ning or threshing. Ray.

Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first threshing, get what seed you can. Mortimer.

2. To beat; to drub.
Thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit like a barbarian slave. Shakspeare.

To THRASH, thrásh. v. n. To labour; to drudge.

I rather would he Mevius, thresh for rhimes
Like his, the scorn and scandal of the time,
Than that Philippick fatally divine,
Which is inscrib'd the second, should he mine. Dryden.

THRASHER, thrásh'ár. n. s. [from thrash.]

One who thrashes corn.
Our soldiers, like a lazy thrasher with his flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakspeare.

Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat: the labour of those employed about the utensil must all be charged.

Locke.

With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves. Otway.
In vain on study time away we throw,
When we forbear to act the things we know. Denham.

A man had better throw away his care upon any thing else than upon a garden on wet or moist ground. Temple.

Had we but lasting youth and time to spare,
Some might be thrown away on fame and war. Dryden.

He sigh'd, breath'd short, and would have spoke,
But was too fierce to throw away the time. Dryden.

The next in place and punishment are they
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Fools who, repining at their wretched state,
And loathing anxious life, suborn'd their fate. Dryden.

In poetry the expression beautifies the design: if it be vicious or displeasing, the cost of colouring is thrown away upon it. Dryden.

The well-meaning man should rather consider what opportunities he has of doing good to his country, than throw away his time in deciding the rights of princes. Addison.

She threw away her money upon roaring bullies that went about the streets. Arbuthnot.

15. To throw away. To reject.

He that will throw away a good book because not gilded, is more curious to please his eye than understanding. Taylor.

16. To throw by. To reject; to lay aside as of no use.

It can but shew
Like one of Juno's disguises; and,
When things succeed, be thrown by, or let fall. Ben Jonson.

He that begins to have any doubt of his tenets, received without examination, ought, in reference to that question, to throw wholly by all his former notions. Locke.

17. To throw down. To subvert; to overturn.

Must one rash word, th' infirmity of age,
Throw down the merit of my better years;
This the reward of a whole life of service! Addison.

18. To throw off. To expel.

The salts and oils in the animal body, as soon as they putrefy, are thrown off, or produce mortal distempers. Arbuthnot.

19. To throw off. To reject; to discard;
as, to throw off an acquaintance.

'Twould be better

Could you provoke him to give you th' occasion, Aud then to throw him off. Dryden.

Can there be any reason why the household of God alone should throw off all that orderly dependence and duty, by which all other houses are best governed? Sprat.

20. To throw out. To exert; to bring forth into act.

She throws out thrilling shrieks, and shrieking cries. Spenser.

The gods in bounty work up storms about us,
That give mankind occasion to exert
Their hidden strength, and throw out into practice Virtues which shun the day. Addison.

21. To throw out. To distance; to leave behind.

When e'er did Juba, or did Portius, show
A virtue that has cast me at a distance.
And thrown me out in the pursuits of honour? Addison.

22. To throw out. To eject; to expel.

The other two whom they had thrown out, they were content should enjoy their exile. Swift.

23. To throw out. To reject; to exclude.

The oddness of the proposition taught others to reflect a little; and the bill was thrown out. Swift.

24. To throw up. To resign angrily.

Bad games are thrown up too soon,
Until they're never to be won. Hudibras.

Experienced gamblers throw up their cards when they know the game is in the enemy's hand, without unnecessary vexation in playing it out. Addis.

Life we must not part with foolishly: it must not be thrown up in a pet, nor sacrificed to a quarrel. Collier.

25. To throw up. To emit; to eject; to bring up.

Judge of the cause by the substances the patient throws up. Arbuthnot.

26. This is one of the words which is used with great latitude; but in all its uses, whether literal or figurative, it retains from its primitive meaning some notion of haste or violence.

To throw, *thrw.*³²⁴ v. n.

1. To perform the act of casting.

2. To cast dice.

3. To throw about. To cast about; to try expedients.

Now unto despair I 'gin to grow,
And mean for better wind about to throw. Spenser.

Throw, thrw. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; the act of casting or throwing.

The top he tore

From off a huge rock; and so right a throw

Made at our ship, that just before the prow

It overflew and fell. Chapman.

He heav'd a stone, and rising to the throw

He sent it in a whirlwind at the foe:

A tow'r assaulted by so rude a stroke,

With all its lofty battlements bad shook. Addison.

2. A cast of dice; the manner in which the dice fall when they are cast.

If Hercules and Lichas play at dice

Which is the better man, the greater throw

May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:

So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakspeare.

If they err finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all is involved in the error of one throw. South.

Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and the twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many million of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast. Bentley.

The world, where lucky throws to blockheads fall, Knaves know the game, and honest men pay all. Young.

3. The space to which any thing is thrown.

Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing. Shakespeare.

The Sirenum Scopuli are sharp rocks that stand about a stone's throw from the south side of the island. Addison.

4. Stroke; blow.

So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold,
Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.

5. Effort; violent sally.

Your youth admires
The throws and swellings of a Roman soul;
Cato's bold flights, the extravagance of virtue. Addison.

6. The agony of childbirth; in this sense it is written throae. See THROE.

The most pregnant wit in the world never brings forth any thing great without some pain and travail, pangs and throws before the delivery. South.

But when the mother's throws begin to come,
The creature, pent within the narrow room,
Breaks his blind prison. Dryden.

Say, my friendship wants him
To help me bring to light a manly birth,
Which to the wond'ring world I shall disclose,
Or, if he fail me, perish in my throws. Dryden.

THROW'ER, thrô'ûr.⁹³ n. s. [from throw.]

One that throws.
Fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower out
Of my poor babe. Shakespeare.

1. The ends of weavers' threads.

2. Any coarse yarn.
There's her thrum hat, and her muffler too. Shakespeare.

O fates, come, come,
Cut thread and thrum,
Quail, crush, conclude and quell. Shakespeare.

All moss hath here and there little stalks, besides the low thrum. Bacon.

Would our thrum-capp'd ancestors find fault
For want of sugar-tongs, or spoons for salt? King.

TO THRUM, thrum. v. a. To grate; to play coarsely.

Blunderbusses planted in every loop hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar. Dryden.

THRUSH, thrûsh.⁴⁶⁶ n. s. [θρυς, Saxon; turdus, Latin.]

1. A small singing bird.
Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, blackbirds, and thrushes. Carew.

Pain, and a fine thrush, have been severally endeavoured to call off my attention; but both in vain. Pope.

2. [from thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.] By this name are called small, round superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emissaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they ap-

TO THRUST, thrust. v. a. [trusito, Lat.]

1. To push any thing into matter, or between close bodies.

Thrust in thy sickle, and reap. Revelation.

2. To push; to move with violence; to drive. It is used of persons or things.

They should not only not be thrust out, but also have estates and grants of their lands new made to them. Spenser.

When the king comes, offer him no violence,
Unless he seek to thrust you out by force. Shakspeare.

Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum,
Clamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the publick streets. Shakspeare.

When the ass saw the angel, she thrust herself unto the wall, and crush'd Balaam's foot. Numbers.

On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes. 1 Samuel.

She caught him by the feet; but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. 2 Kings.

The prince shall not take of the people's inheritance, by oppression to thrust them out. Isaiah.

Thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shall be thrust down to hell. Luke.

Rich, then lord chancellor, a man of quick and lively delivery of speech, but as of mean birth so prone to thrust forwards the ruin of great persons, in this manner spake. Hayward.

In hate of kings shall cast anew the frame,
And thrust out Collatine that bore their name. Dryden.

To justify his threat, he thrusts aside
The crowd of centaurs, and redeems the bride. Dryden.

3. To stab.
Phineas thrust both of them through. Numbers.

4. To compress.
He thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of it. Judges.

5. To impel; to urge.
We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as we were villains on necessity, and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on. Shakespeare.

6. To obtrude; to intrude.
Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves into my private meditations. Shakespeare.

The noble Brutus, thrusting this report into his ears. Shakespeare.

Should he not do as rationally, who took physick from any one who had taken on himself the name of physician, or thrust himself into that employment? Locke.

TO THRUST, thrust. v. n.

1. To make a hostile push; to attack with a pointed weapon.

2. To squeeze in; to put himself into any place by violence.

I'll be a Spartan while I live on earth;
But, when in heav'n, I'll stand next Hercules,
And thrust between my father and the god. Dryden.

3. To intrude.
Not all,
Who like intruders thrust into their service, Participate their sacred influence. Rowe.

4. To push forward; to come violently; to throng; to press.

Young, old, thrust there,
In mighty concourse. Chapman.

The miserable men which shrunk from the work were again beaten forward, and presently slain, and fresh men still thrust on. Knolles.

THRUST, thrust.⁴⁶⁶ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hostile attack with any pointed weapon.

Zelmae hearkening to no more, began with such witty fury to pursue him with blows and thrusts, that nature and virtue commanded him to look to his safety. Sidney.

That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,
But that my coat is better than thou know'st. Shakespeare.

Polites Pyrrhus with his lance pursues,
And often reaches, and his thrusts renews. Dryden.

THUMPER, thûmp'ûr.⁹³ n. s. [from thump.] The person or thing that thumps.

THUNDER, *thũn'dũr.*⁴⁶⁶ n. s. [ῥυνδερ. ῥυνορ, Sax. dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnerre, French.]

1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling.

Muschenbroek.

2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.

I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot

Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shaksp.

The revenging gods

'Gainst paricides all the thunder bend. Shaksp.

The thunder

Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps has spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.

Milton.

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.

So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold
Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws.

Spenser.

Here will we face this storm of insolence,
Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
Then burst, and spend at once its idle rage. Rowe.

To THUNDER, thũn'dũr. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To make thunder.

His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for 's power to thunder. Shakspere.

2. To make a loud or terrible noise.

So soon as some few notable examples had thundered a duty into the subjects' hearts, he soon shewed no baseness of suspicion. Sidney.

His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,

And Hercules' two pillars standing near Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.

His dreadful voice no more Would thunder in my ears. Milton.

Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the float, and thunder'd on his head. Pope.

To THUNDER, thũn'dũr. v. a.

1. To emit with noise and terrour.

Oracles severe
Were daily thunder'd in our general's ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.

2. To publish any denunciation or threat.

An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.

THUNDERBOLT, thũn'dũr-bũlt. n. s. [thunder and bolt, as it signifies an arrow.]

1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakspere.

Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which bath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terrour to all. King Charles.

My heart does beat,
As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios' worth, those thunderbolts of war?

Dryden.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. Fulmination; denunciation: properly ecclesiastical.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill.

THUNDERCLAP, thũn'dũr-kláp. n. s. [thunder and clap.] Explosion of thunder.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did scorn the simple scarabee,

Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.

When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

When suddenly the thunderclap was beard,
It took us unprepar'd and out of guard. Dryden.

THUNDERER, thũn'dũr-ũr. n. s. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shaksp.

Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
Crete had n't been the cradle of your god;
On that small island they bad look'd with scorn,
And in Great-Britain thought the thunderer born.

Waller.

When the bold Typhus
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shar'd his prosp'rous state,
All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

THUNDEROUS, thũn'dũr-ũs adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. Milton.

THUNDERSHOWER, *thũn'dũr-shũu-ũr.*⁶⁸ n. s. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack. Stillingfleet.

In thundershowers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way and the cold above the clouds another. Derham.

THUNDERSTONE, thũn'dũr-stũne. n. s. [thunder and stone.] A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone. Shakspere

To THUNDERSTRIKE, thũn'dũr-strike. v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring, nay not able, to behold that power. Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or tim'rous flock, together throng'd, Drove them before him thunderstruck. Milton.

With the voice divine Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom Such high attest was giv'n, a while survey'd
With wonder. Milton.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus Lies stretch'd supine. Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fears from our hearts tooke
The very life; to be so thunderstrooke
With such a voice. Chapman.

THURSDAY, *thũr-z-dẽ.*²²³ n. s. [thorsgday, Danish; from thor. Thor was the son of Odin; yet in some of the northern parts they worshipped the supreme deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him. Stillingfleet.] The fifth day of the week.

THUS, *thũs.*⁴⁶⁶ adv. [ῥυρ, Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wise.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge. Hooker.

The knight him calling asked who he was?
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus. Spens.

I returned with similar proof enough,
With tokens thus and thus. Shakspere.

To be thus is nothing;

But to be safely thus. Shakspere.

I have sinned against the Lord, and thus and thus have I done. Joshua.

The Romans used a like wise endeavour, and whiles in a higher, in a wiser strain, making concord a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer. Holyday.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus posited, is false. Judge Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear:
I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent. Dryden.

Thus in the triumphs of soft peace I reign. Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
Circled his head. Milton

This royal robe and this tiara wore Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore
In full assemblies. Dryden

A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope

Fairer she seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
And better mien disclos'd, as better dress:
A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd
To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior

To TICE, tise. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly?
Hath some fond lover tice'd thee to thy bane?
And wilt thou leave the church, and love a sty? Herbert

TICK, tik. n. s. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try't,
I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
And once more for that carcass vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbuthnot

2. [tique, French; teke, Dutch.] The louse of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shaksp.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

To TICK, tik. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

The money went to the lawyers; council wo'n't tick. Arbuthnot

TI'CKEN, } tik'kín.¹⁰⁸ } n. s. The same TI'CKING, } with tick. A sort of strong linen for bedding. Bailey

TI'CKET, tik'it.⁹⁹ n. s. [etiquet, Fr.] A token of any right or debt, upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged.

There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his band. Spenser

In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier

Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
Disdains all loss of tickets or codills. Pope

To TI'CKLE, tik'kl.⁴⁰⁶ v. a. [titillo, Latin.]

1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds! Shaksp.

The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Bacon

There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. Dryden

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden cloquence, being withal tickled by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney

Expectation tickling skittish spirits, Sets all on hazard. Shaksp.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which it treads on at noon. Shaksp.

I cannot rule my spleen;
My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd Dryden

A drunkard the habitual thirst after his cups drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke

To TI'CKLE, tik'kl. v. n. To feel titillation.

He with secret joy therefore Did tickle inwardly in every vein,
And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain. Spenser

TI'CKLE, tik'kl. adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.]

Tottering; unfixed; unstable; easily overthrown.

When the last O'Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dungannon, was set up to beard him. Spenser

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Shaksp.

The state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shaksp.

TI'CKLISH, tik'kl-ish. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive distempers and mutations than England was. Bacon

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some men's fancy hath placed it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Woodward

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dares most impudently not translate?
It had been civil, in these ticklish times,
To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. Swift

TI'CKLISHNESS, tik'kl-ish-nés. n. s. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TI'CTACK, tik'ták. n. s. [trictrac, Fr.] A game at tables. Bailey

To TI'DDER, tid'dár. } To use tenderly; to fondle.

TIDE, tide. n. s. [τῦδ, Sax. tijd, Dutch and Islandick.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Spenser.

They two forth passing
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight,
Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

What hath this day deserv'd
That in it golden letter should be set
Among the high tides in the kalendar? Shakespeare.
At new-year's tide following, the king chose him master of the horse. Wotton.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides, is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from east to west, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up, there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.

The rapid currents drive
Towards the recirculating sea their furious tide. Mill.
But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.
Continual tide
Flows from the exhilarating fount. Philips.

To TIDE, tide. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

To TIDE, tide. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When from his dint the foe still backward shrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them rolling, to the tiding Humber. Philips

TI'DEGATE, tide'gate. n. s. [tide and gate.]
A gate through which the tide passes into a basin. Bailey.

TI'DESMAN, tidz'mân. n. s. [tide and man.] A tidewaiter or customhouse officer, who watches on board of merchant-ships till the duty of goods be paid, and the ships unloaded. Bailey.

TI'DEWAITER, tide'wâ-tûr. n. s. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.

Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen;
nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewai- ters places. Swift.

TI'DILY, ti'dè-lè. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.

TI'DINESS, ti'dè-nés. n. s. [from tidy.]

TI'DINGS, ti'dingz. n. s. [tidan, Sax. to hâphen, to betide; tidende, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened; incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,

And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Spenser.

I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.

They win
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.
Portius thy looks speak somewhat of importance:
What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.
The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal Son of his bosom. Rogers.

TIDY, ti'dè. adj. [tidt, Islandick.]

1. Seasonable.

If weather be faire and tidie, thy grain
Make speedilie carriage, for feare of a raine. Tusser.

2. Neat; ready.

Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake of irony for untidy.

Thou whorson tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting? Shakespeare.

To TIE, ti. v. a. [τῖαν, τῖγαν, Saxon.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. 1 Samuel.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knolles.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.

The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up intensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me
wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.

Melantius, stay,
You have my promise; and my hasty word
Restrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Waller.

Honour and good nature may tie up his hands;
but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only instincts. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a prescript form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare.
Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillingfleet.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.

No one seems less tied up to a form of words. Locke.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; use will give it a facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Alterbury.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbuthnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least consequentially the same meaning.

TIE, ti. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.

No forest, cave, or savage den
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-swoln ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame. Young.

TIER, tèer. n. s. [tiere, tiere, old Fr.
tuyer, Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Fornovius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Knolles.

TIERCE, tèrse. n. s. [tiers, tiercier, Fr.]
A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce. Ben Jonson.

Wit, like tierce claret, when 't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;

But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play. Dorset.

TI'ERCET, tèer'sèt. n. s. [from tiers, Fr.]
A triplet; three lines.

TIFF, tif. n. s. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital. Bailey.

TI'GER, ti'gûr. n. s. [tigre, Fr. tigris,
Lat.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood. Shakspeare.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;

Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakspeare.

Has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him? Thomson.

TIGHT, tite. adj. [dicht, Dutch.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes. Moxon.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden. Arbutnot

Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a sash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning, and unloils the flask. Dryden.
The girl was a tight clever wench as any. Arbutnot.

O Thomas, I'll make a loving wife;
I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight. Gay.
Drest her again genteel and neat,
And rather tight than great. Swift.

- TIMBER, *tím'búr.*⁹⁹ n. s. [týmbrían, Sax. to build.]
1. Wood fit for building.
I learn'd of lighter timber cotes to frame,
Such as might save my sheep and me from shame. Spenser.
For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oaken timber wherewith to build them; but there must be a great providence used, that our ship timber be not unnecessarily wasted. Bacon.
The straw was laid below,
Of chips and serewood was the second row;
The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd. Dryd.
There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth. Woodward.
Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly. Mortimer.
Who set the twigs, shall he remember,
That is in haste to sell the timber?
And what shall of thy woods remain,
Except the box that threw the main? Prior.
- The main trunk of a tree.
We take
From every tree, lop, bark, and part o' th' timber;
And though we leave it with a root thus hackt,
The air will drink the sap. Shakespeare.
- The main beams of a fabrick.
- Materials, ironically,

- Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature; and yet they are the fittest timber to make politicks of, like to kneec timber, that is good for ships to be tossed, but not for houses that shall stand firm. Bacon.
- To TIMBER, tím'búr. v. n. [from the noun.] To light on a tree. A cant word.
The one took up in a thicket of brush-wood, and the other timbered upon a tree hard by. L'Estrange.

Let weeping Nilus hear the timbrel sound. Pope.
- TIME, tím. n. s. [tima, Saxon; tym, Erse.]
1. The measure of duration.
This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochas, is that which most properly we call time. Locke.
Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps the incomes. Shakespeare.
Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day. Shakespeare.
Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalation, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown.
Time, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would be infinite time past to-day, which to-morrow will be more than infinite. Time is one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.- Space of time.
Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation. Daniel.
If a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any farther abrogation. White.

Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Romans.
Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime Of youth her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.
I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least to save, your fortune and your honour. Dryden.
The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Calamy.
6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.
Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment. Dryden.
In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection. Locke.
One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under ground. Woodward.
I have resolved to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes, to write you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.
7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.
They shall be given into his hand until a time and times. Daniel.
If we should impute the heat of the season unto the co-operation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo. Brown.
The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden.
8. Past time.
I was the man in th' moon when time was. Shakespeare.
9. Early time.
Stanley at Bosworth-field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.
If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these duties. Rogers.
10. Time considered as affording opportunity.
The earl lost no time, but marched day and night. Clarendon.
He continued his delights till all the enemies horse were passed through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon.
I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hour's time for it? Duty of Man.
Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature. Dryden.

In Caesar's wars a nobler theme shall chuse. Dryd.
These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.

13. Hour of childbirth.

She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.

The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself.
Spectator.

14. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.

Four times he cross'd the ear of night. Milton.
Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Heylin.

Every single particle would have a sphere of void space around it many hundred thousand million million times bigger than the dimensions of that particle. Bentley.

Lord Oxford, I have now the third time mentioned in this letter, expects you. Swift.

15. Musical measure.

Musick do I hear!
Ha, ha! keep time. How sour sweet musick is When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
Shakspeare.

You by the help of tune and time
Can make that song which was but rhyme. Waller
On their exalted wings
To the celestial orbs they climb,
And with th' harmonious spheres keep time. Denh.

Heroes who o'ercome, or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which in battle's heat
Against their very corslets beat;
Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure. Prior.

To TIME, time. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.

There is no greater wisdom than well to time the beginnings and onsets of things. Bacon.

It is hard to believe, that where his most numerous miracles were afforded, they should all want the advantage of the congruous timings to give them their due weight and efficacy. Hammond.

The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L'Estrange.

This 'tis to have a virtue out of season:
Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryd.

A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Addison.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Epopeus spoke,
Who overlook'd the oars, and tim'd the stroke.
Addison.

3. To measure harmonically.

He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries. Shakspeare.

TI'MEFUL, tim'e-fŭl. adj. [time and full.]

Seasonable; timely; early
If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any feeling of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition; interrupting, by his vigilant endeavours, all offer of timeful return towards God.
Raleigh.

TI'MELESS, tim'e-lĕs. adj. [from time.]

1. Unseasonable; done at an improper time.

Nor fits it to prolong the heav'nly feast Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope.

2. Untimely; immature; done before the proper time.

A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,
If unprevented to your timeless grave. Shakspeare.
Noble Gloster's death,

Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end. Shakspeare.

TI'MELY, tim'e-lĕ. adj. [from time.] Seasonable; sufficiently early.

The west glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare.

Prepossessed heads will ever doubt it, and timor-ous beliefs will never dare to try it. Brown.

The infant flames, whilst yet they were conceal'd,
In tim'rous doubts, with pity I beheld;
With easy smiles dispell'd the silent fear,
That durst not tell me what I dy'd to hear. Prior.

TI'MOROUSLY, tim'ŭr-ŭs-lĕ. adv. [from timorous.] Fearfully; with much fear.

We would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and tim'rously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons.
Shakspeare.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, and metal from wood, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms which should pretend to signify their real essences. Locke.

Let dastard souls be timorously wise;
But tell them, Pyrrhus knows not how to form
Far-fancy'd ills, and dangers out of sight.

TI'MOROUSNESS, tim'ŭr-ŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from timorous.] Fearfulness

The clergy, through the timorousness of many among them, were refused to be heard by their council. Swift.

By tincture or reflection they augment
Their small peculiar. Milton.

'Tis the fate of princes, that no knowledge
Come pure to them, but, passing through the eyes
And ears of other men, it takes a tincture
From every channel. Denham.

That beloved thing engrosses him, and, like a coloured glass before his eyes, casts its own colour and tincture upon all the images of things. South.

To begin the practice of an art with a light tincture of the rules is to expose ourselves to the scorn of those who are judges. Dryden.

Malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind. Addison.

Few in the next generation who will not write and read, and have an early tincture of religion.
Addison.

Sire of her joy, and source of her delight!
O! wing'd with pleasure, take thy happy flight,
And give each future morn a tincture of thy white.
Prior.

All manners take a tincture from our own,
Or come discolour'd through our passions show.
Pope.

Have a care lest some darling science so far prevail over your mind, as to give a sovereign tincture to all your other studies, and discolour all your ideas.
Watts.

2. Extract of some drug made in spirits.

To TINK, tɪŋk. v. n. [tinno, Latin; tinician, Welsh.] To make a sharp shrill noise.

TI'NKER, tɪŋk-ər. n. s. [from tink, because their way of proclaiming their trade is to beat a kettle, or because in their work they make a tinkling noise.]

A mender of old brass.
Am not I old Sly's son, by education a card-maker, and now by present profession a tinker? Shakspeare.

My copper medals by the pound
May be with learned justice weigh'd:
To turn the balance, Otho's head
May be thrown in; and for the mettle,
The coin may mend a tinker's kettle. Prior.

To TI'NKLE, tɪŋk'kl. v. n. [tinter, Fr. tinno, Latin.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise; to clink.

The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched out necks, making a tinkling with their feet. Isaiah.

His feeble hand a javelin threw,
Which flutt'ring, seem'd to loiter as it flew;
Just, and but barely, to the mark it held,
And faintly tinkled on the brazen shield. Dryden.

The sprightly horse
Moves to the musick of his tinkling bells. Dodsley.

2. It seems to have been improperly used by Pope.

The wand'ring streams that shine between the hills

The grots that echo to the tinkling rills. Pope.

3. To hear a low quick noise.
With deeper brown the grove was overspread,

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears tinkled, and the colour fled. Dryden.

TI'NMAN, tɪn'mæn. n. s. [tin and man.]

TI'NSEL, tɪn'sɪl. n. s. [etincelle, French.]

1. A kind of shining cloth.

A tinsel veil her amber locks did shrowd,
That strove to cover what it could not hide. Fairfax.

It's but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, underborne with a bluish tinsel. Shakspeare.

By Thctis' tinsel slipper'd feet,
And the songs of syrens sweet. Milton.

2. Any thing shining with false lustre; any thing showy and of little value.

For favours cheap and common who would strive?
Yet scatter'd here and there I some behold,
Who can discern the tinsel from the gold. Dryden.

If the man will too curiously examine the superficial tinsel good, he undeceives himself to his own cost. Norris.

No glittering tinsel of May-fair
Could with this rod of Sid compare. Swift.

Ye tinsel insects, whom a court maintains,
That count your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eyes of day,
The muse's wing shall brush you all away. Pope.

To TI'NSEL, tɪn'sɪl. v. a. [from the noun.]

To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.

Hence, you fantastick postillers in song,
My text defeats your art, 'tis nature's tongue,
Scorns all her tinsel'd metaphors of pelf,
Illustrated by nothing but herself. Cleveland.

She tinsel'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views;
Secs momentary monsters rise and fall,

TI'NT, tɪnt. n. s. [teinte, French; tinta, Ital.] A die; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mass,
And from the canvass call the mimic face. Pope.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auriculas, in Alpine snow;
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline. Harte.

Though it be allowed that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tints, a soft and gradual transition from one to another, present not to the eye what an harmonious concert of musick does to the ear; it must be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight. Reynolds.

TI'NWORM, tɪn'wɜrm. n. s. An insect. Bailey.

TI'NY, tɪ'nɛ. adj. [tint, tynd, Danish.]

Little; small; puny. A burlesque word.

Any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakspeare.

When that I was a little tiny boy,
A foolish thing was but a toy. Shakspeare.

But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves
On little females, and on little loves;

Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,
The baby playthings that adorn thy house. Swift.
TIP, tip. n. s. [tip, tipken, Dutch.] Top;
end; point; extremity.

The tip no jewel needs to wear,
The tip is jewel of the ear. Sidney.
They touch the beard with the tip of their tongue, and wet it. Bacon.

Thrice upon thy finger's tip,
Thrice upon thy rubied lip. Milton.
All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue.
South.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but herself, and thirty clandestine marriages, that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue. Addison.

I no longer look upon lord Plausible as ridiculous, for admiring a lady's fine tip of an ear and pretty elbow. Pope.

To TIP, tip. v. a. [from the noun.]

In his hand a reed
Stood waving, tipp'd with fire. Milton.
With truncheon tipp'd with iron head,
The warrior to the lists he led. Hudibras.
How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paws, when tipp'd with gold,
And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders!
Addison.

Quartos, octavos shape the lessening pyre,
And last a little Ajax tips the spire. Pope.
Behold the place, where if a poet
Shin'd in description, he might show it;
Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,
And tips with silver all the walls. Pope.

Tipt with jet,
Fair etmines spotless as the snows they press.
Thomson.

2. To strike slightly; to tap.

She writes love letters to the youth in grace,
Nay, tips the wink before the cuckold's face.
Dryden.
The pert jackanapes tipped me the wink, and put out his tongue at his grandfather. Tatler.
A third rogue tips me by the elbow. Swift.
Their judgment was, upon the whole,
That lady is the dullest soul;
Then tip their forehead in a jeer,
As who should say, she wants it here. Swift.
When I saw the keeper frown,
Tipping him with half a crown,
Now, said I, we are alone,
Name your heroes one by one. Swift.

TIPPET, tip'pl't. n. s. [æppet, Saxon.]
Something worn about the neck.

His turban was white, with a small red cross on the top; he had also a tippet of fine linen. Bacon.

To TIPPLE, tip'pl. v. n. [tepel, a dug, old Teutonick.] To drink luxuriously;
to waste life over the cup.

And keep the turn of tippling with a slave,
To reel the streets at noon. Shakspeare.

To TIPPLE, tip'pl. v. a. To drink in luxury or excess.

While his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleveland.
To a short meal he makes a tedious grace,
Before the barley-pudding comes in place;
Then bids fall on; himself for saving charges
A peel'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice.
Dryden.

If a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale. Philips.

TIPPLE, tip'pl. n. s. [from the verb.]
Drink; liquor.

While the tipple was paid for, all went merrily

Ready to pass to the American strand. Herbert.
Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tiptoes from the ground. Dryden.

TIRE, téer. n. s. [tuyr, Dutch.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.
Your lowest tire of ordnance must lie four foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those your best pieces will be of small use at sea, in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise.
Raleigh.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second tire
Of thunder. Milton.
In all those wars there were few tires, most of them being of one tire of oars of fifty banks.
Arbutnot.

2. [Corrupted from tiar or tiara, or from attire. Pron. tire.] A headdress.

On her head she wore a tire of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and ouches. Spenser.
Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakspeare.
The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flame; the tire
That crowns his bated head, on high appears.
Crashaw

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tire went round. Pope.

3. Furniture; apparatus. [Pron. tire.]

furnish out so much as a titile page with propriety.

Swift.

Others with wishful eyes on glory look,
When they have got their picture towards a book,

Or pompous titile, like a gaudy sign

Meant to betray dull sots to wretched wine. Young.

5. A claim of right.

Let the titile of a man's right be called in question;

are we not hold to rely and build upon the judgment of such as are famous for their skill in the laws? Hooker.

Is a man impoverished by purchase? it is because he paid his money for a lye, and took a bad titile for a good. South.

'Tis our duty

Such monuments, as we can build, to raise;

Lest all the world prevent what we should do,

And claim a titile in him by their praise. Dryden.

If there were no laws to protect them, there were no living in this world for good men; and in effect there would be no laws, if it were a sin in them to try a titile, or right themselves by them.

Kettleworth.

To revenge their common injuries, though you had an undoubted titile by your birth, you had a greater by your courage. Dryden.

Conti would have kept his titile to Orange.

All that they did was piety to this. Ben Jonson.
There is no fool to the sinner, who every moment ventures his soul. Tillotson.

14. As far as.

Some Americans, otherwise of quick parts, could not count to one thousand, nor had any distinct idea of it, though they could reckon very well to twenty. Locke.

Coffee exhales in roasting to the abatement of near one-fourth of its weight. Arbuthnot.

15. Noting intention.

This the consul sees, yet this man lives!
Partakes the publick cares; and with his eye
Mark and points out each man of us to slaughter. Ben Jonson.

16. After an adjective it notes the object.

Draw thy sword in right,
I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it to the death. Shakspeare.
Fate and the dooming gods are deaf to tears. Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden.

17. Noting obligation.

The rabbins subtly distinguish between our duty to God, and to our parents. Holiday.
Almanzor is taxed with changing sides, and what tie has he on him to the contrary? He is not born their subject, and he is injured by them to a very high degree. Dryden.

18. Respecting.

He's walk'd the way of nature;
And to our purposes he lives no more. Shakspeare.
The effects of such a division are pernicious to the last degree, not only with regard to those advantages which they give the common enemy, but to those private evils which they produce in every particular. Spectator.

19. Noting extent.

From the beginning to the end all is due to supernatural grace. Hammond.

A crow, though hatched under a hen, and who never has seen any of the works of its kind, maketh its nest the same, to the laying of a stick, with all the nests of that species. Addison.
If he employs his abilities to the best advantage, the time will come when the Supreme Governor of the world shall proclaim his worth before men and angels Spectator.
25. Before day, to notes the present day; before morrow, the day next coming; before night, either the present night, or night next coming.
Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it find heav'n, must find it out to night. Shaksp.
To day they chas'd the boar. Otway.
This ought rather to be called a full purpose of committing sin to day, than a resolution of leaving it to morrow. Calamy.
26. To day, to night, to morrow, are used, not very properly, as substantives in the nominative and other cases.
To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusky death. Shakspeare.
The father of Solomon's house will have private conference with one of you the next day after to morrow. Bacon.
To day is ours why do we fear?
To day is ours, we have it here:
Let's banish bus'n's, banish sorrow,
To the gods belongs to morrow. Cowley.
To morrow will deliver all her charms
Into my arms, and make her mine for ever. Dryden.

- For what to morrow shall disclose,
May spoil what you to night propose:
England may change, or Cloe stray;
Love and life are for to day. Prior.
- TOAD, tóde.²⁹⁵ n. s. [τὰδε, Saxon.] A paddock; an animal resembling a frog; but the frog leaps, the toad crawls: the toad is accounted venomous, perhaps without reason.
From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted creature. Shakspeare.
I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others use. Shakspeare.
In the great plague there were seen, in divers ditches about London, many toads that had tails three inches long, whereas toads usually have no tails. Bacon.
In hollow caverns vermin make abode,

Whose game is whisk, whose treat a toast in sack. Pope.
3. A celebrated woman whose health is often drunk.
I shall likewise mark out every toast, the club in which she was elected, and the number of votes that were on her side. Addison.
Say, why are beauties prais'd and honour'd most,
The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast?
Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,
Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd? Pope.
- TO'ASTER, tóst'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from toast.]

- We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry saucy ill-bred fellow Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
- TOBA'CCO, tò-bák'kò. n. s. [from Tobaco or Tobago, in America.]
The flower of the tobacco consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and divided at the top into five deep segments, which expand like a star; the ovary becomes an oblong roundish membranaceous fruit, which is divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, and is filled with small roundish seeds. Miller.
It is a planet now I see;
And, if I err not, by his proper
Bread or tobacco may be neglected; but reason at first recommends their trial, and custom makes them pleasant. Locke.
Salts are to be drained out of the clay by water, before it be fit for the making tobacco-pipes or bricks. Woodward.
- TOBA'CONIST, tò-bák'kò-nist. n. s. [from tobacco.] A preparer and vender of tobacco.
- TOD, tód. n. s. [totte haar, a lock of hair, German. Skinner. I believe rightly.]

To Italy. Shakespeare.

TOIL, tóil. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; fatigue.

They live both to their great toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Ariens are renewed. Hooker.

Not to irksome toil, hut to delight

He made us. Milton.

The love of praise, howe'er conceal'd by art,

Reigns more or less, and glows in ev'ry heart;

The proud to gain it toils and toils endure,

The modest shun it, but to make it sure. Young.

2. [toile, toiles, French; tela, Lat.] Any net or snare woven or meshed.

She looks like sleep,

As she would catch another Antony

In her strong toil of grace. Shakespeare.

He had so plac'd his horsemen and footmen in the woods, that he shut up the christians as it were in a toil. Knolles.

All great spirits

Bear great and sudden change with such impatience

As a Numidian lion, when first caught,

Endures the toil that holds him. Denham.

A fly falls into the toil of a spider. L'Estrange.

borious; weary.

This, were it toilsome, yet with thee were sweet.

Milton.

The law of the fourth commandment was not agreeably to the state of innocency; for in that happy state there was no toilsome labour for man or beast. White.

While here we dwell,

What can be toilsome in these pleasant walks? Milton.

Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,

A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear;

Recal those knights that clos'd thy toilsome days,

Still hear thy Parnel in his living lays. Pope.

TO'ILSOMENESS, tóil'súm-nés. n. s. [from toilsome.] Wearisomeness; laborious-

ness.

TO'KEN, tó'k'n.¹⁰³ n. s. [taikns, Gothic; τακν, Saxon; teycken, Dutch.]

1. A sign.

Shew me a token for good that they which hate me may see it. Psalms.

2. A mark.

They have not the least token or shew of the arts and industry of China. Heylin

Wheresoever you see ingratitude, you may as in-fally conclude that there is a growing stock of ill-nature in that breast, as you may know that man to have the plague upon whom you see the tokens. South.

3. A memorial of friendship; an evidence of remembrance.

Here is a letter from queen Hecuba,

A token from her daughter, my fair love. Shaksp.

Whence came this? Shaksp.

This is some token from a newer friend.

Pigwiggen gladly would commend

Some token to queen Mah to send,

Were worthy of her wearing. Drayton.

What in time proceeds,

May token to the future our past deeds. Shakespeare.

TOLD, tóld. [pret. and part. pass. of tell.]

Mentioned; related.

The acts of God, to human ears,

Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.

TO TOLE, tóle. v. a. [This seems to be some barbarous provincial word.] To train; to draw by degrees.

Whatever you observe him to be more frighted at than he should, tole him on to by insensible degrees, till at last he masters the difficulty. Locke.

TO'LERABLE, tó'úr-á-bl.⁸⁸ adj. [tolerable,

French; tolerabilis, Latin.]

1. Supportable; that may be endured or supported.

Yourselves, who have sought them, ye so excuse,

as that ye would have men to think ye judge them not allowable, hut tolerable only, and to be borne with, for the furtherance of your purposes, till the corrupt estate of the church may be better reformed. Hooker.

It shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for that city. Matthew.

Cold and heat scarce tolerable. Milton.

There is nothing of difficulty in the external performance, hut what hypocrisy can make tolerable to itself. Tillotson.

2. Not excellent; not contemptible; passable.

ted himself tolerably at a ball. Spectator.

TO'LERANCE, tó'úr-ánsé.⁵⁷ n. s. [toleran- tia, Latin; tolerance, French.] Power of enduring; act of enduring. Not used, though a good word.

Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him. Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said,
If you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself.

Bacon.

There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here. and blessed eternally. Hammond.

TO TO'LERATE, tó'úr-áte. v. a. [tolero, Latin; tolerer, French.] To allow so as not to hinder; to suffer; to pass uncensured.

Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue; their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker.

We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and sa-tyrs: for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralties require their substantial falsities. Brown.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute

in any known sin. Decay of Piety.

Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.

We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, hut not that they will tolerate us. Swift.

TOLERA'TION, tó'úr-á'shún. n. s. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.

I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to these men. South.

TÓLL, tóle.⁴⁰⁶ n. s. [This word seems derived from tollo, Latin; toll, Saxon;

tol, Dutch; told, Danish; toll, Welsh;

taillie, French.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.

Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to huy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market;

secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage.

Cowell.

Empson and Dudley the people csteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their master's grist. Bacon.

The same Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine.

Arbutnot.

TO TOLL, tóle. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To pay toll or tallage.

I will huy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him: for this, I'll none of him. Shakespeare.

Where, when, by whom, and what y' were sold for,

And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras.

2. To take toll or tallage.

The meale the more yeeldeth if servant be true,

And miller that tolleth takes none but his due

Tusser.

3. [I know not whence derived.] To sound as a single bell.

The first bringer of unwelcome news

Hath but a losing office: and his tongue

Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,

Remember'd tolling a departed friend. Shakespeare.

Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship

God. Stillingfleet.

Toll, toll,

Gentle bell, for the soul

Of the pure ones Denham.

You love to hear of some prodigious tale,

The bell that toll'd alone, or Irish whale Dryden.

They give their hodies due repose at night:

When hollow murmurs of their c'ning bells

Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dryden.

With horns and trumpets now to madness swell,
Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope.
To TOLL, tôle. v. a. [tollo, Latin.]

1. To ring a bell.

When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the same is known to the searchers. Graunt.

2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.

An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.

3. To take away; or perhaps to invite. Obsolete.

The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and tolleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon.

They move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown.

They rode; but authors having not determin'd whether pace or trot,
That is to say, whether tolutation,
As they do term 't, or succussion,
We leave it. Hudibras.

TOMB, tóóm.^{164 347} n. s. [tombe, tombeau, French; tumba, low Latin.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.

Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakspeare.

Time is drawn upon tombs, an old man bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass. Peacham.

Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb:
Let her possess in peace that narrow room. Dryden.

The secret wound with which I bleed
Shall lie wrapt up, ev'n in my horse;
But on my tomb-stone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.

To Tomb, tóóm.³⁴⁷ v. a. [from the noun.]

To bury; to entomb.

Souls of boys were there,
And youths that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

To'MBLESS, tóóm'lès. adj. [from tomb.]

A lady
Fasten'd to an empery, to be partner'd
With tomboys, hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield! Shakspeare.

TOME, tóme. n. s. [French; τομος.]

1. One volume of many.

2. A book.

All those venerable books of scripture, all those sacred tomes and volumes of holy writ, are with such absolute perfection framed. Hooker.

TOMIT, tóm-tit'. n. s. [See TITMOUSE.]

A titmouse; a small bird.

You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him, and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spectator.

TON, tún.¹⁶⁵ n. s. [tonne, French. See TUN.] A measure or weight.

Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

TON, } tún. { in the names of places, are TUN, } derived from the Saxon, tun, a hedge or wall; and this seems to be from ðun, a hill, the towns being anciently built on hills, for the sake of defence and protection in times of war. Gibson's Camden.

TO'NE, tóne. n. s. [ton, French; tonus, Latin.]

1. Note; sound.

Sounds called tones are ever equal. Bacon.
The strength of a voice or sound makes a difference in the loudness or softness, but not in the tone. Bacon.

In their motions harmony divine
So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear Listens delighted. Milton.

2. Accent; sound of the voice.

Palamon replies,
Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.
Each has a little soul he calls his own,
And each enunciates with a human tone. Harte.

Made children, with your tones, to run for 't,
As bad as bloody-bones or Lunsford. Hudibras.

4. A particular or affected sound in speaking.

5. Elasticity; power of extension and contraction.

Drinking too great quantities of this decoction, may weaken the tone of the stomach. Arbutnot.

TONG, tûng.^{165 406} n. s. [See TONGS.] The catch of a buckle. This word is usually written tongue; but, as its office is to hold, it has probably the same original with tongs, and should therefore have the same orthography.

Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong,
Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden tong. Spenser.

TONGS, tûngz. n. s. [τᾱng, Saxon; tang, Dutch.] An instrument by which hold is taken of any thing; as of coals in the fire.

Another did the dying brands repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the same With liquid waves. Spenser.

They turn the glowing mass with crooked tongs;
The fiery work proceeds. Dryden.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger, and toothed. Mortimer.

TONGUE, tûng.^{165 337} n. s. [τᾱng, Saxon; tonghe, Dutch.]

1. The instrument of speech in human beings.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And ev'ry tongue brings in a sev'ral tale,
And ev'ry tale condemns me for a villain. Shakspeare.

Who with the tongue of angels can relate?

They are tongue-valiant and as bold as Hercules where there's no danger. L'Estrange.

My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death,
Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath. Dryden.

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost; but the lag in fight. Dryden.

There have been female Pythagoreans, notwithstanding that philosophy consisted in keeping a secret, and the disciple was to hold her tongue five years together. Addison.

Though they have those sounds ready at their tongue's end, yet there are no determined ideas. Locke.

I should make but a poor pretence to true learning, if I had not clear ideas under the words my tongue could pronounce. Watts.

2. The organ by which animals lick.

They hiss for hiss returned, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton.

3. Speech; fluency of words.

He said; and silence all their tongues contain'd. Chapman.

Much tongue and much judgment seldom go together; for talking and thinking are two quite different faculties. L'Estrange.

First in the council hall to steer the state,
And ever foremost in a tongue debate. Dryden.

4. Power of articulate utterance.

Parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing-birds in silver cages hung. Dryden.

5. Speech, as well or ill used.

Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee: but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head. Shakspeare.

So brave a knight was Tydeus, of whom a sonne is sprong, Inferiour farre in martial deeds, though higher in his tongue. Chapman.

On evil days though fallen and evil tongues. Milton.

6. A language.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee, whose tongue thou shalt not understand. Deuteronomy.

With wondrous gifts endu'd,
To speak all tongues, and do all miracles. Milton.

So well he understood the most and best
Of tongue that Babel sent into the west;
Spoke them so truly, that he had, you'd swear,
Not only liv'd, but been born ev'ry where. Cowley.

An acquaintance with the various tongues is nothing but a relief against the mischiefs which the building of Babel introduced. Watts.

7. Speech, as opposed to thoughts or action.

Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. 1 John.

8. A nation distinguished by their language. A scriptural term.

The Lord shall destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea. Isaiah.

9. A small point: as, the tongue of a balance.

10. To hold the TONGUE. To be silent.

'Tis seldom seen that senators so young
Know when to speak, and when to hold their tongue. Dryden.

Whilst I live I must not hold my tongue,
And languish out old age in his displeasure. Addis.

To TONGUE, tûng.³³⁷ v. a. [from the noun.] To chide; to scold.

But that her tender skame
Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,
How might she tongue me! Shakspeare.

To TONGUE, tûng. v. n. To talk; to prate.

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff, as madmea Tongue, and brain not. Shakspeare.

To'NGUED, tûng'd.³⁶⁹ adj. [from tongue.]

Having a tongue.
Tongued like the night-crow. Donne.

To'NGUELESS, tûng'lès. adj. [from tongue.]

1. Wanting a tongue; speechless.

What tongueless blocks! would they not speak?
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth. Shakspeare.

That blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me, for justice. Shakspeare.

2. Unnamed; not spoken of.
One good deed, dying tongueless,
Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. Shaksp.
TO'NGUEPAD, tũng'påd. n. s. [tongue and pad.] A great talker.
She who was a celebrated wit at London, is, in that dull part of the world, called a tonguepad.

TONGUETI'ED, tũng'tide.²⁵² adj. [tongue
and tie.]

1. Having an impediment of speech.
They who have short tongues, or are tonguetied, are apt to fall short of the appulse of the tongue to the teeth, and oftener place it on the gums, and say t and d instead of th and dh; as moder for mother.
Holder.

2. Unable to speak freely, from whatever cause.
Love, and tongueti'd simplicity,
In least speak most to my capacity. Shaksp.
He spar'd the blushes of the tongueti'd dame.
Tickel.

TO'NICAL, tũn'ik-ål. } adj. [tonique, Fr.
TO'NICK, tũn'ik.⁵⁰⁹ } riivw.]

1. Being extended; being elastic.
Station is no rest, but one kind of motion, relating unto that which physicians, from Galen, do name extensive or tonical. Brown.

2. Relating to tones or sounds.
TO'NNAGE, tũn'nidje.⁵⁰ n. s. [from ton.]
A custom or impost due for merchandise brought or carried in tons from or to other nations, after a certain rate in every ton. Corwell.
Tonnage and poundage upon merchandizes were collected, refused to be settled by act of parliament.
Clarendon.

TO'NSIL, tũn'sil. n. s. [tonsille, French;
tonsilla, Latin.]

Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts.
Quincy.

TO'NSURE, tũn'shũre.⁴⁹² n. s. [tonsure, French; tonsura, Latin.] The act of clipping the hair; the state of being shorn.

The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.

Too, tũd.¹⁰ adv. [to, Saxon.]

1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the sig-nification of an adjective or adverb to a vitious degree.

Your father's rough and stern,
His will too stroug to bend, too proud to learn.

Groundless prejudices and weakesses of conscience, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Sprat.

It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture.

These ridiculous stories abide with us too long,
and too far influence the weaker part of mankind.

It is sometimes doubled to increase its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside.

Oh! that this too too solid flesh would melt!

Shaksp.

Sometimes it would be full, and then
Oh! too too soon decrease again;
Eclips'd sometimes, that 'twould so fall,
There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.

3. Likewise; also.
See what a scourge is laid upon your hate;
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shaksp.

Let on my cup no wars be found,
Let those incite to quarrels too,
Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text, and from experience too.

It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours.

A courtier and a patriot too.
Let those eyes that view
The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope.

TOOK, tũk. The preterit, and sometimes the participle passive, of take.
Thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge. Shaksp.

He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations.

Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepar'd. Dryden.

The same device enclosed the ashes of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously.

This took up some of his hours every day. Spect.
The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift.

Leaving Polybus, I took my way To Cyrrha's temple. Pope.

TOOL, tũl.⁵⁰⁶ n. s. [tol, tool, Saxon.]

1. Any instrument of manual operation.
In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little, it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool, it will be dry.

They found in many of their mines more gold than earth; a metal, which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron.

Arm'd with such gard'n'ing tools as art, yet rude,
Guiltless of fire, had form'd.

The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools.

2. A hireling; a wretch who acts at the command of another.
He'd choose
To talk with wits in dirty shoes;
And scorn the tools with stars and garters,
So often seen caressing Chartres.

To Toor, tũt. v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps tootan, Saxon, contracted from toptetan, to know or examine.]

1. To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and sliely. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete.

I cast to go a shooting,
Long wand'ring up and down the land,
With bow and bolts on either hand,
For birds and bushes tooting.

2. It was used in a contemptuous sense, which I do not fully understand.
This writer should wear a tooting horn.

TOOTH, tũd'ih.⁴⁶⁷ n. s. plural teeth. [toð, Saxon; tand, Dutch.]

1. The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; about the seventh or eighth month they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw: the dentec incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw: after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molares or grinders: about the seventh year they are thrust out by new teeth, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again:

but some have shed their teeth twice;
about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molares spring up, and they are called dentec sapientie.

Be thy mouth or black or white,
Tooth that poisons if it bite.
Desert deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence against the tooth of time,
And razure of oblivion.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unsightly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out.

2. Taste; palate.
These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth;
What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth?
Why stand'st thou picking?

3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multifidous instrument.
The priest's servaat came while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh hook of three teeth. 1 Samuel.

I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide.

4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies.
The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge.

In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you clog them with never so much weight;
but apply a little oil, they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force.

5. TOOTH and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence.
A lion and bear were at tooth and nail which should carry off a fawn.

6. To the TEETH. In open opposition.
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
Thus diddest thou.

The action lies
In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd, Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence.

The way to our horses lies back again by the house, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth.

7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration.
A wise body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, Were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself.

8. In spite of the TEETH. Notwithstanding threats expressed by showing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence.
The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.

Shakspeare.

The only way is, not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth.

L'Estrange.

2. To show the TEETH. To threaten.

When the law shears her teeth, but dares not bite, And South Sea treasures are not brought to light.

Young.

For whose dear sake so many troubles her did toss. Spenser.

Calm region once,
And full of peace, now tost and turbulent. Milton.

6. To keep in play; to tumble over.
That scholar should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tongue, than most do that spend four years in tossing all the rules of grammar in common schools. Ascham.

To TOSS, tós. v. n.

1. To fling; to winch; to be in violent comotion.
Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair
Tended the sick, husiest from couch to couch. Milton.

Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually tossing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest. Harvey.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tillotson.

And thou, my sire, not destin'd by thy birth
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou toss and rave, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality! Addison.
They throw their person with a hoysen air
Across the room, and toss into the chair. Young.

2. To be tossed.
Your mind is tossing on the sea,
There where your argosies
Do overpeep the petty traffickers. Shakespeare.

God, of natural reason; which, if it be totally or mostly defaced, the right of government doth cease.
Bacon.

The obdurate sinner, that hath long hardened his own heart against God, thereby provokes him totally to withdraw all inward grace from him. Hammond.

Charity doth not end with this world, but goes along with us into the next, where it will be perfected: but faith and hope shall then totally fail; the one being changed into sight, the other into enjoyment. Atterbury.

TOTHER, túth'úr. Contracted for the other.

As had the one as 'other. Farnaby.

TO TOTHER, tót'túr.⁹⁸ v. n. [tateren, to stagger, Dutch.] To shake so as to threaten a fall.

What news, in this our tó'tt'ring state?
—It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord,
And I believe will never stand upright. Shakspeare.

As a bowing wall shall ye see, and as a tó'ttering fence. Psalms.

The foes already have possess'd the wall,
Troy nods from high, and tó'tters to her fall. Dryd.

TO'TTERY, tót'túr-é. } adj. [from totter.]
TO'TTY, tót'té. } Shaking; unsteady;

bridge made with such artifice, that the sentinel discovering any force approaching may, by only touch- ing a certain iron with his foot, draw up the bridge.
Brown.

3. To reach with any thing, so as that there be no space between the thing reached and the thing brought to it.

He brake the withs as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire. Judges.

Him thus intent, Ithuriel with his spear Touch'd lightly. Milton.

4. To come to; to attain.

Their impious folly dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day;
The gods vindictive doom'd them never more,
Ah men unblest! to touch their natal shore. Pope.

5. To try, as gold with a stone.

When I have suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poize and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted. Shakspeare.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras.

6. To relate to.

In ancient times was publickly read first the scripture, as, namely, something out of the books of the prophets of God; some things out of the apostles writings; and, lastly, out of the holy evangelists, some things which touch'd the person of our Lord Jesus Christ. Hooker.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakspeare.

7. To meddle with; not totally to forbear.

He so light was at legerdemain,

With solemn touches, troubled thoughts Milton.
11. Power of exciting the affections.
Not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak t' us. Shakspeare.
12. Something of passion or affection.
He which without our nature could not on earth suffer for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true, natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.
He loves us not:
He wants the natural touch. Shakspeare.
13. Particular relation.
Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon.
14. [touche, Fr.] A stroke.
Our kings no sooner fall out, but their mints make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of raillery Addison Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparat. he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry Addison.
Though its error may be such,
As Knags and Burgess cannot hit,
It yet may feel the nicer touch
Of Wicherley's or Congreve's wit. Prior.
He gave the little wealth he had To build a bouse for fools and mad;
To shew by one satirick touch,
No nation wanted it so much. Swift.

To'YMAN, tòé'mán. n. s. [from toy.] A seller of toys.

But what in oddness can be more sublime,
Than S—, the foremost toyman of his time?
Young.

To'YSHOP, tòé'shòp. n. s. [toy and shop.]
A shop where playthings and little nice manufactures are sold.

Fans, silk, riband, laces, and gewgaws, lay so thick together, that the heart was nothing else but a toyshop.
Addison.

With varying vanities from every part,
They shift the moving toyshop of their heart. Pope.

To TOZE, tòze. v. a. [See TOUSE and TEASE.] To pull by violence or impotency.

Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, or toze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier?
Shakspeare.

TRACE, tráse. n. s. [trace, French; traccia, Italian.]

1. Mark left by any thing passing; footsteps.

These as a line their long dimension drew,
Sreaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton.

2. Remain; appearance of what has been.

The people of these countries are reported to have lived like the beasts among them, without any traces of orders, laws, or religion
Temple.

There are not the least traces of it to be met, the greatest part of the ornaments being taken from Trajan's arch, and set up to the conqueror.
Addison.

The shady empire shall retain no trace
Of war, or blood, but in the sylvan chace. Pope.

3. [from tirasser. French; tirasses, traces.]
Harness for beasts of draught.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces of the smallest spider's web. Shakspeare.

The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came. Milton.
While lab'ring oxen, spent with toil and heat,
In their loose traces from the field retreat. Pope.

Twelve young mules,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.

To TRACE, tráse. v. a. [tracer, Fr. tracciare, Italian.]

1. To follow by the footsteps, or remaining marks.

I feel thy power to trace thy ways
Of highest agents. Milton.
You may trace the deluge quite round the globe in profane history; and every one of these people have a tale to tell concerning the restoration
Burnet.

They do but trace over the paths beaten by the ancients, or comment, critick, or flourish up on them.
Temple.

To this haste of the mind, a not due tracing of their arguments to their true foundation is owing.
Locke.

2. To follow with exactness.

That servile path thou nobly dost decline,
Of tracing word by word, and line by line. Denham.

3. To mark out.

He allows the soul power to trace images on the brain, and perceive them. Locke.
His pen can trace out a true quotation. Swift.

4. To walk over.

Men, as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead.
Spenser.

We do trace this alley up and down. Shakspeare.
TRA' CER, trá'súr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from trace.] One that traces.

Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice.
Howel.

TRACK, trák. n. s. [trac, old Fr. traccia, Italian.]

1. Mark left upon the way by the foot, or otherwise.

Following the track of Satan. Milton.
Hung by the neck and hair, and dragg'd around,
The hostile spear yet sticking in his wound,
With tracks of blood inscrib'd the dusty ground.
Dryden.

Consider the exterior frame of the globe, if we may find any tracks or footsteps of wisdom in its constitution.
Bentley.

2. A road; a beaten path.

With track oblique sidelong he works his way.
Milton.

Behold Torquatus the same track pursue,
And next, the two devoted Decii view. Dryden.

To TRACK, trák. v. a. [from the noun.]
To follow by the footsteps or marks left in the way.

As shepherd's cur that in dark evening's shade
Hath tracked forth some savage beastis treade.
Spenser.

He was not only a professed imitator of Horace, but a learned plagiary in all the others; you track him every where in their snow.
Dryden.

TRA'CKLESS, trák'lés. adj. [from track.]
Untrodden; marked with no footsteps.

Lost in trackless fields of shining day,
Unable to discern the way,
Which Nassau's virtue only could explore. Pope.

TRACT, trákt. n. s. [tractus, Latin.]

1. Any kind of extended substance.

Heav'n hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton.

2. A region; a quantity of land.

Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.
Monte Circeo, by Homer called Insula Æea, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth.
Addison.

3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.

The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh.

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.

As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity, by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense. Holder.

4. Course; manner of process: unless it means, in this place, rather discourse, explanation.

The tract of every thing
Would by a good discourser, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shakspeare.

5. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for track.
The weary sun hath made a golden set,

And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shaksp.
6. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a small book.

The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared. Swift.

TRA'CTABLE, trák'tá-bl.⁴⁰⁶ adj. [tractabilis, Latin; traitable, French.]

1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.

For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, whensoever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hooker.

Tractable obedience is a slave
To teach incensed will. Shakspere.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspere.

As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit. Locke.

2. Palpable; such as may be handled.

The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt. Holder.

TRA'CTABLENESS, trák'tá-bl-nés. n. s. [from tractable.] The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.

It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply. Locke.

TRA'CTABLY, trák'tá-blé. adv. In a tractable manner; gently.

TRA'CTATE, trák'táte.⁹¹ n. s. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.

Many divines of our own nation, in sermons and written tractates of the sabbath, and in their expositions of the fourth commandment, maintain the fore-said position. White.

Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced. Brown.

We need no other evidence than Glanvil's tractate. Hale.

TRA'CTILE, trák'til.¹⁴⁰ adj. [tractus, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.

The consistences of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough; flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile. Bacon.

TRACTI'LITY, trák'til'é-té. n. s. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.

Silver whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet. Derham.

TRA'CTION, trák'shún. n. s. [from tractus, Lat.] The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum. Holder.

TRADE, trádé.⁷³ n. s. [tratta, Italian.]

1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

Whosoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whosoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Raleigh.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another. Temple.

2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold, a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser.

How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade! Shakspere.

I'll mountebank their loves, and come home below'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakspere.

Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakspere.

The rude Equicolæ,
Hunting their sport, and plund'ring was their trade. Dryden.

Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden.

The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains. Dryden.

The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way; the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood. Arbuthnot.

3. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
His house and household goods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.

4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade; and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

5. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. Shakspere.

6. Formerly trade was used of domestick, and traffick of foreign commerce.

TO TRADE, trádé. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.

He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading. Luke.

Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded. Arbuthnot.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia. Arbuthnot.

2. To act merely for money.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Maobeth
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakspere.

3. To have a trade wind.

They on the trading flood ply tow'rd the pole. Milton.

TO TRADE, trádé. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market. Ezekiel.

TRADE-WIND, trádé'wind. n. s. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow;
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.

His were the projects of perpetuum mobilis, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbuthnot.

Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.

TRA'DED, trá'déd. adj. [from trade.] Versed; practised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such rheum:
And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakspere.

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakspere.

TRA'DEFUL, trádé'fúl. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffick.

Ye traded merchants, that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain? Spenser.

TRA'DER, trá'dúr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from trade.]

1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. Shakspere.

Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders, Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.

Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal. Child.

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift.

2. One long used in the methods of money-getting; a practitioner.

TRA'DESFOLK, trádz'fólke. n. s. [trade and folk.] People employed in trades.

By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRA'DESMAN, trádz'mán.⁹⁸ n. s. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakspere from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakspere.

They rather had beheld Dissentious numbers pest'ring streets; than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakspere.

Order a trade thither and thence so as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them. Bacon.

Tradesmen might conjecture what things they were like to have in their respective dealings. Grant.

M. Jourdain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.

From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbuthnot.

Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.

Boastful and rough, your first son is a squirc;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar. Pope.

Penitens was a busy notable tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age. Lavo.

TRADITION, trá-dish'ún. n. s. [tradition, Fr. traditio, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth

With superstitious and traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton.

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made, and had a beginning. Wilkins.

Our old solemnities

From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

TRADITIONAL, trâ-dish'ûn-âl. adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.

2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites.

Not used, nor proper.

God forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary!

—You are too senseless obstinate, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare.

TRADITIONALLY, trâ-dish'ûn-âl-ê. adv.
[from traditional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from St. John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet.

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchi-ale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown.

TRADITIONARY, trâ-dish'ûn-âr-ê. adj.
[from tradition.] Delivered by tradition; transmissive; handed down from age to age.

Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain,
Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryd.
Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Addis.

TRADITIVE, trâ-dê-tiv. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trado, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryden.

To TRADUCE, trâ-dûse'. v. a. [traduco, Latin; traduire, French.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blamable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all men's devotion towards them. Hooker.

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift, when other things also traduced in the publick duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hooker.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing.

Government of the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dryden.

2. To propagate; to increase or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;
Between whose natures no proportion is,
When root and branch in nature still agree. Davies.

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hale.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced, hath been the great hall of contention to the latter ages. Glanville.

TRADUCEMENT, trâ-dûse'ment. n. s. [from traduce.] Censure; obloquy.

Rome must know

The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings. Shakespeare.

TRADUCER, trâ-dû'sûr. n. s. [from traduce.]

1. A false censurer; a calumniator.

2. One who derives.

TRADUCIBLE, trâ-dû'sê-bl. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived.

Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally tradu-cible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.

TRADUCTION, trâ-dûk'shûn. n. s. [from traduce.]

1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

The patrons of tradition accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.

If by tradition came thy mind,
Our wonder is the less to find
A soul so charming from a stock so good;
Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another.

Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

3. Conveyance; act of transferring.

Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping:
though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation. Hale.

4. Transition.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction.
Bacon.

TRAFFICK, trâ'fik. n. s. [trafique, Fr.
traffico, Italian.]

1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick was formerly used of foreign commerce in distinction from trade.

Traffick's thy god. Shakespeare.

My father

A merchant of great traffick through the world. Shak.
Tyre, a town indeed of great wealth and traffick,
and the most famous emporium of the elder times.

Heylin

As he was, for his great wisdom, stiled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traf-fick of his people. Addison.

2. Commodities; subject of traffick.

You'll see a draggled damsel

From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear. Gay.
To TRAFFICK, trâ'fik. v. n. [trafique,
French; trafficare, Italian.]

1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities.

They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal.
Bacon.

2. To trade meanly or mercenarily.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macheth
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare.

How hast thou dar'd to think so vilely of me,
That I would condescend to thy mean arts,
And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin? Rowe.

TRAFFICKER, trâ'fik-ûr. n. s. [trafi-queur, French, from traffick.] Trader; merchant.

Your argosies with portly sail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers
That curtsy to them. Shakespeare.

In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Addison.

TRAGACANTH, trâg'gâ-kânth. n. s. [tragacantha, Lat.] A gum which proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called. Trevoux.

TRAGEDIAN, trâ-jê'dê-ân. n. s. [from tragedy; tragædus, Latin.]

1. A writer of tragedy.

Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian. Stillingfleet.

2. An actor of tragedy.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare.

To the well-lung'd tragedian's rage
They recommend their labours of the stage. Dryden.

TRAGEDY, trâd'jê-dê. n. s. [tragedie,
French; tragœdia, Latin.]

1. A dramattick representation of a serious action.

Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will now conclude their plotted tragedy. Shaksp.

All our tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided. Taylor.

Imitate the sister of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action.
Dryden.

An anthem to their god Dionysius, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrific'd, was called the goat-song or tragedy. Rymer.

There to her heart sad tragedy address
The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast.
Pope.

2. Any mournful or dreadful event.

I shall laugh at this,
That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy. Shakespeare.

I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. King Charles.

TRAGICAL, trâd'jê-kâl. adj. [tragicus,
TRA'GICK, trâd'jik. adj. Lat. tragique,
French.]

1. Relating to tragedy.

The rout and tragical effect,
Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfull'st muse of nine,
That wou'st the tragick stage for to direct,
In funeral complaints and wailful tune Reveal to me. Spenser.

Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this tragick play,
Unmely smother'd in their dusky graves. Shaksp.

2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful.

A dire induction I am witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragicat. Shaksp.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea:
And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night. Shaksp.

Why look you still so stern and tragicat? Shaksp.
So tragicat and merited a fate
Shall swallow those who God and justice hate.

Sandys.
I now must change those notes to tragick. Mitt.
The tale of this song is a pretty tragicat story; and pleases, because it is a copy of nature. Addison.
Bid them dress their bloody altars
With every circumstance of tragick pomp. Rowe.

TRAGICALLY, trád'jè-kál-é. adv. [from tragicat.]

1. In a tragicat manner; in a manner befitting tragedy.

Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragicatly. Dryden.

2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously.

TRAGICALNESS, trád'jè-kál-nès. n. s. [from tragicat.] Mournfulness; calamitousness.

Like bold Phaetons, we despise all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicatness of the event, as in the insolence of the undertaking.

Decay of Piety.
TRAGICOMEDY, trád-jè-kóm'è-dè. n. s. [tragicomedie, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merrily and serious events.

On the world's stage, when our applause grows high,

For acting here life's tragi-comedy,
The lookers-on will say we act not well,
Unless the last the former scenes excel. Denham.

The faults of that drama are in the kind of it which is tragi-comedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.

We have often had tragi-comedies upon the English theatre with success; but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.

TRAGICOMICAL, trád-jè-kóm'è-kál. adj. [tragicomique, French; tragicat and comical.]

1. Relating to tragicomedy.

The whole art of the tragi-comical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished. Gay.

2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow.

TRAGICOMICALLY, trád-jè-kóm'è-kál-é. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner.

Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not,
So I was tragicomically got. Brampton.

TRAJECT, tráj-ék't. v. a. [trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw.

The disputes of those assuming confidants, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse, trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail. Glanville.

If there are different kinds of aether, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all celestial bodies. Grew.

If the sun's light be trajected through three or more cross prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.

TRAJECT, tráj-ék't. n. s. [trajet, Fr. trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage.

What notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring to the traject, to the common ferry,
Which trades to Venice. Shakspere.

TRAJECTION, trá-jék'shún. n. s. [trajectio, Latin.]

1. The act of darting through.

Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the aether wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.

2. Emission.

The trajections of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter. Brown.

TO TRAIL, trá-le. v. a. [trailler, Fr.]

1 To hunt by the track.

2 To draw along the ground.

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully;
Trail your steel pikes Shakspere
Faintly he stagger'd through the hissing throng,
And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along. Dryd.

3. To draw a long floating or waving body.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe? Pope.

4. [treghen, Dutch.] To draw; to drag.

Because they shall not trail me through their streets

Like a wild beast, I am content to go. Milton.

Thrice happy poet, who may trail
Thy house about thee like a snail;
Or, harness'd to a nag, at ease
Take journies in it like a chaise;
Or in a boat, where'er thou wilt,
Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. Swift.

TO TRAIL, trá-le. v. n. To be drawn out in length.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steepe,
For very felness loud, he 'gan to weep. Spenser.
Swift men of foot, whose broad-set backs their trailing hair did hide. Chapman.

Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,
He knew his boon was granted. Dryden.

From o'er the roof the blaze began to move,
And trailing vanish'd in th' Idean grove;
It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide,
Then in a steaming stench of sulphur dy'd. Dryd.

TRAIL, trá-le. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued; track followed by the hunter.

See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakspere.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!

Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shaksp.

