops, who consecrated the ground, had a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.

SPOT, spōt. n. s. [spette, Danish; spotte, Flemish.]

1. A blot; a mark made by discoloration.

This three years day, these eyes, though clear
To outward view of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of sight, their seeing have forgot. Milton.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with advantage; but if he any way degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

2. A tint; a disgrace; a reproach; a fault.

Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot;
'Tis true, but something in her was forgot. Pope.

3. I know not well the meaning of spot in this place, unless it be a scandalous woman, a disgrace to her sex.

Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to th' shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex. Shakespeare.

4. A small extent of place.

That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode; those lofty shades, his bow'r. Milton.

He who, with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it. Locke.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours. Addison.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. Guardian.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only grew one before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians. Sieft.

5. Any particular place.

I would be busy in the world, and learn;
Not, like a coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fixt to one spot, and rot just as I grow. Otway.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So she my prey becomes ev'n here. Dryden.

Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died. Granville.

The Dutch landscapes are, I think, always a representation of an individual spot, and each in its kind a very faithful, but very confined, portrait. Reynolds.

6. Upon the Spot. Immediately; without changing place. [sur le champ.]

The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot; and yet he was resolved he should not escape. L'Estrange

It was determined upon the spot, according as the oratory on either side prevailed. Swift.

To SPOT, spôt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark with discolorations; to maculate.

They are polluted off'rings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakspeare.

Have you not seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?
Shakspeare.

But serpents now more amity maintain;
From spotted skins the leopard does refrain;
No weaker lion 's by a stronger slain. Tate.

2. To patch by way of ornament.

I counted the patches on both sides, and found the tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the whig; but next morning the whole puppet-show was filled with faces spotted after the whiggish manner. Spectator.

3. To corrupt; to disgrace; to taint.

This vow receive, this vow of God maintain,
My virgin life no spotted thoughts shall stain. Sidney.

The people of Armenia have retained the christian faith from the time of the apostles; but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities. Abbot.

SPOTLESS, spôt'lés. adj. [from spot.]

1. Free from spots.

2. Free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.

So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth. Shakspeare.

I dare my life lay down, that the queen is spotless
In th' eyes of Heaven. Shakspeare.

You grac'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife. Waller.

We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking, how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine. Atterbury.

Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd. Pope.

SPOTTER, spôt'túr. n. s. [from spot.]

One that spots; one that maculates.

SPOTTY, spôt'té. adj. [from spot.] Full of spots; maculated.

The moon, whose orb
Through optick glass the Tuscan-artist views
In Valombrosa to descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains, on her spotty globe. Milton.

SPOUSAL, spòu'zál. adj. [from spouse.]

Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.

There shall we consummate our spousal rites. Shakspeare.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no more joy's maiden-head,
Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Crashaw.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces vitiated with gold. Milton.

Sleep'st thou, careless of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornaments neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise. Pope.

SPOUSAL, spòu'zál. n. s. [esousailles,

French; sfionsalia, Latin.] Marriage; nuptials.

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league. Shakspeare.

The amorous bird of night

Sung spousal, and bid haste the ev'ning star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

The spousals of Hippolita the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen! Dryden.

Æthereal musick did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air:

A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.

SPOUSE, spòuze. n. s. [sfionsa, sfionsus, Latin; esfouse, French.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Beside, so qualified as may besem
The spouse of any noble gentleman. Shakspeare.

At once, farewell, O faithful spouse they said;
At once th' encroaching rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden.

SPOUSED, spòuz'd. adj. [from the noun.] Wedded; espoused; joined together as in matrimony.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she spous'd about him twines
Her marriageable arms. Milton.

SPOUSELESS, spòuz'lés. adj. [from spouse.] Wanting a husband or wife.

To tempt the spouseless queen with am'rous wiles,
Resort the nobles from the neighb'ring isles. Pope.

SPOUT, spòut. n. s. [from spuyt, Dut.]

1. A pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which any thing is poured.

She gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts. Shakspeare.

In whales that breathe, lest the water should get unto the lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a fistula or spout at the head. Brown.

If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this snout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben Jonson.

As waters did in storms, now pitch runs out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout. Donne.

In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.

Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores, that it stay little. Bacon.

In this single cathedral, the very spouts are loaded with ornaments Addison.

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide. Pope.

Water falling in a body; a cataract,
such as is seen in the hot climates, when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Constring'd in mass by the almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shakspeare.

The force of these motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts or cascades of water. Burnet.

To SPOUT, spòut. v. a. [from the noun.]

To pour with violence, or in a collected body, as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town. Shakspeare.

I intend two fountains, the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water, the other a fair receipt of water. Bacon.

She swims in blood, and blood does spouting
throw

To heav'n, that heav'n men's cruelties might know. Waller.

Next on his belly floats the mighty whale;
He twists his back, and rears his threat'ning tail:
He spouts the tide. Creech.

To SPOUT, spòut. v. n. To issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by the murmuring music of certain waters, which spouted out of the side of the hills. Sidney.

No hands could force it thence, so fix't it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting blood. Dryden.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at the tops of them, upon the face of the ground. Woodward.

All the glittering hill
Is bright with spouting rills. Thomson.

SPRAG, sprâg. adj. Vigorous; sprightly.
A provincial word. Shakspeare.

A good sprag memory.

To SPRAIN, sprâne. v. a. [corrupted from strain.] To stretch the ligaments of a joint without dislocation of the bone.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unlunge, or ancle sprain. Gay.

SPRAIN, sprâne. n. s. [from the verb.] Extension of the ligaments without dislo-cation of the joint.

I was in pain, and thought it was with some sprain at tennis. Temple.

SPRAINTS, sprânts. n. s. The dung of an otter. Dict.

SPRANG, sprâng. The preterit of spring.
Mankind sprang from one common original;
whence this tradition would be universally diffused. Tillotson.

SPRAT, sprât. n. s. [sfrot, Dutch; sarda,
Lat.] A small sea fish.

So oft, in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings. Sidney.

All spraits do lay for porke and sowse,
For spraits and spurtings for their house. Tusser.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, barn, smelts.
Carew.

To SPRAWL, sprâwl. v. n. [spradle, Danish; sfartelen, Dutch.]

1. To struggle, as in the convulsions of death.

Hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul. Shakspeare.

Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gash and bloody wound. Hudibras.

2. To tumble or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged; but, upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Estrange.

Telamon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound
Dryden.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.

Did the stars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches?

Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There sprawl'd a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime.
Swift.

SPRAY, sprá.²²⁰ n. s. [of the same race with sprit and sprout.]

1. The extremity of a branch.
At sight whereof each bird that sits on spray,
And every heast that to his den was fled,
Come forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lift up their drooping head.
Hubberd's Tale.

Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays,
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days.
Shakspeare.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the consort of the song;
And hidden birds, with native lays,
The golden sleep prolong.
Dryden.

2. The foam of the sea, commonly written sfiry.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray.
Arbutnot.

Bacon.

SPREA'DER, spréd'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from spread.]

1. One that spreads.

By conforming ourselves, we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from papists, by our conformity with them in ceremonies.
Hooker.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.

If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news.
Swift.

SPRENT, sprént. part. [from sprene, to sprinkle; ppnenzan, ppnenan, Saxon; sfrenge, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears sprent.
Sidney.

SPRIG, spríg. n. s. [ysbrig, Welsh; so

Davies; but it is probably of the same race with spring.] A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some sprig to keep.
Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A sprig of foyls in fifty years;
While every bush his claim alleges,
As if it grew in common hedges.
Swift.

SPRIG Chrystal, sprig-kris'tál. n. s.

In perpendicular fissures, chrystal is found in form of a hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries sprig or rock chrystal.
Woodward.

SPRIGGY, sprig'gè.³⁸³ adj. [from sprig.]

Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT, sprite.³⁹³ n. s. [contraction of spirit; spiritus, Latin. It was anciently written sprete or spryte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spritely, spriteful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

i. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,
To hear the message of her spright.
Spenser.

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread
Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies
Flutt'ring about his ever dammed head,
Await whereto their service he applies
F. Queen.

While with heav'nly charity she spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke;
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty spright.
Dryden.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again.
Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights;
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto my bosom fly;
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die.
Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not.
Bacon.

To SPRIGHT, sprite. v. a. To haunt as a spright. A ludicrous use.

I am sprighted with a fool.
Shakspeare.

SPRIG'HTFUL, sprite'fùl. adj. [spright and full.] Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.—
Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman.
Shakspeare.

Stands sprightful as the light.
Cowley.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:
My heavy heart will leave its doleful heating
At sight of thee, and bound with sprightful joys.
Onuay.

SPRIG'HTFULLY, sprite'fùl-è. adv. [from sprightful.] Briskly; vigorously.

Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.
Shakspeare.

SPRIG'HTLESS, sprite'lès. adj. [from spright.] Dull; enervated; sluggish.

Are you grown
Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's sprightless cold?
Cowley.

SPRIG'HTLINESS, sprite'lè-nès. n. s. [from sprightful.] Liveliness; briskness; vigour;

gayety; vivacity.
The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion so heavy; but, in dreams, observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself.
Addison.

SPRIG'HTLY, sprite'lè. adj. [from spright.]

Gay; brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.
Produce the wine that makes us bold,
And sprightly wit and love inspires.
Dryden.

When now the sprightly trumpet from afar,
Had giv'n the signal of approaching war.
Dryden.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay:
Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day.
Prior.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen.
Pope.

To SPRING, spring. v. n. pret. sprung or sfrang, anciently sfrong; part. sprung.

[ppungzan, Saxon; sfringen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground, and grow by vegetative power.

All best secrets,
All you unpublisch'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; he aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress.
Shakspeare.

To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.
Shakspeare.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth Job.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprung up and increased.
Mark.

Tell me, in what happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields?
Pope.

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of providence.
Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which *sprung*eth of the same.
2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring.
Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies.
Shakspeare.

- Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope.
5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.
When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.
To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is springing up. Matthew.
Fly, fly, profane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and seowl upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.
Do not blast my springing hopes,
Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rowe.
6. To issue with effect or force.
Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!
Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be horn! Pope.
7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he springs of;
The noble house of Marcius. Shakespeare.
Our Lord sprung out of Judea. Hebrews.
All these
Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragon's teeth,
Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em. Jonson.
Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil;
Thus to their gods each then allied his name,
This sprung from Jove, and that from Titan came. Granville.
8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.
They found new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.
Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and descend by the same rules. Locke.
9. To grow; to thrive.
What makes all this hut Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring?
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden.
10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.
Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shaksp.
I sprung no more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakespeare.
He called for a light, and sprung in, and fell before Paul. Acts.
When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold
again;
Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.
Afraid to sleep,
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She sprung from bed. Dryden.
Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life; and, fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.
See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And, springing from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.
The mountain stag that springs
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
Nor has a master to restrain his course,
That mountain stag would Vanoe rather be
Than be a slave. Philips.
11. To fly with elastic power; to start.
A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stiek that springs. Mortimer.
12. To rise from a covert.

- My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damn'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.
Otway.
A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infancy in disorder. Addison.
13. To issue from a fountain.
Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Genesis.
Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows.
Roscommon.
14. To proceed as from a source.
'Tis true from force the noblest title springs,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings.
Dryden.
15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.
Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light Sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:
The pow'r behold! the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.
The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd;
The fleet swift tiling o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope.

To SPRING, spring. ¹⁰³ v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.
Thus I reclaim'd my huzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose;
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other fawknars use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.
That sprung the game you were to set,
Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.
A large cock pheasant he sprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Spectator.
Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character. I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.
See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he springs the prey. Gay.
2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.
The nurse, surpris'd with fright,
Starts up and leaves her bed, and springs a light. Dryden.
Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more:
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Dryden.
He that has such burning zeal, and springs such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.
3. To make by starting; applied to a ship.
People discharge themselves of hurdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung
a leak.
No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time:
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.
Whether she sprung a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryd.
4. To discharge; applied to a mine.
Our miners discovered several of the enemies' mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. Tatler.
I sprung a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.
The friends to the cause sprung a new project;
and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear, till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender. Swift.
6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.
Unheseeming skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.
7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground; so plants spring, thence spring the season; so water springs, thence spring a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastick body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING, spring. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season.
Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare.
The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.
Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson.
2. An elastick body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state.
This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wings. Wilkins.
The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the wider it throws the chape of the vice open. Mozon.
He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.
3. Elastick force.
Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest; unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring.
Newton.
The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.
In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring.
Arbutnot.
4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.
My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.
Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions, and the same springs that give them motion. Rymer.

Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move.

Pope.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The pris'n'er with a spring from prison broke; Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might, And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight.

Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose, And left the limbs still quivering on the ground!

Addison.

6. A leak; a start of plank.

Each petty hand

Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails; Where her springs are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em.

Ben Jonson.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy springs; my sea shall suck them dry, And swell so much the higher by their ebb.

Shakespeare.

Springs on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters.

Bacon.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know, And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;

And seeing the branch, conceives the root below; These things she views without the body's eyes.

Davies.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes, And bounding banks for winding rivers makes

Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates, And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews' fates.

Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter.

Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in springs, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground.

Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move,

The sacred spring whence right and honour streams; Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams.

Davies.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know; Though now I am, I was not always so: Then that from which I was must be before,

Dryden.

Whom, as my spring of being, I adore.

Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals.

Bentley.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable.

Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house.

1 Samuel.

10. Cause; original.

The reason of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper, arises from these three springs.

Blackmore.

The first springs of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little.

Swift.

SPRING, spring. } n. s. A youth.

SPRINGAL, spring'gál. } Obsolete.

Before the bull she pictur'd winged love, With his young brother sport, light fluttering Upon the waves, as each had been a dove; The one his bow and shafts, the other spring A burning tead about his head did move, As in their sire's new love both triumphing.

Spenser.

SPRINGE, spring'e. n. s. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastick body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Osrick, I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shaksp.

Let goats for food their loaded udders lend, But neither springses, nets, nor snares employ.

Dryden.

With hairy springses we the birds betray, Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey.

Pope.

SPRING'ER, spring'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from spring.] One who rouses game.

SPRINGHALT, spring'hált. n. s. [from spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it, That never saw them pace before, the spavin And springhalt reign'd among them.

Shakespeare.

SPRINGINESS, spring'jé-nés. n. s. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness.

Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction.

Bentley.

SPRINGLE, spring'gl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [from spring.] A springe; an elastick noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plash shoot serveth for springles to take them.

Carew.

To SPRINGLE, spring'gl. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

This is Timon's last, Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries, Washes it off, and springles in your faces

Your reeking villany.

Shakespeare.

SPRINGTIDE, spring'tide. n. s. [from spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high, Swells in every youthful vein; But each tide does less supply,

Till they quite shrink in again:

If a flow in age appear,

'Tis but rain, and runs not clear.

Dryden.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide.

Greiv.

SPRINGY, spring'jé, or spring'é.⁴⁰⁹ adj. [from springe.]

1 Elastick; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame, Such as it is, to fau the vital flame,

The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,

Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;

While the tur'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,

To push the lazy tide along the vein.

Blackmore.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramons, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power.

Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy.

Arbutnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality.

Bentley.

2. [from spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grass than corn.

Mortimer.

To SPRINKLE, sprink'kl.⁴⁰⁶ v. a. [sprinkelen, Dutch.]

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassel'd horn
Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, it began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray.

SPROUTS, sprouts. n. s. pl. [from sprout.]

Young coleworts.

SPRUCE, spruce. adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, French; but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout: Casaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning; it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

The tree

That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.

Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.

I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not the dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists. Boyle.

He put his band and beard in order,
The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.

He is so spruce, that he can never be genteel. Taller.

Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I. Pope.

SPRUNT, sprunt. n. s. Any thing that is short and will not easily bend.

SPUD, spud. n. s. A short knife; any short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt
Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt;

My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart. Swift.

SPULLERS of Yarn, spul'lärz. n. s. [perhaps properly spoolers.] Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. Dict.

SPUME, spume. n. s. [spuma, Latin.] Foam; froth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, op'ning to the ambient light. Milton.

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts diffused by the congealable mixture. Brown.

To SPUME, spume. v. n. [spumo, Latin.] To foam; to froth.

SPUMOUS, spum'ús. } adj. [spumeus, Lat.]
SPUMY, spum'é. } from the noun.]
Frothy; foamy.

The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat: the putrifying parts suffer a turgescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war;
And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryden.

The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbutnot.

SPUN, spun. The pret. and part. pass. of spin.

The nymph nor spun, nor dress'd with artful pride;
Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was tied. Addison.

SPUNGE, spünje. n. s. [spongia, Latin.] A sponge. See SPONGE.

When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, spunge, you shall be dry again. Shakspeare.

Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the spunge, compounded with the specific gravity of the spunge, and the resistance of the air, the spunge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Bentley.

To SPUNGE, spünje. v. n. [rather To sponge.] To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift.

SPUNGINGHOUSE, spün'jing-hóuse. n. s. [spunge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.

A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY, spün'jé. adj. [from spunge.]

1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spungy softness made,
Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.

2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shakspeare.

Whether the body politick be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur. Shakspeare.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Knolles.

Was I for this intitled Sir,
And girt with rusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

2. Incitement; instigation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh unto motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action, unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? Shakspeare.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proposed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cheyne.

SPY, spi. n. s. [yspion, Welsh; espion, Fr. spie, Dutch; speculator, Latin. It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed: thus the Arimaspians of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which among the nations of Caucasus still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Asiatick languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees.] One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others; one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon 's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies. Shakspeare.

Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to whcel
Three or four miles about. Shakspeare.

Ev'ry corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.

I come no spy,
With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
The secrets of your realm. Milton.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they subduc become their spies:
Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair. Waller.

Over my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes.
These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less. Dryden.

Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. Atterbury.

To SPY, spi. v. a. [See SPY.]

1. To discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment; to espy.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;
If it could speak as well as spy,
This were the worst that it could say,
That being well I fain would stay. Donne.

As tyger spied two gentle fawns. Milton.
A countryman spied a snake under a hedge, half frozen to death. L'Estrange.

My brother Guyomar, methinks, I spy;
Haste in his steps, and wonder in his eye. Dryden.

He alone
Dealt on licutenantry, and no practice had
In the brav squares of war. Shakspeare.
Our superfluous lacqueys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm

- About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe. Shakspeare.
7. A square number is when another, called its root, can be exactly found, which multiplied by itself produces the square. The following example is not accurate.
Advance thy golden mountains to the skies,
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise:
Add one round hundred; and, if that's not fair,
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square. Pope.
8. Quaternion; number four: though perhaps, in the following lines, square may mean only capacity.
I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys
Which the most precious square of sense possesses,
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear love. Shakspeare.
9. Level; equality.
Men should sort themselves with their equals;
for a rich man that converses upon the square with a poor man, shall certainly undo him. L'Estrange.
We live not on the square with such as these,
Such are our betters who can better please. Dryden.
10. Quartile; the astrological situation of planets, distant ninety degrees from each other.

Pope.

3. To break silence or secrecy for fear of pain.

If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him.

Dryden.

SQUEAK, skwéke. n. s. [from the verb.]

A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,

In panick horror of pursuing dogs:

With many a deadly grunt, and doleful squeak,

Poor swine! as if their pretty hearts would break.

Dryden.

To SQUEAL, skwéle.²²⁷ v. n. [sqwala, Swedish.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.

SQUEA'MISH, skwé'mish. adj. [for quawmish or qualmish, from qualm.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the princess Pamela.

Sidney.

Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish, That takes a basting for a blemish;

For what's more honourable than scars,

Or skin to tatters rent in wars?

Hudibras.

His muse is rustick, and perhaps too plain

The men of squeamish taste to entertain.

Southern.

It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious.

South.

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side.

He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either.

Locke.

SQUEA'MISHLY, skwé'mish-lè. adv. [from squeamish.] In a fastidious manner.

SQUEA'MISHNESS, skwé'mish-nès. n. s. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-paced politician must laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture.

South.

Upon their principles they may receive the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach.

Stillingfleet.

To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable.

Swift.

To SQUEEZE, skwééze.²⁴⁶ v. a. [CPIJAN, Saxon; ysgwasgu, Welsh.]

1. To press; to crush between two bodies.

It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing.

Wilkins.

The sinking of the earth would make a convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours.

Burnet.

He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground, And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd.

Dryden

None acted mournings forc'd to show,

Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow.

When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,

If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?

2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden.

L'Estrange.

3. To force between close bodies.

To SQUEEZE, skwééze. v. n.

1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold, filled with water and soldered up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside, in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold.

Newton.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold, In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,

Still run on poets, in a raging vein,

Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.

2. To force way through close bodies.

Many a public minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off.

L'Estrange.

SQUEEZE, skwééze. n. s. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle artist stands with wond'rous bag, That hears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort

Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd;

Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeeze

Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly

Melodious, and with spritely accents charm.

Philips.

SQUELCH, skwélsh. n. s. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.

He tore the earth which he had sav'd From squelch of knight, and storm'd and rav'd.

Hudibras.

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scampers, bawling like mad.

L'Estrange.

SQUIB, skwib. n. s. [schieben, German, to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wild-fire. Used in sport.

The armada at Calais, sir Walter Raleigh, was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon them.

Bacon.

The forest of the south compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes.

Howel.

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze; But time, and thunder, pay respect to hays.

Waller.

Furious he begins his march,

Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;

With squibs and crackers arm'd, to throw

Among the trembling crowd below.

Swift.

Criticks on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,

Proclaim the glory, and augment the state.

2. Any petty fellow. Not in use.

Asked for their pass by every squib,

That list at will them to revile or snib.

The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers.

Spenser.

Tutler.

SQUILL, skwil. n. s. [squilla, scilla, Latin; squille, French.]

1. A plant.

It hath a large acrid hulbous root, like an onion; the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the stary hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves.

Miller.

Seed or kernels of apples and pears, put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself.

Bacon.

'Twill down like oxymel of squills.

The self-same atoms

Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast;

And, nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste.

2. A fish.

3. An insect.

The squill insect is so called from some similitude to the squill fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: The head broad and squat.

Grew.

SQUINANCY, skwi'nán-sè. n. s. [squinance, squinancie, Fr. squinantia, Ital.] An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.

Used for squinancies and inflammations of the throat; it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.

Bacon.

In a squinancy there is danger of suffocation.

Wiseman.

SQUINT, skwint. adj. [squinte, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.

Where an equal poise of hope and fear Does arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope rather than fear,

And gladly banish squint suspicion.

To SQUINT, skwint. v. n. To look obliquely; to look not in a direct line of vision.

Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table, with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, to see the light, and so induce squinting.

Bacon.

Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it.

Pope.

To SQUINT, skwint. v. a.

1. To form the eye to oblique vision.

This is the foul Flibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the harelip.

Shakspeare.

2. To turn the eye obliquely.

Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary.

Bacon.

SQUINTEYED, skwint'ide. adj. [squint and eye.]

1. Having the sight directed oblique.

He was so squinteyed, that he seemed spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld.

Knolles.

2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.

This is such a false and squinteyed praise, Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,

Looks down upon my fears.

SQUINTIF'GO, skwin-tè-fè'gò. adj. Squinting. A cant word.

Denham.

The timbrel and the squintifego maid
Of Isis awe thee; lest the gods, for sin,
Should with a swelling dropsy stuff thy skin.

Dryden.

To SQUI'NY, skwln'né. v. n. To look asquint. A cant word.

I remember thine eyes well enough;
Dost thou squiny at me?

Shakspeare.

SQUIRE, skwire. n. s. [contraction of esquire; escuyer, French.] See ESQUIRE.

1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire.

The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires and gentlemen of blood.

Shakspeare.

2. An attendant on a noble warrior.

Old Butes' form he took, Anchises' squire,
Now left to rule Ascanius,
Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage.

Dryden.
Pope.

3. An attendant at court.

Return with her—I could as well be brought
To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg,
To keep base life a-foot.

Shakspeare.

SQUIRREL, skwér'ril.¹⁰⁹ n. s. [escurruil, Fr. sciurus, Lat.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.

One chance'd to find a nut,
In th' end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel,
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this fay, dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril.

Drayton.

To SQUIRT, skwúrt.¹⁰⁸ v. a. [of uncertain etymology.] To throw out in a quick stream.

Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along.

Arbuthnot.

To SQUIRT, skwúrt. v. n. To let fly; to prate. Low cant.

You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a princ minister.

L'Estrange.

SQUIRT, skwúrt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.

He with his squirt-fire could disperse
Whole troops.

Hudibras.

His weapons are, a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter.

Pope.

2. A small quick stream.

Water those with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water

Bacon.

SQUIRTER, skwúrt'úr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt

The squirters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble.

Arbuthnot.

To STAB, stáb. v. a. [staven, old Dut.]

1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.

Hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds.

Shakspeare.

Porcius, think thou seest thy dying brother
Stabb'd at his heart, and all besmear'd with blood,
Storming at thee!

Addison.

2. To wound mortally or mischievously.

What tears will then he shed!

Then, to complete her woes, will I espouse
Hermione: 'twill stab her to the heart!

A. Philips.

To STAB, stáb. v. n.

1. To give a wound with a pointed weapon.

None shall dare

With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat fight.

Dryden.

Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name; as in England, where it is called stabbing.

Locke.

2. To offer a stab.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at my frail life.

Shakspeare.

3. To give a mortal wound.

He speaks poinards, and every word stabs.

Shakspeare.

STAB, stáb. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A wound with a sharp-pointed weapon.

The elements

Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs
Kill the still closing waters.

Shakspeare.

Cleander,

Unworthy was thy fate, thou first of warriors,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab.

Rowe.

2. A dark injury; a sly mischief.

3. A stroke; a blow.

He had a scripture ready to repel them all; every pertinent text urg'd home being a direct stab to a temptation.

South.

Derham.

STABILITY, stá-bil'é-té. n. s. [stabilité, Fr. from stabilitas, Lat.]

1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.

By the same degrees that either of these happen, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened.

Temple.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground,
Break not the pillars.

Blackmore.

He began to try,

This and that hanging stone's stability.

Cotton.

2. Fixedness; not fluidity.

Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion.

Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STABLE, stá-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Lat.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.

If a man would be invariable,

He must be like a rock, or stone, or tree;

For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,

But had a fall more desperate than we.

Davies.

He perfect, stable; but imperfect, we,

Subject to change.

Dryden.

3. Strong; fixed in state or condition; durable.

This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what to-morrow might deprive us of.

Rogers.

STABLE, stá-bl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [stabulum, Lat.]

A house for beasts.

I will make Rabbah a stable for camels.

Ezra.

Slutish disorder fill'd his stable,

And sluttish plenty deck'd her table.

STA'BLEBOY, stá-bl-bòé. } n. s. [stable

STA'BLEMAN, stá-bl-mán.⁸⁸ } and boy, or man.] One who attends in the stable.

As soon as you alight at the inn, deliver your horses to the stableboy

Swift.

If the gentleman hath lain a night, get the stablemen and the scullion to stand in his way.

Swift.

I would with jockies from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine;

I would caress some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat.

Bramston.

STA'BLENESS, stá-bl-nés. n. s. [from stable.]

1. Power to stand.

2. Steadiness; constancy; stability.

The king-becoming graces,

As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, I have no relish of them.

Shakspeare.

STA'BLESTAND, stá-bl-stánd. n. s. [In law.]

Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convicted to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest: and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest, with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow; or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip.

Cowel.

I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife;
I'll go in couples with her.

Shakspeare.

To STA'Blish, stá-bl'ish. v. a. [establis, Fr. stabilis, Lat.] To establish; to fix; to settle.

Then she began a treaty to procure,
And establish terms betwixt both their requests.

Spenser.

Stop effusion of our christian blood,
And establish quietness on ev'ry side.

Shakspeare.

Comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good work.

2 Thessalonians.

Poor hereticks in love there be,
Which think to establish dangerous constancy;

But I have told them, since you will be true,
You shall be true to them who're false to you.

Donne.

His covenant sworn

To David, establish'd as the days of heav'n.

Milton.

STACK, sták. n. s. [stacca, Italian.]

1. A large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.

Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there.

Bacon.

While the marquis and his servant on foot were chasing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol.

Wotton.

While the cock
To the stack or the barn door
Stoutly struts his dame before.

Milton.

Stacks of moist corn grow hot by fermentation!

Newton.

An inundation, says the fable,
O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;

Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born.

Swift.

1. Any thing which serves for support to another.

2. A staff; a crutch. Obsolete.

He cometh on, his weak steps governing,
And aged limbs on cypress staddle stout,
And with an ivy twine his waist is girt about.

Spenser.

3. A tree suffered to grow for coarse and common uses, as posts or rails. Of this meaning I am doubtful.

Leave growing for staddles the likeliest and best,
Though seller and buyer dispatched the rest.

Tusser.

Coppice-wood, if you leave in them staddles too thick, will run to hushes and hriars, and have little clean underwood.

Bacon.

To STADLE, stâd' dl. v. a. [from the noun.]

To furnish with staddles.

First see it well fenc'd, ere hewers begin;
Then see it well staddled without and within.

STAFF, stâf. n. s. plural staves. [ɾɾæp, Sax. staff, Danish; staf, Dutch.]

1. A stick with which a man supports himself in walking.

It much would please him,

That of his fortunes you would make a staff
To lean upon.

Shakspeare.

Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chasements, that thy rod as well thy staff may comfort us.

King Charles.

Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle, should now throw away his staff out of fear of a dog?

Broome.

2. A prop; a support.

Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts.

Shakspeare.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Shakspeare.

If a subject be a son, then ought he to be a staff unto his father, wherewith not to strike hut to sustain him.

Holyday.

3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves.

Shakspeare.

He that hought the skin ran greater risque than
't'other that sold it, and had the worst end of the staff.

L'Estrange.

With forks and staves the felon they pursue.

Dryden.

4. Any long piece of wood.

He forthwith from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign.

Milton.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dextrously applied,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoop out the big round gelly from its orb.

Addison.

That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish.

Shakspeare.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head.

Milton.

Th' inhabitants of seas and skies shall change;
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range.

Dryden.

The stag

Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore.

Pope.

STAGE, stâdje. n. s. [estage, Fr.]

1. A floor raised to view, on which any show is exhibited; a raised floor of temporary use.

2. The theatre; the place of scenick entertainments.

And much good do't you then,
Brave plush and velvet men:
Can feed on ort; and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too.

Ben Jonson.

Those two Mytilene brethren, basely horn, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play.

Knolles.

I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts.

Dryden.

One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome.

Dryden.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage.

Pope.

3. Any place where any thing is publickly transacted or performed.

When we are horn, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools.

Shakspeare.

4. [statio, Latin.] A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission.

I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and heseech you to go before me as my guide.

Hammond.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber

Addison.

From thence compell'd by craft and age
She makes the head her latest stage.

Prior.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even.

Atterbury.

By opening a passage from Muscovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days.

Baker.

Men dropt so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive as dead.

Young.

5. A single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitudes in wars are many; but chiefly in the seats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct.

Bacon.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that distemper.

Blackmore.

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline.

Rogers.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion.

Sharp.

To STAGE, stâdje. v. a. [from the noun.]

To exhibit publickly. Out of use.

I love the people;

But do not like to stage me to their eyes:

Though it do well, I do not relish well

Their loud applause.

Shakspeare.

The quick comedians

Extemp'rally will stage us, and present

Our Alexandrian revels.

Shakspeare.

STAGECOACH, stâdje-kôtsh'. n. s. [stage and coach.] A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach.

Addison.

When late their miry sides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow,
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide.

Gay.

STA'GEPLAY, stâdje'plâ. n. s. [stage and play.] Theatrical entertainment.

This rough cast unheun poetry was instead of stageplays for one hundred and twenty years.

Dryden.

STA'GEPLAYER, stâdje'plâ-ûr. n. s. One who publickly represents actions on the stage.

Among slaves who exercised polite arts, none sold so dear as stageplayers or actors.

Arbuthnot.

STA'GER, stâ'jûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from stage.]

1. A player.

You, safe in your stage clothes,

Dare quit, upon your oaths,

The stagers and the stage wrights too.

Ben Jonson.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner; a person of cunning.

I've heard old cunning stagers

Say, fools for argument use wagers.

Hudibras.

One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot.

L'Estrange.

Some stagers of the wiser sort

Made all these idle wonderments their sport:

But he, who heard what ev'ry fool could say,
Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away.

Dryden.

One cries out, these stagers

Come in good time to make more work for wagers.

Dryden.

Be by a parson cheated!

Had you heen cunning stagers,

You might yourselves be treated

By captains and by majors.

Swift.

1. To reel; not to stand or walk steadily.
He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stagger; after which he fell down as dead. Boyle.
He struck with all his might
Full on the helmet of the unwary knight:
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow. Dryden.

Then revelling the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd. Tate.
The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory. Arbuthnot.

2. To faint; to begin to give way
The enemy staggers; if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt. Shakspeare.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith. Romans.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their light opinions like these Epicures;

For so their stagg'ring thoughts are comforted,
And other men's assent their doubt assures. Davies.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God. Hammond.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falseness shall want its triumph: I begin
To stagger; but I'll prop myself within. Dryden.

To STA'GGER, stág'gúr. v. a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person. Shakspeare.

2. To shock; to alarm; to make less steady or confident.

Bearing a state of mighty moment in 't. Shaksp.

Whoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle. Hovel.

When a prince fails in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance.

L'Estrange.

The shells being lodged with the belemnites, senenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were so too. Woodward.

STA'GGERS, stág'gúr. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of horse apoplexy.

His horse past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the staggers. Shakspeare.

2. Madness; wild conduct; irregular behaviour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance. Shakspeare.

STA'GNANCY, stág'nán-sé. n. s. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

STA'GNANT, stág'nánt. adj. [stagnans, Lat.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.

Blackmore.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant. Woodward.

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.

To STA'GNATE, stág'náte.⁹¹ v. n. [stagnum, Lat.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up. Woodward.

The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows. Arbuthnot.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate. Thomson.

STA'GNATION, stág-ná'shún. n. s. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time. Addison.

To what great ends subservient is the wind!
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore.

STAID, stáide. part. adj. [from stay.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.

Put thyself
Into a 'haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my staidier senses. Shakspeare.

This seems to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue. Milton.

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds; but to ride out, with prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the land. Milton.

I am the more at ease in sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons. Addison.

STA'IDNESS, stáide'nés. n. s. [from staid.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed staidness which is necessary to so severe an intendment. Glanville.

If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age he wanting. Dryden.

To STAIN, stáne.²⁰² v. a. [ystainio, Welsh, from ys and taenu.

Rhag Gwyar or Gnawd,
Afar ystainawd. Taliessyn, an old British poet.]

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakspeare.

From the gash a stream
His armour stain'd, ere while so bright. Milton.

Embrace again, my sons: be foes no more,
Nor stain your country with your children's gore. Dryden.

2. To die; to tinge.

3. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

STAIN, stáne.⁷³ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that shew themselves in clouds of a different situation. Addison.

Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains;
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains. Pope.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy. Hooker.

Then heav'n and earth, renew'd shall be made pure

To sanctity, that shall receive no stain. Milton.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots; for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judged it a stain upon them for want of merit. Broome.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stain, of all womankind. Sidney.

STA'NER, stá'núr. n. s. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots; one that dies; a dier.

I cannot love him;
Yet I suppose him virtuous. know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth. Shakspeare.

STAIR, stáire.²⁰² n. s. [stægen, Saxon; steghe, Dutch.] Steps by which we ascend from the lower part of a building to the upper. Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible. Sidney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars!
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capitol. Shakspeare.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs,
of some forty foot high. Bacon.

Sir James Furrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder. Bacon.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending. Milton.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That seal'd by steps of gold to heaven gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton.

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor staid for stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew. Dryden.

STA'IRCASE, stáire'kése. n. s. [stair and case.] The part of a fabrick that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture. Watton.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived. Addison.

STAKE, stáke. n. s. [staca, Saxon; staek, Dutch; estaca, Spanish.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I shook the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it. Sidney.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their minister's foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge. Hooker.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers; Instead whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges, They pitched in the ground. Shakspeare.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice. Bacon.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine The shallow twigs to tie the straggling vine. Dryd.

2. A piece of long rough wood.

While he whirl'd in fiery circles round The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found, And in the shoulder's joint inflicts the wound. Dryden.

I took my stand upon an eminence which was appointed for a general rendezvous of these female carriers, to look into their several ladings.

Spectator.

Three persons entered into a conspiracy to assassinate Timoleon, as he was offering up his devotions in a certain temple: in order to it, they took their several stands in the most convenient places.

Addison.

When just as by her stand Arcases past,
The window by design or chance fell down,
And to his view expos'd her blushing beauties.

Rowe.

The urchin from his private stand
Took aim, and shot with all his strength.

Swift.

2. Rank; post; station. Not used.

Father, since your fortune did attain
So high a stand, I mean not to descend.

Daniel.

3. A stop; a halt.

A race of youthful and unhandled colts
Fetching mad hounds, hellowing and neighing;
If any air of musick touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze.

Shakspeare.

The earl of Northampton followed the horse so closely, that they made a stand, when he furiously charged and routed them.

Clarendon.

Once more the fleeting soul came back,
T' inspire the mortal frame,
And in the body took a doubtful stand,
Hov'ring like expiring flame,
That mounts and falls by turns.

Dryden.

At every turn she made a little stand,
And thrust among the thorns her lily hand
To draw the rose.

Dryden.

4. Stop; interruption.

The greatest part of trade is driven by young merchants, upon borrowing at interest; so as, if the usurer either call in or keep back his money, there will ensue presently a great stand of trade.

Bacon.

Should this circulation cease, the formation of bodies would be at an end, and nature at a perfect stand.

Woodward.

5. The act of opposing.

We are come off
Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire.

Shakspeare.

6. Highest mark; stationary point; point from which the next motion is regressive.

Our sons but the same things can wish and do;
Vice is at stand, and at the highest flow:
Then, satire, spread thy sails; take all the winds can blow.

Dryden.

In the beginning of summer the days are at a stand, with little variation of length or shortness;
because the diurnal variation of the sun partakes more of a right line than of a spiral.

Dryden.

The sea, since the memory of all ages, hath continued at a stand, without considerable variation.

Bentley.

7. A point beyond which one cannot proceed.

Every part of what we would,
Must make a stand at what your highness will.

Shakspeare.

When fam'd Farelst this little wonder drew,
Flora vouchsaf'd the growing work to view;
Finding the painter's science at a stand,
The goddess snatch'd the pencil from his hand;
And finishing the piece, she smiling said,
Behold one work of mine that ne'er shall fade.

Prior.

8. Difficulty; perplexity; embarrassment; hesitation.

A fool may so far imitate the mien of a wise man, as at first to put a body to a stand what to make of him.

L'Estrange.

The well-shap'd changeling is a man, has a rational soul, though it appear not: this is past doubt.
Make the ears a little longer, then you begin to boggle: make the face yet narrower, and then you are at a stand.

Locke.

9. A frame or table on which vessels are placed.

Such squires are only fit for country towns,
To stink of ale, and dust a stand with clowns;
Who, to be chosen for the land's protectors,
Tope and get drunk before the wise electors.

Dryden.

After supper a stand was brought in, with a brass vessel full of wine, of which he that pleased might drink; but no liquor was forced.