I do think, or else this brain of mine

Hunts not the trail of policy so sure

As I have us'd to do, that I have found

The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakspere.

2. Any thing drawn to length.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories dane'd about her head. Dryd.

When lightning shoots in glittering trails along,
It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night;
But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations.

And round about her work she did impale
With a fair border wrought of sundry flow'rs,
Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.

A sudden star it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.

TO TRAIN, trá-ne. v. a. [trainer, Fr.]

1. To draw along.

In hollow cube he train'd
His devilish enginery. Milton.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite; to allure.

If but twelve French

Were there in arms, they would be as a call

To train ten thousand English to their side. Shaksp.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.

For that cause I train'd thee to my house. Shakspere.

Oh, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note!

To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.

Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will doat:

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shaksp.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.

We did train him on,

And his corruption being ta'en from us,
We as the spring of all shall pay for all. Shaksp.

5. To educate; to bring up: commonly with up.

I can speak English,

For I was train'd up in the English court. Shaksp.

A most rare speaker,

To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers. Shakspere.

A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen. Maccabees.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

Spirits train'd up in feast and song. Milton.

The first christians were by great hardships train'd up for glory. Tillotson.

The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life: wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really are so. Locke.

6. To exercise, or form to any practice by exercise.

Abram armed his trained servants born in his house, and pursued. Genesis.

The warrior horse here bred he's taught to train. Dryden.

TRAIN, trá-ne. n. s. [train, French.]

1. Artifice; stratagem of enticement.

He cast by treaty and by trains

Her to persuade. Spenser.

Their general did with due care provide,
To save his men from ambush and from train. Fairfax.

This mov'd the king,

To lay to draw him in by any train. Daniel.

Swoll with pride, into the snare I fell

Of fair fallacious looks, venerable trains,

Soft'n'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

Now to my charms

And to my wily trains! I shall ere long

Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd

About my mother Circe. Milton.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird.

Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.

Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakewill.

Th' other, whose gay train

Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue

Of rainbows and starry eyes. Milton.

The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his fore skirts. Shakespeare.

4. A series; a consecution: either local or mental.

Rivers now stream, and draw their humid train.
Milton.

Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.

If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.

They labour'd in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.

What wouldst thou have me do? consider well
The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.

If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The workshops of their names. Shakespeare.

Our sire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton.

Thou shouldst be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.

He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.

The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.

He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those things which are of its train. Smallridge.

7. An orderly company; a procession.

Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn. Milton.

Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain? Dryden.

8. The line of powder leading to the mine.

Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gunpowder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble. Hudibras.

Shall he that gives fire to the train, pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine? L'Estrange.

9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.

With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland. Clarendon.

Where the huge hogsheads sweat with trainy oil. Gay.

To TRAI'PSE, tráps. v. a. [A low word. See TRAPE.] To walk in a careless or sluttish manner.

Two slipshod muses traipse along,
In lofty madness, meditating song. Pope.

TRAIT, trá, or trâte. n. s. [trait, French.] A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.

By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this, by their own folly. Broome.

TRÁ'ITOR, trá'ûr. n. s. [traitre, French; traitor, Latin.] One who being trusted betrays.

The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treason. Spenser.

If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him. Bacon.

I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released. Dryden.

There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion, and sell my country. Swift.

TRÁ'ITORLY, trá'tûr-lé. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious.

These traitorly rascals' miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital. Shakespeare.

TRÁ'ITOROUS, trá'tûr-ûs. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious; faithless.

What news with him, that trait'rous wight? Daniel.

Pontinius knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms. Ben Jonson.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted. Bacon.

More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects. Addison.

TRÁ'ITOROUSLY, trá'tûr-ûs-lé. adv. [from traitorous.] In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Good duke Humphrey traiterously is murder'd
By Suffolk. Shakespeare.

Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid
Next me, me traiterously hast betray'd;
And unsuspected half invisibly
At once fled into him, and stay'd with me. Donne.

They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power. Clarendon.

TRÁ'ITRESS, trá'trés. n. s. [from traitor.] A woman who betrays.

I, what am I, by what I was, o'ercome:
Traitress, restore my beauty and my charms,
Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms. Dryden.
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

TRALATI'IOUS, trá-lá-tish'ûs. adj. [from translatus, Latin.] Metaphorical; not literal.

TRALATI'OUSLY, trá-lá-tish'ûs-lé. adv. [from tralatitious.] Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.

Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking: written language is tralatitiously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced. Holder.

To TRALI'NEATE, trá-in'yáte. v. n. [trans and line.] To deviate from any direction.

If you tralineate from your father's mind,
Wha are you else but of a bastard kind?
Do then as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son. Dryden.

TRÁ'MMEL, trá'n'mél. n. s. [tramail, Fr. trama, tragula, Latin.]

1. A net in which birds or fish are caught.

The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the bunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking. Carew.

2. Any kind of net.

Her golden locks she roundly did uptry
In braided trammels, that no looser hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears. Spenser.

3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pack.

I may go shufflingly at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden.

To TRÁ'MMEL, trá'm'mél. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch; to intercept.

If th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its surcease success. Shakespeare.

To TRÁ'MPLE, trá'm'pl. v. a. [trampfe, Danish.] To tread under foot with pride, contempt, or elevation.

Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet. Matthew.

My strength shall trample thee as mire. Milton.

To TRÁ'MPLE, trá'm'pl. v. n.

1. To tread in contempt.
Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own. Government of the Tongue.

Your country's gods I scorn,
And trample on their ignominious altars. Rowe.

2. To tread quick and loudly.

I hear his thund'ring voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.

TRÁ'MPLER, trá'm'pl-ûr. n. s. [from trampfe.] One that tramples.

TRANA'TION, trá-ná'shûn. n. s. [trano, Lat.] The act of swimming over.

TRANCE, trânc. n. s. [transe, Fr. transitus, Latin.] It might therefore be written transe.] An ecstasy; a state in which the soul is wrapt into visions of future or distant things; a temporary absence of the soul from the body.

Gynecia had been in such a trance of musing, that Zelmane was fighting with the lion before she knew of any lion's coming. Sidney.

Rapt with joy resembling heavenly madness,
My soul was ravish'd quite as in a trance.
That Taliessen, once which made the rivers dance,

And in his rapture rais'd the mountains from their trance. Drayton.

Sudden he starts,
Shook from his tender trance. Thomson.

TR'ANCED, trãnst.³⁶⁹ adj. [from trance.]

Lying in a trance or ecstasy.

His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd. Shakespeare.

TR'ANGRAM, trãngrãm. n. s. [A cant word.] An odd intricately contrived thing.

What's the meaning of all these trangrams and gimcracks? what are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.

TR'ANNEL, trãnnil.⁹⁹ n. s. A sharp pin.
Perhaps from trennel.

With a small trannel of iron, or a large nail grounded to a sharp point, they mark the brick.

TR'ANQUIL, trãng'kwil. adj. [tranquille, Fr. tranquillus, Lat.] Quiet; peaceful;
undisturbed.

I had been happy,
So I had nothing known. Oh now, for ever Farewel the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Shakespeare.

TR'ANQUILLITY, trãnk-wil'ê-tê.⁴⁰⁸ n. s.
[tranquillitas, Latin; tranquillité, Fr.]
Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation.

Leave off,
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls tranquillity. Spenser.

How rev'rend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose aged pillars rear their marble heads
To bear aloft its arch'd and pond'rous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immovable, Looking tranquillity! Congreve.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

To TRANSA'CT, trãns-ãkt'. v. a. [trans-actus, Latin.]

1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.

2. To perform; to do; to carry on.

It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.

TR'ANSA'CTION, trãns-ãk'shũn. n. s. [transaction, French, from transact.] Negotiation; dealing between man and man;
management; affairs; things managed.

It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon.

TR'ANSANIMA'TION, trãns-ãn-nê-mã'shũn.
n. s. [trans and anima.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.

If the transanimation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrate into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose sire Satan entered.

To TRANSC'END, trãns-sënd'. v. a. [trans-cendo, Latin.]

1. To pass; to overpass.
It is a dangerous opinion to such popes as s! all transcend their limits, and become tyrannical.

To judge herself she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Bacon.
Davies

2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.

This glorious piece transcends what he could think;

So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.

These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,
Since what they act transcends what they command.

High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she could not, or she would not find

How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryd.

3. To surmount; to rise above.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among ceslestial bodies. Howel.

To TRANSC'END, trãns-sënd'. v. n.

1. To climb. Not in use.

To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.

2. To surpass thought.

The consistence of grace and free will, in this sense, is no such transcending mystery, and I think there is no text in scripture that sounds any thing towards making it so. Hammond.

TR'ANSC'ENDENCE, trãns-sënd'sênsê. } n. s.

TR'ANSC'ENDENCY, trãns-sënd'sên-sê. }
[from transcend.]

1. Excellence; unusual excellence; super-eminence.

2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.

It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a god; this would have done better in poesy, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon.

TR'ANSC'ENDENT, trãns-sënd'sênt. adj. [transcendens, Lat. transcendant, French.] Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.

The title of queen is given by Ignatius to the Lord's-day, not by way of derogation and diminution, but to signify the eminent and transcendent honour of the day. White.

Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,

Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Crashaw.

There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sanderson.

If thou beest he—But O! how fall'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light, Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads, though bright!
Oh charming princess! oh transcendent maid!
Milton.

The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions. Rogers.

TR'ANSC'ENDENTAL, trãns-sënd'sênt'ãl. adj.

[transcendentalis, low Latin.]

1. General; pervading many particulars.

2. Supereminent; passing others.

Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Greiv.

TR'ANSC'ENDENTLY, trãns-sënd'sênt-lê. adv.

[from transcendent.] Excellently; su-pereminently.

The law of christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South.

[trans and colo, Lat.] To strain through a sieve, or colander; to suffer to pass, as through a strainer.

The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.

To TRANSCRIB'ER, trãns-skribe'. v. a. [transcribo, Latin; transcrire, French.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.

He was the original of all those inventions, from which others did but transcribe copies. Clarendon.

The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak.
Decay of Piety.

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults, we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.

TRANSCRIB'ER, trãns-skri'bũr. n. s. [from transcribe.] A copier; one who writes from a copy.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.

Writings have been corrupted by little and little,
by unskilful transcribers. Waterland.

TR'ANSCRIPT, trãns'skript. n. s. [transcript, French; transcriptum, Lat.] A copy; any thing written from an original.

The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.

The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South.

Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen
Of cities and of courts, of books and men,
And deign to let thy servant hold the pen.
Through ages thus I may presume to live.
And from the transcript of thy prose receive
What my own short-liv'd verse can never give.

TR'ANSCRIPTION, trãns-skrip'shũn. n. s.

[transcription, Fr. from transcriptus,
Latin.] The act of copying.

The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in their's: pla-giary had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown.

The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference.
Brerewood.

TR'ANSCRIP'TIVELY, trãns-skrip'tiv-lê. adv.

[from transcript.] In manner of a copy.

Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other men's endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.

To TRANSCU'R, trãns-kũr'. v. n. [trans-curro, Latin.] To run or rove to and fro.

By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spa-tiate and transcur. Bacon.

TR'ANSCU'RSION, trãns-kũr'shũn. n. s. [from transcurus, Latin.] Ramble; passage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.

In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcur-sion throughout the whole. Bacon.

I have briefly run over transcurisions, as if my pen had been posting with them. Walton.

His philosophy gives them transcurisions beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis.

I am to make often transcurisions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Howel.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcurision of comets? Merc.

TRANSE, trãnsê. n. s. [transe, French. See TRANÇE.] A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.

Abstract as in a transe, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.

TRANSELEMENTA'TION, trãns-êl-ê-mên-tã'-shùn. n. s. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.

Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy nor St. Peter's. Burnet.

TRANSEXION, trãns-sék'shùn. n. s. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.

It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hæres, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transfeminated persons were really men at first. Brown.

TO TRANSFER, trãns-fêr'. v. a. [transferer, French; transfero, Latin.]

1. To convey, to make over from one to another: with to, sometimes with upon.

He that transfers the laws of the Lacedæmonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser.

Was 't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right,
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.

The king,
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.

This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forgot from whence that ease came, and transferr'd all the honour of it upon themselves. Atterbury.

Your sacred aid religious monarchs own,
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree
Transfer the power, and set the people free. Prior.

By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

2. To remove; to transport.

The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon.

He thirty rolling years the crown shall wear,
Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer. Dryden.

TRANSFÈR, trãns-fêr'. n. s. A change of property; a delivery of property to another.

TRANSFÈRRER, trãns-fêr'ûr. n. s. He that transfers.

TRANSFIGURA'TION, trãns-fîg-û-rã'shùn. n. s. [transfiguration, French.]

1. Change of form.

In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown.

2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.

It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and agony in the garden. Adison.

Did Raphael's pencil ever chuse to fall?
Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.

TO TRANSFIGURE, trãns-fîg'yûre. v. a. [transfigurur, Fr. trans and figura,

Latin.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.

The nuptial right his outrage strait attends,
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

TO TRANSFIX, trãns-fîks'. v. a. [transfixus, Latin.] To pierce through.

Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd;
The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd
With son's own blade, her foul reproaches spoke. Spenser.

With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton.

In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart. Dryden.

Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize,
Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryd.
Till fate shall with a single dart
Transfix the pair it cannot part. Fenton.

TO TRANSFORM, trãns-fôrm'. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Latin.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.

She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every body. Sidney.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a hoy. Shakspeare.

As is the fable of the lady fair,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirsty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd she wist not how. Davies.

TO TRANSFORM, trãns-fôrm'. v. n. To be metamorphosed.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

TRANSFORMA'TION, trãns-fôr-mã'shùn. n. s. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form; metamorphosis.

Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man Resembles that it was. Shakspeare.

What beast could 'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast?

—And what a beast art thou already, and seest not thy loss in transformation! Shakspeare.

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

TRANSFRETATION, trãns-frê-tã'shùn. n. s. [trans and fretum, Lat.] Passage over the sea.

Since the last transfretation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Davies.

TO TRANSFUSE, trãns-fûze'. v. a. [transfusus, Latin.] To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherewith the excellency of his kind doth most consist. Hooker.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. Milton.
When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,

As thou whose Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine?

But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,
His always floats above, thine sinks below. Dryden.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away, and sound juices immediately transfus'd, the sound juices would grow morbid. Arbutnot.

TRANSFU'SION, trãns-fû'zhùn. n. s. [transfusion, Fr. transfusio, Lat.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Boyle.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum. Denham.

Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, but the sense will remain. Dryd.

What noise have we had about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood! Baker.

TO TRANSGRE'SS, trãns-grê's'. v. a. [transgresser, Fr. transgressus, Latin.]

1. To pass over; to pass beyond.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law. Dryden.

2. To violate; to break.

Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker.

This sorrow we must repeat as often as we transgress the divine commandments. Wake.

TO TRANSGRE'SS, trãns-grê's'. v. n. To offend by violating a law.

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he transgressed. Shakspeare.

Achan transgressed in the thing accused. 1 Chronicles.

He upbraided us with our offending the law, and objecteth to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Wisdom.

TRANSGRE'SSION, trãns-grêsh'ùn. n. s. [transgression, Fr. from transgress.]

1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.

Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: so requite Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin? Milton.

All accusation still is founded upon some law; for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South.

2. Offence; crime; fault.

What 's his fault?
—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's-nest, shews it his companion, and he steals it.

—Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakspeare.

Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression,

Some fair excuse. Shakspeare.

TRANSGRE'SSIVE, trãns-grê's'siv. adj. [from transgress.] Faulty; culpable; apt to break laws.

Though permitted unto his proper principles, Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.

TRANSGRE'SSOR, trãns-grê's'sûr. n. s. [transgressur, Fr. from transgress.]

Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.

He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid transgressors, as well as to the punishment of meaner offenders. Clarendon.

I go to judge
On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton.

All worthy I, such title should belong
To me transgressor! who for thee ordain'd
A help, became thy snare. Milton.

TRANSIENT, trăn'shê-ênt.²⁴² adj. [transiens, Lat.] Soon past; soon passing; short; momentary; not lasting; not durable.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie. Locke.

Love, hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er held possession in his breast. Swift.

What is loose love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.

TRANSIENTLY, trăn'shê-ênt-lê. adv. [from transient.] In passage; with a short passage; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer. Dryden.

TRANSIENTNESS, trăn'shê-ênt-nês. n. s. [from transient.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort, as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

TRANSILIENCY, trăn-sil'yên-sê. } n. s.
TRANSILIENCY, trăn-sil'yên-sê.¹¹³ } [from transilio, Latin.] Leap from thing to thing.

By an unadvised transiliency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Glanville.

TRANSIT, trăn'sit. n. s. [transitus, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixt star; or of the moon covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.

TRANSITION, trăn-sizh'ûn, or trăn-sish'ûn.²⁹ n. s. [transitio, Latin.]

1. Removal; passage from one to another. Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not. Bacon.

As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man. Brown.

I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.

2. Change; mode of change. The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

As once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.

3. [transition, French.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes.

Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.

TRANSITIVE, trăn'sê-tiv. adj. [transitivus, Latin.]

1. Having the power of passing. One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies; for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent, as well as heat. Bacon.

2. In grammar. A verb transitive is that which signifies an action, conceived as having an effect upon some object; as ferio terram, I strike the earth. Clarke.

TRANSITORILY, trăn'sê-tûr-ê-lê. adv. [from transitory.] With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.

TRANSITORINESS, trăn'sê-tûr-ê-nês. n. s. [from transitory.] Speedy evanescence.

TRANSITORY, trăn'sê-tûr-ê.⁵⁶⁷ adj. [transitoire, Fr. transitorius, from transire, Lat.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.

O Lord, comfort and succour all them who in this transitory life are in trouble. Common Prayer.

If we love things have sought; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing:
If transitory things, which soon decay,
Age must be loveliest at the latest day. Donne.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

TO TRANSLATE, trăn-slâ'tê. v. n. [translatum, Latin.]

1. To transport; to remove. Since our father is translated unto the Gods, our will is, that they that are in our realm live quietly. 2 Maccabees.

By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. Hebrews.

Those argent fields
Translated saints or middle spirits hold. Milton.

Of the same soil their nursery prepare
With that of their plantation, lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.

The gods their shapes to winter birds translate,
But both obnoxious to their former fate. Dryden.

To go to heaven is to be translated to that kingdom you have longed for; to enjoy the glories of eternity. Wake.

2. It is particularly used of the removal of a bishop from one see to another.

Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick to a better, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife, with whom he had so long lived. Camden.

3. To transfer from one to another; to convey.

I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David. 2 Samuel.

Lucien affirms the souls of usurers, after their death, to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, there to remain for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides with the cudgel and spur. Peucham.

As there are apoplexies from inveterate gout, the regimen must be to translate the morbidick matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbuthnot.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

4. To change. One do I personate of Timon's frame, Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants Translates his rivals. Shakspeare.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakspeare.

5. [translater, old French.] To interpret in another language; to change into another language retaining the sense.

I can construe the action of her familiar stile, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be englished right, is, I am sir John Falstaff's.

—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of honesty into English. Shakspeare.

Nor word for word too faithfully translate. Roscommon.

Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown. Swift.

Were it meant that in despite
Of art and nature such dull clods should write,
Bavius and Mævius had been sav'd by fate
For Settle and for Shadvell to translate. Duke.

6. To explain. A low colloquial use. There 's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakspeare.

TRANSLATION, trăn-slâ'shûn. n. s. [translatio, Lat. translation, Fr.]

1. Removal; act of removing. His disease was an asthma; the cause a metastasis or translation of humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

Translations of morbidick matter arise in acute distempers. Arbuthnot.

2. The removal of a bishop to another see. If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

The king, the next time the bishop of London came to him, entertained him with this compellation, My lord's grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave order for all the necessary forms for the translation. Clarendon.

3. The act of turning into another language; interpretation.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with translation into many languages. Brown.

Nor ought a genius less than his that writ,
Attempt translation; for transplanted wit
All the defects of air and soil doth share,
And colder brains like colder climates are. Denham.

4. Something made by translation; version. Of translations, the better I acknowledge that which cometh nearer to the very letter of the very original verity. Hooker.

TRANSLATIVE, trăn-slâ'tiv. adj. [translativus, Lat.] Taken from others.

TRANSLATOR, trăn-slâ'tûr.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [translatur, old Fr. from translate.] One that turns any thing into another language

A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too. Denham.

No translation our own country ever yet produced, hath come up to that of the Old and New Testament; and I am persuaded, that the translators of the bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole. Swift.

TRANSLATORY, trăn-slâ'tûr-ê.⁶¹² n. s. [from translate.] Transferring.

The translatory is a lie that transfers the merits of a man's good action to another more deserving. Arbuthnot.

TRANSLOCATION, trăn-lô-kâ'shûn. n. s. [trans and locus, Latin.] Removal of things reciprocally to each other's places.

There happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable stances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translocation of metals in some springs. Woodward.

TRANSLUCENCY, trãns-lù'sên-sé. n. s. [from translucent.] Diaphaneity; transparency.

Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translucency for whiteness, the ignition and extinction having cracked each lump into a multitude of minute bodies. Boyle.

TRANSLUCENT, trãns-lù'sên-t. } adj.
TRANSLUCID, trãns-lù'sid. }

[trans and lucens, or lucidus, Latin.]

Transparent; diaphanous; clear; giving a passage to the light.

In anger the spirits ascend and wax eager; which is seen in the eyes, because they are translucid. Bacon.

Wherever fountain or fresh current flow'd
Against the eastern ray, translucent, pure,
With touch æthereal of heav'n's fiery rod,
I drank. Milton.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool translucent springs. Pope.

TRANSMARINE, trãns-mã-réén'. adj.
[transmarinus, Latin.] Lying on the other side of the sea; found beyond sea.

She might have made herself mistress of Timaurania, her next transmarine neighbour. Howel.

TRANSMUEW, trãns-mù'. v. a. [transmuto, Latin; transmuer, Fr.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose; to change. Obsolete.

When him list the rascal routs appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all. Spens.

TRANSMIGRANT, trãns-mé-grãnt. adj.
[transmigrans, Latin.] Passing into another country or state.

Besides an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts, there are other implicit confederations, that of colonies or transmigrants towards their mother nation. Bacon.

TRANSMIGRATE, trãns-mé-grãte. v. n.
[transmigro, Latin.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintained by generation; so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commixture. Brown.

If Pythagoras's transanimation were true, that the souls of men transmigrate into species answering their former natures, some men must live over many serpents. Brown.

Their souls may transmigrate into each other. Howel.

Regard
The port of Luna, says our learned bard:
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his soul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll. Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION, trãns-mé-grãshùn. n. s.
[transmigration, French; from transmigrare.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either substance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another. Hooker.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species. Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown.

Easing their passage hence, for intercourse
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead. Milton.

'Twas taught by wise Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass:
Seeing such transmigration there,
She thought it not a fable here. Denham.

When thou wert form'd heaven did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was shuffled in:
In woods and wilds thy monarchy maintain,
Where valiant beasts by force and rapine reign,
In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee. Dryden.

TRANSMISSION, trãns-mish'ùn. n. s. [transmission, Fr. transmissus, Lat.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

If there were any such notable transmission of a colony hither out of Spain, the very chronicles of Spain would not have omitted so memorable a thing. Spenser.

Operations by transmission of spirits is one of the highest secrets in nature. Bacon.

In the transmission of the sea-water into the pits, the water riseth; but in the transmission of the water through the vessels, it falleth. Bacon.

These move swiftly; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

The uvea has a muscous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil, for the better moderating the transmission of light. More.

Languages of countries are lost by transmission of colonies of a different language. Hale.

This enquiry will be of use, as a parallel discovery of the transmission of the English laws into Scotland. Hale.

Their reflexion or transmission depends on the constitution of the air and water behind the glass, and not the striking of the rays upon the parts of the glass. Newton.

TRANSMISSIVE, trãns-mis'siv. adj. [from transmissus, Lat.] Transmitted; derived from one to another.

And still the sire inculcates to his son
Transmissive lessons of the king's renown.
Itself a sun: it with transmissive light Enlivens worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise Historic marbles to record his praise;
His praise eternal on the faithful stone,
Had with transmissive honour grac'd his son. Pope.

TRANSMIT, trãns-mít'. v. a. [transmitto, Lat. transmettre, Fr.] To send from one person or place to another.

By means of writing, former ages transmit the memorials of ancient times and things to posterity. Hale.

He sent orders to his friend in Spain to sell his estate, and transmit the money to him. Addison.

Thus flourish'd love, and beauty reign'd in state,
Till the proud Spaniard gave this glory's date:
Past is the gallantry, the fame remains,
Transmitted safe in Dryden's lofty scenes. Granv.

Shine forth, ye planets, with distinguish'd light;
Again transmit your friendly beams to earth,
As when Britannia joy'd for Anna's birth. Prior.

TRANSMITTAL, trãns-mít'tãl. n. s. [from transmit.] The act of transmitting; transmission. I know not that this word has any authority.

Besides the transmittal to England of two-thirds of the revenues of Ireland, they make our country a receptacle for their supernumerary pretenders to offices. Swift.

TRANSMITTER, trãns-mít'túr. n. s. [from transmit.] One that transmits.

TRANSMUTABLE, trãns-mù'tã-bl. adj.
[transmutable, Fr. from transmutare.] Capable of change; possible to be changed into another nature or substance.

It is no easy matter to demonstrate that air is so much as convertible into water; how transmutable it is unto flesh may be of deeper doubt. Brown.

The fluids and solids of an animal body are easily transmutable into one another. Arbuthnot.

TRANSMUTABLY, trãns-mù'tã-blé. adv.
[from transmute.] With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTATION, trãns-mù'tã'shùn. n. s.
[transmutation, Fr. transmutatio, from transmutare, Latin.]

1. Change into another nature or substance. The great aim of alchemy is the transmutation of base metals into gold.

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bearherd? Shakspeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another is inter magnalia nature, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgæ philosophy, pronounced impossible; but seeing there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out. Bacon.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before, as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, transmutation. Bacon.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutations. Water, which is a very fluid tasteless salt, she changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, fusible stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and vapour returns into water by cold. Newton.

The supposed change of worms into flies is no real transmutation; but most of those members, which at last become visible to the eye, are existent at the beginning, artificially complicated together. Bentley.

2. Successive change. Not proper. The same land suffereth sundry transmutations of owners within one term. Bacon.

TRANSMUTE, trãns-mù'té'. v. n. [transmuto, Lat. transmuer, Fr.] To change from one nature or substance to another.

Suidas thinks, that by the golden fleece was meant a golden book of parchment, which is of sheep's-skin, and therefore called golden, because it was taught therein how other metals might be transmuted. Ralegh.

That metals may be transmuted one into another, I am not satisfied of the fact. Ray.

TRANSMUTER, trãns-mù'túr. n. s. [from transmute.] One that transmutes

TRANSOM, trãns'sòm. n. s. [transenna, Latin.]

1. A thwart beam or lintel over a door.

2. [Among mathematicians.] The vane of an instrument called a cross-staff, being a piece of wood fixed across with a square socket upon which it slides. Bailey.

TRANSPARENCY, trãns-pã'rên-sé. n. s.
[transparence, Fr. from transparent.] Clearness; diaphaneity; transucency; power of transmitting light.

A poet of another nation would not have dwelt so long upon the clearness and transparency of the stream; but in Italy one seldom sees a river that is extremely bright and limpid, most of them being muddy. Addison.

Another cause is the greater transparency of the vessels, occasioned by the thinness and delicacy of their coats. Arbuthnot.

TRANSPARENT, trãns-pã'rênt. adj.

[transparent, French; trans and apstareo, Latin.] Pervious to the light; clear; pellucid; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep. Shaksp.

Wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye;
for there be many wise men that have secret hearts and transparent countenances. Bacon.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a chrysal case the figur'd hours are seen;

And heav'n did this transparent veil provide,
Because she had no guilty thought to hide. Dryden.

Her bosom appeared all of chrysal, and so wonderfully transparent, that I saw every thought in her heart. Addison.

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
Their fluid bodies half dissolv'd in light. Pope.

TRANSPICUOUS, trãns-pik'û-ûs. adj. [trans and specio, Latin.] Transparent; pervious to the sight.

What if that light,
Sent from her through the wide transpicuous air,
To the terrestrial moon be as a star? Milton.

Now thy wine's transpicuous, purg'd from all
Its earthly gross, yet let it feed awhile
On the fat refuse. Philips.

Saint David's into a warmer climate. Clarendon.

TRANSPANTA'TION, trãns-plãnt-tã'shûn.
n. s. [transplantation, French.]

1. The act of transplanting or removing to another soil.

It is confessed, that love changed often doth nothing; nay, it is nothing; for love, where it is kept fixed to its first object, though it burn not, yet it warms and cherishes, so as it needs no transplantation, or change of soil, to make it fruitful.
Suckling.

2. Conveyance from one to another.

What noise have we had for some years about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood!
Baker.

3. Removal of men from one country to another.

Most of kingdoms have thoroughly felt the calamities of forcible transplantations, being either over-whelm'd by new colonies that fell upon them, or driven, as one wave is driven by another, to seek new seats, having lost their own. Raleigh.

This appears a replication to what Menelaus had offer'd concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Broome.

TRANSPLA'NTER, trãns-plãnt'ûr. n. s. [from

Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash. Shakespeare.

Look what a wardrobe here is for thee?
—Let it alone, thou fool, it is but trash. Shakespeare.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something,
nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands.
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare.

More than ten Hollensheds, or Halls, or Stows,
Of trivial household trash he knows; he knows
When the queen frown'd or smil'd. Donne.

The collectors only consider, the greater fame a writer is in possession of, the more trash he may bear to have tacked to him. Swift.

Weak foolish man! will heaven reward us there
With the same trash mad mortals wish for here? Pope.

2. A worthless person.

I suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakespeare.

To procure easy travails of women, the intention is to bring down the child, but not too fast. Bacon.

TRAVE, trâve. } n. s. A wooden frame

TRA'VEL, trâv'il. } for shoeing unruly

TRA'VISE, trâv'is. } horses. Ainsworth.

To TRA'VEL, trâv'il.⁹⁹ v. n. [This word is generally supposed originally the same with travail, and to differ only as particular from general: in some writers

the word is written alike in all its senses;
but it is more convenient to write travail for labour, and travel for journey.]

1. To make journeys: it is used for sea as well as land, though sometimes we distinguish it from voyage, a word appropriated to the sea.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle.
Shakspeare.

In the forest shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedanim. Isaiah.

Raphael deign'd to travel with Tobias. Milton.

Fain would I travel to some foreign shore,
So might I to myself myself restore. Dryden.

If others believed he was an Egyptian from his knowledge of their rites, it proves at least that he travelled there. Pope.

2. To pass; to go; to move.

By th' clock 'tis day;
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp.

Shakspeare.

Time travels in divers places with divers persons;
I'll tell you who time ambles withal, who time trots withal. Shakspeare.

Thus flying east and west, and north and south,
News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth.
Pope.

3. To make journeys of curiosity.

Nothing tends so much to enlarge the mind as travelling, that is, making a visit to other towns, cities, or countries, beside those in which we were born and educated. Watts

4. To labour; to toil. This should be rather travail.

If we labour to maintain truth and reason, let not any think that we travel about a matter not needful. Hooker.

To TRA'VEL, trâv'il. v. a.

1. To pass; to journey over.

Thither to arrive,

I travel this profound. Milton.

2. To force to journey.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be charged with garrisons, and they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser

TRA'VEL, trâv'il. n. s. [travail, Fr. from the noun.]

1. Journey; act of passing from place to place.

Love had cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court,
Three miles he went, not farther could retreat,
His travels ended at his country-seat. Dryden.

Mingled send into the dance
Moments fraught with all the treasures
Which thy eastern travel views. Prior.

2. Journey of curiosity or instruction.

Let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth. Shakspeare.

Travel in the younger sort is a part of education:
in the elder, a part of experience. Bacon.

In my travels I had been near their setting out in Thessaly, and at the place of their landing in Carniola. Brown.

A man not enlightened by travel or reflexion, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred. Addison.

3. Labour; toil. This should be travail:
as in Daniel.

He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory. Daniel.

What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travel difficult? Milton.

4. Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.

Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travel to requite. Dryden.

5. TRAVELS. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with the translation of many languages. Brown.

Histories engage the soul by sensible occurrences;
as also voyages, travels, and accounts of countries.
Watts.

TRA'VELLER, trâv'il-êr.²⁰⁸ n. s. [travailleur, Fr. from travel.]

1. One who goes a journey; a wayfarer.

The weary traveller wand'ring that way,
Therein did often quench his thirsty heat. Spenser.

At the olive roote
They drew them then in heape, most far from foote
Of any traveller. Chapman.

A little ease to these my torments give,
Before I go where all in silence mourn,
From whose dark shores no travellers return.

Sandys

This was a common opinion among the gentiles, that the gods sometimes assumed human shape, and conversed upon earth with strangers and travellers. Bentley.

If a poor traveller tells her, that he has neither strength, nor food, nor money left, she never bids him go to the place from whence he came. Law.

2. One who visits foreign countries.

Farewel, monsieur traveller; look you lisp and wear strange suits, and disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakspeare.

These travellers for cloaths, or for a meal,
At all adventures, any lye will tell. Chapman.

The traveller into a foreign country knows more by the eye, than he that stayeth at home can by relation of the traveller. Bacon.

They are travellers newly arrived in a strange country, we should therefore not mislead them.
Locke.

TRA'VELTAINTED, trâv'il-tânt-êd. adj.

[travel and tainted.] Harassed; fatigated with travel.

I have founded nine score and odd posts: and here, traveltainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken sir John Coleville.

Shakspeare

TRA'VERS, trâvêrse. adv. [French.]

Athwart; across. Not used.

if there be a mother from whom the whole lineage descended, there is a traverse placed in a loft where she sitteth. Bacon.

2. Something that thwarts, crosses, or obstructs; cross accident; thwarting obstacle. This a sense rather French than English.

A just and lively picture of human nature in its actions, passions, and traverses of fortune. Dryden.

He sees no defect in himself, but is satisfied that he should have carried on his designs well enough, had it not been for unlucky traverses not in his power. Locke.

To TRA'VERSE, trâvêrse. v. a. [traverser, French. It was anciently accented on the last syllable.]

With twenty trenched gashes on his head. Shakspeare.

This weak impress of love is as a figure

Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat

Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. Shakspeare.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring. Evelyn.

First draw thy faulchion, and on ev'ry side

Trench the black earth a cubit long and wide. Pope.

The trenching plough or coulter is useful in pasture-ground, to cut out the sides of trenches or drains. Mortimer.

3. To fortify by earth thrown up.

Pioneers with spades and pickax arm'd,

Forerun the royal camp to trench a field. Milton.

TRENCH, trénsh. n. s. [tranche, Fr.]

1. A pit or ditch.

On that coast build,

And with a trench enclose the fruitful field. Dryden.

When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level. Mortimer.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth

And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle;

I saw our party to the trenches driven,

And then I came away. Shakspeare.

William carries on the trench,
Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.
TRENCHANT, trèn'shânt. adj. [trenchant,
Fr.] Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took the trenchant blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,
That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand. Spenser.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRENOHER, trèn'shûr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from trench;
trenchoir, French.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more
I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakespeare.

My estate deserves an heir more rais'd
Than one which holds a trencher. Shakespeare.

When we find our dogs, we set the dish or trencher
on the ground. More.

Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryden.

Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

2. The table.

How often hast thou,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board
When I have feasted! Shakespeare.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenuous education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South.

TRENCHERFLY, trèn'shûr-flî. n. s. [trencher and fly.] One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencherflies and spungers. L'Estrange.

TRENCHERMAN, trèn'shûr-mân.⁹⁸ n. s.
[trencher and man.]

1. A cook. Obsolete.

Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skilfullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.

2. A feeder; an eater.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakespeare.

TRENCHERMATE, trèn'shûr-mâte. n. s.
[trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker.

To TREND, trênd. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.

TRENDLE, trênd'l.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [trêndel, Sax.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TRENTALS, trênt'âlz. n. s. [trente, Fr.]

Trentals or trigintals were a number of masses, to the tale of thirty, said on the same account, according to a certain order instituted by St. Gregory. Ayliffe.

TREPA'N, trê-pân'. n. s. [trepan, Fr.]

1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great show of friendship, into Trafani, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
How very active in his own trepan! Roscommon.
Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks and *trepan*s? South.

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South.

To TREPA'N, trê-pân'. v. a. [from the noun;
trepaner, French.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone. Wiseman.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned.
Arbuthnot.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepann'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern,
being invested with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

TREPHE'NE, trê-fine'. n. s. A small trepan;
a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I shewed a trepan and trepheine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wiseman.

TREPIDA'TION, trêp-ê-dâ'shûn. n. s. [tre-pidatio, Latin.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.
The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in continual trepidation. Bacon.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirit, to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;
But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent. Donne.

They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd,
And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd, and that first mov'd. Milton.

2. State of terrour.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Wolton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Le-panto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Wolton.

3. Hurry; confused haste.

To TRE'SPASS, trê's'pâs. v. n. [trespasser,
French.]

1. To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespass which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant.
Leviticus.

They not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logic. Norris.

2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and œconomy
Most perfectly they made agree:
Each virtue kept its proper bound,
Nor trespass'd on the other's ground. Prior.

TRE'SPASS, trê's'pâs. n. s. [trespas, Fr.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest and the meanest wretches
For pilf'rings, and most common trespass, Are punish'd with. Shakespeare.

Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass? Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.
TRE'SPASSER, trê's'pâs-sûr. n. s. [from trespass.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.
2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.

If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trespasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me. Walton.

TRE'SSED, trê's'sêd. adj. [from tresse, Fr.]
Knotted or curled.

Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,
But for the lad, whom long I lov'd so dear,
Now loves a lass that all his love doth scorn,
He plunged in pain his tressed locks doth tear. Spenser.

TRE'SSES, trê's'sîz.⁹⁹ n. s. without a singular. [tresse, Fr. treccia, Italian.] A knot or curl of hair.

Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky! Shakespeare.

Her swelling breast
Naked, met his under the flowing gold
Of her loose tresses hid. Milton.

Adam had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn
Her tresses, and her rural labours crown. Milton.

Fair tresses man's imperial race ensnare,
And beauty draws us with a single hair. Pope.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!
Not all the tresses that fair hair can boast Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost. Pope.

TRE'STLE, trê's'sl.⁴⁷² n. s. [treteau, Fr.]

1. The frame of a table.
2. A moveable form by which any thing is supported.

TRET, trêt. n. s. [probably from tritius, Latin.] An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for waste or refuse of a commodity. Barley.

TRE'THINGS, trê'thîngz. n. s. [trethingi, low Latin, from trethu, Welsh, to tax] Taxes; imposts.

TRE'VET, trêv'it.⁹⁹ n. s. [δριεπετ, Sax. trepied, Fr.] Any thing that stands on three legs: as, a stool.

TREY, trà. n. s. [tres, Lat. trois, Fr.] A three at cards.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, milk, and sugar; there is three.
—Nay then, two treys; metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakespeare.

TRI'ABLE, tri'â-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.

For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.
No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.

TRI'AD, trî'ád.⁸³ n. s. [trias, Latin; triade, Fr.] Three united.

TRI'AL, trî'ál.⁸⁵ n. s. [from try.]

1. Test; examination.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will hack descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.

2. Experiment; act of examining by experience.

I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation. Shakespeare.

Skilful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Bacon.

There is a mixed kind of evidence relating both to the senses and understanding, depending upon our own observation and repeated trials of the issues and events of actions or things, called experience. Wilkins.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Hebrews.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself. Cowell.

He hath resisted law
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power. Shakespeare.

A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials hetwixt rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit. Kettwell.

They shall come upon their trial, have all their actions strictly examined. Nelson.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Lest our trial, when least sought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go. Milton.

No such company as them thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou couldst judge of fit and meet. Milton.

Every station is expos'd to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare.

TRI'ANGLE, trî'áng-gl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.

TRI'ANGULAR, trî'áng-gù-lár. adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are. Spenser.

Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray.

TRIBE, tribe. n. s. [tribus, Latin, from treu, British; b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words: treu from tir ef, his lands, is supposed by Rowland to be Celúick, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government. This notion will not be much recommended, when it is told, that he derives centuria from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred treus or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election. Ben Jonson.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the misled multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount? Milton.

Teach straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.

Folly and vice are easy to describe,
The common subjects of our scribbling tribe. Roscommon.

TRI'BLET OF TRIBO'ULET, trib'lit. n. s. A goldsmith's tool for making rings. Ainsworth.

TRIBULA'TION, trib-ù-lá'shún. n. s. [tribulation, Fr.] Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear. Hooker.

The just shall dwell,
And, after all their tribulations long,
See golden days fruitful of golden deeds. Milton.

Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
Try'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith, and faithful works. Milton.

Our church taught us to pray, that God would, not only in the time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us. Atterbury.

TRIBU'NAL, tri-bù'nál.¹¹⁹ n. s. [tribunal, Latin and French.]

1. The seat of a judge.

I th' market place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publickly enthron'd. Shakespeare.

He sees the room
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave, on high tribunals frown. Waller.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just. Grew.

He, who for our sakes stood before an earthly tribunal, might therefore he constituted judge of the whole world. Nelson.

2. A court of justice.

Summoning arch-angels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton.

TRIBUNE, trib'úne. n. s. [tribun, tribunus, Latin.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.
These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise them. Shakespeare.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.

TRIBUNI'TIAL, trib-ù-nish'ál. } adj. [tribunitialis, Latin.] Suiting a tribune; relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitial manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors!

Beneath the kings and tribunital powers,
One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden.
TRI'BUSARY, trib'ù-tá-rè. adj. [tributaire, French; tributarius, Latin.]

1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgment of submission to a master.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly sway'd. Spenser.

Whilst Malvern, king of hills, fair Severn overlooks, Attended on in state with tributary brooks. Drayton.

The two great empires of the world I know;
And since the earth none larger does afford,
This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.

Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.

2. Subject; subordinate.

These lie, to grace his tributary gods,
By course commits to several government,
And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents. Milton.

O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
Legions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill
Insult the master's tributary will. Prior.

3. Paid in tribute.

Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays. Concanen.

TRI'BUSARY, trib'ù-tá-rè. n. s. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgment of subjection.

All the people therein shall he tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deuteronomy.

The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute are not properly subjects, but sovereigns. Davies.

TRIBUTE, trib'úte. n. s. [tribut, French; tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgment; subjection.

They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute? Matthew.

She receives
As tribute warmth and light. Milton.

To acknowledge this, was all he did exact;
Small tribute, where the will to pay was act. Dryd.

TRICE, trise. n. s. [I believe this word comes from trait, French, corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great a spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good. Spenser.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd trice,
And all the waiters in a trice
His summons did obey:

Each serving man with dish in hand
March'd holdly up like our train'd hand,
Presented, and away. Suckling.

He could raise scruples dark and nice,
And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,
I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
If bless'd with pliant, though but slender sense, Feign'd modesty, and real impudence. Young.

TRICHOTOMY tri-kòt'ò-mè.^{618 119 363} n. s. [τριχοτόμια.] Division into three parts.

Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves: let the subject, with the design you have in view, determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

TRICK, trik. n. s. [treck, Dutch.]

1. A sly fraud.

Sir Thomas More said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast men down. Raleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo. L'Estrange.

Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick. South.

He swore by Styx,
Whate'er she would desire, to grant;
But wise Ardelia knew his tricks. Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest, and leaving the top,
Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop. Tusser.

And now as oft in some distemper'd state,
On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. A vicious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakspeare.
I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsome panegyrics. Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antick; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A rev'rend prelat stopp'd his coach and six,
To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

5. An unexpected effect.

So feldest foes who broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit. Not in use.

I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me, you may. Shakspeare.
The trick of that voice I well remember. Shaksp.

Behold,
Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,
The trick of 's frown, his forehead. Shakspeare.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

To TRICK, trik. v. a. [from the noun; tricker, French.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly, to knot. [Trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence trace. Matt. Westmonasteriensis says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode tricas capitis & crines dissolvens.] And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagenet. Bacon.

Horridly trickt
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakspeare.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest
in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Wotton.

Their heads are trickt with tassels and flowers. Sandys.

Woeful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead:
Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor,
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.
A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.

Love is an airy good opinion makes,
That tricks and dresses up the gaudy dream. Dryd.
People lavish it profusely, in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

3. To perform with a light touch; though it may here mean to dress.

Come, the colours and the ground prepare:
Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;
Chuse a firm cloud before it fall, and in it
Catch ere she change the Cynthia of this minute. Pope.

To TRICK, trik. v. n. To live by fraud.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
And murr'ring plays, which still they call reviving. Dryden.

TRICKER, trik'ur.⁹⁸ n. s. [This is often written trigger; I know not which is right.] The catch which being pulled disengages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.

Pulling aside the tricker we observed, that the force of the spring of the lock was not sensibly abated by the absence of the air. Boyle.

As a goose
In death contracts his talons close;
So did the knight, and with one claw
The tricker of his pistol draw. Hudibras.

TRICKING, trik'ing.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from trick.] Dress; ornament.

Get us properties and tricking for our fairies. Shakspeare.

TRICKISH, trik'ish. adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mischievously subtle.

All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trickish way of reasoning. Pope.

To TRICKLE, trik'kl.⁴⁰⁶ v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.] To fall in drops; to rill in a slender stream.

He, prick'd with pride,
Forth spurred fast; adown his courser's side
The red blood trickling, stain'd the way. Spenser.

Fast beside there trickled softly down
A gentle stream, whose murm'ring wave did play
Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
To lull him soft asleep that by it lay. Spenser.
Some noises help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the spirits a gentle attention, which stilleth the discursive motion. Bacon.

He wakened by the trickling of his blood. Wiseman.

Beneath his ear the fast'ned arrow stood,
And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.

He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fixt upward,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down, and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

The emblems of honour wrought on the front in the brittle materials above-mentioned, trickled away under the first impressions of the heat. Addison.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands, Tuning his voice and balancing his hands:
How fluent nonsense trickles from his tongue!
How sweet the periods, neither said nor sung! Pope.
They empty heads console with empty sound.

No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
The balm of dulness trickling in their ear. Pope.
TRICKSY, trik'sc.⁴⁹⁸ adj. [from trick.] Pretty. This is a word of endearment. Obsolete.

The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,

night
Hath trifled former knowings. Shakspeare.

TRIFLE, tri'fl.⁴⁰⁶ n. s. [from the verb.] A thing of no moment.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deep consequence. Shakspeare.

Old Chaucer doth of Topas tell,
Mad Rabelais of Pantagruel,
A later third of Dowsabell,

With such poor trifles playing:
Others the like have labour'd at,
Some of this thing, and some of that,
And many of them know not what,
But that they must be saying. Drayton.

The infinitely greatest confessed good is neglected to satisfy the successive uneasiness of our desires pursuing trifles. Locke.

Brunetta's wise in actions great and rare,
But scorns on trifles to bestow her care:

Thus ev'ry hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because the occasion is beneath her aim.

Think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year:
And trifles life. Your care to trifles give,
Or you may die before you truly live. Young.

TRIFLER, tri'fl-ûr. n. s. [trifelaar, Dut.]

One who acts with levity; one that talks with folly.

In their trinal triplicity on high.
Spenser.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To sit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside.
Milton.

TRINE, trine. n. s. [trine, Fr. trinus, Lat.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy.
Milton.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-raisd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new-laid works succeed.
Dryd.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs,

Where'er they meet in angles those are trines.
Creech.

To TRINE, trine. v. a. [from the noun.]

To put in a trine aspect.
This advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outridden, though outun;

Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade.
Shaksp.

The old saying is, the third pays for all; the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure.
Shaksp.

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn dash Blends all together; then distinctly trips
From this to that; then quick returning skips
And snatches this again, and pauses there.
Crashaw.

On old Lyæus, or Cyllene boar,
Trip no more in twilight rank;
Though Erymauth your loss deplore,
A better soil shall give ye thanks.
Milton.

She bounded by, and tripp'd so light,
They had not time to take a steady sight.
Dryden.

Stay, nymph, be eried, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe.
Dryden.

Well thou dost to hide from common sight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an errand came.
Dryd.

He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot.

TRIP, trip. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Shaksp.

He stript for wrestling, smears his limbs with oil,
And watehes with a trip his foe to foil.
Dryden.

It was a noble time when trips and Cornish lugs could make a man immortal.
Addison.

2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.

3. A failure; a mistake.

He saw his way, but in so swift a pace,
To chuse the ground might be to lose the race:
They then, who of each trip th' advantage take,
Find but those faults which they want wit to make.
Dryden.

Each seeming trip and each digressive start,
Displays their ease the more, and deep-plann'd art.
Harte.

If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more? If we had double or triple as many, there might be the same suspicion for a greater number without end. Bentley.

To TRIPPLE, trip'pl. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and trippled prayers can express? Hooker.

If these halfpence should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be trippled upon us. Swift.

2. To make threefold.

Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That e'en Corneille might with envy see
Th' alliance of his tripled unity. Dryden.

TRIPLET, trip'lit.⁹⁹ n. s. [from triple.]

1. Three of a kind.

There sit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they swagger, from their garrison;
Such a triple could you tell
Where to find on this side here? Swift.

2. Three verses rhyming together: as,

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march and energy divine. Pope.
Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my hero on the foreign strand,
Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new com-mand. Prior.

I frequently make use of triple rhymes, because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triple a pindarick. Dryden.

TRIPPLICATE, trip'lè-kâte. adj. [from triplex, Latin.] Made thrice as much.

TriPLICATE ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other, which ought to be distinguished from triple. Harris.

Whom doth time trot withal? —He trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a sevennight, time's pace is so hard, that it seems the length of seven years. Shakespeare.

Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends. Dennis.

2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.

TROT, trôt. n. s. [trot, French; from the verb.]

1. The jolting high pace of a horse.

His honesty is not
So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind
Can blow away, or glitt'ring look it blind:
Who rides his sure and even trot,
While the world now rides by, now lags behind.
Herbert.

Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot.
Milton.

The virtuoso's saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot.
Dryden.

2. An old woman, in contempt. I know not whence derived.

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal. Shakspeare.
How now, bold-face! cries an old trot; sirrah,
we eat our own hens, and what you cat you steal.
L'Estrange.

TROTH, tróth. n. s. [trouth, old English;
τροϋθ, Saxon.]

1. Belief; faith; fidelity.

The boy so troubles me;
'Tis past enduring. Shakspeare.

7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty.

An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John.
God looking forth will trouble all his host.
Milton.

Hear how she the ear employs;
Their office is the troubled air to take. Davies.

Seas are troubled when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main.
Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
Must he cast forth. Daniel.

TROUBLER, trúb'bl-úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.

Hear'ns hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace!
Shakspeare.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyrany;
as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-hereticks. Brown.

He knowing well that nation must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of eoin,
Our nation's solid virtue did oppose
To the rich troublers of the world's repose. Waller.

The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Arbuthnot.

TROUBLESOME, trúb'bl-súm. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Hear'n knows
By what hye-paths and indirect crooked ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shaksp.
He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterbury.

Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the troublous wind.
Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did espy,
Their troublous strife they stinted by and hy. Spens.

No other noise, nor people's troublous cries,
As still are wont t' annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Spenser.

As a tall ship tossed in troublous seas
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Spenser.

Then, masters, look to see a troublous world.
Shakspeare.

Only one supply

In four years troublous and expensive reign. Daniel.

place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun at the pomels of their saddles. Ray.

2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.

Pestilential seminaries according to their gross-ness or subtlety, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enecate in two hours. Harvey.

To TRUDGE, trŭdje. v. n. [truggolare, Italian.] To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.

No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore.
Shakspeare.

No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras.

Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.

Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudg'd to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden.

He that will know the truth must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.

TRUE, trŭd. ³³⁹ adj. [τρεορα, τρυπα,
Saxon.]

1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.

Of those he chose the falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast
born;

And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st into the world with thy legs forward.
Shakspeare.

And teach that truth is truest poesy. Cowley.

Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.

5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.

My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakspeare.

So young, and so untender?
—So young my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower.
Shakspeare.

Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears.
Shakspeare.

I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Pericious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd Milton.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscom.

When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it:
all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.

True to the king her principles are found;
Oh that her practice were but half so sound!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.

The truest hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.
True to his charge, the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits; such the pow'r of song. Pope.

6. Honest; not fraudulent.

The thieves have bound the true men: now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shakspeare.

If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely he mew'd up.
Shakspeare.

7. Exact; conformable to a rule.

If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden.

He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.

Tickel's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exactness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbuthnot.

8. Rightful.

They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be horn Barr'd of his right. Milton.

TRUEBORN, trŭd'bŏrn. adj. [true and born.] Having a right by birth to any title.

Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman.

By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His smiles in order set,
And ev'ry cramoie he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.

2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.

Among the rest of all the route,
A passing proper lasse,
A white-hair'd trull of twenty years,
Or nere about there was:
In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hewe;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to viewe. Turberville.

TRULY, trŭd'lĕ. adv. [from true.]

1. According to truth; not false; faithfully; honestly.

They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they lov'd him, and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto. Sidney.

No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behovefully spoken. Hooker.

2. Really; without fallacy.

Wisdom alone is truly fair. Milton.

The male among birds often appears in a crest,
comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a pinnace on the top of the head.
Spectator.

2. A cluster; a plump.

Going a little aside into the wood, where many times before she delighted to walk, her eyes were saluted with a tuft of trees so close set together, as with the shade the moon gave through it, it might breed a fearful kind of devotion to look upon it.
Sidney.

My house is at the tuft of olives hard by. Shaksp.
An island lie

Girt with th' unmeasur'd sea; and is so nie,
That in the midst I saw the smoke arise,
Through tufts of trees. Chapman.

With high woods the hills were crown'd;
With tufts the valleys, and each fountain side
With borders 'long the rivers. Milton.

Under a tuft of shade, that on a green
Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain's side
They sat them down Milton.

To TUFT, tùft. v. a. To adorn with a tuft.
A doubtful word, not authorized by any competent writer.

Sit beneath the shade
Of solemn oaks, that tuft the swelling mounts, Thrown graceful round. Thomson.

TUFTA'FFETY, tùft-tâffè-tè. n. s. [from tufted and taffety.] A villous kind of silk.

His cloaths were strange, tho' coarse, and black,
tho' barc:

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but it was now, so much ground was seen, Become tufttaffety. Donne.

TUFTED, tùft'éd. adj. [from tuft.] Growing in tufts or clusters.

There does a sable cloud
Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
And cast a gleam over this tufted grove. Milton.

Towers and battlements it sees,
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies

The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.
'Midst the desert fruitful fields arise,

That, crown'd with tufted trees and springing corn,
Like verdant isles the sable waste adorn. Pope.

TUFTY, tùft'è. adj. [from tuft.] Adorned with tufts. A word of no authority.

Let me strip thee of thy tufty coat,
Spread thy ambrosial stores. Thomson.

To TUG, tùg. v. a. [teigan, teogan, Sax.]
1. To pull with strength long continued in the utmost exertion; to draw.

No more tug one another thus, nor moit yourselves; receive

Prise equal; conquests crown ye both: the lists to others leave. Chapman.

These two massy pillars

With horrible confusion to and fro
He tugg'd, ne shook, till down they came, and drew Upon all leaves of all that sat on earth
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder.
Milton

Take pains the genuine meaning to explore,
There sweat, there strain, tug the laborious oar.
Roscommon.

2. To pull; to pluck.

Priest, beware thy beard;
I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Shaksp.

There leaving him to his repose,
Secur'd from the pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a song,
And a well tun'd theorbo hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd with a strain. Hudibras.

To TUG, tùg. v. n.

1. To pull; to draw.

The meaner sort will tug lustily at one oar.

There is tugging and pulling this way and that way. Sandys.
Thus galley-slaves tug willing at their oar,
Content to work in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all, if not constrain'd before.
More.

We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work; but if, instead of that, we slacken our arms and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we set out. Addison.

2. To labour; to contend; to struggle.

Cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. Shakspere.
His face is black and full of blood,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugg'd for life. Shakspere.

They long wrestled and strenuously tugg'd for their liberty, with a no less magnanimous than constant pertinacy. Howe.

Go now with some daring drug,
Bait thy disease, and while they tug,
Thou to maintain the cruel strife,
Spend the dear treasure of thy life. Crashaw.

TUG, tùg. n. s. [from the verb.] Pull performed with the utmost effort.

Downward by the feet he drew
The trembling dastard: at the tug he falls,
Vast ruins come along, rent from the smoking walls.
Dryden.

TU'GGER, tùg'gùr.98 n. s. [from tug.] One that tugs or pulls hard.

TUITION, tù-ish'ùn.462 n. s. [tuitio, from tueor, Lat.] Guardianship; superintendent care; care of a guardian or tutor.

A folly for a man of wisdom to put himself under the tuition of a beast. Sidney.

They forcibly endeavour to cast the churches under my care and tuition, into the moulds they have fashioned to their designs. King Charles.

If government depends upon religion, this shews the pestilential design of those that attempt to dis-join the civil and ecclesiastical interests, setting the latter wholly out of the tuition of the former. South.

When so much true life is put into them, freely talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tuition they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction.

Locke.

TU'LIP, tù'lip. n. s. [tulipe, Fr. tulipa,
Lat.] A flower.

The properties of a good tulip are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point.

4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. precoces, or early flowers; medias or middling flowers; and seroties or late flowers.

The early blowing tutips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Miller.
The tutip opens with the rising and shuts with the setting sun. Hakewill.

Why tutips of one colour produce some of another, and, running through all, still escape a blue.
Brown.

TU'LIP TREE, tù'lip-trèe. n. s. A tree.
To TU'MBLE, tùm'bl.406 v. n. [tomber,
Fr. tommelen, Dutch; tombolare, Ital.]

1. To fall; to come suddenly and violently to the ground.

Though the treasure
Of nature's gemins tumble all together,
Answer me. Shakspere.

To stand or walk, to rise or tumble,
As matter and as motion jumble. Prior.
Styphus lifts his stone up the hill; which carried to the top, it immediately tumbles to the bottom.
Addison.

2. To fall in great quantities tumultuously.

When riches come by the course of inheritance and testaments, they come tumbling upon a man.
Bacon.

3. To roll about.

I saw at the bottom of one tree a gentleman bound with many garters hand and foot, so as well he might tumble and toss. Sidney.

Glo'ster stumbled, and in falling struck me
Into the tumbling billows of the main. Shakspere.

4. To play tricks by various librations of the body.

Reform our sense, and teach the men t' obey;
They'll leave their tumbling, if you lead the way.
Rowe.

To TU'MBLE, tùm'bl. v. a.

1. To turn over; to throw about by way of examination.

When it came to the ears of Maximilian, and tumbling it over and over in his thoughts, that he should at one blow be defeated of the marriage of his daughter and his own, he lost all patience.

Bacon.

A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new fermentation, which works them into a finer body. Collier.

They tumbled all their little quivers o'er,
To chuse propitious shafts. Prior.

2. To throw by chance or violence.

The mind often sets itself on work in search of some hidden ideas; though sometimes they are roused and tumbled out of their dark cells into open daylight by some turbulent passions. Locke.

3. To throw down.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To tumble down thy husband and thyself
From top of honour to disgrace's feet? Shakspere.

King Lycurgus, while he fought in vain
His friends to free, was tumbled on the plain.
Dryden.

If a greater force than his holds him fast, or tum-bles him down, he is no longer free. Locke.

TU'MBLE, tùm'bl.406 n. s. [from the verb.]
A fall.

A country-fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree: why, says a passenger, I could have taught you a way to climb, and never hurt yourself with a fall. L'Estrange.

TU'MBLER, tùm'bl-ùr.98 n. s. [from tumble.]

1. One who shows postures by various contortions of body, or feats of activity.

What strange agility and activeness do common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to by exercise! Wilkins.

Nic bounced up with a spring equal to that of the nimblest tumblers or rope-dancers. Arbutnot.

Never by tumbler thro' the hoops was shown Such skill in passing all, and touching none. Pope.

2. A large drinking glass.

TUMMBREL, tùm'bril.⁶⁹ n. s. [tombereau, Fr.] A dungcart.

Twifallow once ended, get tumbrel and man,
And compass that fallow as soon as ye can. Tusser.

My corps is in a tumbrel laid, among
The filth and ordure, and inclos'd with dung;

That cart arrest, and raise a common cry,
For sacred hunger of my gold I die. Dryden.

What shall I do with this beastly tumbrel? go lie down and sleep, you sot. Congreve.

He sometimes rode in an open tumbrel. Tatler.

TUMEFAC'TION, tù-mè-fak'shùn. n. s. [tumefactio, Lat.] Swelling.

The common signs and effects of weak fibres, are paleness, a weak pulse, tumefactions in the whole body. Arbutnot.

To TUMEFY, tù'mè-fi.⁴⁶² v. a. [tumefacio, Lat.] To swell; to make to swell.

I applied three small causticks triangular about the tumefied joint. Wiseman.

A consumption actually begun is when some parts of the lungs are knotted and tumefied. Blackmore.

A fleshy excrescence, exceeding hard and tumefied, supposed to demand extirpation. Sharp.

TUMID, tù'mid.⁴⁶² adj. [tumidus, Lat.]

1. Swelling; puffed up.

2. Protuberant; raised above the level.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep, Capacious bed of waters. Milton.

3. Pompous; boastful; puffy; falsely sublime

Though such expressions may seem tumid and aspiring; yet cannot I scruple to use seeming hyperboles in mentioning felicities, which make the highest hyperboles but seeming ones. Boyle.

TUMOROUS, tù'mùr-ùs.⁴⁶² adj. [from tumour.]

1. Swelling; protuberant.

Who ever saw any cypress or pine, small below and above, and tumorous in the middle, unless some diseased plant? Wotton.

2. Fastuous; vainly pompous; falsely magnificent.

According to their subject, these stiles vary; for that which is high and lofty, declaring excellent matter, becomes vast and tumorous, speaking of petty and inferior things. Ben Jonson.

His limbs were rather sturdy than dainty, sublime and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures.

Wotton.

TUMOUR, tù'mùr.^{314 462} n. s. [tumor, Latin.]

1. A morbid swelling.

Tumour is a disease, in which the parts recede from their natural state by an undue increase of their bigness. Wiseman.

Having dissected this swelling vice, and seen what it is that feeds the tumour, if the disease be founded in pride, the abating that is the most natural remedy. Government of the Tongue.

The formation of knots and tumours in any part of the body, external or internal, that degenerate at length into an ulcer, arise from this, that some parts of the blood becoming by their size of figure disproportioned to the small winding channels of the glands, cannot freely slip through. Blackmore.

2. Affected pomp; false magnificence; puffy grandeur; swelling mien; unsubstantial greatness.

His stile was rich of phrase, but seldom in bold metaphors; and so far from the tumour, that it rather wants a little elevation. Wotton.

It is not the power of tumour and bold looks upon the passions of the multitude. L'Estrange.

To TUMP, tump. v. a. [among gardeners.]
To fence trees about with earth.

To TUMULATE, tù'mù-làte.⁴⁶² v. n. [tumulo, Lat.] To swell. This seems to be the sense here, but I suspect the word to be wrong.

Urinous spirits, or volatile alkalis, are such enemies to acid, that as soon as they are put together, they tumulate and grow hot, and continue to fight till they have disarmed or mortified each other.

Boyle.

TUMULO'SE, tù'mù-lòse.⁴⁶² adj. [tumulosus, Lat.] Full of hills. Bailey.

TUMULO'SITY, tù-mù-lòs'sè-tè. n. s. [tumulus, Lat.] Hilliness. Bailey.

TUMULT, tù'mùlt.⁴⁶² n. s. [tumulte, Fr. tumultus, Latin.]

1. A promiscuous commotion in a multitude.

A tumult is improved into a rebellion, and a government overturned by it. L'Estrange.

With ireful taunts each other they oppose,
Till in loud tumult all the Greeks arose. Pope.

2. A multitude put into wild commotion.

3. A stir; an irregular violence; a wild commotion.

What stir is this; what tumults in the heav'ns?
Whence cometh this alarum and this noise? Shaksp.

Tumult and confusion, all embroil'd. Milton.

This piece of poetry, what can be nobler than the idea it gives us of the Supreme Being thus raising a tumult among the elements, and recovering them out of their confusion, thus troubling and becalming nature? Spectator.

TUMULTUARILY, tù-mùlt'shù-à-rè-lè.⁴⁶² adv. [from tumultuary.] In a tumultuary manner.

TUMULTUARINESS, tù-mùlt'shù-à-rè-nès.⁴⁶² n. s. [from tumultuary.] Turbulence; inclination or disposition to tumults or commotions.

The tumultuariness of the people, or the factious-ness of presbyters, gave occasion to invent new models. King Charles.

TUMULTUARY, tù-mùlt'shù-à-rè. adj. [tumultuaire, Fr. from tumult.]

1. Disorderly; promiscuous; confused.

Perkin had learned, that people under command used to consult, and after to march in order, and rebels contrariwise; and observing their orderly, and not tumultuary arming, doubted the worst.

Bacon.

My followers were at that time no way proportion-able to hazard a tumultuary conflict. King Charles.

Is it likely that the divided atoms should keep the same ranks in such a variety of tumultuary agitations in that liquid medium? Glanville.

2. Restless; put into irregular commotion.

Men who live without religion, live always in a tumultuary and restless state. Atterbury.

To TUMULTUATE, tù-mùlt'shù-à-te. v. n. [tumultuor, Lat.] To make a tumult.

TUMULTUATION, tù-mùlt'shù-à'shùn. n. s. [from tumultuate.] Irregular and confused agitation.

That in the sound the contiguous air receives many strokes from the particles of the liquor, seems probable by the sudden and eager tumultuation of its parts. Boyle.

TUMULTUOUS, tù-mùlt'shù-ùs. adj. [from tumult; tumultueux, French.]

i. Violently carried on by disorderly multitudes.

Many civil broils and tumultuous rebellions, they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king, whose only person often times contains the unruly people from a thousand evil occasions. Spenser.

2. Put into violent commotion; irregularly and confusedly agitated.

The strong rehref of some tumultuous cloud Hurry'd him aloft. Milton.

His dire attempt; which nigh the birth
Now rowling, boils in his tumultuous breast,
And like a devilish engine back recoils Upon himself. Milton.

The vital blood, that had forsook my heart,
Returns again in such tumultuous tides,
It quite o'ercomes me. Addison.

3. Turbulent; violent.

Nought rests for me in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open proclamation. Shakspere.

Furiously running in upon him with tumultuous speech, he violently raght from his head his rich cap of sables. Knolles.

4. Full of tumults.

The winds began to speak louder, and, as in a tumultuous kiugdom, to think themselves fittest instruments of commandment. Sidney.

TUMULTUOUSLY, tù-mùlt'shù-ùs-lè. adv. [from tumultuous.] By act of the multitude, with confusion and violence.

It was done by edict, not tumultuously; the sword was not put into the people's hand. Bacon.

TUN, tùn. n. s. [tonne, Saxon; tonne, Dutch, tonne, tonneau, French.]

1. A large cask.

As when a spark Lights on a heap of powder, laid
Fit for the tun, some magazine to store
Against a rumour'd war. Milton.

2. The measure of four hogsheads.

3. Any large quantity proverbially.

I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast. Shakspere.

4. A drunkard, in burlesque.

Here's a tun of midnight-work to come,
Og from a treason-tavern rolling home. Dryden.

5. The weight of two thousand pounds.

6. A cubick space in a ship, supposed to contain a tun.

So fenced about with rocks and lets, that without knowledge of the passages, a boat of ten tuns cannot be brought into the haven. Heylin.

7. Dryden has used it for a perimetrical measure, I believe without precedent or propriety.

A tun about was every pillar there;
A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear. Dryden.

To TUN, tùn. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into casks; to barrel.

If in the must, or wort, while it worketh, before it be tunned, the burrage stay a time, and be often changed with fresh, it will make a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon.

The same fermented juice degenerating into vinegar, yields an acid and corroding spirit. The same juice tunned up, arms itself with tartar. Boyle.

TUNABLE, tù'nà-bl.^{405 462} adj. [from tune.]

Harmonious; musical.

A cry more tunable
Was never hallo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakspere.

Hard are the ways of truth, and rough to walk;
Smooth on the tongue discours'd, pleasing to th'
ear, Milton.

All tunable sounds, whereof human voice is one,
are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness or gravity of the tone. Holder.

Several lines in Virgil arc not altogether tunable to a modern ear. Garth

TU'NABLENESS, tú'ná-bl-nés. n. s. [from tunable.] Harmony; melodiousness.

TU'NABLY, tú'ná-blé. adv. [from tunable.] Harmoniously; melodiously.

TU'N-DISH, tú'n'dish. n. s. [from tun and dish.] A tunnel.

TUNE, túnc.⁴⁰² n. s. [toon, Dutch; ton, Swedish; tuono, Italian; tone, French; tonus, Latin.]

1. A diversity of notes put together. Locke.

Came he to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital pow'rs?
Shakspeare.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; as merry tunes, doleful tunes, solemn tunes, tunes inclining men's minds to pity, warlike tunes; so that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits. Bacon.

Keep unsteady nature to her law,
And the low world in measur'd motion draw
After the heav'nly tune, which none can hear
Of human mould with gross unpurged ear. Milton.

That sweet song you sung one starry night,
The tune I still retain, but not the words. Dryden.
The disposition in the fiddle to play tunes.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. Sound; note.

Such a noise arose
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes. Shakspeare.

3. Harmony; order; concert of parts.

A continual parliament I thought would but keep The common weal in tune, by preserving laws in their due execution and vigour. King Charles.

4. State of giving the due sounds: as, the fiddle is in tune, or out of tune.

5. Proper state for use or application; right disposition; fit temper; proper humour.

A child will learn three times as much when he is in tune, as he will with double the time and pains, when he goes awkwardly, or is dragged unwillingly to it. Locke.

6. State of any thing with respect to order.

Distressed Lear, in his better tune, remembers
what we are come about. Shakspeare.

To TUNE, túnc.⁴⁶³ v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into such a state, as that the proper sounds may be produced.

Their golden harps they took,
Harps ever tun'd, that glitter'd by their side. Milton.

Tune your harps,
Ye angels, to that sound; and thou, my heart,
Make room to entertain thy flowing joy. Dryden.

2. To sing harmoniously.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Milton.

Rouse up, ye Thebans: tune your Io Pæans;
Your king returns, the Argians are o'ercome. Dryden.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, and languishingly slow. Pope.

3. To put into order so as to produce the proper effect.

To TUNE, túnc. v. n.

1. To form one sound to another.

The winds were hush'd, no leaf so small
At all was seen to stir;
Whilst tuning to the water's fall,
The small birds sang to her. Drayton.

All sounds on fret or stop Temper'd soft tinings, intermix'd with voice. Milton.

2. To utter with the voice inarticulate harmony.

TU'NEFUL, túnc'fúl. adj. [tune and full.] Musical; harmonious.

I saw a pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding love. Milt.
Earth smiles with flow'rs renewing, laughs the sky,
And birds to lays of love their tuneful notes apply. Dryden.

For thy own glory sing our sov'reign's praise,
God of verses and of days!
Let all thy tuneful sons adorn
Their lasting works with William's name. Prior.
Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung,
Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue. Pope.

TU'NELESS, túnc'lés.⁴⁶² adj. [from tune.] Unharmonious; unmusical.

When in hand my tuneless harp I take,
Then do I more augment my foes despight. Spenser.
Swallow, what dost thou
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.

TU'NER, tú'núr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from tune.] One who tunes.

The pox of such antiek, lispng, affected phantasies, these new tiners of accents. Shaksp.

TU'NICK, tú'ník. n. s. [tunique, French; tunica, Latin.]

1. Part of the Roman dress.

The tinicks of the Romans, which answer to our waistcoats, were without ornaments, and with very short sleeves. Arbuthnot.

2. Natural covering; integument; tunicle.

Lohocks and syrups abate and demulce the hoarseness of a cough, by mollifying the ruggedness of the intern tinick of the gullet. Harvey.

Their fruit is locked up all winter in their gems,
and well fenced with neat and close tinicks. Derham.

The dropsy of the tunica vaginalis is owing to a preternatural discharge of that water continually separating on the internal surface of the tinick. Sharp.

TU'NICLE, tú'né-kl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [from tunick.] Natural cover; integument.

The humours and tinicles are purely transparent, to let in the light and colour unsoiled. Ray.

One single grain of wheat, barley, or rye, shall contain four or five distinct plants under one common tunicle; a very convincing argument of the providence of God. Bentley.

TU'NNAGE, tú'n'ndje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from tun.]

1. Content of a vessel measured by the tun.

The consideration of the riches of the ancients leads to that of their trade, and to inquire into the bulk and tunnage of their shipping. Arbuthnot.

2. Tax laid by the tun: as, to levy tunnage and poundage.

TU'NNEL, tú'n'nil.⁹⁹ n. s.

1. The shaft of a chimney; the passage for the smoke.

It was a vault ybuilt for great dispence,
With many ranges rear'd along the wall,
And one great chimney, whose long tunnel thence
The smook forth threw. Spenser.

The water being rarified, and by rarification resolved into wind, will force up the smoke, which otherwise might linger in the tunnel, and oftentimes reverse. Wotton.

2. A funnel; a pipe by which liquor is poured into vessels.

For the help of the hearing, make an instrument like a tunnel, the narrow part of the bigness of the hole of the ear, and the broader end much larger. Bacon.

3. A net wide at the mouth, and ending in a point, and so resembling a funnel or tunnel.

To TU'NNEL, tú'n'nil. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form like a tunnel.

The phalæna tribe inhabit the tunnelled, convolved leaves. Derham.

2. To catch in a net.

3. This word is used by Derham for to make network; to reticulate.
Some birds not only weave the fibrous parts of vegetables, and curiously tunnel them into nests, but artificially suspend them on the twigs of trees.
Derham.

TU'NNY, tú'n'né. n. s. [tonnen, Italian; thyynnus, Latin.] A sea fish.

Some fish are boiled and preserved fresh in vinegar, as tunny and turbot. Carew.

TUR, túp. n. s. [I know not of what original.] A ram. This word is yet used in Staffordshire, and in other provinces.

To TUR, túp.⁸⁸ v. n. To butt like a ram.

TURBAN, túr'bân. } n. s. [A Turkish
TURBANT, túr'bânt. } word.] The co-TURBAND, túr'bând. } ver worn by the Turks on their heads.

Gates of monarchs
Arch'd are so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbands on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Shakspeare.

His hat was in the form of a turban, not so huge as the Turkish turbans. Bacon.

From utmost Indian isle, Taprobane, Dusk faces with white silken turbants wreath'd. Milton.

I see the Turk nodding with his turban. Hovel.

7. To form on a lathe by moving round.
[torno, Latin.]
As the placing one foot of a pair of compasses on a plane, and moving about the other foot, describes a circle with the moving point; so any substance, pitched steady on two points, as on an axis, and moved about, also describes a circle concentric to the axis: and an edge-tool set steady to that part of the outside of the substance, will in a circumvolution of that substance cut off all the parts that lie farther off the axis, and make the outside also concentric to the axis. This is the whole sum of turning. Moxon.
The whole lathe is made strong, because the matter it turns being metal, is heavier than wood, and with forcible coming about, would, if the lathe were slight, make it tremble, and so spoil the work.

Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man. Shakspeare.

Twice-born Bacchus burst the thund'rer's thigh.
Creech.

Extol the strength of a twice-conquer'd race.
Dryden.

To TWI'DLE, twi'dl. v. a. [This is commonly written tweddle.] To touch lightly. A low word.

With my fingers upon the stoop, I pressed close upon it, and twiddled it in, first one side, then the other. Wiseinan.

TWIG, twig. n. s. [twig, twigga, Saxon;
twyg, Dut.] A small shoot of a branch;
a switch tough and long.

The Britons had boats made of willow twigs, covered on the outside with hides, and so had the Venetians. Raleigh.

They chose the fig-tree, such as spread her arms,
Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
The bended twigs take root. Milton.

Canst thou with a weak angle strike the whale,
His huge jaws with a twig or bulrush bore? Sandys.
If they cut the twigs at evening, a plentiful and pleasant juice comes out. More.

From parent bough
A cyon meety sever; after force
A way into the crabstock's close-wrought grain
By wedges, and within the living wound
Inclose the softer twig, around which spread
The binding clay. Philips.

TWI'LIGHT, twi'lite. n. s. [twelicht, Dut. tweneleoh, Saxon.]

1. The dubious or faint light before sunrise, and after sunset; obscure light.
Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day.
Donne.

Suspicious amongst thoughts are like baits amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.

2. Uncertain view.

A faint weak love of virtue and of good,
Reflects from her on them, which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day,
The twilight of her memory doth stay. Donne.

He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
And, in the twilight of his phancy's theme Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselyte.
Cleveland.

Ambrosial night, with clouds, exhal'd
From that high mount of God, whence light and shade

Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd

To grateful twilight. Milton.

When the sun was down,
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town. Dryden.
In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to our state of mediocrity. Locke.

TWI'LIGHT, twi'lite. adj.

1. Not clearly or brightly illuminated; obscure; deeply shaded.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

O'er the twilight groves, and dusky eaves,
Long-sounding isles, and intermingled graves,
Black Melancholy sits, and round her throws
A death like silence, and a dread repose. Pope.

2. Seen or done by twilight.
On old Lycæus, or Cyllene hoar, Trip no more in twilight ranks. Milton.

TWIN, twin. n. s. [twinn, Saxon; twelîn- gen, Dutch.]

1. Children born at a birth. It is therefore seldom used in the singular; though sometimes it is used for one of twins.

In this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Shakspeare.

In bestowing
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning, Ipswich and Oxford.

Shakspeare.

If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, though together born, have strange and contrary fortunes?

Drummond.

The divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb;
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first.

Cleveland.

No weight of birth did on one side prevail,
Two twins less even lie in Nature's scale. Cowley.
They came twins from the womb, and still they live

As if they would go twins too to the grave. Otway.
Fair Leda's twins, in time to stars decreed,
One fought on foot, one curb'd the fiery steed.

Dryden.

Had there been the same likeness in all men, as sometimes in twins, it would have given occasion to confusion. Greiv.

2. Gemini; the sign of the zodiack.

This, when the sun retires,
First shines, and spreads black night with feeble fires,
Then parts the twins and crab. Creech.

When now no more th' alternate twins are fir'd,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.
To TWIN, twin. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be born at the same birth.

He that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me both at a birth,
Shall lose me. Shakspeare.

2. To bring two at once.

Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make. Tusser.

3. To be paired; to be suited.

Hath nature given them eyes,
Which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above and the twinned stones
Upon the humbled heath? Shakspeare.

O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power. Sandys.

TWINBO'RN, twin'born. adj. [twin and born.] Born at the same birth.

Our sins lay on the king; he must hear all,
O hard condition, and twinborn with greatness! Shakspeare.

To TWINE, twine. v. a. [twīnan, Saxon; twynan, Dutch.]

1. To twist or complicate so as to unite, or form one body or substance out of two or more.

Thou shalt make a hanging of blue, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework. Exodus.

2. I know not whether this is from twine or twin.

By original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells, Twin'd, and from her hath no dividual being. Mill.

3. To unite itself.

Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Crashaw.

To TWINE, twine. v. n.

1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.

Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,
The victor cries, the glorious prize is mine! Pope.

2. To unite by interposition of parts.

Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,

On a dissection of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

3. To wind; to make flexures.

As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline:
Or as philosophers, who find
Some fav'rite system to their mind,
In ev'ry point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.

Swift.

The deer rustles through the twining brake.

Thomson.

4. To turn round.

O friends!

Some one abides within here, that commends
The place to us, and breathes a voice divine:
As she some web wrought, or her spindles twine,
She cherisht with her song. Chapman.

TWINE, twine. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A twisted thread.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine. Spenser.
A pointed sword hung threat'ning o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.

2. Twist; convolution.

Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine. Milton.

Welcome joy and feast,
Braid your locks with rosy twine,
Dropping odours, dropping wine. Milton.

3. Embrace; act of convolving itself round.

Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy hears, but with am'rous twine
Clasps the tall elm. Philips.

To TWINGE, twinje. v. a. [twingen, Germ. twinge, Danish.]

1. To torment with sudden and short pain.

The goat charged into the nostrils of the lion, and there twinged him till he made him tear himself,
and so mastered him. L'Estrange.

2. To pinch; to tweak.

When a man is past his sense,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twinging him by th' ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.

TWINGE, twinje. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Short sudden sharp pain.

The wickedness of this old villain startles me, and gives me a twinge for my own sin, though far short of his. Dryden.

2. A tweak; a pinch.

How can you fawn upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears? L'Estrange.

TWINK, twing. n. s. [See TWINKLE.]

The motion of an eye; a moment. Not in use.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shaksp.

To TWINKLE, twing'kl. v. n. [twīnclian, Saxon.]

1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.

At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun. Shakspeare.

As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeit beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakspeare.

Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.

God comprises all the good we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.

The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.
Think you your new French proselytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home?

Your benefices twinkled from afar. Dryden.

So weak your charms, that, like a winter's night Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures; for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns.

The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estr.

3. To play irregularly.

His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As though he beckon'd and call'd back his soul. Donne.

TWINKLE, twing'kl. v. n. } [from TWINKLING, twing'ling. v. n. } the verb.]

1. A sparkling intermitting light.

2. A motion of the eye.
Suddenly, with twinkle of her eye
The damsel broke his misintended dart. Spenser.
I come, I come; the least twinkle had brought me to thee. Dryden.

3. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.

Money can thy wants at will supply:
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee
meet,

It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Spenser.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.

The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once. Dryden.

TWINLING, twin'ling. v. n. } [diminutive of twin.] A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth.

Twinklings increase bring. Tusser.

TWINNER, twin'nur. n. s. [from twin.]
A breeder of twins.

Ewes yearly by twinning rich maisters do make,
The lambe of such twinnors for breeders go take. Tusser.

To TWIRL, twérl. v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick rotation.

Wool and raw silk by moisture incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little wreath-ing, as appeareth by the twisting and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.

Dextrous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.
See ruddy maids,
Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel. Doddsley.

To TWIRL, twérl. v. n. To revolve with a quick motion.

TWIRL, twérl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Rotation; circular motion.

2. Twist; convolution.

The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being a heterostropha, that the twirls turn-

To TWIST, twist. v. a. [twīstian, Sax. twisten, Dutch.]

1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.

Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will strangle thee. Shakspeare.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.

Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty;
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition;
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to shew us scurvy play. Prior.

The task were harder to scure my own
Against the power of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttleton.

2. To contort; to writhe.

Either double it into a pyramidal, or twist it into a serpentine form. Pope.

3. To wreath; to wind; to encircle by something round about.

There are pillars of smoke twisted about with wreaths of flame. Burnet.

4. To form; to weave.

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: was't not to this end
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Shaksp.

5. To unite by intertexture of parts.

All know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that ivy which so early kist Thy youthful temples. Waller.

6. To unite; to insinuate.

When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church; when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Decay of Piety.

To Twist, twist. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.

In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circumvolution or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot.

Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword:
Th' Iuachians view the slain with surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.

Twist, twist. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.

Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining osiers laid. Addison.

2. A single string of a cord.

Winding a thin string about the work hazards its breaking, by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Moxon.

3. A cord; a string.

Through these labyrinths, not my grow'ling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.

About his chin the twist
He ty'd, and soon the strangled soul dismiss'd. Dryden.

4. Contortion; writhe.

Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.

5. The manner of twisting.

Jack shrunk at first sight of it: he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist.
Arbuthnot.

Twist'er, twist'ur. n. s. [from twist.]

1. One who twists; a ropemaker.

2. The instrument of twisting. To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.

When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three twines doth intwist;

But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwirling the twine that untwisteth between;
He twirls with his twister the two in a twine;

Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twitcheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twins were intwisted, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twain intertwisting a twine more between,

He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine.
Wallis.

To Twir, twit. v. a. [edþran, Sax.] To sneer; to flout; to reproach.

When approaching the stormy flowers
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,

And sooth to saine, nought seemeth sike strife,
That shepherds so twiten each other's life. Spenser.

When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend.
Shakspere.

Æsop minds men of their errors, without twitting them for what's amiss. L'Estrange.

This these scoffers twitted the christians with.
Tillotson.

Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twitted in his own time. Baker.

To TWITCH, twitsh. v. a. [τπιϰcian, Saxon.] To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.

He rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new. Mill.

Twitch'd by the sleeve, he mouths it more and more. Dryden.

With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at ev'ry step a twitching spright behind.
Dryden.

Thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear.
Pope.

Twitch, twitsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.

But Hudibras gave him a twitch
As quick as lightning in the breech. Hudibras.

The lion gave one hearty twitch, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind.
L'Estrange.

2. A contraction of the fibres.

Other confed'rate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twitch produce,
Which gently pushes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackm.

Mighty physical their fear is;
For soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart descending to their breeches,
Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.

A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches. Sharp.

Twit'chgrass, twitsh'grás. n. s. A plant.

Twit'chgrass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground.
Mortimer.

To Twit'ter, twit'tur. v. n.

1. To make a sharp tremulous intermitted noise.

This must be done;
Swallows twit'ter on the chimney-tops. Dryden.

They twit'ter cheerful, till the vernal months Invite them back. Thomson.

2. To be suddenly moved with any inclination. A low word.

A widow which had a twit'tering toward a second husband, took a gossiping companion to manage the job. L'Estrange.

Twit'ter, twit'tur. n. s.

1. Any motion or disorder of passion; such as, a violent fit of laughing, or fit of fretting.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights,
And cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into amorous twit'ters. Hudibras.

The moon was in a heavy twit'ter, that her cloaths never fitted her. L'Estrange.

2. An upbraider.

Twittletwattle, twit'tl-twôt-tl. n. s.

[A ludicrous reduplication of twattle.]
Tattle; gabble. A vile word.

Inspid twittletwattles, frothy jests, and jingling witticisms, ioure us to a misunderstanding of things.
L'Estrange.

'Twixt, twkst. A contraction of betwixt.

Twilight, short arbiter 'twixt day and night. Mill.

Two, tôô. adj. [twai, Goth. τρυ, Sax.]

1. One and one.

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have some shallow spirit of judgment. Shaksp.

Three words it will three times report, and then the two letter for some times. Bacon.

Fifteen chambers were to lodge us two and two together. Bacon.

They lay
By two and two across the common way. Dryden.

2. It is used in composition.

Next to the raven's age, the Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing. Dryden.

A rational animal better described man's essence, than a two-legged animal, with broad nails, and without feathers. Locke.

The two-shap'd Eriethonius had his birth
Without a mother, from the teeming earth. Addis.

Her register was a two-leaved book of record, one page containing the names of her living, and the other of her deceased members. Ayliffe.

Two'edged, tôô'édj'd. adj. [two and edge.] Having an edge on either side.

Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A twoedg'd weapon from her shining case. Pope.

Two'fold, tôô'fôld. adj. [two and fold.]

Double; two of the same kind; or two different things coexisting.

Our prayer against sudden death importeth a *two*fold desire, that death when it cometh may give us some convenient respite, or if that be denied us of God, yet we may have wisdom to provide always before-hand. Hooker.

Through mirksome air her ready way she makes,
Her *two*fold team, of which two black as pitch,
And two were brown, yet each to each unlike Did softly swim away. Fairy Queen.

O thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate,
Doth now with *two*fold vigour lift me up,
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point.
Shakspere.

Our *two*fold seas wash either side. Dryden.

Time and place taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a *two*fold acceptance. Locke.

Ewes, that erst brought forth but single lambs,
Now dropp'd their *two*fold burdens. Prior.

Holiness may be taken in a *two*fold sense; for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things, offered to God; or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Atterbury.

Two'fold, tôô'fôld. adv. Doubly.

A proselyte you make *two*fold more the child of hell than yourselves. Mathew.

Two'handèd, tôô'hând-éd. adj. [two and hand.] Large; bulky; enormous of magnitude.

With huge *two*handèd sway,
Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down,
Wide wasting. Milton.

If little, then she's life and soul all o'er;
An Amazon, the large *two*handèd whore. Dryden.

TYP

TYP

TYR

TWO'PENGE, tûp'pense. n. s. A small coin, valued at twice a penny.

You all shew like gilt two-pences to me. Shaksp.

To TYE, ti. v. a. To bind. See TIE.

TYE, ti. n. s. [See TIE.] A knot; a bond or obligation.

Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties

Are with a most indissoluble tye

For ever knit. Shaksp.

I have no tye upon you to be true,

But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you.

Dryden.

Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not;
It ought not to be sported with. Addison.

Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.

TY'GER, ti'gûr.⁹⁸ n. s. See TIGER.

TYKE, tike. n. s. [See TIKE.] Tyke in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog; and thence perhaps comes teague.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now,

By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shaksp.

TY'MBAL, tim'bâl.⁹⁸ n. s. [tymbal, Fr.]

A kind of kettledrum.

Yet, gracious charity! indulgent guest!
Were not thy pow'r exerted in my breast,
My speeches would seud up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.

TYMPANI'TES, tim-pâ-ni'tés. n. s.

[τυμπανίτης.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.

TY'MPANUM, tim'pâ-nûm. n. s. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.

The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympaum, are a great help to the hearing. Wiseman.

TY'MPANY, tim'pâ-né. n. s. [from tympanium, Latin.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum; the wind dropsy.

Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hammond.

He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany;
But gives it natural growth, tells us how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.

Others that affect

A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.

Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a hubble, and spends itself in a blast. L'Estrange.

Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of scnce.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou 'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. Arbutnot.

TY'NY, ti'né. adj. Small.

He that has a little tyny wit,

Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shaksp.

TYPE, tipe. n. s. [tytpe, Fr. tyfus, Latin; τύπος.]

1. Emblem; mark of something.

Clean renouncing

The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,

Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shaksp.

Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.

2. That by which something future is prefigured.

Informing them by types

And shadows of that destin'd seed to hruise

The serpent, by what means he shall achieve

Mankind's deliverance. Milton.

The apostle shews the christian religion to be in truth and substance what the jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson.

3. A stamp; a mark. Not in use.

Thy father bears the type of king of Naples,

Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shaksp.

What good is cover'd with the face of hear'n

To be discover'd, that can do me good?

—Th' advancement of your children, gentle lady!

—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads!

—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,

The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Shaksp.

Which, though in their mean types small matter

doth appeare,

Yet both of good account are reckon'd in the shiere.

Drayton.

4. A printing letter.

To TYPE, tipe. v. a. To prefigure.

He ratified ceremonial and positive laws, in respect of their spiritual use and signification, and by fulfilling all things typed and prefigured by them. White.

TY'PICK, tip'ik.⁵⁰⁸ } French; tyficus,

Latin.] Emblematical; figurative of something else.

The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian; which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Atterbury.

Hence that many coursers ran,
Hand-in-hand a goodly train,
To hless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory show

What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.

TY'PICALLY, tip'è-kâl-è. adv. [from tyfical.] In a typical manner.

This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Porphyrian scale of being. Norris.

TY'PICALNESS, tip'è-kâl-nés. n. s. [from typical.] The state of being typical.

To TY'PIFY, tip'è-fi.¹⁸³ v. a. [from tytpe.]

To figure; to show in emblem.

The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life. Hammond.

Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; in the effusion of whose blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and veil of the temple were shattered. Brown.

TYPO'GRAPHER, ti-pòg'gráf-ûr.¹⁸⁷ n. s.

[τύπος and γράφω.] A printer.

1. Emblematical, figurative, or hieroglyphical representation.

Those diminutive and pamphlet treatises daily published amongst us, are pieces containing rather typography than verity. Brown.

2. The art of printing.

TY'RANNESS, tir'rân-nés.⁵⁵⁵ n. s. [from tyrant.] A she tyrant.

They were, by law of that proud tyranness, Provok'd with wrath and envy's false surmise. Spenser.

The tyranness doth joy to see

The huge massacres which her eyes do make.

Spenser.

TYRA'NNICAL, ti-rân'nè-kâl. } adj. [tyran-

TYRA'NNICK, ti-rân'nik.¹⁸⁷ } nus, Latin;

tyrannique, French; τυραννικός.] Suiting a tyrant; acting like a tyrant; cruel; despotick; imperious.

Charge him home that he affects Tyrannick power. Shaksp.

You have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd office, and to wind

Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shaksp.

Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations. Bacon.

Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milton.

If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable. Taylor.

She hath recourse

To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart

Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart. Denham.

Our sects a more tyrannick power assume,

And would for scorpions change the rods of Rome. Roscommon.

And by the tyrannies, by his commons curst,
Th' oppress'd and tyrannick where he durst;

Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,

And treats alike his vassals and his God. Pope.

TYRA'NNICALLY, ti-rân'nè-kâl-è. adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.

TYRA'NNICIDE, ti-rân'nè-side.¹⁴³ n. s. [tyrannus and cædo, Latin.] The act of killing a tyrant.

To TY'RANNISE, tir'rân-ize. v. n. [tyranniser, French, from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.

While we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.

Then 'gan Carausius tyrannise ancw,

And 'gainst the Romans bent their proper power,

And so Alectus treacherously slew,

And took on him the robe of emperor. Spenser.

I made thee miserable,

What time I threw the people's suffrages

On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shaksp.

A crew, whom like ambition joins

With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.

Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been

The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;

All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,

Or kill'd and tyrannise'd without a guard. Waller.

He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is, to command by its own authority. Locke.

TY'RANNOUS, tir'rân-ûs.⁵⁰³ adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.

Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold, an usurper. Spenser.

Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakspeare.
'Tis excellent

To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. Shakspeare.

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life. Shakspeare.

Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.

After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Templ^e.

TY'RANNY, tí'rán-é.⁶⁰³ n. s. [tyrannis
Lat. tyrannis; tyrannie, Fr.]

1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.

Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in the excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.

The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.

2. Unresisted and cruel power.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakspeare.

3. Cruel government; rigorous command.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dars not check thee. Shakspeare.
Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy. Bacon.

God, in judgment just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords;
Who oft as undeservedly intral

His outward freedom: tyranny must be. Milton.

4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.

The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. Shakspeare.

TY'RANT, tí'ránt.⁶⁴⁴ n. s. [tyrannos; ty- rannus, Lat. Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent

Greek and Latin, is derived from tir,
Welsh and Erse, land, and rhanmer, Welsh, to share; q. d. tirhanner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.

2. A cruel, despotick, and severe master;
an oppressor.

Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakspeare.

Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!
The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton.

Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious?

Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dryden.

When tyrant custom had not shackled man,
But free to follow nature was the mode. Thomson.

TYRE, tíre. n. s. [properly tire.] See TIRE.

I have seen her heset and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about the tyre
of her head. Hakevill.

TY'RO, tí'rò.⁶⁴⁴ n. s. [properly tiro, as in the Lat.] One yet not master of his art;
one in his rudiments.

There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyros take their freedom out to kill. Garth.

V.

V, vé, has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, v consonant and u vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U; the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obtuse; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obtund.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VA'CANCY, vá'kán-sé. n. s. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacuity.

How is 't,
That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do hold discourse. Shakspeare.

2. Chasm; space unfilled.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea. Watts.

3. [vacance, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unsupplied.

They were content to bribe them with the nomination of some bishops, and disposal of the revenues of some churches during the vacancies. Lesley.

In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room. Syliffé.

4. [vacances, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet. Dryden.

The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time. Watts.

5. Listlessness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous. Wotton.

VA'CANT, vá'kánt. adj. [vacant, French;
vacans, Lat.]

1. Empty; unfilled; void.

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no va- cant room to receive it? Boyle.

A better race to bring into their vacant room. Milton.

2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world. More.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasinesses, as to leave us free to the attraction of re-

3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.

Lest the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.

Others, when they allowed the throne vacant thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp. Spenser.

Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstaple. Clarendon.

Besides those portions of time which the necessities of nature and of civil life extorted from him, there was not a minute of the day which he left va- cant. Fell.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chasms of thought, by ideas of what is past. Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread. Shakspeare.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper. Wotton.

To VA'GATE, vá'káte.⁶⁴ v. a. [vaco, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tell the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies. King Charles.

The necessity of observing the Jewish sabbath was vacated by the apostolical institution of the Lord's day. Nelson.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession of:
as, he vacated the throne.

3. To defeat; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge;
For, while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray. Dryden.

VACA'TION, vá-ká'shún. n. s. [vacation, Fr.
vacatio, Lat.]

1. Intermission of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Cowell.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary, in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

VA'CCARY, vâk'kâ-rè. n. s. [vacca, Latin.]

A cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.

VACILLANCY, vâs'sil-ân-sè. n. s. [vacillans, from vacillo, Latin; vacillant, Fr.]

A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconsistency. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, at that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. More.

VACILLA'TION, vâs-sil-lâ'shùn. n. s. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Latin; vacillation, French.]

The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Derham.

VACUA'TION, vâk-ù-â'shùn. n. s. [from vacuus, Lat.]

The act of emptying. Dict.

VA'CUIST, vâk'ù-ist. n. s. [from vacuum.]

A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACU'ITY, vâ-kù-è-tè. n. s. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Latin; vacuité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.

In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond.

He, that seat soon failing, meets

A vast vacuity. Milton.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should entirely possess our heart. Rogers.

Redeeming still at night these vacuities of the day. Fell.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they 'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glanville.

VA'CUOUS, vâk'ù-ùs.³¹⁴ adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuô, Fr.] Empty; unfilled.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinite: nor vacuous the space. Milton.

VACUUM, vâk'ù-ùm. n. s. [Lat.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will shew us some good practical lessons. Watts.

TO VADE, vâde. v. n. [vado, Latin.] To vanish; to pass away. Spenser. A word useful in poetry, but not received.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;
Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,

And at whose touch the hills in smook shall vade.

Wotton.

VA'GABOND, vâg'â-bônd. adj. [vagabundus, low Lat. vagabond, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shaksp.

A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and hack, lacqueying the varying tide. Shakspere.

Their prayers by envious winds Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.

VA'GABOND, vâg'â-bônd. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A vagrant; a wanderer: commonly in a sense of reproach.

We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling place. Raleigh.

Reduce'd, like Hannibal, to seek relief

From court to court, and wander up and down

A vagabond in Afric. Addison.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.

VAGA'RY, vâ-gâ-rè. n. s. [from vagus, Latin.]

A wild freak; a capricious frolick.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off; and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance. Milton.

Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with than without your knowledge? Locke.

VAGINOPE'NNOUS, vâd-jè-nò-pèn'nûs. adj. [vagina and fenna, Lat.]

Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard cases.

VA'GOUS, vâ'gûs. adj. [vagus, Lat. vague, French.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.

Such as were born and begot of a single woman, through a vagous lust, were called Sporii. Ayliffe.

VA'GRANCY, vâ'grân-sè. n. s. [from vagrant.]

A state of wandering; unsettled condition.

VA'GRANT, vâ'grânt.⁸⁸ adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. More.

Take good heed what men will think and say;

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,

Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.

Her lips no living bard, I weet,

May say how red, how round, how sweet;

Old Homer only could indite

Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:

They stand recorded in his book.

When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.

VA'GRANT, vâ'grânt.⁸⁸ n. s. [vagrant, French.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation.

In an ill sense.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,

Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.

You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,

Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.

To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use.

F. Atterbury.

Ye vagrants of the sky,

To right or left unheeded take your way. Pope.

VAGUE, vâg.³³⁷ adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Latin.]

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.

2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.

VAIL, vâle.²⁰² n. s. [voile, Fr. This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin; and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.]

1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisdom.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.

3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE.

TO VAIL, vâle. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.

TO VAIL, vâle. v. a. [avaler le bonnet, Fr. Addison writes it veil, ignorantly.]

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

They stiffly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by scafarers. Carew.

The virgin 'gan her bevoir vale,

And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks' gallies, which would not vail their topsails, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knolles.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fail,

And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all. Drayton.

They had not the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot

'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame

Of those that turu'd their backs. Shakspere.

TO VAIL, vâle. v. n. To yield; to give place; to show respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.

VAIN, vâne.²⁰² adj. [vain, French; vanus, Latin]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again

To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakspere.

Vain is the force of man,

To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,

Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,

And vain Chimera vomits empty flame. Dryden.

Unmov'd his eyes, and we' his beard appears;

And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.

3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things:

with of before the cause of vanity.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself.

L'Estrange.

He wad'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryd.
The minstrels play'd on every side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryd.
To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast.

Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thoughts, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,
Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.
Ye vain! desist from your erroneous strife;
Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life;
The true ambition there alone resides,
Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides. Young.

4. Showy; ostentatious.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
Or happiness. Milton.
He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
That all the actions of our life were vain,
Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.

To your vain answer will you have recourse,
And tell 'tis ingenite active force. Blackmore.

6. False; not true.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.
Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L'Estrange.
Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegys flies. Dryden.

The philosophers of old did in vain enquire, whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.
If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison.

If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West.

VAINGLORIOUS, vâne-glò'rè-ùs. adj. [vānus and gloriosus, Lat.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Vain-glorious man, when fluttering wind does blow,
In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Spenser.
Strength to glory aspires Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

This his arrogant and vain-glorious expression witnesseth. Hale.

VAINGLORY, vâne-glò'rè. n. s. [vana gloria, Latin.] Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.

He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon.

Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.

This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.

A monarch's sword when mad vain-glory draws,
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar. Pope.

VAINLY, vâne'lè. adv. [from vain.]

1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shaksp.
In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.
Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. Delany.

3. Idly; foolishly.
Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.
If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous; presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grew.

VAINNESS, vâne'nés. n. s. [from vain.]
The state of being vain; pride; falsehood; emptiness.
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakspere.

VAIR, or VA'IRY, vâre, or vâ'rè. adj. [in heraldry.] Variegated with coverings of gold, red, or other colours.

VA'IVODE, vâ'vòd. n. s. [vaiwod, a governour, Slavonian.] A prince of the Dacian provinces.

He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the vayvod. Knolles.

VA'LANCE, vâl'lânse. n. s. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came.
Skinner.] The fringes of drapery hanging round the tester and stead of a bed.

My house
Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shakspere.
Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in sight. Swift.

To VA'LANCE, vâl'lânse. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.

Old friend, thy face is valanc'd since I saw thee last; com'st thou to beard me? Shakspere.

VALE, vâle. n. s. [val, Fr. vallis, Lat.]

1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.

In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale?
An hundred shepherds woned. Spenser.
Met in the vale of Arde. Shakspere.
Ancibises, in a flow'ry vale,
Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.

In those fair vales by nature form'd to please,
Where Guadalquiver serpentes with ease. Harte.

2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell.
If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.

Since our knights and senators account
To what their sordid, begging vails amount;
Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.

His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds. Swift.

VALEDICTION, vâl-è-dik'shûn. n. s. [val-edico, Latin.] A farewell.
A valediction forbidding to weep. Donne.

VALEDICTORY, vâl-è-dik'tûr-è. adj.
[from valedico, Latin.] Bidding farewell.

VA'LENTINE, vâl'èn-tîn. n. s. A sweetheart chosen on Valentine's day.

Now all nature seem'd in love,
And birds had drawn their valentines. Wotton.

VALE'RIAN, vâ-lè'rè-ân. n. s. [valeriana,
Latin; valerian, French.] A plant.

VA'LET, vâl'èt, or vâl-èt'. n. s. [valet,
French.] A waiting servant.

Giving east-clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.

VALETIDUNA'RIAN, vâl-èt-tù-dè-nâ'rè-ân. }
VALETU'DINARY, vâl-èt-tù-dè-nâ-rè. }

adj. [valetudinaire, French; valetudo, Latin.] Weakly; sickly; infirm of health.
Physic, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recourse thereof in the valetudinary. Brown.

Shifting from the warmer vallies to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great beneffit to the valetudinary, feeble part of mankind. Derham.

Some patients have been liable to this symptom, and reduced by it to a valetudinary and very unequal state of health. Blackmore.

Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthful animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinary ones. Cheyne.

Valetudinarians must live where they can command and scold. Swift.

VA'LIANCE, vâl'yânse. n. s. [from vaillant; valliance, French.] Valour; personal puissance; fierceness; bravery. Not in use.

With stiff force he shook his mortal lance
To let him weet his doughty valliance. Spenser.

VA'LIANT, vâl'yânt. adj. [valliant, French.] Stout; personally puissant; brave. We say, a valiant man; a valiant action.

Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. 1 Samuel.

Hale, a very valiant fencer, undertook to teach that science in a hook, and was laughed at. Wallon.

The church of Antioch might meet at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valiant combat and martyr of Christ. Nelson.

VA'LIANTLY, vâl'yânt-lè. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.

Farewell, kind lord, fight valiantly to-day:
Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakspere.

It was the duty of a good soldier valiantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap. Knolles.

VA'LIANTNESS, vâl'yânt-nés. n. s. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery;
puissance; fierceness; stoutness.

Thy valiantness was mine; thou suck'dst it from me. Shakspere.

Acbimetes having won the top of the walls, by the valiantness of the defenders was forced to retire. Knolles.

Shew not thy valiantness in wine. Ecclesiasticus.

VA'LID, vâl'id. adj. [valide, French;
validus, Lat.]

1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Mil.

2. Having intellectual force; prevalent;
weighty; conclusive.

A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.

VA'LIDITY, vâl'id-è-tè. n. s. [validité, Fr.
from valid.]

1. Force to convince; certainty.

You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse,
'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.

2. Value. A sense not used.
To thee and thine
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Gonerill. Shakespeare.

VALLA'NCY, vâl'ân-sê. n. s. [from vallance.] A large wig that shades the face.
But you, loud sirs, who through your curls look big,
Criticks in plume and white vallancy wig. Dryden.

VALLÉY, vâl'lê. n. s. [vallée, French; vallis, Lat.] A low ground; a hollow between hills.
Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains. Woodward.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove
That hills and vallies yield. Raleigh.
Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton.
I have been ready to freeze on the top of a hill, and in an hour's time after have suffered as great inconvenience from the heat of the valley. Brown.

VAL'OROUS, vâl'ûr-ûs.¹⁶⁶ adj. [from valour.] Brave; stout; valiant.
The famous warriors of the antique world
Us'd trophies to erect in stately wise,
In which they would the records have enroll'd
Of their great deeds and valorous emprise. Spenser.

Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman. Shakespeare.

VAL'OROUSLY, vâl'ûr-ûs-lê. adv. [from valorous.] In a brave manner.

VAL'OUR, vâl'ûr.³¹² n. s. [valleur, Fr. valor, Latin. Ainsworth.] Personal bravery; strength; prowess; puissance; stoutness.
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.
Here I contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love
As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakespeare.
When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakespeare.
An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldier's defence, as he received the mortal stab. Howel.
For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milt.
Such were these giants; men of high renown!
For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd. Milton.
Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves. This makes the authority of men among women; and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd. Temple.

VAL'UABLE, vâl'û-â-bl. adj. [valuable,
French; from value.]

1. Precious; being of great price.
2. Worthy; deserving regard.
A just account of that valuable person whose remains lie before us. F. Aterbury.
The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift.

VALUA'TION, vâl'û-â-shûn. n. s. [from value.]

1. The act of setting a value; appraisement.
Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray.

2. Value set upon any thing.
No reason I, since of your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack'd one to more care. Shakespeare.
Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things. Bacon.
The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation.
Arbutnot.

VALUA'TOR, vâl'û-â-tûr.⁵²¹ n. s. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price. A word which I have found no where else.
What valuators will the bishops make use of?
Swift.

VAL'UE, vâl'û.³³⁵ n. s. [value, French; valor, Latin.]

1. Price; worth.
Ye are physicians of no value. Job.
Learn to live for your own sake, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness. Law.

2. High rate.
Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtues
And therefore sets this value on your life:
Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
And name your terms. Addison.

3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.
He sent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.

To VAL'UE, vâl'û. v. a. [valoir, French;
from the noun.]

1. To rate at a certain price.
When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.
A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior there-unto. Carew.
God alone values right the good. Milton.

2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.
Some of the finest treatises in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English appear. Addison.
He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted. Atherbury.
To him your orchard's early fruits are due,
A pleasing off'ring when 'tis made by you;
He values these. Pope.

3. To appraise; to estimate.
If he be poorer than estimation, the priest shall value him. Leviticus.

4. To be worth; to be equal in worth to.
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare.

5. To take account of.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock than with; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.

6. To reckon at, with respect to number or power.
The queen is valued thirty thousand strong:
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shaksp.

7. To consider with respect to importance; to hold important.
The king must take it ill,
So slightly valued in his messenger. Shakespeare.
Neither of them valued their promises, according to rules of honour or integrity. Clarendon.

8. To compare with respect to price, or excellence.
It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir. Job.

9. To raise to estimation. This is a sense not in use.
She ordered all things, resisting the wisdom of the wisest, by making the possessor thereof miserable; valuing the folly of the most foolish, by making the success prosperous. Sidney.
Some value themselves to their country by jealousies of the crown. Temple.
Vanity, or a desire of valuing ourselves by showing others faults. Temple.

VA'LUERLESS, vâl'û-lêss. adj. [from value.]
Being of no value.
A counterfeit
Resembling majesty; which, touch'd and tried, Proves valueless. Shakespeare.

VA'LUER, vâl'û-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from value.]
He that values.
Hammond was no valuer of trifles. Fell.

VALVE, vâl'v. n. s. [valva, Latin.]

1. A folding door.
Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repass'd. Pope.
Opening their valves, self-mov'd on either side,
The adamantine doors expanded wide:
When death commands they close, when death commands divide. Harte.

2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.
This air, by the opening of the valve, and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle.

3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its regress.
The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbutnot.

VALVULE, vâl'vûle. n. s. [valvule, Fr.]
A small valve.

VAMP, vâmp. n. s. The upper leather of a shoe. Ainsworth.

To VAMP, vâmp. v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from avant, French, before;
and to mean, laying on a new outside.]
To piece an old thing with some new part.
You wish
To vamp a body with a dangerous physick,
That's sure of death without. Shakespeare.
This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan.
Bentley.
I had never much hopes of your vamp play. Swift.

VAMPER, vâmp'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from vampi.]
One who pieces out an old thing with something new.

VAN, vân. n. s. [from avant, French.]

1. The front of an army; the first line.
Before each van prick forth the airy knights. Milton.
The foe he had survey'd,
Arrang'd, as 't' him they did appear,
With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.
Van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost hattles hast'ning up behind. Dryden.

2. [van, French; vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised; a fan.
The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn van. Broome.

3. A wing with which the air is beaten.
His sail-broad vans
He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
Up-lifted spurns the ground. Milton.
A fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing drew nigh,

Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air.

Milton.

His disabled wing unstrung:

He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
His vans no longer could his flight sustain.

Dryd.

The vans are broad on one side, and narrower on the other; both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.

Derham.

To VAN, vãn. v. a. [from vannus, Latin;
vanner, French.] To fan; to winnow.
Not in use.

The corn which in vanning lieth lowest is the best.

Bacon.

VA'NCOURIER, vãn-kũr-yère'. n. s. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.

VANE, vâne. n. s. [vaene, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.

A man, she would spell backward;

If tall, a lance ill-headed;

If speaking, why a vane blown with all winds.

Shakspeare.

VA'NGUARD, vãn-gyãrd'. n. s. [avant garde, French.] The front, or first line of the army.

The king's vant-guard maintained fight against the whole power of the enemies.

Bacon.

The martial Idomen, who bravely stood before

In vant-guard of his troops, and marcht, for strength a savage bore.

Chapman.

Vanguard to right and left the front unfold.

Milton.

VANILLA, vãn-nĩ'lã. n. s. [vanille, French.]
A plant. The fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate.

Miller.

When mixed with vanillios, or spices, ehocolate acquires the good and bad qualities of aromatic oils.

Arbutnot.

To VA'NISH, vãn'ish. v. n. [vanesco, Lat.
evanouir, French.]

1. To lose perceptible existence.

High honour is not only gotten and born by pain and danger, but must be nursed by the like, or else vanisheth as soon as it appears to the world.

Sidney.

While fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
And builds imaginary Rome anew.

Pope.

2. To pass away from the sight; to disappear.

Whither are they vanish'd?

—Into the air; and what seem'd corporal

Melted as breath into the wind.

Shakspeare.

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest.

He eut the cleaving sky,

And in a moment vanish'd from her eye.

Pope.

3. To pass away; to be lost.

All these delights will vanish.

Milton.

That spirit of religion and seriousness, by which we had distinguished ourselves, vanished all at once, and a spirit of infidelity and prophaneness started up.

Atterbury.

VA'NITY, vãn'è-tè. n. s. [vanitas, Latin;
vanité, French.]

1. Emptiness; uncertainty; inanity.

Vanity of vanities, all is vanity.

Ecclesiasticus.

2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.
Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come.

Sidney.

Thy pride,

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,

Rejected my forewarning.

Milton.

3. Trifling labour.

To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor.

Raleigh.

4. Falsehood; untruth.

Here I may well show the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walsingham.

Sir J. Davies.

5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle show; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.

Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leav'd them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employ'd in his own service?

Hooker.

I must

Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple

Some vanity of mine art.

Shakspeare.

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;

Make her free will slave to vanity.

Davies.

Sin with vanity had fill'd the works of men.

Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires.

South.

Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,

That all her vanities at once are dead;

Succeeding vanities she still regards,

And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards.

Pope.

6. Ostentation; arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity.

Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors' names, those things which he had read in the scriptures: or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge.

Raleigh.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted on slight grounds; pride operating on small occasions.

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take

A pride to hear the conquests which you make?

Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,

That vanity's the food of fools;

Yet now and then your men of wit

Will condescend to take a bit.

Swift.

The corruption of the world indulges women in great vanity; and mankind seem to consider them in no other view, than as so many painted idols that are to allure and gratify their passions.

Law.

To VA'NQUISH, vãngk'wish. v. a. [vaincre, French.]

1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.

Were't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,

The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,

Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you?

Shakspeare.

They subdued and vanquished the rebels in all encounters.

Clarendon.

The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose:

But you have done what Cato could not do,

To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too.

Dryden.

2. To confute.

This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise.

F. Atterbury.

VA'NQUISHER, vãngk'wish-ũr. n. s. [from vanquish.] Conqueror; subduer.

He would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Shakspeare.

I shall rise victorious, and subdue

My vanquisher; spoil'd of his vaunted spoil.

My vanquisher; spoil'd of his vaunted spoil.

Troy's vanquisher and great Achilles' son.

A. Philips.

VA'NTAGE, vãn'tãdje. n. s. [from advantage.]

1. Gain; profit.

What great vantage do we get by the trade of a pastor?

Sidney.

2. Superiority; state in which one hath better means of action than another.

With the vantage of mine own excuse,

Hath he excepted most against my love.

Shakspeare.

He had them at vantage, being tired and harassed with a long march.

Bacon.

The pardoned person must not think to stand upon the same vantage of ground with the innocent.

South.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

Be assur'd, madam, 'twill be done

With his next vantage.

Shakspeare

To VA'NTAGE, vãn'tãdje. v. a. [from advantage.] To profit. Not in use.

We yet of present peril be afraid;

For needless fear did never vantage none.

Spenser.

VA'NTBRASS, vãn'tbrãs. n. s. [avant bras,
French.] Armour for the arm.

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,

And in my vanbrace put this wither'd brawn.

Shakspeare.

Put on vanbrass, and greves, and gaultlet.

Milton.

VA'PID, vãp'id. adj. [vapidus, Latin.]

Dead; having the spirit evaporated;

spiritless; mawkish; flat.

Thy wines let feed a-while

On the fat refuse; lest, too soon disjointed,

From spritely it to sharp or vapid change.

Philips.

The effects of a vapid and viscous constitution of blood, are stagnation, acrimony, and putrefaction.

Arbutnot.

VA'PIDNESS, vãp'id-nès. n. s. [from vapid.]

The state of being spiritless or mawkish; mawkishness.

VAPORATION, vãp-õ-rãshũn. n. s. [vapo-ration, French; vaporatio, Latin; from vapour.] The act of escaping in vapours.

VA'PORER, vãp'ũr-ũr. n. s. [from vapour.] A boaster; a braggart.

This shews these vaporers, to what scorn they expose themselves.

Government of the Tongue.

VA'PORISH, vãp'ũr-ish. adj. [from vapour.]

1. Vaporous; full of vapours.

It proceeded from the nature of the vapourish

place.

Sandys.

2. Splenetick; peevish; humorsome.

Pallas grew vap'rish once and odd,

She would not do the least right thing.

Pope.

VA'POROUS, vãp'ũr-ũs. adj. [vapoureux,
French; from vapour.]

1. Full of vapours or exhalations; fomy.

The vaporous night approaches.

Shakspeare.

This shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part.

Derham.

2. Windy; flatulent.

If the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous

food, it endangereth the child to become lunatick.

Bacon.

Some more subtle corporeal element may so equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous moisture, as to form it into round drops.

More.

The food which is most vaporous and perspira-ble, is the most easily digested.

Arbutnot.

A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood.

Cheyne.

VA'POUR, vãp'ũr. n. s. [vapeur, Fr.

vapor, Latin.]

1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.

Jove a dreadful storm call'd forth

Against our navy; cover'd shore and all
With gloomy vapours. Chapman.

Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot. Milton.
When first the sun too pow'ful beams displays,
It draws up vapours which obscure its rays:
But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.

2. Fume; steam.

The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryd.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton.

For the imposthume, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper. Arbuth.

3. Wind; flatulence.

VVAUNT, vâvnt. n. s. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.

Sir John Perrot bent his course rot to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counsels. Spenser.

Iim I seduc'd
With other promises and other vaunts. Milton.
Such vaunts as his who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all.

Graville.
VAUNT, vawnt. n. s. [from avant, Fr.]
The first part. Not used.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings. Shakspeare.
VA'UNTER, vawnt'ur. n. s. [vanteur, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.

Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.
Tongue-valiant hero! vaunter of thy might!
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight. Dryd.

VA'UNTFUL, vawnt'ful. adj. [vaunt and full.] Boastful; ostentatious.

Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,
Young Clarion, with vauntful lustibed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare. Spenser.

VA'UNTINGLY, vawnt'ing-lè. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully; ostentatiously.

I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death. Shakspeare.

VA'UNTMURE, vawnt'mùre. n. s. [avant mur, French.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.

With another engine named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread two vauntmures. Camden.

This warlike captain, daily attempting the vanmures, in the end by force obtained the same; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in: who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vanmure. Knolles.

VA'WARD, vaw'ward. n. s. [van and ward.] Forepart. Obsolete.

Since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the musick of my hounds. Shakspeare.

Marcus,
Their hands i' th' vaward are the Antiates
Of their best trust. Shakspeare.

U'BERTY, yu'ber-tè. n. s. [ubertas, Lat.] Abundance; fruitfulness.

UBICA'TION, yu'be-kà'shùn. } n. s. [from UBI'ETY, yu'bi'è-tè. } ubi, Latin.]
Local relation; whereness. A scholastic term.

Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross. Glanville.

UBI'QUITARY, yu'bi-k'wè-tà-rè. adj. [from ubique, Latin.] Existing every where.

For wealth and an ubiquitary commerce, none can exceed her. Hovel.

UBI'QUITARY, yu'bi-k'wè-tà-rè. n. s. [from ubique, Latin.] One that exists every where.

How far wide is Aquinas, which saith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcass of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitaries. Hall.

UBI'QUITY, yu'bi-k'wè-tè. n. s. [from ubique, Lat.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.

In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other, ubi- quity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.

Pem she hight,
A solcmn wight,
As you should meet
In any street
In that ubiquity. Ben Jonson.

Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet? South.

U'DDER, ud'dur. n. s. [uder, Saxon; uder, Dutch; uber, Latin.] The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.

A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching head on ground. Shakspeare.
Sithence the cow
Produe'd an ampler store of milk; the she-goat,
Not without pain, dragg'd her distended udder.

U'DDERED, ud'dur'd. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.

Marian soft could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.

VEAL, véle. n. s. [veel, a calf, veeler, vesler, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.

Wouldst thou with mighty hecf augment thy meal, Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.

VE'CTION, vèk'shùn. } n. s. [vec-
VECTI'ATION, vèk-tè-tà'shùn. } tio, vec- } tito, Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.

Enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots; a species of vection seldom used among the antients. Arbuthnot.

VE'CTURE, vèk'tshùre. n. s. [vectura, Latin.] Carriage.

Three things one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture, and the vature or carriage. Bacon.

To VEER, vére. v. n. [virer, French.] To turn about.

Nigh river's mouth, where wind Veers oft, as oft he steers and shifts her sail. Milton.
If a wild uncertainty prevail,
And torn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
You lose the fruit of all your former care,
For the sad prospect of a just despair. Roscommon.

I have no taste of the noisy praise
Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of swollen success; but veering with its elb. Dryden.

A-head the master pilot steers,
And as he leads, the following navy veers. Dryden.

It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison.

The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.

To VEER, vére. v. a.

1. To let out.
As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. Ben Jonson.

2. To turn; to change.
I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Veer the main-sheet, and bear up with the land. Spenser.

Sailing farther, it veers its lily to the west, and regardeth that quarter wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.

VEGETA'ILITY, vèd-jè-tà-bil'è-tè. n. s. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.

The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcome its vegetability, and convert it into a lapideous substance. Brown.

VE'GETABLE, vèd'jè-tà-bl. n. s. [vegetabilis, school Latin; vegetable, Fr.]

Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.

Vegetables are organized bodies, consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in nourishment from without, usually by means of a root fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill.

Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think. Waller.

There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animate more than inanimate, sensitives more than vegetables, and men more than brutes. Wilkins.

In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies not propagated by seed it is the colour, we most fix on. Locke.

Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers, and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.

VE'GETABLE, vèd'jè-tà-bl. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a plant.

The vegetable world. each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prior.

Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbuthnot.

2. Having the nature of plants.

Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton.

That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

To VE'GETATE, vèd'jè-tàte. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.

Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.

As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.

See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope.

VEGETA'TION, vèd-jè-tà'shùn. n. s. [from vegeto, Lat.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The sun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation sets the streaming power
At large. Thomson.

Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.

2. The power of growth without sensation.

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility. Hooker.

These pulsations I attribute to a plastick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.

VE'GETATIVE, vèd'jè-tà-tiv. adj. [vegetatif, Fr. from vegetate.]

1. Having the quality of growing without life.
Creatures vegetative and growing have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh.
2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.
The nature of plants doth consist in having a vegetative soul, by which they receive nourishment and growth and are enabled to multiply their kind. Wilkins.
Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties and virtues of the field. Broome.
- VE'GETATIVENESS, véd'jè-tà-tiv-nès. n. s. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.
- VEGE'TE, vé-jé'té'. adj. [vegetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; sprightly.
The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.
The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.
- VE'GETIVE, véd'jè-tiv. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife, For hindering stalke of hir vegetive life. Tusser.
- VE'GETIVE, véd'jè-tiv. n. s. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.
Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth, And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in th' unfinished part, Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.
- VE'HEMENCE, vé'hè-mèncè. } n. s. [vehementia, Latin.]
VE'HEMENCY, vé'hè-mèn-sè. }
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild, Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd, Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.
2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: sift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker.
The best persuasions Fail not to use; and with what vehemency Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakspeare.
Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakspeare.
The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness, and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.
This pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits To such a flame of sacred vehemence, That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.
He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.
Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints Have so much earnestness and passion in them, I hear him with a secret kind of horror, And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.
- VE'HEMENT, vé'hè-mènt. adj. [vehement, French; vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grewe.
2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation, In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakspeare.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such

- As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change, Nor vehement desire. Milton.
- VE'HEMENTLY, vé'hè-mènt-lé. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.
2. Pathetically; urgently.
The christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly, than any religion did before. Tillotson.
- VE'HICLE, vé'hè-kl. n. s. [vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprise. Addison.
2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle, by another, is a popular tenet. Brown.
3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.
The gaiety of a diverting word serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estr.
- To VEIL, vâle. v. n. [velo, Latin.] See VAIL.
1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.
Her face was veil'd; yet, to my fancied sight, Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd. Milton.
It became the Jewish fashion, when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.
2. To cover; to invest.
I descry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host. Milton.
3. To hide; to conceal.
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope.
- VEIL, vâle. n. s. [velum, Latin.]
1. A cover to conceal the face.
To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Spenser.
The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gor'd hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.
The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face;
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.
As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense Granville.
She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.
2. A cover; a disguise.
I will pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon. Shakspeare.
Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dryden.
The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.
- VEIN, vâne. n. s. [veine, French; vena, Latin.]
1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings

- the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can re-pass them. Quincy.
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman. Shakspeare.
Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.
2. Hollow; cavity.
Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton.
Let the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton.
3. Course of metal in the mine.
There is a vein for the silver. Job.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.
It is in wren as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold, which the owner knows not of. Swift.
4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.
5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.
Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Wolton.
6. Humour; temper.
I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.
—I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakspeare.
Certainly he that hath a satyirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Bacon.
They among themselves in pleasant vein Stood scoffing. Milton.
Speak'st thou in earnest or in jesting vein? Dryden.
The currier struck the usurer upon the right vein. L'Estrange.
7. Continued disposition.
The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, has cost me this present service. Temple.
8. Current; continued production.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking.
Swift.

9. Strain; quality.

My usual vein.

Oldham.

VEINED, vān'd.³⁰⁰ } adj. [veineux, Fr.
VEINY, vā'né. } from vein.]

1. Full of veins.

2. Straked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined.
Mortimer.

Efulgent, hence the veiny marble shines.
Thomson.

VELLE'ITY, vèl-lè-è-tè. n. s. [velleité, Fr. velleitas, from velle, Latin.]

Velleity is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire.
Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative, complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means.
South.

To VELLICATE, vèl-lè-kâte. v. a. [vellico, Latin.] To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense.
Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellivating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous.
Arbutnot.

VELLICATION, vèl-lè-ká'shùn. n. s. [vellitatio, Latin.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purgers have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind.
Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication imprest upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced.
Watts.

VELLUM, vèl'lùm. n. s. [velin, French; velamen, Latin, rather vitulinum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum.
Wiseman.

VELO'CIDY, vè-lòs-è-tè. n. s. [velocité, Fr. velocitas, Lat.] Speed; swiftness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities; they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbolas, or parabolas, or in ellipses, very eccentric.
Bentley.

VEL'VET, vèl'vít.⁹⁹ n. s. [veluto, Italian; villus, Latin; velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head.
Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts.
Locke.

VEL'VET, vèl'vít. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish.
Shakespeare.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find.
Shakespeare.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then being alone,

Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he: thus misery doth part
The flux of company.
Shakespeare.

Such blessings nature pours,
O'er-stock'd mankind enjoy but half her stores;
In distant wilds by human eyes unseen,
She rears her flow'rs, and spreads her velvet green.
Young.

To VE'LVET, vèl'vít. v. n. To paint velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery.
Peacham.

VE'LVURE, vè-lùrè'. n. s. [velours, Fr.]

Velvet. An old word.

His horse with one girt, six times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velure, pieced with packthread.
Shakespeare.

VEN'NAL, vè'nâl.⁸⁸ adj. [venal, French; venalis, Lat.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verse he thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
This, from no venal, or ungrateful muse.
Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word.

It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses.
Ray.

VENA'LITY, vè-nâl-è-tè. n. s. [venalité, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness; prostitution.

VENA'TICK, vè-nát'ík.⁸⁰⁹ adj. [venaticus, Lat.] Used in hunting.

VENA'TION, vè-ná'shùn. n. s. [venatio, Lat.] The act or practice of hunting.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be otherwise than by sawing away of trees.
Brown.

To VEND, vènd. v. a. [vendre, French; vendo, Lat.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend, and make use of, lay by him.
Boyle.

VENDE'E, vèn-dèè'. n. s. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendee cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson.
Ayliffe.

VEN'DER, vènd'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the venders seat themselves.
Graunt.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches.
Addison.

VEN'DIBLE, vènd-è-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [vendibilis, Lat.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable
In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.
Shakespeare.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandize riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities.
Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a determinate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies.
Boyle.

VEN'DIBLENESS, vènd-è-bl-nès. n. s. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VEN'DIBLY, vènd-è-blè. adv. [from vendible.] In a saleable manner.

VENDITA'TION, vèn-dè-tá'shùn. n. s. [venditatio, from vendito, Lat.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all reading, and venditation of their own naturals, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts;

when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author. B. Jonson.

VENDI'TION, vèn-dish'ùn. n. s. [vendition, French; venditio, Lat.] Sale; the act of selling.

To VENE'ER, vè-nèèr'. v. a. [among cabinet makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood.
Bailey.

VENEFI'CIAL, vèn-è-fish'ál. adj. [from veneficium, Lat.] Acting by poison; bewitching.

The magical virtues of misselto, and conceived efficacy unto veneficial intentions, scemeth a pagan relique derived from the ancient druides.
Brown.

VENEFI'CIOSLY, vèn-è-fish'ús-lè. adv. [from veneficium, Lat.] By poison or witchcraft.

Least witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they broke the shell.
Brown.

VE'NEMOUS, vèn-ùm-ús. adj. [from venin, Fr.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venomous heast hang on his hand.
Acts.

To VE'NENATE, vèn-è-náte.⁸⁰³ v. a. [veneno, Lat.] To poison; to infect with poison.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant.
Harvey.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, whereby the venenate parts are carried off.
Woodward.

VENENA'TION, vèn-è-ná'shùn. n. s. [from venenate.] Poison; venom.

This venenation shoots from the eye; and this way a hasilisk may im poison.
Brown.

VENE'NE, vè-nèné'. } adj. [vene-

VENENO'SE, vèn-è-nòsé'.⁴²⁷ } neux, Fr. from venenum, Lat.] Poisonous; venomous.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to attract or evacuate them hence.
Harvey.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, demonstrates that all such tumours where any insects are found, are raised up by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed upon the leaves.
Ray.

VE'NERABLE, vèn-èr-â-bl.⁴⁰⁵ ⁵⁵⁵ adj. [venerable, Fr. venerabilis, Lat.] To be regarded with awe; to be treated with reverence.

As by the ministry of saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; or in regard of death, which those saints have suffered for the testimony of Jesus Christ, did thereby make the places where they died venerable.
Hooker.

To make the passage easy, safe, and plain,
That leads us to this venerable wall.
Fairfax.

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!

Inviolable pow'rs, ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd.
Dryden.

VE'NERABLY, vèn-èr-â-blè. adv. [from venerable.] In a manner that excites reverence.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,
An awful pile! stands venerably great:

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come. Addison.
To VE'NERATE, vèn-èr-âte. v. a. [venerer,

Fr. veneror, Latin.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not bate
The place its honour for the person's sake:
The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,
And not the beast that bears it on its back. Herbert.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made,
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning. Clarissa.

Even the peasant dares these rights to scan,
And learn to venerate himself as man. Goldsmith.

VENERA'TION, vên-êr-â-shûn. n. s. [venera- tion, Fr. veneratio, Lat.] Reverend regard; awful respect.

ledge, directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the Creator, and the happiness of mankind. Locke.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

VENERA'TOR, vên-êr-â-tûr.⁶²¹ n. s. [from venerate.] Reverencer.

If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a repugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerators of nature. Hale.

VENEREAL, vè-nê-rê-âl. adj. [venerereus,
Latin.]

1. Relating to love.

These are no venerereal signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand.
Shakspeare.

Then swoln with pride, into the snare I fell,
Of fair fallacious looks, venerereal trains,
Soft'n'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

They are averse to venerereal pleasure. Addison.

Venerereal distempers confirmed by frequent re-lapsés, where the transient satisfaction is overbalanced by a sad variety of tragical suffering that attend it, often produce a downright consumption of the lungs. Blackmore.

2. Consisting of copper, called Venus by chymists.

Blue vitriol, how venerereal and unsophisticated soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

VENEREUS, vè-nê-rê-ûs. adj. [from ve- nerery.] Libidinous; lustful.

The male is lesser than the female, and very venerereus. Derham.

VENERY, vên-êr-ê.⁶⁵⁵ n. s. [venerie, from vener, Fr.]

venge.] Revengeful; malicious.

A thrillant dart he threw,
Headed with ire and vengeable despise. Spenser

VENGEANCE, vên'jânse.²⁴⁴ n. s. [ven- geance, Fr.]

1. Punishment; penal retribution; avengement.

The right conceit which they had, that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect as touching their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

All the stor'd vengeances of heav'n fall
On her ungrateful top! Shakspeare.

The souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent, and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.
Shakspeare.

Let me see thy vengeance on them. Jeremiah.

Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.

Jove's and Latona's son his wrath express'd,
In vengeance of his violated priest. Dryden.

The chorus interceded with heaven for the innocent, and implored its vengeance on the criminal.
Spectator.

Round him a crowd of threat'ning furies stands,
With instruments of vengeance in their hands.
Harte.

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehe- mence. This phrase was formerly solemn and dignified; what a vengeance, emphatically what?

Till the day appear, of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.

When the same king adventured to murmur, the people could threaten to teach him his duty with a vengeance. Raleigh.

Asmodeus the fishy fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tehit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Meda's post to Egypt, there fast bound.
Milton.

But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.

VENGEFUL, vênje'fûl. adj. [from ven- geance and full.] Vindictive; revengeful; retributive.

Doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.

cusable.

If they do nothing 'tis a venial slip. Shakspeare.

More veniable is a dependence upon potable gold, whereof Paracelsus, who died himself at forty-seven,
gloried that he could make other men immortal.
Brown.

What horror will invade the mind,
When the strict judge, who would be kind,
Shall have few venial faults to find! Roscommon.

While good men are employed in extirpating mortal sins, I should rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. Addison.

2. Permitted; allowed.

No more of talk where God, or angel-guest,
With man, as with his friend, familiar us'd

To sit indulgent, and with him partake Rural repast; permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton.

VE'NIALNESS, vè'nê-âl-nês. n. s. [from ve- niat.] State of being excusable.

VE'NISON, vên'z'n, or vên-ê-z'n. n. s. [ve- naison, Fr.] Game; beast of chase; the flesh of deer. Chapman writes it as it is spoken, venzon.

Shou'd have their round haunches gor'd. Shakspeare.

We have a hot venison pasty to dinner. Shakspeare.

To our venzon's store
We added wine, till we could wish no more.
Chapman.

In the records of Ireland, no mention is made of any park, tho' there be vert and venison within this land. Davies.

He for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the ven'son shar'd. Dryden.

VE'NOM, vên'ûm.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [venin, Fr.]
Poison.

Your eyes, which hitherto have born in them
The fatal halls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks we fairly hope
Have lost their quality. Shakspeare.

Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he favns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakspeare.

Like some tall tree, the monster of the wood,
O'ershading all that under him would grow,
He sheds his venom on the plants below. Dryden.

To VE'NOM, vên'ûm. v. a. To infect with venom; to poison; to envenom.

VE'NOMOUS, vên'ûm-ûs. adj. [from venom.]

The like is on her arm. Shakspeare.

They at once their reeds
Put forth, and to a narrow vent apply'd
With nicest touch. Milton.

Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole stopped with a spile. Mortimer.

Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire whereby it gains an exit.
Woodward.

To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent; or, if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in. Swift.

Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.

2. Passage out of secrecy to publick notice.

It failed by late setting-out, and some contrariety of weather, whereby the particular design took vent beforehand. Wotton.

3. The act of opening.

The farmer's eades mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a-while. Philips.

For the mart, it was alledged that the vent for English cloths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.

By this war there is no vent for any commodity
but of wool. Temple.

He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in threescore can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope.

To VENT, vén. v. a. [venter, Fr. from the noun; sventare, Italian.]

1. To let out at a small aperture.

2. To let out; to give way to.

Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods send not Corn for the rich men only; with these shreds
They vented their complainings. Shakspeare.

When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham.

Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.

3. To utter; to report.

Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.

4. To emit; to pour out.

Revoke thy doom,
Or, whilst I can vent elamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakspeare.

to the head, breast, and abdomen, which are called by anatomists, the three venters.

2. Womb; mother.

A has issue B a son, and C a daughter, by one venter; and D a son by another venter. If B purchases in fee, and dies without issue, it shall descend to the sister, and not to the brother of the half blood. Hale.

VENTIDUCT, vén'tè-dùkt. n. s. [ventus and ductus, Latin.] A passage for the wind.

Having been informed of divers ventiducts, I wish I had had the good fortune, when I was at Rome, to take notice of these organs. Boyle.

To VENTILATE, vén'tè-lâte. v. a. [ven-tilo, Lat.]

1. To fan with wind.

In close, low, and dirty alleys, the air is penn'd up, and obstructed from being ventilated by the winds. Harvey.

Miners, by perflations with large bellows, letting down tubes, and sinking new shafts, give free passage to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines.
Woodward.

2. To winnow; to fan.

3. To examine; to discuss.

Nor is the right of the party, nor the judicial beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.