Dryden.

STANDARD, stán'dárd, n. s. [estendart, French.]

1. An ensign in war, particularly the ensign of the horse.

His armies, in the following day,
On those fair plains their standards proud display.

Fairfax.

Erect the standard there of ancient night,
Yours be th' advantage all, mine the revenge.

Milton.

Behold Camillus loaded home
With standards well redeem'd, and foreign foes o'ercome.

Dryden.

To their common standard they repair;
The nimble horsemen scour the fields of air.

Dryden.

2. [from stand.] That which is of undoubted authority; that which is the test of other things of the same kind.

The dogmatist gives the lie to all dissenting apprehenders, and proclaims his judgment the fittest intellectual standard.

Glanville.

The heavenly motions are more stated than the terrestrial models, and are both originals and standards.

Holder.

Our measures of length I cannot call standards;
for standard measures must be certain and fixed.

Holder.

When people have brought right and wrong to a false standard, there follows an envious malevolence.

L'Estrange.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world.

Sprat.

From these ancient standards I descend to our own historians.

Felton.

When I shall propose the standard whereby I give judgment, any may easily inform himself of the quantity and measure of it.

Woodward.

The court, which used to be the standard of propriety, and correctness of speech, ever since continued the worst school in England for that accomplishment.

Swift.

First follow nature, and your judgment frame
By her just standard, which is still the same.

Pope.

3. That which has been tried by the proper test.

The English tongue, if refined to a certain standard, perhaps might be fixed for ever.

Swift.

In comely rank call ev'ry merit forth;
Imprint on ev'ry act its standard worth.

Prior.

4. A settled rate.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard.

Locke.

The device of king Henry VII. was profound, in making farms of a standard, that is, maintained with such a proportion of lands as may breed a subject to live in plenty.

Bacon.

A standard might be made, under which no horse should be used for draught: this would enlarge the breed of horses.

Temple.

By the present standard of the coinage, sixty-two shillings is coined out of one pound weight of silver.

Arbutnot.

5. A standing stem or tree.

A standard of a damask rose, with the root on,
was set upright in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot under the water, the standard being more than two foot above it.

Bacon.

Plant fruit of all sorts and standard, mural, or shrubs which lose their leaf.

Evelyn.

In France, part of their gardens is laid out for flowers, others for fruits; some standards, some against walls.

Temple.

STANDARDBEARER, stán'dárd-bá-rúr, n. s. [standard and bear.] One who bears a standard or ensign.

They shall be as when a standardbearer fainteth.

Isaiah.

These are the standardbearers in our contending armies, the dwarfs and squires who carry the impresses of the giants or knights.

Spectator.

STANDCROP, stánd'króp, n. s. [vermicularis, Latin.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

STANDEL, stán'dél, n. s. [from stand.] A tree of long standing.

standel of their royal oak return with a branch of willows.

Howel.

STANDER, stánd'úr, n. s. [from stand.]

1. One who stands.

2. A tree that has stood long.

The young spring was pitifully nipt and over-trodden by very beasts; and also the fairest standers of all were rooted up and cast into the fire.

Ascham.

3. STANDER by. One present; a mere spectator.

Explain some statute of the land to the standers by.

Hooker.

I would not be a stander by to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without My present vengeance taken.

Shakspeare.

When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers by to curtail his oaths.

Shakspeare.

The standers by see clearly this event,
All parties say they're sure, yet all dissent.

Denham.

The standers by suspected her to be a duchess.

Addison.

STANDERGRASS, stánd'úr-grás, n. s. [saturion, Latin.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

STANDING, stánd'ing, part. adj. [from stand.]

1. Settled; established; not temporary.

Standing armies have the place of subjects, and the government depends upon the contented and discontented humours of the soldiers.

Temple.

Laugh'd all the pow'rs who favour tyranny,
And all the standing army of the sky.

Dryden.

Money being looked upon as the standing measure of other commodities, men consider it as a standing measure; though, when it has varied its quantity, it is not so.

Locke.

Thus doth he advise them to erect among themselves standing courts by consent.

Kettleworth.

Such a one, by pretending to distinguish himself from the herd, becomes a standing object of rail-lery.

Addison.

The common standing rules of the gospel are a more powerful means of conviction than any miracle.

Attisbury.

Great standing miracle that heav'n assign'd!
'Tis only thinking gives this turn of mind. Pope.

2. Lasting; not transitory.

The landlord had swelled his body to a prodigious size, and worked up his complexion to a standing crimson. Addison.

3. Stagnant; not running.

He turned the wilderness into a standing water. Psalms.

STANG, stáng. n. s. [stang, Saxon.] A perch; a measure of land.

These fields were intermingled with woods of half a stang, and the tallest tree appeared to be seven feet high. Swift.

STANK, stánk. adj. [stanco, Italian.]

Weak; worn out.
Diggon, I am so stiff and so stank,
That unneith I may stand any more,
And how the western wind bloweth sore,
Beating the withered leaf from the tree. Spenser.

STANK, stánk. The preterit of stink.

The fish in the river died, and the river stank. Exodus.

STA'NNARY, stán'nár-é. adj. [from stannum, Lat.] Relating to the tin-works.

A steward keepeth his court once every three weeks: they are termed stannary courts, of the Latin stannum, and hold plea of action of debt or trespass about white or black tin. Carw.

STA'NZÁ, stán'zá. n. s. [stanza, Italian; stance, French.] A number of lines regularly adjusted to each other; so much of a poem as contains every variation of measure or relation of rhyme.

Stanza is originally a room of a house, and came to signify a subdivision of a poem; a staff.

So bold as yet no verse of mine has been,
To wear that gem on any line;

Nor, till the happy nuptial house be seen,
Shall any stanza with it shine. Cowley.

Horace confines himself strictly to one sort of verse or stanza in every ode. Dryden.

In quatrains, the last line of the stanza is to be considered in the composition of the first. Dryden.

Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault.

And each exalted stanza teems with thought. Pope.

STA'PLE, stá'pl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [estape, French; stapel, Dutch.]

1. A settled mart; an established emporium.

A staple of romance and lies,
False tears, and real perjuries. Prior.

The customs of Alexandria were very great, it having been the staple of the Indian trade. Arbuth.
Tyre, Alexander the great sacked, and establishing the staple at Alexandria, made the greatest revolution in trade that ever was known. Arbuthnot.

2. I know not the meaning in the following passage.

Henry II. granted liberty of coining to certain abbies, allowing them one staple, and two puncheons, at a rate. Camden.

3. The original material of a manufacture.

At Lenster, for her wool whose staple doth excel,
And seems to overmatch the golden Phrygian fell. Drayton.

STA'PLE, stá'pl. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Settled; established in commerce.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spongy softness made,
Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse ware our staple trade. Dryden.

2. According to the laws of commerce.

What needy writers would not solicit to work under such masters, who will take off their ware at their own rates, and trouble not themselves to examine whether it be staple or no? Swift.

STA'PLE, stá'pl. n. s. [stapul, Saxon; a prop.] A loop of iron; a bar bent and driven in at both ends.

I have seen staples of doors and nails born. Peacham.

The silver ring she pull'd, the door reclos'd:
The bolt, obedient to the silken cord,
To the strong staple's inmost depth restor'd,
Secur'd the valves. Pop.

STAR, stár.⁷³ n. s. [stearna, Saxon; sterre, Dutch.]

1. One of the luminous bodies that appear in the nocturnal sky.

When an astronomer uses the word star in its strict sense, it is applied only to the fix stars: but in a large sense it includes the planets. Watts.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beech
Fillop the stars;
Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work. Shakespeare.

Hither the Syracusan's art translates Heaven's form, the course of things, and human fates;

Th' included spirit, serving the star-deck'd signs,
The living work in constant motions winds. Hakewill.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,
And shape star bright, appear'd. Milton.

2. The polestar.

Well, if you be not turned Turk, there is no more sailing by the star. Shakespeare.

1. To look with fixed eyes; to look with wonder, impudence, confidence, stupidity, or horror.

Her modest eyes, ashamed to behold
So many gazers as on her do stare,
Upon the lowly ground affixed are. Spenser.

Their staring eyes sparkling with fervent fire,
And ugly shapes, did nigh the man dismay,
That, were it not for shame, he would retire. Spenser.

Look not big, nor stare nor fret:
I will be master of what is mine own. Shakespeare.

They were never satisfied with staring upon their masts, sails, cables, ropes, and tacklings. Abbot.

I hear
The tread of many feet steering this way;
Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare
At my affliction, and perhaps t' insult. Milton.

A satyr, that comes staring from the woods,
Must not at first speak like an orator. Waller.

And, while he stares around with stupid eyes,
His brows with berries and his temples dyes. Dryd.

What dost thou make a shipboard?
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free,

Stark staring mad, that thou shouldst tempt the sea?

Dryden.

Struggling, and wildly staring on the skies
With scarce recover'd sight.

Dryden.

Trembling the miscreant stood;
He star'd, and roll'd his haggard eyes around.

Dryden.

Break out in crackling flames to shun thy snare,
Or hiss a dragon, or a tyger stare.

Dryden.

Why dost thou not
Try the virtue of that gorgon face,
To stare me into statue?

Dryden.

I was unluckily prevented by the presence of a bear, which, as I approached with my present, threw his eyes in my way, and stared me out of my resolution.

Addison.

The wit at his elbow gave him a touch upon the shoulder, and stared him in the face with so hewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres.

Addison.

She paid a tradesman once, to make him stare.

Pope.

Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?

Pope.

Through nature and through art she rang'd,
And gracefully her subject chang'd:
In vain; her hearers had no share
In all she spoke, except to stare.

Swift.

2. To STARE in the face. To be undeniably evident.

Is it possible for people without scruple to offend against the law which they carry about them in indelible characters, and that stares them in the face whilst they are breaking it?

Locke.

3. To stand out prominent.

Take off all the staring straws and jaggs in the hive, and make them smooth.

Mortimer.

STARE, stâre. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fixed look.

The halls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd hetwixt a yellow and a red:
He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair.

Dryden.

2. [sturnus, Latin.] Starling; a bird.

STARER, stâr'ûr. n. s. [from stare.] One

To START, stârt.⁷³ v. n. [startzen,
German.]

1. To feel a sudden and involuntary twitch or motion of the animal frame, on the apprehension of danger.

Starting is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that kind it is a motion of shrinking; and likewise an inquisition, in the beginning, what the matter should be, and in that kind it is a motion of erection; and, therefore, when a man would listen suddenly to any thing, he starteth; for the starting is an erection of the spirits to attend.

Bacon.

A shape appear'd
Bending to look on me: I started back,
It started back.

Shakspeare.

An open enemy to flattery, especially from a friend, from whom he started to meet the slightest appearance of that servile kindness.

And snatch'd the starting serpents from the ground.
Pope.

4. To shrink; to winch.
What trick, what starting hole, canst thou find out, to hite thee from this open shame? Shaksp.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but, if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.

5. To deviate.
The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest sort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whensoever any of them starteth out
Spenser.
Th' old drudging sun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice start and misguide the day;
The jocund orbs shall break their measur'd pace,
And stubborn poles change their allotted place.
Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which start from nature's common rules,
With hearded infants, and with teeming mules.
Creech.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. To set out from the barrier at a race.
It seems to be rather a terminus a quo than a true principle, as the starting post is none of the horse's legs. Boyle.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And cry again, his offer I should scorn;
Asham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting place. Denham.
When from: the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign;
At once they start, advancing in a line. Dryden.

7. To set out on any pursuit.
Fair course of passion, where two lovers start
And run together, heart still yok'd with heart.
Waller.

People, when they have made themselves weary, set up their rest upon the very spot where they started. L'Estrange.

When two start into the world together, he that is thrown behind, unless his mind proves generous, will be displeas'd with the other. Collier.

To START, start. v. a.

1. To alarm; to disturb suddenly; to startle.

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare.
Being full of supper and distemp'ring draughts,
Upon malicious bravery dost thou come
To start my quiet? Shakespeare.

The very print of a fox-foot would have started ye L'Estrange.

2. To make to fly hastily from a starting place; to rouse by a sudden disturbance.

The blood more stirs
To rouse a lion than to start a hare. Shakespeare.
I started from its vernal bow'r

The rising game, and chac'd from flow'r to flow'r.
Pope.

3. To bring into motion; to produce to view or notice; to produce unexpectedly.

Conjure with 'em!
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.
Shakespeare.

What exception can possibly be started against this stating? Hammond.

It was unadvisedly done, when I was enforcing a weightier design, to start and follow another of less moment. Sprat.

The present occasion has started the dispute amongst us. Lesley.

Insignificant cavils may be started against every thing that is not capable of mathematical demonstration. Addison.

I was engaged in conversation upon a subject which the people love to start in discourse. Addison.

4. To discover; to bring within pursuit.

The sensual men agree in pursuit of every pleasure they can start. Temple.

5. To put suddenly out of place.

One, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wiseman.

START, start. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A motion of terour; a sudden twitch or contraction of the frame from fear or alarm.

These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authorized by her grandam Shakespeare.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start;
Against his bosom bound his heaving heart.
Dryden.

2. A sudden rousing to action; excitement.

How much had I to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I this will give it start again. Shakespeare.

3. Sally; vehement eruption; sudden effusion.

Thou art like enough, through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay. Shakespeare.

Several starts of fancy, off-hand, look well enough:
but bring them to the test, and there is nothing in
'em L'Estrange.

Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and sallies of the soul? Addis.

We were well enough pleased with this start of thought. Addison.

4. Sudden fit; intermitted action.

Methought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;
For she did speak in starts distractedly. Shaksp.

Thy forms are stud'ed arts,
Thy subtle ways be narrow straits,
Thy curtesy but sudden starts,
And what thou call'st thy gifts are baits.
Ben Jonson.

Nature does nothing by starts and leaps, or in a hurry; but all her motions are gradual. L'Estr.

An ambiguous expression, a little chagrin, or a start of passion, is not enough to take leave upon.
Collier.

5. A quick spring or motion; a shoot; a push.

In strings, the more they are wound up and strained, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound; and the slacker they are, or less wound up, the baser is the sound.
Bacon.

Both cause the string to give a quicker start.
Bacon.

How could water make those visible starts upon freezing, but by some subtle freezing principle which as suddenly shoots into it? Grew.

6. First emission from the barrier; act of setting out.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakespeare.

All leapt to chariot,
And every man then for the start cast in his proper
lot. Chapman.

If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start of first performance is all. Bacon.

7. To get the START. To begin before another; to obtain advantage over another.

Get the start of the majestick world. Shaksp.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party during that time doth cautiously get the start and advantage at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things in statu quo prius.
Bacon.

Doubtless some other heart
Will get the start;
And, stepping in before,
Will take possession of the sacred store
Of hidden sweets. Crashaw.

Ere the knight could do his part,
The squire had got so much the start,
H' had to the lady done his errand,
And told her all his tricks aforehand. Hudibras.

She might have forsaken him, if he had not got the start of her. Dryden.

The reason why the mathematics and mechanick arts have so much got the start in growth of other sciences, may be resolved into this, that their progress hath not been retarded by that reverential awe of former discoveries. Glanville.

The French year has got the start of ours more in the works of nature than in the new style.
Addison.

STARTER, start'ur. n. s. [from start.]

1. One that shrinks from his purpose.
Stand to it boldly, and take quarter,
To let thee see I am no starter. Hudibras.

2. One who suddenly moves a question or objection.

3. A dog that rouses the game.
If Sheridan was not the staunchest hound in the pack, he was at least the best starter. Delany.

STARTINGLY, start'ing-ly. adv. [from starting.] By sudden fits; with frequent intermission.

Why do you speak so startingly and rash?
Shakespeare.

STARTING POST, start'ing-post. n. s. [start and post.] Barrier from which the race begins.

To STARTLE, start'l. v. n. [from start.]

To shrink; to move, on feeling a sudden impression of alarm or terour.

The start'ling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the night.
Dryden.

Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction!
Addison.

My frighted thoughts run back,
And startle into madness at the sound. Addison.

To STORTLE, stort'l. v. a.

1. To fright; to shock; to impress with sudden terour, surprise, or alarm.

Such whisp'ring wak'd her, but with startled eye
On Adam. Milton.

To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing startle the dull night
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise
Milton.

The supposition that angels assume bodies needs not stortle us, since some of the most ancient and most learned fathers seem'd to believe that they had bodies. Locke.

Incest! Oh name it not!
The very mention shakes my inmost soul:
The gods are stortled in their peaceful mansions,
And nature sickens at the shocking sound. Smith.

His books had been solemnly burnt at Rome as heretical: some people, he found, were startled at it; so he was forced boldly to make reprisals, to buy up their courage. Atterbury.

Now the leaf
Incessant rustles, from the mournful grove
Oft startling such as studious walk below,
And slowly creeps through the waving air. Thomson.

2. To deter; to make to deviate.

They would find occasions enough, upon the account of his kind affections to the king's service, from which it was not possible to remove or startle him. Clarendon.

Wilmot had more scruples from religion to startle him, and would not have attained his end by any gross act of wickedness. Clarendon.

STARTRLE, stár'tl. n. s. [from the verb.]

Sudden alarm; shock; sudden impression of terror.

After having recovered from my first startle, I was very well pleased at the accident. Spectator.

That young startup hath all the glory of my overthrow. Shakspeare.

To STARVE, stárv. v. n. [stearfan, Saxon; sterven, Dutch, to die.]

1. To perish; to be destroyed. Obsolete.

To her came message of the murderment,
Wherein her guiltless friends should hopeless starve. Fairfax.

2. To perish with hunger. It has with or for before the cause; of less properly.

Were the pains of honest industry, and of starving with hunger and cold, set before us, no body would doubt which to chuse. Locke.

An animal that starves of hunger, dies feverish and delirious. Arbutnot.

3. To be killed with cold. It has with or for before the cause.

Have I seen the naked starve for cold,
While avarice my charity controll'd? Sandys.

4. To suffer extreme poverty.

Sometimes virtue starves while vice is fed:
What then? is the reward of virtue bread? Pope.

5. To be destroyed with cold.

Had the seeds of the pepper-plant been borne from Java to these northern countries, they must have starved for want of sun. Woodward.

To STARVE, stárv. v. a.

1. To kill with hunger.

I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wish'd him on the barren mountain starv'd. Shakspeare.

Hunger and thirst, or guns and swords,
Give the same death in different words:
To push this argument no further,
To starve a man in law is murder. Prior.

If they had died through fasting, when meat was at hand, they would have been guilty of starving themselves. Pope.

2. To subdue by famine.

Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shakspeare.

He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
As men by fasting starve th' untam'd disease. Dryden.

Attalus endeavoured to starve Italy, by stopping their convoy of provisions from Africa. Arbutnot.

3. To kill with cold.

From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round. Milton.

4. To deprive of force or vigour.

The powers of their minds are starved by disuse, and have lost that reach and strength which nature fitted them to receive. Locke.

STARVELING, stárv'ling.⁴¹⁰ adj. [from starve.] Hungry; lean; pining.

The thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion; else the starveling brood,
Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn. Philips.

Poor starveling bard, how small thy gains!
How unproportion'd to thy pains! Swift.

STARVELING, stárv'ling. n. s. An animal thin and weak for want of nourishment.

If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for old sir John vaags with me, and he's no starveling. Shakspeare.

Now thy alms is given, the letter's read;
The body risen again, the which was dead;
And thy poor starveling bountifully fed. Donne.

The fat ones would be making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L'Estrange.

STARWORT, stárv'wúrt. n. s. [aster, Latin.]

A plant; elecampane. Miller.

STATARY, stá'tá rē.⁵¹² adj. [from status, Latin.] Fixed; settled.

STATE, státe. n. s. [status, Latin.]

1. Condition; circumstances of nature or fortune.

I do not
Infer as if I thought my sister's state Secure. Milton.

I found the whole city highly concerned for the hazardous state of Candia, which was lost soon after Dominico Cantarin, the present duke, was sedulous in that affair. Brown.

Their sins have the aggravation of being sins against grace, and forsaking and departing from God; which respect makes the state of apostates, as the most unexcusable, so the most desperately dangerous state. Hammond.

Thus have his prayers for others altered and amended the state of his own heart. Law.

Relate what Latium was;
Declare the past and present state of things. Dryden.

Like the papists is your poet's state,
Poor and disarm'd. Pope.

2. Modification of any thing.

Keep the state of the question in your eye. Boyle.

3. Stationary point; crisis; height; point from which the next movement is regression.

The deer, that endureth the womb but eight months, and is complete at six years, cannot live much more than thirty, as having passed two general motions, that is, its beginning and increase; and having but two more to run through, that is, its state and declination. Brown.

Tumours have their several degrees and times; as beginning, augment, state, and declination. Wiseman.

4. [estat, French.] Estate; signiory; possession.

Strong was their plot,
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.

5. Mode of government.

No state can be named wherein any part of the body of those imperial laws hath the just force of a law, otherwise than as custom hath particularly introduced it. Selden.

6. The community; the publick; the commonwealth.

If any thing more than your sport
Did move your greatness, and this noble state,
To call on him, he hopes it is no other
But for your health's sake. Shakspeare.

A state's anger
Should not take knowledge either of fools or women. Ben Jonson.

I hear her talk of state matters and the senate. Ben Jonson.

What he got by fortune,
It was the state that now must make his right. Daniel.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land for the space of six weeks. Bacon.

It is better the kingdom should be in good estate, with particular loss to many of the people, than that all the people should be well, and the state of the kingdom altogether lost. Hayneard.

It is a bad exchange to wound a man's own conscience, thereby to salve state sores. King Charles.

For you we stay'd, as did the Grecian state Till Alexander came. Waller.

Since they all live by begging, it were better for the state to keep them. Graunt.

These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamantus rules the state:
He hears and judges. Dryden.

7. Hence single state, in Shakspeare, for individuality.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise. Macbeth.

8. Civil power, not ecclesiastical.

The same criminal may be absolved by the church, and condemned by the state; absolved or pardoned by the state, yet censured by the church. Lutley.

9. A republick; a government not monarchical.

They feared nothing from a state so narrow in compass of land, and so weak, that the strength of their armies has ever been made up of foreign troops. Temple.

10. Rank; condition; quality.

Fair dame, I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.

High state the bed is where misfortune lies. Fairfax.

11. Solemn pomp; appearance of greatness.

When in triumphant state the British muse,
True to herself, shall barb'rous aid refuse. Roscommon.

There kings receiv'd the marks of sovereign pow'r:
In state the monarchs march'd; the victors bore
The awful axes and the rod before. Dryden.

Let my attendants wait; I'll be alone:
Where least of state, there most of love is shown. Dryden.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud;
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

If God has delivered me up to civil spirits, to be dragged by them to places of torments, could it be any comfort to me that they found me upon a bed of state? Law.

12. Dignity; grandeur.

She instructed him how he should keep state, and yet with a modest sense of his misfortunes. Bacon.

The swan rows her state with oary feet. Milton.

He was staid, and in his gait
Preserv'd a grave majestic state. Butler.

Such cheerful modesty, such humble state,
Moves certain love. Waller.

Can this imperious lord forget to reign,
Quit all his state, descend, and serve again? Pope.

He will consider, not what arts, or methods, or application will soonest make him richer and greater than his brethren, or remove him from a shop to a life of state and pleasure; but will consider what arts, what methods, what application can make worldly business most acceptable to God, and make a life of trade a life of holiness, devotion, and piety. Law.

A seat of dignity.
This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown. Shakspeare.

As she affected not the grandeur of a state with a canopy, she thought there was no offence in an elbow chair. Arbutnot.

The brain was her study, the heart her state room. Arbutnot.

14. A canopy; a covering of dignity.

Over the chair is a state made round of ivy, somewhat whiter than ours; and the state is curiously wrought with silver and silk. Bacon.

His high throne, under state
Of richest texture spread, at th' upper end
Was plac'd. Milton.

15. A person of high rank. Obsolete.

She is a duchess; a great state. Latimer.

16. The principal persons in the government.

The bold design
Pleas'd highly those infernal states. Milton.

17. Joined with another word, it signifies publick.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs: my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

Council! What's that? a pack of hearsed slaves,
The scavengers that sweep state nuisances,
And are themselves the greatest. Dryden.

I am accused of reflecting upon great states-folks. Swift.

To STATE, stâte. v. a. [constater, Fr.]

1. To settle; to regulate.

This is so stated a rule, that all casuists press it in all cases of damage. Decay of Piety.

This is to state accounts, and looks more like merchandize than friendship. Collier.

He is capable of corruption who receives more than what is the stated and unquestioned fee of his office. Addison.

2. To represent in all the circumstances of modification.

Many other inconveniences are consequent to this stating of this question; and particularly that, by those which thus state it, there hath never yet been assigned any definite number of fundamentals. Hammond.

Its present state stateth it to be what it now is. Hale.

Were our case stated to any sober heathen, he would never guess why they who acknowledge the necessity of prayer, and confess the same God, may not ask in the same form. Decay of Piety.

To state it fairly, imitation is the most advantageous way for a translator to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the memory of the dead. Dryden.

I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate, the truth contained in the text. Atterbury.

Though I don't pretend to state the exact degree of mischief that is done by it, yet its plain and natural tendency to do harm is sufficient to justify the most absolute condemnation of it. Law.

STA'TELINESS, stâte'lê-nês. n. s. [from stately.]

1. Grandeur; majestick appearance; august manner; dignity.

We may collect the excellency of the understanding then by the glorious remainders of it now, and guess of the stateliness of the building by the magnificence of its ruins. South.

For stateliness and majesty what is comparable to a horse? More.

2. Appearance of pride; affected dignity.

Agenor, glad such punctual ready bliss
Did on his own design itself obtrude,
Swell'd his vast looks to bigger stateliness. Beaumont.

She hated stateliness; but wisely knew
What just regard was to her title due. Betterton.

STA'TELY, stâte'lê. adj. [from state.]

1. August; grand; lofty; elevated; majestick; magnificent.

A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was. Shaksp.

These regions have abundance of high cedars,
and other stately trees casting a shade. Raleigh.

Truth, like a stately dome, will not shew herself at the first visit. South.

He many a walk travers'd
Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm. Milton.

2. Elevated in mien or sentiment.

He maintains majesty in the midst of plainness, and is stately without ambition, which is the vice of Lucan. Dryden.

STA'TELY, stâte'lê. adv. [from the adjective.] Majestically.

Ye that stately tread or lowly creep. Milton.

STA'TEROOM, stâte'rôòm. n. s. [from state and room.] A magnificent room in a palace or great house.

STA'TESMAN, stâts'mân. n. s. [state and man.]

1. A politician; one versed in the arts of government.

It looks grave enough
To seem a statesman. Ben Jonson.

The corruption of a poet is the generation of a statesman. Pope.

2. One employed in publick affairs.

If such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. Shakspere.

It is a weakness which attends high and low; the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South.

Absolute power is not a plant that will grow in this soil; and statesmen, who have attempted to cultivate it here, have pulled on their own and their master's ruin. Davenant.

A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off, whom he cannot gratify; since, to use the phrase of a late statesman, the pasture is not large enough. Addison.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

STA'TESWOMAN, stâts'wûm-ûn. n. s. [state and woman.] A woman who meddles with publick affairs: in contempt.

How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise fresh sums: she's a great stateswoman! Ben Jonson.

Several objects may innocently be ridiculed, as the passions of our stateswomen. Addison.

STA'TICAL, stât'tê-kâl. } adj. [from sta- STA'TICK, stât'tik. } ticks.] Relating to the science of weighing.

A man weigheth some pounds less in the height of winter, according to experience, and the statick aphorisms of Sanctorius. Brown.

If one by a statick engine could regulate his insensible perspiration, he might often, by restoring of that, foresee, prevent, or shorten a fit of the gout. Arbutnot.

STA'TICKS, stât'tiks. n. s. [statique, French.] The science which considers the weight of bodies.

This is a catholick rule of staticks, that if any body be bulk for bulk heavier than a fluid, it will sink to the bottom; and if lighter, it will float upon it, having part extant, and part immersed, as that so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part he equal in gravity to the whole. Bentley.

STA'TION, stâ'shûn. n. s. [station, Fr. statio, Latin.]

1. The act of standing.

Their manner was to stand at prayer, whereupon their meetings unto that purpose on those days had the names of stations given them. Hooker.

In station like the herald, Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill. Shakspere.

2. A state of rest.

All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward some part which was before in station or at quiet, where there are no joints. Brown.

3. A place where any one is placed.

The seditious remained within their station, which, by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

The planets in their station list'ning stood. Milt.

4. Post assigned; office.

Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubims taking their stations to guard the place. Milton.

5. Situation; position.

To single stations now what years belong,
With planets join'd they claim another song. Creech.

The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle station, and an even plain;

While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
And while the hill with olive shade is crown'd? Prior.

6. Employment; office.

No member of a political body so mean, but it may be used in some station or other. L'Estrange.

By spending this day in religious exercises, we acquire new strength and resolution to perform God's will in our several stations the week following. Nelson.

They believe that the common size of human understanding is fitted to some station or other. Swift.

Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of instinct, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute. Swift.

7. Character; state.

Far the greater part have kept their station. Milton.

8. Rank; condition of life.

I can be contented with an humbler station, in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle. Dryden.

STA'TIONARY, stâ'shûn-â-rê. adj. [from station.]

1. Fixed; not progressive.

Between the descent and ascent, where the image seemed stationary, I stopped the prism, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more. Newton.

2. Respecting place.

The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals. Brown.

3. Belonging to a stationer.

STA'TIONER, stâ'shûn-ûr. n. s. [from station.]

1. A bookseller.

Some modern tragedies are beautiful on the stage, and yet Typhon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.

With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
Glory and gain th' industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle Dulness ever loves a joke. Pope.

2. A seller of paper.

STA'TIST, stâ'tist. n. s. [from state.] A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.

I do believe
Statist though I am none, nor like to be,
That this shall prove a war. Shakspere.

Their orators thou then extoll'st, as those
The top of eloquence, statists indeed,
And lovers of their country. Milton.

STA'TUARY, stăt'tshù-à-rè. n. s. [statuaire,
Fr. from statua, Latin.]

1. The art of carving images or representations of life.

The northern nations, that overwhelmed it by their numbers, were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of architecture and statuary. Temple.

2. One that practises or professes the art of making statues.

On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets. Addison.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years? This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone. Swift.

STA'TUE, stăt'tshù.⁴⁶³ n. s. [statue, Fr. statua, Latin.] An image; a solid representation of any living being.

The princess heard of her mother's statue, a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master. Shakspeare.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other. Shakspeare.

Architects propounded unto Alexander to cut the mountain Athos into the form of a statue, which in his right hand should hold a tow capable of containing ten thousand men, and in his left a vessel to receive all the water that flowed from the mountain. Wilkins.

A statue of Polycletus, called the rule, deserves the name of having so perfect an agreement in all its parts, that it is not possible to find a fault in it. Dryden.

To STA'TUE, stăt'tshù. v. a. [from the noun.] To place as a statue.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;

other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the philologist, for several hours in a close furnace. Hill.

At her back a bow and quiver gay, Stuff'd with steel-headed darts, wherewith she quell'd
The savage beasts in her victorious play. Spenser.
With mighty bars of long-enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties.

Fairfax.
They are not charm'd against your points of steel nor iron fram'd. Chapman.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon.
Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily strike fire with steel, much less with one another;
nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet;
the sparks being then quenched in their irruption. Brown.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave. Shakespeare.

Polish'd steel from far severely shines. Dryden.
He, sudden as the word,
In proud Plexippus' bosom plung'd the sword;
Toxens amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antiaacid. Arbuthnot.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness:
as, heads of steel.

STEEL, stéél. adj. Made of steel.

A lance then took he with a keene steele head,
To be his keepe off both 'gainst men and dogges. Chapman.

To STEEL, stéél. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To point or edge with steel.
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakespeare.

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad sense.

Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shakespeare.

So service shall with steeld fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakspeare.
From his metal was his party steeld;
Which, once in him rebated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakspeare.

O god of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts,
Possess them not with fear. Shakspeare.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

Man, foolish man!
Scarce know'st thou how thyself began;
Yet, steeld with studied boldness, thou dar'st try
To send thy doubted reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulf of vast immensity. Prior.

Let the steeld Turk be deaf to matron's cries,
See virgins ravish'd with relentless eyes. Tickel.

So perish all whose breasts the furies steeld,
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

STEEL'Y, stéél'ý. adj. [from steel.]

1. Made of steel.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakspeare.

Here smokes his forge, he bares his sinewy arm,
And early strokes the sounding anvil warm;
Around his shop the steely sparkles flew,
As for the steed he shap'd the bending shoe. Gay.

2. Hard; firm.

That she would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love. Sidney.

STEEL'YARD, stéél'yárd.⁶¹⁵ n. s. [stéel and yard.] A kind of balance, in which the weight is moved along an iron rod, and

He now had conquer'd Anxur's steep ascent. Addison.

STEEP, stéép. n. s. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to perpendiculari-
ty

As that Theban monster that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spight,
Cast herself headlong from the Ismenian steep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations in proportion Jevl;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

Instructs the heast to know his native force;
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy. Dryden.

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices. Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holhorn's fatal steep. Gay.

To STEEP, stéép. v. a. [stijphen, Dutch.]

To soak; to macerate; to imbue; to dip.
When his brother saw the red blood trail,
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Spenser.
He, like an adder lurking in the weeds,

His wand'ring thought in deep desire docs steep;
And his frail eye with spoil of beauty feeds. Spenser.

A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland. Shakspeare.

The conquering wine bath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe. Shakspeare.

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours. Shakspeare.

Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;
Four nights will quickly dream away the time. Shakspeare.

Most of the steepings are cheap things, and the goodness of the crop is a great matter of gain. Bacon.

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood;
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours and their irksome years. Dryden.

Wheat steeped in brine twelve hours prevents the smuttiness. Mortimer.

STEE'PLE, stéép'lé.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [ſteoppel, ſtýpel, Saxon.] A turret of a church,
generally furnished with bells; a spire.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanes, spout!
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks. Shakspeare.

What was found in many places, and preached for wheat fallen on the ground from the clouds, was but the seed of ivy-berries; and though found in steeples or high places, might be conveyed thither or muted by birds. Brown.

A raven I saw steeple-high, just over your house. L'Estrange.

They, far from steeples and their sacred sound,
In fields their sullen conventicles found. Dryden.

STEE'PLY, stéép'lé. adv. [from steep.]
With precipitous declivity.

STEE'PNES, stéép'nés. n. s. [from steep.]
Precipitous declivity.

The craggedness or steepness of that mountain maketh many parts of it inaccessible. Brerewood.
Lord Lovel swam over Trent on horseback, but could not recover the farther side, by reason of the steepness of the bank, and so was drowned. Bacon.

Vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields, lie on the borders, and run up all the sides of the Alps, where the barrenness of the rocks, or the steepness of the ascent, will suffer them. Addison.

STEE'PY, stéép'é. adj. [from steep.] Having a precipitous declivity. A poetical word for steep.

Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy craggs do beat? Walton.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
From steepy Othrys' top to Pylus drove
His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love. Dryden.
No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryden.

STEER, stéér.²⁴⁶ n. s. [ſtýre, ſteop, ſtýre, Saxon; stier, Dutch.] A young bullock.

They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do, like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and repine ever after to come under rule again. Spenser.

Lacaon, Neptune's priest,
With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer. Dryden.

Nor has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tyger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson.

To STEER, stéér. v. a. [ſteopan, ſtý- pan, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.] To direct; to guide in a passage: originally used of a ship, but applied to other things.

A comely palmer clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,

That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Lest his long way his aged limbs should tire.

Spenser.
If a pilot cannot see the pole star, it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him.
King Charles.

To STEER, stéér.²⁴⁶ v. n.

1. To direct a course at sea.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail. Milt.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands, and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by. Locke.

2. To conduct himself.

STEERAGE, stéér'idje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from steer.]

1. The act or practice of steering.

Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting it. Spectator.

2. Direction; regulation of a course.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakspeare.

3. That by which any course is guided.

His costly frame
Inscrib'd to Phœbus, here he hung on high,
The steerage of his wings, and cut the sky. Dryden.

4. Regulation or management of any thing.

You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage. Swift.

5. The stern or hinder part of the ship.

STEERSMATE, stéérz'máte. } n. s. [steer

STEERSMAN, stéérz'mán.⁸⁸ } and man, or matr.] A pilot; one who steers a ship.

What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,
Embark'd with such a steersmate at the helm?

In a storm, though the vessel be pressed never so hard, a skilful steersman will yet bear up against it.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,
And comes to anchor in his inmost bay. Dryden.

STEGANOGRAPHIST, stég-á-nóg'gráf-fist.

n. s. [στεγανός and γράφω.] He who practises the art of secret writing. Bailey.

STELLAR, stél'lár.⁸⁹ adj. [from stella,

Latin.] Astral; relating to the stars.

In part shed down
Their stellar virtue, on all kinds that grow
On earth; made hereby apter to receive Perfection from the sun's more potent ray. Milton.

Salt dissolved, upon fixation, returns to its affected cubes, and regular figures of minerals; as the hexagonal of crystal, and stellar figure of the stone asteria. Gianville.

STELLATE, stél'láte. adj. [stellatus, Lat.]

Pointed in the manner of a painted star.

One making a regulus of antimony, without iron, found his regulus adorned with a more conspicuous star than I have seen in several stellate reguluses of antimony and mars. Boyle.

STELLATION, stél-lá'shùn. n. s. [from stel- la, Latin.] Emission of light as from a star.

STELLÉD, stél'léd. adj. Starry.

STELLIONATE, stél'yún-ét. n. s. [stellionat,

French; stellionatus, Latin.] A kind of crime which is committed [in law] by a deceitful selling of a thing otherwise than it really is: as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the inchocations towards crimes capital, not actually committed. Bacon.

STEM, stém. n. s. [stemma, Latin.]

1. The stalk; the twig.

Two lovely herries molded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart.

After they are first shot up thirty foot in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough nor twig in the trunk or stem. Raleigh.

Set them a slope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem. Bacon.

This, ere it was in th' earth,
God made, and every herb before it grew
On the green stem. Milton.

The stem thus threaten'd, and the sap in thee,
Drops all the branches of that noble tree. Waller.

Farewell, you flow'rs, whose buds with early care
I watch'd, and to the chearful sun did rear:
Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,
With fountain streams your fainting souls recal?

The low'ring spring with lavish rain
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

2. Family; race; generation. Pedigrees are drawn in the form of a branching tree.

I will assay her worth to celebrate;
And so attend ye toward her glittering state,
Where ye may all, that are of noble stem, Approach. Milton.

Whosoever will undertake the imperial diadem, must have of his own wherewith to support it; which is one of the reasons that it hath continued these two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of. Havel.

Dost thou in bounds aspire to deathless fame!
Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Tickel.

3. Progeny; branch of a family.

This is a stem
Of that victorious stock, and let us fear
His native mightiness. Shakspeare.

4. [stammen, Swedish.] The prow or forepart of a ship.

Orante's barque, ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stern by waves was overborn. Dryden.

To STEM, stém. v. a. [stamma, Islandick.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape,
Ply, stemming nighly tow'rd the pole. Milton.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denham.

In slipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryd.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

STENCH, sténsh. n. s. [from stencan,
Saxon.]

1. A stink; a bad smell.

Death, death, oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night.

So hees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away.