2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.

Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,
Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.

The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, constringe the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray

The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbuthnot.

VENTURE, vén'tshùre.⁴⁸¹ n. s. [aventure, French.]

1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.

When he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,

His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakspeare.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture and absurd choice. South.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchas you. Dryden.

When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Locke.

2. Chance; hap.

The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.

3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakspeare.

On such a full sea are we now a-float:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakspeare.

Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.

4. At a VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.

You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.

A bargain at a venture made Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.

A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture.
L'Estrange.

Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.

If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.

To VENTURE, vén'tshùre. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suitor, will not in the conclusion lose both the suitor and his own former favour. Bacon.

Origen mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the Saviour of the world.
Addison.

2. To run a hazard.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryd.

I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.

3. To VENTURE at. } To engage To VENTURE on or upon. } in; or make attempts without any security of success, upon mere hope.

That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,

The king will venture at it. Shakspeare.

It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what eorn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.

I never yet the tragick strain essay'd,
Deterr'd by that inimitable maid:

And when I venture at the comick style,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold

from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as aurictas and saxietas. Locke.

Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Atterbury.

To VENTURE, vên'tshûre. v. a.

1. To expose to hazard.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight; By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakspeare.

To give a hint more of the verbosities of this philosophy, a short view of a definition or two will be sufficient evidence. Glanville.

Homer is guilty of verbosity, and of a tedious prolix manner of speaking: he is the greatest talker of all antiquity. Broome.

VERDANT, vêr'dânt. adj. [verdoiant, Fr. viridans, Lat.] Green. This word is so lately naturalized, that Skinner could find it only in a dictionary.

Each odorous bushy shrub Fenc'd up by the verdant wall. Milton.

VERDERER, vêr'dêr-ûr.⁶⁶⁶ n. s. [verdier, French; viridarius, low Latin.] An officer in the forest.

VERDICT, vêr'dikt. n. s. [verum dictum, Latin.]

1. The determination of the jury declared to the judge.

Before the jury go together, 'tis all to nothing what the verdict shall be. Spenser.

They have a longing desire to overcome, and to have the verdict pass for them, be it right or wrong. Kettlewell.

2. Declaration; decision; judgment; opinion.

Deceived greatly they are, who think that all they whose names are cited amongst the favourers of this cause, are on any such verdict agreed. Hooker.

These were enormities condemned by the most natural verdict of common humanity; and so very gross and foul, that no man could pretend ignorance avoided. South.

A very likely matter, indeed, that the emperor should ask the Arians, whether they would be tried by the verdict of those who had before condemned the Arians by name. Waterland.

VERDIGRISE, vêr'dê-grêes.¹¹² n. s. The rust of brass, which in time being consumed and eaten with tallow, turneth into green; in Latin arugo; in French vert de gris, or the hoary green.

Brass turned into green, is called verdigrise. Peacham.

VERDIGRIS, vêr'dê-tûr. n. s. Chalk made green.

Verditure ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the faintest and palest green. Peacham.

VERDURE, vêr'jûre.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [verdure, French.] Green; green colour.

Its verdure clad Her universal face with pleasant green. Milton.

Let twisted olive bind those laurels fast, Whose verdure must for ever last. Prior.

VERDUROUS, vêr'jû-rûs.³¹⁴ adj. [from verdure.] Green; covered with green; decked with green.

Higher than their tops The verd'rous wall of paradise up-sprung; Which to our general sire gave prospect large. Milton.

There the lowing herds chew verd'rous pasture. Philips.

VERECUND, vêr'ê-kûnd. adj. [verecund, old French; verecundus, Lat.] Modest; bashful. Dict.

VERGE, vêrje. n. s. [verge, Fr. virga, Latin.]

1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean.

Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devouly lolling in his seat;
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
2. [vergo, Lat.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red hot steel to seer me to the brain. Shakespeare.

I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere to the furthest verge
That e'er was survey'd by English eye. Shaksp.
You are old:

Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shakespeare.

Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same watry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth. Milt.

Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryd.
Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison.

Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir
To sooth his care, and, free from noise and strife, Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.

3. In law.
Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round.
Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowell.

Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a ballow'd verge. Shakespeare.

To VERGE, vérje. v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend; to bend downward.

They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants, in respect of the pene-appulse; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left. Swift.

Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Arbuthnot.

Man,
Perhaps, acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal:
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.

VE'RGER, vér'jûr.⁹³ n. s. [from verge.]
He that carries the mace before the dean.

I can tip the verger with half a crown, and get into the best seat. Farquhar.

VERI'DICAL, vè-rid'è-kâl. adj. [veridicus, Lat.] Telling truth.

VERIFICA'TION, vér-è-fè-ká'shûn. n. s.
[from verify.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.

In verification of this we will mention a phenomenon of our engine. Boyle.

VE'RIFIER, vér-è-fi-ûr. n. s. [from verify.] One who assures a thing to be true.

To VE'RIFY, vér-è-fi. v. n. [verifier, French.] To justify against charge of falseness; to confirm; to prove true.

What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hooker.

This is verified by a number of examples, that whosoever is gained by an abusive treaty ought to be restored. Bacon.

So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton.

So spake this oracle, then verified
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Ev, Saw Satan fall. Milton.

Though you may mistake a year,
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verified'd at last. Swift.

Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal
there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift.

VE'RILY, vér-è-lè. adv. [from very.]

1. In truth; certainly.

Verily 'tis better to be lowly born,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief. Shaksp.

2. With great confidence.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavoureders of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded. Bacon.

By repealing the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift.

VERISI'MILAR, vér-è-sim-è-lâr.⁸⁸ } adj.

VERISI'MILOUS, vér-è-sim-è-lûs. } [veri-similis, Lat.] Probable; likely.

Many erroneous doctrines of pontificians are, in our days, wholly supported by verisimilous and probable reasons. White.

VERISIM'ITUDE, vér-è-sim-mil-è-tûde. }

VERISIM'ILITY, vér-è-sim-mil-è-tè. }

n. s. [verisimilitudo, Latin.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth.

Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown.

A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities,
at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed. Brown.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase;
but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery:
while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry. Glanville.

The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden.

Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden.

VE'RITABLE, vér-è-tâ-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [veritable,
French.] True; agreeable to fact.

Indeed! is 't true?

—Most veritable; therefore look to 't well. Shakespeare.

The presage of the year succeeding made from insects in oak apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown.

VE'RITABLY, vér-è-tâ-blè. adv. [from veritable.] In a true manner.

VE'RITY, vér-è-tè. n. s. [verité, French;
veritas, Latin.]

1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker.

I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise;
That's verity. Shakespeare.

The precipitancy of disputation, and the stir and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm insinuations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm. Glanville.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to instil that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls? Hooker.

If there come truth from them,
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare

Must virtue be preserved by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;

By this it seems to be a verity,

Since the effects so good and virtuous be. Davies.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VE'RJUICE, vér'jûs. n. s. [verjus, Fr.]

Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced verges.
Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. L'Estrange.

The barley-pudding comes in place:

Then bids fall on; himself, for saving echarges,
A peel'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd grass, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet. Philips.

VERMIC'ELLI, vér-mè-tshèl'è.³⁸⁸ n. s.

[Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,

She let him almost burst his belly. Prior.

VERMI'CLAR, vér-mik-ù-lâr.⁸⁸ adj. [vermiculus, Latin.] Acting like a worm;

continued from one part to another of the same body.

By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser parts are derived downwards, while the finer are squeezed into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels. Cheyne.

To VERMI'CLARIE, vér-mik-ù-lâre. v. a.

[vermicule, French; vermiculatus, Lat.]

My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation. Hale.

VE'RMICULE, vér-mè-kûle. n. s. [vermiculus, vermis, Latin.] A little grub, worm.

I saw the sining oak-ball iebncomon strike its terebra irtto an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein:
and hence are many vermicules seen toward the outside of these apples. Derham.

VERMI'CULOUS, vér-mik-ù-lûs. adj. [ver-miculosus, Latin.] Full of grubs; resembling grubs.

VERMIFORM, vér-mè-fôrm. adj. [vermi-forme, French; vermis and forma, Lat.]

Having the shape of a worm.

VE'RMIFUGE, vér-mè-fûdje. n. s. [from vermis and fugo, Latin.] Any medicine that destroys or expels worms.

VE'RMI, vér'mil. }

millon*, French.]

1. The cochineal; a grub of a particular plant.

2. Factitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury. This is the usual, though not primitive, signification. The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermillion by solution or calcination. Bacon.
The fairest and most principal red is vermillion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is. Peacham.

3. Any beautiful red colour.
How red the roses flush up in her cheeks, And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain, Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser.
There grew a goodly tree him fair beside, Laden with fruit and apples rosie red, As they in pure vermillion had been dy'd, Whereof great virtues over all were read. Spenser.
Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermillion. Dryden.

To VERMILION, vêr-mil'yûn. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red.
A sprightly red vermilions all her face, And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Granv.

VERMIN, vêr'mîn.¹⁴⁰ n. s. [vermin, Fr. vermis, Latin.]

1. Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.
What is your study?—
—How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Shakspeare.
The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weazels and polecats. Bacon.
An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf. Taylor.
A weazel taken in a trap was charged with misdemeanors, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence. L'Estrange.
Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field. Mortimer.
He that has so little wit To nourish vermin, may be bit. Swift.

2. It is used in contempt of human beings.
The stars determine You are my prisoners, base vermin. Hudibras.

VERMINOUS, vêr'mîn-ûs. adj. [from vermin.] Tending to vermin; disposed to breed vermin.
A wasting of children's flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body. Harvey.

VERMIPAROUS, vêr-mîp'pâ-rûs. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms.
Hereby they confound the generation of vermiparous animals with oviparous. Brown.

VERNACULAR, vêr-nâk'û-lâr. adj. [vernaculus, Latin.] Native; of one's own country.
London weekly bills number deep in consumptions; the same likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which instances do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England. Harvey.
The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoitred the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them. Addison.

VERNAL, vêr'nâl.⁸⁸ adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the spring.
With the year Seasons return; but not to me returns, Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose. Milton.

VERNANT, vêr'nânt. adj. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the spring.
Else had the spring Perpetual smil'd on earth, with vernant flow'rs, Equal in days and nights. Milton.

Their dull rihaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

U'GLY, ūg'lé. adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; whence Dier ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elph, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terror; and in Gothick ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakspeare.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.

V'IAL, vi'ál.⁸⁸ n. s. [φιάλη.] A small bottle.

You gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakspeare.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off. Shakspeare.

Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the ancient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Wilkins.

I placed a thin vial, well stopped up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addis.

Chemical waters, that are each transparent,
when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor,
when mixed in the same vial. Addison.

P' th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand. Shakspeare.

No matter, since They've left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Shakspeare.

These are not fruits forbidden; no interdict
Defends the touching of these viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such viands, had better to abstain. Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;
Viands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and savour; rich repast? Pope.

measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue ou its outward parts. Shakspeare.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakspeare.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be, and consequently must be a virtue. Wilkins.

Ungovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

Proud views and vain desires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptions, as hypocrisy in prayer, or vanity in alms. Law.

3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;

Who with dagger of Jath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil. Shakspeare.
His face made of brass, like a vice in a game. Tusser.

4. [vijis, Dutch.] A kind of small iron

VICONTIELS, vî'kônt-yêls. In law, vicontiel rents are certain farms for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.

VICTIM, vîk'tîm. n. s. [victima, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed, Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.

And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war, The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.

2. Something destroyed.

Behold where age's wretched victim lies; See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.

VICTOR, vîk'tûr.¹⁸⁶ n. s. [victor, Lat.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms; not the victor of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Cæsar was in general a great victor, but that he was victor at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield; Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought; Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind, Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakspere.
Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar. Shakspere.

Say where and when Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milton.

Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon, That pleas'd so well our victor's ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume, And now the victors fall. Denham.

In love, the victors from the vanquish'd fly; They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

Fortune's unjust; she ruins oft the brave, And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.

Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger; Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends, And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends. Pope.

VICTORIOUS, vîk-tô'rè-ûs. adj. [victorieux, French.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Haywood.

The Son return'd victorious with his saints. Milton.

That happy sun, said he, will rise again, Who twice victorious did our navy see: And I alone must view him rise in vain,

Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away, And curst for ever this victorious day. Pope.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths; Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shaksp.

VICTORIOUSLY, vîk-tô'rè-ûs-ié. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VICTORIOUSNESS, vîk-tô'rè-ûs-nês. n. s. [from victorious.] The state or quality of being victorious.

VICTORY, vîk'tûr-é.¹⁸⁷ n. s. [victoria, Latin.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

At his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him. Shakspere.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend, With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification, and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.

VICTRESS, vîk'três. n. s. [from victor.] A female that conquers. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed; And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's Cæsar. Shakspere.

VICTUAL, vî'tl.⁴⁰⁵ } n. s. [victualls.
VICTUALS, vî'tlîz.⁴⁰³ } French; vittuaglia, Italian.] Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.

Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced. He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot.
You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shakspere.
A huge great flagon full I bore, And, in a good large knapsack, victles store. Chapman.

He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual. Knolles.

They, unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea by a storm. King Charles.

To VICTUAL, vî'tl. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.

Talbot, farewel,

I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shakspeare.
VICTUALLER, vit'ul-úr. n. s. [from victuals.]

1. One who provides victuals.

They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things necessary.

Their conquest half is to the victualler due.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

To VIE, vi²⁷⁰ v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]

1. To show or practise in competition.

They vie power and expence with those that are too high.

You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions.

2. In this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.

She hung about my neck, and kiss and kiss
 She viéd so fast,

That in a twink she won me to her love. Shaksp.

To VIE, vi. v. n. To contest; to contend;
 to strive for superiority.

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to vie with the best of their family.

ination.

Go, and view the country.

Th' almighty Father bent down his eye,
 His own works and their works at once to view.

View not this spire by measures giv'n
 To buildings rais'd by common hands

Whene'er we view some well proportion'd dome,
 No single parts unqually surprize;

All comes united to th' admiring eyes.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.

They here with eyes aghast View'd first their lamentable lot,

No more I hear, no more I view;
 The phantom flies me, as unkind as you.

VIEW, vù. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prospect.

You should tread a course Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply, near
 The residence of Posthumus.

Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the utermost objects, are condemned by good authors.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view.

Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
 You'll wish your hill a shelter'd hill again.

2. Sight; power of beholding.

I go, to take for ever from your view,
 Both the lov'd object, and the hated too.

These things duly weighed, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty.

Instruct me other joys to prize,
 With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
 Full in my view set all the bright abode,
 And make my soul quit Abelard for God.

3. Intellectual sight; mental ken.

Some safer resolution I've in view.

4. Act of seeing.

Th' unexpected sound
 Of dogs and men, his wakful ear does wound;
 Rouz'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
 Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
 Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view
 Confirms that more than all he fears is true.

5. Sight; eye.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote.

6. Survey; examination by the eye.

Time never will renew,
 While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
 Surveying nature with too nice a view.

7. Intellectual survey.

If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally.

8. Space that may be taken in by the eye;
reach of sight.

The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flew,
 When now the Trojan navy was in view.

9. Appearance; show.

In that accomplish'd mind,
 Helpt by the night, new graces find;
 Which, by the splendour of her view
 Dazzled, before we never knew.

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man!

11. Prospect of interest.

No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason.

12. Intention; design.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections.

With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt.

Fisher, the jesuit, in the year 1626, seconded the cardinal in the same plea, and upon the same views.

VIE'WER, vù'úr. n. s. [from view.] One who views.

VIE'WLESS, vù'lés. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not discernible by the sight.

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
 And blown with restless violence about
 The pendant world.

Each stair mysteriously was mcant, nor stood
 There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes Viewless.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair
 Repass'd, and viewless mix'd with common air.

Light-bounding from the earth, at once they rise;
 Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies.

VIGESIMA'TION, vi-jès-sé-má'shùn. n. s.
 [vigesimus, Lat.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man.

VIGIL, vid'jil. n. s. [vigilia, Lat.]

Shrines! where their vigils pale-eyed virgins keep,

And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep.

2. A fast kept before a holyday.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
 Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
 And say, to-morrow is St. Crispin.

And that, which on the Baptist's vigil sends
 To nymphs and swains the vision of their friends.

3. Service used on the night before a ho-lyday.

No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them.

The rivals call my muse another way,
 To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.

Though Venus and her son should spare
 Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;
 Yet Hymen may performe her vigils keep,
 And for another's joy suspend her sleep.

Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them.

VIGILANCE, vid'jil-ánsé. } n. s. [vigi- VIGILANCY, vid'jil-án-sé. } lance, Fr.
vigilantia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.

 Your deeds of war, and all our counsel dic?

In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilancy, and voluntary hazard of his person.

Of these the vigilance
 I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
 Of midnight vapour, glide obscure.

We are enabled to subdue all other creatures;
 and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog.

3. Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,
 That guard and most unusual vigilance
 Does not attend my taking.

In at this gate none pass
 The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
 Well known from heav'n.

VIGILANT, vid'jil-ánt. ⁸⁸ adj. [vigilans, Lat.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent;
 attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance.

Take your places and be vigilant:
 If any noise or soldier you perceive,
 Let us have knowledge.

The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls.

VIGILANTLY, vid'jil-ánt-lé. adv. [from vigi- lilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm.

I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.

VINDICA'TION, vîn-dè-kâ'shûn. n. s. [vindication, Fr. from vindicate.] Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Broome.

VINDI'CATIVE, vîn-dè-kâ-tiv.⁵¹² adj. [from vindicate.] Revengful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakspeare.

Public revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.

The fruits of adusted cholera, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. Howel.

Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Sprat.

Distinguish betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. L'Estrange.

VINDICA'TOR, vîn-dè-kâ-tûr.⁵²¹ n. s. [from vindicate.] One who vindicates; an assessor.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet. Dryden.

VINDICATORY, vîn-dè-kâ-tûr-è. adj. [from vindicator.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.

The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDI'CTIVE, vîn-dik'tiv. adj. [from vindicta, Lat.] Given to revenge; revengful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.

Suits are not reparative, but vindictive, when they are commenced against insolvent persons. Kettlewell.

VINE, vine. n. s. [vinea, Lat.] The plant that bears the grape.

The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose; the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each. The tree is climbing, sending forth claspers at the joints, by which it fastens itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1. The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape.

2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The parsley-leaved grape. 5. The miller's grape. This is called the Burgundy in England: the leaves of this sort are very much powdered with white in the spring, from whence it had the name of miller's grape. 6. Is what is called in Burgundy Pineau, and at Orleans, Auverna: it makes very good wine. 7. The white chasselas, or royal muscadine: it is a large white grape: the juice is very rich. 8. The black chasselas, or black muscadine: the juice is very rich.

9. The red chasselas, or red muscadine. 10. The burlake grape. 11. The white muscat, or white Frontiniae. 12. The red Frontiniae. 13. The black Frontiniae. 14. The damask grape. 15. grape. 23. The malmsey muscadine. 24. The red Hamburg grape. 25. The black Hamburg, or warmer grape. 26. The Switzerland grape. 27. The white muscat, or Frontiniae of Alexandria: called also the Jerusalem muscat and gross muscat. 28. The red muscat, or Frontiniae of Alexandria. 29. The white melie grape. 30. The white morillon. 31. The Alicant grape. 32. The white Auvernat. 33. The grey Auvernat. 34. The raisin muscat. The late duke of Tuscany, who was very curious in collecting all the sorts of Italian and Greek grapes into his vineyards, was possessed of upwards of three hundred several varieties. Miller.

The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry. Spenser.

In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants. Shakspeare.
The captain left of the poor to be vine dressers. 2 Kings.

Depending vines the shelving cavern screen,
With purple clusters blushing through the green. Pope.

VINEFRET'TER, vine-frèt'ûr. n. s. [from vine and fret.] A worm that eats vine leaves.

VINEGAR, vîn'nè-gûr.⁸⁸ n. s. [vinaigre, French.]

1. Wine grown sour; eager wine.

Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhale'd. Bacon.
Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.

Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakspeare.

VINEYARD, vîn'yêrd.^{91 518} n. s. [vin-garð, Saxon.] A ground planted with vines.

Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barb'rous people. Shakspeare.

Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards seat them all home, again. Clarendon.

VINNEWED, or Vinney, vîn'nûde. adj.

Mouidy. Ainsworth.

VINOUS, vîn'ûs.³¹⁴ adj. [from vinum, Lat.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit. Boyle.

Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire A vinous flavour. Philips.

VINTAGE, vîn'tidje.⁹⁰ n. s. [vinage, Fr.]

The produce of the vine for the year; the time in which grapes are gathered.

The best wines are in the driest vintages. Bacon.
Our first success in war make Bacchus crown,
And half the vintage of the year our own. Waller.

VINTAGER, vîn'tâ-jûr. n. s. [from vintage.] He who gathers the vintage. Ainsworth.

VINTNER, vînt'nûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from vinum, Lat.] One who sells wine.

The vintner may draw what religion he pleases. Howel.

The vintner, by mixing poison with his wines, destroys more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.

VINTRY, vînt'rè. n. s. The place where wine is sold. Ainsworth.

VIOLE, vi'ûl.¹⁶³ n. s. [violle, French; viola, Ital.] A stringed instrument of musick.

My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol, or a harp. Shakspeare.
To strain a string, stop it with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols. Bacon.
The trembling lute some touch, some strain the viol best. Drayton.
Loud o'er the rest Cremona's trump doth sound;
Me softer airs hefit, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things.
Milton.

VI'OLABLE, vi'ò-lá-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [from violabilis, Lat.] Such as may be violated or hurt.

VIOLA'CEOUS, vi-ò-lá'shùs. adj. [from viola, Lat.] Resembling violets.

TO VI'OLATE, vi'ò-láte.⁹¹ v. a. [violato, Lat.]

1. To injure; to hurt.

I question thy hold entrance,
Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss.
Milton.

Kindness for man, and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss, and yet not violate. Dryden.
Cease

To know, what known will violate thy peace. Pope.

2. To infringe; to break any thing venerable.

Some of violated vows
'Twixt the souls of friend and friend. Shakspeare.
Those offences which are by their special qualities breaches of supernatural laws, do also, for that they are generally evil, violate in general that principle of reason, which willeth universally to fly from evil. Hooker.

Those reasonings which, by violating common sense, tend to subvert every principle of rational belief, to sap the foundations of truth and science, and to leave the mind exposed to all the horrors of scepticism. Beattie.

3. To injure by irreverence.

I would violate my own arm rather than a church.
Brown.
Forbidden to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.

4. To ravish; to deflower.

The Sabine's violated charms Obscur'd the glory of his rising arms. Prior.

VIOLA'TION, vi-ò-lá'shùn.¹⁷⁰ n. s. [violatio, Latin.]

1. Infringement or injury of something sacred or venerable.

Their right conceit that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect, as touching the course of their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

Men, who had no other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.

2. Rape; the act of deflouring.

If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakspeare.

VIOLA'TOR, vi'ò-lá-túr.⁸²¹ n. s. [violator, Latin.]

1. One who injures or infringes something sacred.

Many such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the curse that never fails to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them! South.

2. A ravisher.

Angelo is an adult'rous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakspeare.

How does she subject herself to the violator's upbraidings and insults! Clarissa.

VI'OLENCE, vi'ò-lénse.¹⁷⁰ n. s. [violentia, Latin.]

1. Force; strength applied to any purpose.

To be imprison'd in the viewless wind,
And blown with restless violence about. Shakspeare.

All the elements
At least had gone to wreck, disturb'd and torn

With violence of this conflict, had not soon

Th' Eternal hung his golden scales. Milton.

2. An attack; an assault; a murder.

A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me:
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shaksp.

3. Outrage; unjust force.

Griev'd at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh Corrupting each their way. Milton.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

That seal
You ask for with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakspeare.

5. Injury; infringement.

We cannot, without offering violence to all records divine and human, deny an universal deluge.
Burnet.

6. forcible deforation.

VI'OLENT, vi'ò-lént.²⁸⁷ adj. [violentus, Latin.]

1. forcible; acting with strength.

A violent cross wind blows. Milton.

2. Produced, or continued by force.

The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be looked upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual.
Burnet.

3. Not natural, but brought by force.

Conqueror death discovers them scarce men;
Violent or shameful death their due reward. Milton.

4. Assailant; acting by force.

Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life.
Shakspeare.
Milton.

A foe subtle or violent.

5. Unseasonably vehement.

We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would storm and repine thereat. Hooker.
The covetous extortioner should remember, that such violent shall not take heaven, but hell, by force. Decay of Piety.

6. Extorted; not voluntary.

How soon usay
Vows made in pain, as violent and void! Milton.

VI'OLENTLY, vi'ò-lént-lé. adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.

Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspeare.

Flame burneth more violently towards the sides, than in the midst. Bacon.

Ancient privileges must not, without great necessities, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor.

VI'OLEY, vi'ò-lét.^{170 287} n. s. [violette, Fr. viola, Latin.] A flower.

It hath a polypetalous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones the wings; but the lower one, which ends in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a three-cornered fruit opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakspeare.

Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,
By slow Meander's margent green,
And in the violet-embroider'd vale. Milton.

It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only;
and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.

VI'OLIN, vi-ò-lín.⁸²⁰ n. s. [violon, French; from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of musick.

Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins and lutes. Sandys.

Their jealous pangs and desperation,
For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.

VI'OLIST, vi'ò-list. n. s. [from viol.] A player on the viol.

VIOLONCE' LLO, vè-ò-lôn-tshél'ò.³⁸⁸ n. s. [Italian.] A stringed instrument of musick.

VI'PER, vi'pâr.⁹⁸ n. s. [vipera, Latin.]

1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which many are poisonous.

A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts.

He 'll gall of wasps with thirsty lips suck in;
The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin.

Sandys.

Viper-catchers have a remedy, in which they place such great confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture.
This is no other than axungia viperina, presently rubbed into the wound. Derham.

2. Any thing mischievous.

Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakspeare.

VI'PERINE, vi'pâr-ine.¹⁴⁹ adj. [viperinus, Latin.] Belonging to a viper.

VI'PEROUS, vi'pâr-ús.³¹⁴ adj. [vipereus, Latin; from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.

My tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a vip'rous worm,
That gnaws the howels of the commonwealth.

Shakspeare.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This vip'rous traitor. Shakspeare.

Some vip'rous critic may bereave
Th' opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel.

VI'PER'S BUGLOSS, vi-pâr-z-bûg'lôs. n. s. [echium, Latin.] A plant.

Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.

1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.

Melpomene is represented like a virago, or manly lady, with a majestic and grave countenance.

Peacham.

To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.

2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.

VI'RELAY, vi'rè-lá. n. s. [virelay, virelai, French.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes and short verses, with stops. L'Acad.

The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask,
As she was wont in youth and summer days;
But if thou algate lust like virelays,
And looser songs of love to undersong. Spenser.

The band of flutes began to play,
To which a lady sung a virelay:
And still at every close she would repeat
The burden of the song, The daisy is so sweet.

Dryden.

VI'RÉNT, vi'rènt. adj. [virens, Latin.]
Green; not faded.

In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown.

ter verge, from verge, Fr.] A dean's mace.

Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver virge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side.

Swift.

VIRGIN, vē'r'jîn.¹⁰⁸ n. s. [vierge, Fr. virgo, Latin.]

1. A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.

This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. Shakspeare.

Senseless bauble!
Art thou a feodary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Shakspeare.

The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Genesis.
Angelo is an adult'rous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakspeare.

Much less can that have any place,
At which a virgin hides her face. Cowley.

2. A woman not a mother. Unusual.

Likest to Ceres in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton.

3. Any thing untouched or unmingled;
any thing pure: as, virgin honey.

Tapers of white wax, commonly called virgin wax, burn with less smoke than common yellow wax. Boyle.

I have found virgin earth in the peat-marshes of Cheshire. Woodward.

Below the upper was a deep hed of sand only,
which I weighed, together with the virgin-mould. Derham.

4. The sign of the zodiack in which the sun is in August.

Thence down amain by Leo and the Virgin. Milton.

VIRGIN, vē'r'jîn.²³⁷ adj. Befitting a virgin; suitable to a virgin; maidenly.

Can you blame her then, being a maid, yet roscd over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy? Shaksp.
What says the silver with her virgin hue? Shakspeare.

With ease a brother overcame
The formal decencies of virgin shame. Cowley.

As I look upon you all to be so many great blessings of a married state; so I leave it to your choice either to do as I have done, or to aspire after higher degrees of perfection in a virgin state of life. Law.

To VIRGIN, vē'r'jîn. v. n. [a cant word.]
To play the virgin.

A kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge,
I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakspeare.

VIRGINAL, vē'r'jîn-â-l.⁵⁸ adj. [from virgin.]
Maiden; maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.

On the earth more fair was never seen,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Fairy Queen.

Tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclains,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shaksp.

Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hammond

To VIRGINAL, vē'r'jîn-â-l. v. n. To pat;
to strike as on the virginal. A cant word.

Still virginaling upon thy palm. Shakspeare.

VIRGINAL, vē'r'jîn-â-l. n. s. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.

The musician hath produced two means of straining strings. The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and virginals.
Bacon.

VIRGINITY, vē'r'jîn-ê-tê. n. s. [virginitas, Latin.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.

You do impeach your modesty too much,

To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakspeare.

Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen in order to the conveniences of religion, and separation from worldly incumbrances. Taylor.

VIRILE, vî'ril.¹⁴⁰ adj. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile; not feminine.

VIRILITY, vî-rîl-ê-tê, or vè-rîl-ê-tê.²³⁸ n. s.

1. Manhood; character of man.

The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Rambler.

2. Power of procreation.

The great climacterical was past, before they hegat children, or gave any testimony of their virility; for none hegat children before the age of sixty-five. Brown.

VIRMILION, vē'r-mîl'yûn. n. s. [properly
vermilion.] A red colour.

Egle, the fairest Nais of the flood,
With a vermilion dye his temples stain'd. Roscommon.

VIRTUAL, vē'r'tshù-â-l.⁸⁸ adj. [virtuel, Fr.
from virtue.] Having the efficacy without the sensible or material part.

Metalline waters have virtual cold in them. Put therefore wood into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance. Bacon.

Love not the heav'nly spirits? And how their love Express they? by looks only? or, do they mix Irradiance? virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual pow'r, and warm'd. Milton.

Neither an actual or virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts. Stillingfleet.

VIRTUALITY, vîr-tshù-â-l-ê-tê. n. s. [from virtual.] Efficacy.

In one grain of corn there lieth dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears. Brown.

VIRTUALLY, vē'r'tshù-â-l-ê. adv. [from virtual.] In effect, though not materially.

They are virtually contained in other words still continued. Hammond.

Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people virtually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey. Addison.

To VIRTUATE, vē'r'tshù-â-tê. v. a. [from virtue.] To make efficacious. Not used.

Potable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the innate heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said essentials. Harvey.

VIRTUE, vē'r'tshù.¹⁰⁸ ⁴⁶¹ n. s. [virtus,
Latin.]

1. Moral goodness: opposed to vice.

Either I'm mistaken, or there is virtue in that Falstaff. Shakspeare.

If there's a power above us,
And that there is, all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue,
And that which he delights in must be happy. Addison.

Virtue only makes our bliss below. Pope.
The character of prince Henry is improved by Shakspeare; and through the veil of his vices and irregularities, we see a dawn of greatness and virtue. Shakspeare Illustrated.

2. A particular moral excellence.

In Belmont is a lady,
And she is fair, and fairer than that word,
Of wond'rous virtues. Shakspeare.

Remember all his virtues,
And shew mankind that goodness is your care. Addison

3. Medicinal quality.

All blest secrets,
All you unpublsh'd virtues of the earth,
Be aidant and remediate. Shakspeare.

The virtuous bezour is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue from those that feed in the vallies. Bacon.

4. Medicinal efficacy.

An essay writer must practise the chymical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Addison.

5. Efficacy; power. Before virtue is used sometimes by and sometimes in; by in virtue is meant in consequence of the virtue.

If neither words nor herbs will do, I'll try stones, for there's a virtue in them. L'Estrange.

Where there is a full purpose to please God,
there, what a man can do, shall, by virtue thereof,
he accepted. South.

They are not sure by virtue of syllogism, that the conclusion certainly follows from the premises. Locke.

This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise made by God; and partly in virtue of piety. Atterbury.

He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.

6. Acting power.

Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about. Mark.

7. Secret agency; efficacy, without visible or material action.

She moves the body, which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.

8. Bravery; valour.

Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers Took their discharge. Shakspeare.

The conquest of Palestine with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh.

9. Excellence, that which gives excellence.

In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the œconomy of poems is better observed than in Terence;
who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests. Ben Jonson.

10. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.

Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, pow'rs. Milton.

A winged virtue through th' etherial sky,
From orb to orb unweari'd dost thou fly. Tickel.

VIRTUELESS, vē'r'tshù-lês. adj. [from virtue.]

1. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.
2. Not having efficacy; without operating qualities.

All second causes, together with nature herself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtueless, and dead. Raleigh.

Virtueless she wish'd all herbs and charms,
Wherewith false men increase their patients' harms. Fairfax.

Some would make those glorious creatures virtue-less. Hakewill.

VIRTUOSO, vē'r-tshù-ò'sò. n. s. [Italian.]

A man skilled in antique or natural curiosities; a man studious of painting, statuary, or architecture.

Methinks those generous virtuosi dwell in a higher region than other mortals. Glanville.

Virtuoso, the Italians call a man who loves the noble arts, and is a critick in them. And amongst our French painters, the word vertueux is understood in the same signification. Dryden.

This building was beheld with admiration by the virtuosi of that time. Tatler.

Showers of rain are now met with in every water-work; and the virtuosos of France covered a little vault with artificial snow. Addison.

VIRTUOUS, vēr'tshù-ús.⁴⁶³ adj. [from virtue.]

1. Morally good; applied to persons and practices.

If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakspeare.

Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror. Shaksp.

What she wills to do or say,

Is wisest, virtuouslest, discreetest, best. Milton.

Favour'd of heav'n, who finds

One virtuous rarely found,

That in domestick good combines:

Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth.

Since there is that necessity of it for God's service, and all virtuous ends, it cannot in its own nature be a thing offensive and unlawful to us.

Kettleworth.

2. [applied to a woman.] Chaste.
Mistress Ford, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband!

Shakspeare.

3. Done in consequence of moral goodness.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind. Dryden.

Consider how often, how powerfully you are called to a virtuous life, and what great and glorious things God has done for you, and to make you in love with every thing that can promote his glory.

Law.

4. Efficacious; powerful.
Before her gates, hill-wolves and lions lay;
Which, with her virtuous drugs so tame she made,
That wolf, nor lion, would one man invade.

Chapman.

With one virtuous touch, th' arch-chemic sun

Produces with terrestrial humour mix'd,

Here in the dark, so many precious things. Milton.

5. Having wonderful or eminent properties.
Out of his hand,
That virtuous steel he rudely snatch'd away.

Spenser.

Lifting up his virtuous staff on high,

He smote the sea, which calmed was with speed.

Spenser.

He own'd that virtuous ring and glass.

Milton.

6. Having medicinal qualities.
Some observe that there is a virtuous bezoar, and another without virtue; the virtuous is taken from the beast that feedeth where there are theriacal herbs; and that without virtue, from those that feed where no such herbs are. Bacon.

The ladies sought around

For virtuous herbs; which, gather'd from the ground,
They squeeze'd the juice, and cooling ointment made.

Dryden.

VIRTUOUSLY, vēr'tshù-ús-lé. adv. [from virtuous.] In a virtuous manner; according to the rules of virtue.

The gods are my witnesses, I desire to do virtuously.

In sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live.

Hooker.

They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,

The devil their virtue tempts not, they tempt heav'n.

Shakspeare.

Not from gray hairs authority doth flow,

Nor from bald heads, nor from a wrinkled brow;

But our past life, when virtuously spent,

Must to our age those happy fruits present. Denham.

The coffeeeman has a little daughter four years old, who has been virtuously educated. Addison.

Hooker.

Shakspeare.

Denham.

Addison.

VIRTUOUSNESS, vēr'tshù-ús-nés. n. s. [from virtuous.] The state or character of being virtuous.

Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britomert; and virtuousness of Belphæbe; and the lasciviousness of Helenora. Spenser.

VIRULENCE, vir'ù-lénse.¹¹⁰ n. s. [from VIRULENCY, vir'ù-lén-sé.¹¹⁰ } virulent.]

Mental poison; malignity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.

Disputes in religion are managed with virulence and bitterness. Decay of Piety.

Men by unworthy malice and impotent virulence had highly disoblged him. Fell.

It instils into their minds the utmost virulence, instead of that charity which is the perfection and ornament of religion. Addison.

The whigs might easily have maintained a majority among the clergy, if they had not too much encouraged intemperance of speech, and virulence of pen, in the most prostitute of their party. Swift.

VIRULENT, vir'ù-lént.¹¹⁰ adj. [virulent, Fr. virulentus, Latin.]

1. Poisonous; venomous.

2. Poisoned in the mind; bitter; malignant.

VIRULENTLY, vir'ù-lént-lé. adv. [from virulent.] Malignantly; with bitterness.

VISAGE, viz'idje.⁹⁰ n. s. [visage, French; visaggio, Italian.] Face; countenance; look. It is now rarely used but with some ideas of dislike or horreur.

Phebe doth behold

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,

Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass.

Shakspeare.

When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails,

She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Shakspeare.

Wheretoe serves mercy,

But to confront the visage of offence? Shakspeare.

With hostile frown,

And visage all inflam'd, first thus began. Milton.

By the rout, that made the hideous roar,

His gory visage down the stream was sent;

Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore. Milton.

Love and beauty still that visage grace;

Death cannot fright 'em from their wonted place. Waller.

TO VISCERATE, vis'sè-râte. v. a. [viscera, Latin.] To embowel; to exenterate.

VISCID, vis'sid. adj. [viscidus, Latin.]

Glutinous; tenacious.

VISCIDITY, vè-sid'é-té. n. s. [from viscid.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.

This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the *viscid*ity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbuthnot.

2. Glutinous concretion.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the *viscid*ities by their stypticity. Floyer.

VISCOUSITY, vis-kòs'é-té. n. s. [viscosité, French; from viscous.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.

The air being mixed with the animal fluids determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscosity, tenuity. Arbuthnot.

2. A glutinous substance.

A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrups, and seminal viscosities. Brown.

VISCOUS, vi'kòunt.⁴⁶⁸ n. s. [vicecomes, Latin.]

Viscount signifies as much as sheriff; between which two words there is no other difference, but that the one comes from our conquerors the Normans, and the other from our ancestors the Saxons.

Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us till Henry VI. his days. Cowell.

VISCO'UNTESS, vi'kòunt-ès. n. s. [from viscount. Viscount and viscountess are pronounced vicount and vicountess.]

The lady of a viscount; a peeress of the fourth order.

VISCIOUS, vis'kùs.³¹⁴ adj. [visqueux, Fr. viscosus, Latin.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious.

The cause of the scouring virtue of nitre is, that it hath a subtle spirit, which severeth and divideth any thing that is foul and viscous. Bacon.

Holly is of so viscous a juice as they make birdlime of the bark. Bacon.

VISIBILITY, viz-è-bil'é-té. n. s. [visibilité, French; from visible.]

1. The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.

The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.

2. State of being apparent, or openly discoverable; conspicuousness.

They produced this as an instance against the perpetual visibility of the church, and he brings it to prove that it ceased to be a true church. Stillfleet.

In these, the visibility and example of our virtues will chiefly consist. Rogers.

VISIBLÉ, viz'è-bl. n. s. Perceptibility by the eye.

Visibles work upon a looking-glass, which is like the pupil of the eye; and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble the cavern of the ear. Bacon.

VISIBLE, viz'è-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [visible, French; visibilis, Latin.]

1. Perceptible by the eye.

On this mount he appeared; under this tree

Stood visible; and I

Here with him at this fountain talk'd. Milton.

Each thought was visible, that roll'd within,

As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with great advantage; but if he degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

What's true beauty but fair virtue's face,

Virtue made visible in outward grace? Young.

2. Discovered to the eye.

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits

Send quickly down to tame the vile offences,

Humanity must perforce prey on itself,

Like monsters of the deep. Shakspeare.

3. Apparent; open; conspicuous.

The factions at court were greater, or more visible than before. Clarendon.

VISIBLÉNESS, viz'è-bl-nés. n. s. [from visible.] State or quality of being visible.

VISIBLY, viz'è-blé. adv. [from visible.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatenings: enough to see the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VISION, vizh'ún.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [vision, French; visio, Latin.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton.

2. The act of seeing.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this; or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is odious; No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange Sidney.
Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision. Shakspeare.

God's mother deigned to appear to me; And, in a vision, full of majesty Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakspeare.
Him God vouchsaf'd

To call by vision, from his father's house, Into a land which he will shew him. Milton.

4. A dream; something shown in a dream. A dream happens to a sleeping; a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supposed natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again: The murder's come; now help, or I am slain! 'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Dryden.

The idea of any thing in our mind no more proves the existence of that thing, than the visions of a dream make a true history. Locke.

VI'SIONARY, vizh'ûn-â-rè. adj. [visionnaire, French; from vision.]

1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

No more these scenes my meditation aid, Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

2. Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The bounds at nearer distance hoarsely Bray'd; The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

If you have any skill in dreams, let me know whether I have the same place in the real heart, that I had in the visionary one. Addison.

Our victories only led us to further visionary prospects; advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which success had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

VI'SIONARY, vizh'ûn-â-rè. } n. s. [visionnaire, Fr.]

VI'SIONIST, vizh'ûn-îst. } One whose imagination is disturbed.

This account exceeded all the Noctambuli or visionaries I have met with. Turner.

When God visiteth, what shall I answer him? Job.

Thou shalt be visited of the Lord with thunder. Isaiah.

God visit thee in good things. Judith.

That venerable body is in little concern after what manner their mortal enemies intend to treat them, whenever God shall visit us with so fatal an event. Swift.

3. To salute with a present.

Samson visited his wife with a kid. Judges.

4. To come to survey, with judicial authority.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person. Ayliffe.

To VISIT, viz'it. v. n. To keep up the intercourse of ceremonial salutations at the houses of each other.

Whilst she was under her mother she was forced to be genteel, to live in ceremony, to sit up late at nights, to be in the folly of every fashion, and always visiting on Sundays. Law.

VISIT, viz'it. v. n. [visite, French; from the verb.] The act of going to see another.

In a designed or accidental visit, let some one take a book, which may be agreeable, and read in it. Watts.

If this woman would make fewer visits, or not be always talkative, they would neither of them find it half so hard to be affected with religion. Law.

VISITABLE, viz'è-tâ-bl. adj. [from visit.]

Liable to be visited. All hospitals built since the reformation, are visitable by the king or lord chancellor. Ayliffe.

VISITANT, viz'è-tânt. n. s. [from visit.]

One who goes to see another.

He alone To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way, Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve, While the great visitant approach'd, thus spake. Milton.

One visit begins an acquaintance; and when the visitant comes again, he is no more a stranger. South.

Edward the first, who had been a visitant in Spain, upon action in the Holy Land, fixed both our pounds by the measures of the cast. Arbutnot.
Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate, Instant he flew. Pope.

Acquainted with the world, and quite well bred, Drusa receives her visitants in bed. Young.

VISITATION, viz'è-tâ'shûn. n. s. [visito, Latin.]

1. The act of visiting.

He comes not Like to his father's greatness; his approach, So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us, 'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd By need and accident. Shakspeare.

What would you with the princess?— —Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakspeare.

2. Object of visits.

O flow'rs, My early visitation, and my last. Milton.

3. [visitation, French.] Judicial visit or perambulation.

Your grace, in your metropolitical visitation, hath begun a good work, in taking this into your religious consideration; and you have endeavoured a reformation. White.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not hurten his churches; and then ought to send his archdeacon, which was the original of the archdeacon's visitation. Ayliffe.

4. Judicial evil sent by God; state of suffering judicial evil.

That which thou dost not understand when thou readeest, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity. Taylor.

5. Communication of divine love.

The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VISITATORIAL, viz'è-tâ-tò-rè-âl. adj. [from visitor.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry: but others say that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per modum simplicis scrutinii, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe.

VISITER, viz'it-tûr. n. s. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.

Here's ado to lock up honesty and honour from the access of gentle visitors. Shakspeare.

You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors. Shakspeare.
Consumptives of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their intent of going here and there. Harvey.

I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visiter, if I were not able to hire him with a hottle of wine. Swift.

2. [visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge; one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visitors expelled the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possessed themselves of their colleges. Wotton.

To him you must your sickly state refer; Your charter claims him as your visiter. Garth.

Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses. Swift.

VISIVE, vis'iv. ¹⁴⁰ ¹⁵⁷ ⁴²⁸ adj. [visif, French; visus, Latin.] Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane; but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Brown.

VISINOMY, viz'nò-mè. n. s. [corrupted from physiognomy.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve gods do sit around in royal state, And Jove in midst with awful majesty,
To judge the strife between them stirred late:
Each of the gods by his like visinomy
Each to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial. Spenser.

VISOR, viz'ûr. ¹⁸⁸ n. s. [This word is variously written visard, visar, visor, vizard, vizor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visus, and concurring with visage, a kindred word: visiere, Fr.]

A mask used to disfigure and disguise. See VIZARD.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me; and my weaker government since, makes you pull off the visor. Sidney.

This loutish clown is such that you never saw so ill-favoured a visar; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

By which deceit doth mask in visor fair, And cast her colours dyed deep in grain,
To seem like truth, who shape she well can fain. Spenser.

But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakspeare.

One visor remains.

And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing.

Shakspeare.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a head-piece, or visor.

Broome.

Swarms of knaves the visor quite disgrace,
And hide secure behind a naked face.

Young

VI'SORED, viz'úr'd.³⁵⁹ adj. [from visor.]

Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!

Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood and base forgery?

Milton.

VISTA, vis'tá. n. s. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through.

Addison.

The finish'd garden to the view
Its vistas opens, and its alleys green.

Thomson.

VI'SUAL, vizh'ú-ál.⁴⁶¹ adj. [visuel, Fr.]

Used in sight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye thrust forth so as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight.

Bacon.

Nor think my hurt offends me; for my sire
Can sooner repose in it the visual fire.

Chapman.

The air,
No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far.

Milton.

Then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
The visual nerve; for he had much to see.

Milton.

VITAL, ví'tál.⁵⁵ adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.

His heart, broken with unkindness and affliction, stretched so far beyond his limits with this excess of comfort, as it was able no longer to keep safe his vital spirits.

Sidney.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air.

Pope.

2. Relating to life.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach.

Shakspeare.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel a-pace.

Dryden.

3. Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout;
Vital in every part; not as frail man,
In intrails, heart, or head, liver or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die.

Milton.

On the watry calm
His brooding wings the spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mass.

Milton.

4. Being the seat of life.

The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part.

Pope.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal; but the progression thereto to be measured by rule.

Brown.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know, grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art.

Bishop Corbet.

VITALITY, vi-tál'è-tè. n. s. [from vital.]

Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God.

Raleigh.

For the security of species produced only by seed, providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that if by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years.

Ray.

VI'TALLY, ví'tál-è. adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent maker.

Bentley.

VI'TALS, ví'tálz. n. s. [Without the singular.] Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away.

Philips.

VI'TELLARY, vi-tèl'lár-è. n. s. [from vitellus, Latin.] The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white.

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitellary or place of the yolk is very high.

Brown.

To VI'TIATE, vish'è-áte. v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature before she was vitiated by luxury.

Evelyn.

The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters.

Holder.

Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers.

Harvey.

This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure.

Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, *vitiate*s baptism.

Ayliffe.

VITIA'TION, vish'è-á'shùn. n. s. [from vitiate.] Depravation; corruption.

VITILITIGAT'ION, vi-tè-lit-tè-gá'shùn. n. s. [from vitilitigate.] Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you, by right ratiocination,
To leave your vitiligation.

Hudibras.

VITIO'SITY, vish'è-òs'è-tè. n. s. [from vitiosus, Latin.] Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful.

South.

VITIOUS, vish'ús.⁴⁶¹ adj. [vicieus, Fr. vitiosus, Latin.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions. It is used of persons and practices.

Make known

It is no vitious blot, murder, or foulness
That hath depriv'd me of your grace.

Shakspeare.

Witness th' irreverent son

Of him who built the ark; who for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,

'Servant of servants,' on his vitious race.

Milton.

Wit's what the vitious fear, the virtuous shun;

By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone.

Pope.

No troops abroad are so ill disciplined as the English; which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the vitious example of their leaders.

Swift.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.

When vitious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointness.

B. Jonson.

Here, from the vitious air and sickly skies,

A plague did on the dumb creation rise.

Dryden.

VI'TIOUSLY, vish'ús-lè. adv. [from vitious.]

Not virtuously; corruptly.

VI'TIOUSNESS, vish'ús-nès. n. s. [from vitious.] Corruptness; state of being vitious.

When we in our vitiousness grow hard,
The wise gods seal our eyes.

Shakspeare.

What makes a governor justly despised is vitiousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue and the ruler's scepter with authority.

South.

VI'TREOUS, ví'trè-ús. adj. [vitré, Fr. vitreus, Latin.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina.

Ray.

When the phlegm is too viscid, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state: this viscid phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuete of the ancients.

Arbuthnot.

VI'TREOUSNESS, ví'trè-ús-nès. n. s. [from vitreous.] Resemblance of glass.

VI'TRIFICABLE, vé-triffè-ká-bl. adj. [from vitricate.] Convertible into glass.

To VITRIFICATE, vé-triffè-káte. v. a. [vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

We have metals vitricated, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass.

Bacon.

VITRIFICAT'ION, ví'trè-fè-ká'shùn. n. s. [vitrication, French; from vitricate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.

For vitrication likewise, what metals will endure it? Also because vitrication is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrication will admit of turning back again, and what not?

Bacon.

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrication of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrication of brick and metals.

Bacon.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrication, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems.

Boyle.

To VI'TRIFY, ví'trè-fi.¹⁸³ v. a. [vitriifier, French; vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitriify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitriified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough.

Bacon.

Iron-flag, vitriified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agats.

Woodward.

To VI'TRIFY, ví'trè-fi. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitriify in the fire: for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass.

Arbuthnot.

VI'TRIOL, ví'trè-úl.¹⁶⁰ n. s. [vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Latin.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt.

Woodward.

I rubbed it with a vitriol-stone.

Wiseman.

VI'TRIOLATE, ví'trè-ò-láte. } adj.

VI'TRIOLATED, ví'trè-ò-lá-téd. } [vitriolé, French; from vitriolum, Latin.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water. Bacon.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolate corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their occasions constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolate colour. Boyle.

VITRIOLICK, vit-tré-ô-l'ik. } adj. [vitriolique, Fr from vitriolum, Latin.] Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

Copperose of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after ablation, be attracted by the loadstone: and therefore whether those shooting salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vitriolous spirits fixed unto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question. Brown.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixed with a smatch of a vitriolic. Grew. By over-fermentation or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp, as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity. Floyer.

VITULINE, vit'tshù-line.¹⁴⁹ adj. [vitulinus, Latin.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal. Bailey.

VIVIFICK, vi-vif'ik.^{138 509} adj. [vivifique, French; vivificus, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and vivifick beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.

To VIVIFY, vi-vè-fi.¹³⁸ v. a. [vivifier, French; vivus and facio, Latin.] To make alive; to animate; to endure with life.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would show that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Bacon. Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment. Harvey.

VIVIPAROUS, vi-vip'pâ-rûs.¹³⁸ adj. [vivus and pario, Latin.] Bringing the young alive; opposed to oviparous.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exclusion. Brown.

Their species might continue, though they had been viviparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers. More.

If birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them. Ray.

VIXEN, vik's'd.¹⁰³ n. s.

Vixen, or fixen, is the name of a she-fox: otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to a she-fox. Verstegan.

O! when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd; She was a vixen when she went to school; And though she be but little, she is fierce. Shaksp.

See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one. Wycherley.

VIZ, viz. adv. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.] To wit; that is.

A barbarous form of an unnecessary word. That which so oft, by sundry writers, Has been applied t' almost all fighters, More justly may b' ascrib'd to this, Than any other warrior, viz. None ever acted both parts bolder, Both of a chieftain and a soldier. Hudibras.

The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with, is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth. Holder.

Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing greater or stronger, casting the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition. Dryden.

VIZARD, viz'ûrd.⁸⁸ n. s. [visiere, French. See VISOR.] A mask used for disguise.

Let the suits of the maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards are off. Bacon.

Æschylus Brought vizards in a civiler disguise. Roscommon.

A lie is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed, but can never become it. South. Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity. Atterbury.

He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask; but upon a nearer view he found, that she held her vizard in her hand. Addison.

You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryden.
Among those persons, going to law was utterly a fault, being ordinarily on such accounts as were too light for the hearing of courts and umpires.
Kettlewell.

UN, ún. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and α of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.

The examples however, though numerous, might have easily been made more; for almost every adjective has a substantive and an adverb adhering to it, as unfaithful, unfaithfulness, unfaithfully. Un is prefixed to adjectives with their derivatives, as unapt, unaptness, unaptnly; and to passive participles, as hurt, unhurt; favoured, unfavoured: it is prefixed likewise to participial adjectives, as pleasing, unpleasing, but rarely in the verbal sense expressing action; we cannot say, the dart flew unwounding, though we say, the man escaped unwounded.
In and un may be thus distinguished: To words merely English we prefix un, as unfit; to words borrowed in the positive sense, but made negative by ourselves, we prefix un, as generous, ungenerous.
When we borrow both words, we retain the Latin or French in, as elegant, inelegant; politick, impolitick.
Before substantives, if they have the English termination ness, it is proper to prefix un, as unfitness; ungraciousness: If they have the Latin or French terminations in tude, ice, or ence, and for the most part if they end in ty, the negative in is put before them, as unapt, unaptness, inaptnitude; unjust, injustice; imprudence; unfaithful, unfaith-fulness, infidelity.

UNABA'SHED, ún-á-básht'.¹⁵⁹ adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confused by modesty.

Earless on high, stood unabash'd Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.

lowed by with.

Festus, an infidel, a Roman, one whose ears were unacquainted with such matter, heard him, but could not reach unto that whereof he spake. Hooker.

Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet,
In the blind mazes of this tangled world? Milton.

Art thou a courtier,
Or I a king? My ears are unacquainted
With such bold truths, especially from thee. Denham.

Youth, that with joys had unacquainted been,
Envy'd grey hairs, that once good days had seen. Dryden.

Let us live like those who expect to die, and then we shall find that we feared death only because we were unacquainted with it. Wake.

UNA'CTIVE, ún-ák'tiv. adj. [from active.]

1. Not brisk; not lively.

Silly people commend tame, inactive children, because they make no noise, nor give them any trouble. Locke.

2. Having no employment.

Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignity;
While other animals inactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account. Milton.

3. Not busy; not diligent.

His life,
Private, inactive, calm, contemplative;
Little suspicious to any king. Milton.

An homage which nature commands all understandings to pay to virtue; and yet it is but a faint, unactive thing; for, in defiance of the judgment, the will may still remain as much a stranger to virtue as before. South.

4. Having no efficacy.

In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.

UNA'CTUATED, ún-ák'tú-á-téd. adj. Not actuated.

The peripatetick matter is a mere unactuated power. Glanville.

UNADMI'RED, ún-ád-mír'd'.³⁶⁹ adj. Not regarded with honour.

Oh! had I rather unadmir'd remain'd
In some lone isle, or distant northern land,
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way! Pope.

UNADO'RED, ún-á-dór'd'.³⁶⁹ adj. Not worshipped.

Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd,
In ancient Greece. Milton.

UNADORN'ED, ún-á-dór'n'd'. adj. Not decorated; not embellished.

The earth, till then Desert and bare, unsightly, unadorn'd, Brought forth the tender grass. Milton.

But hoary winter, unadorn'd and bare,
Dwells in the dire retreat, and freezes there. Addison.

UNADVENTUROUS, ún-ád-vén'tú-rús. adj. Not adventurous.

The wisest, unexperienced, will be ever Timorous and loth, with novice modesty
Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.

UNADVIS'ED, ún-ád-víz'd'.³⁶⁹ adj.

1. Imprudent; indiscreet.

Madam, I have unadvís'd
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shaksp.

2. Done without due thought; rash.

This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvís'd, too sudden,
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Shakespeare.

These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the unadvísed forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonuable alterations. Hayward.

Specifick conformities can be no unadvísed productions;
but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glanville.

UNADVIS'EDLY, ún-ád-víz'd'lè. adv. Imprudently; rashly; indiscreetly.

A strange kind of speech unto christian ears; and such as, I hope, they themselves do acknowledge unadvísedly uttered. Hooker.

What man's wit is there able to sound the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvísedly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution? Hooker.

What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvísedly sometimes,
Which after-hours gives leisure to repent of. Shakespeare.

A word unadvísedly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has raised such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

UNADULTERATED, ún-á-dúl'túr-á-téd.³⁶⁹ adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.

I have only discovered one of those channels by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and unadulterated. Addison.

UNAFFE'CTED, ún-áf-fèk'téd. adj.

1. Real; not hypocritical.

They bore the king

To lie in solemn state, a publick sight:

Groans, cries, and howlings fill the crouded place,
And unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face. Dryden.

2. Free from affectation; open; candid; sincere.

The maid improves her charms
With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,
And sanctity of manners. Addison.

Of softest manners, unaffected mind;
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind. Pope.

3. Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.

Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In their majestic, unaffected stile,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.

4. Not moved; not touched; as, he sat unaffected to hear the tragedy.

UNAFFE'CTEDLY, ún-áf-fèk'téd-lè. adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.

He was always unaffectedly cheerful; no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him. Locke.

UNAFFE'CTING, ún-áf-fèk'ting.⁴¹⁰ adj. Not pathetick; not moving the passions.

UNAFFLI'CTED, ún-áf-flíkt'éd. adj. Free from trouble.

On no unholy thoughts for benefit. Daniel.

UNAGREE'ABLE, ún-á-grè-á-bl. adj. Inconsistent; unsuitable.

Advent'rous work! yet to thy pow'r and mine
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milt.

UNAGREE'ABLENESS, ún-á-grè-á-bl-nès. n. s. Unsuitableness to; inconsistency with.

Papias, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine whose unagreeableness to the gospel oconomy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostohck man could seduce them. Decay of Piety.

UNADABLE, ún-á-dá-bl. adj. Not to be helped.

The congregated college have concluded,
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her unadable estate. Shakespeare.

UNADDED, ún-á-déd. adj. Not assisted; not helped.

Their number, counting those th' unaided eye
Can see, or by invented tubes descrie,
The widest stretch of human thought exceeds. Blackmore.

UNAIMING, ún-áme'ing. adj. Having no particular direction.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharged, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky;
Such frantick flights are like a madman's dream;
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Granville.

UNAKING, ún-áke'ing. adj. Not feeling or causing pain.

Shew them th' unaking scars which I would hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only. Shakespeare.

UNALIENABLE, ún-ále'yén-á-bl.¹¹³ adj. Not to be transferred.

Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any unalienable right in a particular family, but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the ambition of competitors. Swift.

UNALLA'YED, ún-ál-lá'd'. adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.

Unallayed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

UNALI'ED, ún-ál'lí'd'.²⁸³ adj.

1. Having no powerful relation.

2. Having no common nature; not congenial.

He is compounded of two very different ingredients, spirit and matter; but how such unallied and disproportioned substances should act upon each other, no man's learning yet could tell him. Collier.

UNALTERABLE, ún-ál'túr-á-bl. adj. Unchangeable; immutable.

The law of nature, consisting in a fixed, unalterable relation of one nature to another, is indispensable. South.

The fixt unalterable laws,
Settling the same effect on the same cause. Creech.

The truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

UNALTERABLENESS, ún-ál'túr-á-bl-nès. n. s. Immutability; unchangeableness.

This happens from the unalterableness of the corpuscles which constitute and compose those bodies. Woodward.

UNALTERABLY, ún-ál'túr-á-blè. adv. Unchangeably; immutably.

Retain unalterably firm his love intire. Milton.
The day and year are standard measures, because they are unalterably constituted by those motions. Holder.

UNALTERED, ún-ál'túr'd. adj. Not changed; not changeable.

It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us intolerable, that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.

To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow:
Thy coming hither, though I know thy scope,
I bid not, or forbid. Milton.

To shew the truth of my unalter'd breast,
Know, that your life was giv'n at my request. Dryden.

Since these forms begin and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they sure depend. Dryden.

Grains and nuts pass often through animals unalter'd. Arbutnot.

Amongst the shells that were fair, unaltered, and free from such mineral insinuations, there were some which could not be matched by any species of shell-fish now found upon the sea-shores. Woodward.

UNAMAZ'ED, ún-á-máz'd. adj. Not astonished; free from astonishment.

Though at the voice much marvelling; at length,
Not unamaz'd, she thus in answer spake. Milton.

UNAMBITIOUS, ún-ám'bísh-ús. adj. Free from ambition.

My humble muse, in unambitious strains,
Paints the green forests, and the flow'ry plains. Pope.

I am one of those unambitious people, who will love you forty years hence. Pope.

UNAMENDABLE, ún-áménd-á-bl. adj. [inemendabilis, Latin.] Not to be changed for the better.

He is the same man; so is every one here that you know: mankind is unamendable. Pope to Swift.

UNAMIABLE, ún-ámé-á-bl. adj. Not raising love.

Those who represent religion in an unamiabile light, are like the spies sent by Moses, to make a discovery of the land of promise, when, by their reports, they discouraged the people from entering upon it. Spectator.

These men are so well acquainted with the unamiabile part of themselves, that they have not the confidence to think they are really beloved. Spectator.

Nor are the hills unamiabile, whose tops
To heav'n aspire. Philips.

UNANALYSED, ún-án-á-líz'd. adj. Not resolved into simple parts.

Some large crystals of refined and unanalysed nitre, appeared to have each of them six flat sides. Boyle.

UNANCHORED, ún-án-kúr-réd. adj. Not anchored.

A port there is, inclos'd on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchor'd and unty'd. Pope.
UNAN'ELED, ùn-ân-èléd'. adj. [un and knell.]
Without the bell rung. This sense I doubt.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, ev'n in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, unanoited, unanel'd. Shakspeare.
UNANIMATED, ùn-ân-è-inát-éd. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.

Look on those half lines as the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs in the Nile, part kindled into life, and part a lump of uninformed unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY, yù-nân-ním-é-tè. n. s. [unanimité, French.] Agreement in design or opinion.

An honest party of men acting with unanimity, are of infinitely greater consequence, than the same party aiming at the same end by different views. Addison.

UNANIMOUS, yù-nân-è-mùs. adj. [unanime, Fr. unanimis, Lat.] Being of one mind; agreeing in design or opinion.

They went to meet
So oft in festivals of joy and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great sire, Hymning th' eternal Father. Milton.

With those which Mino's fields and Phyrge gave,
All bred in arms, unanimous and brave. Dryden.

UNANIMOUSLY, yù-nân-è-mùs-lè. adv. [from unanimous.] With one mind.

This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient christian authors. Addison.

UNANIMOUSNESS, yù-nân-è-mùs-nès. n. s. [from unanimous.] The state of being unanimous.

UNANO'INTED, ùn-ân-nòin'téd. adj.
1. Not anointed.
2. Not prepared for death by extreme unction.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, ev'n in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, unanoited, unanel'd. Shakspeare.

UNANSWERABLE, ùn-ân-sùr-â-bl. adj. Not to be refuted.

This is a manifest and unanswerable argument. Raleigh.

I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glanville.

The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intimate that it was unanswerable. L'Estrange.

These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, those two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable. Spectator.

As to the excuse drawn from the demands of creditors, if it be real, it is unanswerable. Atterbury.

UNANSWERABLY, ùn-ân-sùr-â-blé. adv. Beyond confutation.

It will put their little legick hard to it, to prove that there can be any obedience where there is no command. And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the forementioned principle plead conscience in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED, ùn-ân-sùr'd. adj.
1. Not opposed by a reply.

Unanswer'd lest thou boast. Milton.
Must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou 'rt a traitor. Addison.

2. Not confuted.
All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answered; besides a number of merriments and jests unanswered likewise. Hooker.

3. Not suitably returned.
Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPA'LED, ùn-âp-páwld'. adj. Not daunted; not impressed by fear.

If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquer'd all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking so rest unappall'd? Sidney.

Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd;

Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.

As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.

Does this appear like guilt, when thus serene,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fearing? Smith.

UNAPPA'RELLED, ùn-âp-pâr-èl'd. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.

In Peru, though they were unapparelled people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon.

Till our souls be unapparelled
Of bodies, they from bliss are banished. Donne.

UNAPPA'RENT, ùn-âp-pâ-rènt. adj. Obscure; not visible.

Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPE'ASABLE, ùn-âp-pé-zâ-bl. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.

The unappeasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Raleigh.

I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To pray'rs than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPE'ASED, ùn-âp-pé-zé'd'. adj. Not pacified.

Sacrifice his flesh,
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd. Shakspeare.

His son forgot, his empress unappeas'd;
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd! Dryden.

UNAPPLICABLE, ùn-âp-plé-kâ-bl. adj. [from aptly.] Such as cannot be applied.

Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unapplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.

Their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as unapplicable to their purposes as the other. Clarendon.

The singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHE'NDED, ùn-âp-pré-hénd'éd. adj. Not understood.

They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHE'NSIVE, ùn-âp-pré-hén'siv. adj. [from apprehend.]

1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.
The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others. South.

2. Not suspecting.

God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light
Dwelt from eternity. Milton.

UNAPPRO'VED, ùn-âp-pròv'd'. ³⁶⁹ adj. [from approve.] Not approved.

Evil into the mind
May come and go so unapprov'd, and leave
No spot behind. Milton.

UNA'PT, ùn-âpt'. adj. [from apt.]
1. Dull; not apprehensive.

2. Not ready; not propense.
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep. Shakspeare.
My blood hath been too cool and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities. Shakspeare.

3. Unfit; not qualified: with to before a verb, for before a noun.

Fear doth grow from an apprehension of deity indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the unaptest to admit any conference with reason. Hooker.

A longing after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft and wandering, unapt for noble, wise, or spiritual employments. Taylor.

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.
UNA'PTLY, ùn-âpt'lè. adv. [from unapt.]
Unfitly; improperly.

He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat; nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Grew.

UNA'PTNESS, ùn-âpt'nès. n. s. [from unapt.]
1. Unfitness; unsuitableness.

Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions; and their conditions are often governed by their garments; for the person that is gowned, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unaptness of his weed. Spenser.

2. Dulness; want of apprehension.

That unaptness made you minister
Thus to excuse yourself. Shakspeare.

3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unaptness or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNARGUED, ùn-âr'gùde. ³⁶⁹ adj. [from argue.]

1. Not disputed.
What thou bid'st,
Unargu'd I obey; so God ordains. Milton.

2. Not censured.
Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unargu'd then, and yet hath fame from those. Ben Jonson.

To UNA'RM, ùn-ârm'. v. a. [from arm.]
To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shakspeare.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep. Shakspeare.

Galen would not leave unto the world too subtle a theory of poisons; unarming thereby the malice of venomous spirits. Brown.

UNA'RMED, ùn-ârm'd'. ³⁶⁹ adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakspeare.

He all unarm'd
Shall chace thee with the terror of his voice

From thy demoniack holds, possession foul;
Thee and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.

Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, base man, unquestion'd hence to go. Dryden.

Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is horn altogether unarm'd. Grew.

UNARRA'IGNED, ún-ár-rán'd'. adj. Not brought to a trial.

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraing'd.
Daniel.

UNARRA'YED, ún-ár-rá'd'. adj. Not dressed.
As if this infant world yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in Nature's lap were laid. Dryd.

Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So hasty and so artless was his grief. Dryden.

UNARTFUL, ún-árt'fúl. adj.

1. Having no art, or cunning.
A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden.

2. Wanting skill.
How unartful would it have been to have set him in a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him? Cheyne.

UNARTFULLY, ún-árt'fúl-lé. adv. In an unartful manner.

In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes.
Swift.

UNARTIFICIALLY, ún-ár-té-fish'al-lé. adv. Contrarily to art.

Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Derham.

UNASKED, ún-áskt'.³⁵⁹ adj.

With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unasked, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only
My son 's the better man. Denham.

2. Not sought by entreaty or care.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.

How, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lye?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPI'RING, ún-ás-pí'ring. adj. Not ambitious.