Physicians, by the stench of feathers, cut the rising of the mother. Encon.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth,
the things that keep societies of men from stench
and corruption. South.

The hoery Nar
Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's stream th' infected current throws.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of sav'ry stench involve the sky. Dryden.

To STENCH, sténsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink. Not proper, or in use.

The foulness of the ponds only stenceth the water.

2. [for staunch, corruptly.] To stop; to hinder to flow.

They had better skill to let blood than stench it.

Restringents to stench, and increasives to thicken,
the blood. Harvey.

and γράφω.] Shorthand.

O the accurst stenography of state!
The princely eagle shrunk into a bat. Cleaveland.

STENTOROPHONICK, stén-tò-rò-fòn'ik. adj.
[from Stentor, the Homerial herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and φωνη, a voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.

Of this stentorophonick horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican. Derham.

To STÉP, stép. v. n. [ἑταππαν, Saxon;
stapfen, Dutch.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace, to step constantly ten yards at a time. Wilkins.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.

Whosoever first, after the troubling the water, stepped in, was made whole. John.

3. To move mentally.

Buried his father, by whose death he's stepp'd into a great estate. Shakspeare.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads. Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirrour of that ancient world. Pope.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakspeare.

5. To come as it were by chance.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medialist. Addison.

6. To take a short walk.

See where he comes; so, please you, step aside;
I'll know his grievance. Shakspeare.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket aside
To bring me berries. Milton.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but that minute

7. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.

Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bashaws, stept forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life. Knolles.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage, In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Cowley.

Home the swain retreats, His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson.

STEP, stêp, n. s. [στῆπ, Sax. stafi, Dut.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou sound and firm-set earth, Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shaksp.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death Can be at once, shall step by step attend

You and your ways. Shaksp.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path, When life was hazarded in every step? Addison.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops slain in battle, were set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Wotton.

Those heights where William's virtue might have staid,

And on the subject world look'd safely down, By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, Truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logick does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbuthnot.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death. Samuel.

5. [In the plural.] Walk; passage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me, Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree In this deep forest. Dryden.

6. Gradation; degree.

The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man becometh a more heinous offender than another. Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered. Newton.

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life; and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne With a submissive step I hasted down; The glowing garland from my hair I took, Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, stêp. in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [στῆπ, Sax. from stapan, to deprive or make an orphan; for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chuse but misdoubt, lest this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother? Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more; But, when she saw her offer'd sweets refuse, Her love she turn'd to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter, After the slander of most step-mothers, Ill-eyed unto you. Shaksp.

A father cruel; and a step-dame false. Shaksp. Cato, the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, that I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of step-dame, your practis'd art, By which you have estrang'd my father's heart, All you have done against me, or design, Shows your aversion, but hegets not mine. Dryden. A step-dame too I have, a cursed she, Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot.

STEP'PINGSTONE, stêp'ping-stone. n. s.

[step and stone.] Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingsstones to save a stride, In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORACEOUS, stêr-kò-rà'shùs. adj.

[stercoraceus, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human fæces. Arbuthnot.

STERCORATION, stêr-kò-rà'shùn. n. s.

[from stercora, Lat.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration; the sheep's dung is one of the best, and the next, dung of kine and that of horses. Bacon.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant. Ray.

STEREOGRAPHY, stêr-rê-ôg'grâf-fê. n. s.

[στέρος and γράφω; stereographie, Fr.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

STÈRIL, stêr'il. adj. [sterile, French;

sterilis, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say, The barren, touched in this holy chaise, Shake off their steril curse. Shaksp.

The sea marge steril, and rocky hard. Shaksp. In very steril years, corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and steril swim. Brown.

She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere steril and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY, stê-ril'è-tè. n. s. [sterilité,

French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope.

TO STÈRILIZE, stêr'il-ize. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the Deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STÈRLING, stêr'ling. adj. [Of this word

many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in sesterces than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick. Swift.

STÈRLING, stêr'ling. n. s. [sterlingum,

low Latin, from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

STERN, stêrn. adj. [στῆρην, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical? Shaksp. I would outstare the sternest eyes that look, Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth, Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,

- Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win the lady. Shakespeare.
It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Knolles.
Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milton.
The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet attempter'd with benignity. Harte.
2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Shakespeare.
The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops?
Shakespeare.
Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shaksp.
Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the bus'ness of my life;
And in thy fame the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung.
Dryden.
How, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
3. Hard; afflictive.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key;
All cruels else subscrib'd. Shakespeare.
Mischiefe stood,
And with his stern steele drew in streamcs the blood. Chapman.
- STERN, stérn. n. s. [στερον, Saxon; of the same original with steer.]
1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.
Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts.
They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land.
Dryden.
2. Post of management; direction.
The king from Eltam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest stern of publick weal. Shaksp.

With double forces high above the ground,
Though wrapping up her wreathed stern around.
Spenser.
- STERNAGE, stérn'ídje. n. s. [from stern.]
The steerage or stern. Not used.
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.
Shakespeare.
- STERNLY, stérn'lè. adv. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.
No mountaine lion tore
Two lambs so sternly. Chapman.
Sternly he pronounc'd
The rigid interdiction. Milton.
Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face the same,
Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame;
Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move,
And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love.
Dryden.
- STERNNESS, stérn'nès. n. s. [from stern.]
1. Severity of look.
Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
That sons of mcr. amaz'd their sternness do behold.
Spenser.
How would he look, to see his work so noble Wildly bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakespeare.
2. Severity or harshness of manners.

- I have sternness in my soul enough
To hear of soldiers work. Dryden.
- STERNON, stér'nón. n. s. [στενον.] The breastbone.

non. Wiseman.
- STERNUTATION, stér-nù-tá'shùn. n. s.
[sternutatio, Lat.] The act of sneezing.
[Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils. Quincy.
Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died. Brown.
- STERNUTATIVE, stér-nù-tá-tív. adj. [ster-nutatif, French, from sternuto, Latin.]

slow moist heat.
- STEW, stù. n. s. [estuve, French; stufa, Italian; estufa, Spanish.]
1. A bagnio; a hothouse.
As burning Ætna from his boiling stew
Doth helch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrap't in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Spen.
The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.
2. A brothel; a house of prostitution.
[This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense.
Shakespeare makes it singular.]
There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Ascham.
I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakespeare.
With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses,
no courtesans. Bacon.
Her, though sev'n years she in the stews had laid,
A nunnery durst receive and think a maid;
And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany. Donne.

- What mod'rate sop would rake the park or steer,
Who among troops of faultless nymphs can choose?
Roscommon.
Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children.
South.

a small pond where fish are kept for the table.
- STEWARD, stú'úrd. n. s. [στειραν,
Saxon.]
1. One who manages the affairs of another.
There sat, yclad in red
Down to the ground, a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Spen.
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.
Shakespeare.
Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakespeare.
How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke.
Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them. Nelson.
When a steward defrauds his lord, he must con-nive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Swift.
What can be a greater honour, than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives. Swift.
Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor reliev'd. Harte.
2. An officer of state.
The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high steward. Shakespeare.
- STEWARDSHIP, stú'úrd-shíp. n. s. [from steward.] The office of a steward.
The earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship.
Shakespeare.
Shew us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship. Shak.
If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust, and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it. Calamy.

A son, the woman's seed. Milton.
Thou hast seen one world begin and end,
And man, as from a second stock, proceed. Milton.
To no human stock
We owe this fierce unkindness; but the rock,
That cloven rock, produced thee. Waller.
Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stock
From Dardanus; but in some horrid rock,
Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thee bred.
Denham.
10. The principal; capital store; fund already provided.
Prodigal men
Feel not their own stock wasting. Ben Jonson.
Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign, so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for then the balance of trade must be returned in money or hullion. Bacon.
A king, against a storm, must foresec to a convenient stock of treasure. Bacon.
'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the sons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory. South.
Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe.
Dryden.
Yet was she not profuse, but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supplied, and she not grieve,
When crowds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, she still increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more.
Dryden.
Beneath one law bees live.
And with one common stock their traffic drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all. Dryd.
Nor do those ills on single hodies prey;

He hath some stoniness at the bottom. Hammond.

STONY, stô'nè. adj. [from stone.]

1. Made of stone.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.
With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakspeare.
Nor slept the winds

Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up sheer. Milton.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;
The stony snake retain'd the figure still his own.

Dryden.

They suppose these bodies to be only water per-fitted, or converted into these sparry or stony ic-cles. Woodward.

2. Abounding with stones.

From the stony Mænalus
Bring your flocks, and live with us. Milton.

3. Petrifick.

Now let the stony dart of senseless cold
Pierce to my heart, and pass through every side.
Spenser.

4. Hard; inflexible; unrelenting.

The stony hardness of too many patrons hearts,
not touched with any feeling in this case. Hooker.
Thou art come to answer

A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Un capable of pity. Shakspeare.

Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles a-foot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it. Shakspeare.

At this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone; and, while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Shakspeare.

I will clear their senses dark,
What may suffice, and soften stony hearts,
To pray, repent, and bring obedience due. Milton.

Indiff'rence, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

STOOD, stûd.³⁰⁷ The preterit of To stand.

Adam, at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood.
Milton.

STOOL, stôol.³⁰⁶ n. s. [stols, Gothic; stool, Sax. stool, Dutch.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts.

Thou fearful fool,

Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold?
Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplex. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesentery veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesentery veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon.

The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction, and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual needing of going to stool. Arbuthnot.

3. Stool of Repentance, or Cutty Stool,

in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forward to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition.
Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvass, analogous to a hairy or monastuck vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things, brings many a great man to the stool of repentance.
L'Estrange.

STOOLBALL, stóól'báll. n. s. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at stoolball seen.
Prior.

To STOOP, stóóp.³ v. n. [ꝛupian, Saxon; stuyfen, Dutch.]

1. To bend down; to bend forward.

Like unto the boughs of this tree, he bended downward, and stooped towards the earth. Raleigh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Ismenias were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Ismenias let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration Stillingfleet.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop.
Shakspeare.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far:
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong.
Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry,
it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle.

5. To yield; to be inferior.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop inglorious. Milton.

These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome.
Addison.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority; to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concourse of divided minds; and unmeet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men, and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves, in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove.
Milton.

8. To alight from the wing.

Satan ready now
To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world. Milton.

Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move,
And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place.

Cow'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing.
Milton.

STOOP, stóóp. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,
Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.

An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [ꝛoppa, Saxon; stoofte, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor.

Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello.

Shakspeare.

There is nothing more in me, sir, but may be squeezed out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. Denham.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the buzzaing mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the nicest art,
Ragousts of peacocks brains, or filbert tart. King.

STOOPINGLY, stóóp'ing-lé.⁴²⁰ adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downward.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoopingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Wotton.

To STOP, stóp. v. a. [estouper, French; stopfare, Italian; stoppen, Dutch.]

1. To hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had Shall stop or spur me. Shakspeare.

2. To hinder from successive operation.

Can any dresses find a way
To stop th' approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd face? Dorset.

3. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

4. To hinder from action or practice.

Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakspeare.

As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Corinthians.

5. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing; to intercept.

Almon falls,
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war:
Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood,
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood.
Dryden.

6. To repress; to suspend.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his confidence, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South.

7. To suppress.

He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

8. To regulate musical strings with the fingers.

In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon.

9. To close an aperture.

Smite every fenced city, stop all wells of water, and mar lands with stones. 2 Kings.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Zech.

A hawk's bell, the hole stopped up, hang by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax. Bacon.

His majesty stopped a leak that did much harm. Bacon.

Stoppings and suffocations are dangerous on the body. Bacon.

They first raised an army with this design, to stop my mouth, or force my consent. King Charles.

Celsus gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be judged by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stopped. Arbuthnot.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop th' imagin'd way. Milton.

11. To garnish with proper punctuation.

To STOP, stóp. v. n.

1. To cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lips, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again.
Shakspeare.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

If the rude throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through. Gay.

2. To cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Lesley.

STOP, stóp. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakspeare.

The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise, at his full stop

Packs and shuts up her gaudy shop. Cleveland.

A lion, raving for his prey, made a stop on a sudden, at a hideous yelling noise, which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.

These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrassments of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.

My praise the Fabii elaim,
And thou, great hero, greatest of thy name,
Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden.

Oeult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger. and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and scantier. Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires, to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard to-night:
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outport discretion. Shakspeare.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them
breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakspeare.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.

The proud Duessa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so,
Infore'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.

On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their heading course. Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind musick are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakspeare.

Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's fimmer
To sound what stop she please. Shakspeare.

Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibæ; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classic author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The further a string is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in musick.

Th' organ-sound a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been asham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crashaw.

STO'P'COCK, stóp'kók. n. s. [from stop and cock.]
A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drive like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.

Bottles swunged, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flow. Bacon.

There were no shuts or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep.

STO'RAX, stór'ráks. n. s. [styrax, Latin.]

1. A plant.
2. A resinous and odoriferous gum.
I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh, as galbanum, and sweet storax. Ecclesiasticus.

STORE, stóre. n. s. [stor, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Danish; stoor, Islanick, is great. The Teutonick dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.
The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin,
With vanity had fill'd the works of men Milton.
Jove grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back. Dryden.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.
We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryd.
Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:
How has she oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought!
Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoarded.
Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deuteronomy.

4. Storehouse; magazine.
Sulphurous and nitrous foam,
Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.

STORE, stóre. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flow'd into Europe
by that action, so that the cause of christiandom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon.

TO STORE, stóre. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.
Wise Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.
Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stor'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles.
One having stor'd a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new seat of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope.

3. To lay up; to hoard.
Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stor'd up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STO'REHOUSE, stóre'hóuse. n. s. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and repositied against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain!
Shakspeare.

Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Genesis.

To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan hlood can wash away. Davies.

My heart has been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Milton.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass reposed.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. Fairy Queen.

STO'RER, stór'rúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from storc.] One who lays up

STO'RIED, stór'rid.²⁸³ adj. [from story.]
Furnished with storics; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophies arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STORK, stórk. n. s. [ꝛtopꝛ, Saxon; ciconia, Latin.] A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs, black: it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Calmel.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jeremias.

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way? Pope.

STO'RKSBILL, stórk'sbil. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

STORM, stórm. n. s. [ystorm, Welsh; ꝛtopm, Saxon; storm, Dutch; stormo, Italian.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride. Spenser.

That mortal ears might hardly endure the din.
Shakspeare.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.
A brave man struggling in the storms of fate.
Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.
As oft as we are deliver'd from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed.
Hooker.

To STORM, stôrm. v. a. [from the noun.]
To attack by open force.
From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town.
Dryden.

There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold.
Pope.

To STORM, stôrm. v. n.
1. To raise tempests.
So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour.
Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.
Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm.
When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds.
While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form.
Swift.

STO'RMY, stôrm'è. adj. [from storm.]
1. Tempestuous.
Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter strew the ground.
Addison.

The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie.
Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STO'RY, stô'rè. n. s. [ῥῆρον, Saxon;
storie, Dut. storia, Italian; ιστορία.]
1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren, the sons of Noah.
Raleigh.

While I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard.
Milton.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors.
Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons, actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved by such scientific principles.
Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force, yet by some slight miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found, but only in story.
South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Bern and Soleure, a monument erected by the republic of Bern tells us of the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers.
Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.
These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoris'd by her grandane.
Shakspeare.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Their feasts, their revels, and their am'rous flames!
Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her story books, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who came to be ladies.
Swift.

4. [ῥῆρον, place, Saxon.] A floor; a flight of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts.
Wotton.
Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house about two stories;
A lyric ode would slate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram would thatch.
Swift.

To STO'RY, stô'rè. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.
How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.
Shakspeare.

'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets, taught by th' heavenly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimæras and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to hell.
Milton.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms.
Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear
To wound with storied griefs the filial ear.
Pope.

2. To range one under another.
Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis.
Bentley.

STO'RYTELLER, stô'rè-tèl-lûr. n. s. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; a historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who miss'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon.
Dryden.
Company will be no longer pestered with dull,
dry, tedious storytellers.
Swift.

STOVE, stôve. n. s. [stoo, Islandick, a fireplace; ῥῆροα, Saxon; estuve, French;
stove, Dutch.]

1. A hearth; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight.
Carew.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make,
Fountains in autumn to bring winter back Beaum.

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults.
Woodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove.
Wiseman

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smooking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove.
Evelyn.

To STOVE, stôve. v. a. [from the noun.]
To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtils, if they be stoved; and sweet marjoram warm set.
Bacon.

To STOUND, stôund. v. n. [stunde, I grieved, Islandick.]

1. To be in pain or sorrow. Out of use.

2. For stunned.

STOUND, stôund. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use.

The Scots retain it.
Begin and end the bitter hateful stound,
If less than that I fear
Spenser.

The fox his copesmate found,
To whom complaining his unhappy stound,
He with him far'd some better chance to find.
Spenser.

2. Astonishment; amazement.
Thus we stood, as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground.
Gay.

3. Hour; time; season.

STOUR, stôur. n. s. [stur, Runick, a battle;
ῥεοπαν, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault;
incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly
bow'r.
Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty pow'r
Per force subdued my poor captiv'd heart,
And raging now therein with restless stow're,
Dost tyrannize in every weaker part.
Spenser.

The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrown a stony tower;
And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless,
He had been powder'd all as thin as flower,
But he was wary of that deadly stow're.
Spenser.

STOUT, stôut. adj. [stout, Dut. stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.
Shaksp.
Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,
And he 's a rascal who pretends to more.
Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.
The stout-hearted are spoiled.
Psalms.
He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be.
Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.
The lords all stand,
To clear their cause most resolutely stout.
Daniel.
There virtue and stout honour pass'd the guard,
Those only friends that could not be debarr'd Bathurst.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea.
Dryden.

STOUT, stôut. n. s. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse descending drop
A slice of bread and mutton chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,

Surprise him with a pint of stout,
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind. Swift.

STOU'TLY, stòù'tlè. adv. [from stout.]

Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOU'TNESS, stòù't'nès. n. s. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after. Ascham.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let

Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as stout a heart as thou. Shakspeare.

To STOW, stò. ³²⁴ v. a. [ꝛtop, Saxon;
stoc, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dut.
to lay up.] To lay up; to reposit in order;
to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! Where hast thou stow'd my daughter?
Shakspeare.

I th' holsters of the saddle-bow
Two aged pistols he did stow. Hudibras.
Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides.

Dryden.

All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines. Addison.

The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores,
And stow'd within its womb the naval stores. Pope.
So grieves the advent'rous merchant, when he throws

All his long-toil'd-for treasure his ship stows
Into the angry main. Carew.

STO'WAGE, stò'widge. ⁹⁰ n. s. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures when the cargo is pure hullion, or merchandize of a great value. Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage. Shakspeare.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, stò. whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon ꝛtop, a place. Gibson.

STRA'BISM, stráb'izm. n. s. [strabism, Fr.
strabismus, Latin.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

To STRA'DDLE, strá'd'dlè. ⁴⁰⁵ v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with handy legs. Arbutnot and Pope.

To STRA'GGLE, strág'glè. ⁴⁰⁶ v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from straviare, Italian, of extra viam, Lat.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees the journey's end,
I straggle on too far.

A wolf spied out a *straggl*ing kid, and pursued him. L'Estrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from *straggl*ing. Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor *straggl*ing soldiers with great quantity. Shakspeare.

They found in Burford some of the *straggl*ing soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind.

Clarendon.

Form *straggl*ing mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build, and them contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake. Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine
Of *straggl*ing branches, and improve the wine.

Anonymous.

Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the *straggl*ing rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a *straggl*ing house:
Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRA'GGLER, strág'gl-úr. ⁹⁸ n. s. [from
straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of *straggl*ers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser.

Let's whip these *straggl*ers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by *straggl*ers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands singly.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant *straggl*ers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryd.

His pruning hook corrects the vines,
And the loose *straggl*ers to their ranks confines.

Pope.

STRAIGHT, stráte. ²⁰² ³⁹³ adj. [strack, old Dutch. It is well observed by Ains- worth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait;
but for straight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.

Shakspeare.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines;
but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square goes round. Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Watts.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [estroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, straight at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked.

Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

Form *straggl*ing mountaineers, for publick good,

STRA'GGLER, strág'gl-úr. ⁹⁸ n. s. [from
straggle.]

Prudes decay'd about may tack,
Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

5. To put to its utmost strength.

By this we see, in a cause of religion, to how desperate adventures men will strain themselves for relief of their own part, having law and authority against them. Hooker.

Too well I wote my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been rugged and unkempt;
Yet as I con my cunning I will strain. Spenser.

Thus mine enemy fell,
And thus I set my foot on 's neck;—even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek; he sweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture,
That acts my words. Shakspeare.

My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long stood under, strain'd to th' height
In that celestial cology sublime,
As with an object that excels the sense,
Dazzled and spent, sunk down. Milton.

The lark and linnet sing with rival notes;
They strain their warbling throats
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

Nor yet content, she strains her malice more,
And adds new ills to those contriv'd before. Dryden.

It is the worst sort of good husbandry for a father not to strain himself a little for his son's breeding. Locke.

Our words flow from us in a smooth continued stream, without those strainings of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the hand, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury.

Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours
A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves. Thomson.

6. To make straight or tense.

A bigger string more strained, and a lesser string less strained, may fall into the same tone. Bacon.

Thou, the more he varies forms, beware,
To strain his fetters with a stricter care. Dryden.

7. To push beyond the proper extent.

See they suffer death;
But in their deaths remember they are men,
Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous. Addison.

There can be no other meaning in this expression, however some may pretend to strain it. Swift.

Your way is to wrest and strain some principles, maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

8. To force; to constrain; to make uneasy or unnatural.

The lark sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and displeasing sharps. Shakspeare.

He talks and plays with Fatima, but his mirth
Is fore'd and strained: in his looks appears
A wild distracted fierceness. Denham.

To STRAIN, strâine. v. n.

1. To make violent efforts.

To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Shakspeare.
You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakspeare.

They strain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
Their certain last, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Straining with too weak a wing,
We needs will write epistles to the king. Pope.

2. To be filtered by compression.

Cæsar thought that all sea sands had natural springs of fresh water; but it is the sea-water; because the pit filled according to the measure of the tide; and the sea-water, passing or straining through the sands, leaveth the saltness behind them. Bacon.

STRAIN, strâine. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An injury by too much violence.

Credit is gained by custom, and seldom recovers
a strain; but, if brokcn, is never well set again. Temple.

In all pain there is a deformity by a solution of continuity, as in cutting; or a tendency to solution, as in convulsions or strains. Grew.

2. [stränge, Saxon.] Race; generation; descent.

Thus far I can praise him; he is of a noble strain,
Of approv'd valour. Shakspeare.

Twelve Trojan youths, born of their noblest strains,
I took alive; and, yet enrag'd, will empty all their veins
Of vital spirits. Chapman.

Why dost thou falsely feign
Thyself a Sidney; from which noble strain
He sprung, that could so far exalt the name
Of love. Waller.

Turn then to Pharamond and Charlemagne,
And the long heroes of the Gallic strain. Prior.

3. Hereditary disposition.

Amongst these sweet knaves and all this courtesy!
the strain of man is bred out into haboon and monkey. Shakspeare.

Intemperance and lust breed diseases, which propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

4. A style or manner of speaking.

According to the genius and strain of the book of Proverbs, the words wisdom and righteousness are used to signify all religion and virtue. Tillotson.

In our liturgy are as great strains of true sublime eloquence, as are any where to be found in our language. Swift.

Macrobius speaks of Hippocrates' knowledge in very lofty strains. Baker.

5. Song; note; sound.

Wilt thou love such a woman? what, to make thee an instrument, and play false strains upon thee? Shakspeare.

Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber on a hed
Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half regain'd Eurydice. Milton.

Their heavenly harp a lower strain began,
And in soft music mourn the fall of man. Dryd.

When the first hold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain;

While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope.

Some future strain, in which the muse shall tell How science dwindles, and how volumes swell. Young.

6. Rank; character.

But thou who, lately of the common strain,
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art hound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

7. Turn; tendency; inborn disposition.

Because hereticks have a strain of madness, he applied her with some corporeal chastisements, which with respite of time might haply reduce her to good order. Hayward.

8. Manner of speech or action.

Such take too high a strain at the first, and are magnanimous more than tract of years can uphold;
as was Scipio Africanus, of whom Livy saith, "ultima primis cedebant." Bacon.

STRAINER, strâinûr. n. s. [from strain.]

An instrument of filtration.

The excrementitious moisture passeth in birds through a finer and more delicate strainer than it doth in beasts; for feathers pass through quills, and hair through skin. Bacon.

Shave the goat's shaggy heard, lest thou too late
In vain should seek a strainer to dispart

The husky terrene dregs from purer mist. Philips.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lactal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from its fæces. Arbuthnot.

These, when condens'd, the airy region pours
On the dry earth in rain or gentle showers;

Th' insinuating drops sink through the sand,
And pass the porous strainers of the land. Blackmore.

STRAIT, strâite. adj. [estroit, French; stretto, Italian.]

1. Narrow; close; not wide.

Witnesses, like watches, go,
Just as they're set, too fast or slow;
And, where in conscience they're straight lac'd,
'Tis ten to one that side is cast. Hudibras.

They are afraid to meet her, if they have missed the church; but then they are more afraid to see her, if they are faced as strait as they can possibly be. Lavo.

2. Close; intimate.

He, forgetting all former injuries, had received that naughty Plexirtus into a straight degree of favour: his goodness being as apt to be deceived, as the other's craft was to deceive. Sidney.

3. Strict; rigorous.

Therefore hold I strait all thy commandments;
and all false ways I utterly abhor. Psalms.

Fugitives are not relieved by the profits of their lands in England, for there is a straighter order taken. Spenser.

He now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees
That lay too heavy on the commonwealth. Shaksp.

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glo'ster,
Than from the evidence of good esteem
He he approv'd in practice culpable. Shakspeare.

4. Difficult; distressful.

5. It is used in opposition to crooked, but is then more properly written straight.
[See STRAIGHT.]

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the sight of the sounding body;
and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes as through straight ones. Newton.

STRAIT, strâite. n. s.

1. A narrow pass, or frith.

Plant garrisons to command the streights and narrow passages. Spenser.

Honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast. Shakspeare.

Fretum Magellanicum, or Magellan straits. Abbot.

They went forth unto the straits of the mountains. Judith.

The Saracens brought, together with their victories, their language and religion into all that coast of Africk, even from Egypt to the streights of Gibraltar. Brewerwood.

2. Distress; difficulty.

The independent party, which abhorred all motions towards peace, were in as great straits as the other how to carry on their designs. Clarendon.

It was impossible to have administered such advice to the king, in the strait he was in, which, being pursued, might not have proved inconvenient. Clarendon.

Thyself
Bred up in poverty and streights at home,
Lost in a desert here, and hunger-bit. Milton.

Thus Adam, sore beset, replied:
O Heav'n! in evil strait this day I stand Before my judge. Milton.

'Tis hard with me, whatever choice I make,
I must not merit you, or must forsake:

But in this strait to honour I'll be true,
And leave my fortune to the gods and you. Dryden.

Kings reduced to streights either by their own or by the negligence of their predecessors, have been always involved in dark and mean intrigues. Davenant.

Some modern authors, observing what straits they have been put to in all ages to find out water enough for Noah's flood, say Noah's flood was not universal, but a national inundation. Burnet.

Let no man who owns a providence grow desperate under any calamity or strait whatsoever, but compose the anguish of his thoughts upon this one consideration, that he comprehends not those strange unaccountable methods by which providence may dispose of him. South.

Cæsar sees

The straights to which you're driven, and as he knows

Cato's high worth, is anxious for your life. Addison.

Ulysses made use of the pretence of natural infirmity to conceal the straits he was in at that time in his thoughts. Broome.

She watches their time of need and adversity; and, if she can discover that they are in great straights or affliction, she gives them speedy relief. Lato.

To STRAIT, strâte. v. a. [from the noun.]
To put to difficulties.

If your lass

Interpretation should abuse, and call this

Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited

For a reply; at least, if you make care

Of happy holding her. Shakspeare.

To STRAITEN, *strâ't'n.*¹⁰³ v. a. [from strait.]

To drive or force upon the shallows.

Tarchon's alone was lost, and stranded stood,
Stuck on a bank, and beaten by the flood. Dryden.

I have seen of both those kinds from the sea, hut so few that they can only be such as have strayed from their main residence, and been accidentally intercepted and stranded by great storms. Woodward.

Some from the stranded vessel force their way,
Fearful of fate, they meet it in the sea;
Some, who escape the fury of the wave,
Sicken on earth, and sink into a grave. Prior.

STRANGE, strânje. adj. [estrange, Fr. extraneus, Latin.]

1. Foreign; of another country.

I do not contemn the knowledge of strange and divers tongues. Ascham.

The natural subjects of the state should bear a sufficient proportion to the strange subjects that they govern. Bacon.

2. Not domestick.

As the man loves least at home to be,
That hath a sluttish house, haunted with sprites;
So she, impatient her own faults to see,

Turns from herself, and in strange things delights. Davies.

3. Wonderful; causing wonder.

It is evident, and it is one of the strangest secrets in sounds, that the whole sound is not in the whole air only; but is also in every small part of the air. Bacon.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton.

Thus the strange cure to our spilt blood applied,
Sympathy to the distant wound does guide. Cowley.

It is strange they should be so silent in this matter, when there were so many occasions to speak of it, if our Saviour had plainly appointed such an infallible judge of controversies. Tillotson.

Strange to relate! from young Iulus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed. Dryden.

4. Odd; irregular; not according to the common way.

Desire my man's abode, where I did leave him:
He's strange and peevish. Shakspeare.

A strange proud return you may think I make you, madam, when I tell you it is not from every body I would be thus obliged. Suckling.

They were now like sand without lime, ill bound together, at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful. Bacon.

STRANGE, strânje. interj. An expression of wonder.

Strange! what extremes should thus preserve the snow

High on the Alps, or in deep caves below. Waller.

Strange! that fatherly authority should be the only original of government, and yet all mankind not know it. Locke.

To STRANGE, strânje. v. n. [from the adjective.] To wonder; to be astonished.

Were all the assertions of Aristotle such as theology pronounceth impieties, which we strange not at from one of whom a father saith, Nec Deum coluit, nec curavit. Glanville.

STRANGELY, strânje'lê. adv. [from strange.]

1. With some relation to foreigners.

As by strange fortune
It came to us, I do in justice charge thee
That thou commend it strangely to some place,
Where chance may nurse or end it. Shakspeare.

2. Wonderfully; in a way to cause wonder, but commonly with a degree of dislike.

My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret farther: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne. Shakspeare.

How strangely active are the arts of peace,
Whose restless motions less than wars do cease;
Peace is not freed from labour, but from noise;
And war more forc'd, but not more pains, employs. Dryden.

We should carry along with us some of those virtuous qualities, which we were strangely careless if we did not bring from home with us. Sprat.

In a time of affliction, the remembrance of our good deeds will strangely cheer and support our spirits. Calamy.

It would strangely delight you to see with what spirit he converses, with what tenderness he improves, with what affection he exhorts, and with what vigour he preaches. Law.

How strangely crowds misplace things and miscall! Madness in one is liberty in all. Harte.

STRANGENESS, stránj'nés. n. s. [from strange.]

1. Foreignness; the state of belonging to another country.

If I will obey the gospel, no distance of place, no strangeness of country, can make any man a stranger to me. Sprat.

Ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady. Shakespeare.

Will you not observe
The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
Shakespeare.

3. Remoteness from common manners or notions; uncouthness.

Men worthier than himself
Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on;
And undergo, in an observing kind,
His humorous predominance. Shakespeare.

4. Mutual dislike.

In this peace there was an article that no Englishman should enter into Scotland, and no Scottishman into England, without letters commendatory: this might seem a means to continue a strangeness between the nations; but it was done to lock in the borderers. Bacon.

5. Wonderfulness; power of raising wonder.

If a man for curiosity or strangeness sake, would make a puppet pronounce a word, let him consider the motion of the instruments of voice, and the like sounds made in inanimate bodies. Bacon.

This raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the strangeness and seeming unreasonableness of all the former articles. South.

STRANGER, strán'júr.^{9s} n. s. [estranger, French.]

1. A foreigner; one of another country.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent. Shakespeare.

Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger
Of here and every where. Shakespeare.

There is no place in Europe so much frequented by strangers, whether they are such as come out of curiosity, or such who are obliged to attend the court of Rome. Addison.

After a year's interregnum from the death of Romulus, the senate of their own authority chose a successor, and a stranger, merely upon the fame of his virtues. Swift.

2. One unknown.

Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss. Shakespeare.

Stray'd his affection in unlawful love? Shakespeare.

STRAY, strá. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any creature wandering beyond its limits; any thing lost by wandering.

She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken and impounded as a stray
The king of Scots. Shakespeare.

Should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day. Hudibras.

When he has traced his talk through all its wild rambles, let him bring home his stray, not like the lost sheep, with joy, but with tears of penitence.

Government of the Tongue.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray. Dryden.

He cries out, neighbour hast thou seen a stray
Of bullocks and of heifers pass this way? Addison.

2. Act of wandering.

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shakespeare.

STREAK, stréke.²²⁷ n. s. [strepice, Sax. streke, Dutch; stricia, Italian.] A line of colour different from that of the ground. Sometimes written strake.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare.

What mean those colour'd streaks in heav'n,
Distended, as the brow of God appears'd? Milton.

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive. Dryden.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear:
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear! Dryden.

While the fantastick tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak. Prior.

To STREAK, stréke. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stripe; to variegate in hues; to dapple.

All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakespeare.

A mule admirably streaked and dappled with white and black. Sandys.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flow'ry arbour. Milton.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon' azure sky;
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red,
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

2. To stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a glistly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, gloating round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

STRE'AKY, stré'ké. adj. [from streak.] Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green. Dryden.

STREAM, stréme.²²⁷ n. s. [stream, Sax. straum, Islandick; stroom, Dutch.]

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam. Shaksp.

He brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. Psalms.

Cocytus nam'd, of lamentation loud
Heard in the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage;
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth. Milton.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!
Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Thus from one common source our streams divide;
Our's is the Trojan, your's th' Arcadian side. Dryden.

Divided interests, while thou think'st to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away. Dryden.

2. Any thing issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone. Isaiah.

You, Drances, never want a stream of words. Dryden.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several rivulets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current. Atterbury.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of water. Raleigh.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion, against the current stream of antiquity. Locke.

4. Course; current.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must give him a better proclamation. Shakespeare.

To STREAM, stréme. v. n. [streyma, Islandick.]

And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies. Dryden.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,
Whose waving streamers the glad general knows. Dryden.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs:
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

STRE'AMY, stré'mé. adj. [from stream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

Arcadia,
However streamy now, adust and dry,
Denied the goddess water: where deep Melas
And rocky Cratis flow, the chariot smok'd Obscure with rising dust. Prior.

2. Flowing with a current.

Before him flaming, his enormous shield
Like the broad sun illumin'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray. Pope.

from the *strife*ful heap of thiugs, into which, as into a second chaos, we are fallen. Dr. Maine.

STRIGMENT, strig'mĕnt. n. s. [strigmen- tum, from stringo, Latin, to scrape.]

Scraping; recrement.

Many, besides the strigments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, acknowledge that nothing proceedeth from gold in its usual decoction. Brown.

To STRIKE, strike. v. a. preterit struck or strook; part. pass. struck, strucken, stricken, or strook. [αττικαν, Saxon;

streichen, Germ. adstrykia, Islandick;
stricker, Danish.]

1. To act upon by a blow; to hit with a blow.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakespeare.

We will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Cæsar, when I struck him, Proceeded thus. Shakespeare.

I must
But wail his fall, whom I myself struck down. Shakespeare.

Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength before he strook. Dryden.

2. To punish; to afflict.

To punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity. Proverbs.

3. To dash; to throw by a quick motion.

The blood strike on the two side-posts. Exodus.

4. To notify by sound.

The Windsor bell hath struck twelve. Shaksp.
The drums presently striking up a march, they plucked up their ensigns, and forward they go. Knolles.

A judicious friend moderates the pursuit, gives the signal for action, presses the advantage, and strikes the critical minute. Collier.

5. To stamp; to impress.

The memory in some men is very tenacious; but yet there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds the most retentive. Locke.

6. To contract; to lower; to vail. It is only used in the phrases to strike sail, or to strike a flag.

How many nobles then would hold their places,
That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort! Shakespeare.

To this all differing passions and interests should strike sail, and, like swelling streams running different courses, should yet all make haste into the sea of common safety. Temple.

They strike sail where they know they shall be mastered, and murder when they can with safety. Dryden.

Now, did I not so near my labour's end
Strike sail, and hast'ning to the harbour tend,
My song to flow'ry gardens might extend. Dryden.

7. To alarm; to put into emotion; to surprise.

Didst thou but view him right, shouldst see him black

With murder, treason, sacrilege, and crimes
That strike my soul with horror but to name them. Shakespeare.

The rest struck with horror stood,
To see their leader cover'd o'er with blood. Waller.

Jack Straw at London-stone, with all his rout, Struck not the city with so loud a shout. Dryden.

His virtues render our assembly awful.
They strike with something like religious fear. Addison.

We are no sooner presented to any one we never saw before, but we are immediately struck with the idea of a proud, a reserved, an affable, or a good-natured man. Addison.

Nice works of art strike and surprise us most upon the first view; but the better we are acquainted with them, the less we wonder. Atterbury.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate, Born where heav'n's influence scarce can penetrate; In life's low vale, the soil the virtues like, They please as beauties, here as wonders strike. Pope.

8. [fadus ferire.] To make a bargain.

Sign but his peace, he vows he'll ne'er again
The sacred names of fops and beaux profane:
Strike up the bargain quickly; for I swear
As times go now, he offers very fair. Dryden.

I come to offer peace; to reconcile
Past enmities; to strike perpetual leagues
With Vanoc. A. Philips.

9. To produce by a sudden action.

The court paved striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.

Waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes an universal peace through sea and land. Milton.

These men are fortune's jewels moulded bright,
Brought forth with their own fire and light;
If I her vulgar stone for either took,
Out of myself it must be struck. Cowley.

Take my caduceus!
With this th' infernal ghosts I can command,
And strike a terror through the Stygian strand. Dryden.

10. To affect suddenly in any particular manner.

When verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Shakspeare.

Strike her young hones,
Ye taking airs, with lameness. Shakspeare.

He that is stricken blind cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost. Shakspeare.

So ceas'd the rival crew, when Purcell came,
They sung no more, or only sung his fame,
Struck dumb, they all admir'd. Dryden.

Humility disarms envy, and strikes it dead. Collier.

Then do not strike him dead with a denial,
But hold him up in life. Addison.

11. To cause to sound by blows: with up only emphatical.

Strike up the drums, and let the tongue of war
Plead for our int'rest, and our being here. Shakspeare.

12. To forge; to mint.

Though they the lines on golden anvils beat,
It looks as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

Some very rare coins, struck of a pound weight, of gold and silver, Constantine sent to Chilperick. Arbuthnot.

13. It is used in the participle, I know not well how, for advanced in years.

The king
Is wise and virtuous, and his noble queen
Well struck in years; fair, and not jealous. Shakspeare.

14. To STRIKE off. To erase from a reckoning or account.

Deliver Helen, and all damage else
Shall be struck off. Shakspeare.

I have this while with leaden thoughts been prest;
But I shall in a more convenient time
Strike off this score of absence. Shakspeare.

When any wilful sin stands charg'd on our account, it will not be struck off till we forsake and turn away from it. Kettleworth.

Ask men's opinions: Scots now shall tell
How trade increases, and the world goes well:
Strike off his pension by the setting sun,
And Britain, if not Europe, is undone. Pope.

15. To STRIKE off. To separate by a blow, or any sudden action.

Germany had stricken off that which appeared
VOL. II.

corrupt in the doctrine of the church of Rome;
but seemed nevertheless in discipline still to retain therewith great conformity. Hooker.

They followed so fast that they overtook him,
and without further delay struck off his head. Knolles.

He was taken prisoner by Surinas, lieutenant-general for the king of Parthia, who stroke off his head. Hakewill.

A mass of water would be struck off and separate from the rest, and tossed through the air like a flying river. Burnet.

16. To STRIKE out. To produce by collision.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires,
My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new sparkles of her own. Dryden.

17. To STRIKE out. To blot; to efface.

By expurgatory animadversions, we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and, having once a conceded list, with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown.

To methodize is as necessary as to strike out. Pope.

18. To STRIKE out. To bring to light.

19. To STRIKE out. To form at once by a quick effort.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tints the colour'd mass,
And from the canvass call the mimic face. Pope.

To STRIKE, strike. v. n.

1. To make a blow.

I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death where I did hear him groan,
Nor feel him where he struck. Shakspeare.

It pleas'd the king
To strike at me upon his misconception,
When he tript me behind. Shakspeare.

He wither'd all their strength before he strook. Dryden.

2. To collide; to clash.

Holding a ring by a thread in a glass, tell him that holdeth it, it shall strike so many times against the side of the glass, and no more. Bacon.

3. To act by repeated percussion.

Bid thy mistress, when thy drink is ready,
She strike upon the hell. Shakspeare.

Those antique minstrels sure, were Charles-like
kings,
Cities their lutes, and subjects' hearts their strings;
On which with so divine a hand they strook,
Consent of motion from their breath they took. Waller.

4. To sound by the stroke of a hammer.

Cæsar, 't'us strucken eight. Shakspeare.

Deep thoughts will often suspend the senses so far, that about a man clocks may strike, and bells ring, which he takes no notice of. Grew.

5. To make an attack.

Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakspeare.

When, by their designing leaders taught To strike at power which for themselves they sought,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd,
Their blood to action by their prize was warn'd. Dryden.

6. To act by external influx.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyre;
hinder light but from striking on it, and its colours vanish. Locke.

7. To sound with blows.

Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakspeare.

8. To be dashed; to be stranded.

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor was, struck upon a sand, and there stuck fast. Knolles.

9. To pass with a quick or strong effect.

Now and then a glittering beam of wit or passion strikes through the obscurity of the poem: any of these effect a present liking, but not a lasting admiration. Dryden.

10. To pay homage, as by lowering the sail.

We see the wind sit sore upon our sails;
And yet we strike not, but securely perish. Shakspeare.

I'd rather chop this hand off at a blow,
And with the other fling it at thy face,
Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee. Shakspeare.

The interest of our kingdom is ready to strike to that of your poorest fishing towns: it is hard you will not accept our services. Swift.

11. To be put by some sudden act or motion into any state; to break forth.

It struck on a sudden into such reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly.
Government of the Tongue.

12. To STRIKE in with. To conform; to suit itself to; to join with at once.

Those who, by the prerogative of their age, should frown youth into sobriety, imitate and strike in with them, and are really vitious that they may be thought young. South.

They catch at every shadow of relief, strike in at a venture with the next companion, and so the dead commodity be taken off, care not who be the chapman. Norris.

The cares or pleasures of the world strike in with every thought. Addison.

He immediately struck in with them; but described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he sivered every joint. Addison.

13. To STRIKE out. To spread or rove; to make a sudden excursion.

In this plain was the last general rendezvous of mankind; and from thence they were broken into companies, and dispersed; the several successive generations, like the waves of the sea, over-reaching one another, and striking out farther and farther from the land. Burnet.

When a great man strikes out into a sudden irregularity, he needs not question the respect of a retinue. Collier.

STRIKE, strike. n. s. A bushel; a dry measure of capacity; four pecks.

Wing, cartnave, and hushel, peck, strike, ready at hand. Tisser.

STRIKEBLOCK, strike'blök. n. s. A plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint.

Moxon.

STRIKER, stri'kür.⁹⁸ n. s. [from strike.] Person or thing that strikes.

A bishop then must be blameless, not given to wine, no striker. 1 Timothy.

He thought with his staff to have struck the striker. Sandys.

The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity. Digby.

STRIKING, stri'king.⁴¹⁰ part. adj. [from strike.] Affecting; surprising.

1. A slender rope; a small cord; any slender and flexible band.

Any lower bullet hanging upon the other above it, must be conceived as if the weight of it were in that point where its string touches the upper. Wilkins.

2. A riband.

Round Ormond's knee thou tiest the mystick string,
That makes the knight companion to the king.

Prior.

3. A thread on which any things are filed.
Their priests pray by their beads, having a string with a hundred of nutshells upon it; and the repeating of certain words with them, they account meritorious. Stillingfleet.

4. Any set of things filed on a line.
I have caught two of these dark undermining vermin, and intend to make a string of them, in order to hang them up in one of my papers.

Spectator.

5. The chord of a musical instrument.
Thus when two brethren strings are set alike,
To move them both, but one of them we strike.

Cowley.

The string that jars
When rudely touch'd, ungrateful to the sense,
With pleasure feels the master's flying fingers,
Swells into harmony, and charms the hearers. Rowe.
By the appearance they make in marble, there is not one string-instrument that seems comparable to our violins. Addison.

6. A small fibre.
Duckweed putteth forth a little string into the water from the bottom. Bacon.
In pulling broom up, the least strings left behind will grow. Mortimer.

The most piteous tale, which in recounting,
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Shakspeare.
The string of his tongue loosed. Mark.

8. The nerve or line of the bow.
The wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrows upon the string. Psalms.
Th' impetuous arrow whizzes on the wing,
Sounds the tough horn, and twangs the quiv'ring string. Pope.

9. Any concatenation or series: as, a string of propositions.

10. To have two STRINGS to the Bow.
To have two views or two expedients;
to have double advantage, or double security.

No lover has that pow'r
T' enforce a desperate amour,
As he that has two strings to 's bow,
And burns for love and money too. Hudibras.

To STRING, string. v. a. preterit strung;
part. pass; strung. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with strings.
Has not wise nature strung the legs and feet
With firmest nerves, design'd to walk the street?
Gay.

2. To put a stringed instrument in tune.
Here the muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung. Addison.

3. To file on a string.
Men of great learning or genius are too full to be exact: and therefore chuse to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader, rather than he at the pains of stringing them. Spectator.

4. To make tense.
Toil strung the nerves, and purified the blood.
Dryden.

STRINGED, string'd. adj. [from string]
Having strings; produced by strings.
Praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

Divinely warbled voice
Answering the stringed noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took. Milton.

STRINGENT, strin'jént. adj. [stringens,
Latin.] Binding; contracting.

STRINGHALT, string'hált. n. s. [string and halt.]

Stringhalt is a sudden twitching and snatching up of the hinder leg of a horse much higher than the other, or an involuntary or convulsive motion of the muscles that extend or bend the hough. Far. Dict.

STRINGLESS, string'lés. adj. [from string.]
Having no strings.

Nothing; all is said;
His tongue is now a stringless instrument,
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
Shakspeare.

STRINGY, string'è. adj. [from string.] Fibrous; consisting of small threads; filamentous.

A plain indian fan, made of the small stringy parts of roots spread out in a round flat form.
Grew.

By melting, expensive sweats, and an obstinate flux of the helly, the stringy parts of the tendons and membranes are left unrecruited. Blackmore.
To STRIP, strip. v. a. [streofien, Dutch;
βερεπιπε, stripped, Saxon.]

1. To make naked; to deprive of covering; with of before the thing taken away.

They began to strip her of her cloaths when I came in among them. Sidney.

They strip Joseph out of his coat. Genesis.
Scarce credible it is how soon they were stript
and laid naked on the ground. Hayward.

Hadst thou not committed
Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Askelon, who never did thee harm,
Then like a robber stripp'dst them of their robes.
Milton.

You cloath all that have no relation to you, and strip your master that gives you food. L'Estrange.
A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stript them bare. Dryden.

He saw a hauteous maid,
With hair dishevell'd, issuing through the shade,
Strip of her cloaths. Dryden.

He left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without controul to strip and spoil the dead.
Dryden.

The bride was put in form to bed;
He follow'd stript. Swift.

2. To deprive; to devest.
The apostle, in exhorting men to contentment, although they have in this world no more than bare food and raiment, giveth us to understand that those are even the lowest of things necessary; that, if we should be stript of all these things, without which we might possibly be, yet these must be left.
Hooker.

Now this curious built Phœacian ship,
Returning from her convoy, I will strip
Of all her fleeting matter. Chapman.

We strip and divest ourselves of our own will,
and give ourselves entirely up to the will of God.
Duppa.

It is difficult to lead another by words into the thoughts of things, stripped of those specifick differences we give them. Locke.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease and affluence, not of one just stript of all those advantages, and plunged in the deepest miseries, and now sitting naked upon a dunghill. Atterbury.

3. To rob; to plunder; to pillage: as, a thief stripped the house.

That which lays a man open to an enemy, and that which strips him of a friend, equally attacks him in all those interests that are capable of being weakened by the one, and supported by the other.
South.

4. To peel; to decorticate.
If the leaves or dried stocks be stripped into small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no other ways than those of wheat or rye.
Brown.

5. To deprive of all.
When some fond easy fathers strip themselves before they lie down to their long sleep, and settle their whole estates upon their sons, has it not been seen that the father has been requited with beggary?

South.

6. To take off covering; with off empha-tical.

He stript off his cloaths. 1 Samuel.
Logic helps us to strip off the outward disguise of things, and to behold and judge of them in their own nature. Watts.

7. To cast off. Not in use.
His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters: these things sting him.
Shakspeare.

8. To separate from something adhesive or connected. Not accurately used Amongst men who examine not scrupulously their own ideas, and strip them not from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, were must be endless dispute. Locke.

STRIP, strip. n. s. [probably for strie.] A narrow shred.

These two apartments were hung in close mourning, and only a strip of bays round the other rooms.
Swift.

To STRIPE, stripe. v. a. [strefien, Dutch.]
1. To variegate with lines of different colours.

2. To beat; to lash.

STRIPE, stripe. n. s. [strefte, Dutch.]
1. A lineary variation of colour. This seems to be the original notion of the word.

Gardeners may have three roots, among an hundred, that are rare, as purple and carnation of several stripes. Bacon.

2. A shred of a different colour.
One of the most valuable trimmings of their cloaths was a long stripe sowed upon the garment called latus clavus. Arbutnot.

3. A weal, or discolouration made by a lash or blow.
Cruelty marked him with inglorious stripes.
Thomson.

4. A blow; a lash.
A body cannot be so torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions. Hayward.
To those that are yet within the reach of the stripes and reproofs of their own conscience, I would address that they would not seek to remove themselves from that wholesome discipline.
Decay of Piety.

STRIPED, stri'péd. part. adj. [from stripe.]
Distinguished by lines of different colour.

STRIPPLING, strip'pling.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] A youth; one in the state of adolescence.

'Thwart the lane,
He, with two striplings, lads more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter,
Made good the passage. Shakspeare.

Now a stripling cherub he appears,
Not of the prime, yet such as in his face
Youth smil'd celestial. Milton.

Compositions on any important subjects are not matters to be wrung from poor striplings, like blood out of the nose, or the plucking of untimely fruit.
Milton.

As when young striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine whirls. Dryden.

As every particular member of the body is nourished with a several qualified juice, so children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbutnot.

STRIPPER, strip'pūr. n. s. [from strip.]

One that strips.

To STRIVE, strive. v. n. pret. I strove, anciently I strived; part. pass. striven.
[streven, Dutch; estriver, Fr.]

1. To struggle; to labour; to make an effort.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.

Many brave young minds have, through hearing the praises and eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to affect the like commendations, and so strive to the like deserts. Spenser.

Strive with me in your prayers to God for me.

So have I strived to preach the gospel. Romans.

Was it for this that Rome's best blood he spilt,

With so much falsehood, so much guilt?

Was it for this that his ambition strove

To equal Cæsar first, and after Jove? Cowley.

Our blessed Lord commands you to strive to enter in; because many will fail, who only seek to enter.

These thoughts he strove to bury in expence,

Rich meats, rich wines, and vain magnificence.

2. To contest; to contend; to struggle in opposition to another: with against or with before the person opposed.

Do as adversaries do in law;

Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.

Strive for the truth unto death. Ecclesiasticus.

Why dost thou strive against him? Job.

Charge them that they strive not about words, to no profit. 2 Timothy.

Avoid contentions and strivings about the law.

This is warrantable conflict for trial of our faith; so that these strivings are not a contending with superior powers. L'Estrange.

Thus does every wicked man that contemns God; who can save or destroy him who strives with his Maker?

If intestine broils alarm the hive,

For two pretenders oft for empire strive,

The vulgar in divided factions jar,

And murmur'ing sounds proclaim the civil war.

3. To oppose by contrariety of qualities.

Now private pity strove with publick hate,

Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.

4. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence.

Nor that sweet grove

Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd

Castalian spring, might with this paradise

Of Eden strive.

5. To oppose by contrariety of qualities.

Now private pity strove with publick hate,

Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.

6. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence.

Nor that sweet grove

Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd

Castalian spring, might with this paradise

Of Eden strive.

Now private pity strove with publick hate,

Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.

14. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence.

Nor that sweet grove

2. A hostile blow.

As cannon overcharg'd with double cracks,

So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaksp.

He entered, and won the whole kingdom of Naples, without striking a stroke. Bacon.

Both were of shining steel and wrought so pure,

As might the strokes of two such arms endure.

3. A sudden disease or affliction.

Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. Shaksp.

At this one stroke the man look'd dead in law;

His flatterers scamper, and his friends withdraw.

4. The sound of the clock.

What is 't o'clock?

—Upon the stroke of four. Shaksp.

5. The touch of a pencil.

Oh lasting as those colours may they shine!

Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line. Pope.

6. A touch; a masterly or eminent effort.

Another in my place would take it for a notable stroke of good breeding, to compliment the reader.

The boldest strokes of poetry, when managed artfully, most delight the reader. Dryden.

As he purchased the first success in the present war, by forcing into the service of the confederates an army that was raised against them, he will give one of the finishing strokes to it, and help to conclude the great work. Addison.

A verdict more puts me in possession of my estate; I question not but you will give it the finishing stroke. Arbutnot.

Isidore's collection was the great and bold stroke, which in its main parts has been discovered to be an impudent forgery. Baker.

7. An effect suddenly or unexpectedly produced.

8. Power; efficacy.

These having equal authority for instruction of the young prince, and well agreeing, bare equal stroke in divers faculties. Hayward.

Perfectly opacous bodies can but reflect the incident beams; those that are diaphanous refract them too, and that refraction has such a stroke in the production of colours generated by the trajection of light through drops of water, that exhibit a rainbow through divers other transparent bodies. Boyle.

He has a great stroke with the reader, when he condemns any of my poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

The subtle effluvia of the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation. Ray.

To STROKE, strôke. v. a. [ΓΡΑΨΑΝ, Sax.]

1. To rub gently with the hand by way of kindness or endearment; to soothe.

Thus children do the silly birds they find

With stroaking hurt, and too much cramming kill. Sidney.

The senior weaned his younger shall teach,

More stroken and made of when aught it doth aile,

More gentle ye make it for yoke or the pale. Tusser.

Thy praise or dispraise is to me alike,

 That could endure the toothach patiently,
 However they have writ the style of gods,
 And make a pish at chance and sufferance. Shakspeare.

3. Mode of painting.
 The great stile stands alone, and does not require, perhaps does not as well admit, any addition from inferior beauties. The ornamental stile also possesses its own peculiar merit; however, though the union of the two may make a sort of composite stile, yet that stile is likely to be more imperfect than either of those which go to its composition. Reynolds.

4. It is likewise applied to musick.

5. Title; appellation.
 Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his stile:
 thou shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Shakespeare.
 The king gave them in his commission the style and appellation which belonged to them. Clarendon.
 O virgin! or what other name you bear
 Above that style, O more than mortal fair!
 Let not an humble suppliant sue in vain. Dryden.
 Propitious hear our pray'r,
 Whether the style of Titan please thee more,
 Whose purple rays th' Achæmenes adore. Pope.

6. Course of writing. Unusual.
 While his thoughts the ling'ring day beguile,
 To gentle Arcite let us turn our style. Dryden.

7. STYLE of Court, is properly the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding. Ayliffe.

8. A pointed iron used anciently in writing on tables of wax.

9. Any thing with a sharp point: as a graver, the pin of a dial.
 Placing two stiles or needles of the same steel, touched with the same loadstone, when one is removed but half a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

10. The stalk which arises from amid the leaves of a flower.
 Style is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the fruit or seed: 'tis usually slender and long, whence it has its name. Quincy.
 The figure of the flower-leaves, stamina, apices, stile and seed-vessel. Ray.

To STYLE, stile. v. a. [from the noun.]
 To call; to term; to name.
 The chancellor of the exchequer they had no mind should he styled a knight. Clarendon.
 Err not that so shall end
 The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style
 The strife of glory. Milton.
 Fortune's gifts, my actions
 May stile their own rewards. Denham.
 Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to stile it impudence in any one who shall stand out. Locke.
 His conduct might have made him stil'd
 A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STY'PTICK, stîp'tîk. } adj. [στυπτικός;
 STY'PTICAL, stîp'tîk-âl. } styptique, Fr.
 This is usually, though erroneously, written stiptick.] The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringents, or those which are applied to stop hemorrhages. Quincy.
 Fruits of trees and shrubs contain phlegm, oil, and an essential salt, by which they are sharp, sweet, sour, or styptick. Arbuthnot.
 There is a sour styptick salt diffused through the earth, which passing a concoction in plants, becomes milder. Brown.

 From spirit of salt, carefully dephlegmed and removed into lower glasses, having gently abstracted the whole, there remained in the bottom, and the neck of the retort, a great quantity of a certain dry and stiptical substance, mostly of a yellowish colour. Boyle.
 In an effusion of blood, having dossils ready dipt in the royal stiptick, we applied them. Wiseman.

STYPTICITY, stip-tis'è-tè. n. s. The power of stanching blood.
 Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Floyer.

To STY'THY, stîth'è. v. a. [See STITHY.]
 To forge on an anvil.
 By the forge that stythied Mars his helm,
 I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. Shakespeare.

SUA'SIBLE, swâ'sè-bl. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Easy to be persuaded.

SUA'SIVE, swâ'siv.⁴²⁸ adj. [from suadeo, Latin.] Having power to persuade.
 It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was but suasive and political, yet it had the force of coercion, and despotical. South.

SUA'SORY, swâ'sûr-è.⁴²⁹ ⁶¹² ⁶⁵⁷ adj. [suasorius, Latin.] Having tendency to persuade.

SUA'VITY, swâv'è-tè.⁶¹¹ n. s. [suavitè, Fr. suavitas, Latin.]

SUB, sùb, in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUB'CID, sùb-âs'sîd. adj. [sub and acidus, Latin.] Sour in a small degree.
 The juice of the stem is like the chyle in the animal body, not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly subacid in all plants. Arbuthnot.

SUB'CRID, sùb-âk'krîd. adj. [sub and acidus.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.
 The green cholera of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Floyer.

To SUB'CT, sùb-âkt'. v. a. [subactus, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.
 Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

SUB'CTION, sùb-âk'shûn. n. s. [subactus, Latin.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.
 There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation: whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon.

SUB'ALTERN, sùb-âl-tèrn. adj. [subalterne, French.] Inferiour; subordinate; that in different respects is both superiour and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.
 Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
 Like watchmen round their chief appear;
 Each had his lantern in his hand,
 And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.
 There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Addison.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels toward their officers: yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watts.

SUBALTE'RNATE, sŭb-âl-têr'nâte. adj. [subalternus, Latin.] Succeeding by turns. Dict.

SUBASTRÍNGENT, sŭb-âs-strín'jênt. adj. [sub and astringent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBE'ADLE, sŭb-bê'dl. n. s. [sub and beadle.] An under beadle.

They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons. Ayliffe.

SUBCELE'STIAL, sŭb-sê-lê's'tshâ'l. adj. [sub and celestial.] Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these. Glanville.

SUBCHA'NTER, sŭb-tshân'tŭr. n. s. [sub and chanter; succentor, Latin.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

SUBCLA'VIAN, sŭb-klá'vê-ân. adj. [sub and clavus, Latin.]

Subclavian is applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle. Quincy.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm. Brown.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Arbuthnot.

SUBCONSTELLATION, sŭb-kôn-stêi-lâ'shŭn. n. s. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover. Brown.

SUBCON'TRARY, sŭb-kôn-trâ-rê. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferior degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are subcontraries; as, some vine is a tree; some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false. Watts.

SUBCON'TRACTED, sŭb-kôn-trâk'têd. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,

I bar it in the interest of my wife;

'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,

And I her husband contradict your banes. Shakspeare.

SUBCUTA'NEOUS, sŭb-kŭ-tâ'nê-ŭs. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDE'ACON, sŭb-dê'k'n. n. s. [subdiaconus, Latin.]

In the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant. Ayliffe.

SUBDE'AN, sŭb-dê-nê'. n. s. [subdecanus, Latin.] The vicegerent of a dean.

Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only. Ayliffe.

SUBDE'UPLE, sŭb-dêk'kŭ-pl. adj. [sub and decuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISO'RIOUS, sŭb-dêr-ê-sô'rê-ŭs. adj. [sub and derisor.] Scoffing or ridiculing with tenderness and delicacy. Not used.

This subderisorious mirth is far from giving any offence to us: it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation. More.

SUBDITI'TIOUS, sŭb-dê-tish'ŭs. adj. [subditiuus, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVE'RSIFY, sŭb-dê-vêr'sê-ti. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras; and these variously subdiversified according to the fancy of the artificer. Hale.

To SUBDIVE'DE, sŭb-dê-vidê'. v. a. [subdiviser, French, sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two beams, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number threeten. Bacon.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child, When he can subdivide a fraction. Roscommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

SUBDIVI'SION, sŭb-dê-vizh'ŭn. n. s. [subdivision, French; from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther subdivided into minutes and seconds. Watts.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one? Addison.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbuthnot.

SUBDOLOUS, sŭb-dô-lŭs. adj. [subdolosus, Latin.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

To SUBDU'CE, sŭb-dŭsê'. v. a. [subduco, To SUBDU'CT, sŭb-dŭkt'. v. a. [subductus, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.

Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part

Not proof enough such object to sustain;

Or from my side subducting, took perhaps

More than enough. Milton.

2. To subtract by arithmetical operation.

Take the other operation of arithmetic, subduction; if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite. Hale.

SUBDU'CTION, sŭb-dŭk'shŭn. n. s. [from subduct.]

1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the divine beneficence subducting that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction. Hale.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.

Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetic, subduction: if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduct ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite. Hale.

To SUBDU'E, sŭb-dŭ'. v. a. [from subdo, or subjugo, Latin.]

1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdued nature To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters. Shakspeare.

Them that rose up against me hast thou subdued under me. 2 Samuel.

If aught were worthy to subdue The soul of man. Milton.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.

Be fruitful and replenish the earth, and subdue it. Genesis.

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire. Peacham.

To overcome in battle, and subdue Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Sprat.

3. To tame; to subact; to break.

Nor is 't unwholesome to subdue the land By often exercise; and where before You broke the earth, again to plow. May.

SUBDU'EMENT, sŭb-dŭ'mênt. n. s. [from subdue.] Conquest. Not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee, As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed Bravely despising forfeits and subduements. Shakspeare.

SUBDU'ER, sŭb-dŭ'ŭr. n. s. [from subdue.] Conqueror; tamer.

Great god of might, that reigneth in the mind, And all the body to thy hest dost frame; Victor of gods, subduer of mankind, That dost the lion and fell tiger tame, Who can express the glory of thy might? Spenser.

Their curious eye Discerns their great subduer's awful mien And corresponding features fair. Philips.

Figs are great subduers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient. Arbuthnot.

SUBDU'PLE, sŭb-dŭ-pl. adj.

SUBDU'PLICATE, sŭb-dŭ'plê-kâte. [subduplex, French; sub and duplus, Latin.]

Containing one part of two. As one of these under pulleys doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subduplex proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subsextuple. Wilkins.

The motion, generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces. Newton.

SUBJA'CENT, sŭb-jâ'sênt. adj. [subjacens, Lat.] Lying under.

The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains. Woodward.

To SUBJE'CT, sŭb-jêkt'. v. a. [subjectus, Lat.]

1. To put under.

The angel Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast To the subjected plain. Milton.

- The medal bears each form and name:
In one short view, subjected to our eye,
Gods, emp'rors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.
2. To reduce to submission; to make subordinate; to make submissive.
Think not, young warriors, your diminished name
Shall lose of lustre, by subjecting rage
To the cool dictates of experieuc'd age. Dryden.
3. To enslave; to make obnoxious.
I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
Taste grief, need friends, like you, subjected thus,
How can you say to me I am a king? Shakspeare.
I see thee, in that fatal hour,
Subjected to the victor's cruel pow'r,
L'd hence a slave. Dryden.
The blind will always be led by those that see,
or fall into the ditch; and he is the most subjected,
the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.
4. To expose; to make liable.
If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniences of an erroneous circulation. Arbuthnot.
5. To submit; to make accountable.
God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.
6. To make subservient.
He subjected to man's service angel wings. Milton.
- SUBJECT, sŭb'jĕkt. adj. [subjectus, Lat.]
1. Placed or situate under.
Th' eastern tower,
Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale
To see the fight. Shakspeare.
2. Living under the dominion of another.
Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.
Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father; and will be so also in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial kingdom. Waterland.
3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
And he the noble image of my youth
Is overspread with them. Shakspeare.
All human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons monarchs must obey. Dryden.
4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.
I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.
- SUBJECT, sŭb'jĕkt.⁴⁹² n. s. [suĵet, Fr.]
1. One who lives under the dominion of another: opposed to governour.
Every subject's duty is the king's,
But every subject's soul is his own. Shakspeare.
Never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject Shakspeare.
Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign. Davies.
We must understand and confess a king to be a father, a subject to be a son; and therefore honour to be by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Holyday.
The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.
Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did forc'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the publick voice. Dryden.
Heroick kings, whose high perfections have made them awful to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times. Davenant.
2. That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakspeare.

- This subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.
Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Decay of Piety.
I will not venture on so nice a subject with my severer style. More.
Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which, being capable of all the graces that colours and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.
The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts.
My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.
3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.
Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects, in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.
4. [In grammar.] The nominative case to a verb is called by grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke.
- SUBJECTION, sŭb-jĕk'shŭn. n. s. [from subject.]
1. The act of subduing.
After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Hale.
2. [soujettion, French.] The state of being under government.
Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary, we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.
How hard is it now for him to frame himself to subjection, that having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement. Spenser.
Both in subjection now to sensual appetite. Milton.
- SUBJECTIVE, sŭb-jĕk'tiv. adj. [from sub- ject.] Relating not to the object, but the subject.
Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.
- SUBINGRESSSION, sŭb-in-grĕsh'ŭn. n. s.
[sub and ingressus, Latin.] Secret entrance.
The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingress- sion of its parts. Boyle.
- To SUBJOIN, sŭb-jŏin'. v. a. [sub and joindre, Fr. subjungo, Lat.] To add at the end; to add afterward.
He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and sub- joins a reason. South.
- SUBITANEOUS, sŭb-ĕ-tā'nĕ-ŭs.³¹⁴ adj.
[subitanus, Lat.] Sudden; hasty.
- To SUBJUGATE, sŭb'jŭ-gāte. v. a.
[subjuguer, Fr. subjugo, Lat.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion
by force.
O fav'rite virgin, that hast warm'd the breast
Whose sovereign dictates subjugate the east! Prior.
He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.
- SUBJUGATION, sŭb-jŭ-gā'shŭn. n. s. [from subjugate.] The act of subduing.

- This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks. Hale.
- SUBJUNCTION, sŭb-jŭng'shŭn. n. s.
[from subjungo, Latin.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.
The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation;
and in dependence upon, or subjunction to,
some other verb. Clarke.
- SUBJUNCTIVE, sŭb-jŭng'tiv. adj. [sub- junctivus, Lat. subjunctif, Fr.]
1. Subjoined to something else.
2. In grammar.
The verb undergoes a different formation to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely, but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood. Clarke.
- SUBLAPSARIAN, sŭb-lāp-sā'rĕ-ān. } adj.
SUBLAPSARY, sŭb-lāp'sā-rĕ. } [sub and lapsus, Latin.] Done after the fall of man.
The decree of reprobation, according to the sub- lapsarian doctrine, being nothing else but a mere preterition or non-election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they. Hammond.
- SUBLATION, sŭb-lā'shŭn. n. s. [sublatio,
Latin.] The act of taking away.
- SUBLEVATION, sŭb-lĕ-vā'shŭn. n. s. [sub- levo, Latin.] The act of raising on high.
- SUBLIMABLE, sŭb-lĭ-mā-bl. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.
- SUBLIMABLENESS, sŭb-lĭ-mā-bl-nĕs. n. s.
[from sublimable.] Quality of admitting sublimation.
He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common salt armoniac. Boyle.
- To SUBLIMATE, sŭb'lĕ-māte.⁹¹ v. a. [from sublime.]
1. To raise by the force of chymical fire.
2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.
And as his actions rose, so raise they still their vein
In words, whose weight best suits a sublimated strain. Drayton.
Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Decay of Piety.
The precepts of christianity are so excellent and refin'd, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it. Decay of Piety.
- SUBLIMATE, sŭb'lĕ-māt.⁹¹ n. s. [from
sublime.]
1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.
Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimated makes. Bacon.
2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.
- SUBLIMATE, sŭb'lĕ-māte. adj. Raised by fire in the vessel.
The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimated;
and, with the particles of sulphur, cinabar. Newton.
- SUBLIMATION, sŭb-lĕ-mā'shŭn. n. s. [sub- limation, Fr. from sublime.]
1. A chymical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.
Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed, being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

Since oil of sulphur per campanum is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation? Newton.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns

Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Davies.

Shall be pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality. South.

SUBLIME, sùb-blime'. adj. [sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly strained to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.

Can it be, that souls sublime,

Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the gen'rous mind, releas'd by death,
Can cover lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in stile thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.

Their hearts were jocund and sublime,

Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine. Milton.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Wotton.

His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd

Absolute rule. Milton.

SUBLIME, sùb-blime'. n. s. The grand or lofty style. The sublime is a gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Addison.

To SUBLIME, sùb-blime'. v. a. [sublimar,

French; from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chymical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me:
Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itself sublime,

Yct, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flow'rs, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,

To vital spirits aspire. Milton.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential. Glanville.

Art, being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature, and that which is low in her. Dryden.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;

Which not alone the southern winds *sublim*es,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

To SUBLIME, sùb-blime'. v. n. To rise in the chymical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniack in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbuthnot.

SUBLIMELY, sùb-blime'lè. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

Fustian's so sublimely bad;

It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMENESS, sùb-blime'nés. n. s. [sublimitas, Lat.] The same as sublimity.

SUBLIMITY, sùb-blím'é-té. n. s. [from sublime; sublimité, French; sublimitas, Latin.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL, sùb-ling'gwál. adj. [sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Latin.]

Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted,
before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBLUNAR, sùb-lù'nár. } adj. [sub-

SUBLUNARY, sùb'lù-nâr-è.⁶⁰³ } lunaire, Fr.

sub and luna, Latin.] Situate beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunary vault. Milton.

Through seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discovering still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to chance, remain in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden.

Ould had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And scorps, Poitier, this sublunary dance. Young.

SUBMARINE, sùb-mâ-réén'. adj. [sub and mare, Latin.] Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray.

To SUBMERGE, sùb-mérjè'. v. a. [sub- merger, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown;
to put under water.

So half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for seal'd snakes. Shakspeare.

SUBMERSION, sùb-mèr'shùn. n. s. [sub- mersion, French; from submersus, Latin.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion. Hale.

To SUBMINISTER, sùb-mín'is-túr. }
To SUBMINISTRATE, sùb-mín'is-tráte. }
v. a. [subministro, Lat.] To supply; to afford. Not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministered unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks. Harvey.

To SUBMINISTER, sùb-mín'is-túr. v. n.

To subserv; to be useful to.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes. L'Estrange.

SUBMISS, sùb-mis'. adj. [from submis- sus, Latin.] Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and cloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him. Bacon.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, howed low. Milton.

Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION, sùb-mish'ùn. n. s. [submit- tion, French; submitus, Latin.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakspeare.

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakspeare.

Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more Than c'er your haughty courage won before. Halifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence. Shakspeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE, sŭb-mis'siv.²²⁵ adj. [submissus, Lat.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent?
Shakspeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton.
Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY, sŭb-mis'siv-lè. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryden.
But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;
Then pious silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS, sŭb-mis'siv-nès. n. s. [from submissive.] Humility; confession of fault or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fraughtly gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts shuts that out of his story;
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMISSLY, sŭb-mis'lè. adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission.
Humility consists, not in wearing mean clothes, and going softly and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself. Taylor.

To SUBMIT, sŭb-mit'. v. a. [soumettre, French; submitto, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.
Sometimes the hill submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of water at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands. Genesis.
Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers. White.
Will ye submit your neck, and chuse to bend the supple knee? Milton.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.
Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Swift.

To SUBMIT, sŭb-mit'. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule. Mil.
Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death. Rogers.

SUBMULTIPLE, sŭb-mŭl'tè-pl. n. s. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number, a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBOCTAVE, sŭb-òk'tàve. } adj. [sub SUBOCTUPLE, sŭb-òk'tù-pl. } and octa- vus, Latin; and octuple.] Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion; so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple, four a suboctuple. Wilkins.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congius, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congius into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm; this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Arbuthnot.

SUBORDINACY, sŭb-òr'dè-nâ-sè. } n. s.
SUBORDINANCY, sŭb-òr'dè-nân-sè. }
[from subordinate. Subordinacy is the proper and analogical word.]

1. The state of being subject.
Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason. Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.
The subordinancy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the pursuit of the publick interests. Temple.

SUBORDINATE, sŭb-òr'dè-nât.⁹¹ adj. [sub and ordinatus, Latin.]

1. Inferior in order, in nature, in dignity or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding; not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty. South.

Whether dark presages of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.
The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather courtiers than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

His next subordinate
Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spake. Milton.
These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Woodward.

To SUBORDINATE, sŭb-òr'dè-nâte. v. a. [sub and ordino, Latin.] To range under another. Not in use, but proper and elegant.

If I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture, as their mistress, so there are other inferior arts subordinate to them. Walton.

SUBORDINATELY, sŭb-òr'dè-nât-lè. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others subordinately tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. Decay of Piety.

SUBORDINATION, sŭb-òr'dè-nâ'shŭn. n. s. [subordination, French; from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferior to another.
Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.
The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred. Holyday.

3. Place of rank.
If we would suppose a ministry where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed. Swift.

To SUBORN, sŭb-òrn'. v. a. [suborner, French; suborno, Latin.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hooker.
Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. Shakspeare.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd,
And fall into deception. Milton.
His artful bosom heaves dissembling sighs;
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes. Prior.

2. To procure by indirect means.

Behold
Those who by ling'ring sickness lose their breath,
And those who by despair suborn their death. Dryden.

SUBORNATION, sŭb-òr-nâ'shŭn. n. s. [subornation, French; from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was through false subordination of the queen of Edward IV brought to his death at Tredah most unjustly. Spenser.

You set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murder's subornation. Shakspeare.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation. Swift.

SUBORNER, sŭb-òr'nŭr.⁹⁸ n. s. [suborneur, French; from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

SUBPOENA, sŭb-pè'nâ. n. s. [sub and paena, Latin.] A writ commanding attendance in a court, under a penalty.

SUBQUADRUPLE, sŭb-kwòd'drù-pl. adj. [sub and quadruple.] Containing one part of four.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath in itself, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it; so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion. Wilkins.

SUBQUINTUPLE, sŭb-kwîn'tù-pl. adj. [sub and quintuple.] Containing one part of five.

If under the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion. Wilkins.

SUBRECTOR, sŭb-rèk'tŭr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [sub and rector.] The rector's vicegerent.

He was chosen subrector of the college. Walton.

SUBREPTION, sŭb-rèp'shŭn. n. s. [subreption, French; subreptus, Latin.] The act of obtaining a favour by surprise or unfair representation. Dict.

SUBREPTITIOUS, sŭb-rèp-tish'ŭs. adj. [surreptice, French; surreptitius, Lat.] Fraudulently obtained from a superiour, by concealing some truth which would have prevented the grant. Bailey.

To SUBROGATE, sŭb-rò-gâte. v. a. [subrogato, Latin.] See SURROGATE.

To SUBSCRIBE, sŭb-skribe'. v. a. [souscrire, French; subscribo, Latin.]

1. To give consent to, by underwriting the name.

They united by subscribing a covenant, which they pretended to be no other than had been subscribed in the reign of king James, and that his majesty himself had subscribed it; by which imposition people of all degrees engaged themselves in it.

Clarendon.

The reader sees the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed.

Addison.

2. To attest by writing the name.

Their particular testimony ought to be better credited, than some other subscribed with an hundred hands.

Whitgift.

3. To submit. Not used.

The king gone to night! subscrib'd his pow'r!
Confin'd to exhibition! all is gone.

Shakspeare.

To SUBSCRIBE, sũb-skribe'. v. n.

1. To give consent.

Osius, with whose hand the Nicene creed was set down, and framed for the whole christian world to subscribe unto, so far yielded in the end, as even with the same hand to ratify the Arians confession.

Hooker.

Advise thee what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice.

Shaksp

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscrib'd.

Shakspeare.

So spake much humbled Eve; but fate
Subscrib'd not: nature first gave signs, impress'd
On hird, beast, air.

Milton.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRIBER, sũb-skri'bũr. n. s. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. One who subscribes.

2. One who contributes to any undertaking.

Let a pamphlet come out upon a demand in a proper juncture, every one of the party who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber.

Swift.

SUBSCRIPTION, sũb-skri'pshũn. n. s. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. Any thing underwritten.

The man asked, Are ye christians? We answered we were; fearing the less because of the cross we had seen in the subscription.

Bacon.

2. Consent or attestation given by underwriting the name.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he pled;

Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side.

Pope.

South sea subscriptions take who please,

Leave me but liberty.

Pope.

4. Submission; obedience. Not in use.

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription.

Shakspeare.

SUBSECTION, sũb-sẽk'shũn. n. s. [from sub and sectio, Latin.] A subdivision of a larger section into a lesser; a section of a section.

Dict.

SUBSEQUITIVE, sũb-sẽk'kũ-tiv. adj. [from subsequor, Latin.] Following in train.

SUBSEPTUPLE, sũb-sẽp'tũ-pl. adj. [from sub and septulus, Latin.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple.

Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENCE, sũb-sẽ-kwẽns. n. s. [from subsequor, Latin.] The state of following; not precedence.

By this faculty we can take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past.

Grew.

SUBSEQUENT, sũb'sẽ-kwẽnt. adj.

[subsequent, French; subsequens, Lat.] This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakspeare. Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The hazy figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large.

Shakspeare.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish.

Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year?

Prior.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648. when England was in the utmost confusion.

Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY, sũb'sẽ-kwẽnt-lẽ. adv.

[from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out. by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes.

South.

To SUBSERVILE, sũb-sẽrv'. v. a. [from subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,

But to subserve where wisdom bears command.

Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy.

Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers.

Walsh.

SUBSERVIENCE, sũb-sẽrv'vẽ-ẽns. } n. s.

SUBSERVIENCY, sũb-sẽrv'vẽ-ẽn-sẽ. }
[from subserve.] Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel.

Dryden.

There is an immediate and agil subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul.

Hale.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance.

Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends.

Cheyne.

SUBSERVIENT, sũb-sẽrv'vẽ-ẽnt. adj. [from subserviens, Lat.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other.

Fell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things were referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods.

Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them servicable to man.

Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein.

Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect.

Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an universal being, void of organs, members, or parts; and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will.

Newton.

Most criticks, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part;
They talk of principles; but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice.

Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE, sũb-sẽks'tũ-pl. adj. [from sub and sextuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subseptuple.

Wilkins.

To SUBSIDE, sũb-side'. v. n. [from subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downward. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill.

Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair:
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.

Pope.

SUBSIDENCE, sũb-si'dẽns. } n. s. [from

SUBSIDENCY, sũb-si'dẽn-sẽ. } subsido.]
The act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidiency of the abyss would take up a considerable time.

Burnet.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subside merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time.

Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated.

Arbutnot.

SUBSIDIARY, sũb-sid'ẽ-ã-rẽ, or sũb-sid'jẽ-ã-rẽ. adj. [from subsidiare, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidy.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Arbutnot.

SUBSIDY, sũb-sẽ-dẽ. n. s. [from subsido, Fr. subsidium, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy.

Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise.

Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsides as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel.

Addison.

To SUBSIGN, sũb-sine'. v. a. [from subsigno, Lat.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without surnames.

Camden.

To SUBSIST, sũb-sist'. v. n. [from subsister, Fr. subsisto, Latin.]

1. To be; to have existence.

2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve.

Milton.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republick could subsist any longer.

Swift.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded.

Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessaries, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

SUBSISTENCE, sŭb-sis'tense. } n. s. [sub-
SUBSISTENCY, sŭb-sis'ten-sē. } sistence,
Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is, the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSISTENT, sŭb-sis'tent. adj. [subsistens, Latin.]

1. Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE, sŭb'stānse. n. s. [sub- stance, Fr. substantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing; Her nature is peculiar, and her own; She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance, cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mold
And substance? Milton.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the sub- stance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burnet.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Arm'd in proof, and led by shallow Richmond. Shakespeare.

He the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.

Heroick virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose:
To rescue one such friend he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes
Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a god foreshowing and assuring by types, but as a God who has performed the substance of what he promised. Nelson.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as, water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbutnot.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of flegmatick matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his; but I will have some of it out again. Shakespeare.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL, sŭb-stān'shāl. adj. [sub- stantiel, Fr. from substance.]

1. Real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.

O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakespeare.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side, to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life. Milton.

If happiness be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge. Denham.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immersed. Glanville.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodward.

A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourself, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wise and pious life. Law.

3. Corporeal; material.

Now shine these planets with substantial rays?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days? Prior.

The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky; all which are gross falsehoods. Watts.

4. Strong; stout; bulky.

Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault. Milton.

5. Responsible; moderately wealthy; possessed of substance.

Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freholders. Spenser.

The merchants, and substantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families. Addison.

Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?
—To him and his substitutes. Shakspeare.

You've taken up,
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father,
And here upswarm'd them. Shakspeare.

Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,
And these inferior far beneath me set? Milton.

Providence delegates to the supreme magistrate the same power for the good of men, which that supreme magistrate transfers to those several substitutes who act under him. Addison.

2. It is used likewise for things: as, one medicine is a substitute for another.

SUBSTITUTION, sŭb-stĕ-tŭ'shŭn. n. s. [sub- stitution, Fr. from substitute.] The act of placing any person or thing in the room of another: the state of being placed in the room of another.

He did believe
He was the duke from substitution,
And executing th' outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative. Shakspeare.

Nor sal, sulphur, or mercury can be separated from any perfect metals; for every part, so separated, may easily be reduced into perfect metal without substitution of that which chymists imagine to be wanting. Bacon.

Enjoy till I return
Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton.

If the father left only daughters, they equally succeed to him in copartnership, without prelation or preference of the eldest to a double portion. Hale.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.

While these limbs the vital spirit feeds,
While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
Burnt-off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temples shine. Dryden.

These dull harmless makers of lampoons are yet of dangerous example to the publick: some witty men may succeed to their designs, and, mixing sense with malice, blast the reputation of the most innocent. Dryden.

The pretensions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate appointment of God, ended with his reign; and David, by the same title, succeeded in his throne, to the exclusion of Jonathan. Locke.

3. To obtain one's wish; to terminate an undertaking in the desired effect.

'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition: imagination must be raised by a desire of fame to a desire of pleasing. Dryden.

This address I have long thought owing; and if I had never attempted, I might have been vain enough to think I might have succeeded. Dryden.

A knave's a knave to me in ev'ry state;
Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail;
Spurs at court, or Japhet in a jail. Pope.

4. To terminate according to wish; to have a good effect.

If thou deal truly, thy doings shall prosperously succeed to thee. Tobit.

This was impossible for Virgil to imitate: because of the severity of the Roman language: Spenser endeavoured it in Shepherd's Kalendar; but neither will it succeed in English. Dryden.

5. To go under cover.

Please that silvan scene to take,
Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make;
Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,
Whose mouth the curling vines have overspread!
Dryden.

To SUCCEED, sŭk-sèéd'. v. a.

1. To follow; to be subsequent or consequent to.

In that place no creature was hurtful unto man;
and those destructive effects they now discover succeeded the curse, and came in with thorns and bri-ars. Brown.

2. To prosper; to make successful.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high rais'd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his plauet hung,
Will gloriously the new laid works succeed. Dryden.
Succeed my wish, and second my design,
The fairest Deiopeia shall be thine,
And make thee father of a happy line. Dryden.

SUCCEEDER, sŭk-sèéd'ŭr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from succeed.] One who follows; one who comes into the place of another.

Now this great succeder all repairs,
He builds up strength and greatness for his heirs,
Out of the virtues that adorn'd his blood. Daniel.
Nature has so far imprinted it in us, that should the envy of predecessors deny the secret to succed-ers, they yet would find it out. Suckling.

They make one man's particular fancies, perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them to their succeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness as presumption. Boyle.

SUCCESS, sŭk-sès'. n. s. [succès, Fr.
successus, Latin.]

1. The termination of any affair happy or unhappy. Success without any epithet is commonly taken for good success.

For good success of his hands, he asketh ability to do of him that is most unable. Wisdom.

Perplex'd and troubl'd at his bad success
The tempter stood. Milton.

Not Lemuel's mother with more care
Did counsel or instruct her heir;
Or teach with more success her son
The vices of the time to shun. Waller.

Every reasonable man cannot but wish me success in this attempt, because I undertake the proof of that which it is every man's interest that it should be true. Tillotson.

Whilst malice and ingratitude confess,
They've strove for ruin long without success. Garth.
Gas sulphuris may be given with success in any disease of the lungs. Arbuthnot.

Military successes, above all others, elevate the minds of a people. Atterbury.

2. Succession. Obsolete.

All the sons of these five brethren reigned
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents, the crown retained.
Spenser.

SUCCE'SSFUL, sŭk-sès'fŭl. adj. [success and full.] Prosperous; happy; fortunate.

They were terrible alarms to persons grown wealthy by a long and successful imposture, by persuading the world that men might be honest and happy, though they never mortified any corrupt appetites. South.

He observ'd the illustrious throng,
Their names, their fates, their conduct, and their care

In peaceful senates and successful war. Dryden.
This is the most proper and most successful sca-son to meet and attack the advancing enemy.
Blackmore.

The early hunter

Blesses Diana's hand, who leads him safe
O'er hanging cliffs; who spreads his net successful,
And guides the arrow through the panther's heart.
Prior.

SUCCE'SSFULLY, sŭk-sès'fŭl-è. adv. [from successful.] Prosperously; luckily; fortunately.

He is too young, yet he looks successfully.
Shakespeare.

They would want a competent instrument to collect and convey their rays successfully, or so as to imprint the species with any vigour on a dull pre-judicate faculty. Hammond.

The rule of imitating God can never be successfully proposed but upon christian principles, such as that this world is a place not of rest, but of discipline. Atterbury.

A reformation successfully carried on in this great town would in time spread itself over the whole kingdom. Swift.

Bleeding, when the expectoration goes on successfully, suppresseth it. Arbuthnot.

SUCCE'SSFULNESS, sŭk-sès'fŭl-nès. n. s.
[from successful.] Happy conclusion;
desired event; series of good fortune

An opinion of the successfulness of the work is as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises. Hammond.

SUCCE'SSION, sŭk-sèsh'ŭn. n. s. [succession, French; successio, Latin.]

1. Consecution; series of one thing or person following another.

St. Augustine, having reckoned up a great number of the bishops of Rome, saith, in all this order of succession of bishops there is not one found a Do-natist. Hooker.

Reflection on appearances of several ideas, one after another, in our minds, furnishes us with the idea of succession. Locke.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, and take with it any limb of a man, it is clear that it must strike successively the two sides of the room, touch one part of the flesh first, and another after,
and so in succession. Locke.

2. A series of things or persons following one another.

These decays in Spain have been occasioned by so long a war with Holland; but most by two successions of inactive princes. Bacon.

The smallest particles of matter may cohere by the strongest attractions, and compose bigger particles of weaker virtue; and many of these may cohere and compose bigger particles, whose virtue is still weaker; and so on for divers successions, until the progression end in the biggest particles, on which the operations in chymistry and the colours of natural bodies depend. Newton.

3. A lineage; an order of descendants.

Cassibelan,
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute. Shaksp.
A long succession must ensue;
And his next son the clouded ark of God
Shall in a glorious temple enshrine. Milton.

4. The power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors.

What people is so void of common sense,
To vote succession from a native prince? Dryden.

SUCCE'SSIVE, sŭk-sès'siv.¹⁰⁸ adj. [successif, French.]

1. Following in order; continuing a course or consecution uninterrupted.

Three with fiery courage he assails,
And each successive after other quails,
Still wond'ring whence so many kings should rise.
Daniel.

God hath set
Labour and rest, as day and night to men Successive. Milton.

God, by reason of his eternal indivisible nature, is by one single act of duration present to all the successive portions of time, and all successively existing in them. South.

Send the successive ills through ages down,
And let each weeping father tell his son. Prior.

2. Inherited by succession. Not in use.

Countrymen,
Plead my successive title with your swords. Shaksp.
The empire being elective, and not successive,
the emperors, in being, made profit of their own times. Raleigh.

SUCCE'SSIVELY, sŭk-sès'siv-lè. adv. [suc-cessivement, French; from successive.]

In uninterrupted order; one after another.

Three sons he left,
All which successively by turns did reign. F. Queen.
Is it upon record? or else reported

Successively from age to age? Shakespeare.
That king left only by his six wives three children, who reigned successively, and died childless.
Bacon.

We that measure times by first and last,
The sight of things successively do take,
When God on all at once his view doth cast,
And of all times doth but one instant make. Davies.

I inclined the paper to the rays very obliquely, that the most refrangible rays might be more copiously reflected than the rest, and the whiteness at length changed successively into blue, indigo, and violet. Newton.

No such motion of the same atom can be all of it existent at once; it must needs be made gradually and successively, both as to place and time; seeing that body cannot at the same instant be in more places than one. Bentley.

We have a tradition coming down to us from our fathers; a kind of inheritance successively conveyed to us by the primitive saints from the apostles themselves. Waterland.

SUCCE'SSIVENESS, sŭk-sès'siv-nès. n. s.
[from successive.] The state of being successive.

All the notion we have of duration is partly by the successiveness of its own operations, and partly by those external measures that it finds in motion.
Hale.

SUCCE'SSLESS, sŭk-sès'lès. adj. [from success.] Unlucky; unfortunate; failing of the event desired.

A second colony is sent hither, but as successless
as the first. Heylin.

The hopes of thy successless love resign. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke,
Bold champion! brandishing his Noric blade,
Best temper'd steel, successful prov'd in field.

Philips.

Passion unpy'd, and successful love,
Plant daggers in my heart.

Addison.

Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love.

Pope.

SUCCESSOR, sŭk-sēs'sŭr.⁶⁰³ n. s. [succes- seur, French; successor, Latin.] This is sometimes pronounced succēssour, with the accent in the middle.] One that follows in the place or character of another: correlative to predecessor.

This king by this queen had a son of tender age, but of great expectation, brought up in the hope of themselves, and a ready acceptance of the inconstant people, as successor of his father's crown.

Sidney.

The successor of Moses in prophecies. Ecclus.
The fear of what was to come from an unacknowledged successor to the crown clouded much of that prosperity then, which now shines in chronicle.

Clarendon.

The second part of confirmation is the prayer and benediction of the bishop, the successor of the apostles in this office.

Hammond.

The surly savage offspring disappear,
And curse the bright successor of the year;
Yet crafty kind with daylight can dispense.

Dryd.

Whether a bright successor, or the same. Tate.
The descendants of Alexander's successors cultivated navigation in some lesser degree.

Arbutnot.

vernment of ourselves. Tillotson.

If my song be such,
That you will hear and credit me too much,
Attentive listen. Dryden.

Such are the cold Riphæan race, and such
The savage Scythian. Dryden.

As to be perfectly just is an attribute in the Divine Nature, to be so to the utmost of our abilities is the glory of a man: such an one, who has the publick administration, acts like the representative of his Maker. Addison.

You love a verse, take such as I can send. Pope.

2. The same that; with as.
This was the state of the kingdom of Tunis at such time as Barbarossa, with Solymán's great fleet, landed in Africk. Knolles.

3. Comprehended under the term premised, like what has been said.

That thou art happy, owe to God;
That thou continuest such, owe to thyself. Milton.

To assert that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it as such, when, without any antecedent sin, he withdrew that actual grace, upon which it was impossible for him not to fall, highly reproaches the essential equity of the Divine Nature.
South.

No promise can oblige a prince so much,
Still to be good, as long to have been such. Dryden.

4. A manner of expressing a particular person or thing.

I saw him yesterday

saccharum, Latin.]

1. The native salt of the sugar-cane, obtained by the expression and evaporation of its juice. Quincy.

All the blood of Zelmane's body stirred in her,
as wine will do when sugar is hastily put into it.

Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine.

A grocer in London gave for his rebus a sugar- loaf standing upon a flat steeple. Peacham.

Saccharum candidum shoots into angular figures, by placing a great many sticks a-cross a vessel of liquid sugar. Grew.

If the child must have sugar-plums when he has a mind, rather than be out of humour; why, when he is grown up, must he not be satisfied too with wine? Locke.

In a sugar-baker's drying-room, where the air was heated fifty-four degrees beyond that of a human body, a sparrow died in two minutes. Arbuthnot.

A piece of some geniculated plant, seeming to be part of a sugar-cane. Woodward.

2. Any thing proverbially sweet.

Your fair discourse has been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable. Shakspeare.

3. A chymical dry crystallization.

Sugar of lead, though made of that insipid metal, and sour salt of vinegar, has in it a sweetness surpassing that of common sugar. Boyle.

To SUGAR, shùg'úr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate or season with sugar.

Short thick sobs

In panting murmurs still'd out of her breast,
That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

2. To sweeten.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but followed
The sugar'd game before thee. Shakspeare.

His glosing sire his errand daily said,
And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear. Fairfax.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives,
But flattery still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high-tasted meat conveys. Denham.

1. To hint; to intimate; to insinuate good or ill; to tell privately.

Are you not asham'd?

What spirit suggests this imagination? Shakspeare.
I could never have suffered greater calamities, by denying to sign that justice my conscience suggested to me. King Charles.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something to them, which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, actual, avowed continuance of their sins. South.

Some ideas make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflection. Locke.

Reflect upon the different state of the mind in thinking, which those instances of attention, reverie and dreaming, naturally enough suggest. Locke.

Search for some thoughts, thy own suggesting mind,

And others dictated by heav'nly pow'r Shall rise spontaneously. Pope.

2. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation. Out of use.

When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heav'nly shows. Shakspeare.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower. Shaksp.

3. To inform secretly; out of use.

We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them, that to 's power he would Have made them mules. Shakspeare.

SUGGESTER, sùg-jèst'úr. n. s. [from suggest.] One that reminds another.

SUGGESTION, sùg-jèst'tshùn. n. s. [suggestion, French, from suggest.]

1. Private hint; intimation; insinuation; secret notification.

It allayeth all base and earthly cogitations, banisheth and driveth away those evil secret suggestions which our invisible enemy is always apt to minister. Hooker.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes; one that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom. Shakspeare.

Native and untaught suggestions of inquisitive children. Locke.

Another way is letting the mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, run after similies. Locke.

2. A self-murderer.

If fate forbears us, fancy strikes the blow;
We make misfortunes, suicides in woe. Young.

SUILLAGE, sù'll-àdje. n. s. [souillage, Fr.] Drain of filth. Obsolete.

When they have chosen the plot, and laid out the limits of the work, some Italians dig wells and cisterns, and other conveyances for the suillage of the house. Wolton.

SUING, sù'ing. n. s. [This word seems to come from suer, to sweat, French; it is perhaps peculiar to Bacon.] The act of soaking through any thing.

Note the percolation or suing of the verjuice through the wood; for verjuice of itself would never have passed through the wood. Bacon.

SUIT, sùte.³⁴² n. s. [suite, French.]

1. A set; a number of things correspondent one to the other.

Whose verses they deduc'd from those first golden times,

Of sundry sorts of feet, and sundry suits of rhimes. Drayton.

We, ere the day, two suits of armour sought,
Which borne before him on his steed he brought. Dryden.

2. Clothes made one part to answer another.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shakspeare.

Him all repute
For his device in handsoming a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut, and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne

Three or four suits one winter there does waste,
One suit does there three or four winter's last. Cowley.

His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of clothes, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.

3. Consecution; series; regular order.

Every five and thirty years the same kind and suite of weather comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.

4. Out of Suits. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shakspeare.

5. [suite, French.] Retinue; company; Obsolete.

Plexirtus's ill led life, and worse-gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Tydeus, and Telenor, with fifty in their suite to his defence. Sidney.

6. [from To sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.

Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakspeare.

She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit. Shaksp.
Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

Many shall make suit unto thee.
My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet hath been

Poison'd with love to see or to be seen:
I had no suit there, nor new suit to shew;
Yet went to court. Donne.

It will be as unreasonable to expect that God should attend and grant those suits of ours, which we do not at all consider ourselves. Duty of Man.

7. Courtship.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakspeare.

Their determinations are, to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition. Shakspeare.

8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution.

High amongst all knights hast hung thy shield,
Theuceforth the suit of earthly conquests shone,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.

9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment. Ayliffe.

All that had any suits in law came unto them. Susanna.

Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause. Bacon.

Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great personages. Taylor.

To Alibech alone refer your suit,
And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.

A suit of law is not a thing unlawful in itself, but may be innocent, if nothing else comes in to make a sin thereof; but then it is our sin, and a matter of our account, when it is either upon an unjustifiable ground, or carried on by a sinful management. Kettlewell.

John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbuthnot.

SUIT COVENANT, sùte-kùv'è-nànt. [In law.]

Is where the ancestor of one man covenanted with the ancestor of another to sue at his court. Bailey.

SUIT COURT, sùte'kòrt. [In law.] Is the court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord. Bailey.

SUIT SERVICE, sùte'sér-vìs. [In law.] Attendance which tenants owe to the court of their lord. Bailey.

To SUIT, sùte. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit; to adapt to something else.

Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakspeare.

The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so suitèd to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.

2. To be fitted to; to become.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.
Her purple habit sits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.

If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as suitèd their distinct hypothesis. Locke.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suitèd to his watry tomb:
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakespeare.

Be better suitèd;
These weeds are memories of those misfortunes;
I pry'thee put them off to worsèr hours. Shaksp.
I'll disrobe me

Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant. Shakespeare.

TO SUIT, sùte. v. n. To agree; to accord.

Dryden uses it both with to and with.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove Tediuous alike. Milton.

The place itself was suiting to his care,
Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.
Pity does with a noble nature suit. Dryden.
Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not. Locke.

Give me not an office
That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Addison.

SUITABLE, sù'tá-bl. adj. [from suit.]

Fitting; according with; agreeable to; with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Atterbury.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and divine life without prayers. Law.

SUITABLENESS, sù'tá-bl-nès. n. s. [from suitable.] Fitness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South.

He creates those sympathies and suitablenesses of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY, sù'tá-blè. adv. [from suitable.]

Agreeably; according to.

Whosoever speaks upon an occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text. South.

Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er stinking stables place. Dryden.

SUITER, } sù'túr. n. s. [from suit.]
SUITOR, }

1. One that sues; a petitioner; a supplicant.

As humility is in suiters a decent virtue, so the testification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argueth a sound apprehension of his sup'reminent glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hooker.

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice. Shakespeare.

My piteous soul began the wretchedness
Of suitors at court to mourn. Donne.

Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suitors also from offering. Bacon.

Yet their port
Not of mean suitors; nor important less
Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair,
Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
Of Themis stood devout. Milton.

I challenge nothing;
But I'm an humble suitor for these prisoners. Denham.

My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Rowe.

2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.

I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for truly I love none.

—A dear happiness to women! they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. Shaksp.

He passed a year under the counsels of his mother, and then became a suitor to sir Roger Ashton's daughter. Wotton.

By many suitors sought, she mocks their pains,
And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.

He drew his seat, familiar to her side,
Far from the suitor train, a brutal crowd. Pope.

SUITRESS, sù'trés. n. s. [from suitèr.] A female supplicant.

'Twere pity
That could refuse a boon to such a suitress;
Y' have got a noble friend to be your advocate. Rowe.

SULCATED, sùl'ká-téd. adj. [sulcus, Lat.]

Furrowed.

All are much chopped and sulcated by having lain exposed on the top of the clay to the weather, and to the erosion of the vitriolick matter mixed amongst the clay. Woodward.

SULL, sùl. n. s. A plough. Ainsworth.

SULLEN, sùl'lin. adj. [Of this word the etymology is obscure.]

1. Gloomily angry; sluggishly discontented.

Wilmot continued still sullen and perverse, and every day grew more insolent. Clarendon.

A man in a jail is sullen and out of humour at his first coming in. L'Estrange.

Fore'd by my pride, I my concern suppress'd;
Pretended drowsiness, and wish of rest;
And sullen I forsook th' imperfect feast. Prior.

If we sit down sullen and inactive, in expectation that God should do all, we shall find ourselves miserably deceived. Rogers.

2. Mischievous; malignant.

Such sullen planets at my birth did shine,
They threaten every fortune mixt with mine. Dryd.
The sullen fiend her sounding wings display'd,
Unwilling left the night, and sought the nether shade. Dryden.

3. Intractable; obstinate.

Things are as sullen as we are, and will be what they are, whatever we think of them. Tillotson.

4. Gloomy; dark; cloudy; dismal.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight? Shakespeare.

Night, with her sullen wings to double shade,
The desert fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam. Milton.

A glimpse of moon-shine, streak'd with red;
A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again. Dryden.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
The dreaded east is all the wind that blows. Pope.

5. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.

Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presage of your own decay. Shakespeare.

SULLENLY, sùl'lin-lè. adv. [from sullen.]

Gloomily; malignantly; intractably.

To say they are framed without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it. More.

He in chains demanded more
Than he impos'd in victory before:
He sullenly reply'd, he could not make
These offers now. Dryden.

The general mends his weary pace,
And sullenly to his revenge he sails,
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryd.

SULLENNESS, sùl'lin-nès. n. s. [from sullen.] Gloominess; moroseness; sluggish anger; malignity; intractability.

Speech being as rare as precious, her silence without sullenness, her modesty without affectation, and her shamefacedness without ignorance. Sidney.

To fit my sullenness,
He to another key his style doth dress. Donne.

In those vernal seasons, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and sullenness against nature, not to go out and see her riches. Milton.

Quit not the world out of any hypocrisy, sullenness, or superstition, but out of a sincere love of true knowledge and virtue. More.

With these comforts about me, and sullenness enough to use no remedy, Zulichem came to see me. Temple.

SULLENS, sùl'linz. n. s. [without singular.] Morose temper; gloominess of mind. A burlesque word.

Let them die that age and sullens have. Shaksp.

Require it to make some restitution to his neighbour for what it has detracted from it, by wiping off that sulliage it has cast upon his fame. Government of the Tongue.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sulliage behind. Decay of Piety.

TO SULLY, sùl'lè. v. a. [souiller, Fr.] To soil; to tarnish; to dirt; to spot.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.

The falling temples which the gods provoke,
And statues sully'd yet with sacrilegious smoke. Roscommon.

He 's dead, whose love had sully'd all your reign,
And made you empress of the world in vain. Dryd.

Lab'ring years shall weep their destin'd race,
Charg'd with ill omens, sully'd with disgrace. Prior.

Publick justice may be done to those virtues their humility took care to conceal, which were sullied by the calumnies and slanders of malicious men. Nilson.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this solemnity. Atterbury.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,

Three *sully*ng trades avoid with equal care;
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng.
Gay.

SU'LLY, súl'lé. n. s. [from the verb.] Soil;
tarnish; spot.

You laying these light sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working.
Shakspeare.

A noble and triumphant merit breaks through little spots and sullies in his reputation.
Spectator.

SU'LPHUR, súl'fúr. n. s. [Lat.] Brimstone.

phureus, Lat.] Made of brimstone; having the qualities of brimstone; containing sulphur; impregnated with sulphur.

My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and fermenting flames
Must render up myself.
Shakspeare.

Dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire.
Milton.

Is not the strength and vigour of the action between light and sulphureous bodies, observed above, one reason why sulphureous bodies take fire more readily, and burn more vehemently, than other bodies do?
Newton.

The fury heard, while on Cocytus' brink
Her snakes unty'd sulphureous waters drink.
Pope.

No sulphureous glooms
Swell'd in the sky, and sent the lightning forth.
Thomson.

tilation; hot and close; hot and cloudy.

It is very sultry and hot.
The sultry breath
Of tainted air had cloy'd the jaws of death.
Sandys.

Such as, born beneath the burning sky
And sultry sun, betwixt the tropicks lie.
Dryden.

Our foe advances on us,
And envies us ev'n Lybia's sultry desarts.
Addison.

Thou would'st sultry heats and a burning air have scorched and chapped the earth, and galled the animal tribes in houses or dens.
Cheyne.

SUM, sùm. n. s. [summa, Latin; somme,
French.]

1. The whole of any thing; many particulars aggregated to a total.

We may as well conclude so of every sentence,
as of the whole sum and body thereof.
Hooker.

How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God!
how great is the sum of them.
Psalms.

Th' almighty Father, where he sits
Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,
Consulting on the sum of things, foreseen
This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd.
Milton.

Such and no less is he, on whom depends
The sum of things.
Dryden.

Weighing the sum of things with wise forecast,
Solicitous of publick good.
Philips.

2. Quantity of money.
I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you deny'd me.
Shakspeare.

They who constantly set down their daily expen-ces, have yet some set time of casting up the whole sum.
Duty of Man.

Britain, once despis'd, can raise
As ample sums as Rome in Cæsar's days.
C. Arbuthnot

3. [somme, Fr.] Compendium; abridgment; the whole abstracted.

This, in effect, is the sum and substance of that which they bring by way of opposition against those orders which we have common with the church of Rome.
Hooker.

They replenished the hearts of the nearest unto them with words of memorable consolation, strengthened men in the fear of God, gave them wholesome instructions of life, and confirmed them in true religion: in sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live.
Hooker.

This having learn'd, thou hast attain'd the sum of wisdom.
Milton.

In sum, no man can have a greater veneration for Chaucer than myself.
Dryden.

The sum of duty let two words contain;
Be humble, and be just.
Prior.

In sum, the gospel, considered as a law, prescribes every virtue to our conduct, and forbids every sin.
Rogers.

4. The amount; the result of reasoning or computation.
I appeal to the readers, whether the sum of what I have said be not this.
Tillotson.

5. Height; completion.
Thus I have told thee all my state, and brought
My story to the sum of earthly bliss,
Which I enjoy.
Milton.

In saying ay or no, the very safety of our country, and the sum of our well-being, lies.
L'Estrange.

To SUM, sùm. v. a. [sommer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To compute; to collect particulars into a total; to cast up. It has up empha-tical.

You cast th' event of war,
And summ'd th' account of chance.
Shakspeare.

The high priest may sum the silver brought in.
2 Kings.

In sickness, time will seem longer without a clock than with it; for the mind doth value every moment, and then the hour doth rather sum up the moments than divide the day.
Bacon.

He that would reckon up all the accidents pre-ferments depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or sum up infinity.
South.

2. To comprise; to comprehend; to collect into a narrow compass.

So lovely fair!
That what seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd.
Milton.

To conclude, by summing up what I would say concerning what I have, and what I have not been in the following paper I shall not deny, that I pretended not to write an accurate treatise of colours,

but an occasional essay.
Baile.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard," in few words,
sums up the moral of this fable.
L'Estrange.

This Atlas must our sinking state uphold;
In council cool, but in performance bold:
He sums their virtues in himself alone,
And adds the greatest, of a loyal son.
Dryden.

A fine evidence summ'd up among you!
Dryden.

3. [In falconry.] To have feathers full grown.

With prosperous wing full summ'd.

Make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the oozy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.
Shakspeare.

A sunless journey of incorporeal speed.
Milton.

Above, beneath, around the palace shines
The sunless treasure of exhausted mines.
Pope.

SU'MMARILY, sùm'mâ-ré-lé. adv. [from summary.] Briefly; the shortest way.

The decalogue of Moses declareth summarily those things which we ought to do; the prayer of our Lord, whatsoever we should request or desire.
Hooker.

While we labour for these demonstrations out of scripture, and do summarily declare the things which many ways have been spoken, be contented quietly to hear, and do not think my speech tedious.
Hooker.

When the parties proceed summarily, and they chuse the ordinary way of proceeding, the cause is made plenary.
Ayliffe.

SU'MMARY, sùm'mâ-ré. adj. [sommaire,
Fr. from sum.] Short; brief; compendious.

The judge
Directed them to mind their brief,
Nor spend their time to shew their reading;
She'd have a summary proceeding.
Swift.

SU'MMARY, sùm'mâ-ré. n. s. [from the adjective.] Compendium; abstract;
abridgment.

We are enforce'd from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to shew in articles.

outside.

Doth this churlish superscription

Portend some alteration in good will. Shakspeare.

Read me the superscription of these letters, I know not which is which. Shakspeare.

No superscriptions of fame,
Of honour or good name. Suckling.

I learn of my experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are who friends
Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head.
Milton.

It is enough her stone
May honour'd he with superscription
Of the sole lady, who had power to move
The great Northumberland. Waller.

To SUPERSE'DE, sù-pér-sède'. v. a. [super and sedeo, Latin.] To make void or inefficacious by superiour power; to set aside.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controulable by reason, for as much as the proper effect of it is,
for the time, to supersede the workings of reason.
South.

In this genuine acceptance of chance, nothing is supposed that can supersede the known laws of natural motion. Bentley.

SUPERSE'DEAS, sù-pér-sê-dé-âs. n. s.
[In law.]

A writ which lieth in divers and sundry cases; in all which it signifies a command or request to stay or forbear the doing of that which in appearance of law were to be done, were it not for the cause whereupon the writ is granted: for example, a man regularly is to have surety of peace against him of whom he will swear that he is afraid; and the justice required hereunto cannot deny him: yet if the party be formerly hound to the peace, in chancery or elsewhere, this writ lieth to stay the justice from doing that, which otherwise he might not deny.
Cowell.

The far distance of this county from the court hath afforded it a supersedeas from takers and pur-veyours. Carew.

SUPERSE'RVICABLE, sù-pér-sêr-vé-sâ-bl. adj.
[super and serviciable.] Overofficious; more than is necessary or required.

[superstition, French; superstitio, Lat.]

1. Unnecessary fear or scruples in religion; observance of unnecessary and uncommanded rites or practices; religion without morality.

A rev'rent fear, such superstition reigns
Among the rude, ev'n then possess'd the swains.
Dryden.

2. Rite or practice proceeding from scrupulous or timorous religion. In this sense it is plural.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint. Milton.

If we had a religion that consisted in absurd superstitions, that had no regard to the perfection of our nature, people might well be glad to have some part of their life excused from it. Law.

3. False religion; reverence of beings not proper objects of reverence; false worship.

They had certain questions against him of their own superstition. Acts

fancies or scruples with regard to religion.

At the kindling of the fire, and lighting of candles, they say certain prayers, and use some other superstitious rites, which shew that they honour the fire and the light. Spenser.

Have I
Been out of fondness superstitious to him?
And am I thus rewarded? Shakspeare.

Nature's own work it seem'd, nature taught art,
And, to a superstitious eye, the haunt
Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs. Milton.

A venerable wood,
Where rites divine were paid, whose holy hair
Was kept and cut with superstitious care. Dryden.

2. Over-accurate; scrupulous beyond need.

SUPERSTITIOUSLY, sù-pér-stîsh'ûs-lê. adv.
[from superstitious.]

1. In a superstitious manner; with erroneous religion.

There reigned in this island a king, whose memory of all others we most adore, not superstitiously
but as a divine instrument. Bacon.

2. With too much care.

Neither of these methods should be too scrupulously and superstitiously pursued. Watts.

To SUPERSTRAIN, sù-pér-strâne'. v. a.
[super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the straining of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note.
Bacon.

To SUPERSTRUCT, sù-pér-strûkt'. v. a.
[superstruo, superstructus, Lat.]
To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentals may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded.
Hammond.

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, the vicious christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation. Hammond.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocency, and then virtue.

SUPERSTRUCTION, sù-pér-strûk'shûn. n. s.
[from superstruct.] An edifice raised on any thing.

I want not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructions upon an old ruin. Denham.

SUPERSTRUCTIVE, sù-pér-strûk'tiv. adj.
[from superstruct.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him; and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure, be it never so gross. Hammond.

SUPERSTRUCTURE, sù-pér-strûk'tshûre. n. s.
[super and structure.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, builds upon the narrow compass of a point; and where the foundation is so narrow, the superstructure cannot be high and strong too. South.

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church,
and is a superstructure upon the christian religion.
Tillotson.

You have added to your natural endowments the superstructures of study. Dryden.

perfluous; needless; unnecessary; serving to no purpose. Dict.

[supplement, French; supplementum, Latin.]

1. Addition to any thing by which its defects are supplied.

Unto the word of God, being in respect of that end for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add reason as a supplement of any main or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reap by the scriptures perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth. Hooker.

His blood will atone for our imperfection, his righteousness he imputed in supplement to what is lurking in ours. Rogers.

Instructive satire; true to virtue's cause!
Thou shining supplement of publick laws! Young.

2. Store; supply. Not in use.

We had not spent
Our ruddie wine a ship-board; supplement
Of large sort each man to his vessel drew. Chapman.

SUPPLEME'NTAL, sùp-plè-mént'ál. }
SUPPLEME'NTARY, sùp-plè-mént'ár-è. }
adj. [from supplement.] Additional; such as may supply the place of what is lost or wanting.

Supplemental acts of state were made to supply defects of law; and so tonnage and poundage were collected. Clarendon.

Divinity would not then pass the yard and loom, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. Decay of Piety.

Provide his brood, next Smithfield fair,
With supplemental hobby horses;
And happy he their infant courses. Prior.

SUPPLENESS, sùp-pl-nès. n. s. [soufflesse, French, from supple.]

The rich grow suppliant and the poor grow proud:

Those offer mighty gain, and these ask more. Dryden.

Constant to his first decree,
To bow the haughty neck, and raise the suppliant knee. Prior.

SUPPLIANT, sùp-plè-ánt. n. s. [from the adjective.] An humble petitioner; one who begs submissively.

A petition from a Florentine I undertook,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant. Shakspeare.

Hourly suitors come:
The cast with incense, and the west with gold,
Will stand like suppliants to receive her doom. Dryden.

Spare this life, and hear thy suppliant's prayer. Dryden.

SUPPLICANT, sùp-plè-kánt. n. s. [from supplicare.] One that entreats or implores with great submission; an humble petitioner.

The prince and people of Nineveh assembling themselves a main army of suppliants, God did not withstand them. Hooker.

The wise suppliant, though he prayed for the condition he thought most desirable, yet left the event to God. Rogers.

Abraham, instead of indulging the suppliant in his desire of new evidence, refers him to what his brethren had. Atterbury.

To SUPPLICATE, sùp-plè-káte. v. n. [supplicare, Fr. supplicare, Latin, from supplex.] To implore; to entreat; to petition submissively and humbly.

Many things a man cannot with any comeliness say or do; a man cannot brook to supPLICATE or heg. Bacon.

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come,
In supplicating crowds, to learn their doom. Addis.

SUPPLICATION, sùp-plè-ká-shùn. n. s. [supplicatio, Fr. from supplicare.]

1. Petition humbly delivered; entreaty.
My lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supPLICATIONS in the quill. Shakspeare.

My mother hows,
As if Olympus to a mole-hill should
In supPLICATION nod. Shakspeare.

2. Petitionary worship; the adoration of a suppliant or petitioner.

Praying with all prayer and supPLICATION, with all perseverance and supPLICATION for all saints. Ephesians.

Bend thine ear
To supPLICATION; hear his sighs though mute. Milt.

A second sort of publick prayer is, that all in a family that are members of it join in their common supPLICATIONS. Duty of Man.

These prove the common practice of the worship of images in the Roman church, as to the rites of supPLICATION and adoration, to be as extravagant as among the heathens. Stillingfleet.

We should testify our dependence upon God, and our confidence of his goodness, by constant prayers and supPLICATIONS for mercy. Tillotson.

To SUPPLY', sùp-pli'. v. a. [suppleo, Lat. suppléer, French.]

The palace built by Pegasus, vast and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.

The original community of all things appearing from this donation of God; the sovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it. Locke.

2. To endure any thing painful without being overcome.

Strongly to suffer and support our pains. Milton.

Could'st thou support that burden?
This fierce demaenour, and his insolence,
The patience of a god could not support. Dryden.

3. To endure; to bear.

She scarce awake her eyes could keep,
Unable to support the fumes of sleep. Dryden.

None can support a diet of flesh and water without acids, as salt, vinegar and bread, without falling into a putrid fever. Arbuthnot.

4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.

With inward consolations recompens'd,
And oft supported. Milton.

SUPPO'RT, sùp-pòrt'. n. s. [support, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Act or power of sustaining.

Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them; yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support. Locke.

2. Prop; sustaining power.

3. Necessaries of life.

4. Maintenance; supply.

SUPPO'RTABLE, sùp-pòrt'-á-bl. adj. [supportable, Fr. from support.]