To be modest and uninspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSA'ILABLE, ún-ás-sá'lá-bl. adj. Exempt from assault.

In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakspeare.

UNASSA'ILED, ún-ás-sá'l'd'. adj. Not attacked; not assaulted.

As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shaksp.
I believe

That he, the supreme good, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

UNASSA'YED, ún-ás-sá'd'. adj. Unattended-ed.

What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton.

UNASSI'STED, ún-ás-sis'téd. adj. Not helped.

Its victories were the victories of reason, unas- sisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison.

What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory.

Rogers.

UNASSI'STING, ún-ás-sis'ting. adj. Giving no help.

With these I went, a brother of the war:
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subau'd: yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSUM'ING, ún-ás-súm'ing. adj. NOT arrogant.

Unassuming worth in secret liv'd
And died neglected. Thomson.

UNASSUR'ED, ún-ásh-úr'd'.³⁵⁹ adj.

1. Not confident.
The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unas- sured countenance, adventures into your presence. Glanville.

2. Not to be trusted.
The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes,
The feigned friends, the unassured foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretched hell. Spenser.

UNATON'ED, ún-á-tón'd'. adj. Not expiated.

Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unaton'd? Rowe.

UNATTA'INABLE, ún-át-tá'ná-bl. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.

Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation. Dryd.

I do not expect that man should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to; I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTA'INABLENESS, ún-át-tá'ná-bl-nés. n. s. State of being out of reach.

Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTE'MPTED, ún-át-témpt'éd. adj. Untried; not assayed.

He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Sidney.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raieth on the rich. Shaksp.

It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.

Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjurd race. Denham.

Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it?
How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted! Atterbury.

UNATTE'NDED, ún-át-tén'déd. adj.

1. Having no reinue, or attendants.
With goddess-like demeanour forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton.

Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shakspeare.

UNATTE'NDING, ún-át-tén'ding. adj. Not attending.

Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending cars. Milton.

Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her tresses rearing,
Throws off her armet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain. Dryden.

UNATTE'NTIVE, ún-át-tén'tiv. adj. Not regarding.

Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors.
Government of the Tongue.

Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive.
Tatter.

UNAVA'ILABLE, ún-á-vá'íá-bl. adj. Useless;
vain with respect to any purpose.

When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so unavailable, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy. Hocker.

UNAVA'ILING, ún-á-vá'ing.³¹⁰ adj. Useless; vain.

Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe. Dryden.

Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands.
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands. Pope.

UNAVO'IDABLE, ún-á-vóid'á-bl. adj.

1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.
Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryd.

It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.

Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprize, be unavoidable to the best guarded. Rogers.

The merits of Christ will make up the unavoid- able deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Rogers.

All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoidable moment which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.

2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.
That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves: one of them is unavoidable. Tillotson.

I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.

UNAVO'IDABLENESS, ún-á-vóid'á-bl-nés. n. s. Inevitability.

How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Glanville.

UNAVO'IDABLY, ún-á-vóid'á-blé. adv. Inevitably.

The most perfect administration must unavoid- ably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.

UNAVO'IDED, ún-á-vóid'éd. adj. Inevitable.

We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now. Shakspeare.

Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be Their unavoided subject, fewest see. Ben Jonson.

UNAUTHOR'IZED, ún-áw'thúr-iz'd. adj.

Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.

To kiss in private?
An unauthorized kiss. Shakspeare.

It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthorized by thy supreme command. Dryden.

UNAWA'RE, ún-á-wá'ic'.⁶³⁴ } adv. [from UNAWA'RES, ún-á-wá'iz'. } aware, or swary.]

1. Without thought; without previous meditation.

Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Spenser.

It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd.
Shakspeare.

Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unawares.
Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure.
Dryden.

'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopped off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not.
Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.

Let destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Psalms.

My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it
Boyle.

Though we live never so long, we are still sur-prized: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect.
Wake.

3. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold.
Dryden.

UNA'WED, ún-áw'd'.³⁸⁹ adj. Unrestrained
by fear or reverence.

The raging and fanatic distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unaw'd by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's.
Clarendon.

Unfore'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple and his soul sincere. Dryden.

UNBA'CKED, ún-bákt'.³⁸⁹ adj.

1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.
Then I beat my tabor;

At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,

Advance'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick.
Shakspeare.

A well-wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall.
Suckling.

They flinch like unbacked fillies.
Dennis.

2. Not countenanced; not aided.
Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unbacked. Daniel.

UNBALANCED, ún-bál'láns't. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.

UNBALLAST, ún-bál'lást. } adj. Not

UNBALLASTED, ún-bál'lást-éd. } kept steady by ballast; unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatick flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning.
Milton.

As at sea th' unballasted vessel rides;
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;
So, in the bounding chariot toss'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky.
Addison.

UNBA'NDED, ún-bánd'éd. adj. [from band.]

Wanting a string, or band.
Your hose should be ungartered, your bonnet un-banded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation.
Shakspeare.

FO UNBA'R, ún-bár'. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbarr'd.
Denham.

These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war. Dryden.

UNBAR'BED, ún-bárb'd'. adj. [from barba, Lat.]
Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarbed sconce?
Must my hase tongue give to my noble heart
A lie?
Shakspeare

UNBA'RKED, ún-bárk't'. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarbed some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown.

UNBA'SHFUL, ún-básh'fúl. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shakspeare.

UNBA'TED, ún-bát'éd. adj. [from bate.]
Not repressed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbat'd fire
That he did pace them first?
Shakspeare.

UNBA'THED, ún-báth'd'. adj. [from bath.]
Not wet.

Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbat'd and to the handle hent.
Dryden.

UNBA'TTERED, ún-bát'túr'd. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to hear their staves; or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbat'ter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded.
Shakspeare.

TO UNBA'Y, ún-bá'. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure.
Norris.

UNBEA'RING, ún-báre'ing. adj. Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead.
Dryden.

UNBEA'TEN, ún-bé't'n. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.
His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unspur'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaston.
Bishop Corbet.

2. Not trodden.
We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand.
Bacon.

If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths.
Roscommon.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky.
Swift.

UNBEO'MING, ún-bé-kúm'ing. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here 's our chief guest.—
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.
Shakspeare.

No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear.
Milton.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger.
Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd and not complain'd at all.
Dryden.

This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural.
Addison.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays.
Swift.

Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth.
Swift.

UNBEO'MINGNESS, ún-bé-kúm'ing-nés.
n. s. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault.
Locke.

TO UNBED, ún-béd'. v. a. To raise from a bed.

Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder.
Walton.

UNBEF'ITTING, ún-bé-flít'ing. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbecoming strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shaksp.

Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbecoming holiest place. Milton.

He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects, upon terms not at all unbecoming his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion.
Swift.

TO UNBEGE'T, ún-bé-gét'. v. n. To deprive of existence.

Wishes each minute he could unbegot
Those rebel sons who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGO'T, ún-bé-gót'. } adj. [from

UNBEGO'TTEN, ún-bé-gót't'n. } begot.]

1. Eternal; without generation.
Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God?
Stillingfleet.

2. Not yet generated.
God omnipotent, must ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shakspeare.

In thy power
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

3. Not attaining existence.
Where a child finds his own parents his pervaders, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South.

TO UNBEGUI'LE, ún-bé-gyile'. v. a. To undecieve; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heaven. Donne.

Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their concionatory invectives. Howel.

UNBEHE'LD, ún-bé-héld'. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.

UNBELIE'F, ún-bé-lééf'. n. s.

1. Incredulity.
'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimæras, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be: but unbelief is blind. Milton.

I'm justly plagued by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryden.

Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief;
i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.
Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

TO UNBELIE'VE, ún-bé-léév'. v. a.

1. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go! Shaksp.
So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince
Of such an unforeseen, and unbeliev'd offence. Dryden.

UNBELIE'VER, ùn-bè-léév'úr. n. s. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.

The antient fathers being often constrained to shew what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judged thereof as they should. Hooker.

What endless war would jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profigates by topicks drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift.

UNBELIE'VING, ùn-bè-léév'ing. adj. Infidel.

No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the gentiles. Addison.

In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELO'VED, ùn-bè-lúv'éd, or ùn-bè-lúvd. adj. Not loved.

Who'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

To UNBE'ND, ùn-bénd'. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor.
I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, with great affairs,
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.

From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakspere.

UNBE'NDING, ùn-bén'ding.⁴¹⁰ adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand

Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thomson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

UNBENEFICED, ùn-bén'né-fist. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make;
All would have latitude enough to take:
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENE'VOLENT, ùn-bè-név'vò-lént. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit which inclines men to a fierce unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENI'GHTEd, ùn-bè-nite'éd. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton.

UNBENI'GN, ùn-bè-nine'. adj. Malignant; malevolent.

To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbenign. Milton.

UNBE'NT, ùn-bént'. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.
Apollo heard, and conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryd.

2. Having the bow unstrung.
Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakspere.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent;
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESÉE'MING, ùn-bè-séém'ing. adj. Unbecoming.

No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbeseeming myself. King Charles.

Far be the spirit of the chase from them;
Uncomely courage, unbeseeming skill. Thomson.

UNBESO'UGHT, ùn-bè-sàwt'. adj. Not intreated.

Lest heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton.

UNBESTO'WED, ùn-bè-stò'd'. adj. Not given; not disposed of.

He had now but one son and one daughter unbestowed. Bacon.

UNBETRA'YED, ùn-bè-trà'd'. adj. Not betrayed.

Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetrayed! Daniel.

UNBEWA'ILED, ùn-bè-wàl'd'. adj. Not lamented.

Let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakspere.

To UNBEWI'TCH, ùn-bè-witsh'. v. a. [from witch.] To free from fascination.

To UNBI'ASS, ùn-bi'ás. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.

That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbiass'd give its judgment, being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbiass'd minds. Atterbury.

The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiassing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.

Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbiass'd or by favour or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right? Pope.

UNBI'ASSEDLY, ùn-bi'ást-lé. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.

I have sought the true meaning; and have unbiass'dly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBI'D, ùn-bid'.
UNBI'DDEN, ùn-bid'd'n. } adj.

1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone. Shaksp.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.

Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton.
Roses, unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.

Unbidden earth shall wreatbing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Dryd.

UNBI'GOTTED, ùn-big'út-éd. adj. Free from bigotry.

Erasmus, who was an unbigotted Roman catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Soerates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

To UNBI'ND, ùn-bind'. v. a. [from bind.]
To loose; to untie.

His own woe's author, whose bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it willfully unbinds. Spenser.
Ye Latian dames,

If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tutler.

To UNBI'SHOP, ùn-bish'úp. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.

I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishops'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBI'TTED, ùn-bit'téd. adj. [from bit.]
Unbridled; unrestrained.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal strings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a sect or cyon. Shakspere.

UNBLA'MABLE, ùn-blá'má-bl. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.

Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.

He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden.

UNBLA'MABLY, ùn-blá'má-blé. adv. Without taint of fault.

Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behav'd ourselves. 1 Thessalonians.

UNBLA'MED, ùn-blám'd'. adj. Blameless; free from fault.

Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell
Long time in peace. Milton.

Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dame rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn, Pope.

UNBLEMISHED, ún-blém'isht. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.

O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope!
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity! Milton.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.

Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town! Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryd.

They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLENCHE'D, ún-bléntsht'. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any soil.

There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unbleach'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEND'ED, ún-blénd'éd. adj. Not mingled.

None can boast a knowledge deperate from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLEST, ún-blést'. adj.

1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.

It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.

2. Wretched; uniaappy.

In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.
What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOOD'IED, ún-blú'd'id. adj. Not stained with blood.

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak. Shakespeare.

UNBLOOD'Y, ún-blú'd'é. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.

Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling screams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

UNBLOW'N, ún-blóne'. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.

Ah! my poor princess! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shakespeare.

UNBLUNT'ED, ún-blúnt'éd. adj. Not becoming obtuse.

A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hosts away. Cowley.

UNBOD'IED, ún-bó'd'id. adj.

1. Incorporal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and un-bodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts.

2. Freed from the body.

She hath the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burdensome corpse. Spens.
All things are but alter'd, nothing dies,
And here and there th' unbody'd spirit flies. Dryd.

UNBO'ILED, ún-bóil'd'. adj. Not sodden.

A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will arise to a pint boiled. Bacon.

To UNBO'LT, ún-bólt'. v. a. To set open; to unbar.

I'll call my uncle down;

He shall unbolt the gate. Shakespeare.

UNBO'LTED, ún-bólt'éd. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flower, by bolting, or sifting.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakespeare.

UNBO'NNETED, ún-bón'nét'éd. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.

This night, wherein
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbolted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakespeare.

UNBOO'KISH, ún-bóók'ish. adj.

1. Not studious of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakespeare.

UNBO'RN, ún-bórn'. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.

Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming toward me. Shakespeare.

Did I offend you. Shakespeare.

He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton.

To what wretched state reserv'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wasted from us? Milton.

A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROW'ED, ún-bór'ròde. adj. Genu-ine; native; one's own.

But the luxurious father of the fold
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.

In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable sensible qualities serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

To UNBO'SOM, ún-búz'úm. v. a.

1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st,
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.

Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.

2. To open; to disclose.

Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton.

I voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me:
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.

2. Unlimited; unrestrained.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakespeare.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and examin'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBO'UNDEDLY, ún-bóund'éd-ly. adv.

Without bounds; without limits.
So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too.
Government of the Tongue.

UNBO'UNDEDNESS, ún-bóund'éd-nés. n. s.

Exemption from limits.
Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unbound'dness of these degrees of properties. Chrym.

UNBO'WED, ún-bóu'e'. adj. Not bent.

In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hakevill.

It is now become a new species of civinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowel and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

To UNBRA'CE, ún-bráse'. v. a.

1. To loose; to relax.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolting in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Spenser.

Somewhat of mournful sure my ears does wound;
Drums unbrac'd, with soldiers' broken cries. Dryden.

Nought shall the psaltry and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.

Wasting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope.

2. To make the clothes loose.

Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakespeare.

Fear most to tax an honourable fool, Whose right it is uncensur'd to be dull.

To be uncensured, and to be obscure, is the same thing.

Pope.

UNCE'RTAIN, ùn-sér'tín. adj. [incertain, Fr. incertus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; not certainly known. That sacred pile, so vast, so high, That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,

Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.
 2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge. Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.
 Condemn'd on Caucasus to lie,
 Still to be dying, not to die;
 With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
 True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Grano.
 3. Not sure in the consequence. I must be married to my brother's daughter, Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass: Murder her brothers, and then marry her! Uncertain way of gain! Shakespeare.
 In the bright air the faulchion shone,
 Or whistling slings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.

The search of our future being is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can, what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.

4. Not exact; not sure. Ascanius young, and eager of his game, Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim; But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides, Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.

5. Unsettled; irregular. As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.

UNCERTAINED, ùn-sér'tin'd. adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.

The diversity of seasons are not so *uncertain*ed by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.

UNCERTAINLY, ùn-sér'tin-lè. adv.

1. Not surely; not certainly. Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain For wealth, which so uncertainly must come: When what was brought so far, and with such pain, Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.

Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be refer'd to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

2. Not confidently. They that are past all hope of good, are past All fear of ill; and yet, if he be dead, Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham.

UNCERTAINTY, ùn-sér'tin-tè. n. s.

1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge. All great concerns must delays endure; Rashness and haste make all things insecure; And if uncertain thy pretensions be, Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
 You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
 Here then remain with your uncertainty;
 Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts. Shaksp.

2. Inaccuracy. That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty in the signification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.

3. Contingency; want of certainty. God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South.

4. Something unknown. Our shepherd's case is every man's case, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.

To UNCHA'IN, ùn-tshàné'. v. a. To free from chains. Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield, Secure of conquest, sent him to the field: The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;

So was his fame complete, and Andromède unchain'd. Prior.

UNCHANGEABLE, ùn-tshán'já-bl. adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.

If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker.

UNCHANGEABLENESS, ùn-tshán'já-bl-nés. n. s. Immutability.

This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newton.

Swift.
 UNCO'UTH, ùn-kòòth'.³¹⁶ adj. [uncuð,
 Sax.] Odd; strange; unusual.
 A very uncouth sight was to behold,
 How he did fashion his untoward pace;
 For as he forward mov'd bis footing old,
 So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face.
Spenser.
 The lovers standing in this doleful wise,
 A warrior bold unwares approached near,
Uncouth in arms yclad, and strange disguise.
Fairfax.
 I am surprized with an uncouth fear;
 A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
 My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.
Shakespeare
 The trouble of thy thoughts this night
 Affects me equally; nor can I like
 This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear. Milton.
 Say on;
 For I that day was absent, as befel,
 Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obscure,
 Far on excursion toward the gates of hell. Milton.

It was so uncouth a sight, for a fox to appear without a tail, that the very thought made him weary of his life. L'Estrange.
 The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal. Dryden.
 I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unpossessed by doctors of my sect, whose reasonings will of course make all chime that way, and make the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.
 He made that a pleasant study, which in the hands of Bartolus and Baldus, was uncouth and rugged. Baker.
 UNCO'UTHLY, ùn-kòòth'lê. adv. Oddly;

 1. Not to be ruled; not to be restrained.
 They'll judge every thing by models of their own; and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority, and ungovernable by other laws but those of the sword. Glanville.

2. Licentious; wild; unbridled.
 So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.
 He was free from any rough, ungovernable passions, which hurry men on to say and do every offensive things. Atterbury.

UNGO'VERNED, ùn-gùv'ùrn'd. adj.
 1. Being without government.
 The estate is yet ungovern'd. Shakspeare.
 It pleaseth God above,
 And all good men of this ungovern'd isle. Shaksp.

2. Not regulated; unbridled; licentious.
 Seek for him,
 Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
 That wants the means to lead it. Shakspeare.
 Themselves they vilify'd
 To serve ungovern'd appetite. Milton.
 Nor what to bid, or what forbid, he knows;
 Th' ungovern'd tempest to such fury grows. Dryd.
 From her own back the burthen would remove,
 And lays the load on his ungovern'd love. Dryden.

UNGRA'CEFUL, ùn-grâse'fùl. adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.
 Raphael answer'd heav'n,
 Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men. Milton.
 A solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be constrained,
 uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.
 He enjoy'd the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the first, learning is but an incumbrance; and without the last is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRA'CEFULNESS, ùn-grâse'fùl-nés. n. s.
 Inelegance; awkwardness.
 To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain; and what is so plaistered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRA'CIOUS, ùn-grâ'shùs. adj.
 1. Wicked; odious; hateful.
 He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,
 Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong.
Spenser.
 I'll, in the mature time,
 With this ungracious paper strike the sight
 Of the death-practised duke. Shakspeare.
 Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
 Shew me the steep and thorny way to heav'n;
 Whilst he, a puffed and reckless libertine,
 Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
 And reeks uot his own rede. Shakspeare.
 To the gods alone
 Our future offspring, and our wives are known;
 Th' audacious strumpet, and ungracious son. Dryd.

2. Offensive; unpleasing.
 Show me no parts which are ungracious to the sight, as all preshortenings usually are. Dryden.
 Neither is it rare to observe among excellent and learned divines, a certain ungracious manner, or an unhappy tone of voice, which they never have been able to shake off. Swift.

3. Unacceptable; not favoured.
 They did not except against the persons of any,
 though several were most ungracious to them.
Clarendon.
 Any thing of grace towards the Irish rebels, was as ungracious at Oxford as at London. Clarendon.

UNGRAMMA'TICAL, ùn-grâm-mât'té-kâl.
adj. Not according to grammar.

UNGRA'NTED, ùn-grânt'éd. adj. Not given;
 not yielded; not bestowed.
 This only from your goodness let me gain,
 And this ungranted, all rewards are vain. Dryden.

UNGRA'TEFUL, ùn-grâte'fùl. adj.
 1. Making no returns, or making ill returns for kindness.
 No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South

2. Making no returns for culture.
 Most, when driv'n by winds, the flaming storm
 Of the long files destroys the beauteous form;
 Nor will the wither'd stock be green again;
 But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrateful
 plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing; unacceptable.
 It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action so full of danger. Clarendon.
 What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Atterb.

UNGRA'TEFULLY, ùn-grâte'fùl-è. adv.
 1. With ingratitude.
 When call'd to distant war,
 His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here:
 Oriana's eyes that glorious conquest made;
 Nor was his love ungratefully repaid. Granville.
 We often receive the benefit of our prayers when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Wake.

2. Unacceptably; unpleasingly.
 UNGRA'TEFULNESS, ùn-grâte'fùl-nés. n. s.
 1. Ingratitude; ill return for good.
 Can I, without the detestable stain of ungrate-fulness, abstain from loving him, who far exceeding the beautifulness of his shape with the beautifulness of his mind, is content so to abase himself as to become Dametas's servant for my sake?
Sidney.

2. Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.
 UNGRA'VELY, ùn-grâve'lè. adv. Without seriousness.
 His present portance
 Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shaksp.

UNGRU'NDDED, ùn-gròun'déd. adj. Having no foundation.
 Ignorance, with an indifferency for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.
 This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational. For upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity! South.

UNGRU'DGINGLY, ùn-grùd'jing-lè. adv.
 Without ill-will; willingly; heartily;
 cheerfully.
 If, when all his heart and time is spent,
 He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
 Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,
 Because he is the mouth of destiny. Donnè.

UNGUARDED, ùn-gyâr'déd. adj.
 1. Undefended.
 Proud art thou met? Thy hope was to have reach'd
 The throne of God unguarded, and his side Abandon'd. Milton.
 All through th' unguarded gates with joy resort,
 To see the slighted camp, the vacant port. Denham.
 No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
 Or creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryd.

2. Careless; negligent; not attentive to danger.
 All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.
 The spy, which does this treasure keep,
 Does she ne'er say her pray'r, nor sleep?
 Or have not gold and flatt'ry pow'r
 To purchase one unguarded hour? Prior.

With an unguarded look she now devour'd
 My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,
 And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh. Prior.
 It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. Pope.
 Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives? Rogers.

UNGUENT, ùn'gwènt. n. s. [unguentum,
 Latin.] Ointment.
 Pre-occupation of mind ever requireth preface of speech, like a fomentation to make the unguent
 enter. Bacon.
 There is an intercourse between the magnetick
unguent and the vulnerated body. Glanville.
 With unguents smooth the lucid marble shone.
Pope.

UNGU'ESSED, ùn-gès'd'. adj. Not attained
 by conjecture.
 He me sent for cause to me unguess'd. Spenser.

UNGU'IDED, ùn-gyî'déd. adj. Not directed; not regulated.
 The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
 In forms imaginary, th' unguided days
 And rotten times that you shall look upon,
 When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shaksp.
 Can unguided matter keep itself to such exact conformities, as not in the least spot to vary from the species? Glanville.
 They resolve all into the accidental, unguided
 motions of blind matter. Locke.
 Nature, void of choice,
 Does by unguided motion things produce,
 Regardless of their order. Blackmore.

UNHA'BITABLE, ùn-hâb'è-tâ-bl. adj. [inhabitable, French; inhabitabilis, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.
 The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Holder.
 Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, unhabitable, or extremely hot. Ray.

UNHA'CKED, ùn-hâkt'. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.
 With a blessed and unwev'd retire,
 With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruise'd,
 We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shaksp.
 Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
 Our targe undinted. Shakspeare.

To UNHA'LOW, ùn-hâl'lò. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.
 Perhaps the fact
 Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
 Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste.
Milton.
 The vanity unhallows the virtue. L'Est. ange.
 This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNHA'LOWED, ùn-hâl'lòde. adj. Unholy;
 profane.
 Thy currish spirit
 Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter:
 Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;
 And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam
 Infus'd itself in thee. Shakspeare.
 I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
 In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
 Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
 Obtruding false rules, prank'd in reason's garb.
Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryd.
Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.
To UNH'ND, ùn-hánd'. v. a. To loose from the hand.
Still am I call'd. Unhand me gentlemen.
Shakspeare.

Unhand me traitors.
UNH'NDLED, ùn-hánd'léd. adj. Not handled; not touched.

A race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.
Cardinal Campeius
Hath left the cause o' the king unhandled. Shaksp.
UNH'NDSOME, ùn-hán'sùm. adj.

1. Ungraceful; not beautiful.
I was glad I had done so good a deed for a gen-tlewoman not unhandsome, whom before I had in like sort helped. Sidney.

She that so far the rest outshin'd;
Sylvia the fair, while she was kind,
Seems only not unhandsome now. Waller.
As I cannot admit that there is any thing un-handsome or irregular; so much less can I grant that there is any thing incommodious in the globe.
Woodward.

2. Illiberal; disingenuous.
UNH'NDSOMELY, ùn-hán'sùm-lè. adv.

1. Ungracefully; ungracefully.
The ruined churches are so unhandsonely patched and thatched, that men do even shun the places for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.
2. Disingenuously; illiberally.

He raves, sir; and to cover my disdain,
Unhandsonely would his denial feign. Dryden.
UNH'NDSOMENESS, ùn-hán'sùm-nès. n. s.

1. Want of beauty.
The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsoneness of it; and make the eye force the mind to believe, that there was a praise in that unskilfulness. Sidney.

2. Want of elegance.
Be not troublesome to myself, or to others, by unhandsoneness or uncleanness. Taylor.
3. Illiberalness; disingenuity.

UNH'NDY, ùn-hánd'è. adj. Awkward; not dexterous.
To UNH'NG, ùn-háng'. v. a. [from un and hang.] To divest of hangings.

death by the gallows.
There live not three good men unhang'd in England. Shakspeare.

UNH'P, ùn-háp'. n. s. Misluck; ill fortune.
She visited that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhap. Sidney.

UNH'PPIED, ùn-háp'pid. [This word seems a participle from unhappy, which yet is never used as a verb.]
Made unhappy.

You have misled a prince,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineament,
By you unhappied, and disfigured clean. Shaksp.
UNH'PPILY, ùn-háp'pè-lè. adv. [from un- happy.] Miserably; unfortunately;
wretchedly; calamitously.

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord,
You are a churchman, or I'll tell you, cardinal,
I should judge now most unhappily. Shakspeare.
He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry. Clarendon.

I unweeting have offended,
Unhappily deceived! Milton.
There is a day a coming, when all these witty fools shall be unhappily undeceived. Tillotson.

UNH'PPINESS, ùn-háp'pè-nès. n. s.
1. Misery; infelicity.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
And that be heir to his unhappiness! Shakspeare.
The real foundation of our unhappiness would be laid in our reason, and we should be more miserable than the beasts, by how much we have a quicker apprehension. Tillotson.

It is our great unhappiness, when any calamities fall upon us, that we are uneasy and dissatisfied. Wake.
2. Misfortune; ill luck.

St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this purpose, though he had the unhappiness not to follow it always himself. Burnet.

3. Mischievous prank.
She hath often dreamed of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing, Shakspeare.
UNH'PPY, ùn-háp'pè. adj.

1. Wretched; miserable; unfortunate; calamitous; distressed. Of persons or things.
Desire of wand'ring this unhappy morn. Milton.
You know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend:
Breathless he lies, and his unbury'd ghost
Depriv'd of funeral rites. Dryden.

2. Unlucky; mischievous; irregular. Obsolete.

To UNH'RBOUR, ùn-hár'búr. v. a. To drive from shelter.

UNH'ROURED, ùn-hár'búr'd. adj. Affording no shelter.
'Tis chastity:
She that has that is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quiver'd nymph, with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

UNH'RDENED, ùn-hár'dèn'd. adj. Not confirmed; not made hard.
Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth. Shaksp.

UNH'RDY, ùn-hár'dè. adj. Feeble; tender; timorous.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Tim'rous and loth, with novice modesty;
Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.

UNH'RMED, ùn-hárm'd'. adj. Unhurt;
not injured.
In strong proof of chastity well armed,
From lives weak, childish bow she lives unharmed. Shakspeare.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not disease them; for, causing no disorderly motion, it leaves that curious organ unharmed. Locke.
The syrens once deluded, vainly charm'd;
Ty'd to the mast, Ulysses sail'd unharmed. Gravé.

UNH'RMFUL, ùn-hárm'fúl. adj. In-noxious; innocent.
Themselves unharmed, let them live unharmed;
Their jaws disabled, and their claws disarm'd. Dryden.

UNHARMO'NTIOUS, ùn-hár-mó'nè-ús. adj.
1. Not symmetrical; disproportionate.
Those pure, immortal elements that know
No gross, no unharmonious mixture foul,
Eject him, tainted now, and purge him off. Milton.

2. Unmusical; ill sounding.
His thoughts are improper to his subject, his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious. Dryden.
That barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of verses, has formed harsh unharmonious sounds. Swift.

To UNH'RNES, ùn-hár'nès. v. a.
1. To loose from the traces.
The sweating steers unharness'd from the yoke,
Bring back the crooked plough. Dryden.

The males unharness'd range beside the main.

UNH'ZARDED, ùn-ház'úrd-éd. adj. Not adventured; not put in danger.
Here I should still enjoy thee day and night
Whole to myself, unharmed abroad,
Fearless at home. Milton.

UNHEALTHFUL, ùn-hèlth'fúl. adj. Morbid; unwholesome.
The diseases which make years unhealthful, are spotted fevers; and the unhealthful season is the autumn. Graunt.

At every sentence set his life at stake,
Though the discourse were of no weightier things
Than sultry summers, or unhealthful springs. Dryd.
UNHEALTHY, ùn-hèlth'è. adj. Sickly;
wanting health.

No body would have a child cramm'd at breakfast, who would not have him dull and unhealthy.
Locke.

He, intent on somewhat that may ease
Unhealthy mortals, and with curious search Examines all the properties of herbs. Philips.

UNHE'RD, ùn-hèrd'. adj.
1. Not perceived by the ear.
For the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard. Milton.

2. Not vouchsafed an audience.
What pangs I feel, unpitied and unheard! Dryd.
3. Unknown in celebration.
Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd. Milton.

4. UNHE'RD of. Obscure; not known to fame.
Free from hopes or fears, in humble ease,
Unheard of may I live, and die in peace! Gravé.

5. UNHE'RD of. Unprecedented.
There is a foundation laid for the most unheard of confusion that ever was introduced into a nation.
Swift.
To UNHE'RT, ùn-hárt'. v. a. To discourage; to depress.

To bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
Shakspeare.
UNHE'RTED, ùn-hèrtéd. adj. Not made hot.

Neither salts, nor the distilled spirits of them,
can penetrate the narrow pores of unheated glass.
Boyle.
UNHE'EDED, ùn-hééd'éd. adj. Disregarded; not thought worthy of notice; escaping notice.

True experiments may, by reason of the easy mistake of some unheeded circumstance, be unsuccessfully tried. Boyle.
He of his fatal guile gave proof unheeded. Milton.
Her hair

In a simple knot was ty'd above;
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love. Dryden.
The triumph ceas'd—tears gush'd from ev'ry eye,
The world's great victor pass'd unheeded by. Pope.

UNHE'EDFUL, ùn-hééd'fúl. adj. [from un- heed.] Not cautious.
UNHE'EDING, ùn-hééd'ing. adj. Negligent; careless.

I have not often seen him; if I did,
He pass'd unmark'd by my unheeding eyes. Dryd.
UNHE'EDY, ùn-hééd'è. adj. Precipitate;
sudden.
Learning his slip from those white rocks to save,

Which all along the southern sea-coast lay,
Threat'ning unheedy wreck, and rash decay,
He named Albion. Spenser.

Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste;
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheeded haste. Shaksp.
So have I seen some tender slip,
Sav'd with care from winter's nip,
The pride of her carnation train,
Pluck'd up by some unheedy swain. Milton.

To UNHE'LE, ùn-hèl'e. v. a. To uncover;
to expose to view. Spenser.

UNHE'LPED, ùn-hèlpt'. adj. Unassisted;

hewn poetry was instead of stage plays. Dryden.

UNHI'DEBOUND, ùn-hìde'bòund. adj. Lax of maw; capacious.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this maw, this vast unhidebound corps. Milton.

To UNHI'NGE, ùn-hìnje'. v. a.

1. To throw from the hinges.

2. To displace by violence.

For want of cement, ribs of rock disjoin'd
Without an earthquake, from their base would start,
And hills unhing'd, from their deep roots depart. Blackmore.

3. To disorder; to confuse.

Rather than not accomplish my revenge,
Just or unjust, I would the world unhinge. Waller.

If God's providence did not order it, cheats would not only juggle private men out of their rights, but unhinge states, and run all into confusion. Ray.

UNHO'LINESS, ùn-hó'lè-nès. n. s. Impiety;
profaneness; wickedness.

Too foul and manifest was the unholiness of obtruding upon men remission of sins for money. Raleigh.

UNHO'LY, ùn-hó'lè. adj.

1. Profane; not hallowed.

Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

From the paradise of God,
Without remorse drive out the sinful pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton.

2. Impious; wicked.

We think not ourselves the holier because we use it; so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.

UNHO'NOURED, ùn-òn'hùr'd. adj.

1. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.

Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.

Paes unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.

2. Not treated with respect.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait,
Unmark'd, unhonoured, at a monarch's gate. Pope.

To UNHO'OP, ùn-hòóp'. v. a. To divest of hoops.

Unhoop the fair sex, and cure the fashionable tympany got among them. Addison.

UNHO'PED ùn-hòpt'. adj. Not UNHO'PED for, ùn-hòpt'fòr. } expected; greater than hope had promised.

With unhop'd success
Th' ambassadors return with promis'd peace. Dryd.

UNHO'STILE, ùn-hòs'tìl. adj. Not belonging to an enemy.

The high-prancing steeds
Spurn their dismounted riders; they expire
Indignant, by unhostile wounds destroy'd. Philips.

To UNHO'USE, ùn-hòùze'. v. a. To drive from the habitation.

Seek true religion: O where? Marreus!
Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us, Seek her at Rome. Donne.

Death unawares, with his cold, kind embrace,
Unhous'd thy virgin soul from her fair bidding place. Milton.

UNHOUSED, ùn-hòùz'd. adj.

1. Homeless; wanting a house.

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spight
Of wreakful heav'n; whose bare, unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature. Shaksp.

2. Having no settled habitation.

But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused, free condition
Put into circumscription and confine. Shaksp.

Hear this
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines!
Southern.

UNHOUSELLED, ùn-hòù'z'l'd. adj. Having not the sacrament.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispatch'd;
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousell'd, unannointed, unanell'd. Shaksp.

UNHUMBLED, ùn-ùm'bl'd. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepented, unreformed, Headlong would follow? Milton.

UNHURT, ùn-hùrt'. adj. Free from harm.

Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field; and of the remaining seven hundred two men only came off unhurt. Bacon.

I tread more lightly on the ground;
My nimble feet from unhurt flowers rebound;
I walk in air. Dryden.

Supported by thy car,
Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
And breath'd in tainted air. Spectator.

The stars shall fade away;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt, amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addis.

UNHURTFUL, ùn-hùrt'fùl. adj. Innocuous;
harmless; doing no harm.

You hope the duke will return no more, or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. Shaksp.

Flames, unhurtful, hovering, dance in air. Blackmore.

UNHURTFULLY, ùn-hùrt'fùl-è. adv. Without harm; innocuously.

We laugh at others as innocently and as unhurt- fully as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.

UNICORN, yù'nè-kòrn. n. s. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Latin.]

1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.

Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shaksp.

Unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
Bears with glasses, men with flatterers. Shaksp.

Nature in cornigerous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles. Brown.

It is not of consequence, that because Disco-rides hath made no mention of unicorns horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown.

Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those nasicornous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.

Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.

2. A bird.

Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these: headed and footed like the dung-hill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness as the unicorn is pictured; spurred on his wings, bigger than a swan. Greuv.

UNIFORM, yù'nè-fòrm. adj. [unus and forma.]

1. Keeping its tenour; similar to itself.

Though when confusedly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never so uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different. Woodward.

2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.

The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.

Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.

Numbers, being neither uniform in their desigus, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Swift.

UNIFORMITY, yù'nè-fòr'mé-tè. n. s. [uni- formité, Fr.]

1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.

There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser;
he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steady-ness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.

2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.

The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, consisteth in that uniformity which all the several persons thereunto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord whose servants they all process themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker.

The great council of Nice ordained that there should be a constant uniformity in this case. Nelson.

UNIFORMLY, yû-né-fôrm-lé. adv. [from uniform.]

1. Without variation; in an even tenour.

That faith received from the apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as safe, as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker.

The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the ethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton.

2. Without diversity of one from another.

UNIMAGINABLE, ûn-îm-mâd'jin-â-bl. adj.

Not to be imagined by the fancy; not to be conceived.

Things to their thought

So unimaginable, as hate in heaven. Milton.

The skilful organist plies his grave-fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony, with artful and unimaginable touches, adorns and graces the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Hooker.

An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is utterly unimaginable. Tillotson.

UNIMAGINABLY, ûn-îm-mâd'jin-â-blé. adv. To a degree not to be imagined.

Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpuscles, that make up the beams of light. Boyle.

UNIMITABLE, ûn-îm-è-tâ-bl. adj. [inimitable, Fr. inimitabilis, Latin.] Not to be imitated.

Both these are unimitable. Burnet.

UNIMPROVED, ûn-îm-prôdv'd'. adj.

1. Not made better.

2. Not made more knowing.

Not a mask went unimprov'd away. Pope.

3. Not taught; not meliorated by instruction.

Young Fortinbrass,

Of unimproved metal, hot and full. Shakspeare.
Shallow, unimproved intellects are confident pretenders to certainty. Glanville.

UNINCREASABLE, ûn-îm-kré'sâ-bl. adj.

Admitting no increase.

That love, which ought to be appropriated to God, results chiefly from an altogether, or almost unincreasable elevation and vastness of affection. Boyle.

UNINDIFFERENT, ûn-îm-dif'fêr-ênt. adj.

Partial; leaning to a side.

His opinion touching the catholic church was as unindifferent, as, touching our church, the opinion of them that favour this pretended reformation is. Hooker.

UNINDUSTRIOUS, ûn-îm-dûs'trê-ûs. adj.

Not diligent; not laborious.

Pride we cannot think so sluggish or unindustrious an agent, as not to find out expedients for its purpose. Decay of Piety.

UNINFLAMED, ûn-îm-flâm'd'. adj. Not set on fire.

When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have uninflamed. Bacon.

UNINFLAMMABLE, ûn-îm-flâm'mâ-bl. adj.

Not capable of being set on fire.

The uninflammable spirit of such concretes may be pretended to be but a mixture of phlegm and salt. Boyle.

UNINFORMED, ûn-îm-fôrm'd'. adj.

1. Untaught; uninstructed.

Nor uninform'd

Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage rites. Milton.
No uninformed minds can represent virtue so noble to us, that we necessarily add splendour to her. Pope.

2. Unanimated; not enlivened.

UNINGENUOUS, ûn-îm-jên'û-ûs. adj. Illiberal; disingenuous.

Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskilful as it is uningenuous. Decay of Piety.

UNINHABITABLE, ûn-îm-hâb'it-â-bl. adj.

Unfit to be inhabited.

If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed uninhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropicks. Raleigh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain
All the collected treasures of the main;
The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water stood,
To man an uninhabitable flood. Blackmore.

UNINHABITABLENESS, ûn-îm-hâb'it-â-bl-nés. n. s. Incapacity of being inhabited.

Divers radicated opinions, such as that of the *uninhabitable*ness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. Boyle.

UNINHABITED, ûn-îm-hâb'it-êd. adj. Having no dwellers.

The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.

Uninhabited, untill'd, unsown
It lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone. Pope.
I cast anchor on the lee side of the island, which seem'd to be uninhabited. Swift.

UNINJURED, ûn-îm-jûr'd'. adj. Unhurt;

suffering no harm.

You may as well spread out the unsunn'd heaps
Of miser's treasure by an outlaw's den,
Aud tell me it is safe; as bid me hope

Danger will let a helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild, surrounding waste. Milton.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss:
Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,
As thy own fame among the future just! Prior.

UNINSCRIBED, ûn-îm-skrîb'd'. adj. Having no inscription.

Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known;
Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone,
Oh fact accurst! Pope.

UNINSPIRED, ûn-îm-spir'd'. adj. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.

Thus all the truths that men, uninspir'd, are enlightened with, came into their minds. Locke.

My pastoral muse her humble tribute brings,
And yet not wholly uninspir'd she sings. Dryden.

UNINSTRUCTED, ûn-îm-strûk'têd. adj. Not taught; not helped by instruction.

That fool intrudes, raw in this great affair,
And uninstructed how to stem the tide. Dryden.
It will be a prejudice to none but widows, and orphans, and others uninstructed in the arts and management of more skilful men. Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes; though there are even in these parts several poor uninstructed persons. Addison.

Though we find few amongst us who profess themselves anthropophagites, yet we may find amongst the ignorant and uninstructed christians, many of that opinion. Locke.

UNINSTRUCTIVE, ûn-îm-strûk'tiv. adj. Not conferring any improvement.

Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. Addison.

UNINTELLIGENT, ûn-îm-têl'lê-jênt. adj.

Not knowing; not skilful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insufficiency. Shakspeare.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion if men allowed of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ay, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untractable changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd
An author unintelligent and blind;
When our's proceed from choice? Blackmore.

The obvious products of unintelligent nature. Bentley.

UNINTELLIGIBILITY, ûn-îm-têl'lê-jê-bil'è-tê. n. s. Quality of not being intelligible.

Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. Glanville.

If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all other ways, this argumentation is undeniable. Burnet.

UNINTELLIGIBLE, ûn-îm-têl'lê-jê-bl. adj. [unintelligible, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as unintelligible in his time, as the English and French of the same period are now. Swift.

Did Thetis
These arms thou labour'd for her son prepare;
For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,
On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.

This notion must be despised as harmless, unintelligible enthusiasm. Rogers.

UNINTELLIGIBLY, ûn-îm-têl'lê-jê-blé. adv.

In a manner not to be understood.

Sound is not unintelligibly explained by a vibrating motion communicated to the medium. Locke.

To talk of specifick differences in nature, without reference to general ideas, is to talk unintelligibly.

Locke.

UNINTENTIONAL, ùn-in-tén'shùn-ál. adj.
Not designed; happening without design.

Besides the unintentional deficiencies of my style, I have purposely transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods overlong.

Boyle.

The greatest part of an audience is always uninterested, though seldom knowing.

Dryden.

UNINTERRUPTED, ùn-in-tér-mít'téd. adj.

This motion of the heavenly bodies seems to be partly continued and uninterrupted, as that motion of the first moveable partly interpolated and interrupted.

Hale.

UNINTERMIXED, ùn-in-tér-míks't'. adj.
Not mingled.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies,

I verify the truth, not poeize.

Daniel.

UNINTERRUPTED, ùn-in-tér-rúp'téd. adj.
Not broken; nor interrupted.

Thy constant quiet fills my peaceful breast

With unmixt joy, uninterrupted rest.

Roscommon.

Governments so divided among themselves in matters of religion, maintain uninterrupted union and correspondence, that no one of them is for invading the rights of another.

Addison.

The hills rise insensibly, and leave the eye a vast uninterrupted prospect.

Addison.

The uninterrupted stitch in superficial wounds is rejected.

Sharp.

UNINTERRUPTEDLY, ùn-in-tér-rúp'téd-lé. adv. Without interruption.

A successive augmentation uninterruptedly continued, in an actual existence of believing, and congregations in all ages unto the end of the world

Pearson.

The will thus determined, never lets the understanding lay by the object; but all the thoughts of the mind, and powers of the body, are uninterruptedly employed.

Locke.

UNINTRENCHED, ùn-in-trénsht'. adj. Not entrenched.

It had been cowardice in the Trojans not to have attempted any thing against an army that lay unfortified and unintrenched.

Pope.

UNINVESTIGABLE, ùn-in-vés'té-gá-bl. adj.
Not to be searched out.

The number of the works of this visible world being uninvestigable by us, afford us a demonstrative proof of the unlimited extent of the Creator's skill.

Ray.

Grew.

UNION, yú-né-ún.^s n. s. [unio, Latin.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.
Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak
One heart, one soul, in both!

Milton.

One kingdom, joy, and union without end.

Milt.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God.

Taylor.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn.

Shakspeare.

4. In law.

Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union: but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen VIII. chap. 21, that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is personal, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent.

Cowell.

UNIPAROUS, yú-níp'pá-rús.^s adj. [unus and pario.] Bringing one at a birth.
Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous.

Brown.

UNISON, yú-né-sún. adj. [unus and sonus, Latin.] Sounding alone.
Sounds intermix'd with voice
Choral, or unison.

Milton.

UNISON, yú-né-sún. n. s.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.
When moved matter meets with any thing like that from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings unisonans.

Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round.
Diversify'd 'midst unison of chime,
Freer than air, yet manacled with rhyme.

Harte.

UNIT, yú'nít.^s n. s. [unus, unitus, Latin.] One; the least number; or the root of numbers.
If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact.

Bentley.

Units are the integral parts of any large number.

Watts.

To UNITE, yú-níte'. v. a. [unitus, Lat.]

1. To force two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed,
In one alone right hand he now unites.
Whatever truths
Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,
Thin in their authors, like rich veins of ore,
Your works unite, and still discover more.

Dryden.

A proposition for uniting both kingdoms was begun.

Swift.

2. To make to agree.

The king proposed nothing more than to unite his kingdom in one form of worship.

Clarendon.

3. To make to adhere.

The peritonæum, which is a dry body, may be united with the musculous flesh.

Wiseman.

4. To join.

In the lawful name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony.
Charity is of a fastening and uniting nature.

Pearson.

Let the ground of the picture be well united with colours of a friendly nature.

Unto their assembly mine honour be not thou united.

Genesis.

To UNITE, yú-níte'. v. n.

1. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert.

If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them.

Shakspeare.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITEDLY, yú-nítéd-lé. adv. With union; so as to join.

The eyes which are of a watry nature ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly touched above by the light and shadows.

Dryden.

UNITER, yú-nítúr.^s n. s. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both.

Glanville.

UNITION, yú-nish'ún. n. s. [union, Fr. from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the unition, hope not to cure a wound.

Wiseman.

UNITIVE, yú-né-tív. adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God.

Norris.

UNITY, yú-né-té.^s n. s. [unitas, Latin.]

1. The state of being one.

Those hereticks introduced a plurality of gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum. that should discriminate the orthodox from them

Hammund.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity.

Brown.

Man is to beget
Like of his like; his image multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires

Collateral love, and dearest amity.

Milton.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity.

Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs.

Nor can we call those many, who endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

By this, said our Saviour, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another; and this is the unity of charity.

Pearson.

Take unity then out of the world, and it dissolves into a chaos.

Holyday.

We, of all christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others.

Sprat.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissention, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine.

Hooker.

4. Principle of dramattick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed.

Dryden.

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action, should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and astonishes the fancy.

Addison.

5. In law.

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Cocell.

UNJU'DGED, ùn-jùdj'd'.³⁶⁹ adj. Not judicially determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVER'SAL, yù-né-vér-sâl'.³ adj. [universalis, Latin.]

1. General; extending to all.

All sorrowed: if all the world could have seen 't,
The woe had been universal. Shakspeare.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakspeare.

Divine laws and precepts simply and formally moral, are universal, in respect of persons, and in regard of their perpetual obligation. White.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it, it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

No subject can be of universal, hardly can it be of general concern. Reynolds.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particulars.

From things particular
She doth abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbut. and Pope.

UNIVER'SAL, yù-né-vér-sâl'. n. s. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end hath the angel been sent to keep the entrance into paradise, after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise? Raleigh.

But by some unlook'd accident cut off.

Shakspeare.

Whatsoever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and pares others.

Bacon.

From that high hope, to what relapse

Unlook'd for are we fall'n!

Paradise Regained.

Your affairs I have recommended to the king,
but with unlooked success.

Denham.

Nor fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all.

Pope.

To UNLOO'SE, ún-lòòse'. v. a. To loose.

A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation; so that to unloose, is properly to bind.

York, unloose your long imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.

Shakspeare.

The weak, wanton Cupid

Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane
Be shook to air.

Shakspeare.

Turn him to any cause of policy;
The gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter.

Shakspeare.

It rested in you

T' unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd.

Shakspeare.

The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

Mark.

He that should spend all his time in tying intricate knots only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not much to have served his generation.

Decay of Piety.

To UNLOO'SE, ún-lòòse'. v. n. To fall in pieces; to lose all union and connexion.

Without this virtue, the publick union must unloose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint.

Collier.

UNLO'SABLE, ún-lòòz'â-bl. adj. [A word rarely used.] Not to be lost.

Whatever may be said of the unlosable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta position and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded.

Boyle.

UNLO'VED, ún-lùv'd'. ³⁶⁹ adj. Not loved.

As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though reason there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love.

Sidney.

What though I be not fortunate;
But miserable most, to love unloved!

Shakspeare.

He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person.

Clarendon.

UNLO'VELINESS, ún-lùv'lè-nès. n. s. Unamiableness; inability to create love.

The old man, growing only in age and affliction, followed his suit with all means of dishonest servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to countervail his own unloveliness.

Sidney.

UNLO'VELY, ún-lùv'lè. adj. That cannot excite love. There seems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOVELINESS.

UNLO'VING, ún-lùv'ing. adj. Unkind; not fond.

Thou, blest with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him;
Which argu'd thee a most unloving father.

Shakspeare.

You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments miscarry.

Boyle.

2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.

Then shall I you recount a rueful case,

Said he; the which with this unlucky eye I late beheld.

Spenser.

3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.

His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust; His doings unluckie, and ever unjust.

Tusser.

Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served.

L'Estrange.

There was a lad, th' unluckiest of his crew,
Was still contriving something bad, but new.

King.

4. Ill-omened; inauspicious.

When I appear, see you avoid the place,
And hauni me not with that unlucky face.

Dryden.

UNLU'STROUS, ún-lùs'trùs. adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.

Should I join gripes with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood, as with labour;
Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light
That 's fed with stinking tallow.

Shakspeare.

To UNLU'TE, ún-lùtè'. v. a. To separate vessels closed with chymical cement.

Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of sulphur, of so sulphureous a smell, that, upon the unluting the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink.

Boyle.

UNM'ADE, ún-màde'. adj.

1. Not yet formed; not created.

Thou wast begot in Demogorgon's hall,
And saw'st the secrets of the world unmade.

Spenser.

Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
And fall upon the ground as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Shakspeare.

2. Deprived of form or qualities.

The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and fram'd a-new.

Woodward.

3. Omitted to be made.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear.

Blackmore.

UNMAI'MED, ún-mám'd'. adj. Not deprived of any essential part.

An interpreter should give his author entire and unmaimed; the diction and the versification only are his proper province.

Pope.

UNMA'KABLE, ún-má'ká-bl. adj. Not possible to be made.

If the principles or bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakeable by any but a divine power.

Green.

Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand
Issues his piteous and unpitied end. Shakspeare.

Rich in the world's opinion, and men's praise,
And full in all we could desire, but days:

He that is warn'd of this, and shall forbear
To vent a sigh for him, or shed a tear;

May he live long scorn'd, and unpitied fall,
And want a mourner at his funeral! Bp. Corbet.

But he whose words and fortunes disagree,
Absurd, unpitied, grows a publick jest. Roscommon.

He that does not secure himself of a stock of reputation in his greatness, shall most certainly fall unpitied in his adversity. L'Strange.

As the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpitied be depos'd, and after live. Dryden.

As some sad turtle his lost love deploras,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn,

Alike unheard, unpitied, and forlorn. Pope.

Passion unpitied and successful love,

Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Addison.

UNPITIFULLY, ùn-pìt'è-fùl-è. adv. Un-

She muttering prayers as holy rites she meant,
 Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went. Dryden.

UNQUICK, ùn-kwik'. adj. Motionless; not alive.

His senses droop, his steady eyes unquick;
 And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel.

UNQUICKENED, ún-kwík'én'd. adj. Not animated; not ripened to vitality.

Every fetus bears a secret hoard,
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;
Which num'rons, but unquicken'd progeny,
Clasp'd, and enwrapp'd within each other lie.

Blackmore.

UNQUIET, ún-kwí'ét. adj. [inquiet, Fr. inquietus, Latin.]

1. Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.

From grammatick flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and turmoiled with their unballasted wits, in fathomless and un-quiet depths of controversy. Milton.

2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.

Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shakespeare.

Thy love hopeful to regain,
From thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n.

Milton.

3. Restless; unsatisfied.

She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glitt'ring, wretched thing. Pope.

With Machiavelian sagacity thou unravell'st intrigues of state. Arbutnot.

2. To disorder; to throw out of the present order.

How can any thing succeed well with people that are to be pleased with nothing, unless the hall of the universe may be unraveled, and the laws of Providence reversed? L'Estrange.

O the traitor's name!

I'll know it; I will: art shall be conjur'd for it,
And nature all unravell'd. Dryden and Lee.

So prophane and sceptical an age takes a pride in unravelling all the received principles of reason and religion. Tillotson.

3. To clear up the intrigue of a play.

The solution or unravelling of the intrigue commences, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.

Thus supernaturally is the plot brought to person thereof, I judge most unreasonable to imagine.

Hooker.

It is unreasonable for men to be judges in their own cases; self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Locke.

She entertained many unreasonable prejudices against him, before she was acquainted with his personal worth. Addison.

2. Exorbitant; claiming or insisting on more than is fit.

Since every language is so full of its own proprieties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow compass of his author's words. Dryden.

My intention in prefixing your name, is not to desire your protection of the following papers, which I take to be a very unreasonable request; since, by being inscribed to you, you cannot recommend them without some suspicion of partiality. Swift.

3. Greater than is fit; immoderate.

Those that place their hope in another world have, in a great measure, conquered dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Atterbury.

Dismay'd confusion all possess'd
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot describ'd:
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest,

To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;
For deepest wounds can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell.

Wolton.

Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd!
Milton.

UNRESTORED, ún-ré-stór'd'. adj.

1. Not restored.

2. Not cleared from an attainder.

The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors.
Collier.

UNRESTRAINED, ún-ré-strán'd'. adj.

1. Not confined; not hindered.

My tender age in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease and pagcants entertain'd;
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd.
Dryden.

2. Licentious; loose.

The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shakspeare.
3. Not limited.

Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution a non-usance, or abolition.
Brown.

UNRETRACTED, ún-ré-trák'téd. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames.
Government of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malevolence can justify disunion; malevolence shewn in a single outward act, unretract'd, or in habitual ill-nature.
Collier.

UNREVEALED, ún-ré-vél'd'. adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing.
Spenser.

Dear fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd;
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.

UNREVENGED, ún-ré-vénj'd'. adj. Not revenged.

So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die not unrevenged all. I airfax.
Unhonour'd though I am,

Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unreveng'd amongst us.
Addison.

UNREVEREND, ún-rév'ér-énd. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.

See not your bride in these unreverend robes.
Shakspeare.

Fie! unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast preferr'd,
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths.
Shakspeare.

UNREVERENTLY, ún-rév'ér-ént-lé. adv. Disrespectfully.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself.
Ben Jonson.

UNREVERSED, ún-ré-vérs't'. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.

She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shakspeare.

UNREVO'KED, ún-ré-vòk'l'. adj. Not recalled.

Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand.
Milton.

UNREWARD'ED, ún-ré-wárd'éd. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.

Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded.
L'Estrange.

Since for the common good I yield the fair,
My private loss let grateful Greece repair;
Nor unrewarded let your prince complain,
That he alone has fought, and hied in vain. Pope.

To UNRID'DLE, ún-rid'd'l. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.

Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Suckling.
The Platonick principles will not unriddle the doubt.
Glanville.

A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse.
Addison.

UNRIDIC'ULOUS, ún-ré-dik'ù-lús. adj. Not ridiculous.

If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this austereness unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives therof.
Brown.

To UNRIG', ún-rig'. v. a. To strip of the tackle.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store.

Dryden.

UNRI'GHT, ùn-rite'. adj. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.

What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well-grounded, timely framed, and strongly trussed up together.

Glossary to Kalendar.

Show that thy judgment is not unright. Wisdom.

UNRI'GHEOUS, ùn-ri'tshé-ùs. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Octavius here leapt into his room,
And it usurped by unrighteous doom;
But he his title justify'd by might.

Spenser.

Within a month!

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married—Oh most wicked speed!

Shaksp.

Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord.

Isaiah.

UNRI'GHEOUSLY, ùn-ri'tshé-ùs-lé. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.

For them

Their foci a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrighteously it was decreed,
That none to trust or profit should succeed,
Who would not swallow first a pois'nous wicked weed.

Dryden.

A man may fall undeservedly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed.

Collier.

UNRI'GHEOUSNESS, ùn-ri'tshé-ùs-nés. n. s. Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us; all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, saith Austin upon this place.

Hall.

Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude.

Tillotson.

UNRI'GHTFUL, ùn-rite'fùl. adj. Not rightful; not just.

Thou which know'st the way

To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne.

Shakspere.

To UNRING, ùn-ring'. v. a. To deprive of a ring.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vis. franc. pledge.

Hudibras.

To UNRI'P, ùn-rip'. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between rip and unrip; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.

Like a traitor

Didst break that vow, and, with thy treacherous blade,

Unrip'st the bowels of thy sov'reign's son.

Shakspere.

He could not now, with his honour, so unrip, and put a lye upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up.

Bacon.

We are angry with searchers when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters.

Taylor.

Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitch'd.

Collier.

UNRI'PE, ùn-ripe'. adj.

1. Immature; not fully concocted.

Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be.

Shaksp.

In this northern tract, our hoarser throats
Utter unripe and ill constrained notes.

Waller.

2. Not seasonable; not yet proper.

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unscen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen.

Dryden.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant, wise, and just Dorilaus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes?

Sidney.

UNRI'PENED, ùn-ri'p'n'd. adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north.

Addison.

UNRI'PENESS, ùn-ripe'nés. n. s. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands.

Bacon.

UNRI'VALLED, ùn-ri'vál'd. adj.

1. Having no competitor.
Honour forbid! at whose unrival'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.

Pope.

2. Having no peer or equal.

To UNRO'L, ùn-ròl'e'. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.

O horror!

The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss:

Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume.

Dryden.

UNROMANTICK, ùn-rò-mán'tik. adj. Contrary to romance.

It is a base unromantick spirit not to wait on you.

Swift.

To UNROO'F, ùn-ròòf'. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me.

Shakspere.

UNROOSTED, ùn-ròòst'éd. adj. Driven from the roost.

Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Partlet here.

Shakspere.

To UNROO'T, ùn-ròòt'. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you.

Shakspere.

Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey.

Dryden.

UNRO'UGH, ùn-rùf'314. adj. Smooth.

Siward's son,

And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood.

Shakspere.

UNROUNDED, ùn-ròund'éd. adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unfil'd pistols,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer.

Donne.

UNROYAL, ùn-ròé'ál. adj. Unprincely; not royal.

By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Musidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traitorously.

Sidney.

To UNRU'FFLE, ùn-rùf'fl. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.

Where'er he guides his finny coursers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides.

Dryden.

UNRU'FFLED, ùn-rùf'fl'd. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,

When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.

Addison.

UNRU'LED, ùn-ròòl'd'. adj. Not directed by any superiour power.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom she was committed, fainted in their labour, or forsook their charge.

Spenser.

UNRU'LINESS, ùn-ròò'lé-nés. n. s. [from unruly.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.

By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others who without leave were gone ashore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected.

Knotles.

No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices they never sacrificed so much as one lust.

South.

UNRU'LY, ùn-ròò'lé. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Therion, a loose unruly swain;

Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with busy pain.

Down I come, like glist'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive but unruly waywardness.

Shakspere.

The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.

James.

Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give:
Dost each unruly appetite controul.

Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unruly crowd.

Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unruly appetites.

Glanville.

You must not go where you may dangers meet,
Th' unruly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take.

Dryden.

UNSAFE, ùn-sáfe'. adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.

If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends.

Hooker.

With speed retir'd,
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion.

Millon.

Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair.

Denham.

Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road.

Dryden.

UNSAFE'LY, ùn-sáfe'lé. adv. Not securely; dangerously.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafe just, break loose on this bad age;

So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence.

Dryden.

As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafely, but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts, amiss; which a virtuous man never doth.

Grew.

UNSAID, ùn-séd'. adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.

Chanticleer shall wish his words unsaid.

That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase.

Felton.

UNSA'LTED, ùn-sált'éd. adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.

The mariatick scurvy, induced by too great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated.

Arbutnot.

UNSA'LTED, ùn-sá-lùt'éd. adj. [in insalutatus, Latin.] Not saluted.

Gods! I prate;

And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted.

Shakspere.

UNSA'NTIFIED, ún-sánk'tè-fide. adj. Unholy; not consecrated; not pious.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
Till the last trump. Shakspeare.

UNSA'TIABLE, ún-sá'shè-á-bl. adj. [insatiabilis, Lat.] Not to be satisfied; greedy without bounds.

*Unsatiab*le in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker.

Crassus the Roman, for his *unsatiab*le greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Raleigh.

UNSATISFACTORINESS, ún-sát-tis-fák'úr-é-nés. n. s. Failure of giving satisfaction.

That which most deters me from such trials, is their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.

UNSATISFACTORY, ún-sát-tis-fák'úr-é. adj.

1. Not giving satisfaction.

2. Not clearing the difficulty.

That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an unsatisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown.

Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillington.

UNSA'TISFIED, ún-sát'tis-fide. adj.

1. Not contented; not pleased.

Queen Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person whom she meant to advance, said, She was like one with a lanthorn seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.

Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Digby.

2. Not settled in opinion.

Concerning the analytical preparation of gold they leave persons unsatisfied. Boyle.

3. Not filled; not gratified to the full.

Though he were unsatisfied in getting, Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakspeare.

Whether shall I, by justly plaguing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love; or being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham.

Eternity human nature cannot look into, without a religious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers.

UNSA'TISFIEDNESS, ún-sát'tis-fide-nés. n. s. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied.

Between my own unsatisfiedness in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was safe, than what seemed just. King Charles.

That unsatisfiedness with transitory fruitions, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children dote upon. Boyle.

UNSA'TISFYING, ún-sát'tis-fi-ing. adj. Unable to gratify to the full.

Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.

UNSA'VOURINESS, ún-sá'vúr-é-nés. n. s. [from unsavoury.]

1. Bad taste.
2. Bad smell.

If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject here-to than any. Brown.

UNSA'VOURY, ún-sá'vúr-é. adj.

1. Tasteless.

Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job.

2. Having a bad taste.

Unsavoury food, perhaps, To spiriteal natures. Milton.

3. Having an ill smell; fetid.

Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.

4. Unpleasing; disgusting.

Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because disputation pre-supposeth some difficulty in the matter. Hooker.

Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakspeare.

To UNSA'Y, ún-sá'. v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.

Call you me fair? that fair again unsay;
Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakspeare.

Say, and unsay, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.

How soon
Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore! Milton.

To say, and straight unsay, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy, Argues no leader, but a liar trac'd. Milton.

There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsay hereafter. Atterbury.

UNSCA'LY, ún-ská'lé. adj. Having no scales.

The jointed lobster, and unscaly soale. Gay.

UNSCA'RRED, ún-skár'd'. adj. Not marked with wounds.

And must she die for this? O let her live:

'Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakspeare.

UNSEA'RCHABLE, ún-sértsh'á-bl. adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.

All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearchable dispose Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton.

Thou hast vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension, to relate Things else by me unsearchable. Milton.

Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and unsearchable perfections of the works of God. Tillotson.

These counsels of God are to us unsearchable; neither has he left us in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.

It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinities and unsearchables. Watts.

UNSEA'RCHABLENESS, ún-sértsh'á-bl-nés. n. s. Impossibility to be explored.

The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall.

UNSE'ASONABLE, nú-sé'z'n-á-bl. adj.

1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.

Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.

It is then a very unseasonable time to plead law, when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spens.

The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in hostility. Hayward.

To UNSEEM, ùn-sèém'. v. n. Not to seem. Not in use.

You wrong the reputation of your name,

In so unseeming to confess receipt

Of that which hath so faithfully been paid. Shaksp.

UNSEMLINESS, ùn-sèém'lè-nès. n. s. Indecency; indecorum; uncomeliness.

All as before his sight whom we fear, and whose presence to offend with any the least unsemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do.

Hooker.

UNSEEMLY, ùn-sèém'lè. adj. Indecent; uncomely; unbecoming.

Contentions as yet were never able to prevent two evils; the one, a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces offered by men, whose tongues and passions are out of rule; the other, a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work with most advantage in private.

Hooker.

Adultery of the tongue, consisting in corrupt dishonest, and unseemly speeches.

Perkins.

Let us now devise

What best may for the present serve to hide

The parts of each from other, that seem most To shame obnoxious, and unseemliest seen. Milton.

Her gifts

Were such, as under government well seemed;

Unseemly to bear rule. Milton.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease;

If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden.

I wish every unseemly idea and wanton expression had been banished from amongst them. Watts.

UNSEEMLY, ùn-sèém'lè. adv. Indecently; unbecomingly.

Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own. 1 Corinthians.

Unmanly dread invades the French astoni'd;

Unseemly yelling; distant hills return

The hideous noise. Philips.

UNSEEN, ùn-sèén'. adj.

1. Not seen; not discovered.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,

As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple. Shakspeare.

Her father and myself

Will so dispose ourselves, that seeing, unseen, We may of the encounter frankly judge. Shaksp.

A painter became a physician; whereupon one said to him, You have done well; for, before, the faults of your work were seen, but now they are unseen.

Bacon.

Here may I always on this downy grass, Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass! Roscom.

Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep.

Milton.

At his birth a star

Unseen before in heaven, proclaims him come;

And guides the eastern sages, who enquire

His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold. Mill.

On she came,

Led by her heav'nly Maker, though unseen, And guided by his voice. Milton.

The footsteps of the deity he treads, And secret moves along the crowded space, Unseen of all the rude Phæacian race. Pope.

2. Invisible; undiscoverable.

The weeds of heresy being grown into ripeness, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterward freshly spring up again no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

3. Unskilled; unexperienced.

He was not unseen in the affections of the court, but had not reputation enough to reform it.

Clarendon.

UNSELFISH, ùn-sèlf'ish. adj. Not addicted to private interest.

Spectator.

UNSENT, ùn-sènt'. adj.

1. Not sent.

2. UNSENT for. Not called by letter or messenger.

If a physician should go from house to house un-sent for, and enquire what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome as the disease itself.

Taylor.

Somewhat of weighty consequence brings you here so often, and un-sent for.

Dryden.

UNSEPARABLE, ùn-sèp'ar-à-bl. adj. Not to be parted; not to be divided.

Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Who twine as 'twere in love

Unseparable, shall, within this hour,

Break out to bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

UNSEPARATED, ùn-sèp'ar-à-téd. adj. Not parted.

There seek the Theban bard;

To whom Persephone, entire and whole,

Gave to retain th' unseparated soul. Pope.

UNSERVICEABLE, ùn-sèr'vis-à-bl. adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.

The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,

Thought with his wings to fly above the ground,

But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.

Spenser.

'Tis certainly demonstrated, that the condensation and expansion of any proportion of the air, is always proportional to the weight incumbent upon it; so that, if the atmosphere had been much greater or less than it is, it would on the surface of the earth have been unserviceable for vegetation and life.

Bentley.

It can be no unserviceable design to religion, to undeceive men in so important a point. Rogers.

UNSERVICEABLY, ùn-sèr'vis-à-blè. adv. Without use; without advantage.

It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unserviceably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon; and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers.

Woodward.

UNSET, ùn-sèt'. adj. Not set; not placed.

They urge that God left nothing in his word undescribed, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves to that without any alteration. Hooker.

To UNSETTLE, ùn-sèt'tl. v. a.

1. To make uncertain.

Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such settlements spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be so too; but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be so likewise. Arbutnot.

2. To move from a place.

As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him? L'Estrange.

3. To overthrow.

UNSETTLED, ùn-sèt'tl'd.³⁸⁹ adj.

1. Not fixed in resolution; not determined; not steady.

A solemn air, and the best comforter

To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakspeare.

Prepar'd I was not

For such a business; there am I found

So much unsettled. Shakspeare.

With them, a bastard of the king deccas'd,

And all th' unsettled humours of the land, Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntary. Shakspeare.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,

Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself.

Milton.

A covetous man deliberated betwixt the qualms of a wambling stomach, and an unsettled mind.

L'Estrange.

Unsettled virtue stormy may appear;

Honour, like mine, serenely is severe. Dryden.

Impartially judge, whether from the very first day that our religion was unsettled, and church government flung out of doors, the civil government has ever been able to fix upon a sure foundation.