Tolerable; to be endured. It may be observed that Shakspeare accents the first syllable.

As great to me, as late; and supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker Than you may call to comfort you. Shaks. Tempest.

Alterations in the project of uniting christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature indifferent. Swift.

I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them. Pope.

SUPPO'RTABLENESS, sùp-pòrt'-á-bl-nès. n. s. [from supportable.] The state of being tolerable.

SUPPOR'TANCE, sùp-pòrt'ânse. } n. s.

The benefited subject should render some small portion of his gain, for the supportation of the king's expence.
Bacon.

SUPPOR'TER, sùp-pòrt'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from suphort.]

1. One that supports.

You must walk by us upon either hand,
 And good supporters are you.
Shakspeare.

Because a relation cannot be founded in nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter, or a sup- port is not represented to the mind by any distinct idea.
Locke.

2. Prop; that by which any thing is born up from falling.

More might be added of helms, crests, mantles,
 and supporters.
Camden.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured.
Bacon.

We shall be discharged of our load; but you, that are designed for beams and supporters, shall bear.
L. Estrange.

There is no loss of room at the bottom, as there is in a building set upon supporters.
Mortimer.

3. Sustainer; comforter.

The saints have a companion and supporter in all their miseries.
South.

4. Maintainer; defender.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute in great part to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher.
Wotton.

Such propositions as these are competent to blast and defame any cause which requires such aids, and stands in need of such supporters.
Hammond.

All examples represent ingratitude as sitting in its throne, with pride at its right hand, and cruelty at its left; worthy supporters of such a reigning inpiquity.
South.

Love was no more, when loyalty was gone,
 The great supporter of his awful throne.
Dryden.

3. Suphorters. [In heraldry.] Beasts that support the arms.

SUPPO'SABLE, sùp-pò-zá-bl.⁴⁰⁸ adj. [from suphose.] That may be supposed.

Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the severals of any sup- posable catalogue.
Hammond.

SUPPO'SAL, sùp-pò-zál.⁸⁸ n. s. [from sup- hose.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.

Young Fortinbras,
 Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
 Thinks our state to be out of frame.
Shakspeare.

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect; the defect of evnts, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals.
Glanville.

When this comes, our former supposal of sufficient grace, as of the preaching of the word, and God's calls, is utterly at an end.
Hammond.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds hut upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom.
South.

Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers.
Clarissa.

TO SUPPO'SE, sùp-pòze'. v. a. [supho- ser, Fr. suppono, Latin.]

1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration, without maintaining the truth of the position.

Where we meet with all the indications and evidences of such a thing, as the thing is capable of, supposing it to be true, it must needs be very irrational to make any doubt of it.
Wilkins.

2. To admit without proof.

This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is,
 as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence.
Tillotson.

Suppose some so negligent that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all.
Locke.

3. To imagine; to believe without examination.

Tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
 That Lewis of France is sending over maskers.
Shakspeare.

Let not my lord suppose that they have slain
 all the king's sons; for Ammon only is slain.
2 Samuel.

I suppose we should compel them to a quick result.
Milton.

Female Quixote.

6. To put one thing by fraud in the place of another.

SUPPO'SE, sùp-pòze'. n. s. [from the verb.]
 Supposition; position without proof; un-evidenced conceit

We come short of our suppose so far,
 That, after sev'n years siege, yet Troy-walls stand.
Shakspeare.

Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's,
 Fit to be trusted on a hare suppose
 That he is honest?
Dryden.

SUPPO'SER, sùp-pò-zúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from sup- hose.] One that supposes.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine,
 While counterfeit supposers bleed'd thine eyne.
Shakspeare.

SUPPOSITION, sùp-pò-zish'ùn. n. s. [sup- position, Fr. from suphose.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition.
Shakspeare.

Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dotc;
 Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
 And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;
 And in that glorious supposition think
 He gains by death, that hath such means to die.
Shakspeare.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false.
Tillotson.

Such an original irresistible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a deity, nor is it pretended to by religion.
Bentley.

SUPPOSITIOUS, sùp-pòz-è-tish'ús. adj.
 [from suppositus, suppositivus, Latin.]

1. Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.

The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to So-lyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solymán is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be supposititious.
Bacon.

It is their opinion, that no man ever killed his father; hut that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, suppositi- tious, or begotten in adultery.
Addison.

There is a Latin treatise among the supposititious pieces, ascribed to Athanasius.
Waterlands.

2. Supposed; imaginary; not real.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do.
Woodward.

SUPPOSITIOUSNESS, sùp-pòz-è-tish'úsnés. n. s. [from suppositivus.] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPOSITIVELY, sùp-pòz-zè-tiv-lè. adv.
 [from suppose.] Upon supposition.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope sup- positively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively.
Hammond.

SUPPOSITORY, sùp-pòz-zè-túr-è. n. s. [sup- positoire, French; suppositorium, Lat.]

A kind of solid clyster.

Nothing relieves the head more than the piles;
 therefore suppositories of honey, aloes, and rock-salt ought to be tried.
Arbuthnot.

TO SUPPRE'SS, sùp-prés'. v. a. [sup- primo, suppressus, Lat. supprimer, Fr.]

1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commotion.

Glo'ster would have armour out of the Tower,
 To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.
Shakspeare.

Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger.
Davies.

Sir William Herbert, with a well-armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and, oppressing some of the forwardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear.
Hayward.

2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal.

Things not reveal'd, which th' invisible King,
 Only omniscient, hath suppress'd in night.
Milton.
 Still she suppresses the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, she indirectly mentions it.
Broome.

3. To keep in; not to let out.

Well did'st thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
 For, had the passions of thy heart burst out,
 I fear we should have seen decypher'd there
 More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils.
Shakspeare.

SUPPRE'SSION, sùp-prèsh'ùn. n. s. [sup- pression, Fr. suppressio, Lat. from sup- press.]

 of a tumour into pus.

If the inflammation be gone too far towards a sup- puratio, then it must be promoted with supura- tives, and opened by incision.
Wiseman.

This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to suppurations.
Arbuthnot.

2. The matter suppurated.

The great physician of souls sometimes cannot cure without cutting us: sin has festered inwardly, and he must lance the imposthume, to let out death with the suppuration. South.

SUPPURATIVE, súp-pù-rá-tív.⁵¹² adj. [suppuratus, French; from suppurate.] Digestive; generating matter.

SUPPUTATION, súp-pù-tá'shùn. n. s. [supputatio, Fr. supputo, Latin.] Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.

From these differing properties of day and year arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Holder.

The Jews saw every day their Messiah still farther removed from them; that the promises of their doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were false; that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered with obscurity; that all the supputations of time either terminated in Jesus Christ, or where without a period. West.

TO SUPPUTE, súp-pù-te'. v. a. [from supputo, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate.

SUPRA, sù-prá. [Lat.] In composition, signifies above or before.

SUPRAVULGAR, sù-prá-vúl-gúr. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.

None of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supravulgar and noble qualities. Collier.

SUPREMACY, sù-prém-á-sé.⁵¹¹ n. s. [from supremus.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.

As we under heav'n are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shaksp.

I am ashamed that women Should seek for rule, supremacy, and sway, When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakspere.

Put to proof his high supremacy, Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate. Milton.

Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion: he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.

You're form'd by nature for this supremacy, which is granted from the distinguishing character of your writing. Dryden.

From some wild curs that from their masters ran, Abhorring the supremacy of man, In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.

Supremacy of nature, or supremacy of perfection, is to be possessed of all perfection, and the highest excellency possible. Waterland.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.

SUPREME, sù-pré-me'. adj. [supremus, Latin.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superiour is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political. As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers, With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness! Shakspere.

My soul akes To know, when two authorities are up, Neither supreme, how soon confusion May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shakspere.

This strength, the seat of Deity supreme. Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees, Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees; Three centuries he grows, and three he stays Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryd.

2. Highest; most excellent.

No single virtue we can most commend, Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend; For she was all in that supreme degree. That, as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.

To him both heav'n The right had giv'n, And his own love bequeath'd supreme command. Dryden.

SUPREME, sù-pré-me'. adv. [from the adjective.] In the highest degree.

The starving chymist in his golden views Supremely blest, the poet in his muse. Pope.

SUR, sùr. [sur, French.] In composition, means upon, or over and above.

He was wounded in the inside of the calf of his leg, into the sural artery. Wiseman.

SURANCE, shù-ránse.⁴⁶⁴ n. s. [from sure.] Warrant; security; assurance.

Give some surance that thou art revenge; Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels. Shakspere.

TO SURBATE, sùr-bá-te'. v. a. [solbatir, Fr.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel; to harass; to fatigue.

Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them: however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.

Chalky land surbates and spoils oxen's feet. Mortimer.

SURBEAT, sùr-bét. The participle passive of surbeat, which Spenser seems to have used for surbate.

A bear and tyger being met In cruel fight, on Lybick ocean wide, Espy a traveller with feet surbet, Whom they in equal prey hope to divide. Spenser.

TO SURCEASE, sùr-sése'. v. n. [sur and cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.

Small favours will my prayers increase: Granting my suit, you give me all; And then my prayers must needs surcease; For I have made your godhead fall. Donne.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.

To fly together from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under the pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to our own souls. Hooker.

Nor did the British squadrons now surcease To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.

So pray'd he, whilst an angel's voice from high Bade him surcease to importune the sky. Harte.

TO SURCEASE, sùr-sése'. v. a. To stop; to -put an end to. Obsolete.

All pain hath end, and every war hath peace; But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease. Spenser.

SURCEASE, sùr-sése'.²⁹⁷ n. s. Cessation; stop.

It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to send out your writs of surcease unto all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.

TO SURCHARGE, sùr-tshárje'. v. a. [surcharger, French.] To overload; to overburden.

They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romescot, the which might not surcharge the tenant or freeholder. Spenser.

Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surprised his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city. Knolles.

More remov'd, Lest heav'n, surcharg'd with potent multitude, Might hap to move new broils. Milton.

He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears Without the vent of words. Milton.

When graceful sorrow in her pomp appears, Sure she is dress'd in Melefinda's tears: Your head inclin'd, as hiding grief from view, Droops like a rose surecharg'd with morning dew. Dryden.

SURCHARGE, sùr-tshárje'. n. s. [surcharge, French; from the verb.] Burden added to burden; overburden; more than can be well born.

The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first. Bacon.

An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing. Bacon.

The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another. L'Estrange.

SURCHARGER, sùr-tshárjúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from surcharge.] One that overburdens.

SURDNŪMBER, sūr-dnūm'būr. n. s. [from surd and number.] That is incommensurate with unity.

SURE, shūre.^{153 455} adj. [seure, Fr.]

1. Certain; unfailing; infallible.

The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple. Psalms.

Who knows,

Let this be good, whether our angry foe
Can give it, or will ever? How he can
Is doubtful; that he never will, is sure. Milton.

2. Certainly doomed.

Our coin beyond sea is valued according to the silver in it: sending it in bullion is the safest way, and the weightiest is sure to go. Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.

Friar Laurence met them both;
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she:
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it. Shaksp.

Let no man seek what may befall:

Evil he may be sure. Milton.

The youngest in the morning are not sure
That 'till the night their life they can secure. Denham.

While sore of hattle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye agen?
In wars renew'd, uncertain of success,
Sure of a share, as umpires of the peace. Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, I am sure much less will you in the style. Wake.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger. To make sure is to secure, so as that nothing shall put it out of one's possession or power.

Thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule. Daniel.

He bad me make sure of the hear, before I sell his skin. L'Estrange.

A peace cannot fail, provided we make sure of Spain. Temple.

Revenge is now my joy: he's not for me,
And I'll make sure he ne'er shall be for thee. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
When even this day has ruin'd. Dryden.

Make Cato sure, and give up Utica,
Cæsar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle. Addison.

They have reason to make all actions worthy of observation which are sure to be observed. Atterbury.

5. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure.

Thou the garland wear'st successively;
Yet though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough. Shakspere.

I wish your horses swift and sure of foot,
And so I do commend you to their backs. Shaksp.

I wrapt in sure bands both their hands and feet,
And cast them under hatches. Chapman.

Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence;
The surest guard is innocence. Roscommon.

Partition firm and sure the waters to divide. Milton.

Doubting thus of innate principles, men will call pulling up the old foundations of knowledge and certainty: I persuade myself that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.

To prove a genuine birth,

On female truth assenting faith relies:
Thus manifest of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded on a fair maternal fame. Pope.

6. To be SURE. Certainly. This is a vicious expression: more properly be sure.

Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such, to be sure, who conversed perpetually with them. Atterbury.

Though the chymist could not calcine the caput mortuum, to obtain its fixed salt, to be sure it must have some. Arbuthnot.

SURE, shūre. adv. [surement, Fr.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless. It is generally without emphasis; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of state

Hath puzzled his clear spirit. Shakspere.

Her looks were flush'd, and sullen was her mien,
That sure the virgin goddess, had she been Aught but a virgin, must the guilt have seen. Addison.

Sure the queen would wish him still unknown:
She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence. Smith.

Sure upon the whole, a bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick. Pope.

SUREFOOTED, shūre-fūt'ēd. adj. [sure and foot.] Treading firmly; not stumbling.

Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger! Genesis.

2. Security; safety.

There the princesses determining to bathe, thought it was so privileged a place as no body durst presume to come thither; yet, for the more surety they looked round about. Sidney.

3. Foundation of stability; support.

We our state

Hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds;
On other surety none. Milton.

4. Evidence; ratification; confirmation.

She call'd the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself. Shakspere.

5. Security against loss or damage; security for payment.

There remains unpaid

A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which
One part of Aquitain is bound to us. Shakspere.

6. Hostage; bondsman; one that gives security for another; one that is bound for another.

That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd
you,

One of the greatest in the christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakspere.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him. Genesis.

Yet be not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Hammond.

SURFACE, sūr'fās.⁹¹ n. s. [sur and face, French.] Superficies; outside; surface. It is accented by Milton on the last syllable.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whercon we stand. Milton.

Errors like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below. Dryden.

All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, so as together to compose one even surface. Newton.

To SURFEIT, sūr'fit.²⁵⁵ v. a. [from sur and faire, Fr. to do more than enough, to overdo.] To feed with meat or drink to satiety and sickness; to cram overmuch.

The surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores. Shakspere.

To SURFEIT, sūr'fit. v. n. To be fed to satiety and sickness.

They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing. Shakspere.

Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. Luke.

Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home. Clarendon.

They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surfeit of it. Locke.

SURFEIT, sūr'fit. n. s. [from the verb.]

Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.

When we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and stars. Shakspere.

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane. Shakspere.

Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him. Shakspere.

Why, disease, dost thou molest

Ladies, and of them the best?

Do not men grow sick of rites,

To thy altars, by their nights

Spent in surfeits?

Surfeits many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards. Ben Jonson.

Peace, which he lov'd in life, did lend

Her hand to bring him to his end;

When age and death call'd for the score,

No surfeits were to reckon for.

Our father Crashaw.

Has ta'en himself a surfeit of the world,

And cries, it is not safe that we should taste it.

Otway.

SURFEITER, sŭr'fit-ŭr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from sur- feit.] One who riots; a glutton.

I did not think

This am'rous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war. Shakspeare.

SURFEITWATER, sŭr'fit-wà-tŭr. n. s. [sur- feit and water.] Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold distilled poppywater, which is the true surfeitwater, with ease and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE, sŭrje. n. s. [from surgo, Lat.] A swelling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow;
wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous
main,

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,

And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:

I never did like molestation view

On the enchafted flood. Shakspeare.

He trod the water,

Whose enmity he lung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him. Shakspeare.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncom-passionate surges. Sandys.

The sulph'rous hail

Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid

The fiery surge, that from the precipice

Of heav'n receiv'd us fallen. Milton.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy north:

He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar

Pursues the foaming surges to the shore. Dryden.

Thetis, near Ismena's swelling flood,

With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep

In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

TO SURGE, sŭrje. v. n. [from surgo, Lat.]

To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main

The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.

He, all in rage, his sea-god sire besought,

Some cursed vengeance on his son to cast;

From surging gulfs two monsters straight were brought. Spenser.

The serpent mov'd, not with indented wave,

Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear,

Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd

Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.

Surging waves against a solid rock,

Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew,

Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

SURGEON, sŭr'jŭn.²⁶⁹ n. s. [corrupted by conversation from chirurgion.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was past the cure of a better surgeon than myself, so as I could but receive some few of her dying words. Sidney.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but withal,

I am a surgeon to old shoes. Shakspeare.

He that hath wounded his neighbour, is lied to the expences of the surgeon, and other incidencies.

Taylor.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain:

The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,

And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

SURGEONRY, sŭr'jŭn-rè. } n. s. [for chi-

SURGERY, sŭr'jŭr-è. } rurgery.] The act of curing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unsound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service.

Spenser.

Strangely visited people,

The mere despair of surgery he cures. Shakspeare.

They are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar? Shakspeare.

SURGY, sŭr'jè. adj. [from surge.] Rising in billows.

Do publick or domestick cares constrain

This toilsome voyage o'er the surgy main? Pope.

SURLILY, sŭr'lè-lè. adv. [from surlly.] In a surly manner.

SURLINESS, sŭr'lè-nès. n. s. [from surlly.]

Gloomy; moroseness; sour anger.

Thus pale they meet; their eyes with fury burn;

None greets; for none the greeting will return;

But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care

His foe profest, as brother of the war. Dryden.

SURLING, sŭr'ling. n. s. [from surlly.] A sour, morose fellow. Not used.

These sour surlings are to be commended to sieur

Gaulard. Camden.

SURLY, sŭr'lè. adj. [from surly, sour,

Saxon.] Gloomily morose; rough; un-civil; sour; silently angry.

'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surlly groom,

That take it on you at the first so roundly. Shakspeare.

That surlly spirit, melancholy,

Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick,

Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,

Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,

And strain their cheeks to idle merriment. Shakspeare.

Against the capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd upon me, and went surlly by,

Without annoying me. Shakspeare.

Repuls'd by surlly grooms, who wait before

The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door. Dryden.

What if among the courtly tribe

You lost a place, and sav'd a bribe?

And then in surlly mood came here

To fifteen hundred pounds a year,

And fierce against the whigs harangu'd? Swift.

The zephyrs floating loose, the timely rains,

Now soften'd into joy the surlly storms. Thomson.

TO SURMISE, sŭr-mize'. v. a. [surmise,

French.] To suspect; to imagine imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense,

yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden exultation

it rather surmiseth than conceiveth: somewhat it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not;

yet very intente desire thereof doth so incite it,

that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire. Hooker.

Of questions and strifes of words cometh envy, railings, and evil surmisings. 1 Timothy

Surmise not

His presence to these narrow bounds confin'd. Mill.

It wasted nearer yet, and then she knew

That what before she but surmis'd, was true. Dryd.

This change was not wrought by altering the form or position of the earth, as was surmis'd by a very learned man, but by dissolving it. Woodward.

SURMISE, sŭr-mize'. n. s. [surmise, Fr.]

Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let grow private surmises, whereby the thing itself is not made better or worse: if just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did,

then are these censures frustrate. Hooker.

They were by law of that proud tyranness,

Provok'd with wrath, and cury's false surmise,

Condemn'd to that dungeon merciless,

Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness. Spenser.

My compassionate heart

Will not permit my eyes once to behold

The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise. Shakspeare.

My thought, whose murdering yet is but fantas-

tical,

Shakes so my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in surmise. Shakspeare.

No sooner did they espy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was occasioned,

for that the English ships removed the day before.

Hayward.

We double honour gain

From his surmise prov'd false. Milton.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,

False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises. Pope.

No man ought to be charged with principles he actually disowns, unless his practices contradict his profession; not upon small surmises. Swift.

TO SURMOUNT, sŭr-mòunt'. v. a. [sur- monter, French.]

1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds.

Raleigh.

2. To conquer; to overcome.

Though no resistance was made, the English had much ado to surmount the natural difficulties of the place the greatest part of one day. Hayward.

He hardly escaped to the Persian court; from whence, if the love of his country had not surmounted its base ingratitude to him, he had many invitations to return at the head of the Persian fleet; but he rather chose a voluntary death. Swift.

3. To surpass; to exceed.

What surmounts the reach

Of human sense, I shall delineate so,

By lik'ning spiritual to corporeal forms,

As may express them best. Milton.

SURMOUNTABLE, sŭr-mòunt'à-bl. adj.

[from surmount.] Conquerable; super-able.

SURMOUNTER, sŭr-mòunt'ŭr. n. s. [from surmount.] One that rises above another.

SURMOUNTING, sŭr-mòunt'ing. n. s. The act of getting uppermost.

SURMULLET, sŭr'mŭl-lit. n. s. [mugil,

Lat.] A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

SURNAME, sŭr'name.⁴⁹³ n. s. [surnom,

French.]

1. The name of the family; the name which one has over and above the christian name.

Many which were mere English joined with the Irish against the king, taking on them Irish habits and customs, which could never since be clean wiped away; of which sort be most of the surnames that end in an, as Hernan, Shinan, and Mungan, which now account themselves natural Irish. Spenser.

He, made heir not only of his brother's kingdom,

but of his virtues and haughty thoughts, and of the surname also of Barbarossa, began to aspire to the empire. Knolles.

The epithets of great men, monsieur Boileau is of opinion, were in the nature of surnames, and repeated as such. Pope.

To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young mistress. Sidney.

SUSPIRATION, sŭs-spĕ-rá'shŭn. n. s. [suspiratio, from suspiro, Lat.] Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black, Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath, That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or sorrow. More.

To SUSPIRE, sŭs-spíre'. v. n. [suspiro, Latin.]

1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.

2. It seems in Shakspeare to mean only, to begin to breathe; perhaps mistaken for respire.

Since the birth of Cain, the first male child, To him that did but yesterday suspire, There was not such a gracious creature born. Shakspeare.

To SUSTAIN, sŭs-táne'. v. a. [sostenir, French; sustineo, Latin.]

1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.

The largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More.

Vain is the force of man, To crush the pillars that the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. To support; to keep from sinking under evil.

The admirable curiosity and singular excellency of this design will sustain the patience, and animate the industry, of him who shall undertake it. Holder.

If he have no comfortable expectations of another life to sustain him under the evils in this world, he is of all creatures the most miserable. Tillotson.

3. To maintain; to keep.

What food

Will he convey up thither to sustain

Himself and army. Milton.

But it on her, not she on it depends;

For she the body doth sustain and cherish. Davies.

My labour will sustain me. Milton.

4. To help; to relieve; to assist.

They charged, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.

His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain, And long for arbitrary lords again,

He dooms to death, asserting publick right. Dryd.

5. To bear; to endure.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife, And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life! Dryd.

Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain

In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain? Dryd.

The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her; but a heart in love has its foundations sapped. Addison.

6. To bear without yielding.

Sacharissa's hearty's wine

Which to madness doth incline;

Such a liquor as no brain

That is mortal can sustain. Waller.

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit

The offer of this time, I cannot promise,

But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,

With these you bear already. Shakspeare.

Were it I thought death menac'd would ensue

This my attempt, I would sustain alone

The worst, and not persuade thee. Milton.

SUSTAINABLE, sŭs-tá'ná-bl. adj. [soustenable, Fr. from sustain.] That may be sustained.

SUSTAINER, sŭs-tá'nŭr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from sustain.]

1. One that props; one that supports.

Thyself hast a sustainer heen

Of much affliction in my cause. Chapman.

SUSTENANCE, sŭs'té-náns. n. s. [soustenance, French.]

1. Support; maintenance.

Scarcely allowing himself fit sustenance of life, rather than he would spend those goods for whose sake only he seemed to joy in life. Sidney.

There are to one end sundry means; as for the sustenance of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness. Hooker.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter her's, whose sustenance it was? Addison.

2. Necessaries of life; victuals.

The experiment cost him his life for want of sustenance. L'Estrange.

The ancients were inventors of all arts necessary to life and sustenance, as plowing and sowing. Temple.

SUSTENTATION, sŭs-tén-tá'shŭn. n. s. [sustentation, French, from sustento, Latin.]

1. Support; preservation from falling.

These steams once raised above the earth, have their ascent and sustentation aloft promoted by the air. Boyle.

2. Use of victuals.

A very abstemious animal, by reason of its frigidty and latitancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Brown.

3. Maintenance; support of life.

When there be great shoals of pople, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

SUSURRATION, sŭ-sŭr-rá'shŭn. n. s. [from susurro, Lat.] Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE, sŭte. n. s. [for suite.] Sort. I believe only misprinted.

Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, this we conceive, that they are not of one sute. Hooker.

SUTLER, sŭt'lŭr.⁹⁹ n. s. [soeteler, Dutch; sudler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.

I shall sutler be

Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. Shaksp.

Send to the sutler's; there you're sure to find

The bully match'd with rascals of his kind. Dryd.

SUTURE, sŭt'shŭr.⁴⁶³ n. s. [sutura, Lat.]

1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.

Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation: to maintain this situation, several sorts of sutures have been invented: those now chiefly described are the interrupted, the glowers, the quilled, the twisted and the dry sutures; but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only useful ones. Sharp.

2. A particular articulation: the bones of the cranium are joined to one another by four sutures. Quincy.

Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Arbutnot.

SWAB, swŏb.⁸⁵ n. s. [swabb, Swedish.] A kind of mop to clean floors.

To SWAB, swŏb. v. a. [rpebban, Saxon.] To clean with a mop. It is now used chiefly at sea.

He made him swab the deck. Shelvoek.

SWABBER, swŏb'bŭr.⁹⁸ n. s. [swabber, Dutch.] A sweeper of the deck.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I, Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margery. Shakspeare.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this degenerate age, but the making a tarpawlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy? Dennis.

To SWADDLE, swŏd'dl.⁴⁰⁵ v. a. [rpeðan, Saxon.]

1. To swathe; to bind in clothes, generally used of binding new-born children.

Invested by a veil of clouds, And swaddled as new-horn in sable should; For these a receptacle I design'd. Sandys.

How soon doth man decay! When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets, To swaddle infants, whose young breath

Searce knows the way; Those clouts are little winding sheets, Which do consign and send them unto death. Herbert.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about a hundred yards of swathe. Addison.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.

Great on the hench, great in the saddle, That could as well bind o'er as swaddle. Hudibras.

SWADDLE, swŏd'dl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [from the verb.] Clothes bound round the body.

I begged them to uncase me: no, no, say they; and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

SWADDLINGBAND, swŏd'ling-bánd. }
SWADDLINGCLOTH, swŏd'ling-klŏth. }
SWADDLINGCLOUT, swŏd'ling-klŏut. }

n. s. [from swaddle.] Cloth wrapped round a new-born child.

From thence a fairy thee unweeting reft, There as thou slept'st in tender swaddling-band, And her hase elfin brood there for thee left:

Such men do changelings call, so changed by fairies theft. Spenser.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts. Shakspeare.

The swaddling-bands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.

To SWAG, swág.⁸⁸ v. n. [rigan, Saxon; sweigia, Islandick.] To sink down by its weight; to hang heavy.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall. Wotton.

Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his hack, and another answering to it upon his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Grevo.

To SWAGE, swàje. v. a. [from assuage.]

To ease; to soften; to mitigate.

Apt words have pow'r to swage
The tumours of a troubled mind,
And are as balm to fester'd wounds. Milton.
Nor wanting pow'r to mitigate and swage
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds. Milton.

I will love thee:

Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and he let loose to thine. Othway.

To SWA'GGER, swâg'gûr.⁹⁸ v. n.
[swadderin, Dutch; to make a noise;
ÿpegan, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully;
to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? squabble? swagger? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? Oh thou invisible spirit of wine! Shakspeare.

'Tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggered with me last night. Shakspeare.

The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge. Glanville.

Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, dress, cock, and swagger, at the same noisy rate
L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,
And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
But swaggered like a lord. Dryden.

Confidenc, how weakly soever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, that talks of nothing but demonstration. Tillotson.

To be great, is not to be starched and formal, and supercilious; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our inferiors. Collier.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause?
to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be. Arbutnot.

SWA'GGERER, swâg'gûr-ûr. n. s. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.

He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound.
Shakspeare.

SWA'GGY, swâg'gê.³⁸³ adj. [from swag.]
Dependent by its weight.

The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly. Brown.

SWAIN, swâne.²⁰² n. s. [ÿpein, Saxon and Runick.]

That good knight would not so nigh repair,
Himself estranging from their joyance vain,
Whose fellowship seem'd far unfit for warlike swain.
Spenser.

2. A country servant employed in husbandry.

It were a happy life
To be no better than a homely swain. Shakspeare.

3. A pastoral youth.

Blest swains! whose nymphs in ev'ry grace excel;
Blest nymphs! whose swains those graces sing so well. Pope.

Leave the meer country to meer country swains,
And dwell where life in all life's glory reigns.
Harte.

SWA'INMOTE, swâne'môte. n. s. [swainmotus, law Latin.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest thrice in the year
This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of piepowder is to a fair. The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest. Corwell.

To SWALE, swâlê. } v. a. [ÿpelan, Sax.
To SWEAL, swêle.²²⁷ } to kindle.] To waste or blaze away; to melt: as, the candle swales.

SWA'LLET, swôl'lit. n. s. Among the tin-miners, water breaking in upon the miners at their work. Bailey.

SWA'LOW, swôl'lô.³²⁷ n. s. [ÿpalepe, Sax.
hirundo.] A small bird of passage; or,
as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship. Shakspeare.

Daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares. Shakspeare.
The swallows make use of celendine, and the linnet of eupragia. More.

When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

To SWA'LOW, swôl'lô. v. a. [ÿpelgan,
Saxon; swelgen, Dutch.]

1. To take down the throat.

If little faults
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye, Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us? Shakspeare.

Men arc, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do empirick's pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure.
Locke.

2. To receive without examination.

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Locke.

3. To engross; to appropriate: often with up emphatical.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. 2 Samuel.

Homér excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him. Pope.

4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyss; to engulf: with up.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare.

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave. Shaksp.

Death is swallowed up in victory. 1 Corinthians
If the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. Numbers.

In boes swallowed up and lost. Milton.

He hid many things from us, not that they would swallow up our understanding, but divert our attention from what is more important. Decay of Piety.

Nature would abhor
To be forced back again upon herself,
And like a whirlpool swallow her own streams.
Dryden.

Should not the sad occasion swallow up
My other cares, and draw them all into it? Addison.

5. To occupy.

The necessary provision for life swallows the greatest part of their time. Locke.

6. To seize and waste.

The priest and the prophet are swallowed up of wine. Isaiah.

8. Swallow implies, in all its figurative senses, some nauseous or contemptuous idea, something of grossness or of folly.

SWA'LOW, swôl'lô.⁸⁶ n. s. [from the verb.]
The throat; voracity.

Had this man of merit and mortification been called to account for his ungodly swallow, in gorging down the estates of helpless widows and orphans, he would have told them that it was all for charitable uses. South.

SWA'LOWTAIL, swôl'lô-tâle. n. s. A species of willow.

The shining willow they call swallowtail, because of the pleasure of the leaf. Bacon.

Boggy; fenny.

Swampy fens breathe destructive myriads.
Thomson.

SWAN, swôn.⁸⁵ n. s. [ÿpan, Sax swan,
Danish; swaen, Dutch; cycnus, Lat.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.
Its legs and feet are black; as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony.
Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years.
There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous. Calmet.

With untainted eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.
Shakspeare.

Let music sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan-like end. Shaksp.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurm'ring to the floods.
Dryden.

The idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Locke.

SWA'NSKIN, swôn'skîn. n. s. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

SWAP, swôp.⁸⁵ adv. [ad suiha, to do at a snatch, Islandick.] Hastily; with hasty violence: as, he did it swap. It seems to be of the same original with swefi.
A low word.

To SWAP, swôp. v. a. To exchange. See
To SWOP.

SWARD, swârd. n. s. [sward, Swedish.]

1. The skin of bacon.
2. The surface of the ground: whence green sward, or green sward.
Water kept too long loosens and softens the sward, makes it subject to rusbes and coarse grass.
Note on Tusser.

The noon of night was past, and then the foe

Came dreadless o'er the level swart, that lies Between the wood and the swift streaming Ouse.

A. Philips.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the swarth, and burn it.

Mortimer.

SWARE, swàre. The preterit of swear.
SWARM, swàrm.⁸⁶ n. s. [ɾyeanru, Sax.
swerm, Dutch.]

1. A great body or number of bees, or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general sway into your hand.

Shakspeare.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found. Addison.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
Which I like summer-flies, shake off again,
Let others sing.

Young.

To SWARM, swàrm. v. n. [ɾyeanru, Sax.
Saxon; swermen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;
Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm.

Dryden.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spied. Gay.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise, if the weather hold.

Mortimer.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Macdonel,
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon.

Shakspeare.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle.

Shakspeare.

What a multitude of thoughts at once
Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears!

Milton.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the shrine;

In crowds around the swarming people join. Dryd.

3. To be crowded; to be overrun; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers.

Spenser.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl,
her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals.

Hovel.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions; poisoning the world ever after.

Brown.

Life swarms with ills, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is safety for a tender maid?

Young.

4. To breed multitudes.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropp'd with blood of Gorgon.

Milton.

5. It is used in conversation for climbing a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs.

SWART, swàrt. } adj. [swarts, Goth.
SWARTH, swàrth. } ɾyeanru, Saxon;
swart, Dutch.]

1. Black; darkly brown; tawny.

A nation strange, with visage swart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray,
Through the world then swarm'd in every part.

Spenser.

A man
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did show.

Spenser.

Whereas I was black and swarth before;
With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

Shakspeare.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.

Milton.

2. In Milton it seems to signify gloomy;
malignant.

Ye valleys low,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparsely looks.

Milton.

To SWART, swàrt. v. a. [from the noun.]

To blacken; to dusk.

The heat of the sun may swart a living part, or even black a dead or dissolving flesh.

Brown.

SWARTHILY, swàrthè-lè. adv. [from swarthy.] Blackly; duskiy; tawnily.

SWARTHINESS, swàrthè-nès. n. s. [from swarthy.] Darkness of complexion;
tawniness.

SWARTHLY, swàrthè. adj. [See SWART.]
Dark of complexion; black; dusky;
tawny.

Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The swarthy Africans complain.

Roscommon.

Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swarthy, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful.

Hale.

Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air.

Addison.

Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him:
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim.

Addison.

SWASH, swòsh. n. s. [A cant word.] A
round, but oval; and whose moldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work.

Moxon.

SWASH, swòsh. n. s. [from the verb.] Impulse of water flowing with violence.

Dict.

To SWASH, swòsh. v. n. To make a great clatter or noise: whence swash-buckler. Not in use.

We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.

Shaksp.

Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.

Shakspeare.

SWA'SHER, swòsh'úr. n. s. [from swash.]
One who makes a show of valour or force of arms. Obsolete.

I have observed these three swashers; three such anticks do not amount to a nan.

Shakspeare.

SWATCH, swòtsh. n. s. A swath. Not in use.

One spreadeth those bands so in order to lie,
As barlie in swatches may fill it thereby.

Tusser.

SWATH, swòth. n. s. [swade, Dutch.]

1. A line of grass cut down by the mower.
With tossing and raking, and setting on cox.
Grasse, lately in swathes, is meat for an ox.

Tusser.

The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.

Shakspeare.

As soon as your grass is mown, if it lie thick in the swath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it.

Mortimer.

2. A continued quantity.

An affection'd ass, that cons state without book,
and utters it by great swaths.

Shakspeare.

3. [ɾpedan, to bind, Saxon.] A band; a fillet.

An Indian comb, a stick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine straws laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths.

Grew.

Long pieces of linen they folded about me, till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe.

Guardian.

To SWATHE, swàthe.⁴⁶⁷ v. a. [ɾpedan, Saxon.] To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.

He had two sons; the eldest of them at three years old,

I th' swathing cloaths the other, from their nursery
Were stol'n.

Shakspeare.

Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie.

Abbot.

Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about.

Dryden.

Master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,
Or shews his loco-motive tricks.

Prior.

To SWAY, swà. v. a. [schweben, German,
to move.]

1. To wave in the hand; to move or wield any thing massy: as, to sway the sceptre.

Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,

As sparkles from the anvil rise,

When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.

Spenser.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.

Heav'n forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me.

Shakspeare.

I took your hands: but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.

Shakspeare.

The only way t' improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bowls run true by being made,
On purpose false, and to be sway'd.

Hudibras.

When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest

Tillotson.

3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.

The lady's mad: yet if 't were so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,

With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing.

Shakspeare.

The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says you are the worthier maid.

On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
The world.

Milton.

A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream,

Sabrina is her name.

Milton.

Take heed lest passion sway

Thy judgment to do aught, which else free-will

Would not admit.

Milton.

The judgment is swayed by passion, and stored with lubricous opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths.

Glanville.

This was the race

To sway the world, and land and sea subdue.

Dryden.

With these I went,
Nor idle stood with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous soil subdu'd; yet those I sway'd
With powerful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd.

Dryden.

They will do their best to persuade the world that no man acts upon principle, that all is swayed
by particular malice.

Davenant.

4. Power; rule; dominion.
This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.

Only retain

The name and all th' addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' host,
Beloved sons, be yours. Shakspeare.
Her father counts it dangerous
That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakspeare.
Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;
Each thinks a world too little for his sway. Dryden.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

5. Influence; direction; weight on one side.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the soundness of belief. Hooker.
An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires not before thought of. Sidney.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

SWE'ARER, swà'rùr.²⁴⁰ n. s. [from swear.]

A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.
And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
—Every one.
—Who must hang them?
—Why, the honest men.
—Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to heat the honest men, and hang them up. Shakspeare.
Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain:

It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse;
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert.
Of all men a phisosopher should be no swearer;
for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown.
It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift.

SWEAT, swét.²³² n. s. [rypeat, Saxon; sweet, Dutch.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.
Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excerned. Bacon.

If one approach to dare his force,
He swings his tail, and swiftly turns him round.
Dryden.

SWING, swing. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Motion of any thing hanging loosely.
In casting of any thing, the arms, to make a greater swing, are first cast backward. Bacon.

Men use a pendulum, as a more steady and regular motion than that of the earth; yet if any one should ask how he certainly knows that the two successive swings of a pendulum are equal, it would be very hard to satisfy him. Locke.

2. A line on which any thing hangs loose.

3. Influence or power of a body put in motion.

The ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine.
Shakspeare.

In this encyclopædia, and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we're to observe two circles, that, while we are daily carried about,
and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown.

The descending of the earth to this orbit is not upon that mechanical account Cartesius pretends, namely, the strong swing of the more solid globuli that overflow it. More.

4. Course; unrestrained liberty; abandonment to any motive.

Facts unjust
Commit, even to the full swing of his lust. Chapm.
Take thy swing;

For not to take, is but the self-same thing. Dryden.
These exuberant productions only excited and fomented his lusts; so that his whole time lay upon his hands, and gave him leisure to contrive, and with full swing pursue his follies. Woodward.

Let them all take their swing
To pillage the king,
And get a blue ribband instead of a string. Swift.

5. Unrestrained tendency.
Where the swing goeth, there follow, fawn, flatter, laugh, and lie lustily at other men's liking.
Ascham.

Those that are so persuaded, desire to be wise in a way that will gratify their appetites, and so give up themselves to the swing of their unbounded propensions. Glanville.