South.

2. Unequable; not regular; changeable.

March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unequable seasons in most countries. Bentley.

3. Not established.

My cruel fate,

And doubts attending an unsettled state,

Forc'd me to guard my coast. Dryden

4. Not fixed in a place of abode.

David supposed that it could not stand with the duty which he owed unto God, to set himself in an house of cedar trees, and to behold the ark of the Lord's covenant unsettled. Hooker.

UNSE'TTLEDNESS, ùn-sèt'tl'd-nès. n. s.

1. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.
2. Uncertainty; fluctuation.
The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.
3. Want of fixity.
When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet, for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.

UNSE'VERED, ùn-sév'úr'd. adj. Not parted; not divided.
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends
I th' war, do grow together. Shakespeare.
Their bands, though slack, no dissolution fear;
Th' unsever'd parts the greatest pressure bear;
Though loose, and fit to flow, they still cohere. Blackmore.

To UNSE'X, ùn-sèks'. v. a. To make otherwise than the sex commonly is.
All you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of direst cruelty. Shakespeare.

UNSHA'DOWED, ùn-shád'òde. adj. Not clouded; not darkened.
He alone sees all things with an unshadowed, comprehensive vision, who eminently is all. Glanville.

UNSHA'KEABLE, ùn-shá'ká-bl. adj. Not subject to concussion. Not in use.
Your isle stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unshakeable, and roaring waters. Shakespeare.

UNSHA'KED, ùn-shákt'. adj. Not shaken. Not in use.
I know but one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare.

UNSHA'KEN, ùn-shá'k'n.¹⁰³ adj.

1. Not agitated; not moved.
Purpose is
Of violent birth; but poor validity:
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakespeare.
The wicked's spite against God is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but dashes his own brains out. Boyle.
2. Not subject to concussion.
3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.
Ill wast thou shrouded then,
O patient Son of God! yet only stood'st Unshaken. Milton.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicegerent. Sprat.
His principles were founded in reason, and supported by virtue; and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition; his notions were no less steady and unshaken, than just and upright. Addison.

To UNSHA'CKLE, ùn-shá'k'l. v. a. To loose from bonds.
A laudable freedom of thought unshackles their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good. Addison.

UNSHA'MED, ùn-shám'd'. adj. Not shamed.
The brave man seeks not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can:
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man. Dryden.

UNSHA'PEN, ùn-shá'p'n.¹⁰³ adj. Mishapen; deformed.
This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in when the waters had retired. Burnet

Gasping for breath, th' unshapen Phœæ die,
And on the boiling waves extended lie. Addison.

UNSHAR'ED, ùn-shár'd'. adj. Not parted; not had in common.
Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tedious unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton.

To UNSHE'ATH, ùn-shéth'. v. a. To draw from the scabbard.
Executioner, unsheath thy sword. Shakespeare.
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
Are brought to the correction of your law:
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd. Shakespeare.
Far hence be souls profane!
Now, Trojan, take the way thy fates afford;
Assume thy courage, and unsheath thy sword. Dryden.
The Roman senate has resolv'd,
Till time give better prospects, still to keep
The sword unsheath'd, and turn its edge on Cæsar. Addison.
Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
And half unsheath'd the shining blade. Pope.

UNSHED'D, ùn-shéd'd'. adj. Not spilt.
To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd. Milton.

UNSHÉLTERED, ùn-shélt'úr'd. adj. Wanting a screen; wanting protection.
He is breeding that worm, which will smite this gourd, and leave him unsheltered to that scorching wrath of God, which will make the improvement of Jonah's passionate wish, that God would take away his life, his most rational desire. Decay of Piety.

UNSHI'ELDED, ùn-shèl'd'éd. adj. Not guarded by the shield.
He try'd a tough, well-chosen spear;
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side. Dryden.

To UNSHI'P, ùn-shíp'. v. a. To take out of a ship.
At the Cape we landed for fresh water; but discovering a leak, we unshipped our goods, and watered there. Swift.

UNSHO'CKED, ùn-shòkt'.³⁶⁹ adj. Not disgusted; not offended.
Thy spotless thoughts unshock'd the priest may hear. Tickel.

Nor are the nerves of his compacted strength
Stretch'd and dissolv'd into unsinew'd length. Denham.
Now toys and trifles from their Athens come,

And dates and pepper have unsinew'd Rome. Dryd.
The affected purity of the French has unsinewed their heroic verse. The language of an epic poem is almost wholly figurative: yet are they so fearful of a metaphor, that no example of Virgil can encourage them to be bold with safety. Dryden

UNSI'NEWED, ùn-sin'ùde. adj. Nerveless; weak.

Two special reasons

May to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
And yet to me are strong. Shakspeare.

cable.

A perfect unsinining obedience, free from particular acts of transgression. Rogers.

UNSKAN'NED, ùn-skân'd'. adj. Not measured; not computed.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Shakspeare.

UNSKILFUL, ùn-skil'fùl. adj. Wanting art; wanting knowledge.

This overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve. Shakspeare.

Hear his sighs, though mute:
Unskilful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton.

A man unskilful in syllogism could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial and plausible discourse. Locke.

Using a man's words according to the propriety of the language, though it be not always understood, leaves the blame on him who is so unskilful in the language as not to understand it when used as it ought. Locke.

UNSKILFULLY, ùn-skil'fùl-lé. adv. Without knowledge; without art.

You speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkened in your malice. Shaks.

UNSKILFULNESS, ùn-skil'fùl-nés. n. s.
Want of art; want of knowledge.

The sweetness of her countenance did give such
a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsoneness, and make the eye force the mind to believe that there was a praise in that un-skilfulness. Sidney.

Let no price be heightened by the necessity or unskilfulness of the contractor. Taylor.

UNSKILLED, ùn-skil'd'. adj. Wanting skill; wanting knowledge: with in before a noun, and to before a verb.

Unskill'd in hebeore, if thou shouldst try
To mix it, and mistake the quantity,
The rules of physick would against thee cry. Dryd.

Unskill'd and young, yet something still I writ
Of Ca'n'dish beauty join'd to Cecil's wit
Prior.

Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd.
Blackmore.

Poets, like painters, thus unskill'd to trace
The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art. Pope

UNSLA'IN, ùn-slànc'. adj. Not killed.

If there were any who felt a pity of so great a fall, and had yet any sparks of unslain duty left in them towards me, yet durst they not shew it.

Sidney.

Not hecatomb unslain, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks accurs'd this dire contagion bring. Dryd.

UNSLA'KED, ùn-slàkt'. adj. Not quenched.

Her desires new rous'd,
And yet unslak'd, will kindle in her fancy,
And make her eager to renew the feast. Dryden.

Wheat steeped in brine, drawing the brine from it, they mix with unslaked lime beat to powder, and so sow it. Mortimer

UNSLÉE'PING, ùn-slèèp'ing'.⁴¹⁰ adj. Ever not tainted; not stained.

Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsoil'd name, the austereness of my life,
Will your accusation overweigh. Shakspeare.

The humours are transparent to let in the light, unsoiled and unsophisticated by any inward tuncture. Ray.

Her Arethuscan stream remains unsoil'd, Unmix'd with foreign filth, and undefil'd. Dryden.

UNSO'LD, ùn-sòld'. adj. Not exchanged for money.

Mopsus the sage, who future things foretold,
And t' other seer, yet by his wife unsoild. Dryden.

Adieu, my children! better thus expire
Unsoild, unsoild; thus glorious mount in fire. Pope.

UNSO'LDIERLIKE, ùn-sòl'jèr-like. adj. Unbecoming a soldier.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unsoildierlike in our age. Broome.

UNSO'OLID, ùn-sòl'id. adj. Fluid; not coherent.

The extension of body is nothing but the cohesion of solid, separable, moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of unsoild, inseparable and unmoveable parts. Locke.

UNSO'LVED, ùn-sòlv'd'. adj. Not explicated.

Why may not a sincere searcher of truth, by labour and prayer, find out the solution of those perplexities which have hitherto been unsoived?
Watts.

As Virgil propounds a riddle which he leaves unsolved, so I will give you another, and leave the exposition to your acute judgment. Dryden.

UNSOO'T, ùn-sòòt'. for unsweet. Spenser.

UNSOPH'ISTICATED, ùn-sò-fis'tè-kà-éd.

The humour and tunicles are purely transparent, to let in light and colours, unfoiled and unsophisticated by any inward tincture. More.

Blue vitriol, how venereal and unsophisticated soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife,
will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

If authors will not keep close to truth by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on by fallacies.
Locke.

UNSO'RTED, ùn-sòrt'éd. adj. Not distributed by proper separation.

Their ideas, ever indifferent and repugnant, lie in the brain unsorted, and thrown together without order. Watts.

UNSO'UGHT, ùn-sàwt'. adj.

1. Had without seeking.

Mad man, that does seek Occasion of wrath, and cause of strife;
She comes unsought; and shunned, follows eke.
Spenser.

Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth,
That would be woo'd, and not unsought be won.
Milton.

They new hope resume,
To find whom at the first they found unsought.
Milton.

The sea o'er-fraught would swell, and th' unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep. Milt.

Slumber, which forgot
When call'd before to come, now came unsought.
Milton.

If some foreign and unsought ideas offer themselves, reject them, and keep them from taking off our minds from its present pursuit. Locke.

Thou that art ne'er from velvet slipper free,
Whence comes this unsought honour unto me?
Fenton.

Quiet, untroubled soul, awake! awake! Arm, fight and conquer, for fair England's sake. Shakspeare.

2. Not agitated; not confused; free from passion.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd sore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

3. Not interrupted in the natural course.

Would they think with how small allowance
Untroubled nature doth herself suffice,
Such superfluities they would despise. Spenser.

4. Transparent; clear; not mudded.

The equal distribution of the spirits in the liquor with the tangible parts, ever representeth bodies clear and untroubled. Bacon.

UNTRUE, ún-tróó',³³⁰ adj.

1. False; contrary to reality.

By what construction shall any man make those comparisons true, holding that distinction untrue?
Hooker.

That a vessel filled with ashes will receive the like quantity of water that it would have done if it had been empty, is utterly untrue, for the water will not go in by a fifth part. Bacon.

2. False; not faithful.

I cannot break so sweet a bond,
Unless I prove untrue;
Nor can I ever be so fond,
To prove untrue for you. Suckling.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease, and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue.
Dryden.

UNTRULY, ún-tróó'lé. adv. Falsely; not according to truth.

It was their hurt untruly to attribute so great power unto false gods. Hooker.
On these mountains it is generally received that the ark rested, but untruly. Raleigh.

He who is perfect, and abhors untruth,
With heavenly influence inspires my youth. Sandys.

3. Treachery; want of fidelity.

I would,
So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.
Shakspeare.

4. False assertion.

In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly avail the patron and defender long;
and things most truly are likewise most behaviorally spoken. Hooker.

There is little hope for common justice in this dispute, from a man, who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Atterbury.

UNTUNABLE, ún-tú'ná-bl. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.

My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, untunable, and bad. Shakspeare.

A lute string, merely unequal in its parts, giveth a harsh and untunable sound; which strings we call false. Bacon.

His harsh untunable pipe is no more fit than a raven's to join with the musick of a choir. Talfer.

To UNTUNE, ún-túne'. v. a.

1. To make incapable of harmony.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And bark what discord follows. Shakspeare.

When the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And musick shall untune the sky. Dryden.

The captives, as their tyrant shall require

That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre,

Shall say; can Jacob's servile race rejoice, Untun'd the musick, and disus'd the voice? Prior.

2. To disorder.

O you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature,
Th' untun'd and jarring senses O wind up
Of this child-changed father! Shakspeare.

UNTURNED, ún-túrn'd. adj. Not turned.

New crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.
So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that no stone hath been left unturn'd, no way whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea, but one or other hath pitched upon.
Woodward.

UNTUTORED, ún-tú'túrd'.³⁶⁹ adj. Uninstructed; untaught.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl; and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art.
Shakspeare.

Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Their sense untutor'd fancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness wrought,
Wit may admire, and letter'd pride be taught.
Prior.

To UNTWINE, ún-twíne'. v. a.

1. To open what is held together by convolution.

But since the sisters did so soon untwine
So fair a thread, I'll strive to piece the line.
Waller.

2. To open what is wrapped on itself.

It turns finely and softly three or four turns, caused by the untwining of the beard by the moisture.
Bacon.

3. To separate that which clasps round any thing.

Divers worthy gentlemen of England, all the syren songs of Italy could never untwine from the mast of God's word. Ascham.

To UNTWIST, ún-twíst'. v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.

Untwisting his deceitful clue,
He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.
The interest of prince and people is so enfolded in a mutual embrace, that they cannot be untwisted without pulling a limb off. Taylor.

Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony. Milton.

No, I'll untwist you;
I have occasion for your stay on earth. Dryden.
Tared hempen ropes cut small and untwisted, are beneficial for lands. Mortimer.

Untwist a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

To UNTY, ún-tí'. v. a. [See UNTIE.] To loose.

O time, thou must untangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me t' untie. Shakspeare.
Unlac'd her stays, her knight-gown is untied,
And what she has of head-dress is aside. Young.

To UNVAİL, ún-váile'. v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil. This word is unvail, or unveil, according to its etymology. See VAIL and VEIL.

Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd.
Denham.

Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the unvaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education. Atterbury.

UNVALUED, ún-vál'úde. adj.

1. Not prized; neglected.

He may not, as unvalued persons do,

Carve for himself; for on his choice depend
The safety and the health of the whole state.
Shakspeare.

2. Inestimable; above price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvail'd jewels. Shakspeare.

UNVANQUISHED, ún-váng'kwisht. adj. Not conquered; not overcome.

Shall I for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Deduct so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole? Shakspeare.
Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.

They rise unvanquish'd. Milton.

UNVARIABLE, ún-vá'vále-á-bl. adj. [invariable, French.] Not changeable; not mutable.

The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence is evil. Norris.

UNVARIED, ún-vá'vále. adj. Not changed; not diversified.

If authors cannot be prevail'd with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments, yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.

They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.

UNVARNISHED, ún-vár'nisht. adj.

1. Not overlaid with varnish.

2. Not adorned; not decorated.

I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shakspeare.

UNVARYING, ún-vá'rè-ing. adj. Not liable to change.

We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.

To UNVEİL, ún-váile'. v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL]

1. To uncover; to devest of a veil.

The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light.
Milton.

To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray. Pope.

2. To disclose; to show

The providence, that 's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.
Shakspeare.

Now unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.

UNVEILEDLY, ún-vá'léd-lé. adv. Plainly; without disguise.

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands that scorns to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.

UNVENTILATED, ún-vén'tè-lá-téd. adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore.

UNVERITABLE, ún-vér'è-tá-bl. adj. Not true.

All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds.
Brown.

UNVERSED, ún-vèrst'.³⁶⁹ adj. Unacquainted; unskilled

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay

As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd.

Blackmor.

UNVE'XED, ùn-vèkst'.³⁵⁹ adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.

With a hlest and unvezt retire,
With unback'd swords, and helmets all unbruist'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shaksp.
Unvezt with thought of wants which may betide;

Dryden.

UNVI'OLATED. ùn-vi'ò-là-téd. adj. Not injured; not broken.

Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife. Shakespeare.

He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Clarendon.
This strength diffus'd

No less through all my sinews, joints and hones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton.

UNVI'R TUOUS, ùn-vér'tshù-ús. adj. Wanting virtue.

If they can find in their hearts that the poor, un- virtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakespeare

UNVI'SITED, ùn-viz'it-éd. adj. Not resorted to.

In some wild zone

Dwell, not unvisited of heav'n's fair light, Secure. Milton.

The playhouse and the park unvisited must lie.
Dryden.

UNUNIFORM, ùn-yù'nè-fòrm. adj. Wanting uniformity.

Such an ununiform piety is in many so exactly apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to wish the change of his tenure. Decay of Piety.

UNVOYAGEABLE, ùn-vò'é-à-jâ-bl. adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.

Not this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Detain from following thy illustrious track. Milton.

UNURGED, ùn-ùrj'd'.³⁶⁹ adj. Not incited;
not pressed

The time was once, when thou unurg'd wouldst
vow,

That never words were musick to thine ear,
Unless I spake. Shakespeare.

UNUSED, ùn-ùz'd'.³⁶⁹ adj.

1. Not put to use; unemployed.

She whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain so aspiring a purpose, left no art un- used, which might keep the line from breaking, whereat the fish was already taken. Sidney.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason,
To rust in us unus'd. Shakespeare.

2. Not accustomed.

He, unused to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Sidney.

One, whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare.

What art thou?

Not from above; no, thy wan looks betray Diminish'd light, and eyes unus'd to day. Dryden.

UNUSEFUL, ùn-ùse'fùl. adj. Useless;
serving no purpose.

I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be unuseful in the capacities it was intended for Glanville.

Birds flutter with their wings when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unuseful for flying. Morc.

As when the building gains a surer stay,
We take the unuseful scaffolding away. Dryden.

Pleas'd to find his age
Declining, not unuseful to his lord. Philips.

UNUSUAL, ùn-ù'zhù-ál.⁴⁵⁶ adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.

With this unusual and strange course, they went on, till God, in whose heaviest worldly judgments
I nothing doubt but that there may lie hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions.
Hooker.

You gain your point, if your industrious art
Can make unusual words easy and plain. Roscom.
A sprightly red vermillions all her face;
And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Granv.

That peculiar turn, that the words shall appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors. Felton.

The river flows redundant, and attacks
The lingering remnant with unusual tide. Philips.

UNUSUALNESS, ùn-ù'zhù-ál-nès. n. s. Uncommonness; infrequency.

It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprises Alcinous. Broome.

UNUSUALLY, ùn-ù'zhù-ál-lè. adv. [from unusual.] Not in the usual manner.

UNUTTERABLE, ùn-ù'tùr-â-bl. adj. Inef-fable; inexpressible.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable; which the spirit of prayer
Espir'd, and wing'd for heaven with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory. Milton.

What thinks he of the happiness of another life, wherein God will fill us with unutterable joy?
Kettlewell.

It wounds my soul

To think of your unutterable sorrows,
When you shall find Hippolitus was guiltless. Smith.

UNVULNERABLE, ùn-vùl'nùr-â-bl. adj.
Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.

The god of soldiers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick i' th' wars
Like a great sea mark, standing every flaw!
Shakespeare.

UNWAKENED, ùn-wà'k'n'd'.^{103 369} adj. Not roused from sleep.

The more
His wonder was, to find unwaken'd Eve
With tresses discompos'd. Milton.

walls.

He came to Taurus, a great and rich city, but unwalled, and of no strength. Krollen.

UNWARES, ùn-wàrz'. adv. Unexpectedly;
before any caution, or expectation.

She, by her wicked arts,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will. Spenser.
The deity

Hath given so many other sighs and cares
To my attendant state, that well unwares
You might be hurt for me. Chapman.

His loving mother came upon a day
Unto the woods, to see her little son,
And chanc'd unwares to meet him in the way,
After his sports and cruel pastime done. Fairfax.

Still we sail, while prosperous blows the wind,
Till on some secret rock unwares we light. Fairfax.

UNWASHED, ùn-wàsh'è-lè. adv. Without caution; carelessly; heedlessly.

The best part of my powers
Were in the washes all unwarily
Devoured by the unexpected flood. Shakespeare.

If I had not unwarily engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it till I had looked over it. Digby.

By such principles, they renounce their legal claim to liberty and property, and unwarily submit to what they really abhor. Freeholder.

UNWARINESS, ùn-wà're-nès. n. s. [from unwary.] Want of caution; carelessness.

The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarinesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Spectator.

UNWARRLIKE, ùn-wàr'like. adj. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.

He safely might old troops to battle lead
Against th' unwarrlike Persian and the Mede;
Whose hasty fight did from a bloodless field,
More spoils than honour to the victor yield. Waller.
Avert unwarrlike Indians from his Rome, Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home. Dryd.

UNWARNED, ùn-wàrn'd'.³⁵⁹ adj. Not cautioned; not made wary.

Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside.
Locke.

May hypocrites,

That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, till by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts dislose! Philips.

UNWARRANTABLE, ùn-wòr'ràn-tâ-bl. adj.
Not defensible; not to be justified; not allowed.

At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compassed without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.

He who does an unwarrantable action through a false information, which he ought not to have believed, cannot in reason make the guilt of one sin
the excuse of another. South.

UNWARRANTABLY, ùn-wòr'ràn-tâ-blè. adv.
Not justifiably; not defensibly.

A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay, unwarrantably require of others. Wake.

UNWARRANTED, ùn-wòr'ràn-téd. adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.

The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon the hope of an un- warranted conquest; but to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the countries where they inhabit. Bacon.

UNWARY, ùn-wà'ri. adj.

1. Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty;
precipitate.

Nor think me so unwary,
To bring my feet again into the snare
Where once I have been caught. Milton.

So spake the false archangel, and infus'd Bad influence into th' unwary breast. Milton.

Turning short he struck with all his might Full on the helmet of the unwary knight;
Deep was the wound. Dryden.

Propositions about religion are insinuated into the unwary as well as unbiassed understandings of children, and rivetted there by long custom. Locke.

2. Unexpected. Obsolete.

All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary sight,
And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Spenser.

UNWASHED, ùn-wòsh't'. } adj. Not UNWASHEN, ùn-wòsh'èn. } washed;

not cleansed by washing.
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.
Shakespeare.

To eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.
Mather.

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice;
and if repentance usher not in, prayer will never find admittance. Duppa.

When the fleec is shorn, if sweat remains,
Unwash'd, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryden.

UNWA'STED, ún-wá'stéd. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.

Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood,
Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood
Have, ages past, their melting crystals spread,
And with their spoils the liquid regions fed?

Blackmore.

UNWA'STING, ún-wá'sting.⁴¹⁰ adj. Not growing less; not decaying.

Purest love's unwasting treasure;
Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
Sacred Hymen! these are thine. Pope.

UNWAY'ED, ún-wá'dé'. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.

Beasts, that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwayed, and will not go at all. Suckling.

UNWE'AKENED, ún-wé'k'n'd.^{103 369} adj. Not weakened.

By reason of the exsuction of some air out of the glass, the classical power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unweakened pressure of the external air. Boyle.

UNWE'APONED, ún-wé'p'p'n'd.^{103 369} adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.

As the beasts are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against unweaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.

UNWE'ARIABLE, ún-wé'rè-â-bl. adj. Not to be tired; indefatigable.

Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unweariable. Hooker.

UNWE'ARIED, ún-wé'ríd. adj.

1. Not tired; not fatigued.

The Creator from his work
Desisting, though unwearied, up return'd. Milton.

This servitude makes you to keep unwed. Shakespeare.

UNWE'DGEABLE, ún-wéd'já-bl. adj. Not to be cloven.

Merciful heaven!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare.

UNWEE'DED, ún-wééd'éd. adj. Not cleared from weeds.

Fie! 'tis an unweeded garden
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature, Possess it merely. Shakespeare.

UNWEEP'ED, ún-wéépt'. adj. Not lamented. Now unweept.

He must not float upon his watry hier
Unweept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.

UNWEE'TING, ún-wéé'ting.⁴¹⁰ adj. Ignorant; unknowing.

Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
As all unwee'ting of that well she knew;
And pain'd himself with busy care to rear
Her out of careless swoon. Spenser.

But contrary, unwee'ting he fulfill'd
The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd,
Of the most high. Milton.

UNWE'IGHED, ún-wá'dé'. adj.

What unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why, he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakespeare.

Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unweigh'd,
Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress,
Of human race the wisest and the best. Pope.

UNWE'IGHING, ún-wá'ing.⁴¹⁰ adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.

Wise? why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Shakespeare.

UNWE'LCOME, ún-wé'l'kúm. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakespeare.

Soon as th' unwelcome news
From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd,
All were who heard. Milton.

Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham.
Fore'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.

From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.

Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley.

UNWE'PT, ún-wépt'. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolorous likewise be unwept. Shakespeare.

We, hut the slaves that mount you to the throne:
A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the sun'ral flame;
By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.

UNWE'T, ún-wét'. adj. Not moist.

Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.

UNWHI'PT, ún-whípt'.³⁶⁹ adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.

Tremble thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes
Unwhipt of justice. Shakespeare.

Once I caught him in a lie;
And then, unwhipt, he had the sense to cry. Pope

UNWHO'LESOME, ún-hòlè'súm. adj.

1. Insalubrious; mischievous to health.
The discovery of the disposition of the air is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.

There I a prisoner chain'd scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,

Unwholesome draught; hut here I find amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.

How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome before they are brought to him? South.

Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them while the heats last. Addison.

Children, born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. Arbutnot.

2. Corrupt; tainted.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, waty pumption; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.

UNWI'ELDILY, ún-wéél'dé-lè. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.

Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.

UNWI'ELDINESS, ún-wéél'dé-nè's. n. s. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon

That which love worst endures, discretion! Donne.
The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses Glanville.

UNWI'ELDY, ún-wéél'dè. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.

An age, meeting many humours in a fat, unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits carri'd him out of the world. Clarendon.

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton.

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount
Than files of marshall'd figures can account Dryden.

Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails,
Rebounding harmless from the plaited scales,
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crusted all around. Addison.

What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

UNWI'LLING, ún-wil'ling.⁴¹⁰ adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.

The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself Hooker.

If thou dost find him tractable,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakespeare.

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.

Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'rful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.

At length I drop, hut in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, keep your piece nine years. Pope.

UNWI'LLINGLY, ún-wil'ling-lè. adv. Not with good-will; not without loathness.

The whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school. Shakespeare.

A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton.

Still dismay'd
By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.
These men were once the prince's foes, and then
Unwillingly they made him great: hut now,

Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.

The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That, where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.

UNWILLINGNESS, ùn-wil'ling-nès. n. s.
Loathness; disinclination.

Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey; is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since, an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad, lest she should pine, and he overcome with sorrow. Raleigh.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWIND, ùn-wind'. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.

1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney.

Empirick politicians use deceit:
You holdly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

Desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as in every point to unwind themselves where the snares of glosing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakspeare.

To UNWIND, ùn-wind'. v. a. To admit of evolution.

Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer.

UNWIPED, ùn-wipt'.³⁵⁹ adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shakspeare.

UNWISE, ùn-wize'. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.

O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chuse an officer? Shakspeare.

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakspeare.
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.

This the Greeks say, this the barbarians,
The wise and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, slothful or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.

When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWISELY, ùn-wize'lè. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.

Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser East Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWISH, ùn-wish'. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shakspeare.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.

UNWISHED, ùn-wisht'.³⁵⁹ adj. Not sought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the inevitable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave me my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sov'reignty. Shakspeare.

While leaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam,
The best of brothers at his natal home,
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWISER, ùn-wist'. adj. Unthought of; not known. Spenser.

To UNWIT, ùn-wit'. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like hride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitted men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakspeare.

UNWITHDRAWING, ùn-with-draw'ing. adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton.

UNWITHSTOOD, ùn-with-stùd'. adj. Not opposed.

Cressy plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwithstood Could do in rigid fight. Philips.

UNWITNESSED, ùn-wit'nèst. adj. Wanting testimony; wanting notice.

Lest their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed. Hooker.

UNWITTINGLY, ùn-wit'ting-lè. adv. [Properly unweetingly, from unweeting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their detriminations. Sidney.

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

UNWONTED, ùn-wùn'tèd. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view. Spenser.

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted
Which now came from him. Shakspeare.

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanville.

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,

All signs of some unwonted change appear. Dryd.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.
Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.

Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly. May.

O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas,
Rough with black winds and storms,
Unwonted shall admire. Milton.

UNWORKING, ùn-wùrk'ing. adj. Living without labour.

Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it. Locke.

UNWORSHIPPED, ùn-wùr'shìpt. adj. Not adored.

He resolv'd to leave
Unworshipp'd, unohy'd, the throne supreme. Milton.

UNWORTHILY, ùn-wùr'thè-lè. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed. Shakspeare.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakspeare.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Broome.

UNWORTHINESS, ùn-wùr'thè-nès. n. s.
Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney.

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easilier driven away by the sun, than that it is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists. Shakspeare.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake.

UNWORTHY, ùn-wùr'thè. adj.

1. Not deserving: whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as a heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard sounding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knolles.

2. Wanting merit.
Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakspeare.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving. Shakspeare.

Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Whitgift.

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney.

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.

Care is taken to intersperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mour'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.

UNWOUND, ún-wóund'. pret. and part. pass. of unwind. Untwisted.

Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitched ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer.

UNWOUNDED, ún-wódn'déd. adj.

1. Not wounded.

We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies. Milton.

2. Not hurt.

Oh blest with temper!
She who can love a sister's charms, or hear Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.
To UNWRAP, ún-ráp'. v. a. To open what is folded.

To UNWREATH, ún-réth'. v. a. To untwine.

The beards of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.

UNWRITING, ún-ri'ting'. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested. Arbuthnot.

UNWRITTEN, ún-rit'th'n. adj.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser.
The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten. Hale.

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South.

UNWROUGHT, ún-ráwt'. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought. Fairfax.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand:
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden.

UNWRUNG, ún-rúng'. adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwrung. Shakespeare.

UNYIELDED, ún-yéld'éd. adj. Not given up.

Overpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.

To UNYOKE, ún-yóké'. v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already;

Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course East, west, north, south. Shakespeare.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules. Broome.

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shakespeare.

UNYOKED, ún-yókt'. adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes. Dryden.

2. Ilicitious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shakespeare.

UNZONED, ún-zón'd'. adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzoned, her bosom. Prior.

VOCABULARY, vò-káb'ù-lá-rè. n. s. [vocabularium, Latin; vocabulaire, French.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a wordbook.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown.

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts. Watts.

VOCAL, vò-kál. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Latin.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there he words not made with lungs;
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To bill, or valley, fountain or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton.

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand cupids dwell. Dryden.

Memnon, though stoue, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all,
Rome oft has heard a cross haraunging,
By prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental musick, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker.

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.

VOCALITY, vò-kál'è-tè. n. s. [vocalitas, Latin; from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritaly. Holder.

To VOCALIZE, vò-kál-ize. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY, vò-kál-lé. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.

Although it is as natural to mankind to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale.

VOCA'TION, vò-ká'shùn. n. s. [vocation, French; vocatio, Latin.]

1. Calling by the will of God.

Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker.

They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker.

2. Summons.

What can be urged for them, who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of mere wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment; calling.

He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the sight of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakespeare.

God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

4. It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take,
The drunken quarrels of a rake,
Or when a whore in her vocation
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCATIVE, vòk'á-tiv'. n. s. [vocatif, French; vocativus, Latin.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOCIFERATION, vò-sif-ér-á'shùn. n. s. [vociferatio, vocifero, Latin.] Clamour; outcry.

The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbuthnot.

VOCIFEROUS, vò-sif-ér-ús. adj. [vocifero, Latin.] Clamorous; noisy.

Thrice three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confessed they were forced to laugh. Pope.

VOGUE, vòg'. n. s. [vogue, Fr. from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode; popular reception.

It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's saintship from the vogue of the world. South.

Use may revive the obsolete words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.

What factions th' have, and what they drive at
In public vogue, or what in private Hudibras.

In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.

No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.

At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to stifle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

VOICE, vòis. n. s. [voix, French; vox, vocis, Latin.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see
The works of men; or hear mortalitie Expire a voice. Chapman.

2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.

Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices.

Bacon.

3. Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory.

Addison.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it.

Shakspeare.

I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out.

Shakspeare.

The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few: for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity.

Knolles.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice.

Dryden.

5. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church.

Fell.

To VOICE, vòis. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.

Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardfully?
It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the Tower, wherewith there was great murmur.

Bacon.

Many sought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive.

Daniel.

2. To vote. Obsolete.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul.

Shakspeare.

To VOICE, vòis. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.

Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims.

Bacon.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high.

South.

VOICED, vòist.³⁶⁹ adj. [from the noun.]

Furnished with a voice.
That's Erythæa,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her!

Denham.

VOID, vòid.²⁹⁹ adj. [vuide, French.]

1. Empty; vacant.

The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along.

Shaksp.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.

If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in?

Hooker.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please.

Isaiah

This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down.

Bacon.

Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it.

Clarendon.

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null.

Clarendon

Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever.

Swift

3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.

Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden and said, I am sure my office will not be long void.

Camden.

4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.

If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned?

Whitgift.

How void of reason are our hopes and fears!

Dryden.

Being void of all friendship and civility, they never complain.

Swift.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain.

Pope.

VOID, vòid. n. s. [from the adjective.]

An empty space; vacuum, vacancy.

Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense.

Pope.

Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illimitable void?

Thomson.

To VOID, vòid. v. a. [from the adjective;

vuider, French.]

1. To quit; to leave empty.

If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field.

Shakspeare.

Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side.

Wotton.

2. To emit; to pour out.

The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix.

Wilkins.

3. To emit as excrement.

Excrements smell ill to the same creature that voideth them; and the cat burieth what she voideth.

Bacon.

Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one.

Hudibras.

Fleshy filaments, or matter, voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel.

Arbuthnot.

4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.

It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed.

Clarendon.

To VOID, vòid. v. n.

1. To be emitted.

By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily.

Wiseman.

2. To receive what is emitted.

How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth?

Shaksp.

VOIDABLE, vòid'â-bl.⁴⁰⁵ adj. [from void.]

Such as may be annulled.

If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona notabilia in divers dioceses, grants, letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence.

Ayliffe.

VOIDANCE, vòid'ânse. n. s. [from void.]

1. The act of emptying.

2. Ejection from a benefice.

VOIDER, vòid'ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.

A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones.

Cleaveland.

VOIDNESS, vòid'nês. n. s. [from void.]

1. Emptiness; vacuity.

2. Nullity; inefficacy.

3. Want of substantiality.

If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days.

Hakewilt

VOITURE, vòe-tûre'. n. s. [Fr.] Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.

They ought to use exercise by voiture or carriage.

Arbuthnot.

VO'LANT, vò'lânt. adj. [volans, Latin; volant, French.]

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The volant or flying automata, are such mechanical contrivances as have a self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds.

2. Nimble; active.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.

Milton.

Blind British bards, with volant touch,
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless levels.

Philips.

VO'LATILE, vò'lâ-tîl.¹⁴⁵ adj. [volatilis, Lat.]

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly.

There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings, because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air.

2. [volatile, French.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.

In vain, though by their pow'ful art they bind Volatile Hermes.

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fixed and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed?

Newton.

3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit; airy.

Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life.

Swift.

VO'LATILE, vòl'â-tîl. n. s. [volatile, French.] A winged animal.

The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles.

VO'LATILENESS, vòl'â-tîl-nês. } n. s. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]

VO'LATILITY, vòl'â-tîl-é-té. } n. s. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]

1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.

Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliantness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies.

Of volatility the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.

Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals.

The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatileness, be discovered to the sense.

Hale.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists.

Arbuthnot.

2. Mutability of mind; airiness; liveliness.

VO'LATILIZATION, vòl'â-tîl-é-zâ'shûn. n. s. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.

Chymists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar.

To VO'LATILIZE, vòl'â-tîl-ize. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.

Spirit of wine has a refractory power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation, the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action.

Spirituous liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering respirable the animal fluids, that they rather condense them. Arbutnot.

VOLCA'NO, vól-ká'nó. n. s. [Ital. from Vulcan.] A burning mountain.

Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos and fiery hills.

When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcano gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies.

Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks.

Why want we then encomiums on the storm
Or famine, or volcanos? They perform Their mighty deeds; they hero-like can slay,
And spread their ample deserts in a day.

VOLE, vóle. n. s. [vole, French.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Past six, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole.

VOL'ERY, vól'ér-é.⁵⁶⁶ n. s. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery, amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him.

VOLITATION, vól-è-tá'shún. n. s. [volito, Latin.] The act or power of flying.

Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation.

VOLTITION, vól-lísh'ún. n. s. [volitio, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.

To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation.

There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance.

VOLITIVE, vól'è-tív.¹⁶⁸ adj. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better.

VOLLEY, vól'lé. n. s. [volée, French.]

1. A flight of shot.
From the wood a volley of shot slew two of his company.

More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd.

2. A burst; an emission of many at once.
A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full vollies breaks.

To Vo'LLey, vól'lé. v. n. To throw out.

The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

VOL'LIED, vól'lid.²⁸³ adj. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a volley.

I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed.

The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, disserver'd, scud

VOLT, vólt. n. s. [volte, French.]

Volt signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center.

VOLUBILITY, vól-ù-bíl'è-té. n. s. [volubilité, Fr. volubilitas, from volubilis, Latin.]

1. The act or power of rolling.
Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness.

Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen.

2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.
Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility.

He expressed himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper.

He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father.

3. Mutability; lability to revolution.
He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next; and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression.

VOLUBLE, vól'ù-bl.⁴⁰⁶ adj. [volubilis, Lat.]

1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.
Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion.

The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or by their motion, oppose coalition.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.
This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there.

Then voluble and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets.

3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.
A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant.

These, with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echoes.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.
Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection.

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,
Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard.

VOLUME, vól'yúme.¹¹³ n. s. [volumen, Latin.]

1. Something rolled, or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Threescore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange.

Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course.

Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he sails:
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails.

Slow through the vale in silver volumes play.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watry particles and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves.

3. [volume, French.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed
My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat.

Calmly, I do heseech you.—
Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume.

The most sagacious man is not able to find out any blot or error in this great volume of the world.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men misled themselves. This would make a volume.

If one short volume could comprize
All that was witty, learn'd and wise,
How would it be esteem'd and read?

VOLU'MINOUS, vól-ù'mè-nús. adj. [from volume.]

1. Consisting of many complications.
The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast.

2. Consisting of many volumes, or books.
If heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars
Voluminous, or single characters

In their conjunction met, give me to spell.
There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without pestering the world with voluminous transcriptions.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer.

3. Copious; diffusive.
He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse.

VOLU'MINOUSLY, vól-ù'mè-nús-lè. adv. [from voluminus.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled.

VOLUNTARILY, vól'ún-tá-rè-lè. adv. [volontiers, Fr. from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater.

VOLUNTARY, vól'ún-tá-rè. adj. [volontaire, Fr. voluntarius, Latin.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.
God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent intending before-hand, and decrecing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakspeare.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

Then virtue was no more; her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

3. Done by design; purposed.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, out of his hand, and kills another passing by, here is indeed man-slaughter, but no voluntary murder. Perkins.

4. Done without compulsion.

Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakspeare.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed.

5. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous.

The publick prayers of the people of God, in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporary wit. Hooker.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers Milton.

VO'LUNTARY, vò-ù'n-tà-rè. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All the unsetled humours of the land;
Rash, inconsid'rate, fiery voluntaries. Shakspeare.

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress. Shakspeare.

The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies.

Aids came in partly upon missives, and partly voluntaries from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of musick played at will, without any settled rule.

Whistling wiuds like organs play'd,
Until their voluntaries made
The waken'd earth in odours rise,
To be her morning sacrifice. Cleaveland.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator.

VOLUNTEER, vòl-ù'n-tèér'. n. s. [volontaire, Fr.] A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the mi-fortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;
And gods beat up for volunteers
To Greece and Troy Prior.

To VOLUNTEER, vòl-ù'n-tèér'. v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,

The city needs not your new tricks for breaking;
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUPTUARY, vò-lùp'tshù-à-rè. n. s. [voluptuaire, Fr. voluptuarius, Latin.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who lived like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, vò lùp'tshù-ùs. adj. [voluptuosus, Latin; voluptueux, Fr.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is, the giving licence to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride into the snare I fell
Of far fallacious looks; veneral trains,
Soft'n'd with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, vò-lùp'tshù-ùs-lè. adv. [from voluptuosus.] Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

'Tis cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, vò-lùp'tshù-ùs-nèss. n. s. [from voluptuosus.] Luxuriousness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

There 's no bottom
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bowes,
Call on him for 't. Shakspeare.

Here, where still ev'ning is not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTATION, vò-lù-tà'shù'n. n. s. [volutatio, Latin.] Wallowing; rolling.

VO'LUTE, vò-lùtè'. n. s. [volute, French.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These volutes are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus: whence that ancient architect calls the voluta pulvinus. Harris.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Transtevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO'MICA, vòm'è-kâ. n. s. [Latin.] An encysted tumour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the purid matter, and taint the blood. Arbuthnot.

VO'MICK NUT, vòm'ik-nùt. n. s.

Vomick nut is the nucleus of a fruit of an East-India tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubrium, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill.

To VO'MIT, vòm'it. v. n. [vomo, Latin.] To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. More.

To VO'MIT, vòm'it. v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown,
By pamp'rd nature's store too prodigally fed,
And surfeiting therewith, her surcrease vomited. Drayton.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah.

Vomiting is of use when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseman.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbuthnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VO'MIT, vòm'it. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomits.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found successful. Blackmore.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances: if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbuthnot.

VOMITION, vò-mish'ù'n. n. s. [from vomo, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch! Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew.

VO'MITIVE, vòm'è-tiv.¹⁶⁸ adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomits.

From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitif, occasion black ejections. Brown.

VO'MITORY, vòm'è-tùr-è.²¹² adj. [vomittoire, Fr. vomitarius, Latin.] Procuring vomits; emetick.

Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitif operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitif privately. Harvey.

VORA'CIOUS, vò-rà'shùs.²⁶⁷ adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Latin.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.

So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORA'CIOUSLY, vò-rà'shùs-lè. adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORA'CIOUSNESS, vò-rà'shùs-nèss. } n. s.

VORA'CITY, vò-ràs'è-tè. } [voracité, Fr. voracitas, Lat. from voracious.]

Greediness; ravine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham.

VO'RTEX, vò'rèks. n. s. In the plural vortices. [Lat.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts, would by their tenacity and stiffness communicate their motion to one another.

Newton.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets.

Bentley.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along, Involves a vast involuntary throng; Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less, Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.

Pope.

VO'RTICAL, vòr'té-kál.⁸⁸ adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer, and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest but yet will lose it in a short time.

Newton.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity.

Bentley.

VO'TARIST, vò'tá-ríst. n. s. [devotus, Lat.]

One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I wish a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare.

Shakspeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods, I am no idle votarist.

Shakspeare.

The grey-hooded ev'n, Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed, Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain.

Milton.

VO'TARY, vò'tá-ré. n. s. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee? Thou art a votary to fond desire.

Shakspeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary. No more my pillow shall thine altar be, Nor will I offer any more to thee Myself a melting sacrifice.

Crashaw.

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was deficient at the publick office of the church.

Fell.

By these means, men worship the idols which have been set up in their minds, and stamping the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkeys.

Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries among those who are called by the name of the son of God.

Rogers.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove An instrument to earthly love? Know'st thou not yet, that men commence Thy votaries for want of sense?

Swift.

VO'TARY, vò'tá-ré. adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood.

Bacon.

VO'TARESS, vò'tá-rés. n. s. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votress passed on In maiden meditation, fancy free.

Shakspeare.

His mother was a votress of my order; And, in the spiced Indian air by night, Full often she hath gossip'd by my side.

Shakspeare.

No rosary this votress needs, Her very syllables are beads.

Cleveland.

Thy votress from my tender years I am; And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game.

Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love His sister sends, her votress from above.

Pope.

VOTE, vòté. n. s. [votum, Latin.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight, Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes.

Roscomm.

How many have no other ground for their tenets than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession! as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude.

Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be swayed by the superiour weight of reason.

Watts.

To VOTE, vòté. v. a.

1. To choose by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master, but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you.

Bacon.

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds, by way of recompence for their sufferings.

Swift.

VO'TER, vò'túr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from vote.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander.

Swift.

He hates an action base; Can sometimes drop a voter's claim, And give up party to his fame.

Swift.

VO'TIVE, vò'tiv.¹⁰⁷ adj. [votivus, Latin.]

Given by vow.

Such in Isis' temple you may find, On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd.

Dryden.

Venus! take my votive glass; Since I am not what I was, What from this day I shall be, Venus! let me never see.

Prior.

To VOUCH, vòútsh.³¹³ v. a. [voucher, Norman French.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

The sun and day are witnesses for me; Let him who fights unseen relate his own, And touch the silent stars and conscious moon.

Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making, 'Tis given with welcome.

Shakspeare.

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle.

Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it.

Atterbury.

To VOUCH, vòútsh. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed.

Swift.

VOUCH, vòútsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

Warrant; attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?

Shakspeare.

VO'UCHER, vòútsh'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from vouch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing.

All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation.

Spectator.

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost.

Pope.

2. Testimony.

Better to starve, Than crave the hire which first we do deserve: Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here; To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear Their needless voucher?

Shakspeare.

The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it.

Locke.

To VOUCHSAFE, vòútsh-sáfe'. v. a. [vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference.

Sidney.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?—Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing.

Shakspeare.

But if the sense of touch seem such delight Beyond all other, think the same vouchsaf'd

To cattle and each beast.

Milton.

It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached.

South.

To VOUCHSAFE, vòútsh-sáfe'. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.

Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weighed by wisdom and virtue? doth not she vouchsafe to love me with like ardour?

Sidney.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman, Of these supposed crimes to give me leave

By circumstance but to acquit myself

Shakspeare.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold

What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old.

Dryd.

VOUCHSAFEMENT, vòútsh-sáfe'mént. n. [s. from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable, perfections.

Boyle.

Vow, vòú.³²³ n. s. [vœu, Fr. votum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows; They are polluted offerings.

Shakspeare.

Where honour or where conscience does not bind,

No other law shall shackle me,

Slave to myself I will not be,

Nor shall my future actions be confin'd

By my own present mind.

Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand

For days that yet belong to fate,

Does, like an unthrift, mortgage his estate

Before it comes into his hand.

The bondman of the cloister so

All that he does receive does always owe;

And still, as time comes in, it goes away,

Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,

Which his hour's work, as well as hours, does tell;

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

Concley.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow.

Hammond.

She vows for his return with vain devotion pays.

Dryden.

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever woman spoke, Shaksp.
Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.

To Vow, vôû. v. a. [vouer, French; voveo, Latin.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation.

Vow and pray unto the Lord.
When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint, Davies.
This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd:
And last, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.

2. To devote: a ceremonial phrase.

To master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.

To Vow, vôû. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Dost see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone, but mark the fate of faeces. Suckling.
Vo'w'ed, vôû'd. part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

Vo'w'el, vôû'il. n. s. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, La.in.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel, which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel; as, bl, st; and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, raffle. Holder.

Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Broome.

Vowfe'low, vôû'fêl-lô. n. s. [vow and follow.] One bound by the same vow.

Who are the vowfellows, with this virtuous king?
That are vowfellows with this virtuous king? Shakspere.

VOYAGE, vôé'âdje. n. s. [voyage, French.]

1. A travel by sea.
Guyon forward 'gan his voyage make,
With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser.

Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hereules, as to other parts in the Atlantic and Mediterranean seas. Bacon.

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were allayed, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose. Prior.

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspere.

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakspere.

3. The practice of travelling.
All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.

To Vo'YAGE, vôâ'âdje. v. n. [voyager, French, from the noun.] To travel by sea.

For, voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Thus refus'd 't impart the baneful trust. Pope.

To Vo'YAGE, vôé'âdje. v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.

Vo'YAGER, vôé'â-jûr. n. s. [voyageur, French, from voyage.] One who travels by sea.

Disdain not in thy constant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring. Donne.
How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Cheyne.

Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
A private voyager I pass the main. Pope.

UP, ûp. adv. [up, Saxon; oft, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things; now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles.

Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,
Or longitude. Milton.

2. Out of bed; in a state of being risen from rest.

Helen was not up, was she? Shakspere.
His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servant to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.
Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that sir Roger was up. Addison.

1. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

5. In a state of being built.
Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow?—well, all's one for that. Shakspere.

6. Above the horizon.
As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges.

Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,
Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane. Dryd.

7. To a state of proficiency.
Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.

8. In a state of exaltation.
Those that were up themselves kept others low;
Those that were low themselves held others hard,
Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater grow. Spenser.
Henry the fifth is crown'd; up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence! Shakspere.

9. In a state of climbing.
Straight the rumour flew
Up to the city; which heard, up they drew
By daies first breake. Chapman.

10. In a state of insurrection.
The gentle archbishop of York is up
With well-appointed powers. Shakspere.

Rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shaksp.
Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,
And maus each part about me. Dryden.

11. In a state of being increased, or raised.

Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be poured unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.

12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.

As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.

13. Into order: as, he drew up his regiment.

14. From younger to elder years.
I am ready to die from my youth up. Psalms.

15. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.

16. Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker.

The skipping king he rambl'd up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakspere.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again;
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel.

Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen Wing silently the buxom air. Milton.

On this windy sea of land the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton.

What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.

She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.

17. UP to. To an equal height with.

Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.

18. UP to. Adequately to.

The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.
They are determined to live up to the holy rule by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Atterbury.

We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Rogers.

19. UP with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.

20. It is added to verbs implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison.

UP, ûp. interject.

1. A word exhorting to rise from bed.
Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.

2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

Up, then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine,
Such cause of mourning never hadst thou:

Up, grisly ghosts; and up, my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shall thou have no more.

Spenser.

But up, and enter now into full bliss. Milton.

Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait
you,

And long to call you chief. Dryden.

Up, up h'reft. From a lower to a higher part. not down.

In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary;
in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

To UPBE'AR, ùp-bàre'. v. a. pret. upborne;
part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]

1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.

Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.

Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
Swift as on wings of wind upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.

2. To raise aloft.

This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn
Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

3. To support from falling.

Vital powers 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Spenser.

To UPBRA'ID, ùp-bràid'. v. a. [up- gebrædan, upgebrædan, Saxon.]

1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed; sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton; and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker.

It seem'd in me,
But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakespeare.

If you refuse your aid, yet do not upbraid us with our distress. Shakespeare.

Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.
How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milton.

'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that, because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.

2. To object as matter of reproach: with to before the person.

Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals, when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.

3. To urge with reproach.

I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your hither scoffs.

Shakespeare.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the up- braidings of his own conscience. Decay of Piety.

4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.

Ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself up- braids us

On ev'ry trifle. Shakespeare.

If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. James

Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends: and after thou hast given, upbraid not.

Ecclesi.

5. To bring reproach upon; to show faults by being in a state of comparison.

Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son!
and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness! Sidney.

The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraids by weakness. Addison.

6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.

There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native fire did foul upbraid,
And would, as Animon's son, be magnify'd. Spenser.

UPBRA'IDER, ùp-bràid'èr n. s. [from up- braid.] One that reproaches.

UPBRA'IDINGLY, ùp-bràid'ing-lè. adv. By way of reproach.

The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. Ben Jonson.

To UPBRA'Y, ùp-brà'. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhiming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame
upbray,

And shew'st th' ensample of thy childish might,
With silly, weak old women, thus to fight Spenser.

UPBROUGHT, ùp-bràwt' part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.

Divinely wrought,
And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,
And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spenser.

UPCA'ST, ùp-kàst'. v. a. [participle from To cast up.] The verb to upcast is not in use.] Thrown upward.

Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.

Old Satan here, with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.

UPCA'ST, ùp-kàst'. n. s. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.

Was there ever man had such luck? when I kissed the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away!
Shakespeare.

To UPGA'THER, ùp-gàth'èr. v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.

Himself he close upgather'd more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train,
By his there being might not be bewraid,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.

UPHA'ND, ùp-hànd'. adj. [up and hand.]
Lifted by the hand.

The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Mason.

UPHE'LD, ùp-hèld'. pret. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.

He who reigns

Monarch in heav'n, till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.

UPH'LL, ùp'mil. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing a hill.

What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clarissa.

Yet, as immortal, in our uphill chase
We press eoy fortune with unslacken'd pace. Young.

To UPHOA'RD, ùp-hòrd'. v. a. [up and hoard.] To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,

Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie,
And made a monster of their fantastic. Spenser.

If thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
Spoke of it. Shakespeare.

To UPHO'LD, ùp-hòld'. v. a. preter.
upheld; part. pass. upheld and upholden.
[up and hold.]

1. To lift on high.

The mournful train, with groans and hands up- held,

Besought his pity. Dryden.

2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shaksp.

This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill-purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English law, and assuming, in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish. Davies.

Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination. Dryden.

3. To keep from declension.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair/pleaded; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.

Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary, to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles, by which his own authority is best up- held. Atterbury.

4. To support in any state of life.

Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.

5. To continue; to keep from defeat.

Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the course of their whole proceedings. Hooker.

6. To keep from being lost.

Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakespeare.

7. To continue without failing.

A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds
a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.

8. To continue in being.

As Nebuchodnosor liveth, who hath sent thee for the upholding of every living thing. Judith.

A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politick of the state, for the upholding of the whole.

Hakewill.

UPHOLD'ER, úp-hóld'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from uphold.]

1. A supporter.

Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wise:
Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders.

Swift.

2. A sustainer in being.

The knowledge thereof is so many manuctions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the creator and upholder of them.

Hale.

3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.

The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects.

Arbuthnot.

Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, rueful barbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for me dying breath.

Gay.

UPHOLSTERER, úp-hóls'túr-úr. n. s. [a corruption of upholder.] One who furnishes houses: one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

If a corner of the hanging waits a single nail,
send for the upholsterer.

Swift.

Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer.

Pope.

UPLAND, úp'lánd. n. s. [up and land.]
Higher ground.

Men, at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and sides of the mountains, and by degrees suuk into the plains.

Burnet.

UPLAND, úp'lánd. adj.

1. Higher in situation.

Those in Coruwall do no more by nature than others elsewhere by choice, conceive themselves an estranged society from the upland dwellers, and carry an emulation against them.

Carew.

Sometimes with secure delight
The upland hamlets will invite.

Milton.

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the uplanders, having less commerce, were less civilized

And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
That so illiterate was, and upland rude,
That laws divine nor humane he had learn'd.

Chapman.

UPLANDISH, úp-lánd'ish. adj. [from upland.] Mountainous; inhabiting mountains.

Lion-like, uplanish, and mere wild, Slave to his pride: and all his nerves being naturally compil'd

Chapman.

Of eminent strength; stalks out and preys upon a silly sheep.

To UPLA'Y, úp-lá'y. v. a. [up and lay.] To hoard; to lay up.

We are hut farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can stock ourselves and thrive, uplay
Much, much good treasure for the great rent-day.

Donne.

To UPLIFT, úp-lift'.⁴⁹⁷ v. a. [up and lift.]
To raise aloft.

Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view.

Shakespeare.

The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And, with uplifted arms, is safe arriv'd

Shakespeare

At Ravenspurg
Together both, with next t' almighty arm
Uplifted imminent, one stroke they aim'd.

Milton.

Satan talking to his nearest mate,
With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That sparkling blaz'd.

Milton.

When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And lay th' uplifted thunder-bolt aside

Addison.

Songs, sonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,

And whisk them back to Evans, Young, and Swift.
Pope.

UPMOST, úp'móst. adj. [an irregular superlative formed from up.] Highest; topmost.

Away! ye skum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils;
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice, when rated to depart.

Dryden.

UPO'N, úp-pón'. prep. [up and on.]

1. Not under: noting being on the top.

As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam; and anon methought
The wood began to move.

Shakespeare.

2. Not within; being on the outside.

Blood that is upon the altar.

Bible.

3. Thrown over the body, as clothes.

I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her.

Shakespeare.

4. By way of imprecation or infliction.

Hard-hearted Clifford! take me from the world;
My soul to heav'n, my blood upon your heads.

Shakespeare

No man, who had a mind to do wrong, would be awed from doing it by a law that is always to be a sword in a scabbard, and must never be pleaded against him, or executed upon him.

Kettleworth.

5. It expresses obstestation, or protestation.

How? that I should murder her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command!—I, her!—her blood!

Shakespeare.

6. It is used to express any hardship or mischief.

If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of censuring by the lump.

Burnet.

That is not a fault inseparable from suits, but is the sin of the managers: it lies not naturally upon the thing, but only upon the contingent circumstances and manner of doing.

Kettleworth.

7. In consequence of. Now little in use.

Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever.

Shakespeare.

Then the princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation.

Bacon.

I wish it may not be concluded, lest, upon second cogitations, there should be cause to alter.

Bacon.

These forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity and desire of change, and in some few upon conscience and belief, but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependance upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these bruits.

Bacon.

He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want.

Bacon.

Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance they are again demanded.

Hayward.

Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional, and unless that duty proposed to be enforced by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall not belong to any.

Hammond

The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford.

Clarendon.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing and alluring a dress at first, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient grati-fications.

South.

The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so far.

South

When we make judgments upon general pre-sumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, than from reason.

Burnet.

'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There is a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination.

L'Estrange.

The determination of the will upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide.

Locke.

There broke out an irreparable quarrel between their parents; the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions.

Spectator.

The design was discovered by a person, as much noted for his skill in gaming, as in politics, upon the base, mercenary end of getting money by wagers.

Swift.

8. In immediate consequence of.

Waller should not make advantage upon that enterprize, to find the way open to him to march into the west.

Clarendon.

A louder kind of sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the salt-petre, upon casting a live coal thereon.

Boyle.

So far from taking little advantages against us for every failing, that he is willing to pardon our most wilful misarrriages, upon our repentance and amendment.

Tillotson.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade.

Locke.

The mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, runs immediately after similies to make it the clearer.

Locke.

If, upon the perusal of such writings, he does not find himself delighted; or, if, upon reading the admired passages in such authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he wants the faculty of discovering them.

Spectator.

This advantage we lost upon the invention of fire-arms.

Addison.

9. In a state of view.

Is it upon record? or else reported
Successively, from age to age?

Shakespeare.

The next heroes we meet with upon record were Romulus and Numa.

Temple.

The atheists taken notice of among the antients are left branded upon the records of history.

Locke.

10. Supposing a thing granted.

If you say necessity is the mother of arts and inventions, and there was no necessity before, and therefore these things were slowly invented, this is a good answer upon our supposition.

Burnet.

11. Relating to a subject.

Ambitious Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son.

Shakespeare.

Yet when we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Shakespeare.

Upon this, I remember a strain of refined civility, that when any woman went to see another of equal birth, she worked at her own work in the other's house.

Temple.

12. With respect to.

The king's servants, who were sent for, were examined upon all questions proposed to them.

Dryd.

13. In co:seration of.

Upon the whole matter, and humanly speaking,
I doubt there was a fault somewhere.

Dryden.

Upon the whole, it will be necessary to avoid that perpetual repetition of the same epithets which we find in Homer.

Pope.

14. In noting a particular day.

Constantia he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to be solemnized.

Addison.

15. Noting reliance or trust.

We now may boldly spend upon the hope
Of what is to come in.

Shakespeare.

God commands us, by our dependance upon his truth and his holy word, to believe a fact t' we do not understand: and this is no more than what we do every day in the works of nature, upon the credit of men of learning.

Swift.

16. Near to; noting situation.
The enemy lodged themselves at Aldermaston, and those from Newberry and Reading, in two other villages upon the river Kennet, over which he was to pass. Clarendon.
The Lincqueuse plead prescription for hunting in one of the duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.
17. In a state of.

To such a ridiculous degree of trusting her she had brought him, that she caused him send us word, that upon our lives we should do whatsoever she commauded us. Sidney.
24. At the time of; on occasion of.
Impartially examine the merits and conduct of the presbyterians upon these two great events, and the pretensions to favour which they challenge upon them. Swift.
25. By inference from.
Without it, all discourses of government and obedience upon his principles, would be to no purpose. Locke.
26. Noting attention.
He presently lost the sight of what he was upon; his mind was filled with disorder and confusion. Locke.
27. Noting particular pace.
Provide ourselves of the virtuous's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.
28. Exactly; according to.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge the number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shaksp.
29. By: noting the means of support.
Upon a closer inspection of these bodies, the shells are affixed to the surfaces of them in such a manner, as bodies lying on the sea-shores upon which they live. Woodward.
30. Upon is, in many of its significations, now contracted into on, especially in poetry. See ON. The meaning of this particle is very multifarious; for it is applied both to place, which seems its original signification; to time, which seems its secondary meaning; and to intellectual or corporeal operations. It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of some substratum, something precedent, or some subject. It is not easy to reduce it to any general idea.

U'PPER, úp'púr.⁸³ adj. [a comparative from up.]

1. Superiour in place; higher.
Give the forehead a majestic grace, the mouth smiling; which you shall do by making a thin upper lip, and shadowing the mouth line a little at the corners. Peacham.
Our knight did bear no less a pack
Of his own buttocks on his back;
Which now had almost got the upper Hand of his head for want of crupper. Hudibras.
The understanding was then clear, and the soul's upper region lofty and serene, free from the vapours of the inferior affections. South.
With speed to-night repair;
For not the gods nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryden.
Deep as the dark infernal waters lie
From the bright regions of the cheerful sky,
So far the proud ascending rocks invade Heav'n's upper realms, and cast a dreadful shade. Addison.
2. Higher in power or dignity.
The like corrupt and unreasonable custom prevailed far, and got the upper hand of right reason with the greatest part. Hooker.
- U'PPERMOST, úp'púr-mòst. adj. [superlative from upper.]
1. Highest in place.
The waters called the waters above the heavens, are but the clouds, and waters engendered in the uppermost air. Raleigh
In all things follow nature, not painting clouds in the bottom of your piece, and waters in the uppermost parts. Dryden.
2. Highest in power or authority.
The lower powers are gotten uppermost, and we see, like men on our heads, as Plato observed of old, that on the right hand, which is indeed on our left. Glanville.
'Tis all one to the common people who's uppermost. L'Estrange
This species of discretion will carry a man safe through all parties; so far, that whatever faction happens to be uppermost, his claim is allowed for a share. Swift.
3. Predominant; most powerful.
As in perfumes compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all;
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.
- U'PPISH, úp'pish. adj. [from up.] Proud; arrogant. A low word.
To UPRA'ISE, úp-ráize'.²⁰² v. a. [up and raise.] To raise up; to exalt.

With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright. Dryden.
3. Honest; not declining from the right.
Such neighbour nearness should not partialize
Th' uustooping tumness of my upright soul. Shaksp.
How hast thou instill'd
Thy malice into thousands, once upright
And faithful, now prov'd false! Milton.
The most upright of mortal men was he;
The most sincere and holy woman she. Dryden.
- U'PRIGHT, úp'rite. n. s. Elevation; orthography.
You have the orthography, or upright, of this ground-plot, and the explanation thereof, with a scale of feet and inches. Moxon.
- U'PRIGHTLY, úp'rite-lé. adv. [from upright.]
1. Perpendicularly to the horizon.
2. Honestly; without deviation from the right.
Men by nature apter to rage than deceit; not greatly ambitious, more than to be well and uprightly dealt with. Sidney.
Princes in judgment, and their delegate judges, must judge the causes of all persons uprightly and impartially, without any personal consideration. Taylor.
To live uprightly then is sure the best,
To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest. Dryd.
- U'PRIGHTNESS, úp'rite-nés. n. s. [from upright.]
1. Perpendicular erection. This was antecedently accented on the second.
So the fair tree, which still preserves
Her fruit and state while no wind blows,
In storms from that uprightness swerves,
And the glad earth about her strows
With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.
2. Honesty; integrity.
The hypocrite bends his principles and practice to the fashion of a corrupt world; but the truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.
- To UPRI'SE, úp-rize'.⁴⁹² v. n. [up and rise.]
1. To rise from decumbiture.
Early, before the morn with crimson ray
The windows of bright heaven opened had,
Through which into the world the dawning day
Might look, that maketh every creature glad.

Against the steep uprising of the hill? Shakspere.
- UPRI'SE, úp-rize'.⁴⁷⁹ n. s. Appearance above the horizon.
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise? Shakspere.
- U'PROAR, úp'róre'.²⁹⁶ n. s. [uproer, Dut.
This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult; bustle; disturbance; confusion.
The Jews, which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts.

It were well if his holiness had not set the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Raleigh.
 He levied forces in a disordered uproar, albeit the treason rested in him and some other his complices. Hayward.
 The uproar was so loud, that the accusation itself could not be heard. Holiday.
 Others, with vast Typhæan rage more fell, Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air In whirlwind: hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.

Horror thus prevail'd,
 And wild uproar! ah, who at length will end This long pernicious fray? Philips.
 The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar; and made Socrates, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Addison.

To U'PROAR, ùp-ròrè'.⁴⁹⁷ v. a. [from the noun.] To throw into confusion. Not in use.

Had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell, Uproar the universal peace, confound All unity on earth. Shakspeare.

To UPROO'T, ùp-ròôt'.³⁰⁶ v. a. [ufi and root.] To tear up by the root.
 Orpheus could lead the savage race,
 And trees uprooted left their place,
 Sequacious of the lyre:
 But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher;
 When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
 An angel heard,
 And straight appear'd,
 Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

To UPRO'USE, ùp-ròuze. v. a. [ufi and rouse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action.
 Thou art uprous'd by some distemperature. Shakspeare.

U'PSHOT, ùp'shòt'.⁴⁹⁷ n. s. [ufi and shot.] Conclusion; end; last amount; final event.
 With this he kindleth his ambitious spright
 To like desire and praise of noble fame,
 The only upshot whereto he doth aim. Hubb. Tale.
 I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shakspeare.

In this upshot, purposes mistook
 Fall on th' inventors heads. Shakspeare.
 Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician More.

Upon the upshot, afflictions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet: here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Burnet.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbutnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the same or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoyed to eternity. Pope.

UPSIDE down, ùp-side-dòwn'. [an adverbial form of speech.]

1. With the lower part above the higher.
 In the day-time they fish in their boats, which they draw unto the land at night; and, turning them upside down, sleep under them. Heylin.
2. In confusion; in complete disorder.
 In his lap a mass of coin he told,
 And turned upside down, to feed his eye
 And covetous desire with his huge treasure. Spenser.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased. Raleigh.

 The severe notions of christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprize and amazement. They came upon the world like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.

U'PSPRING, ùp'spring. n. s. [ufi and spring.] This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted. Not used.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse;
 Keeps wassel, and the swagging reels. Shakspeare.

Sea-calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
 The water snakes with scales upstanding die. May.

To UPSTA'RT, ùp-stàrt'.⁴⁹⁷ v. n. [ufi and start.] To spring up suddenly.

He upstarted brave
 Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay,
 As eagle fresh out of the ocean wave. Spenser.
 Thus having spoke, he sat; thus answer'd then,
 Upstarting from his throne, the king of men,
 His breast with fury fill'd. Dryden.

U'PSTART, ùp'stárt. n. s. [ufi and start.] One suddenly raised to wealth, power, or honour; what suddenly rises and appears.

Two hundred in a place will be enough for the safeguard of that country, and keeping under all sudden upstarts, that shall seek to trouble the peace thereof. Spenser.

My rights and royalties
 Pluckt from my arms perforce, and given away
 To upstart unthrifts. Shakspeare.

Mushrooms have two strange properties; the one, that they yield so delicious a meat; the other, that they come up so hastily, even in a night, and yet they are unshown: and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon.

The king did not neglect Ireland, the soil where these mushrooms and upstart weeds, that spring up in a night, did chiefly prosper. Bacon.

A place of his
 In the purlieus of heav'n, and therein plac'd
 A race of upstart creatures, to supply
 Perhaps our vacant room. Milton.

Inordinate desires,
 And upstart passions, catch the government
 From reason. Milton.

Mean upstarts, when they come once to be preferred, forget their fathers. L'Estrange.

Trade, he said, carried from us the commodities of our country, and made a parcel of upstarts as rich as men of the most ancient families. Addison.

To UPSTA'Y, ùp-stá'. v. a. [ufi and stay.] To sustain; to support.

Them she upstays
 Gently with myrtle band: mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flow'r. Milton.

To UPSWA'RM, ùp-swàrm'. v. a. [ufi and swarm.] To raise in a swarm. Out of use.

From the extremest upward of thy head
 To the descent and dust below thy foot,
 A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakspeare.

U'PWARD, ùp-wùrd. } adv. [ufi and U'PWARDS, ùp-wùrdz. } pearð.]

1. Toward a higher place; opposed to downward.

I thought
 To smooth your passage, and to soften death:
 For I would have you, when you upward move,
 Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.

In sheets of rain the sky descends,
 And ocean swell'd with waters upwards tends;
 One rising, falling one, the heav'n and sea
 Meet at their confines, in the middle way. Dryden.

A man on a cliff is at liberty to leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upwards, for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.

2. Toward heaven and God.

Looking inward, we are stricken dumb; looking upward, we speak and prevail. Hooker.

3. With respect to the higher part.
 Dagon, sea-monster! upward man,
 And downward fish. Milton.

4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away suspicion. Hooker.

I have been your wife in this obedience
 Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
 With many children by you. Shakspeare.

5. Toward the source.

Be Homer's works your study;
 Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring,
 And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

To URW'ND, ùp-wind'. v. a. pret. and pass. upwound. [ufi and wind.] To convolve.

As she lay upon the dirty ground,
 Her huge long tail her den all overspread,
 Yet was in knots and many boughs upwound. Spenser.

URBA'NTY, ùr-bân-è-té. n. s. [urbanité, French; urbanitas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.

A rustical severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown.

Raillery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estrange.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

U' RCHIN, ūr'tshin.³⁵³ n. s. [heureuchin, Armorick; crinaceus, Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.
Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work,

All exercise on thee. Shakspeare.

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many wichins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Would straight fall mad. Shakspeare.

That nature designs the preservation of the more infirm creatures by the defensive armour it has given them, is demonstrable in the common hedgehog, or urchin. Ray.

2. A name of slight anger to a child.
Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride;

And who 's blind now, mamma? the urchin cried,
'Tis Cnole's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
Friend Howard's genics fancied all the rest. Prior.

URE, yŭre. n. s. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.

Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in ure for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.

Shakspeare.

USURY, yû-zhû-rê.^{356 479 480 48} n. s. [usurê, French; usura, Latin.]

1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.

He that high does sit, and all things sec
With equal eyes their merits to restore;
Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
And what I cannot quit, requite with usury.
The wished day is come at last,
That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
Pay to her usury of long delight.
Our angels are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing.
Spenser.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable.
Dryden.

2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.

Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end most of the money will be in the box.
Bacon.

UTENSIL, yû-tên-sil.^s n. s. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Latin.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.

Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.
Shakspeare.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries;
And waggons fraught with utensils of war.
Titles and lands given to God are never, and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated.
Milton.

A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests.
Locke.

The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand

The springs of life their former vigour feel;
Such zeal he had for that vile utensil.
Gaith.

UTERINE, yû'têr-inc.¹⁴⁹ adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Latin.] Belonging to the womb.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution.
Brown.

The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance.
Ray.

UTERUS, yû'tê-rûs.⁵⁰³ n. s. [Latin.] The womb.

UTILITY, yû-tîl'ê-tê. n. s. [utilité, French; utilitas, Latin.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness; applied to things only; as, this book is of great utility; not, this book was written for the utility of scholars.

Those things which have long gone together, are confederate, whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconformity.
Bacon.

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days.
Brown.

M. Zuliehem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease.
Temple.

UTIS, yû'tis. n. s. A word which probably is corrupted, at least is not now understood. Utis was the octave of a saint's day, and may perhaps be taken for any festivity.

Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem.
Shakspeare.

UTMOST, ût'môst. adj. [utmœrt, Sax. from utere.]

1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
If aught do touch the utmost thread of it,
She feels it instantly on every side.
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole.
I went, by your command,
To view the utmost limits of the land.
I'll undertake to bring him,
Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
In peace, to his utmost peril.

2. Being in the highest degree.

UTMOST, ût'môst n. s. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree; the greatest effort.

What miscarries,
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To th' utmost of a man.
I will be free,
Even to the utmost as I please in words.
Such a conscience, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon.

Try your fortune.—
—I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate Without just cause?
A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests.

The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes.

Addison.

UTTER, ût'tûr.⁹⁸ adj. [utter, Saxon.]

1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the centre.

In my flight
Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
I sung of chaos and eternal night.

2. Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.

Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out
From all heav'n's bounds into the utter deep.

3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here, though the former sense may serve.

Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness; and their portion set
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the centre thrice to th' utmost pole.

4. Complete; total.

The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom.
Clarendon.

5. Peremptory.

There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of Loudon and Kent to march farther.

6. Perfect; mere.

They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind.

UTTER, ût'tûr. v. a. [from the adjective; to make publick, or let out; fulam facere.]

1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.

Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preach'd well enough with both.

These very words I've heard him utter.
There's more gold: but, sirrah,
We say the dead are well. Bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat.
Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words but of their heart?
Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
And the last words he utter'd called me ernel!

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.

When do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many.
Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world?
I meant my words should not reach your ears; but what I utter'd was most true.

3. To sell; to vend.

Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them.
They bring it home, and utter it commonly by the name of Newfoundland fish.
The Devonshire and Somersetshire graziers feed yearly great droves of cattle in the north quarter of Cornwall, and utter them at home.

4. To disperse; to emit at large.

To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to receive or utter this fatal coin.

UTTERABLE, ût'tûr-â-bl.⁵⁶⁵ adj. [from utter.] Expressible; such as may be uttered.

UTTERANCE, ût'tûr-ânse. n. s. [from utter.]

1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.
He with ut'rance grave, and countenance sad,
From point to point discours'd his voyage. Spenser.
Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor ut'rance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling
Watts.

2. [outrance, French.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility. Out of use.
Of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again perforce,
Behoves me keep at ut'rance. Shakspeare.
Come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' ut'rance. Shakspeare.

3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.
Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
At length gave ut'rance to these words constrain'd.
Milton.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies. Holder.

There have been some inventions, which have been able for the ut'rance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins.

U'TT'ERER, út'túr-ér. n. s. [from utter.]

1. One who pronounces.
2. A divulger; a discloser.
Utterers of secrets he from thence dcbarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Spenser.
3. A seller; a vender.

U'TT'ERLY, út'túr-lé. adv. [from utter.] Fully; completely; perfectly. For the most part in an ill sense.

God, whose property is to shew his mercies then greatest, when they are nearest to be utterly despaired. Hooker.

Arguments taken from the authority of men,
may not only so far forth as hath been declared,
but further also, be of some force in human sciences;
which force, be it never so small, doth shew that they are not utterly naught. Hooker.

All your int'rest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shakspeare.

He was so utterly tired with an employment so contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it. Clarendon.

There is no where any nation so utterly lost to all things of law and morality, as not to believe the existence of God. Wilkins.

While in the flesh, we cannot be utterly insensible of the afflictions that befall us. Atterbury.

U'TT'ERMOST, út'túr-móst. adj. [from utter.]

1. Extreme; being in the highest degree.
Bereave me not,
Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.
2. Most remote.

The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Peru side, did go towards the south. Abbot.

U'TT'ERMOST, út'túr-móst. n. s. The greatest.

There needed neither promise nor persuasion to make her do her uttermost for her father's service.
Sidney.

He cannot have sufficient honour done unto him,
but the uttermost we can do, we must. Hooker.

U'VEOUS, yú'vé-ús. adj. [from uva, Lat.]

The uveous coat, or iris, of the eye, hath a musculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray.

VULCA'NO, vúl-ká'nò. n. s. [Italian.] A burning mountain: it is commonly written after the Italian, volcano.

Earth calcined flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in vulcanos, will be carried to great distances. Arbutnot

VULGAR, vúl'gúr. ss. adj. [vulgaire, Fr vulgaris, Latin.]

1. Plebeian; suiting to the common people; practised among the common people.

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Vernacular; national.
It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language. Fell.

3. Mean; low; being of the common rate.
It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds, to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them. South.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground:
Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Broome.

4. Poshick; commonly bruted.
Do you hear ought of a battle toward?—
—Most sure and vulgar; every one hears that.
Shakspeare.

VULGAR, vúl'gúr. n. s. [vulgaire, Fr.]
The common people.

I'll about;
Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shaksp.
Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the affrighted vulgar as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself.
King Charles.

The most considering and wisest men, in all ages and nations, have constantly differed from the vulgar in their thought. Wilkins.

The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigotted counsellors.
Swift.

VULGARISM, vúl'gá-rizm. n. s. [from vulgar.] Grossness; meanness; vulgarity.

The great events of Greek and Roman fable and history, which early education, and the usual course of reading, have made familiar and interesting to all Europe, without being degraded by the vulgarism of ordinary life in any country. Reynolds.

VULGARITY, vúl-gár'é-té. n. s. [from vulgar.]

1. Meanness; state of the lowest people.
Although their condition may place them many spheres above the multitude; yet are they still within the line of vulgarity and demerical enemies to truth. Brown.

True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarities if I say, they are daily mocked into error by devisers. Brown.

2. Mean or gross mode.
Is the grandesophos of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal, to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and vulgarity of expression? Dryden.

VULGARLY, vúl'gúr-lé. adv. [from vulgar.] Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.

He was, which people much respect
In princes, and which pleases vulgarly,
Of goodly personage and of sweet aspect. Daniel.

He that believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without thought of reforming; such an one we call vulgarly a desperate person. Hammond.
As it is vulgarly understood, that he cut a passage for his army through these mighty mountains, it may seem incredible. Brown.

VULNERABLE, vúl'núr-á-bl. adj. [vulnerable, French; vulnerabilis, Latin.] Susceptive of wounds; liable to external injuries.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakspeare.
Achilles, though dipt in Styx, yet having his heel untouched by that water, although he were fortified elsewhere, he was slain in that part, as only vulnerable in the inferior and brutal part. Brown.

VULNERARY, vúl'núr-á-ré. ss. adj. [vulneraire, French; vulnerarius, Latin.]
Useful in the cure of wounds.

Try whether the same effect will not ensue by common vulnerary plaisters Brown.
I kept the orifice open, and prescribed him vul-neraries. Wiseman.

To VULNERATE, vúl'núr-áte. v. a. [vulnero, Latin.] To wound; to hurt.

There is an intercourse between the magnetick
unguent and the vulnerable body. Glanville.

VULPINE, vúl'pín, or vúl pine. 140 adj.
[vulpinus, Latin.] Belonging to a fox.

VULTURE, vúl'tshúre. n. s. [vultur, Lat.]
A large bird of prey, remarkable for voracity.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor griesly vultures, make us once afraid.
Spenser.

We've willing dames enough, there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shaksp.
A rav'nous vulture in his open'd side
Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried. Dryden.

VULTURINE, vúl'tshúr-íné. 140 adj. [vulturius, Lat.] Belonging to a vulture.

U'VULA, yú'vú-lá. n. s. [uvula, Latin.] In anatomy, a round soft spongy body, suspended from the palate, near the foramina of the nostrils, over the glottis. Dict.

By an instrument bended up at one end, I got up behind the uvula. Wiseman.

UXORIOUS, úg-zò'rè-ús. 170 adj. [uxo-rius, Latin.] Submissively fond of a wife; infected with connubial dotage.

Towards his queen he was nothing uxorious, nor scarce indulgent; but companionable and respectful.
Bacon.

That uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguill'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Milton.

How wouldst thou insult,
When I must live uxorious to thy will
In perfect thralldom! how again betray me! Milton.

UXORIOUSLY, úg-zò'rè-ús-lé. adv. [from uxorious.] With fond submission to a wife.

If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd
To bear thy bondage with a willing mind, Prepare thy neck. Dryden.

UXORIOUSNESS, úg-zò'rè-ús-nés. n. s.
[from uxorious.] Connubial dotage;
fond submission to a wife.

W.

W, dúb/bl-yù, is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Polick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin. W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel for u; view, strew: the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

To WA'BBLE, wòb'bl.⁴⁰⁰ v. n. [a low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.

It in your work you find it wabble; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up. Moxon.

WAD, wòd. n. s. [peod, hay, Saxon.]

1. A bundle of straw or other loose matter thrust close together.

2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value. Woodward.

WADDING, wòd'ding.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from wad, wad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.

To WA'DDLE, wòd'dl.⁴⁰⁵ v. n. [wagghelen, Dutch, to waggle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddler.] To shake, in walking, from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.

She could have run and waddled all about. Shakspeare.

The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down, like big-bellied women. Spectator.

The farmer's goose, Grown fat with corn and sitting still, Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill, And hardly waddles forth to cool Her belly in th' neighbouring pool. Swift.

Dulness, of business the directing soul, To human heads like bias to the bowl; Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true, Oblively waddling to the mark in view. Pope.
She draws her words, and waddles in her pace; Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff her face. Young.

To WADE, wàde. v. n. [from vadum, Lat. pronounced vadum.]

1. To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.

We'll wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood. Shakspeare.
She waded through the dirt to pluck him off. Shakspeare.

I am in blood
Step't in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakspeare.
He staid seven days at the Crassus, until a bridge was made for the transporting of his army, for that the river was not to be waded over. Knolles.

Then, since fortune's favours fade,
You that in her arms do sleep,
Learn to swim, and not to wade,
For the hearts of kings are deep. Wotton.

With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton.

It is hard to wade deep in baths where springs arise. Brown.

Fowls that frequent waters, and only wade, have as well long legs as long necks; and those that are made for swimming have feet like oars. More.

2. To pass difficultly and laboriously.

They were not permitted to enter into war, nor conclude any league of peacc. nor to wade through any act of moment between them and foreign states, unless the oracle of God, or his prophets, were first consulted with. Hooker.

I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth. Hooker.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade. Spenser.

Occasions you have met with to excite your faculties to wade a little farther into the positive part of these doctrines. Hammond.

I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.

'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men. Decay of Piety.

The dame
Now tried the stairs, and wading through the night, Search'd all the deep recess, and usher'd into light. Dryden.

The wrathful God then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way,
Half-sing'd, half-stifed. Dryden.

The king's admirable conduct has waded through all these difficulties. Davenant.

Simonides, the more he contemplated the nature of the deities, found that he waded but the more out of his depth, and that he lost himself in the thought. Addison.

WA'FER, wáf'fèr.⁹⁵ n. s. [wafel, Dutch.]

1. A thin cake.

Wife, make us a dinner; spare not flesh, neither corn;

Make wafers and cakes, for our sheep must be shorne. Tusser.

Poor Saicho they persuaded that he enjoyed a great dominion, and then gave him nothing to subsist upon but wafers and marmalade. Pope.

2. The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.

That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin wafers, yet so that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Hall.

3. Paste made to close letters.

To WAF, wáf.⁹⁵ v. a. pret. wafed, or perhaps waft; participle passive wafied or waft. [probably from wave.]

1. To carry through the air, or on the water.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.
Our high admiral

Shall waft them over with our royal fleet. Shaksp.

Thence wafed with a merry gale,
Sees Leinster and the golden vale. Drayton.

Nor dares his transport-vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves:
A hundred years they wander on the shore;
At length, their penance done, are wafed o'er. Dryden.

Lend to this wretch your hand, and waft him o'er
To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore. Dryd.

From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was wafed and carried away. Ray.

They before wafed over their troops into Sicily in open vessels. Arbutnot.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over:
Alas! what winds can happy prove,
That bear me far from what I love? Prior.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

2. To buoy; to make float; to hinder from sinking.

Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown.

3. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.

To WAF, wáf. v. n. To float.

It wafed nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but surmis'd, was true. Dryden.

Those trumpets his triumphant entry tell,
And now the shouts waft near the citadel. Dryden.

WAF, wáf. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A floating body. I know not whether authorized.

From the bellowing east off the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains,
In one wide waft. Thomson.

2. Motion of a streamer. Used as a token or mean of information at sea.

WAFTAGE, wáf'tidje.⁹⁰ n. s. [from waft.]

Carriage by water or air. Not in use.

Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks.
Staying for wafage. Shakspeare.

WAFTER, wáf'tèr. n. s. [from waft.] A passage boat. Ainsworth.

WAFTURE, wáf'tshùre.⁴⁶¹ n. s. [from waft.] The act of waving. Not in use.

You answer'd not;
But with an angry wafure of your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you. Shakspeare.

To WAG, wág.⁹⁵ v. a. [pagian, Sax. waggen, Dutch.] To move lightly; to shake slightly.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,

When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n.
Shakspeare.
All that pass liess and wag their heads at thee.
Lamentations.
Thou canst not wag thy finger, or begin
The least light motion, but it tends to sin. Dryden.
So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpye hight,
Majestically stalk;
A stately, worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flatter, pride, and talk. Swift.

To WAG, wág. v. n.

- To be in quick or ludicrous motion.
Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews, both short and tall;
'Tis merry in hall, where beards wag all. Shakspeare.
I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw. Shakspeare.
I will fight with him upon this theme,
Until my eyelids will no longer wag. Shakspeare.
- To go; to pack off.
I will provoke him to't, or let him wag. Shakspeare.
- To be moved.
Her charms she mutter'd o'er;
And yet the rusty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more:
I wept for woe. Dryden.

WAG, wág. n. s. [pægan, Sax. to cheat.]
Any one ludicrously mischievous; a merry droll.

Cupid the wag, that lately conquer'd had Wise counsellors, stout captains puissant;
And tied them fast to lead his triumphs bad,
Glutted with them, now plays with meaneest things. Sidney.

Was not my lord the verier wag o' th' two?
Shakspeare

We wink at wags when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man will mend. Dryden.

A counsellor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand which he used to twist about a finger all the while he was speaking; the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE, wádje. n. s. the plural wages is now only used. [wegen, or wagen, Ger.
gages, French.]

- Pay given for service.
All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakspeare.
The last petition is for my men; they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me;
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me. Shakspeare.
He with a mighty wage Won such, themselves by oath as deeply durst engage. Drayton.
By Tom Thumb, a fairy page,
He sent it, and doth him engage,
By promise of a mighty wage,
It secretly to carry. Drayton.
The thing itself is not only our duty, but our glory: and he who hath done this work, has in the very work partly received his wages. South.
- Gage; pledge. Ainsw.

To WAGE, wádje. v. a. [The origination of this word, which is now only used in the phrase to wage war, is not easily discovered; waegen, in German; is to attempt any thing dangerous.]

- To attempt; to venture.
We must not think the Turk is so unskillful,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shakspeare.
- To make; to carry on. Applied to war.
Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!
No: rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse

To wage against the enmity o' th' air,
To be a comrade with the wolf! Shakspeare.
The sonnes of Greece wag'd war at Troy
Chapman.
Your reputation wages war with the enemies of your royal family, even within their trenches. Dryden.

He ponder'd which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit. Dryd.
3. [from wage, wages.] To set to hire.
Not in use.

Thou must wage
Thy works for wealth, and life for gold engage. Spenser.

- To take to hire; to hire for pay; to hold in pay; to employ for wages. Obsolete.

I seem'd his follower, not partner; and He wag'd me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary. Shakspeare.

The officers of the admiralty having places of so good benefit, it is their parts, being well waged and rewarded, exactly to look into the sound building of ships. Raleigh.

The king had directed his courts of ordinary resort, and was at the charge not only to wage justice and their ministers, but also to appoint the safe custody of records. Bacon.

This great lord came not over with any great number of waged soldiers. Davies.

- In law.
When an action of debt is brought against one,
as for money or chattels lent or lent the defendant,
the defendant may wage his law; that is, swear, and certain persons with him, that he owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he hath declared. The offer to make the oath is called waver of law; and when it is accomplished, it is called the making or doing of law. Blount.

WAGER, wá'júr. n. s. [from wage, to venture.]

- A bett, any thing pledged upon a chance or performance.

Love and mischief made a wager, which should have most power in me. Sidney.

Full fast she fled, ne ever look'd behind;
As if her life upon the wager lay. Spenser.

As soon hereafter will I wagers lay
'Gainst what an oracle shall say;
Fool that I was, to venture to deny
A tongue so us'd to victory!

A tongue so blest by nature and by art,
That never yet it spoke but gain'd a heart. Cowley.
Besides these plates for horse-races, the wagers may be as the persons please. Temple.

Faction, and favouring this or 't' other side,
Their wagers back their wishes. Dryden.

If any atheist can stake his soul for a wager, against such an inexhaustible disproportion, let him never hereafter accuse others of credulity. Bentley.

- Subject on which bets are laid.
The sea strove with the winds which should be louder; and the shrouds of the ship with a ghastful noise, to them that were in it witnessed that their ruin was the waver of the other's contention. Sidney.

- [In law.] An offer to make oath. See To WAGE in law.

Multiplication of actions upon the case were rare formerly, and there by waver of law ousted; which discouraged many suits. Hale

To WAGER, wá'júr. v. a. [from the noun.]
To lay; to pledge as a bett; to pledge upon some casualty or performance.

'Twas merry, when you waver'd on your angling. Shakspeare.

He that will lay much to stake upon every flying story, may as well wager his estate which way the wind will sit next morning. Gov. of the Tongue.

I feed my father's flock;
What can I wager from the common stock? Dryd.

WAGGES, wá'jiz. n. s. See WAGE.
WAGGERY, wág'gúr-ét. n. s. [from wag.]
Mischievous merriment; roguish trick;
sarcastical gayety.

'Tis not the waggeries or cheats practised among school-boys, that makes an able man; but the principles of justice, generosity, and sobriety. Locke.

WAGGISH, wág'ish. n. s. [from wag.]
Knavishly merry; merrily mischievous; frolicsome.

Change fear and niceness,
The handmaids of all women, or more truly,
Woman its pretty self, to waggish courage. Shakspeare.
This new conceit is the waggish suggestion of some sly and skulking atheists. More.

A company of waggish boys watching of frogs at the side of a pond, still as any of them put up their heads, they would be pelting them down with stones.
Children, says one of the frogs, you never consider,
that though this may be play to you, 'tis death to us.
L'Estrange.

As boys, on holidays let loose to play,
Lay waggish traps for girls that pass that way;
Then shout to see in dirt and deep distress
Some silly cit. Dryden.

WAGGISHLY, wág'ish-lé. adv. [from wag-gish.] In a waggish manner.

WAGGISHNESS, wág'ish-nés. n. s. [from waggish.] Merry mischief.

have been stoned for gaggng, in a waggishness, a long billed fowl. Bacon.

To WAGGLE, wág'gl. v. n. [wagghelen, German.] To waddle; to move from side to side.

The sport Basilius would shew to Zelmanc, was the mounting of his hawk at a heron, which getting upon his wagglng wings with pain, as though the air next to the earth were not fit for his great body to fly through, was now grown to diminish the sight of himself. Sidney.

Why do you go nodding and wagglng so, as if hip-shot? says the goose to her gosseling. L'Estr.

WAG'GON, wág'ún. n. s. [pægan, Saxon; waggon.] Money paid for carriage in a wagon.

WAG'GONER, wág'ún-úr. n. s. [from waggon.] One who drives a wagon.

By this, the northern waggoner had set
His sevenfold team behind the stedfast star,
That was in ocean waves yet never wet. Spenser.

Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Tow'rd Phœbus' mansion! such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west. Shakspeare.

A waggoner took notice, upon the creaking of a wheel, that it was the worst wheel that made most noise. L'Estrange.

The waggoners that curse their standing teams
Would wake e'en drowsy Drusus from his dreams. Dryden.

1. To move by leisurely steps, so that one foot is set down before the other is taken up.

A man was seen walking before the door very comedly. Clarendon

The self-same sun
At once doth slow and swiftly run.
Swiftly his daily journey he goes,
But treads his annual with a staidier pace,
And does three hundred rounds enclose Within one yearly circle's space.

Thus with a double course, in the same sphere,
He runs the day, and walks the year. Cowley.

2. It is used in the ceremonious language of invitation, for come or go.

Sir, walk in.—
—I had rather walk here, I thank you. Shakspeare.

3. To move for exercise or amusement.

These bow'rs as wide as we need walk. Milton.

4. To move the slowest pace; not to trot, gallop, or amble. Applied to a horse.

To appear as a spectre.
The spirits of the dead
May walk again; if such things be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night. Shakspeare.

It then draws near the season
Wherein the spirit is wont to walk. Shakspeare.

There were walking spirits of the house of York,
as well in Ireland as in England. Davies.

Some say no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog, or fire, by lake, or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost
That breaks his magick chains at curfew time,
No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity. Milton.

In vain the cock has summon'd sprights away,
She walks at noon, and blasts the bloom of day. Young.

6. To act on any occasion.
Do you think I'd walk in any plot,
Where madam Sempronias should take place of me,
And Fulvia come i' th' rear? Ben Jonson.

7. To be in motion. Applied to a clamorous or abusive female tongue; and is still in low language retained.
As she went her tongue did walk
In foul reproach, and terms of vile despight;
Provoking him by her outrageous talk. Spenser.

8. To act in sleep.
When was it she last walk'd?—

—I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon 't, read it, and return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare.

9. To range; to be stirring.
Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do at midnight, have
In them a milder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakspeare.

10. To move off; to depart.
When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garraus to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

11. To act in any particular manner.
Do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God. Michah.

I'll love with fear the only God, and walk
As in his presence. Milton.

His private arbours, and new-planted orchards,
On that side the Tiber. Shakspeare.

Goodliest trees, planted with walks and bow'rs. Milton.

5. Way; road; range; place of wandering.
The mountains are his walks, who wand'ring feeds
On slowly-springing herbs. Sandys.

If that way be your walk, you have not far. Milton.

Set women in his eye, and in his walk,
Among daughters of men the fairest found. Milton.

Our souls, for want of that acquaintance here,
May wander in the stary walks above. Dryden.

That bright companion of the sun,
Whose glorious aspect seal'd our new-born king,
And now a round of greater years begun,
New influence from his walks of light did bring. Dryden.

6. Region; space.
Wanting an ampler sphere to expatiate in, he opened a boundless walk for his imagination. Pope.

They are to be cautiously studied by those who are ambitious of treading the great walk of history. Reynolds.

7. [turbo, Latin.] A fish. Ainsworth.

8. Walk is the slowest or least raised pace, or going, of a horse.

In a walk, a horse lifts two legs of a side, one after the other, beginning with the hind leg first; as suppose that he leads with the legs on his right side, then he lifts his far hind foot first; and in the time that he is setting it down, which in a step is always short of the tread of his fore foot upon the same side, he lifts his far fore foot, and sets it down before his near foot, and just as he lifts up his near hind foot, and sets it down again just short of his near fore foot, and just as he is setting it down, he lifts his near fore foot, and sets it down just before his far fore foot.

Farrier's Dict.

WA'LER, wáwk'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from walk.] One that walks.

I ride and walk, and am reputed the best walker in this town.

Swift to Gay.

By thee communicated, and our want. Milton.

Parents should distinguish between the wants of fancy, and those of nature. Locke.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,

Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.

Eyn'to brute beasts his righteous care extends,

He feels their sufferings, and their wants befriends. Harte.

2. Deficiency.

This proceeded not from any want of knowledge,

but of judgment. Dryden.

One objection to Civita Vecchia is, that the air is not wholesome: this proceeds from want of inhabitants. Addison.

The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth

fat, the disease is the cause of itself. Arbuthnot.

Wants of all kinds are made to frame a plea,

One learns to lisp, another not to see. Young.

3. The state of not having.

You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.

4. Poverty; penury; indigence.

Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want.

Swift.

5. [pand, Sax.] A mole.

A kind of hare resembling a want in his feet,

and a cat in his tail. Heylin.

WANTON, wón'tún.¹⁶⁸ adj. [This word is derived by Minshew from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion.

This etymology, however odd, Junius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]

1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.

Thou art froward by nature, enemy to peace, Lascivious, wanton; more than well be seems
A man of thy profession. Shakspeare.

They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds Shakspeare.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye! and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear, in every thing may bring my ruin. Shakspeare.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold;
The flow'rs do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields. Raleigh.

4. Loose; unrestrained.

How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise!
Addison.

5. Quick and irregular of motion.

She, as a veil, down to her slender waist
Her unadorn'd golden tresses wore Dishrevell'd, but in wanton ringlets war'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils. Milton.

6. Luxuriant; superfluous.

WA'NTONLY, wɔn'tūn-lè. adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicksomely; gayly; sportively; carelessly.

Into what sundry gyres her wonder'd self she throws,
And oft insiles the shore, as wantonly she flows. Drayton.

Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:
But do not wantonly my passion move,
I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.

WA'NTONNESS, wɔn'tūn-nés. n. s. [from wanton.]

1. Lasciviousness; lechery.

The spirit of wantonness is scar'd out of him. Shakspeare.

Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars. South.

2. Sportiveness; frolick; humour.

As sad as night,
Only for wantonness, Shakspeare.
Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;
Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:
As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn,
A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn. Pope.

3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint

The tumults threaten'd to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness. King Charles.

as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisdom.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakspeare.

To WAR, wàr. v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shaksp.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shaksp.

Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—
—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God;
And are you yet to your own souls so blind,
That you will war with God by murd'ring me? Shakspeare.

He teacheth my hands to war. 2 Samuel.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Timothy.

We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Donne.

His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Theseus. Dryden.

To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded as in a neutral country. Arbutnot.

To WAR, wàr. v. a. To make war upon.

Not used. In Spenser it is probably falsely printed for warraid.

And them long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warr'd. Spenser.

To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel.

To WA'RBLE, wà'rbl. v. a. [werben, old Teutonic; wervelen, German, to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any sound.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Milt.

2. To cause to quaver.

Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton.

3. To utter musically.

She can thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song. Milt.

Sidney.
There birds resort, and in their kind thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wolton.

3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd, and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd.
Milton.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
But indistinct. Dryden.
A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance.
Pope.

WARBLER, wár'bl-úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from warble.] A singer; a songster.
Hark! on every bough,

In lulling strains, the feather'd warblers woo. Tickel.
WARD, wárd. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from wærd, Saxon; it notes tendency to or from.

Before she could come to the arbour, she saw walking from her-ward a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

To WARD, wárd. v. a. [wærdian, Sax.
waren, Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.
He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut; ne living wight
To ward the same, nor answer comers' call.
Spenser.

2. To defend; to protect.
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers. bid him bury it. Shaksp.

3. To fence off; to obstruct or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or shun her blows he tries.
Fairfax

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Toxens amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Or to revenge or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood.
Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addson.
The provision of bread for food, clothing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first looked after. Woodward.

And on their warding arms light bucklers bear.
Dryden.

WARD, wárd.⁹⁵ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Watch; act of guarding.
Still when she slept he kept both watch and ward.
Spenser.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward;

Girl in her sanguine gown, by night and day
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.
Dryden.

2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries Spenser.
Th' assieged castles ward
Their stedfast stonds did mightily maintain.
Spenser.

3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakespeare.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shaksp.
Now by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.

At this I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand his front to guard. Dryden.

4. Fortress; strong hold.
She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare.

5. [warda, law Lat.] District of a town.
Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.
That wretched creature, being apprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker Stopt there was his too veh'ment speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from whence he stood.
Daniel.

7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards and ev'ry bolt and bar. Milton.
As there are locks for several purposes, so are these several inventions in the making and contriving their wards or guards.
The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward by the same wisdom. Grew.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.
The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond

You know our father's ward,
The fair Monimia; is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Otway.
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed before she was my ward. Dryd.

When, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Titles of honour, and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Spal.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.
I must attend his majesty's command, to whom
I am now in ward, ever more in subjection.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.

A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because, in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies Cowell.

4. [pyrum volenum, Latin. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.
Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Crustunnan, Syrian pears, and wardens great. May.
Ox-cheek when hot, and wardens bak'd, some cry.
King.

WARDER, wárd'úr.⁹⁹ n. s. [from ward.]

1. A keeper; a guard.
Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly slew
Those warders strange, and all that else he met.
Spenser.

Where be these warders that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakespeare.
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads.
Shakespeare.

The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.
Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke, O, when the king did throw his warden down,
his own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shaksp.

WARDMORE, wárd'móte. n. s. [wærd and mot, or zeinot, Sax. wardmotus, low Latin.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London, for the direction of their affairs.

WARDROBE, wárd'róbe. n. s. [garderobe, French; garderoba, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
the plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But clothes meet to keep keen cold away. Spenser.

I will knit all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the king. Shakespeare.

Be bold,
What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unspotted spouse.
Mydles.

It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunics, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors.
Addison.

WARDSHIP, wárd'shíp. n. s. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.
By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage he increased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced.
Bacon.

2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.
The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults.
King Charles.

WARE, wáre. The preterit of wear, more frequently wore.

A certain man ware no cloaths. Luke.

WARE, wáre. adj. [for this we commonly say aware.]

ed against.
The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Mathew.

2. Cautious; wary.

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to descry the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in vizard fair. Spenser.
Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton.

To WARE, wàre. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE, wàre, n. s. [war, Saxon; waere, Dutch; wara, Swedish.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakspeare.
If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell,
that we would not buy it. Nehemiah.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;

Yet art thou falsèr than thy wares. Ben Jonson.
Why shouldst thy black lily love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleveland.

London, that vents of false ware so much store,
In no ware deceives us more. Cowley.

He urus himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke

WAREFUL, wàr'fùl. adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.

WAREFULNESS, wàr'fùl-nès. n. s. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Sirephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness. Sidney.

WAREHOUSE, wàr'hôuse. n. s. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.

His understanding is only the warehouse of other men's lumber, I mean false and unconvincing reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses than at present. Addison.

She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson.

WARELESS, wàr'lès. adj. [from ware.] Uncautious; unwary. Spenser.

WARELY, wàr'lè. adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.

They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warely keep. Spenser.

WARFARE, wàr'fàre. n. s. [war and fare.] Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton.

Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause. Milton.

Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the bar, which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows. Dryden.

The state of christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings. Atterbury.

The scripture has directed us to refer these miscarriages in our christian warfare to the power of three enemies. Rogers.

To WARFARE, wàr'fàre. v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet, in that credulous war-faring age, to escape dangers in battles. Camden.

WARHABLE, wàr'hâ-bl. adj. [war, and habile, from habilis, Lat. or abile.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warhable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful rath,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Spenser.

WARILY, wàr'è-lè. adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.

The charge thereof unto a courteous sprite Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend. Spenser.

The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in. Hooker.

So rich a prize could not so warily be fenced, but that Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low Countrymen, have laid in their own barns part of the Spaniards harvest. Heylyn.

They searched ditigently, and concluded warily. Sprat.

It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South.

WARINESS, wàr'è-nès. n. s. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness. Donne.

It will deserve our special care and wariness to deliver our thoughts in this manner. Hammond.

To determine what are little thiugs in religion, great wariness is to be used. Sprat.

The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence. Addison.

Most men have so much of ill-nature, or of wariness, as not to sooth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.

I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expressed it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Atterbury.

WARK, wàrk. n. s. [anciently used for work; whence bulwark.] Building.

Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong wark upon a weak ground. Spenser.

WARLIKE, wàr'like. adj. [war and like.] 1. Fit for war; disposed to war

She using so strange, and yet so well succeeding a temper, made her people by peace warlike. Sidney.

Old Sward with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shaksp.

When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate,
they may be sure of a war. Bacon.

O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English. Philips.

2. Military; relating to war.

The great arch-angel from his warlike toil Surceas'd. Milton.

WARLING, wàr'ling. n. s. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling. Camden.

WARLOCK, } wàr'lùk. { n. s. [wardlook, WARLUCK, } Islandick, a charm; peplog, Saxon, an evil spirit.

This etymology was communicated by Mr. Wise. A male witch; a wizzard.

Wartuck in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar supposed to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.

He was no warluck, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free. Dryden.

WARM, wàrm. adj. [warm, Gothick; peapm, Saxon; warm, Dutch.]

1. Not cold; though not hot; heated to a small degree.

He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm. 2 Kings.

Main ocean flow'd not idle, but with warm Prolifick humour soft'ning all her globe. Milton.

We envy not the warmer clime that lies In ten degrees of more indulgent skies. Addison.

2. Zealous; ardent.

I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deserve their money. Pope.

Each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope.

Scaliger in his poetics is very warm against it. Boome.

3. Habitually passionate; ardent; keen.

4. Violent; furious; vehement.

Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:

The Moor will 'gage
His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom. Dryden.

5. Busy in action; heated with action.

I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind: methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall. Dryd.

6. Fanciful; enthusiastick.

If there be a sober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant faucy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.

7. Vigorous; sprightly.

Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

To WARM, wàrm. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.

It shall be for man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isaiah.

The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm Earth's inmost womb. Milton.

These soft fires, with kindly heat
Of various influence, foment and warm. Milton.

2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.

The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryd.

To WARM, wàrm. v. n. To grow less cold.

There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it. Isaiah.

WARMPAN, wàr'ming-pân. n. s. [warm and pan.] A covered brass pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.

WARMPINGSTONE, wàr'ming-stone. n. s. [warm and stone.] To stones add the warmingstone, digged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire retains warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids. Ray.

WARMLY, wàrm'lè. adv. [from warm.]

1. With gentle heat.

There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field. Milton.

2. Eagerly; ardently.

Now I have two right honest wives;
One to Atrides I will send,
And t' other to my Trojan friend;

Each prince shall thus with honour have What both so warmly seem to crave. Prior.
The ancient expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters:
I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design. Pope.

WARMNESS, wärm'nēs. } n. s. [from WARMTH, wärmth. } warm.]

1. Gentle heat.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol;
from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me. Shaks.
Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun increasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon.

He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth,
Throughout the fluid mass. Milton.

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments,

To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents. Addison.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?
Shakspeare.

Our duties towards God and man we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes christian prudence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with christian zeal. Sprat.

Your opinion, that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself. Pope.

The best patriots, by seeing with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been wearied into silence. Davenant.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.

The same warmth of head disposes men to both.
Temple.

To WARN, wärm.^{ss} v. a. [wærman, Sax.
wærnen, Dut. warna, Swedish; varna, Islandick.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And sooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shaksp.

The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen, so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear. South.

Juturna warns the Daunian chief
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master; he had warned them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows. Dryden.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of men's study. Locke.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
The sad examples which he ought to shun Describ'd. Prior.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critick's law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.
Cornelius was warned from God, by an holy angel, to send for thee. Acts.

3. To inform previously of good or bad.
He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before. Shaksp.
He charg'd the soldiers, with preventing care

Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare, Warn'd of the ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war. Dryden.

Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,

Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes. Dryden.

4. Milton put no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
His mortal snare. Paradise Lost.

WA'RNING, wärm'ning.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night. Psalms.

He, groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words express. Dryden.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise. Dryden.

You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements, to provide for your latter end. Wake.

A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men. Swift.

2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.

Suppose he have a more leisurely death, that some disease give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do, with hopes of life to the last. Duty of Man.

Death called up an old man, and bade him come:
the man excused himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning. L'Estrange.

I saw, with some disdain, more nonsense than either I, or as bad a poet, could have crammed into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written. Dryden.

WARP, wärm.^{ss} n. s. [wærp, Sax. werft, Dutch.] That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward. Bacon.

To WARP, wärm. v. n. [wærpan, Saxon; werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.]

1. To change from the true situation by instinctive motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they join waincoat, then one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and, like green timber, warp. Shakspeare.

They clasp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping. Moxon.

2. To lose its proper course or direction.
There's our commission
From which we would not have you warp. Shaksp.
This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Shakspeare.

All attest this doctrine, that the pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never so little warp. Dryden.

This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible. Norris.

3. To turn. I know not well the meaning here.

The potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night. Milton.

To WARP, wärm. v. a.

1. To contract; to shrivel.

2. To turn aside from the true direction.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue. Dryden.

Not foreign or domestick treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.

A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God. Locke.

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.
Addison.

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good humour,
And sensible soft melancholy. Swift.

A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth. Malts.

Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warped by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy. Baltie.

3. It is used by Shakspeare to express the effect of frost.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friends remember'd not. As you like it.

To WA'RRANT, wôr'rânt. v. n. [garan-tir, French.]

1. To support or maintain; to attest.

She need not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warranted by the sacred name of father. Sidney.

He that readeth unto us the scriptures delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing amongst them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant. Hooker.

If this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true. Locke.

2. To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel. Shakspeare.

3. To justify.

How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, and in the trust he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general. South.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction. Addis.

4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.

If my coming, whom, she said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warrant'd her from that near approaching cruelty. Sidney.

These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself. Sidney.

I'll warrant him from drowning. Shakspeare.

In a place
Less warrant'd than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it. Mil.

5. To declare upon surety.

What a gallad neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye. L'Estrange.

The Moors king
Is safe enough, I warrant him for one. Dryden.

WA'RRANT, wôr'rânt.¹⁶⁸ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A writ conferring some right or authority.

Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
—We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is. Shakspeare.

- He sent him a warrant for one thousand pounds a year pension for his life. Clarendon.

His promise is our plain warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive. Hooker.
4. A justificatory commission.
Is this a warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.
- When at any time they either wilfully break any commandment, or ignorantly mistake it, that is no warrant for us to do so likewise. Kettlewell.

5. Attestation.
The place of paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets who succeeded him; both which I take for my warrant to guide me in this discovery. Raleigh.
His warrant does the christian faith defend; On that relying, all their quarrels end. Waller.
The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore, that this might so enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence. South.

6. Right; legality. Obsolete.
I attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant. Shakspeare.
Therefore to horse,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away; there's warrant in that theft,
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left. Shak.

- WAR'RANTABLE, wôr-rânt-â-bl. adj. [from warrant.] Justifiable; defensible.
To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.
His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing. South.
If I can mend my condition by any warrantable industry, the way is fair and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his commission. L'Estrange.

- WAR'RANTABLENESS, wôr-rânt-â-bl-nês. n. s. [from warrantable.] Justifiableness.
By the foil thereof you may see the nobleness of my desire to you, and the warrantableness of your favour to me. Sidney.

- WAR'RANTABLY, wôr-rânt-â-blê. adv. [from warrantable.] Justifiably.
The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can indeed warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances. Wake.

- WAR'RANTER, wôr-rânt-ûr. n. s. [from warrant.]
1. One who gives authority.
2. One who gives security.

- WAR'RANTISE, wôr-rânt-tize. n. s. [warrantise, law Latin; from warrant.] Authority; security.

Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantise. Shakspeare.

- WAR'RANTY, wôr-rânt-ê. n. s. [warrantia, law Latin; garantie, garant, Fr.]
1. [In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another, for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoy-

- ing of any thing agreed of between them. Cowell.
2. Authority; justificatory mandate.
Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd
As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
Till the last trump. Shakspeare.
In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and consent of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy. Taylor.
If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty, for company's sake, to disobey likewise. Kettlewell.
3. Security.
Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the care and government of politic societies, introduced coinage as a remedy; the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they would receive a piece of such a weight and fineness. Locke.

To WARRA'Y, wôr-râ'. v. a. [from war; or from guerroyer, old Fr.] To make war upon. A word very elegant and expressive, though obsolete.
But Ebranc salv'd both their infancies
With noble deeds, and warray'd on Brunchild
In Hainault, where yet of his victories Brave monuments remain, which yet that laud en-vys. Spenser.
Of these a mighty people shortly grew,
And puissant kings, which all the world warray'd,
And to themselves all nations did subdue. Spenser.
This continual, cruel, civil war,
The which myself against myself do make,
Whilst my weak powers of passions warray'd are,
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser.
Six years were run since first in martial guise
The christian lords warray'd the eastern land. Fairfax.

WARRE, wôr. adj. [wærn, Sax.] Worse. Obsolete.

They say the world is warre than it wont,
All for her shepherds is heastly and bloot:
Others faine, but how truly I note,
All for they holden shame of their cote. Spenser.

WARREN, wôr-rin.⁹⁹ n. s. [waerande, Dutch; guerrenne, Fr.] A kind of park for rabbits.

I found him here, as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakspeare.

I came from Corinth,
Brought to this town by that most famous warrior, Duke Menaphon. Shakspeare.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the capitol. Shaksp.
I sing the warrior and his mighty deeds. Lauderdale.

The warrior horses tied in order fed. Dryden.
The mute walls relate the warrior's fame,
And Trojan chiefs the Tyrians pity claim. Dryden.
Camilla led her troops, a warrior dame;
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd.
She chose the nobler Pallas of the fiel. Dryden.
Desire of praise first broke the patriot's rest,
And made a bulwark of the warrior's breast. Young.

WARP, wâr.⁸⁵ n. s. [wærw, Sax. werte, Dutch.]

1. A corneous excrescence; a small protuberance on the flesh.
If thou prate of mountains, let them throw Millions of acres on us, till our ground,
Singeing his pate against the burning sun,
Make Ossa like a wart. Shakspeare.
In old statues of stone, which have been put in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden hands, there it appeared the lead did swell, inso-much as it hang'd upon the stone like warts. Bacon.
Like vile stones lying in saffron'd tu,
Or warts, or weals, it hangs upon her skin. Donne.
In painting, the warts and moles, adding a likeness to the face, are not to be omitted. Dryden.

2. A protuberance of trees.
Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, doth demonstrate that all such warts, tumours, and excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited or raised up by some venenose liquors, which with their eggs such insects shed; or boring with their terrebræ, instil into the very pulp of such buds. Ray.

WARTWORT, wâr'twûit. n. s. [wart and wort; verrucaria, Latin.] Spurge. Ainsworth.

WARTY, wâr'té. adj. [from wart.] Grown over with warts.

WARWORN, wâr'wôr. adj. [war and worn.] Worn with war.

Prescuted them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. Shakspeare.

WARRY, wâr'é. adj. [wærn, Saxon.] Cautious; scrupulous; timorously prudent.
He is above, and we upon earth; and therefore it behoveth our words to be wary and few. Hooker.
Leontius, their bishop, although an enemy to the better part, yet wary and subtle, as all the heads of the Ariens faction were, could at no time be plainly heard to use either form. Hooker.

Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
For on a day his wary dwarf had spy'd,
Where in a dungeon deep huge numbers lay
Of captive wretched thralls, that wailed night and day. Spenser.
Each thing feigned ought more wary be. Spens.
Each warn a warier carriage in the thing,
Lest blind presumption work their ruining. Daniel.
Others grow wary in their praises of one, who sets too great a value on them, lest they should raise him too high in his own imagiuation. Spectator.

WAS, wôz. The preterit of To BE.
Enoch walked with God, and was not, for God took him. Genesis.

To WASH, wôsh.⁵⁵ v. a. [wærwan, Sax. wasschen, Dutch.]

1. To cleanse by ablution.
How fain like Pilate, would I wash my hands
Of this most grievous guilty murder done! Shaksp.

to make their teeth better and stronger. Bacon.

They paint and patch their imperfections
Of intellectual completions,

And daub their tempers o'er with washes

As artificial as their faces. Hudibras.

He tried all manner of washes to bring him to a better complexion; but there was no good to be done
L'Estrange.

None are welcome to such, but those who speak,
paint and wash; for that is the thing they love;
and no wonder, since it is the thing they need.

To steal from rainbows, ere they drop in show'rs,
A brighter wash. Pope.

Here gallypots and vials plac'd,
Some fill'd with washes, some with paste. Swift.

4. A superficial stain or colour.

Imagination stamps signification upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much, who oftentimes being deceived by the wash, never examine the metal, but take him upon content Collier.

5. The feed of hogs gathered from washed dishes.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood, like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowell'd bosoms. Shakspeare.

6. The act of washing the clothes of a family; the linen washed at once.

And setting stars, to kindly sleep invite. Dryden.

WASTE, wâte. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Destroyed; ruined.

The Sophi leaves all waste in his retreat. Mill.

The multiplication and obstinacy of disputes, which have so laid waste the intellectual world, is owing to nothing more than to the ill use of words. Locke.

When thus the gather'd storms of wretched love,
In my swollen bosom, with long war had strove,
Laid all the civil bonds of manhood waste,
And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past. Prior.

2. Desolate; uncultivated.

There be very waste countries and wildernesses;
but we find not mention whether any do inhabit there. Abbot.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deuteronomy.

3. Superfluous; exuberant; lost for want of occupiers.

Quite surcharg'd with her own weight,
And strangled with her waste fertility. Milton.

4. Worthless; that of which none but vile uses can be made: as, waste wood.

5. That of which no account is taken, or value found.

It may be published as well as printed, that so much skill in Hebrew derivations may not lie for waste paper. Dryden.

WASTE, wâte. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Wanton or luxurious destruction; the act of squandering.

Freedom who loves, must first be wise and good;
But from that mark how far they rove we see,
For all this waste of wealth, and loss of blood. Milton.

So foolish and lavish are we, that too often we use some words in mere waste, and have no measure for them. Watts.

2. Consumption; loss.

Reasons induce us to think it a good work, which they, in their care for well bestowing of time, account waste. Hooker.

This air is better pierced, but thick air preserveth
the sound better from waste. Bacon.

It was providently designed to repair the waste daily made by the frequent attrition in mastication. Ray.

3. Useless expense.

But youth, the perishing good, runs on too fast,
And unenjoy'd it spends itself to waste;
Few know the use of life before 'tis past. Dryden.

Secure the workings of your soul from running to waste, and even your looser moments will turn to happy account. Watts.

4. Desolate or uncultivated ground.

See the man, who spacious regions gave
A waste for beasts, himself denied a grave. Pope.

Land that is left wholly to nature, that hath no improvement of pasturage, tillage, or planting, is called waste. Locke.

5. Ground, place, or space unoccupied.

Lifted aloft, he 'gan to mount up higher,
And, like fresh eagle, made his hoary flight
Thro' all that great wide waste, yet wanting light. Spenser.

In the dead waste and middle of the night,
Had been thus encountered. Shakspeare.

Forty days Elijah, without food,
Wander'd this barren waste. Milton.
Lords of the world's great waote, the ocean, we Whole forests send to reign upon the sea. Waller.
From that dire deluge, through the wat'ry waote,
Such length of years, such various perils past.
Dryden.

Thee I pursue, oh great ill-fated youth!
Through all the dismal waste of gloomy death.
Smith.

6. Region ruined and deserted.
All the leafy nation sinks at last,
And Vulcan rides in triumph o'er the waste. Dryd.

7. Mischief; destruction.
The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scarce out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakspeare.

8. [A law term.] Destruction of wood or other products of land.
You are but tenant for life, and shall make no waste. Shadwell.

mons. Carew.

WATCH, wõtsh. n. s. [pæcce, Saxon.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.
2. Attendance without sleep.
All the long night their mournful watch they keep,
And all the day stand round the tomb and weep.
Addison.

3. Attention; close observation.
In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow, of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both
I oft found both. Shakspeare.

4. Guard; vigilant keep.
Still, when she slept, he kept both watch and ward.
Spenser.

Hie thee to thy charge;
Use careful watch, chuse trusty centinels. Shaksp.
Love can find entrance not only into an open heart, but also into a heart well fortified, if watch
he not well kept. Bacon.

5. Watchmen; men set to guard. It is boys. Shakespeare.

A watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls, to testify their vigilancy. Sandys.

WATER, wá'túr. n. s. [waeter, Dutch; wæter, Saxon.]

1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all savour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specifick gravities, as Dr. Chayne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction in sliding over one another is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

My mildness bath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears. Shaksp.
Your water is a sore decayer of your whorson dead body. Shakespeare.

The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakespeare.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakespeare.

Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon: here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakespeare.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids; for a dry bone, distilled, affords a great quantity of insipid water: therefore water seems to be proper drink for every animal. Arbutnot.

2. The sea.

Travel by land or by water. Common Prayer.
By water they found the sea, westward from Peru, always very calm. Abbot.

3. Urine.

Dryden.

High o'er his head.
He beckoned to me, and by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach the place where he sat. Addison.

3. To waft; to remove any thing floating.

Some men never conceive how the motion of the earth below should wave one from a knock perpendicularly directed from a body in the air above.

Brown.

4. To beckon; to direct by a waft or motion of any thing.

Look with what courteous action

It waves you to a more removed ground:

But do not go with it. Shakspeare.

5. [guesver, Fr. Skinner.] To put off; to quit; to depart from.

He resolved not to wave his way upon this reason, that if he should but once, by such a diversion, make his enemy believe he were afraid of danger, he should never live without. Watton.

These, waving plots, found out a better way;
Some god descended, and preserv'd the play. Dryden.

6. To put aside for the present.

I have wav'd the subject of your greatness, to resign myself to the contemplation of what is more peculiarly yours. Dryden.

Since she her interest for the nation's wav'd,
Then I, who sav'd the king, the nation sav'd. Dryden.

If any had a better right, they were content to wave it and recognize the right of the other. Lesley.

To WA'VER, wâ'vûr. v. n. [papiari, Sax.]

1. To play to and fro; to move loosely.

I took two triangular glasses, and one of them being kept fixt in the same posture, that the iris it projected on the floor might not waver, I cast on the same floor another iris, with another prism, moving it to and fro.

Boyle.

The whitening shower descends,
At first thin wavering. Thomson.

2. To be unsettled; to be uncertain or inconstant; to fluctuate; not to be determined.

In which amazement when the miscreant
Perceived him to waver, weak and frail,
Whilst trembling horror did his conscience daunt,
And hellish anguish did his soul assail. Spenser.

Remember where we are;
In France, among a fickle wavering nation. Shakspeare.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakspeare.

Hold fast the faith without wavering. Hebrews.

The wav'ring faith of people vain and light.

Daniel.

Faith as absolutely determines our minds, and as perfectly excludes all wavering, as our knowledge itself; and we may as well doubt of our own being, as we can whether any revelation from God be true.

Locke.

What if Hospinian should have said, that Luther wavered in the point of the sacrament? does it follow that he really did so? Atterbury.

They, who at this distance from the first rise of the gospel, after weighing the several evidences of it, waver in their faith, would have wavered though they had seen the first promulgers work wonders. Atterbury.

3. To totter; to be in danger of falling.

Has any disloyalty dared to feign that religion wavers? They foully mistake; as commonly they do, that are more cunning in other men's lives than in their own; 'tis not religion wavers, but their loyalty.

Holyday.

WA'VERER, wâ'vûr-ûr. n. s. [from waver.]

One unsettled and irresolute.
Come, young waverer, come, and go with me;
In one respect I'll thy assistant be. Shakspeare.

WA'VY, wâ'vé. adj. [from wave.]

1. Rising in waves.

In safe conduct of these Did thirtie hollow-bottom'd barks divide the wavy seas. Chapman.

For thee the ocean smiles, and smooths her wavy breast;

And heav'n itself with more serene and purer light is blest. Dryden.

2. Playing to and fro, as in undulations.

Where full-ear'd sheaves of rye Grow wavy on the tilth, that soil select For apples. Philips.

On each hand parting, to his speed gave way,
Through all th' empyreal road.

Milton.

Youth and vain confidence thy life betray:
Through armies this has made Melantius way.

Waller.

The reason may be, that men seldom come into those posts till after forty; about which time the natural heat beginning to decay makes way for those distempers.

Temple.

The air could not readily get out of those prisons, but by degrees, as the earth and water above would give way.

Burnet.

As a soldier, foremost in the fight,
Makes way for others.

Dryden.

Some make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflection.

Locke.

7. Vacancy made by timorous or respectful recession.

There would be left no difference between truth and falsehood, if what we certainly know give way to what we may possibly be mistaken in.

Locke.

Nor was he satisfied, unless he made the pure profession of the gospel give way to superstition and idolatry, wherever he had power to expel the one, and establish the other.

Atterbury.

The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to the time.

Swift.

I would give way to others, who might argue very well upon the same subject.

Swift.

8. Course; regular progression.

But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,
And let eternal justice take the way.

Dryden.

9. Course or progress considered as obstructed or hindered.

The imagination being naturally tumultuous, in-terposeth itself without asking leave, casting thoughts in our way, and forcing the understanding to reflect upon them.

Duppa.

and very often useless to the curious inquirer. For men stand upon their guards against them, laying all their counsels and secrets out of their way.

Taylor.

The general officers and the publick ministers that fell in my way, were generally subject to the gout.

Temple.

13. Means; meditate instrument; intermediate step.

By noble ways we conquest will prepare;
First offer peace, and that refus'd, make war.

Dryden.

What conceivable ways are there, whereby we should come to be assured that there is such a being as God?

Tillotson.

A child his mother so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world.

Locke.

It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things than those five he has given to man.

Locke.

14. Method; scheme of management.

He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being so continually followed by the best, and every way ablest, of that region.

Sidney.

A physician unacquainted with your body, may put you in a way for a present cure, but overthrow eth your health in some other kind.

Bacon.

Will not my yielded crown redeem my breath?
Still am I fear'd? is there no way but death?

Daniel.

As by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to himself in the way of flattery: so by calling good evil, he is misrepresented to others in the way of slander.

South.

Now what impious ways my wishes took!

How they the monarch and the man forsook! Prior.
15. Private determination; particular will

Spenser.

To gorge the flesh of lambs and weaning kids,

On hills where flocks are fed, flies tow'rd the springs

Of Ganges or Hydaspes. Milton.

2. A child newly weaned.

WEAPON, wêp'p'n.²³⁴ n. s. [weapon, Saxon.] Instrument of offence; something with which one is armed to hurt
another.

The giant

Down let fall his arm, and soft withdrew

His weap'n huge, that heaved was on high,

For to have slain the man that on the ground did lie. Spenser.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;

For I have loaden me with many spoils,

Using no other weap'n but his name. Shakspeare.

Take this weap'n

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor.
Shakspeare.

Touch me with noble auger;

O let not women's weapons, water drops,

Stain my man's cheeks. Shakspeare.

His foes, who came to bring him death,

Bring him a weap'n that before had none. Daniel.

With his full force he whirl'd it first around;

Imperial Juno turn'd the course before,

And fix'd the waud'ring weap'n in the door.
Dryden.

WEAPONED, wêp'p'n'd.²³⁹ adj. [from weap'n.] Armed for offence; furnished

Let me embrace thee in my weary arms!
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe. Shakspeare.

I am weary, yea, my memory is tir'd:
Have we no wine here. Shakspeare.

An old man broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:

Give him a little earth for charity. Shakspeare.
Let us not be weary in well-doing. Galatians.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,
That they at length grew weary to destroy:

Refus'd the work we brought, and out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend for death. Dryden.

2. Impatient of the continuance of any thing painful or irksome.

The king was as weary of Scotland, as he had been impatient to go thither, finding all things proposed to him without consideration of his honour or interest. Clarendon.

My hopes all flat, nature within me seems,
In all her functions, weary of herself. Mikon.

3. Desirous to discontinue.
See the revolution of the times,
Make mountains level, and the continent,
Weary of solid firmness, melt itself
Into the seas. Shakespeare.

4. Causing weariness; tiresome.
Their gates to all were open evermore
That by the weary way were travelling;
And one sat waiting ever them before,
To call in comers by that needy were and poor.
Spenser.

The weariest and most loathed life
That age, ach, penury, imprisonment,
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death. Shakespeare.

Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question.
Shakespeare.

WEA'SAND, wé'z'n.²²⁷ n. s. [paren, Sax.]
This word is very variously written, but this orthography is nearest to the original word.] The windpipe; the passage through which the breath is drawn and emitted; the larynx.

Marry Diggon, what should him affray,
To take his own where-ever it lay;
For had his weasand been a little wider,
He would have devoured both hidder and shidder.
Spenser.

Cut his weasand with thy knife. Shakespeare.
Matter to be discharged by expectation must first pass into the lungs, then into the aspera arteria, or weasand, and from thence he coughed up,
and spit out by the mouth. Wiseman.

The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the weazon's wound.
Dryden.

WEA'SEL, wé'z'l.^{102 227} n. s. [pepel, Sax.]
wesel, Dutch; mustela, Lat.] A small animal that eats corn and kills mice.
Ready in gybes, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrelsome as the weasel. Shakespeare.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink. Pope.

WEA'THER, wé'th'úr.²³⁴ n. s. [peder,
Saxon.]

1. State of the air, respecting either cold or heat, wet or dryness.

Who's there, besides foul weather?—One minded like the weather, most unquietly. Shaksp.
I am far better born than is the king;
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.
Shakespeare.

Again the northern winds may sing and blow,
And fear no haven but from the weather now.
Cowley.

Men must content themselves to travel in all weathers, and through all difficulties. L'Estrange.

The sun
Foretels the change of weather in the skies;
When'er through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Suspect a drisling day. Dryden.

2. The change of the state of the air.
It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient family, which have stood against the waves and weathers of time? Bacon.

3. Tempest; storm.
What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud
My thoughts presage! Dryden.

To WEA'THER, wé'th'úr.⁴⁶⁹ v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To expose to the air.
He perched on some branch thereby,
To weather him, and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

Mustard-seed gather for being too ripe,
And weather it wel, yer ye give it a stripe. Trusser.

He weather'd fell Charyhdis, but ere long
The skies were darken'd and the tempests strong.
Garth.

Could they weather and stand the shock of an eternal duration, and yet be at any time subject to a dissolution? Hale.

3. To WEATHER a point. To gain a point against the wind; to accomplish against opposition.

We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work. Addison.

4. To WEATHER out. To endure.
When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that heats upon us.
Addison.

WEA'THERBEATEN, wé'th'úr-bé-t'n. adj.
Harassed and seasoned by hard weather.
They perceived an aged man and a young, both poorly arrayed, extremely weatherbeaten; the old man blind, the young man leading him. Sidney.

She enjoys sure peace for evermore
As weatherbeaten ship arriv'd on happy shore. Spens.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him hoodless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shak.

I hope, when you know the worst, you will at once leap into the river, and swim through hand-somerly, and not weatherbeaten with the divers blasts of irresolution, stand shivering upon the brink.
Suckling.

A weatherbeaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.
Dido receiv'd his weatherbeaten troops. Dryden.
The old weatherbeaten soldier carries in his hand
the Roman eagle. Addison.

úr-bórd. n. s. In the sea language, that side of a ship that is to the windward.
Dict.

WEA'THERCOCK, wé'th'úr-kók. n. s. [wea- ther and cock.]

1. An artificial cock set on the top of a spire, which by turning shows the point from which the wind blows.

But, alas! the sun keeps his light, though thy faith be darken'd; the rocks stand still, though thou change like a weathercock. Sidney.

A kingfisher hanged by the hill, converting the breast to that point of the horizon from whence the wind doth blow, is a very strange introducing of natural weathercocks. Brown.

2. Any thing fickle or inconstant.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?—I cannot tell what his name is my husband had him of.
Shakespeare.

He break my promise and absolve my vow!
The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's, that weathercock of state. Dryd.

WEA'THERDRIVEN, wé'th'úr-drív-v'n.
part. Forced by storms or contrary winds.

Philip, during his voyage towards Spain, was weatherdriven into Weymouth. Carew.

WEA'THERGAGE, wé'th'úr-gádje. n. s.

Against the weathergage of laws. Hudibras.

WEA'THERGLASS, wé'th'úr-glás. n. s.
[weather and glass.]

1. A barometer; a glass that shows the weight of the air.

John's temper depended very much upon the air; his spirits rose and fell with the weatherglass.
Arbutnot.

We shall hardly wish for a perpetual equinox to save the charges of weatherglasses; for the two equinoxes of our year are the most windy and tempestuous. Bentley.

2. A thermometer. Less used.
As in some weatherglass my love I hold,
Which falls or rises with the heat or cold,
I will be constant yet. Dryden.

WEA'THERSPY, wé'th'úr-spi. n. s. [wea- ther and spy.] A stargazer; an astrologer; one that foretells the weather.

And sooner may a gulling weatherspy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits, next year
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.

WEA'THERWISE, wé'th'úr-wize. adj.
[weather and wise.] Skilful in foretelling the weather.

WEA'THERWISER, wé'th'úr-wize-úr. n. s.
[weather and wisen, Dutch, to show.]
Any thing that foreshows the weather.

Most vegetables expand their flowers and down in warm sunny weather, and again close them toward the evening, or in rain, as is in the flowers of pimpnel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weatherwiser. Derham.

To WEAVE, wéve. v. a. pret. wove, waved; part. pass. woven, waved.
[pepan, Sax. weven, Dutch.]

1. To form by texture; to form by in-serting one part of the materials within another.

Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to intrap the hearts of men Faster than gnats in cobwebs. Shakespeare.

The women wove hangings for the grove. 2 Kings.
There our secret thoughts unseen
Like nets he wove'd and interwin'd,
Wherewith we catch each other's mind. Carew.

White seem'd her robes, yet woven so they were,
As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dry.
These purple vests were wove'd by Dardan dames.
Dryden.

Dan Pope, for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has wove'd
A silken web, and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress:
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

2. To unite by intermixture.

When religion was woven into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, men's thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but, in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.

3. To interpose; to insert.

The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
This weaves itself perforce into my business. Shak.
To WEAVE, wéve.²²⁷ v. n. To work with a loom.

WEA'VER, wé'vúr.⁹³ n. s. [from weave.]
One who makes thread into cloth.

Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all, not able to maintain
The many to them 'longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers. Shaksp.
My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Job.

The weaver may cast religion upon what loom he please. Howel.

Her flag aloft spreads ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd,
Goes on to see, and knows not to retire. Dryden.

WEA'VERFISH, wé'vúr-fish. n. s. [araneus pisces, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.

WEB, wéb. n. s. [pebba, Saxon.]

1. Texture; any thing woven.

Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she hid again uncreave. Spenser.
Staid at gate,

And heard within the goddess cleave
A voice divine, as at her web she wrought,
Subtle, and glorious, and past earthly thought.

Chapman.
Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part.
Davies.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household task, shall be her doom.
Dryden.

The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bless the sacred clue, and bid it smoothly run.
Dryden.

2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.

The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch.
Fairfax.

3. A kind of dusky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.

This is the foul libertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip. Shakespeare.

WE'BBED, wéb'd.³⁶⁹ adj. [from web.]
Joined by a film.

Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are webbed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham.

WE'BFootED, wéb'füt-éd. adj. [web and foot.] Palmipede; having films between the toes.

Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray.

WE'BSter, wéb'stúr. n. s. [pebrtpe,
Saxon, a woman weaver.] A weaver.
Obsolete.

After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as, Taylor, Webster, Whicler. Camden.

To WED, wéd. v. a. [pedian, Saxon.]

1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.

Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first and wedded thee, adorn'
With all perfection, so inflame my senses. Milton.

Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dulness of some son of earth. Pope.

2. To join in marriage.

In Syracuse was I horn and wed Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakespeare.

Then I shall be no more;
And Adam wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her. Milton.

The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that hegun in the garden; and our understandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.

3. To unite for ever.

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakespeare.

4. To take for ever.

Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedding the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.

They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.

5. To unite by love or fondness.

Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God. Tillotson.

To WED, wéd. v. n. To contract matrimony.

When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Shakespeare.

To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed,
You were ordain'd. Suckling.

Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.

WE'DDING, wéd'ding.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from wed.]
Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.

Comc, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding day. Shaks.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding.
Shakespeare.

Let her beauty be her wedding dower;
For me and my possessions she esteems not. Shaksp.

When my son was entered into his wedding chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdras.

These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt.

His friends were invited to come and make merry with him, and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Estrange.

If she affirmed herself a virgin, she must on her wedding-day, and in her wedding cloaths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.

A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-cloaths. Spectator.

WEDGE, wédje. n. s. [vegge, Danish;
wegge, Dutch.]

1. A body which, having a sharp edge continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.

A barbarous troop of clownish fone
The honour of these noble boughs down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins.

He left his wedge within the cloven oak. Dryd.
The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbutnot.

2. A mass of metal.

As sparkles from the anvil us'd to fly
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid.
Spenser.

When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekles weight, then I coveted them. Joshua.

3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.

In warlike musters they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.
Milton.

To WEDGE, wédje. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cleave with a wedge.

My heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
Lest Hector, or my father, should perceive me.
Shakespeare.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven.

Where have you been broiling?—
—Among the crowd? th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakespeare.

3. To force as a wedge forces.

In common rang'd in figure wedge their way, Intelligent of seasons. Milton.

4. To fasten by wedges.

Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Phil.

5. To fix as a wedge.

Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead.
Shakespeare.

Sergesthus in the centaur, soon he pass'd,
Wedg'd in the rocky shoals and sticking fast. Dryd.

What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entombed and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the centre of Saturn? Bentley.

WE'DLOCK, wéd'lók. n. s. [ped and lac, Saxon, marriage and gift.] Marriage;
matrimony.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.

Sirrab, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock hear him,
And if she did play false, the fault was hers. Shak.

Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

He his happiest choice too late Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock bound
To a fell adversary. Milton.

May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have? Denham.

One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free,
And uncontrol'd to give account to none. Dryden.

A man determined, about the fiftieth year of his age, to enter upon wedlock. Addison.

WE'DNESDAY, wénz'dá.²²³ n. s. [podenp- dag, Saxon; odensday, Swedish; woens- day, Dutch; wensday, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.

Where is the honour of him that died on Wed- nesday? Shakespeare.

The offices of prayer he had in his church, not only upon the Sundaies, and festivals, and their eves, as also Wednesdaies and Fridaies. Fell.

WEE, wèe. adj. [A Saxon word of the same root with weeing, Dutch; wenig, German.] Little; small; whence the word weasle or weesel is used for little; as, a weasel face. In Scotland it denotes small or little: as wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.

Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard. Shaksp.

WE'ECHELM, wéetsh'élm. n. s. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.