Were it not for these, civil government were not able to stand before the prevailing swing of corrupt nature, which would know no honesty but advantage.
South.

And cried, as in derision, spare the stripling;

Oh that insulting word! I would have swoop'd

Youth for old age, and all my life behind,

To have been then a momentary man. Dryden.

SWORD, sórd. n. s. [rþeord, Saxon; sweerd, Dutch.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out

That must destroy thee. Shakspeare.

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males. Genesis.

But the sword

Of Michael from the armoury of God

Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen

Nor solid might resist that edge: it met

The sword of Satan with steep force to smite

Descending, and in half cut sheer; nor stay'd,

But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd

All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,

And with'd him to and fro convolv'd; so sore

The griding sword with discontinuous wound

Pass'd through him. Milton.

2. Destruction by war: as fire and sword.

The sword without, and terrour within. Deut.

3. Vengeance of justice.

Justice to merit does weak aid afford,

She quits the balance, and resigns the sword. Dryden.

4. Emblem of authority.

This I, her sword-bearer, do carry,

For civil deed and military. Hudibras.

SWORDED, sórd'éd. adj. [from sword.]

Girt with a sword.

The sworded seraphim

Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd. Milton.

SWORDER, sórd'ür. n. s. [from sword.]

A cut-throat; a soldier. In contempt.

A Roman sworder and banditto slave

Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakspeare.

Caesar will

Unstate his happiness, and he stag'd to th' shew

Aganst a sworder. Shakspeare.

SWORDFISH, sórd'fish. n. s. [xiphias.]

A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,

That in his throat him pricking softly under,

His wide abyss him forced forth to spew. Spenser.

Malpighi observed the middle of the optick nerve of the swordfish to be a large membrane, folded,

according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan. Derham.

Our little fleet was now engag'd so far,

That like the swordfish in the whale they fought;

The combat only seem'd a civil war,
Till through their bowels we our passage wrought.
Dryden.

SWO'RDGRASS, sórd'grás. n. s. [gladiolus.]
A kind of sedge; glader. Ainsworth.

SWO'RDKNOT, sórd'nót. n. s. [sword and knot.]
Riband tied to the hilt of the sword.
Wigs with wigs, swordknots with swordknots strive,
Beaus banish heaus, and coaches coaches drive. Pope.

SWO'RDLAW, sórd'láw. n. s. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the strong-er.
So violence
Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,
Through all the plain, and refuge none was found. Milton.

SWO'RDMAN, sórd'mán. n. s. [sword and man.]
Soldier; fighting man.
Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy swordmen. Shakspeare.

At Lecca's house,
Among your swordmen, where so many associates
Both of thy mischief and thy madness met. Ben Jonson.

Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army,
the darling of the swordmen. Clarendon.

SWO'RDPLOYER, sórd'plá-úr. n. s. [sword and play.]
Gladiator; fencer; one who exhibits in publick his skill at the weapons by fighting prizes.
These they called swordplayers, and this spectacle a swordfight. Hakewill.

SWORE, swóre. The preterit of swear.
How soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore. Milton.

SWORN, swörn. The participle passive of swear.
What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll he sworn 'tis true. Shakspeare.
I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Shakspeare.
They that are mad against me, are sworn against me. Psalms.
He refused not the civil offer of a Pharisee, though his sworn enemy; and would eat at the table of those who sought his ruin. Calamy.
To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron knight,
Sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrols his name. Granville.

SWUM, swúm. The pret. and part. pass. of swim.
Air, water, earth,
By fowl, fish, beast, was swum, was walk'd Frequent. Milton.

SWUNG, swúng. The pret. and part. pass. of swing.
Her hand within her hair she wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground. Addison.

SYB, síb. adj. [properly sib, rib, Saxon.]
Related by blood. The Scottish dialect still retains it.
If what my grandsire to me said, be true,
Siker I am very syb to you. Spenser.

SY'OAMINE, sík'á-míne. } n. s. A tree.
SY'CAMORE, sík'á-móre. } The sycamore of scripture is not the same with ours.
Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower. Mortimer.
If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up, and it should obey you. Luke.

I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gather-er of sycamore fruit. Amos
Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root. Wolton.
Sycamores with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

SY'COPHANT, sík'ò-fánt. n. s. [συκοφαντης; sycophanta, Latin.] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.
Accusing sycophants of all men, did best sort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure, while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event. Sidney.
Men know themselves void of those qualities which the imprudent sycophant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

To SY'COPHANT, sík'ò-fánt. v. n. [συκοφαντῆω; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.
His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his harque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Government of the Tongue.

SYCOPHA'NTICK, sík'ò-fánt'ík. adj. [from sycophant.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.
To SYCOPHA'NTISE, sík'ò-fánt'ize. v. n. [συκοφαντικῶς; from sycophant.] To play the talebearer. Dict.

SYLLA'BICAL, síl-láb'é-kál. } adj. [syllabi- SYLLA'BICK, síl-láb'ík. } que, French;
from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

SYLLA'BICALLY, síl-láb'é-kál-é. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLABLE, síl'lá-bl. n. s. [συλλαβή; syllabe, French.]
1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.
I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakspeare.
There is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.
2. Any thing proverbially concise.
Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare
He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.

To SY'LLABLE, síl'lá-bl. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.
Airy tongues that syllable men's names
On sands and shores, and desert wildernesses. Milton.

SY'LLABUB, síl'lá-búb. n. s. [rightly SIL-LABUB, which see.] Milk and acids.
No syllabubs made at the milking pail,
But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabub and froth, without solidity. Felton.

SY'LLABUS, síl'lá-bús. n. s. [συλλαβος.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SY'LLOGISM, síl'lò-jíz-m. n. s. [συλλογισμός; syllogisme, French.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.
A piece of rhetorick is a sufficient argument of logick, an apologue of Æsop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Brown.
What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms! Bentley.

SYLLOGI'STICAL, síl-lò-jís'té-kál. } adj.
SYLLOGI'STICK, síl-lò-jís'tík. } [συλλογιστικῶς; from syllogism.] Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.
Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the intire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale.
Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of it. Watts.

SYLLOGI'STICALLY, síl-lò-jís'té-kál-é. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.
A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

To SY'LLOGIZE, síl'lò-jíze. v. n. [syllogizer, French; συλλογίζειν.] To reason by syllogism.
Logick is, in effect, an art of syllogising. Baker.
Men have endeavoured to transform logick into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SY'LVAN, síl'ván. adj. [better silvan.]
Woody; shady; relating to woods.
Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A silvan scene! and, as the ranks ascend,
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of steepest view Milton.
Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
Watch'd by the silvan genius of the place. Pope.

SY'LVAN, síl'ván. n. s. [silvain, French.]
A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustick.
Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless silvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYMBOL, sím'búl. n. s. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]
1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.
Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.
2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.
Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Brown.
Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South.

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison.

SYMBOLICAL, sim-bôl'è-kâl.⁶⁰⁹ adj. [symbolique, French: συμβολικός; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed. Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY, sim-bôl'è-kâl-è. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature, and a sensible sermon. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION, sim-bôl-lè-zâ'shûn. n. s. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of scripture, excellently intimated in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations. Brown.

To SYMBOLIZE, sim'bô-lize.¹⁴⁰ v. n. [symboliser, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation. Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Howell.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South.

To SYMBOLIZE, sim'bô-lize. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours. Brown.

SYMMETRIAN, sim-mêt'trè-âu. n. s. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL, sim-mêt'trè-kâl. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST, sim'mè-trist. n. s. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true. Wolton.

SYMMETRY, sim'mè-trè. n. s. [symmetrie, Fr. συμμετρία and μέτρον.] Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be exam'd, measure of all symmetry;

Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said
That harmony was she. Donne.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found
A pow'r, like that of harmony and sound. Waller.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHE'TICAL, sim-pâ-thét'è-kâl.⁶⁰⁹ }

SYMPATHE'TICK, sim-pâ-thét'ik.⁶⁰⁹ }

adj. [sympathetique, Fr. from sympathy.] Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Rosconn.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glanville.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best:
Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetical and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHE'TICALLY, sim-pâ-thét-tè-kâl-è.⁶⁰⁹ adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

To SYMPATHIZE, sim'pâ-thize. v. n. [sympathiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the mastiffs in robustness and rough coming on. Shakspeare.

The thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize. Shakspeare.

Nature, in awe to him,
Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Spectator.

Though the greatness of their minds exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden.

SYMPATHY, sim'pâ-thè. n. s. [sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakspeare.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakspeare.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy. Shakspeare.

I started back;
It started back: but, pleas'd, I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Pow'rful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. South.

Can kindness to desert like your's be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men; and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHONIOUS, sim-fô-nè-ûs. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYMPHONY, sim'fô-nè.¹⁷⁰ n. s. [symphonie, Fr. σύν and φωνή.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wolton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night,
Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton.

The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;

The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYSIS, sim'fè-sis. n. s. [σύν and φύσις.]

Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wiseman.

SYMPO'SIACK, sim-pô-zhè-âk.⁴⁶¹ adj. [symposiague, French; συμποσιακος.] Relating to merry-makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and computation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown.

In some of those symposiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientifick principles. Arbuthnot.

SYMPTOM, sim'tûm.^{166 412} n. s. [symptomè, French; συμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly scorbutick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMA'TICAL, sim-tô-mât'tè-kâl.⁶⁰⁹ }

SYMPTOMA'TICK, sim-tô-mât'tik. }

adj. [symptomatique, Fr. from symptom.]

tom.] Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatic is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatic, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for, when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasm, the swelling was discussed; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatic, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wiseman.

SYMPTOMA'TICALLY, sîm-tò-mât'té-kál-è. adv. [from symptomatic.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wiseman.

SYNAGO'GICAL, sîn-â-gôg'gè-kál. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE, sîn-â-gôg. n. s. [synagogue, French; συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue.

Shakspeare.
As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath. Gospi.

SYNALE'PHA, sîn-â-lè-fâ. n. s. [συναλοιφη.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning, or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego. Bailey.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalephas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHRO'SIS, sîn-âr-thrò'sîs. n. s. [σύν and ἄρθρωσις.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiseman.

SYNCHONDRO'SIS, sîn-kôn-drò'sîs. n. s. [σύν and χόνδρος.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternon to the ribs. Wiseman.

SYNCHRONICAL, sîn-krôn'è-kál. adj. [σύν and χρονος.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchronical. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM, sîng'krò-nîzm. n. s. [σύν and χρονος.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchronism of all the parts of the Mosaical chronology, after the flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

SYNCHRONOUS, sîng'krò-nûs. adj. [σύν and χρονος.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbuthnot.

SYNCOPE, sîng'kò-pè. n. s. [syncope, Fr. συνκοπη.]

1. Fainting fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wiseman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

SYNCOPIST, sîng'kò-pîst. n. s. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outshine all the modern syncopests, and thoroughly content my English readers I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

SYNDICATE, sînd'è-kâte. v. n. [syndiquer, Fr. σύν and δικη.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him. Hakewill.

SYNDROME, sînd'rò-mè. n. s. [σύνδρομη.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things be linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependence on such a syndrome of prerequired motors. Glanville.

SYNE'CDOCHE, sè-nèk'dò-kè. n. s. [synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχη.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor.

SYNECDOCHICAL, sè-nèk-dòk'kè-kál. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Boyle.

SYNNEURO'SIS, sîn-nù-rò'sîs. n. s. [σύν and νευρον.]

Synneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symphysis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibie. Wiseman.

SYNOD, sîn'nùd. n. s. [synode, Fr. σύνοδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakspeare.

Since the mortal and intestine jars 'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us, It hath in solemn synod been decreed, T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shaksp.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude Chaos of presby'try, where laymen guide, With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod. White.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate, Synods of gods! and, like to what ye are, Great things resolv'd. Milton.

Let us call to synod all the blest Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton.

The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council. Stillingfleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove! And you bright synod of the pow'rs above, On this my son your gracious gifts bestow. Dryden.

2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

How'er love's native hours are set, Whatever star's synod met, 'Tis in the mercy of her eye, If poor love shall live or die. Crashaw.

Their planetary motions and aspects Of noxious efficacy, and when to join In synod unbenaig. Milton.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle.

SYNODAL, sîn'nò-dál. n. s. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

SYNODAL, sîn'nò-dál. adj. [synodique, Fr. from synod.]

1. Relating to synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and processional meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them. Selden.

St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stillingfleet.

2. [synodique, Fr.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodical revolution of the moon measures the month. Holder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke.

SYNODICALLY, sè-nòd'è-kál-è. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

his free power to be disposed of who owns it; but is, 1. y the first giver, cut or divided from all other,
and tied to the issue of the donee. This limitation, or taille, is either general or special. Taille general is that whereby lands or tenements are limited to a man, and to the heirs of his body begotten; and the reason of this term is, because how many soever women the tenant, holding by this title, shall take to his wives, one after another, in lawful martrimony, his issue by them all have a possibility to inherit one after the other. Taille special is that whereby lands or tenements he limited unto a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies be-

118. This verb, like prendre in French, is used with endless multiplicity of relations. Its uses are so numerous that they cannot easily be exemplified; and its references to the words governed by it so general and lax, that they can hardly be explained by any succedaneous terms. But commonly that is hardest to explain which least wants explication. I have expanded this word to a wide diffusion, which, I think, is all that could be done.

To TAKE, take. v. n.

 tain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Latin.]

1. To be busy with physick.

'Tis in vain

To tamper with your crazy brain,
 Without trepanning of your skull
 As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras.

He tried washes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless.

Decay of Piety.

'Tis dangerous tampering with a muse,
 The profits small, and you have much to lose:
 For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
 Degenerate lines degrade the attained race.

Roscommon.

Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy: but, repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison.

 shore,
 And both those nations twice triumphed o'er. May.

TANG, táng.⁴⁰⁸ n. s. [tanghe, Dutch, acrid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also seasons: so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South.

It is strange that the soul should never once re-cal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Alterbury.

 which gives their speech a different tang from ours.
 Holder.

To TANG, táng. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shakspeare.

TA'NGENT, tán'jént. n. s. [tangent, Fr.
tangens, Latin.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant, that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Trevoux.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley.

TANGIBILITY, tán-jé-bil'é-té. n. s. [from tangible.] The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TA'NGIBLE, tán'jé-bl.⁴⁰⁸ adj. [from tango,
 Latin.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.

To TA'NGLE, táng'gl.⁴⁰⁸ v. a. [See EN-TANGLE.]

- To implicate; to knit together.
- To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too,
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream.
Shakspeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakspeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes
Shall be full fraught with servicable vows.
Shakspeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee.
Shakspeare.

Now ly't victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity.
Milton.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets. Milt.
With subtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled.
Hudibras.

- To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways,
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side.
Crashaw.

- To TA'NGLE, tâng'gl. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast.
Anon.

- TA'NGLE, tâng'gl. n. s. [from the verb.]

Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair.
Milton.

- TA'NIST, tân'nist. n. s. [An Irish word; an taanisther, Ersc.]

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother, and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry.
Spenser.

- TA'NISTRY, tân'nis-trè. n. s. [from tanist.]

The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election.
Spenser.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanis-try? which makes all their possessions uncertain.
Davies.

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chiefteries; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand.
Davies.

- TANK, tângk. n. s. [tanque, French.]

A large cistern or basin.

Handle your pruning knife with dexterity: go tightly to your business: you have cost me much,
and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rascal;
sallading in the garden, and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it.
Dryden.

- TA'NKARD, tângk'ûrd. n. s. [tanquaerd, French; tankaerd, Dutch; tancaird,

Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tankard touch'd your brain?
Sure they're fall'n asleep again Ben Jonson.
Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus. Arbuthnot.
When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full. Swaift.

- TA'NNER, tân'nûr. n. s. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather.

Tanners use that lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked with water or air.
Moxon.

talus*.] A punishment like that of Tantalus.

A lively representation of a person lying under the torments of such a tantalism, or platonick hell.
Spectator.

- To TA'NTALIZE, tân'tâ-lîze. v. a. [from Tantalus, whose punishment was to starve among fruits and water which he could not touch.] To torment by the show of pleasures which cannot be reached.

Thy vain desires, at strife
Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life. Dryden.
The maid once sped was not suffered to tantalize
the male part of the commonwealth. Addison.

- TA'NTAMOUNT, tânt'â-môunt. n. s.
[French.] Equivalent.

If one third of our coin were gone, and men had equally one third less money than they have, it must be tantamount; what I 'scape of one third less, another must make up.
Locke.

- TANTYVY, tân-tiv'è. adv. [from the note of a hunting horn, so expressed in articulate sounds. From Tantavi, says Skinner.] To ride tantivy is to ride with great speed.

- TA'NTLING, tânt'ling. n. s. [from Tantalus.] One seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable.

Hard life,
To be still hot summer's tantlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shakspeare.

- To TAP, tâp. v. a. [tappen, Dutch; taph-per, French.]

- To touch lightly; to strike gently.
- [taphen, Dutch.] To pierce a vessel;
to broach a vessel. It is used likewise of the liquor.

That blood, already like the pelican,
Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly caroused.
Shakspeare.

He has been tapping his liquors, while I have been spilling my blood. Addison.

Wait with patience till the tumour becomes troublesome, and then tap it with a lancet. Sharp.

- TAP, tâp. n. s. [from the verb.]

- A gentle blow.

This is the right fencing grace, tap for tap, and so part fair. Shakspeare
Each shakes her fan with a smile, then gives her right hand woman a tap upon the shoulder.
Spectator.

As at hot cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap. Gay.

So Huron-leeches, when their patient lies
In feverish restlessness with unclos'd eyes,

Apply with gentle strokes their ozier rod,
And tap by tap invite the sleepy god. Harle
2. A pipe at which the liquor of a vessel is let out.

A gentleman was inclined to the knight of Gascoigne's distemper upon hearing the noise of a tap running. Derham.

- TAPE, tâpe. n. s. [tæppan, Saxon.] A narrow fillet or band of linen.

Will you buy any tape, or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakspeare.

This pouch that's ty'd with tape
I'll wager that the prize shall be my due. Gay.
On once a flock-bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-ty'd curtains never meant to draw. Pope.

- TA'PER, tâ'pûr. n. s. [tæper, Saxon.]
A wax candle; a light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me. Shakspeare.

My daughter and little son we'll dress
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakspeare.

If any snatch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention. Taylor.

There the fair light,
Like Hero's taper in the window plac'd,
Such fate from the malignant air did find,
As that exposed to the boist'rous wind. Waller.

To see this fleet,
Heav'n, as if there wanted lights above,
For tapers made two glaring comets rise. Dryden.

- TA'PER, tâ'pûr. adj. [from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed from the bottom to the top; pyramidal; conical.

Her taper fingers, and her panting breast,
He praises. Dryden.

From the beaver the otter differs in his teeth,
which are canine; and in his tail, which is feline,
or a long taper. Grew.

- To TA'PER, tâ'pûr. v. n. To grow gradually smaller.

The hack is made tapering in form of a pillar,
the lower vertebres being the broadest and largest;
the superior lesser and lesser, for the greater stability of the trunk. Ray.

Such be the dog,
With tap'ring tail, that nimhly cuts the wind.
Tickel.

- TA'PESTRY, tâps'trè, or tâp'ès-trè. n. s.
[tapesterie, tapisserie, tapis, French;
tapetum, Latin.] Cloth woven in regular figures.

In the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakspeare.

The casements are with golden tissue spread,
And horses hoofs, for earth, on silken tap'stry tread.
Dryden.

One room is hung with tapestry, in which are wrought the figures of the great persons of the family. Addison.

- TA'PET, tâp'it. n. s. [tapetia, Latin.]
Worked or figured stuff.

To their work they sit, and each doth chuse
What story she will for her tapet take. Spenser.

- TA'PROOT, tâp'rôôt. n. s. [taph and root.]
The principal stem of the root.

Some put under the trees raised of seed, about four inches below the place where they sow their seeds, a small piece of tile to stop the running down of the taproot, which occasions it to branch when it comes to the tile. Mortimer.

- TA'PSTER, tâp'stûr. n. s. [from taph.] One whose business is to draw beer in an alehouse.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confirmers of false reckonings. Shakspeare.

Though you change your place, you need not change your trade: I'll be your tapster still.

Shakspeare.

The world is come now to that pass, that the vintner and tapster may broach what religion they please; and the apothecary may mingle her as he pleases.

Howel.

Though the painting grows decay'd,
The house will never lose its trade;
Nay, though the treacherous tapster Thomas
Hangs a new angel two doors from us.

Swift.

TAR, târ. 77 78 81 n. s. [tarpe, Sax. tarre, Dutch; tiere, Danish.] Liquid pitch; the turpentine of the pine or fir drained out by fire.

A man will not lose a hog for a halfpennyworth of tar.

Camden.

TAR, târ. n. s. [from tar used in ships.] A sailor; a seaman, in contempt.

In senates bold, and fierce in war,

A land commander, and a tar.

Swift.

To TAR, târ. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smear over with tar.

2. To tease; to provoke. [ταραττω.]

There has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them on to controversy.

Shakspeare.

Two curs shall tame each other; pride alone
Must tar the mastiffs on, as 'twere the bone.

Shakspeare.

TARANTULA, tâ-rân'tshù-lâ.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [Italian; tarentule, Fr.] An insect whose bite is only cured by musick.

This word, lover, did no less pierce poor Pyrocles, than the right tune of musick toucheth him that is sick of the tarantula.

Sidney.

He that uses the word tarantula, without having any idea of what it stands for, means nothing at all by it.

Locke.

TARDA'TION, târ-dâ'shûn. n. s. [tardo, Latin.] The act of hindering or delaying.

TAR'DIGRADOUS, târ'dè-grâd-ûs. adj. [tardigradus, Lat.] Moving slowly.

It is but a slow and tardigradous animal, preying upon advantage, and otherwise may be escaped.

Brown.

TAR'DILY, târ'dè-lè. adv. [from tardy.] Slowly; sluggishly.

He was indeed the glass,

Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves;

Speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant:

For those that could speak slow and tardily,

Would turn their own perfection to abuse,

To seem like him.

Shakspeare.

TAR'DINESS, târ'dè-nès. n. s. [from tardy.] Slowness; sluggishness; unwillingness to action or motion.

A tardiness in nature,

Which often leaves the history unspoke,

That it intends to do.

Shakspeare.

Nor should their age by years be told,

VOL. II.

Whose souls more swift than motion climb,
And check the tardy flight of time.

Sandys.

2. Sluggish; unwilling to action or motion.

Behold that navy which awhile before

Provok'd the tardy English close to fight,

Now draw their beaten vessels close to shore,

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobbies flight.

When certain to o'ercome, inclin'd to save,

Tardy to vengeance, and with mercy brave.

3. Dilatory; late; tedious.

You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way;

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Death he as oft accus'd

Of tardy execution, since denounc'd

The day of his offence.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,

Reserve their fruit for the next age's taste:

There a small grain in some few months will be

A firm, a lofty, and a spacious tree.

Tardy of aid, unseal thy heavy eyes,

Awake, and with the dawning day arise.

You may freely censure him for being tardy in his payments.

4. Unwary. A low word

Yield, scoundrel base, quoth she, or die,

Thy life is mine, and liberty:

But if thou think'st I took thee tardy,

And dar'st presume to be so hardy

To try thy fortune o'er a-fresh,

I'll waver my title to thy flesh.

5. Criminal; offending. A low word.

If they take them tardy, they endeavour to humble them by way of reprisal: those slips and mis-managements are usually ridiculed.

To TAR'DY, târ'dè. v. a. [tarder, French, from the adjective.] To delay; to hinder.

I chose

Camillo for the minister, to poison

My friend Polixenes; which had been done,

But that the good mind of Camillo tardied

My swift command.

Not yet by years extinguish'd, though restrain'd;
You season still with sports your serious hours,
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours.

Dryden.

TASTE, tâste. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of tasting; gustation.

Best of fruits, whose taste gave elocation. Milton.

2. The sense by which the relish of any thing on the palate is perceived.

Bees delight more in one flower than another, and therefore have taste. Bacon.

Delicacies of taste, sight, smell. Milton.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,
Reserve their fruit for the next age's taste. Waller.

3. Sensibility; perception.

I have almost forgot the taste of fears:

The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night shriek. Shakspeare.

Musick in the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last. Shakspeare.

4. That sensation which all things taken into the mouth give particularly to the tongue, the papillæ of which are the principal instruments hereof. Quincy.
Manna was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

Exodus.

Though there be a great variety of tastes, yet, as in smells, they have only some few general names. Locke.

5. Intellectual relish or discernment.

Seeing they pretend no quarrel at other psalms which are in like manner appointed to be daily read, why do these so much offend and displease their tastes? Hooker.

Sion's songs to all true tastes excelling,
Where God is prais'd aright. Milton.

I have no taste

Of popular applause. Dryden.
As he had no taste of true glory, we see him equipped like an Hercules, with a club and a lion's skin. Addison.

This metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste which gives us a relish of every flavour. Addison.

Your way of life, in my taste will be the best. Pope.

How ill a taste for wit and sense prevails in the world! Swift.

Pleasure results from a sense to discern, and a taste to be affected with, beauty. Seed.

However contradictory it may be in geometry, it is true in taste, that many little things will not make a great one. Reynolds.

6. An essay; a trial; an experiment. Not in use.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this as an essay or taste of my virtue. Shakspeare.

7. A small portion given as a specimen.

Young time is taster to eternity. Crashaw.

Says the fly, Are not all places open to me? Am not I the taster to princes in all their entertainments? L'Estrange.

Thy tutor be thy taster, ere thou eat;
There's poison in thy drink, and in thy meat. Dryden.
Apicous, here, the taster of the town,

Feeds twice a-week, to settle their renown. Young.

2. A dram cup. Ainsw.

To TATTER, tât'tûr. v. a. [τοτᾶραν, Sax.]

To tear; to rend; to make ragged. Tattered is perhaps more properly an adjective.

Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear:
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakspeare.

An apothecary late I noted

In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shakspeare.

Where wav'd the tatter'd ensigns of Ragfair,
A yawning ruin hangs. Pope.

Little tyrants rag'd,
Tore from cold wintry limbs the tatter'd weed. Thomson.

Here Satan vanish'd—He had fresh commands,
And knew his pupil was in able hands;
And now, the treasure found, and matron's store,
Sought other objects than the tatter'd poor. Harte.

TATTER, tât'tûr. n. s. [from the verb.] A rag; a fluttering rag.

This fable holds, from him that sits upon the throne, to the poor devil that has scarce a tatter. L'Estrange.

TATTERDEMA'LION, tât-tûr-dê-mâl'yûn. n. s. [tatter and I know not what.] A ragged fellow.

As a poor fellow was trudging in a bitter cold morning with never a rag, a spark that was warm clad called to this tatterdemalion, how he could endure this weather? L'Estrange.

To TATTLE, tât'tl. v. n. [tateren, Dut.]

To prate; to talk idly; to use many words with little meaning.

He stands on terms of honourable mind,
Ne will be carried with every commou wind
Of court's inconstant mutability,
Ne after every tattling fable fly. Spenser.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling. Shakspeare.

Excuse it by the tattling quality of age, which is always narrative. Dryden.

The world is forward enough to tattle of them. Locke.

The French language is extremely proper to tattle in; it is made up of so much repetition and compliment. Addison.

TATTLE, tât'tl. n. s. [from the verb.]

Prate; idle chat; trifling talk.

They ask'd her, how she lik'd the play?

Then told the tattle of the day. Swift.

Such tattle often entertains

My lord and me as far as Staines. Swift.

A young academick shall dwell upon trade and politicks in a dietatorial stile, while at the same time persons well skilled in those different subjects hear the impertinent tattle with a just contempt. Watts.

TATTLE, tât'tl-ûr. n. s. [from tattle.] An idle talker; a prater.

Going from house to house, tattlers, busy bodies, which are the canker and rust of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time, are reproved by the apostle. Taylor.

TATTO'O, tât-tôô'. n. s. [from tapotez tous, French.] The beat of a drum by which soldiers are warned to their quarters.

All those whose hearts are loose and low,
Start if they hear but the tatto. Prior.

TAVERN, tâv'ûrn. n. s. [taverna, French; taberna, Lat.] A house where wine is sold, and drinkers are entertained.

Enquire at London, 'mong the taverns there;

For there they say he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions. Shakspeare.

You shall be called to no more payments; fear no more tavern hills, which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth. Shakspeare.

To reform the vices of this town, all taverns and alehouses should be obliged to dismiss their company by twelve at night, and no woman suffered to enter any tavern or alehouse. Swift.

TAVERNER, tâv'ûrn-ûr.

TAVERNKEEPER, tâv'ûrn-kêêp-ûr. } n. s.

[ταυτολογία; ταῦτο and λογος; tautologie, Fr.] Repetition of the same words, or of the same sense in different words.

All science is not tautology; the last ages have shewn us, what antiquity never saw, in a dream.

Saint Andre's feet ne'er kept more equal time,
Not ev'n the feet of thy own Psyche's rhyme;
Though they in numbers as in sense excel,
So just, so like tautology, they fell. Dryden.

Every paper addressed to our beautiful incendiaries hath been filled with different considerations, that enemies may not accuse me of tautology.

To TAW, tãw. v. a. [touwen, Dutch; τavian, Sax.] To dress white leather, commonly called alum leather, in contradistinction from tan leather, that which is dressed with bark.

TAW, tãw. n. s. A marble to play with.
Trembling I've seen thee
Mix with the children as they play'd at taw;

TAX, tãks. n. s. [tãsg, Welsh; taxe, Fr. taxe, Dutch.]

1. An impost; a tribute imposed; an excise; a tallage.

He, says Horace, being the son of a tax gatherer or collector, smells every where of the meanness of his birth. Dryden.

With wars and taxes others waste their own,
And houses burn, and household gods deface,
To drink in bowls which glittering gems enchase. Dryden.

The tax upon tillage was two shillings in the pound in arable land, and four in plantations: this tax was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decuma or tithes. Arbuthnot.

2. [taxo, Lat.] Charge; censure.
He could not without grief of heart, and without some tax upon himself and his ministers for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licience of some pamphlets. Clarendon.

To TAX, tãks. v. a. [taxer, Fr. from the noun.]

1 To load with imposts.
Jehoiakim gave the silver and gold to Pharaoh, but he taxed the land to give the money. 2 Kings.

2. [taxo, Lat.] To charge; to censure; to accuse. It has of or with, and sometimes for, before the fault imputed, and is used both of persons and things.

How many hath he killed? I promised to eat all of his killing—Niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you. Shakspeare.

I am not justly to be taxed with any presumption for meddling with matters wherein I have no dealing. Raleigh.

Tax not divine disposal: wisest men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deceiv'd. Milton.

They cannot tax others omissions towards them without a tacit reproach of their own. Dec. of Piety.

He taxed not Homer nor Virgil for interesting their gods in the wars of Troy and Italy; neither would he have taxed Milton for his choice of a supernatural argument. Dryden.

Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes. Dryden.

He call'd him back aloud, and tax'd his fear;
And sure enough he heard, but durst not hear. Dryden.

Like some rich and mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold,
Who fresher for new mischief does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old. Dryden.

If this be chance, it is extraordinary; and I dare not call it more, for fear of being taxed with superstition. Dryden.

If he taxes both of long delay,
My guilt is less, who sooner came away. Dryden.

This salutation cannot be taxed with flattery, since it was directed to a prince, of whom it had been happy for Rome, if he had never been born, or if he had never died. Addison.

TA'XABLE, tãks'ã-bl. adj. [from tax.] That may be taxed.

TAXATION, tãks-ã'shún. n. s. [taxation, Fr. taxatio, Lat. from tax.]

1. The act of loading with taxes; impost; tax.

The subjects could taste no sweeter fruits of having a king, than grievous taxations to some vain purposes; laws made rather to find faults than to prevent faults. Sidney.

I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; my words are as full of peace as matter. Shakspeare.

He daily such taxations did exact,
As were against the order of the state. Daniel.

Various news I heard,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new;
All neither wholly false nor wholly true. Pope.

2. Accusation; scandal.

My father's love is enough to honour; speak no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days. Shakspeare.

TA'XER, tãks'úr. n. s. [from tax.] He who taxes.

These rumours begot scandal against the king taxing him for a great taxer of his people. Bacon.

TEA, tè. n. s. [a word, I suppose, Chinese; thé, French.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

The muses' friend, tea, does our fancy aid,
Repress those vapours which the head invade. Waller.

I have filled a tea pot, and received a dish of it. Addison.

He swept down a dozen tea dishes. Spectator.

Nor will you encourage the common tea table talk. Spectator.

Green leaves of tea contain a narcotick juice, which exudes by roasting: this is performed with great care before it is exposed to sale. Arbuthnot.

A living tea pot stands; one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout. Pope.

The mistress of the tea shop may give half an ounce. Swift.

The fear of being thought pedants hath taken many young divines off from their severer studies, which they have exchanged for plays, in order to qualify them for tea tables. Swift.

When you sweep, never stay to pick up tea spoons. Swift.

To TEACH, tètsh. v. a. pret. and part. pass. taught, sometimes teach'd, which is now obsolete. [teacan, Sax.]

1. To instruct; to inform, as a master: correlative to learn.

I am too sudden bold:
To teach a teacher ill beseemeth me. Shakspeare.

The Lord will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. Isaiah.

They teach all nations what of him they learn'd. Milton.

2. To deliver any doctrine or art, or words to be learned.

Moses wrote this song and taught it. Deut.
In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Mattheu.

Teach us by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons. Milton.

3. To show; to exhibit so as to impress upon the mind.

He is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching. Shakspeare.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others should practise them. South.

4. To tell; to give intelligence.

Huswives are tached, instead of a clocke,
How winter night passeth by crowing of cocke. Tusser.

To TEACH, tètsh. v. n. To perform the office of an instructor.

I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority,
Might go one way. Shakspeare.

The beads judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money. Micah.
TEACHABLE, têts'hâ-bi.⁴⁹³ adj. [from teach.] Docile; susceptible of instruction.

'Tis sufficient that matters of faith and religion be propounded in such a way, as to render them highly credible, so as an honest and teachable man may willingly and safely assent to them, and according to the rules of prudence be justified in so doing. Wilkins.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiassed, and teachable, to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TEAM, tème.²²⁷ n. s. [temo, the team of a carriage, Lat. tyme. Sax. a yoke.]

1. A number of horses or oxen drawing at once the same carriage.

Three a ploughman; all unweaving found,
As he his toilsome team that way did guide,
And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide. Spenser.

We fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shakspeare.

Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly harness team
Begins his golden progress in the east. Shakspeare.

I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love. Shakspeare.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done,
Home with their weary team they took their way Roscommon.

He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden.

In stiff clays they may plough one acre of wheat with a team of horse. Mortimer.

2. Any number passing in a line.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings and cleave the liquid sky. Dryden.

So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin:
Tearfalling pity dwells not in this eye. Shakspeare.

TEARFUL, tère'fûl. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakspeare.

This clears the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dries the tearful sluices of despair:
Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mind
All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope.

To TEASE, tèce.²²⁷ v. a. [tæpan, Sax.]

1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.

2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous impertinence.

Not by the force of carnal reason,
But indefatigable teasing. Butler.

My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.

After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL, t'é'zl. n. s. [tæpl, Sax. dipsacus, Latin.] A plant.

The species are three: one is called carduus ful-lonum, and is of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth. Miller.

TEASER, t'é'zûr.⁹³ n. s. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAT, tète.^{227 232} n. s. [teth, Welsh; тѣт, Saxon; tette, Dutch; te-ton, French.]

The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakspeare.

Snows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.

When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer, that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

It more pleas'd my sense,

T E D

Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milt.
Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.
The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat distant
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TE'CHILY, têtsh'è-lè. adv. [from techy.]
Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TE'CHINESS, têtsh'è-nès. n. s. [from techy.]
Peevishness; fretfulness.

TE'CHNICAL, ték'nè-kâl. adj. [τεχνικός; technique, French.] Belonging to arts;
not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of art, they refrain not from calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury, of a body.
Locke.

TE'CHY, têtsh'è.³⁶² adj. Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to woove,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all sute. Shaksp.
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dug! Shaksp.

TEUTO'NICK, ték-tôn'ík.⁶⁰⁹ adj. [τεκτονικός.]
Pertaining to building. Bailey.

To TED, téd. v. a. [teadan, Saxon, to prepare.] To lay grass newly mown in rows.

The smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound. Milt.
Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer.

Prudent has fall'n heaps Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grass, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rivall'd with artful heats. Philips.

TE'DDER, or TE'THER, téd'dúr. n. s. [tud- der, Dutch; tindt, a rope, Islandick.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide.
Teigher, Erse.

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.
We lived joyfully, going abroad within our ted-
der. Bacon.

We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder; they cannot run far from us. Child.

TE DE'UM, tè-dé'úm. n. s. A hymn of the church, so called from the first two words of the Latin.

The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung te Deum. Shaksp.

Te Deum was sung at St. Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TE'DIOUS, téd'è-ús, or téd'jè-ús.^{293 294} adj.
[tedieux, French; tadium, Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authors or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts.

Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milt.

3. Slow.

T E E

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first begun. Harte.
TE'DIOUSLY, téd'è-ús-lè, or téd'jè-ús-lè.²⁹⁴
adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner
as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNES, téd'è-ús-nès, or téd'jè-ús-
nès. n. s. [from tedious.]

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.
She distastes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.
In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.
Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shaksp.

4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often,
to interrupt them; which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

TO TEEM, tèém.²⁴⁶ v. n. [team, Saxon, offspring.]

1. To bring young. -
If she must teem,Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shaksp.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.
Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age?
Shaksp.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryd.
There are fundamental truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politicks. Addison.
TO TEEM, tèém. v. a.

1. To bring forth; to produce.
What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shaksp.

Common mother, thou
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
Teems and feeds all. Shaksp.

The earth obey'd; and strait
Op'n'ing her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth Innumerable living creatures Milton.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture. Woodward.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer. Swift.

TE'EMER, tèém'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from teem.]

One that brings young.

T E L

TE'EMLESS, tèém'lès. adj. [from teem.]
Unfruitful; not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of dearth
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth.
Dryden.

TEEN, tèèn. n. s. [teinan, Saxon; to kindle; teien, Flemish, to vex; teonan, Saxon, injuries.] Sorrow; grief. Not in use.

Arrived there,
That barehead knight for dread and doleful teen
Would fain have fled, ne durst approached near.
Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen.
Spenser.

My heart bleeds
To think o' th' teene that I have turn'd you to.
Shaksp.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shaksp.

TO TEEN, tèèn. v. a. [from teinan, to kindle, Saxon.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

TEENS, tèènz. n. s. [from teen for ten.]
The years reckoned by the termination teen; as, thirteen, fourteen. Spenser.

Our author would excite these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy.
Granville.

TEETH, tèèth. The plural of tooth.
Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job.

TO TEETH, tèèth. v. n. [from the noun.]

tition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment. Arbuth.

TE'GEMENT, tég'ù-mènt. n. s. [tegumen- tum, Latin.] Cover; the outward part.
This word is seldom used but in anatomy or physicks.

Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments. Brown.
Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wiseman.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace between the green pericarpium and the hard shell.
Ray.

TO TEH-HE, tè-hé'. v. n. [A cant word made from the sound.] To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachi-nation; to titter.

They laugh'd and teh-he'd with derision,
To see them take your deposition. Hudibras.

TELTREE, tèle'trèè. n. s. [tilia, Latin.]
The same with linden or lime tree.

A teeltree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isaiah.

TEINT, tint. n. s. [teinte, French.] Colour;
touch of the pencil.

Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TE'LARY, tél'lá-rè. adj. [tela, a web, Lat.]
Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center.
Brown.

TE'LESCOPE, tél'lè-skòpe. n. s. [tele- scope, French; τέλεσ and σκοπέω.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.

TEL

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shows the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCOPICAL, tɛl-lɛ-skɔp-ɛ-kål.⁵¹⁸ adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

And in performing end us. Milton.

2. To relate; to rehearse.
I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job.
When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped. Judges.
He longer will delay to hear thee tell His generation. Milton.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,
Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.
The rest are vanish'd, none repass the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope.

3. To teach; to inform.
He gently ask'd, where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell?
Who answer'd him full soft, he could not tell. Spens.
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Shakespeare.
Tell me now, what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of? Shaksp.

The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Samuel.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man
That is no fearing telltale. Shakespeare.
What, shall these papers lie like telltales here?
Shakespeare.

Let not the heavens hear these telltale women Rail on the Lord's anointed. Shakespeare.
'Tis done: report displays her telltale wings,
And to each ear the news and tidings brings. Fairfax.

And to the telltale sun descry
Our conceal'd solemnity. Milton.
Eurydice and he are prisoners here,
But will not long be so: this telltale ghost
Perhaps will clear them both. Dryden and Lee.
A telltale out of school
Is of all wits the greatest fool. Swift.

TEMERARIOUS, tɛm-ɛr-à-rɛ-ùs. adj. [temeraire, French; temerarius, Latin.]

1. Rash; heady; unreasonably adventurous; unreasonably contemptuous of danger.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the first point to be taken into consideration. L'Estrange.

2. Careless; heedless; done at random.
Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dashes of an unguided pen. Ray.

TEMERITY, tɛ-mɛr-ɛ-tɛ. n. s. [temeritas, Latin.] Rashness; unreasonable contempt of danger.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

To TEMPER, tɛm'pɛr.⁹⁸ v. a. [tempero, Latin; temperer, French.]

Temper or nourish. Milton.

7. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to sooth; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured to temper their warlike courage with sweet delights of learning and sciences; so that as much as the one excelled in arms, the other exceeded in knowledge. Spenser.

With this she wons to temper angry Jove,
When all the gods he threatens with thund'ring dart. Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have. Shaksp.
Woman! Nature made thee

To temper man: we had been brutes without you. Othway.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton.

In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very different tempers as to brittleness or toughness. Boyle.

Repeated peals they hear,
And, in a heav'n serene, refulgent arms appear:
Redd'ning the skies, and glitt'ring all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound. Dryden.

9. To govern. A latinism.

With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Spenser.

TE'MPER, tɛm'pɛr. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper, than the abundant growing of the palm trees. Raleigh.

Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbuthnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.

If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the reformation, the present clergy's wishes reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of paring them so quick. Swift.

3. Constitution of body.

This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below; and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness. Burnet.

4. Disposition of mind.

This, I shall call it evangelical, temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam. Hanmond.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd,
Without wrath or reviling. Milton.

This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

All irregular tempers in trade and business are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking. Law.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.

The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree. Shakespeare.

Our hearts,
Of brothers temper, do receive you in
With all kind love. Shakespeare.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.

Restore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,
And without perturbation hear me speak. B. Jonson.
Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.

Here draw I

A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shaksp
Ithuriel with his spear

Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure
Touch of æsterial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness: up he starts,
Discover'd, and surpriz'd. Milton.

These needles should have a due temper; for, if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle, they snap. Sharp.

TEMPERAMENT, tèm'pèr-â-mènt. n. s.
[temperamentum, Latin; temperament,
French.]

1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.

Bodies are denominated hot and cold, in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied. Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.
The common law has wasted and wrought out those distempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament. Hale

TEMPERAMENTAL, tèm-pèr-â-mènt'âl. adj.
[from temperament.] Constitutional That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, that may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown.

Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate, upon a bare temperamental relish or disgust. Glanville.

TEMPERANCE, tèm'pèr-âuse.⁸⁸ n. s. [tem-perantia, Latin.]

1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe

The rule of not too much; by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight. Milton.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquillity of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.

Make temperance thy companion; so shall health
Sit on thy brow. Dodsley.

2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance
When as the noble prince had marked well,
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance.
Spenser.

What, are you chaf'd?

Ask God for temprance, that's th' appliance only
Which your disease requires. Shakspere.

TEMPERATE, tèm'pèr-âte.⁹¹ adj. [temperatus, Latin.]

1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.

Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heats that digest and mature; wherein we mean temperate, according to the nature of the subject; for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.

His sleep

Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temprate vapours bland. Milton.

2. Moderate in meat and drink.

I advis'd him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Wiseman.

3. Free from ardent passion.

So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temprate order in so fierce a course,
Doth want example. Shakspere.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shaksp.

From temperate inactivity we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason. Brown.

TEMPERATELY, tèm'pèr-âte-lè. adv.
[from temperate.]

1. Moderately; not excessively.

By winds that temperately blow,
The bark should pass secur and slow. Addison.

2. Calmly; without violence of passion.

Temprately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspere.

3. Without gluttony or luxury.

God esteems it a part of his service if we eat or drink; so it be temperately, and as may best preserve health. Taylor.

TEMPERATENESS, tèm'pèr-âte-nès. n. s.

[temperatura, tempero, Latin; temperature, French.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any qualities.

It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea. Abbot.

Birds that change countries at certain seasons, if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weather.
Bacon.

There may be as much difference as to the temperature of the air, and as to heat and cold, in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country. Brown.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarie-ties.

As the world's sun doth effects beget
Diff'rent in divers places ev'ry day;
Here Autumn's temperature, there summer's heat,
Here flow'ry spring-tide, and there winter gray.
Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose, an equality or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered. Woodward.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graceeth,
Most goodly temperature you may desery. Spenser.

TEMPERED, tèm'pùr'd.⁹⁹ adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

When was my lord so much ungodly temper'd,
To stop his ears againt admonishment? Shaksp.

TEMPEST, tèm'pèst. n. s. [tempeste,
French; tempesta, Latin.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind: the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakspere.
Some have been driven by tempest to the south.
Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust the same
Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name.
Donne.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall he hur'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton.

With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast.

good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal titles have part in the controversy. Selden.

Call not every temporal end a defiling of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling. Taylor.

Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal.

Duty of Man.

Our petitions to God, with regard to temporals, must be that medium of convenience proportioned to the several conditions of life. Rogers.

4. [temporal, French.] Placed at the temples, or upper part of the sides of the head.

My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity.

Shakspeare.

You, ever gentle gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my worse spirit tempt me again

Shakspeare.

He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempted and overcome in small things.

Bishop Taylor.

Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold
Might tempt alone. Milton.

The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at an end. South.

O wretched maid!

Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him who next should tempt her easy fame.

Prior.

2. To provoke.

I'm much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience. Shakspeare.

Withhold

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For, though your violence should leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit; to draw.

Still his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.

Milton.

The rowing crew
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.

4. To try; to attempt; to venture on. I know not whether it was not originally t' attempt, which was vitiously written to tempt, by an elision of the wrong syllable.

This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present horn,
Ere leave be given to tempt the nether skies.

Dryden.

TE'MPTABLE, tēm'tâ-bl. adj. [from tempt.]

Pied cattle are spotted in their tongues, the tenderness of the part receiving more easily alterations than other parts of the flesh. Bacon.

The difference of the muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

2. State of being easily hurt; soreness.

A quickness and tenderness of sight could not endure bright sun-shine. Locke.

Any zealous for his country, must conquer that tenderness and delicacy which may make him afraid of being spoken ill of. Addison.

There are examples of wounded persons, that have roared for anguish at the discharge of ordnance, though at a great distance; what insupportable torture then should we be under upon a like concussion in the air, when all the whole body would have the tenderness of a wound! Pentley.

3. Susceptibility of the softer passions.

Weep no more, lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than doth become a man. Shakespeare.

Well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse
To your kindred. Shakespeare.

With what a graceful tenderness he loves!
And breathes the softest, the sincerest vows! Addis.

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and pricke, on certain speeches utter'd
By th' bishop of Bayon. Shakespeare.

Some are unworthily censured for keeping their own, whom tenderness how to get honestly teacheth to spend discreetly; whereas such need no great thriftiness in preserving their own, who assume more liberty in exacting from others. Wotton.

True tenderness of conscience is nothing else but an awful and exact sense of the rule which should direct it; and while it steers by this compass, and is sensible of every declination from it, so long it is properly tender. South.

6. Cautious care.

There being implanted in every man's nature a great tenderness of reputation, to be careless of it is looked on as a mark of a degenerate mind. Government of the Tongue.

7. Soft pathos of expression.

TE'NDINOUS, tén'dé-nûs. adj. [tendineux, Fr. tendinis, Latin.] Sinewy; containing tendons; consisting of tendons.

Nervous and tendinous parts have worse symptoms, and are harder of cure than fleshy ones. Wiseman.

TE'NDON, tén'dûn.¹⁶⁰ n. s. [tendo, Lat.] A sinew; a ligature by which the joints are moved.

A struma in her instep lay very hard and big amongst the tendons. Wiseman.

The entrails these embrace in spiral strings,
Those clasp th' arterial tubes in tender rings;
The tendons some compacted close produce,
And some thin fibres for their skin diffuse. Blackm.

TE'NDRIL, tén'dril. n. s. [tendrillon, Fr.] The clasp of a vine or other climbing plant.

In wanton ringlets wav'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils; which imply'd Subjection. Milton.

So may thy tender blossoms fear no blite;
Nor goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite. Dryden.

The tendrils or clasps of plants are given only to such as have weak stalks, and cannot raise up or support themselves. Ray.

TE'NEBRICOSE, tén-nèb'rè-kòse. } adj.

TE'NEMENT, tén-è-mènt. n. s. [tenement,

Fr. tenementum, law Lat.] Any thing held by a tenant.

What reasonable man will not think that the tenement shall be made much better, if the tenant may be drawn to build himself some handsome habitation thereon, to ditch and inclose his ground?

'Tis policy for father and son to take different sides; for then lands and tenements commit no treason.

Who has informed us, that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece.

Treat on, treat on, is her eternal note,
And lands and tenements glide down her throat.

TE'NENT, tén'ént. n. s. See TENET.

TENE'RITY, té-nér'è-té. n. s. [teneritas, tener, Latin.] Tenderness. Ainsworth.

TE'NET, tén'ét. n. s. [from tenet, Latin, he holds. It is sometimes written tenent, or they hold.] Position; principle; opinion.

That all animals of the land are in their kind in the sea, although received as a principle, is a tenet very questionable.

While, in church matters, profit shall be the touch-stone for faith and manners, we are not to wonder if no gainful tenet be deposited.

This savours of something ranker than Socinianism, even the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded only upon saintship.

They wonder men should have mistook
The tenets of their master's book.

TE'NFOLD, tén'fôld. adj. [ten and fold.] Ten times increased.

Fire kindled into tenfold rage.

TE'NNIS, tén'nis. n. s. [This play is supposed by Skinner to be so named from the word tenez, take it, hold it, or there it goes, used by the French when they drive the ball.] A play at which a ball is driven with a racket.

The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls.

A prince, by a bard destiny, became a tennis ball long to the blind goddess.

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page.

The inside of the uvea is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the uvea, be returned again; for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused.

We conceive not a tennis ball to think, consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest.

We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alehouses.

To TE'NNIS, tén'nis. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball. Not used.

Those four garrisons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, or hide himself.

TE'NON, tén'nôn. n. s. [French.] The end of a timber cut to be fitted into another timber.

Such variety of parts, solid with hollow: some with cavities as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit them.

The tenant-saw being thin, hath a back to keep it from bending.

TE'NOUR, tén'nûr. n. s. [tenor, Lat. tencur, French.]

1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity; general currency.

We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissolved in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed.

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So smil'd the days, and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity; a spring was there,
An everlasting spring the jolly year
Led round in his great circle; no winds breath
As now did smell of winter or of death.

Still I see the tenor of man's woe

Hold on the same, from woman to begin.

Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men?

Inspire my numbers,
Till I my long laborious work complete,
And add perpetual tenor to my rhimes,
Deduc'd from nature's birth to Cæsar's times.

This success would look like chance, if it were not perpetual, and always of the same tenor.

Can it be poison! poison's of one tenor,
Or hot, or cold.

There is so great an uniformity amongst them, that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preserved, clearly points forth the month of May.

In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That, shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep,
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep.

2. Sense contained; general course or drift.

Has not the divine Apollo said,
Is 't not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found?

By the stern brow and waspish action,
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor.

Bid me tear the bond.
—When it is paid according to the tenor.

Reading it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses.

3. A sound in musick.

The treble cutteth the air too sharp to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest part.

Water and air he for the tenor chose,
Earth made the base, the treble flame arose.

TENSE, ténse.⁴³¹ adj. [tensus, Latin.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of the membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound.

TENSE, ténse. n. s. [tempus, Fr. tempus, Latin.] In grammar, tense, in strict speaking, is only a variation of the verb to signify time.

As foresight, when it is natural, answers to memory, so when methodical it answers to reminiscence, and may be called forecast; all of them expressed in the tenses given to verbs. Memory saith, I did see; reminiscence, I had seen; foresight, I shall see; forecast, I shall have seen.

Ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles are, speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen.

He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to seek them himself from a dictionary.

TE'NSENESS, ténse'nés. n. s. [from tense.] Contraction; tension; the contrary to laxity.

Should the pain and tenseness of the part continue, the operation must take place.

TE'NSIBLE, tén'sé-bl.⁴⁰⁶ adj. [tensus, Latin.] Capable of being extended.

Gold is the closest, and therefore the heaviest, of metals, and is likewise the most flexible and tensible.

TE'NSILE, tén'síl.¹⁴⁰ adj. [tensilis, Latin.] Capable of extension.

All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals that will be drawn into wires, have the appetite of not discontinuing.

TE'NSION, tén'shôn. n. s. [tension, French; tensus, Latin.]

1. The act of stretching; not laxation.

It can have nothing of vocal sound, voice being raised by stiff tension of the larynx, and on the contrary, this sound by a relaxed posture of the muscles thereof.

2. The state of being stretched; not laxity.

Still are the subtle strings in tension found,
Like those of lutes, to just proportion wound,
Which of the air's vibration is the force.

TE'NSIVE, tén'sív.^{163 428} adj. [tensus, Latin.] Giving a sensation of stiffness or contraction.

From cholera is a hot burning pain; a beating pain from the pulse of the artery; a tensive pain from distention of the parts by the fulness of humours.

TE'NSURE, tén'shûre.⁴⁰¹ n. s. [tensus, Latin.]

The act of stretching, or state of being stretched; the contrary to laxation or laxity.

This motion upon pressure, and the reciprocal thereof, motion upon tensure, we call motion of liberty, which is, when any body being forced to a preternatural extent restoreth itself to the natural.

TENT, tén. n. s. [tente, French; tentorium, Latin.]

1. A soldier's moveable lodging-place, commonly made of canvass extended upon poles.

The Turks, the more to terrify Corfu, taking a hill not far from it, covered the same with tents.

Because of the same craft he wrought with them; for by occupation they were tent makers.

2. Any temporary habitation; a pavilion.

He saw a spacious plain, whereon
Were tents of various hue: by some were herds
Of cattle grazing.

To Chassis' pleasing plains he took his way,
There pitch'd his tents, and there resolv'd to stay.

3. [tente, Fr.] A roll of lint put into a sore.

Modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise; the tent that searches
To th' bottom of the worst.

4. [vino tinto, Spanish.] A species of wine deeply red, chiefly from Galicia in Spain.

To TENT, tén. v. n. [from the noun.] To lodge as in a tent; to tabernacle.

The smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks, and schoolboys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight.

To TENT, tén. v. a. To search as with a medical tent.

I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blench,
I know my course Shakspeare.
I have some wounds upon me, and they smart.
—Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Shakspeare.

Some surgeons, possibly against their own judgments, keep wounds tented, often to the ruin of their patient. Wiseman.

TENTATION, tén-tá'shún. n. s. [tentation, French; tentatio, Latin.] Trial; temptation.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole tentation, when he said, Ye shall not die, was, in his equivocation, You shall not incur present death. Brown.

TENTATIVE, tén-tá-tív.⁵¹² adj. [tentative, effort, French; tento, Latin.] Trying; essaying.

This is not scientific, but tentative. Berkley.

These arms of mine till now have us'd
Their dearest action in the tented field. Shakspeare.
The foe deceiv'd, he pass'd the tented plain,
In Troy to mingle with the hostile train. Pope.

TENTER, tén'túr.⁹⁸ n. s. [tendo, tentus, Latin.]

1. A hook on which things are stretched.
2. To be on the TENTERS. To be on the stretch; to be in difficulties; to be in suspense.

In all my past adventures,
I ne'er was set so on the tenters:

Or taken tardy with dilemma,
That ev'ry way I turn docs hem me. Hudibras.

To TENTER, tén'túr. v. a. [from the noun.] To stretch by hooks.

A blown bladder pressed riseth again; and when leather or cloth is tented, it springeth back. Bacon.

To TENTER, tén'túr. v. n. To admit extension.

Woollen cloth will tenter, linen scarcely Bacon.

TENTH, ténth. adj. [τεοθα, Sax.] First after the ninth; ordinal of ten.

It may be thought the less strange, if others cannot do as much at the tenth or twentieth trial as we did after much practice. Boyle.

TENTH, ténth. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The tenth part.
Of all the horses,
The treasure in the field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth. Shakspeare.

By decimation and a tithe death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature leaths, take thou the destined tenth. Shakspeare.

To purchase but the tenth of all their store,
Would make the mighty Persian monarch poor Dryden.

Suppose half an ounce of silver now worth a bushel of wheat; but should there be next year a scarcity, five ounces of silver would purchase but one bushel: so that money would be then nine tenths less worth in respect of food. Locke.

2. Tithes.
With cheerful heart
The tenth of thy increase bestow, and own
Heav'n's bounteous goodness, that will sure repay
Thy grateful duty. Philips.

3. Tenths are that yearly portion which all livings ecclesiastical yield to the king. The bishop of Rome pretended right to this revenue by example of the high priest of the Jews, who had tenths from the Levites, till by Henry the eighth they were annexed to the crown. Cowell.

TENTHLY, ténth'lé. adv. [from tenth.] In the tenth place.

TENTI'GINOUS, tén-tíd'jé-nús. adj. [tentigo, Lat.] Stiff; stretched.

TENUITY, tén-nú-é-té. n. s. [tenuité, Fr. tenuitas, from tenuis, Lat.]

1. Thinness; exility; smallness; minuteness; not grossness.

Firs and pines mount of themselves in height without side boughs; partly heat, and partly tenuity of juice, sending the sap upwards. Bacon.

Consider the divers figurings of the brain; the strings or filaments thereof; their difference in tenuity, or aptness for motion. Glanville.

Aliment circulating through an animal body, is reduced to an almost imperceptible tenuity before it can serve animal purposes. Arbutnot.

At the height of four thousand miles the æther is of that wonderful tenuity, that if a small sphere of common air, of an inch diameter, should be expanded to the thinness of that æther, it would more than take up the orb of Saturn, which is many million times bigger than the earth. Bentley.

2. Poverty; meanness. Not used.

The tenuity and contempt of clergymen will soon let them see what a poor carcass they are, when parted from the influence of that supremacy. King Charles.

TENUOUS, tén-nú-ús. adj. [tenuis, Latin.] Thin; small; minute.

Another way of their attraction is by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which after some distance retracteth unto itself. Brown.

TENURE, tén'núrc. n. s. [teneo, Lat. tenure, French; tenura, law Latin.] The manner whereby tenements are holden of their lords.

In Scotland are four tenures; the first is pura eleemosina, which is proper to spiritual men, paying nothing for it, but devota animarum suffragia; the second they call feu, which holds of the king, church, barons, or others, paying a certain duty called feudi firma; the third is a holding in blanch by payment of a penny, rose, pair of gilt spurs, or some such thing, if asked; the fourth is by service of ward and relief, where the heir being minor is in the custody of his lord, together with his lands, and lands holden in this manner are called feudum de hauberk or haubert, feudum militare or lorica tum. Tenure in gross is the tenure in capite; for the crown is called a seignory in gross, because a corporation of and by itself. Cowell.

The service follows the tenure of lands; and the lands were given away by the kings of England to those lords. Spenser.

The uncertainty of tenure, by which all worldly things are held, ministers very unpleasant meditation. Raleigh.

Man must be known, his strength, his state,
And by that tenure he holds all of fate. Dryden.

TEPEFA'CTION, tép-é-fák'shún. n. s. [tepefacio, Latin.] The act of warming to a small degree.

TEPID, tép'id.⁵⁴⁴ adj. [tepidus, Latin.] Lukewarm; warm in a small degree.

The tepid caves, and fens, and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch. Milton.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the dropping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.

Such things as relax the skin are likewise sudorifick; as warm water, friction, and tepid vapours. Arbutnot.

TEPIDITY, tép-id'é-té. n. s. [from tepid.] Lukewarmness. Ainsworth.

TE'POR, t'épòr.^{166 544} n. s. [tepor, Latin.] Lukewarmness; gentle heat.

A vessel containing forty-two gallons of wine; the third part of a butt or pipe. Ainsworth.

In the poet's verse
The king's fame lies, go now deny his tierce. Jonson.

TEREBIN'NATE, tèr-rè-bin'thè-nàte.⁹¹

TEREBIN'THINE, tèr-rè-bin'thín.¹⁴⁰ adj. [terebinthine, Fr. terebinthum, Lat.]

Consisting of turpentine; mixed with turpentine.

Salt serum may be evacuated by urine, by terebinthinates; as tops of pine in all our ale. Floyer.

To TERE'BRATE, tèr-rè-bràte. v. a. [terebro, Latin.] To bore; to perforate; to pierce.

Consider the threefold effect of Jupiter's trisulck, to burn, discuss, and terebrate. Brown.

Earth-worms are completely adapted to their way of life, for terebrating the earth, and creeping. Derham.

TERE'BRATION, tèr-rè-brá'shún. n. s. [from terebrate.] The act of boring or piercing.

Terebration of trees makes them prosper better; and also it maketh the fruit sweeter and better. Bacon.

TERGE'MINOUS, tèr-jém'é-nús. adj. [tergeminus, Lat. n.] Threefold.

TERGIVERSA'TION, tèr-jé-vér-sá'shún. n. s. [tergum and verso, Latin.]

1. Shift; subterfuge; evasion.

Writing is to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being freer from passions and tergiversations. Bishop Bramhall.

2. Change; fickleness.

The colonel, after his tergiversations, lost his life in the king's service. Clarendon.

TERM, tèrm. n. s. [terminus, Latin.]

1. Limit; boundary.

Corruption is a reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two terms or boundaries, and the guides to life and death. Bacon.

2. [terme, Fr.] The word by which a thing is expressed. A word of art.

To apply notions philosophical to plebeian terms, or to say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, be but shifts of ignorance. Bacon.

Those parts of nature into which the chaos was divided, they signify by dark and obscure names, which we have expressed in their plain and proper terms. Burnet.

In painting, the greatest beauties cannot always be expressed for want of terms. Dryden.

Had the Roman tongue continued vulgar, it would have been necessary, from the many terms of art required in trade and in war, to have made great additions to it. Swift.

3. Words; language.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, as horrible to hear. Shakspeare.

God to Satan first his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms. Milton.

4. Condition; stipulation.

Well, on my terms thou wilt not be my heir? Dryden.

Enjoy thy love, since such is thy desire?
Live, though unhappy, live on any terms. Dryden.
Did religion bestow heaven, without any terms or conditions, indifferently upon all, there would be no infidel. Bentley.

We flattered ourselves with reducing France to our own terms by the want of money, but have been still disappointed by the great sums imported from America. Addison.

5. [termine, old Fr.] Time for which any thing lasts; a limited time.

I am thy father's spirit,
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night.

Shakespeare.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No; let us draw our term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last. Addison.

6. [In law.] The time in which the tribunals are open to all that list to complain of wrong, or to seek their right by course of law; the rest of the year is called vacation. Of these terms there are four in every year, during which matters of justice are despatched: one is called Hilary term, which begins the twenty-third of January, or, if that be Sunday, the next day following, and ends the twenty-first of February: another is called Easter term, which begins eighteen days after Easter, and ends the Monday next after Ascension-day; the third is Trinity term, beginning the Friday next after Trinity Sunday, and ending the Wednesday fortnight after; the fourth is Michaelmas term, beginning the sixth of November, or, if that be Sunday, the next day after, and ending the twenty-eighth of November.

Coswell.

The term suiters may speed their business: for the end of these sessions delivereth them space enough to overtake the beginning of the terms. Carew.

Too long vacation hastened on his term. Milton.
Those men employed as justices daily in term time consult with one another. Hale.

What are these to those vast heaps of crimes
Which terms prolong? Dryden.

To TERM, tér'm. v. a. [from the noun.]
To name; to call.

Men term what is beyond the limits of the universe imaginary space, as if nobody existed in it. Locke.

TE'RMAGANCY, tér'má-gán-sé. n. s. [from termagant.] Turbulence; tumultuousness.

By a violent termagancy of temper, she may never suffer him to have a moment's peace. Barker.

TE'RMAGANT, tér'má-gánt. adj.
[τύπ and magan, Saxon, eminently powerful.]

1. Tumultuous; turbulent.
'Twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant
Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Shakespeare.

2. Quarrelsome; scolding; furious.
The eldest was a termagant, imperious, prodigal, profligate wench. Arbuthnot.

TE'RMAGANT, tér'má-gánt. n. s. A scold; a brawling turbulent woman. It appears in Shakespeare to have been anciently used of men. It was a kind of heathen deity, extremely vociferous and tumultuous in the ancient farces and puppetshows.

I could have such a fellow whipt for o'erdoing termagant; it outherods Herod. Shakespeare.

For zeal's a dreadful termagant,

That teaches saints to tear and rant. Hudibras.
She threw his periwig into the fire: well, said he, thou art a brave termagant. Tatler.

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up and take a salamander's name. Pope.

TE'RMER, tér'mér. n. s. [from term.] One who travels up to the term.

Nor have my title leaf on posts or walls,
Or in cleft sticks advanced to make calls
For termers, or some clerk-like serving-man. Ben Jonson.

TE'RMINABLE, tér'mé-ná-bl. adj. [from terminate.] Limitable; that admits of bounds.

To TE'RMINATE, tér'mé-náte. v. a. [termino, Lat. terminer, Fr.]

1. To bound; to limit.
Bodies that are solid, separable, terminated, and moveable, have all sorts of figures. Locke.

2. To put an end to: as, to terminate any difference.

To TE'RMINATE, tér'mé-náte. v. n. To be limited; to end; to have an end; to attain its end.

These are to be reckoned with the heathen, with whom you know we undertook not to meddle, treating only of the scripture-election terminated in those to whom the scripture is revealed. Hammond.

That God was the maker of this visible world, was evident from the very order of causes; the greatest argument by which natural reason evinces a God: it being necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to, and terminate in, some first; which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things, but itself be caused by none. South.

The wisdom of this world, its designs and efficacy, terminate on this side heaven. South.

Ere I the rapture of my wish renew,
I tell you then, it terminates in you. Dryden.

TERMINATION, tér-iné-ná'shún. n. s. [from terminate.]

1. The act of limiting or bounding.
2. Bound; limit.

Its earthly and salinous parts are so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discredited by atomical terminations. Brown.

3. End; conclusion.
4. Last purpose.

It is not an idol ratione termini, in respect of termination; for the religious observation thereof is referred and subservient to the honour of God and Christ: neither is it such ratione modi, for it is kept holy by the exercise of evangelical duties. White.

5. [In grammar; evanatiatio, Lat. terminaison, Fr.] End of words as varied by their significations.

Those rude heaps of words and terminations of an unknown tongue, would have never been so happily learnt by heart without some smoothing artifice. Watts.

6. Word; term. Not in use.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her, she would infect to the north star. Shakespeare.

Hast strangely stood the test. Shakspeare.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it. Shakspeare.

They who thought worst of the Scots, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test. Clarendon.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest? Waller.

Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that, tortur'd in the furnace,
Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight. Addison.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets, for my test? B Jonson.

To be read herself she need not fear;
Each test, and every light, her muse will bear, Dryden.

Your noble race
We banish not, but they forsake the place;
Our doors are open: True; but, ere they come,
You toss your 'censing test, and fume the room. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

6. Judgment; distinction.

Had not men been fated to be blind,

Then had our lances pierc'd the treacherous wood

Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,

And then without a crime the crown had worn.

Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom.

Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

Whiles then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means.

If then his providence

Out of our evil seek to bring forth good.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,

Thy jealousies and fears; and, while you may,

To peace and soft repose give all the day.

Dryden.

Dryden.

4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb; as, a man came, or there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times
there was a great king.

For a reformation of error there were that thought it a part of christian charity to instruct them.

Hooker.

THIEVERY, théév'úr-é. n. s. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing; theft.
Ne how to 'scape great punishment and shame,
For their false treason and vile thievery. Spenser.
Do, villainy, do, since you profess to do 't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery.
Shakspeare.

He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume. Brown.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.
Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thiev'ry up he knows not how.
Shakspeare.

THIEVISH, théév'ish. adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.
What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food:
Or with a base and hoist'rous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road? Shakspeare.

O thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, hut for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

The thievish god suspected him, and took
The hind aside, and thus in whispers spoke:
Discover not the theft. Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.
Four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass.
Shakspeare.

THIEVISHLY, théév'ish-lè. adv. [from thievish.] Like a thief.

They lay not to live by their worke,
But thievishly loiter and lurke. Tusser.

THIEVISHNESS, théév'ish-nés. n. s. [from thievish.] Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH, thi. n. s. [ῥεοφ, Saxon; thieo, Islandick; die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle: it is a little convex and round on its 'reside, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its backside. Quincy.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Genesis.
The flesh dissolv'd, and left the thigh bone bare.
Wiseman.

THILK, thilk. pronoun. [ῥιλc, Sax.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thilk lass: alas, why do I love?
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,
And of my rural music holdeth scorn. Spenser.

THILL, thil. n. s. [ῥилe, Sax. a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a wagon;
the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways, if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis.
Mortimer.

THILL-HORSE, thil'hórs. } n. s. [thill and THILLER, thil'lúr. } horse.] The last horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whose bridle and saddle, whittletier and nall,
With collars and harneis for thiller and all.
Tusser.

What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shakspeare.

THIMBLE, thim'bl. n. s. [This is supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
Their needles to lances. Shakespeare.

Examine Venus and the Moor,
Who stole a thimble or a spoon. Hudibras.

Veins that run perpendicularly to the horizon, have valves sticking to their sides like so many thimbles; which, when the blood presses back, stop its passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood. Cheyne.

THIME, time. n. s. [thymus, Latin; thym, French.] A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

Fair marigolds, and bees alluring thime. Spenser.

THIN, thin.⁴⁶⁶ adj. [ðinn, Sax. thunner, Islandick; dunn, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Exodus.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ungodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wisdom.

In the day when the air is more thin, the sound pierceth better; but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spendeth and spreadeth abroad less. Bacon.

Understand the same

Of fish within their wat'ry residence;
Not hither summon'd, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air. Milton.

The waters of Boristhenes are so thin and light, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hypanis. More.

To warm new milk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appear somewhat thinner. Arbuthnot.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd the thin and bashful audience
Of our well meaning, frugal ancestors. Roscommon.

Thou art weak, and full of art is he;
Else how could he that host seduce to sin,
Whose fall has left the heav'nly nation thin? Dryden.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields;
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dryden.

Thin on the tow'rs they stand; and ev'n those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.

Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.

Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin! Young.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.
Seven thin ears blasted with the east wind sprung up. Genesis.

5. Exile; small.

I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams. Dryden.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance; as, a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.

Ferrara is very large, hut extremely thin of people. Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.
A slim thin gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost; and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again. L'Estrange.

THIN, thin. adv. Not thickly.
Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
Thin sown with aught of profit or delight. Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and love laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton.

Thin-leaved arbute hazle-graffs receives,
And planes huge apples hear, that bore but leaves. Dryden.

A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad. Locke.

To THIN, thin. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbuthnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The bill against root and branch never passed, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed. King Charles.

T' unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden

'Tis Cæsar's sword has made Rome's senate little,
And thinn'd its ranks. Addison.

3. To attenuate.

The vapours, by the solar heat
Thinn'd and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat. Blackmore.

THINE, thine.⁴⁶⁶ pronoun. [thein, Goth. ðin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.] Belonging or relating to thee: the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her he thine, for we have no such daughter. Shakespeare.

THING, thing.⁴⁶⁶ n. s. [ðingz, Sax. ding, Dutch.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
—You have a thing for me!
It is a common thing—
—Ha!

—To have a foolish wife. Shakespeare.

The great master he found busy in packing up his things against his departure. Knolles.

The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Leviticus.

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing,
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun about twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume. Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakespeare.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryden.
Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

The poor thing sighed, and, with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence, turned from me. Addison.

I'll be this abject thing no more,
Love, give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is used by Shakespeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath: but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart. Shakespeare.

To THINK, think. v. n. pret. thought. [thankgan, Gothick; þencean, Saxon; dencken, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am I know, because I think; but whence I came, Or how this frame of mine began to be, What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body. Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon. Tillotson.

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addison.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.

Let them marry to whom they think best, only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numbers.

I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.

Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them. Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him live. Shakespeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.

Something since his coming forth is thought of, which Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most requir'd. Shakespeare.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life. Shakespeare.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked me to think of and observe such a thing. Burnet.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh. Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

We are come to have the warrant.
—Well thought upon; I have it here about me. Shakespeare.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Nehemiah.

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe. Swift.

8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn? Bentley.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete, When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift

10. To THINK of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of assent. Locke.

To THINK, think.⁵⁰ ⁴⁶⁶ v. a.

1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Corinthians.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear. Young.

2. To believe; to esteem.

Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.

3. To THINK much. To grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton.

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world. Tillotson.

4. To THINK scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone. Esther.

5. { Me THINKETH. It seems to me. }
{ Me I THOUGHT. It appeared to me. }

These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, methinks it seems to me.
Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay. Sidney.

Me thinketh the running of the forehead is like that of Ahimaaz 2 Samuel.

THINKER, think'ür.⁹⁸ n. s. [from think.]

One who thinks in a certain manner.
No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of musick, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinkers would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

THINKING, think'ing.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from think.]

Imagination; cogitation; judgment.
He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakspeare.

If we did think
His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth
His serious considering. Shakspeare.

I heard a bird so sing,
Whose musick, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shakspeare.

I was a man to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow. Addison.

THINLY, thin'lè. adv. [from thin.]

1. Not thickly.

2. Not closely; not numerously.

It is commonly opinioend, that the earth was thinly inhabited before the flood. Brown.

Our walls are thinly mann'd; our best men slain: The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching. Dryden.

THINNESS, thin'nès. n. s. [from thin.]

1. The contrary to thickness; exility; tenuity.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides, because of the thinness of the skin. Bacon.

No breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat. Donne

Transparent substances, as glass, water, air, &c. when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherwise formed into plates, do exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness, although at a greater thickness they appear very clear and colourless. Newton.

Such depend upon a strong projectile motion of the blood, and too great thinness and delicacy of the vessels Arbutnot.

2. Paucity; scarcity.

The buzzard
Invites the scather'd Nimrod's of his race
To hide the thinness of their flock from sight
And all together make a seeming goodly flight. Dryden.

In country villages pope Leo the seventh indulged a practice, through the thinness of the inhabitants, which opened a way for pluralities. Ayliffe.

3. Rareness; not spissitude.

Those pleasures that spring from honour the mind can nauseate, and quickly feel the thinness of a popular breath. South

THIRD, thürd.¹⁰⁸ adj. [δριδδα, Saxon.]

The first after the second; the ordinal of three.

This is the third time: I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakspeare.

Such clamours are like the feigned quarrels of combined cheats, to delude some third person. Decay of Piety.

THIRD, thürd. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The third part.

To thee and thine hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakspeare.

Men of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again. Shaks.

The protestant subjects of the abbey make up a third of its people. Addison.

No sentence can stand that is not confirmed by two thirds of the council. Addison.

But fearless they pursue, nor can the flood Quench their dire thirst; alas! they thirst for blood. Denham.

Thus accurs'd,
In midst of water I complain of thirst. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger denote the state of spittle and liquor of the stomach. Thirst is the sign of an acrimony commonly alkaliescent or muralick. Arbutnot.

For forty years
I've liv'd an anchorite in pray'rs and tears:

Yon spring, which bubbles from the mountain's side,
Has all the luxury of thirst supply'd Harte.

2. Eagerness; vehement desire: with of, for, or after.

Not hope of praise, nor thirst of worldly good,
Entic'd us to follow this emprise. Fairfax.

Thou hast allay'd the thirst I had of knowledge. Milton.

Say, is't thy bounty, or thy thirst of praise? Granville.

This is an active and ardent thirst after happiness, or after a full beautifying object. Cheyne.

3 Drought.

The rapid current, through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst up drawn,
Rose a fresh fountain. Milton.

To THIRST, thürst. v. n. [δύρηταν, Sax. dersten, Dutch.]

1. To feel want of drink; to be thirsty or athirst: with for.

They shall not hunger nor thirst. Isaiah.
The people thirsted there for water. Exodus.

They as they thirsted scoop the brimming stream. Milton.

2. To have a vehement desire for any thing; with for or after.

My soul thirsteth for the living God. Psalms.
Till a man hungers and thirsts after righteousness, till he feels an uneasiness in the want of it, his will will not be determined to any action in pursuit of this confessed, greater good. Locke.

But furious thirsting thus for gore,
The sons of men shall ne'er approach thy shore. Pope.

To THIRST, thürst. v. a. To want to drink.

This structure is not usual.
Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains:
For the kind gifts of water and of food,
He seeks his keeper's flesh, and thirsts his blood. Prior.

THIRSTINESS, thürs'tè-nès. n. s. [from thirst.]

The state of being thirsty.
Next they will want a sucking and soaking thirstiness, or a fiery appetite to drink in the lime. Wotton.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drank,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakspeare.

Give me a little water to drink, for I am thirsty. Judges.

Unworthy was thy fate,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab,
Whom all the thirsty instruments of death
Had in the field of battle sought in vain. Rowe.

2. Possessed with any vehement desire: as, blood thirsty.

THIRTE'EN, thür'tèèn.¹⁰⁸ adj. [δρεοτine, Saxon.]

Ten and three.
Speaking at the one end, I heard it return the voice thirteen times. Bacon.

THIRTE'ENTH, thür'tèènth'. adj. [from thirteen; δρεοτeοδα, Sax.]

The third after the tenth.
If she could prove a thirteenth task for him
Who twelve achiev'd, the work would me bescem. Baumont's Psyche.

The thirteenth part difference bringeth the business but to such a pass, that every woman may have an husband. Graunt.

THIRTIETH, thür'tè-èth.²⁷⁹ adj. [from thirty; δριτεγ'θα, Sax.]