A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.

WEED, wéed. n. s. [peod, Saxon, tares.]

1. An herb noxious or useless.

If he had an immoderate ambition, which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.

Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While sects, like locusts, did destroy the seeds.
Denham.

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. More.

When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer.

Their virtue, like their Tiber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.

If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choaked and killed amongst rank weeds. Law.

2. [præda, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning dress of a widow.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments.

They meet upon the way
An aged sire, in long black weeds yelad;
His feet all bare, his heard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had.

Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure.

The snake throws her enamell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in.

Throngs of knights, and barons bold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies.

Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head.

3. It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning, in her throne of gold,
Survaid the vast world, by whose orient light
The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright;
Her own hands putting on both shirt and weede.

To WEED, wééd.²⁴⁶ v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade.

Your seedlings having stood till June, bestow a weeding or a slight howing upon them.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

Oh Marcius,
Each word thou 'st spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy.

Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumized it from that most dangerous confederacy.

4. To root out vice.

Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning.

One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there.

WE'EDER, wééd'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from weed.]

One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends.

WE'EDHOOK, wééd'hóók. n. s. [weed and hook] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a croth, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love.

WE'EDLESS, wééd'lés. adj. [from weed.]

Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin.

A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;
'Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below.

WE'EDY, wééd'é. adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,

When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook.

2. Abounding with weeds.

Hide in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety.

If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground.

WEEK, wéék.²⁴⁸ n. s. [peoc, Sax. weke, Dutch; wecka, Swedish.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also.

The division of time by weeks hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized but likewise among the most barbarous nations.

WE'EKDAY, wéék'dá. n. s. [week and day.]

Any day not Sunday.

One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
And added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's.

WE'EKLY, wéék'lé. adj. [from week.]

Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly hill.

Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny.

WE'EKLY, wéék'lé. adv. [from week.]

Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons.

WEEL, wéél. n. s. [pœl, Saxon.]

1. A whirlpool.

2. [perhaps from willow.] A twiggen snare or trap for fish.

To WEEN, wéén.²⁴⁸ v. n. [penan, Saxon; waenen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.

Ah lady dear, goth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wond'rous great.

So well it her beseeams, that ye would ween
Some angel she had been.

When weening to return whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Furthest from end then, when they nearest ween.

Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levied an army, weening to redeem
And reinstall me in the diadem.

Ween you of better luck,
I mean in perjurd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd
Upon this naughty earth.

That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne,
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd stun and vain.

To WEEP, wéép. v. n. pret. and part. pass. wept, weefted. [peopan, Saxon.]

1. To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn a humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.

I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth.

The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it?

Away! with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd like a man, to die without a tear,

Or save or slay us both.

A corps it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, howe'er, she made the case her own;

Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger wept.

When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive. Artabanus improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before.

2. To shed tears from any passion.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among.

3. To lament; to complain.

They weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh that we may eat.

To WEEP, wéép.²⁴⁶ v. a.

1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.

If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.

Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies.

We wand'ring go
Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe.

2. To shed moisture.

Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm.

3. To drop.

Let India boast her plants; nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn.

4. To abound with wet.

Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds.

WE'EPER, wéép'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from weep.]

1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.

If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou shouldst; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap.

Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WE'ERISH, wéér'ish. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and washy: here it seems to mean, sour, surly.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weerish and crabbed, but fair and comely.

To WEET, wéét. v. n. preterit wot or wote. [pitan, Sax. weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this court'sy read,
To weet why on your shield, so goodly scord'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?

1 bind,

On pain of punishment, the world to weat
We stand up peerless. Shakspeare.
But well I toet thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.

WE'ETLESS, wé't'lés. adj. [from weat.] Unknowing. Spenser.

WE'EVIL, wé'v'l. n. s. [pepel, Sax. vevel, Dutch; curculio, Latin.] A grub.

A worm called a weevil, bred under ground,
feedeth upon roots, as parsnips and carrots. Bacon.
Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.

WE'EZEL, *wé'z'l.*¹⁰² n. s. [See WEASEL]
I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel sucks eggs. Shakspeare

The corn-devouring weezel here abides,
And the wise ant. Dryden.

WEFT, wéft. The old preterit and part.
pass. from To WAVE. Spenser.

WEFT, wéft. n. s. [gwaive, French; vafa, to wander, Islandick; vagus, Latin.]

1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manor.

His horse, it is the herald's wéft;
No, 'tis a mare. Ben Jonson.

2. It is in Bacon for waft, a gentle blast.
The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a wéft afar off. Bacon.

WEFT, wéft. n. s. [wefta, Saxon.] The woof of cloth.

WEFTAGE, *wéft'idge.*⁹⁰ n. s. [from wéft.] Texture.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the wéftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew.

To WEIGH, *wá.*²⁴⁹ ³⁹⁰ v. a. [prægan, Sax. weyhen, Dutch.]

1. To examine by the balance.

Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, till the river cometh to its height. Bacon.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.

She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but she weighs it in a much better balance; so much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul. Law.

2. To be equivalent to in weight.

They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to; live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence.
Shakspeare.

By the exsuction of the air out of a glass vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.
Zechariah.

4. To raise; to take up the anchor.

Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen galleys he had sunk. Knolles.

They having freight
Their ships with spoil enough, weigh anchor straight.
Chapman.

Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd.
Dryden.

5. To examine; to balance in the mind; to consider.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,

And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
Shakspeare.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.

His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.

You chose a retreat, and not till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.

All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise.
Dryden.

The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others.
Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions. Spectator.

6. To compare by the scales.

Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs,
And solid pudding against empty praise. Pope.

7. To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.

I weigh not you——
You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me.
Shakspeare.

8. To WEIGH down To overbalance.

Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel.

9. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry;
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.

Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addis.
Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.

To WEIGH, wá. v. n.

1. To have weight.

Exactly weighing, and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

A wise man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightning, weigh, my hoys, he cries.
Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakspeare.

5. To sink by its own weight.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.

WE'IGHED, *wáde.*³⁸⁹ adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

WE'IGHER, *wá'úr.*⁹⁸ n. s. [from weigh.]
He who weighs.

WEIGHT, wáte. n. s. [piht, Saxon.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon.

Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king;
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me.
Dryden.

So was every thing of the temple, even to the weight of a flesh-hook, given to David, as you may see. Lesley.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbuthnot.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights shall ye have.
Leviticus.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbuthnot.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one. Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them;
otherwise, where no contraction is useful, weight hindereth; as we see, in horse-races, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have
A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd:

Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou liest neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee?
Bishop Corbel.

All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains buried deep. Milt.

Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plum-mets to sink us to the deeper ruin. G. of the Tong.

Then sunk the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness and constancy will prove

The only pillars fit to bear,
So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Wilkins.

The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck. Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling?
Bentley.

5. Pressure; burden; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shaksp.
As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive than break the law of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it. Holyday.

So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning.

Milton.

We must those, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate.

Denham.

The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people.

L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight.

Swift.

They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above.

Law.

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy;
consequence; moment.

How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not.

Shakspeare.

If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it?

Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states.

Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake.

Addison.

See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight.

Spectator.

The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words.

Atterbury.

WEIGHTILY, wá'té-lè. adv. [from weight-ty]

1. Heavily; ponderously.

2. Solidly; importantly.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously?

Broome.

WEIGHTINESS, wá'té-nés. n. s. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.

2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires.

Locke.

3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel.

Hayward.

WEIGHTLESS, wá'té-lés. adj. [from weight.]

Light; having no gravity.
How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Canst thou the wisdom of his works declare?

Sandys.

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above.

Dryden.

WEIGHTY, wá'té. adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe,
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty that it stops her wheel.

Dryden.

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.

Shakspeare.

It only forbids suits in lighter losses and indignities, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in weightier matters.

Kettlewell.

No fool Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his list'ning scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:

Else may be, some odd thinking youth,
Less friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the musick of the spheres.

Prior.

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair.

Swift.

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days shine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgment.

Shakspeare.

WE'LAWAY, wél'á-wà. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of wel away, that is, happiness is gone: so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, wo on wo. From welaway is formed by corruption welladay.] Alas.

Harrow now ont, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light!

Ah, welaway, most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous sight?

Welaway, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hond.

WE'LCOME, wél'kùm. ¹⁶⁵ adj. [*bien
venu*, French; pilcume, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.]

1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:

Your graces are right welcome.

He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And wish it should proceed; for, unto men
Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome.

Shakspeare.

Ben Jonson.

Here let me earn my bread,
Till of invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.

He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome, and valued every where.

Locke.

2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.

Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome.

Bacon.

WE'LCOME, wél'kùm. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,
O long expected, to my dear embrace!

Welcome, great monarch, to your own.

WE'LCOME, wél'kùm. n. s.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out fighting.

Leontes opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth.

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof.

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome.

Madam, new years may well expect to find Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty, as themselves, seem new.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too.

To WE'LCOME, wél'kùm. v. a. To salute
a new comer with kindness.

I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard.

They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us.

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long.

To welcome home
His warlike brother, is Pirithous come.

The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring.

Were two full moons; be had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea.

WE'LCIN, wél'kin. n. s. [from pelcan,
to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Saxon.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine.

Spenser.

WE'LCOME, wél'kùm. to our house. n. s.
[lactuca marina, Latin.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

WE'LCOMENESS, wél'kùm-nés. n. s. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.

Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown older, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period.

WE'LCOMER, wél'kùm-úr. ⁹⁸ n. s. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewel, thou woeful welcomer of glory!

WELD, or Would, wéld. n. s. [luteola,
Latin.] Yellow weed, or diers weed.

To WELD, wéld. for To wield. Spenser.

To WELD, wéld. v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doublings into one another.

WE'LDER, wéld'úr. n. s. [a term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To wield, to turn or manage:
whence wielder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them,
and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably.

WE'LFARE, wél'fáre. n. s. [well and fare.]
Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest.

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and welfare.

To WELK, wélk. v. a. [Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning:
pelcan, in Saxon, is to roll; wolken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, or whilk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small selfish.] To cloud; to obscure. It seems in Spenser both active and neuter.

Now sad winter welk'd hath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd bath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask.

As gentle shepherd in sweet eventide;
When ruddy Phœbus 'gins to welk in west,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper hest.

The welk'd Phœbus 'gan avalc
His weary wain.

WE'LKED, wélk't. ³²⁹ adj. Set with protu-berances. Properly, I believe, whelk'd, from whelk.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons; be had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea.

WE'LCIN, wél'kin. n. s. [from pelcan,
to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Saxon.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine.

Spenser.

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin clearch. Spenser.
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves. Shaksp.
With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Mill.
Now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton.
Their hideous yells
Read the dark welkin. Philips.

2. WELKIN Eye, is, I suppose, blue eye;
skycoloured eye.

Yet were it true
To say this hoy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain.
Shakspere.

WELL, wéll. n. s. [pelle, pœll, Saxon.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.
Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring.
Milton.

As the root and branch are but one tree;
And well and stream do but one river make:
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take.
Davies.

2. A deep narrow pit of water.
Now up, now down, like huckets in a well.
Dryden.

The muses are so many well-buckets; when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed.
Hollow newelled stairs are made about a square hollow newel; suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon.

To WELL, wéll. v. n. [peallan, Saxon.]
To spring; to issue as from a spring.
Thereby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welled forth alway.
Spenser.

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh, alas! Spens.
Himself assists to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that wel'd from out the wound. Dryden.

From his two springs
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream. Thomson.

To WELL, wéll. v. a. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Spenser.

WELL, wéll. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.
Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakspere.
In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well.
Shakspere.

While thou art well, thou mayest do much good;
but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do: it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Taylor.

Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better, than from better they must rise to best.
L'Estrange.

'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Wake.

3. Happy.

Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shakspere.
Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the laudlord, who could get one to be his tenant. Carew.

Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters and longest stays. Sprat.

3. Convenient; advantageous.
This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too if it extended itself to common conversation.
Locke.

It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Addison.

4. Being in favour.
He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the fourth. Dryden.

5. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.
I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
Shakspere.

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Collier.

WELL, wéll. adv. [will, Gothick; pell,
Saxon; wel, Dutch; vel, Islandick.]

1. Not ill; not unhappily.
Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.

2. Not ill; not wickedly.
My bargains, and well-won thrift, he calls inter-rest. Shakspere.
Thou one bad act with many deeds well done

3. Skillfully; properly; in a laudable manner.
Beware, and govern well thy appetite. Milton.
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana hathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well.
Dryden.

What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.

4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.
Solymann commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles.

The soldier that philosopher well-blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd.
Denham.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.
The plain of Jordan was well watered every where. Genesis.

We are well able to overcome it. Numbers.
The merchant adventurers, being a strong company, and well underset with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.
I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work. Bacon.

7. With praise; favourably.
All the world speaks well of you. Pope.

8. Well is sometimes, like the French bien,
a term of concession.

The knot might well he cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.

9. Conveniently; suitably.
Know

In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton.

10. To a sufficient degree; a kind of slight sense.
A private caution I know not well how to sort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Walton.

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.
Well, let's away, and say how much is done.
Shakspere.

Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover. Swift.

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.

Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary soever to the cure, much enfeble the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state. Blackmore.

Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria.
Arbutnot.

13. Well enough. In a moderate degree;
tolerably.

14. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.
Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue.
Ecclesiasticus.

15. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.
I freed well nigh half th' angelick name. Milton.

16. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.
Antiochus understanding him not to be well-affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety.
2 Mac.

There may be safety to the well-affected Persians;
but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Esther.

Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe.
Pope.

What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Shak.
Well-apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads. Shakspere.

The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
And, ere the sacrificing throng he join'd, Admouish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.

Such music
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
Whilst the Creator great
His constellations set,
And the well-halanc'd world on hinges hung. Mill.

Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well- beaten track. Locke.

He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.

Those opposed files,
Which lately met in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now in mutual well-beseeming rank
March all one way. Shakspere.

O'er the Elean plains thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.
More dismal than the loud displaced roar
Of brazen enginery, that ceaseless storms
The bastion of a well-built city. Philips.

He conducted his course among the same well- chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement. Shakspere.

If good accrue, 'tis conferred most commonly on the base and infamous; and only happening sometimes to well-deservers. Dryden.

It grieves me he should desperately adventure
the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney.

What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth! Locke.

A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well- disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone she desired to be. Sidney.

The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things. South.

A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object, operating duly on a well-disposed organ. Locke.

Amid the main two mighty fleets engage; Actium surveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.

The ways of well-doing are in number even as many as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker.

The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.

Beg God's grace, that the day of judgment may not overtake us unawares, but that by a patient well-doing we may wait for glory, honour, and immortality. Nelson.

God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers.

As far the spear I throw, As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.

Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone, But ev'ry eye was fix'd on her alone. Pope.

Such a doctrine in St. James's air Should chance to make the well-dress'd rabble stare. Pope.

The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.

We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.

Echenus sage, a venerable man! Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.

Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser.

How sweet the products of a peaceful reign! The heaven-taught poet and enchanting strain; The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast; A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.

Turkish blood did his young hands imbrue: From thence returning with deserv'd applause, Against the Moors his well-flesh'd sword he draws. Dryden.

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth, Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

A rational soul can be no more discern'd in a well-formed than ill-shaped infant. Locke.

A well-form'd proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.

Oh! that I'd died before the well-fought wall! Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall, All Greece had paid my solemn funeral. Pope.

Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Atterbury.

Let firm, well-hammer'd souls protect thy feet Through freezing snows. Gay.

The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-harnessed, and compass'd round with horsemen. Mac.

Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen, were dressed in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well intentioned persons as would betray their country. Addis.

He, full of fraudulent arts, This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden.

He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalandar. Sidney.

Soon as thy letters trembling I uncloze, That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope.

Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head, With opening streets and shining structures spread, She part, delighted with the well-known scats. Pope.

From a confin'd well-manag'd store You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.

A noble soul is better pleased with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-mannered court slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally servile. Dryden.

Well-meauers think no harm; but for the rest, Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.

By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers.

He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lie of the conquest of France. Arbuthnot.

A critic supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have failed in an expression; and can it be wondered at, if the poets seem resolved not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side despises a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope.

Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon.

Jarring int'rests of themselves create Th' according musick of a well-mix'd state. Pope.

When the blast of winter blows, Into the naked wood he goes; And seeks the tusked boar to rear, With well-mouth'd bounds and pointed spear. Dry.

The applause that other people's reason gives to virtuous and well-ordered actions, is the proper guide of children, till they grow able to judge for themselves. Locke.

The fruits of unity, next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all, are towards those that are without the church; the other towards those that are within. Bacon.

The exercise of the offices of charity is always well-pleasing to God, and honourable among men. Atterbury.

My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear; And I will stoop and humble my intents To your well-practis'd wise directions. Shakspeare.

The well-proportion'd shape, and beauteous face, Shall never more be seen by mortal eyes. Dryden.

'Twas not the hasty product of a day, But the well-ripen'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden.

Procure those that are fresh gathered, straight, smooth, and well-rooted. Mortimer.

If I should instruct them, to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden.

The eating of a well-season'd dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Locke.

Instead of well-set hair, baldness. A sharp-edg'd sword he girt about His well-spread shoulders. Chapman.

Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-stricken in age. Genesis.

Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like big-bellied women. Spectator.

We never see beautiful and well-tasted fruits from a tree choaked with thorns and briars. Dryden.

The well-tim'd oars With sounding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.

Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat, As hard a science to the fair as great. Pope.

Mean time we thank you for your well-took labour: Go to your rest. Shakspeare.

WHIG, hwig. n. s. [hpcæg, Saxon.]

1. Whiey.

2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them through the year: and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whigs. Now in that year, before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching at the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the wiggamors inroad; and, ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs: and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of disunion. Burnet.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter. Swift.

WHIGGISH, hwig'gish.³⁸² adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.

She'll prove herself a tory plain,

But whirld away to shun his hateful sight,
Hid in the forest. Dryden.

WHIRL, hwêrl.¹⁰⁸ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circumvolution.

'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;

But ev'n your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tri'd, and cannot score them on the stage. Dryden.
Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,

Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
I heir various turnings and their whols declare,
And live in the vast region of the air. Creech

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years, can waste. Creech.

I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.

How the car rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the circling sand ascends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's lost. Smith.

2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Spectator

WHIRLEAT, hwêrl'bât. n. s. [whirl and bat] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.

At whirbat he had slain many, and was now himself slain by Pollux L'Esrange.

The whirbat's falling blow they nimble shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creech.

The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected as Dares did the whirloats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.

The whirbat and the rapid race shall be Reserv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden.

WHIRLEONE, hwêrl'bône. n. s. The pa-tella; the cap of the knee. Ainsworth.

WHIRLIGIG, hwêrl'lê-gîg. n. s. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.

He found that marbles taught him percussion, and whirligigs the axis in peritrochio. Arb and Pope.

That since they gave things their beginning,
And set this whirligig a-spinning. Prior

WHIRLPIT, hwêrl'pît. } n. s. [hpÿr-WHIRLPOOL, hwêrl'pôôl. } pole. Sax.]

A place where the water moves circu-larly, and draws whatever comes within the circle toward its centre; a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shakspeare.

In the fathomless profound Down sunk they, like a falling-tone,
By raging whirlpits overthrown. Sandys.

This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unscen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment sinks you. Dryden.

Send forth, ye wise? send forth your lab'ring thought:

Let it return with empty notions fraught
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.

There might arise some virginitous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constipate one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHIRLWIND, hwêrl'wind. n. s. [wirbelwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.

In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakspeare.

With whirlwinds from beneath she toss'd the ship,

And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden.

WHIRRING, hwêr'ring. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.

From the brake the whirring pleasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.

WHISK, hwisk. n. s. [wischen, to wipe,
German.]

1. A small besom or brush.

The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.

If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.

2. A part of a woman's dress.

An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venise. Child.

To WHISK, hwisk. v. a. [wischen, to wipe,
German.]

1. To sweep with a small besom.

2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.
Cardan believ'd great states depend Upon the tip o' th' bear's tail's end;
That, as he whisk'd it t'wards the sun,
Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.

WHISKER, hwis'kûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from whisk.]

The hair growing on the upper lip unshaven; the mustachio.

A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.

Behold four kings, in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard. Pope.

A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

To WHISPER, hwis'pûr. v. n. [wisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice,

so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution

He sometime with fearful countenance would desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings, and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

All that hate me whisper together against me. Psalm.

In speech of man, the whispering or sussurus, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound; and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing, in whispering, but in speech you may. Bacon.

The king Acestor calls;
Then softly whisp'rd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.

It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeas'd at both, because he is ignorant of what is said. Pope.

The hollow whisp'ring breeze, the pliant rills
Purl down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.

To WHISPER, hwis'pûr. v. a.

1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shakspeare.

Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shakspeare.

He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon.

The steward whisp'ered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Talfer.

2. To utter in a low voice.

You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whispered ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shakspeare.

Sit and eat your bread,
Nor whisper more a word; or get ye gone,
And weep without doors. Chapman.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bentley.

3. To prompt secretly.

Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shaksp.

WHISPER, hwis'pûr⁹³ n. s. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.

The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.

Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryd.
He uncall'd his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.
With such like false whispers, in former reigns,
The ears of princes have been poisoned. Davenant.

WHISPERER, hwis'pûr-ûr. n. s. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.
2. A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyor of intelligence.

Kings trust in eunuchs bath rather heen as to good spials and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHIST, hwist. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakspeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a participle.]

1. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curt'sied when you have, and kist,
The wild waves whist. Shakspeare.

2. Still; silent; put to silence.

The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.

3. Be still.

WHIST, hwist. n. s. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence; vulgarly pronounced whisk.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.

Whist awhile

Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke
Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson.

TO WHISTLE, hwis'sl.⁴⁷² v. n. [hpiçtlan, Sax. fastulo, Latin.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.
Shakspeare.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

Should Bertran sound his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden.
He whistled as he went for want of thought. Dryden.

The ploughman leaves the task of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.

3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward chitish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shakspeare.
Soft whispers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murmur'g floods. Dryden.

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves; till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the sight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.

When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?
Prior.

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.

TO WHISTLE, hwis'sl. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards,
till he is weary. South.

He chanced to miss his dog; we stood still till he had whistled him up. Addison.

When simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands,
May dance by dance he whistled off my hands!
Pope.

WHISTLE, hwis'sl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [hpiçtlan, Sax.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My sire in caves constrains the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryd.

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.

3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.

Let's drink the other cup to whet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton.

4. A small wind instrument.

The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistles. Sidney.

Behold

Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd. Shakspeare.

Small whistles, or shepherds oaten pipes, give a sound, because of their extreme slenderness, where-by the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

5. The noise of winds.

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.—
—I have been worth the whistle. Shakspeare.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.

WHISTLER, hwis'sl-ûr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The prize was a guinea to be confer'd upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.

WHIT, hwit.³⁹⁷ n. s. [phiçt, a thing; aphiçt, any thing, Sax.] A point; a jot.

We love, and are no whit regarded.
Her sacred book with blood ywrit,
That none could read except she did him teach,
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Spenser.

The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies.

Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unscrupulous, even proportion,
And she no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.

It does not me a whit displease,
That the rich all honours seize. Cowley.

In accounts of ancient times, it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.

It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison.

WHITE, hwite.³⁹⁷ adj. [hpiçt, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.

When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest; but when it was equally, or almost equally, distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton.

Why round our coaches crowd the white glov'd beaux? Pope.

2. Having the colour of fear; pale.

My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart so white. Shakspeare

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.

Welcome, pure-eyed faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron sage, white-robed Truth?
Milton.

Let this auspicious morning be express
With a white stone distinguish'd from the rest,
White as thy fame, and as thy honour clear;
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.

To feastful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-rob'd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.

4. Gray with age.

I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head,
So old and white as this. Shakspeare.
So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months, and years,

Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shaks.

5. Pure; unblemished.

Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly strains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

WHITE, hwite. n. s.

1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspeare.

A friend coming to visit me, I stopped him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance view'd them well, he answered, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differed. Newton.

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot, which used to be painted white.

If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.

Remove him, then, and all your plots fly sure,
Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.

3. The albugineous part of an egg.

I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
T' apply to 's bleeding face. Shakspeare.

The strongest repellents are the whites of new laid eggs beaten to a froth with alum. Wiseman.

When fates among the stars do grow,
Thou into the close nests of time dost peep;
And there, with piercing eye,
Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy

Years to come a-forming lie,
Close in their sacred slumbering asleep. Cowley.

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.

The two inmost regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet.

4. The white part of the eye.

Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with 's hands,
And turns up th' white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shakspeare.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up, as a hillock, above its convexity. Ruy.

To WHITE, hwite. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate; to white-wash.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. Mark.

Like unto white'd sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matthew.

WHITTELEA'D, hwite-léd'. n. s.

White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a mere white calx, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this sold at the colour shops; the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.

WHITELI' VERED, hwite'liv-úrd'. adj. [from white and liver.] Envious; malicious; cowardly.

WHITELY, hwite'lé'. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.

A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shakspeare.

Now governor, I see that I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make those free,
Who were by nature slaves. Southern.

WHITEMEAT, hwite'méte. n. s. [white and meat.] Food made of milk.

Much saltness in whitemeat is ill for the stone. Tusser.

The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats. Spenser.

To WHITEN, hwit'n. v. a. [from white.] To make white.

The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanias. Brown.

Flax the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds. Temple.

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian.

Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore. Prior.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skewer to write;
In duranee, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Lik' Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. Pope.

To WHITEN, hwit'n. v. n. To grow white.
The bark expects its freight;

The loos'n'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.

WHITENER, hwit'n-úr'. n. s. [from whiten.] One who makes any thing white.

WHITENESS, hwite'nés. n. s. [from white.]
1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.

This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever sit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton.

2. Paleness.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shakspeare.

3. Purity; cleanness.

The least spot is visible on ermine: but to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that ermine, forsaken the common track of business which is not always clean. Dryden.

WHITEPOT, hwite'pót'. n. s. A kind of food.

Cornwall squah-pye, and Devon whitepot brings. King.

WHITES, hwits. n. s. [fluor albus.] It arises from a laxness of the glands of the uterus, and a cold pituitous blood. Quincy.

WHITETHORN, hwite'thòrn. n. s. [spina alba, Latin.] A species of thorn.

As little as a whitethorn and a pear-tree seem of kin, a cion of the latter will sometimes prosper well, being grafted upon a stock of the former. Boyle.

WHITEWASH, hwite'wòsh. n. s. [white and wash.]

1. A wash to make the skin seem fair.

The clergy, during Cromwell's usurpation, were very much taken up in reforming the female world: I have heard a whole sermon against a whitewash. Aldison.

2. A kind of liquid plaster with which walls are whitened.

Four rooms above, below, this mansion grac'd,
With white-wash deckt, and river-sand o'er-cast. Harte.

WHITEWINE, hwite'wine. n. s. [white and wine.] A species of wine produced from the white grapes.

The seeds and roots are to be cut, beaten, and infused in white-wine. Wiseman.

WHITHER, hwit'h-úr'. adv. [hpyðer, Saxon.]

1. To what place? interrogatively.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?—
—No farther than the Tower. Shakspeare.

The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whither fly the gnats but to the sun? Shakspeare.
Ah! whither am I hurried? ah! forgive me,
Ye shades, and let your sister's issue live. Dryden.

2. To what place: absolutely.

I stray'd I knew not whither. Milton.

3. To which place: relatively.

Whither when as they came, they fell at words,
Whether of them should be the lord of lords. Spenser.

At Canterhury, whither some voice was run on before, the mayor seized on them, as they were taking fresh horses. Wolton.

That lord advanced to Winchester, whither sir John Berkley brought him two regiments more of foot. Clarendon.

4. To what degree? Obsolete: perhaps never in use.

Whither at length wilt thou abuse our patience?
Still shall thy fury mock us? Ben Jonson.

WHITHERSOEVER, hwit'h-úr-sò-cv-úr'. adv. [whither and soever.] To whatsoever place.

For whatever end faith is designed, and whithersoever the nature and intention of the grace does drive us, thither we must go, and to that end we must direct all our actions. Taylor.

WHITING, hwit'ing'. n. s. [wittingh, Dut. alburnus, Latin.]

1. A small sea fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle, as whiting and mackerel. Carew.
The muscular fibres of fishes are more tender than those of terrestrial animals, and their whole substance more watery. Some fishes, as whittings, can be almost entirely dissolved into water. Arbutnot.

2. [from white.] A soft chalk.

That this impregnated liquor may be improved, they pour it upon whiting, which is a white chalk or clay, finely powdered, cleansed, and made up into balls. B-yle.

When you clean your plate, leave the whiting plainly to be seen in all the chinks. Swift.

WHITISH, hwit'ish. adj. [from white.] Somewhat white.

The same aqua-fortis, that will quickly change the redness of red lead into a darker colour, will, being put upon crude lead, produce a whitish substance, as with copper it did a bluish. Boyle.

WHITISHNESS, hwit'ish-nés. n. s. [from whitish.] The quality of being somewhat white.

Take good venereal vitriol of a deep blue, and compare with some of the entire crystals, purposely reserved, some of the subtle powder of the same salt, which will exhibit a very considerable degree of whitishness. Boyle.

WHITLEATHER, hwit'léth-úr'. n. s. [white and leather.]

Leather dressed with alum, remarkable for toughness.

Whole bridle and saddle, whitlether and nal,
With collars and harness. Tusser.

He hor'd the nerves through, from the heel to th' ankle, and then knit

Both to his chariot with a thong of whitleather. Chapman.

Nor do I care much, if her pretty snout
Meet with her furrow'd chin, and both together
Hem in her lips as dry as good whitleather. Suckling.

WHITLOW, hwit'lò. n. s. [hpic, Saxon, and louf, a wolf. Skinner. ppic, Saxon, and losw, a flame. Lye.]

A swelling between the cuticle and cutis, called the mild whitlow; or between the periosteum and the bone, called the malignant whitlow.

Paronychia is a small swelling about the nails and ends of the fingers, by the vulgar people generally called whitflaw. Wiseman.

WHITSOUR, hwit'sòur. n. s. A kind of apple.

WHITSUNTIDE, hwit'sùn-tide. n. s. [white and Sunday; because the converts newly baptized appeared from Easter to Whitsuntide in white. Skinner.] The feast of Pentecost.

Strephon, with leafy twigs of laurel tree,

A garland, made on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitsonide to bear. Sidney.
This they employ in hewing and baking against Whitsonide. Carew.
And let us do it with no shew of fear;
Nor with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitson morrice dance.
Shakspeare.

WHIT'TENTREE, hwit'tn-trèè. n. s. [sambucus aquatica] A sort of tree. Ainsw.
WHIT'TLE, hwit'tl.⁴¹⁵ n. s. [hpy'tel, Saxon.]

1. A white dress for a woman. Not in use.
2. [hpy'tel, Saxon.] A knife.
There's not a whittle in th' unruly camp
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. Shakspeare.
A dagger hanging at his belt he had,
Made of an ancient sword's well-temper'd blade;
He wore a Sheffield whittle in his hose. Betterton.

To WHIT'TLE, hwit'tl.⁴⁰⁵ v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut with a knife.
 2. To edge; to sharpen. Not in use.
When they are come to that once, and are thoroughly whittled, then shall you have them cast their wanton eyes upon men's wives. Hakewill.
- To WHIZ, hwiz. v. n. [from the sound that it expresses.] To make a loud humming noise.
The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light that I may read by them.
Shakspeare.

Turn him about;
I know him, he'll hut whiz, and straight go out.
Dryden.
Soon all with vigour, hend their trusty haws,
And from the quiver each his arrow chose:
Hippocoon's was the first; with forceful sway
It flew, and whizzing cut the liquid way. Dryden.

WHO, hòð.⁴⁷⁴ pronoun, genitive whose; other cases whom. [hpa, Saxon; wie, Dutch.]

A pronoun relative, applied to persons.
We have no perfect description of it, nor any knowledge how, or by whom, it is inhabited. Abbot.
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the lab'ring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy.
Shakspeare.
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance. Shakspeare.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of hirth,
Lives in the English court. Shakspeare.

2. Which of many.

There thou tell'st of kings, and who aspire;
Who fall, who rise, who triumph, who do moan.
Daniel.

Tell who loves who; what favours some partake,
And who is jilted. Dryden.

6. It is used often interrogatively; as, who is this? meaning, what is the character or name of this person? Who shall do this? that is, where shall any be found that can do this?

In the grave who shall give thee thanks? Psalms.
Who is like unto the Lord? Psalms.

Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Job.

Who first seduce'd them to that dire revolt?
The infernal serpent. Milton.

Who feeds that alms-house neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate?
Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise?

The man of Ross, each lisp'ing babe replies. Pope.

WHO'E'VER, hòð-èv'úr. pronoun. [who and ever.] Any one, without limitation or exception.

Whoever doth to temperance apply
His steadfast life, and all his actions frame,
Trust me, shall find no greater enemy,
Than stubborn perturbation to the same. Spenser.

I think myself beholden, whoever shews me my mistakes.

Whoe'er thou art, that fortune brings to keep
The rights of Neptune, monarch of the deep;
Thee first it fits, O stranger, to prepare
The due libation, and the solemn prayer. Pope.

Whoever is really brave, has always this comfort when he is oppressed, that he knows himself to be superior to those who injure him, by forgiving it.
Pope.

WHOLE, hòle.⁴⁷⁴ adj. [palg, Saxon; heel, Dutch.]

We made a standard of the healthfulness of the air from the proportion of acute and epidemical diseases, and of the wholesomeness of the food from that of the chironical. Grann.

At Tonon they shewed us a great fountain of water, that is in great esteem for its wholesomeness; weighing two ounces in a pound less than the same measure of the lake water. Addison.

Little foresaw he that the Almighty pow'r
Who feeds the faithful at his chosen hour,

Consults not taste, but wholesomeness of food,
Nor means to please their sense, but do them good.
Harte.

2. Salutariness; conduciveness to good.
WHO'LLY, hòl'e'è. 173 adv. [from whole.]

1. Completely; perfectly.

The thrust was so strong, that he could not so wholly beat it away, but that it met with his thigh, through which it ran. Sidney.

Thus equal deaths are dealt with equal chance;
By turns they quit their ground, by turns advance;
Victors and vanquish'd in the various field,
Nor wholly overcome, nor wholly yield. Dryden.

This story was written before Boccace; but its author being wholly lost, Chaucer is now become an original. Dryden.

2. Totally; in all the parts or kinds.

Metals are wholly subterrany. Bacon.
Nor wholly lost we so deserv'd a prey;
For storms repenting part of it restor'd. Dryden.

They employ'd themselves wholly in domestick life; and, provided a woman could keep her house in order, she never troubled herself about regulating the commonwealth. Addison.

WHOM, hòòm. The accusative of who, singular and plural.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring into the fruition of himself.
Pearson.

There be men in the world, whom you had rather have your son be, with five hundred pounds, than some other with five thousand. Locke.

WHOMSOE'VER, hòòm-sò-èv'úr. pron.

[oblique case of whosoever.] Any without exception.

With whomsoever thou findest thy goods, let him not live. Genesis.

Nature has bestowed mines on several parts; but their riches are only for the industrious and frugal.
Whomsoever else they visit, 'tis with the diligent and sober only they stay. Locke.

WHOO'UBUB, hòò'b'ùb. n. s. Hubbub. See HUBBUB

In this time of lethargy, I picked and cut most of their festival purses: and had not the old man come in with a whoobub against his daughter, and scared my thoughts from the chaff, I had not left a purse in the whole army. Shakspeare.

WHOOOP, hòòp n. s. See HOOP.

1. A shout of pursuit.

Let them breathe awhile, and then Cry whoop and set them on again. Hudibras.

detachment, who clapped spurs to their horses, and pursued him with whoops and hallos. Addison.

2. [whupa, Latin.] A bird. Dict.

To WHOOP, hòòp. v. n. [from the noun.]

To shout with malignity. It is written by Drayton, whoop.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to either's purpose:
Working so grossly in a nat'ral cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shaksp.

Satyrs, that in shades and gloomy dimbles dwell,
Run whooping to the hills to clap their ruder hands.
Drayton.

To WHOOP, hòòp. v. a. To insult with shouts.

While he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray; I should be hiss'd
And whoop'd in hell for that ingratitude. Dryden.

WHORE, hòòr, or hòre. n. s. [hòr, Sax.
hoere, Dutch.]

1. A woman who converses unlawfully with men; a fornicatress; an adulteress;

Throughout my book; troth, put out woman too.
Ben Jonson.

2. A prostitute; a woman who receives men for money.

Conveys his wealth to Tiber's hungry shores,
And fattens Italy with foreign whores. Dryden.

We weary'd should lie down in death:
This cheat of life would take no more;
If you thought fame but empty breath,
Your Phillis but a perjurd whore. Prior.

To WHORE, hòòr. v. n. [from the noun.]

To converse unlawfully with the other sex.

'Tis a noble general's prudent part,
To cherish valour, and reward desert:
Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

To WHORE, hòòr. v. a. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

Have I whor'd your wife. Congreve.
WHOREDOM, hòòr'dòm. n. s. [from whore.] Fornication.

Some let go whoredom as an indifferent matter which yet strive for a holy-day as for their life.
Hall.

Nor can that person who accounts it his recreation to see one man wallowing in his filthy revels, and another infamous by his sensuality, be so impudent as to alledge, that all the enormous draughts of the one can leave the least relish upon the tip of his tongue; or that all the fornications and whoredoms of the other can quench his own lust. South.

WHOREMASTER, hòòr'más-túr. } n. s.
WHOREMONGER, hòòr'múng-gúr. } [whore and master, or monger.] One who keeps whores, or converses with a fornicatress.

What is a whoremaster, fool?—A fool in good cloaths, and something like thee. Shakspeare.

As if we were drunkards by a planetary influence, an admirable evasion of whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star.
Shakspeare.

Art thou fully persuaded that no whoremonger
nor adulterer shall have any inheritance in the kingdom of God? and dost thou continue to practise these vices. Tillotson.

A rank notorious whoremaster, to choose
To thrust his neck into the marriage noose. Dryd.

If he were jealous, he might clip his wife's wings;
but what would this avail, when there were flocks
of whoremasters perpetually hovering over his house. Addison.

Art thou fully persuaded that no whoremonger
nor adulterer shall have any inheritance in the kingdom of God? and dost thou continue to practise these vices. Tillotson.

A rank notorious whoremaster, to choose
To thrust his neck into the marriage noose. Dryd.

If he were jealous, he might clip his wife's wings;
but what would this avail, when there were flocks
of whoremasters perpetually hovering over his house. Addison.

WHOSE, hòòz. n. s.

1. Genitive of who.

Though I cou'd
With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not;
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shakspeare.

2. Genitive of which.
Thy name athrights me, in whose sound is death.
Shakspeare.

Those darts whose points make gods adore
His might, and deprecate his power. Prior.

WHO'SO, hòò-sò. } pronoun.

WHOSOE'VER, hòò-sò-èv'úr. } [who and soever.] Any, without restriction. Whoso is out of use.

Whoso is out of hope to attain to another's virtue, will seek to come at even hand, by depressing another's fortune. Bacon.

Let there be persons licensed to lend upon usury:
let the rate be somewhat more easy for the merchant than he formerly paid; for all borrowers shall have some ease, be he merchant or whosoever.
Bacon.

He inclos'd
Knowledge of good and evil in this tree,
That whoso eats thereof, forthwith attains Wisdom. Milton.

Whosoever hath Christ for his friend, shall be sure of counsel; and whosoever is his own friend will be sure to obey it. South.

other parts. Carew.

WHY, hòò. 397 475 adv. [hpi, pòhpi, Sax.]

1. For what reason? interrogatively.
If it be lawful to support the faith of the church against an irresistible party, why not the government and discipline of the church? Lestley.

They both deal justly with you: why? not from any regard they have for justice, but because their fortune depends on their credit. Swift.

2. For which reason: relatively.
In every sin, men must not consider the unlawfulness thereof only, but the reason why it should be unlawful. Perkins.

Mortar will not have attained its utmost compactness till fourscore years after it has been employed; and this is one reason why, in demolishing ancient fabricks, it is more easy to break the stone than the mortar. Boyle.

No ground of enmity
Why he should mean me ill. Milton.

Such, whose sole bliss is eating; who can give
But that one brutal reason why they live. Dryden.

3. For what reason: relatively.

I was dispatch'd for their defence and guard,
And listen why for I will tell you now. Milton.

We examine the why, the what, and the how of things. L'Estrange.

Turn the discourse, I have a reason why
I would not have you speak so tenderly. Dryden.

4. It is sometimes used emphatically.
Ninus' tomb, man; why, you must not speak that yet: that you answer to Pyram. Shakspeare.

You have not been a-bed then?
Why, no; the day had broke before we parted.
Shakspeare.

If her chill heart I cannot move,
Why I'll enjoy the very love. Cowley.

Whence is this? why, from that essential suitableness which obedience has to the relation which is between a rational creature and his Creator. South.

WHY'NOT, hòò'nòt. adv. A cant word for violent or peremptory procedure.

Capoch'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapp'd their canons with a whynot. Hudibras.

WI, wì. [Saxon.] Holy. Thus wimund, holy peace; wibert, eminent for sanc-ity; alwi, altogether holy; as Hierocles, Hieronymus, Hosius, &c. Gibson.

WIC, wik. Wich, comes from the Saxon wic, which according to the different nature and condition of places, hath a three-fold signification, implying either a village, or a bay made by the winding banks of a river, or a castle. Gibson.

WICK, wik. n. s. [peoce, Saxon, wiecke, Dutch.] The substance round which is applied the wax or tallow of a torch or candle.

But true it is, that when the oil is spent
 The light goes out, and wick is thrown away;
 So when he had resign'd his regiment,
 His daughter 'gan despise his drooping day. Spens.
 There lives within the very flame of love
 A kind of wick or snuff that will abate it. Shaksp.
 Bodies are inflamed wholly and immediately,
 without any wick to help the inflammation. Bacon.
 Little atoms of oil or melted wax continually ascend up the wick of a burning candle. Digby.
 The fungous parcels about the wicks of candles only signifieth a moist and pluvius air about them.
Brown.

WICKED, wik'id.⁹⁹ adj. [Of this common word the etymology is very obscure: picca, is an enchanter; pæccan, is to oppress; pijian, to curse; piccb, is crooked: all these, however, Skinner rejects for vitiatus, Latin. Perhaps it is a compound of wic, vile, bad, and head; malum caput.]

1. Given to vice; not good; flagitious; morally bad.

The dwelling place of the wicked shall come to nought. Job.
 And as the better spirit when she doth bear
 A scorn of death, doth shew she cannot die;
 So when the wicked soul death's face doth fear,
 Ev'n then she proves her own eternity. Davies.
 He of their wicked ways shall them admonish. Milton.

2. It is a word of ludicrous or slight blame.

That same wicked bastard of Venus, that blind rascally boy,
 that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. Shakspere.

3. Cursed; baneful; pernicious; bad in effect, as medicinal things are called virtuous.

The wicked weed which there the fox did lay,
 From underneath his head he took away. Spenser.
 As wicked dew, as e'er my mother brush'd
 With raven's feather from unwholesome fen,
 Drop on you both. Shakspere.

WICKEDLY, wik'id-lè. adv. [from wicked : Criminally; corruptly; badly.]

I would now send him where they all should see,
 Clear as the light, his heart shine; where no man
 Could be so wickedly or fondly stupid,
 But should cry out, he saw, touch'd, felt wickedness,
 And grasp'd it. Ben Jonson.

He behaved himself with great modesty and wonderful repentance:
 being convinced in his conscience that he had done wickedly. Clarendon.

That thou may'st the better bring about Thy wishes, thou art wickedly devout. Dryden.
 'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:

Who wickedly is wise or madly brave,
 Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope.

WICKEDNESS, wik'id-nès. n. s. [from wicked.] Corruption of manners; guilt; moral ill.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness;
 old folks have discretion and know the world. Shakspere.

These tents thou saw'st so pleasant, were the tents
 Of wickedness; wherein shall dwell his race
 Who slew his brother. Milton.

WICKER, wik'ür.⁹⁸ adj. [vigre, a twig, Danish; twiggen, Dutch.] Made of small sticks.

Each one a little wicker basket had,
 Made of fine twigs entrail'd curiously,
 In which they gather'd flowers. Spenser.

Then quick did dress
 His halfe milke up for cheese, and in a presse
 Of wicker prest it. Chapman.

The long broad shields, made up of wicker rods, which are commonly used among the northern Irish,
 but especially among the Scots, are brought from the Scythians. Spenser.

If your influence be quite damm'd up
 With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
 Though a rush candle from the wicker hole
 Of some clay habitation, visit us
 With thy long-levell'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

A foolish painter drew January sitting in a wicker chair, with four nightcaps on, by the fire; and without doors greew trees, as if it had been in the midst of July. Peacham.

WICKET, wik'it.⁹⁹ n. s. [wicked, Welsh; guichet, French; wicket, Dutch.] A small gate.

When none yielded, her unruly page
 With his rude claws the wicket open rent,
 And let her in. Spenser.

These wickets of the soul are plac'd on high,
 Because all sounds do lightly mount aloft. Davies.
 Now St. Peter at heav'n's wicket seems To wait them with his keys. Milton.

The cave was now a common way;
 The wicket, often open'd, knew the key. Dryden.
 The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or the other ceremony, is like opening a few wickets, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

WIDE, wide. adj. [wide, Sax. wijd, Dut.]

1. Broad; extended far each way.

They found fat pasture, and the land was wide and quiet. Chronicles.
 He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
 And many-languag'd nations he survey'd. Pope.

2. Broad to a certain degree: as three inches wide.

3. Deviating; remote.

Many of the fathers were far wide from the un-standing of this place. Raleigh.
 Consider the absurdities of that distinction between the act and the obliquity; and the contrary being so wide from the truth of scripture and the attributes of God, and so noxious to good life, we may certainly conclude, that to the perpetration of whatsoever sin there is not at all any predestination of God. Hammond.

To move
 His laughter at their quaint opinions wide. Milton.
 Oft wide of nature must he act a part,
 Make love in tropes, in bombast brake his heart. Tickle.

WIDE, wide. adv.

1. At a distance. In this sense wide seems to be sometimes an adverb.

A little wide
 There was a holy chapel edified,
 Wherein the hermit wont to say
 His holy things each morn and even tide. Spenser.

The Chinese, a people whose way of thinking seems to lay as wide of ours in Europe as their country does. Temple.

2. With great extent.

Of all these bounds enrich'd
 With plentiful rivers, and wide skirted meads,
 We make mee lady. Shakspere.

On the east side of the garden place
 Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving; all approach far off to fright. Milton.
 She open'd, but to shut
 Excell'd her pow'r; the gates wide open stood. Milton.

With huge two-handed sway
 Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down.
Wide wasting. Milton.

The south wind rose, and with black wings Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove From under heav'n. Milton.

Stretch'd at ease the panting lady lies,
 To shun the fervour of meridian skies;
 While sweating slaves catch ev'ry breeze of air,
 And with wide-spreading fans refresh the fair. Gay.

Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,
 And poets once had promis'd they should last. Pope.
WIDELY, wide'lè. adv. [from wide.]

1. With great extent each way.

Any that considers how immense the intervals of the chaos are, in proportion to the bulk of the atoms, will hardly induce himself to believe, that particles so widely disseminated could ever throng one another to a compact texture. Bentley.

2. Remotely; far.

Let him exercise the freedom of his reason, and his mind will be strengthened; and the light which the remote parts of truth will give to one another, will so assist his judgment, that he will seldom be widely out. Locke.

To WIDEN, wi'd'n.¹⁰³ v. a. [from wide.]

To make wide; to extend.
 So now the gates are ope; now prove good seconds;

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
 Not for the flyers. Shakspere.

These accidents, when they first happen, seem but small and contemptible; but by degrees they branch out and widen themselves into a numerous train of mischievous consequences. South.

He was accustomed to sleep with a peaceable nose, softening in his slumbers the wrinkles of it, and the anger which commonly mounted to that part; but now his nostrils were widened to the last degree of fury. Dryden.

To WIDEN, wi'd'n. v. n. To grow wide; to extend itself.

It is in this that the species of brutes are discriminated from man, and that proper difference wherein they are wholly separated, and which at last widens to so vast a distance. Locke.

With her the temple ev'ry moment grew,
 Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
 And arches widen, and long aisles extend. Pope.

WIDENESS, wide'nès. n. s. [from wide.]

1. Breadth; large extent each way.

The rugged hair began to fall away;
 The sweetness of her eyes did only stay,
 Though not so large; her crooked horns decrease;
 The wideness of her jaws and nostrils cease. Dryden.

2. Comparative breadth.

Within the same annual time, the centre of the earth is carried above fifty times as far round the orbis magnus, whose wideness we now assume to be twenty thousand terrestrial diameters. Bentley.

WIDGEON, wi'djin.²²⁹ n. s. A waterfowl, not unlike a wild duck, but not so large.

Amongst the first sort we reckon ereysers, curlews, and widgeons. Carew.

WIDOW, wi'd'ò.³²⁷ n. s. [widwa, Saxon; weduwe, Dutch; weddw, Welsh; vidua, Latin.] A woman whose husband is dead.

To take the widow,
 Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril. Shaks.
 Catherine no more

Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
 And widow to prince Arthur. Shakspere

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,
 Your widow-dolors likewise be unwept. Shaksp

And will she yet debase her eyes on me,
That eopt the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woeful bed? Shakspeare.
And you, fair widow, who stay here alive,
Since he so much rejoices, cease to grieve;
Your joys and pains were wont the same to be,
Begin not now, blest pair! to disagree. Cowley.
The barren they more miserable make,
And from the widow all her comfort take. Sandys.
He warns the widow, and her household gods,
To seek a refuge in remote abodes. Dryden.
Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child. Locke.

To WIDOW, wĭd'ò. v. a. [from widow.]

1. To deprive of a husband.

In this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakspeare.
You are beguil'd,
Both you and I, for Romeo is exil'd:
He made you for a highway to my bed;
But I, a maid, die maiden widow'd. Shakspeare.
Thy little care to mend my widow'd nights,
Has forc'd me to recourse of marriage rites,
To fill an empty side. Dryden.

2. To endow with a widow-right.

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do instate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband. Shakspeare.

3. To strip of any thing good.

The widow'd isle in mourning
Dries up her tears. Dryden.
Inclement weather and frosty blasts deface
The blithesome year, trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widow'd, dreary storms o'er all prevail. Philips.

WIDOWER, wĭd'ò-ùr. n. s. [from widow.]

One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower
many years after. Sidney.
The main consents are had, and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage day. Shaks.
They that marry, as they that shall get no children;
and they that marry not, as the widowers.
2 Esdras.

WIDOWHOOD, wĭd'ò-hùd. n. s. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Ceropia, having in her widowhood taken this young Artesia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no wisdom but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Sidney.
Ne ween my right with strength adown to tread,
Through weakness of my widowhood or woe,
For truth is strong. Spenser.

She employed her last widowhood to works no less bountiful than charitable. Carew.

It is of greater merit wholly to abstain from things desirable, than after fruition to be content to leave them; as they who magnify single life prefer virginity much before widowhood. Wotton.

Cherish thy hasten'd widowhood with the gold
Of matrimonial treason: so farewell. Milton.

2. Estate settled on a widow. Not in use.

For that dow'ry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands. Shakspeare.

WIDOWHUNTER, wĭd'ò-hùnt-ùr. n. s. [widow and hunter.] One who courts widows for a jointure.

The widowhunters about town often afford them great diversion. Addison.

WIDOWMAKER, wĭd'ò-mà-kùr. n. s. [widow and maker.] One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widowmaker. Shakspeare.

WIDOW-WAIL, wĭd'ò-wàle. n. s. [widow and wail.] A plant. Miller.

WIDTH, wĭdth. n. s. [from wide.] Breadth;
widthness. A low word.

For the width of the mortess gage this side, then for the tenant gage on that end of the quarter you intend the tenant shall be made. Moxon.

Let thy vines in intervals be set;
Indulge their width, and add a roomy space,
That their extremest lines may scarce embrace. Dryden.

To WIELD, wèld. v. a. [pealdan,
Saxon, to manage in the hand.]

1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter, and himself Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakspeare.
'Mongst forests, hills, and floods, was ne'er such heave and shove,
Since Albion wielded arms against the son of Jove. Drayton.

There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wond'rous actions wield. Daniel.

They are in the dark before they are aware, and then they make a noise only with terms; which, like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Digby.

The least of whom could wield
These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed
Milton.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord;
What hope had ours, while yet their pow'r was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you! Waller.

He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.

2. To handle: in an ironical sense.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield?
Shakspeare

WIELDY, wèld'è. adj. [from wield.]
Manageable.

WIERY, wĭrè. adj. [from wire.]

1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.

Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;

Off with that wiery coronet, and shew
The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow. Donne.

2. Drawn into wire.

Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiery gold. Peacham.

3. [from wæpn, a pool.] Wet; wearish;
moist. Obsolete.

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fall'n,
Ev'n to that drop ten thousand wiery friends
Do glew themselves in sociable grief. Shakspeare.

WIFE, wife. n. s. plural wives. [wif, Sax. wiff, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has a husband.

There's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East Indies for their mistress only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without foul dishonour. Heylin.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

The wife her husband murders, lie the wife. Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.

2. It is used for a woman of low employment.

Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Bacon.

WIG, wig. n. s. Wig, being a termination in the names of men, signifies war, or else a hero; from piğa, a word of that signification. Gibson.

WIG, wig. n. s. [contracted from periwig.]

1. False hair worn on the head.

Triumphing tories and desponding whigs Forget their feuds, and join to save their wigs,
Swift.

2. A sort of cake. Ainsworth.

WIGHT, wite. n. s. [wĭht, Saxon.] A person; a being. Now used only in irony or contempt.

Beshrew the witch! with venomous wight she stays,

Tedious as hell; but flies the grasp of love,
With wings more momentary swift than thought. Shakspeare.

This world below did need onc wight,
Which might thereof distinguish ev'ry part. Davies.
This meaner wight, of trust and credit bare,
Not so respected, could not look t' effect. Daniel

A wight he was, whose very sight would Entitle him mirror of knighthood. Hudibras.

The water flies all taste of living wight. Milton.

How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by foe oppress'd,
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best? Dryden

His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Addison.

In fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wakes next day a most inglorious wight;
The tulip's dead. Young.

WIGHT, wite. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.

He was so wimple and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched. Spenser.

WIGHT, wite. An initial in the names of men, signifies strong; nimble; lusty; being purely Saxon. Gibson.

WIGHTLY, wite'lè. adv. [from wight.]
Swiftly; nimbly. Obsolete.

Her was her, while it was day-light,
But now her is a most wretched wight;
For day that was is wightly past,
And now at last the night doth hast. Spenser

WILD, wĭld. adj. [pĭld, Saxon; wild,
Dutch.]

1. Not tame; not domestick.

For I am he, and born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild cat to a kate,
Conformable as other household kates. Shakspeare.
Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way. Shakspeare.

All beasts of the world since wild. Milton.

2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.

Whatsoever will make a wild tree a garden tree, will make a garden tree to have less core or stone. Bacon.

Goose grass or wild tansy is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer.

The wild bec breeds in the stocks of old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with hangings, made of rose leaves: and to finish their work, divide the whole into several rooms or nests. Grew.

3. Desert; uninhabited.

The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.

4. Savage; uncivilized: used of persons, or practices.

Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakspeare.

Though the inundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Davies.

May those already curst Essexian plaius,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.

His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him.
Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.

The barbarous dissonance
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian hard.
Milton.

Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Show'd sad remains of what had once been fair.
Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.

In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known.
Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.

Other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies. Shakspeare.
Besides, thou art a beau; what 's that, my child?
A top well drest, extravagant, and wild:
She that cries herbs has less impertinence,
And in her calling more of common sense. Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on 't? Shakspeare.

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.

With mountains as with weapons arm'd, they make Wild work in heav'n. Milton.
The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and it would have been a very wild world had it been without. Woodward.

11. Merely imaginary.

As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution. Swift.

- WILD, wild. n. s. [from the adjective.]

A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.

Whereas the scorching sky
Doth singe the sandy wilds of spiceful Barbary.
Drayton.

We sometimes,
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want come forth

To town or village nigh.
This gentle knight
Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the woods and wilds pursued his way. Dryden.

Then Lybia first, of all her moisture drain'd,
Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.

Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric,
Amidst the harron rocks and burning sands,
That does not tremble at the Roman name. Addis.
You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

WILD BASIL, wild'báz-il. n. s. [acinus, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

WILD CUCUMBER, wild-kóu'kúm-búr.
n. s. [elaterium, Latin.] A plant.

The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.

WILD OLIVE, wild'ól-iv. n. s. [oleagnus, Latin; from ελαια, oliva, and αἶνος, vite.x.] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.

To WILDER, wil'dúr.⁵¹⁵ v. a. [from wild.]

To lose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.

The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go, Where interests meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wilder'd in the way. Dryden.

O thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.

WILDERNESS, wil'dúr-nés. n. s. [from wild.]

1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness.

He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around.
Spenser.

When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spenser.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
That my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants! Shakspeare.

But who can always on the hillows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities.
Arbutnot and Pope.

2. The state of being wild or disorderly.

Not in use.

The paths and how'rs doubt not but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.

WILDFIRE, wild'fire. n. s. [wild and fire.]

A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.

When thou rann'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou hadst been an ignis-fatuis, or a ball of wildfire. Shakspeare.

Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn quickly, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd.
Sandys.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light.
Addison.

In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head.
Pope.

WILDGOOSECHASE, wild-góòs'tsháse. n. s.

A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wild goose.

If our wits run the wildgoosechace, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakspeare.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechace has cost him, and then say, what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolic? L'Estrange

WILDING, wild'ing.¹¹⁰ n. s. [wildelinghe,
Dutch.] A wild sour apple.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground
Dryden.

The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its feculence. Philips.

WILDLY, wild'lé. adv. [from wild.]

1. Without cultivation.
That which grows wildly of itself, is worth nothing.
More.

2. Without tameness; with ferity.

3. With disorder; with perturbation or distraction.

Put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair. Shakspeare.
Mrs. Page, at the door, sweating, blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakspeare.
Young mothers wildly stare with fear oppress,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast.
Dryden.

His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talked very wildly. Female Quixote.

4. Without attention; without judgment; heedlessly.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakspeare.

5. Capriciously; irrationally.

Who is there so wildly sceptical as to question whether the sun shall rise in the east? Wilkins.

6. Irregularly.
She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.

WILDNESS, wild'nés. n. s. [from wild.]

1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.

The heath, which was the third part of our plot,
I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Bacon.
Vainly thou tell'st me what the woman's care Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare. Prior.

2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.

This same starved justice hath done nothing but prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal-street; and every third word a lie. Shakspeare.

He is giv'w
To sports, to wildness, and much compay. Shakspeare.

3. Savageness; brutality.
He came in like a wild man, but such a wildness as shewed his eye-sight had tamed him; full of withered leaves, which, though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.

4. Ferity; the state of an animal untamed; contrary to tameness.

5. Uncultivated state.
Their wildness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.

6. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.
A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination;
a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts.

7. Alienation of mind.
Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakspeare.

WILDSE'RVICE, wild-sér'vis. n. s. [eratægus, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

WILE, wile. n. s. [pile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.] A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a stratagem; a practice artful, sly, and insidious.

Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state.

Daniel.

My sentence is for open war; of wiles,
More unexpected, I boast not; them let those Contrive who need.

Milton.

Life essay'd the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile.

Roscommon.

So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain.

Dryd.

The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches.

Addison.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles.

Swift.

WILFUL, wil'fùl. adj. [will and full.]

1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.

The wilful never want woe. Proverbs.

2. Done or suffered by design.

Sthenobœa herself did choke

With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Spenser.

Thou to me

Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Mil.

The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see

Content of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.

By chance he ancient amities forgot,

Or else expung'd them with one wilful blot:

Nor knew he God nor man, nor faith, nor friends,

But for by-purposes and worldly ends. Harte.

WILFULLY, wil'fùl-è. adv. [from wilful.]

1. Obstinate; stubbornly.

The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise.

Sidney

Evil could she conceal her fire, and wilfully persevered she in it. Sidney.

Religion is matter of our freest choice; and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson.

2. By design; on purpose.

That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.

If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bishop Taylor.

This let him know;

Lest, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprisal. Milton.

WILFULNESS, wil'fùl-nès. n. s. [from wilful.]

Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.

So full of wilfulness and self-liking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which, being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.

Thy causeless ruth repress;

He that his sorrow sought through wilfulness,

And his foe fetter'd would release again,

Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Spenser.

Never hydra-headed wilfulness

So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,

As in this king. Shakspeare.

Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogancy, wilfulness, and haughtiness of man's heart. Perkins.

A stiff and stubborn obstinacy is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.

That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age.

Locke.

WILILY, wil'è-lè. adv. [from wily.]

By stratagem; fraudulently.

They did work wilily, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Joshua.

WILINESS, wil'è-nès. n. s. [from wily.]

Cunning; guile.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness that they have imagin'd.

Psalms

She suppli'd the weakness of force by wiliness of art, and advantage of treaty.

Howel.

WILL, will. n. s. [will, Saxon; wille,
Dutch.]

1. That power by which we desire and purpose; velleity.

What freedom the will naturally, under this corrupt state, hath, I do not consider. Hammond.

The will cannot be constrained. Perkins.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker.

2. Choice; arbitrary determination.

Will is the power which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,

To be so cruel to a humble toe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;

If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

These things have a shew of wisdom in will, worship and humility. Colossians.

Will holds the scepter in the soul,

And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Davies.

The truth is, such a man understands by his will,

and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

3. Discretion; choice.

Religion was observed in the beginning of the world, before there were civil laws amongst them;

I mean any other than the meer wills of their princes and governors. Wilkins.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Ecclesiasticus.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God; they should have nothing in them but what is wise, and holy, and heavenly. Law.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.

—You're welcome; what's your will? Shakspeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform.

Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die

Did to his breast the fatal point apply,

It found his heart. Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psalms

He had his will of his maid before he could go;

he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done;

but I would fain die a dry death. Shakspeare.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of the revenue still Remains beyond their boundless right to kill,

Their father, yet alive, impower'd to make a will.

Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephens.

9. GOOD-will. Favour; kindness.

I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,

And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakspeare.

10. GOOD-will. Right intention.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of goodwill. Philippians.

11. ILL will. Malice; malignity.

WILL with the wisp, will. n. s. Jack with a lantern.

Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in big-ness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth, and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying-places, places of execution, and dunghills.

They commonly appear in summer and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six-feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract; now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been catch'd were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining;

so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants, or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muschenbroek.

Will-a wisp misleads night-faring clowns

O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

TO WILL, will. v. a. [wilgan, Gothick;

wilan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be restored to his blood,

As will the rest; so willeth Winchester. Shakspeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will,

but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great a difference betwixt these two, as betwixt

my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing

another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond.

Whosoever wills the doing of any thing, if the doing of it be in his power he will certainly do it;

and whosoever does not do that thing which he has

in his power to do, does not properly will it. Soull.

A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me;

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakspeare.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to reserve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,

When man was will'd to love his enemies? Shakspeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,

Our men more perfect in the use of arms,

Our armour's all as strong, our cause the best;

Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakspeare.

He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win.

Knolles.

If they had any business, his majesty willed that they should attend. Clarendon.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will

The work which duty hinds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of life be what or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement.

Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to show or limit

the signification.

I will come. I am determin'd to come:

importing choice.

Thou will come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity;

or, it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

Will thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or, it must be that he must come: importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must so be that it must come: importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

WILLI and Vili, wil'lè. among the English Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So Wilihelmus is the defender of many; Wifred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson.

WILLING, wil'ling.⁴¹⁰ adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support, under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

3. Pleased; desirous.

He, willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisdom.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing-hearted brought bracelets and earrings. Exodus.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the *willing*er to obey. Hooker.

We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony In willing chains and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity; These groans proceed not from a senseless plant, No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryd.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not free serve willing? Milton.

WILLINGLY, wil'ling-lè. adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hocker.

I dare not make myself so guilty, To give up willingly that noble title Your master wed me to. Shakespeare.

This ransom, if my whole inheritance May compass it, shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied, as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILLINGNESS, wil'ling-nès. n. s. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good, as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.

Fear never yet a generous mind did gain; We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain; Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less; Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WILLOW, wil'lò.³²⁷ n. s. [pelic, Saxon; salix, Latin; gwilou, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers, consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Miller.

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken; to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shakespeare.

In such a night Stood Dido with a willow in her haad Upon the wild sea banks. Shakespeare.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly, I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakespeare.

When heaven's burning eye the field invades, To marshes he resorts obscur'd with reeds, And hoary willows which the moisture feeds. Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down, Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung, No joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.

WILLOWISH, wil'lò-ish. adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.

WILLOWWEED, wil'lò-wèéd. n. s. [from willow and weed; lysimachia, Latin.] A plant. Ainsworth.

WILLOWWORT, wil'lò-wùrt. n. s. A plant. Miller.

WILY, wil'lè. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent; insidious; subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.

In the wily snake Whatever slights, none would suspicions mark, As from his wit and native subtily Proceeding. Milton.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South.

My wily nurse by long experience found, And first discovered to my soul its wound: 'Tis love, said she. Dryden.

WIMBLE, wim'bl.⁴⁰⁵ n. s. [wimfel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest-home, trembling to approach The little barrel which he fears to broach, He assays the wimble, often draws it back, And deals to thirsty servants but a snack. Dryden.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er, Who ply the wimble, some huge beam to bore; Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about, The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

The trepan is like a wimble used by joiners. Sharp.

WIMBLE, wim'bl. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight, From bough to bough he leaped light, And oft the pumies latched: Therewith afraid I ran away;

But he, that earst seem'd but to play, A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WIMPLE, wim'pl.⁴⁰⁶ n. s. [heplion, Latin.]

A plant.

WIMPLE, wim'pl. n. s. [guimble, French.]

A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser, perhaps by mistake, wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May, For she had laid her mournful stole aside, And widow-like sad wimble thrown away. Spens.
The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crissing pins. Isaiah.

To WIMPLE, wim'pl. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.

The same did hide

Under a veil that wimbled was full low. Spenser.

WIN, win. whether initial or final, in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people, from the Saxon win; i. e. dear beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibson.

To WIN, win. v. a. prct. wan and won; part. pass. won. [winna, Sax. winnen, Dutch.]

1. To gain by conquest.

The town of Gaza, where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Knolles.

He gave him a command in his navy, and under his good conduct won many islands. Heylin.

His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.

Follow cheerful to the trembling town; Press but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryd.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.

Loyalty is still the same,

Whether it win or lose the game;

Truc as the dial to the sun,

Although it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras.

I five years at Tarentum wan

The questorship, and then our love began. Denham.

Thy well-breath'd horse

Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.

3. To gain something withheld, or something valuable.

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakespeare.

Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way

By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance.

Thy virtue wan me; with virtue preserve me.

Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.

Devilish Macheth

By many of these trains hath sought to win me. Shakespeare.

5. To gain by play.

He had given a disagreeable vote in Parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addis.

6. To gain by persuasion.

They win great numbers to receive

With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;

She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakespeare

No tears, Celia, now shall win

My resolv'd heart to return;

I have search'd thy soul within,

And find nought but pride and scorn. Carew.

That flood witness'd his inconstant flame.

When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN, win. v. n.

1. To gain the victory.

Nor is it aught but just,

That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.

You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.

You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.

Thy words like musick every breast controul,
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power. Shaks.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.

Charles, I will play no more to-night:

My mind's not out, you are too hard for me.

—Sir, I did never win of you before.

—But little, Charles;

Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play. Shaks.

To WINCE, winse. v. n. [gwingo, Welsh.]

To kick, as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.

Shakspeare.

Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince.

Ben Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent

The wrong done to his fundament,

Began to kick, and fling, and wince,

As if h' had been beside his sense.

Hudibras.

WINCKER, wins'ür. n. s. [from wince.] A kicking beast.

WINCH, winsh. n. s. [guincher, French;

to twist.] A windlass; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel. Mortimer.

To WINCH, winsh.³⁶² v. a. The same with wince; or perhaps from guincher, Fr.

to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uncasiness.

We who have free souls

It touches not, let the gall'd jade winch;

Our withers are unwrung. Shakspeare.

Have these bones rattled, and this head

So often in the quarrel bled!

Nor did I ever winch or grudge it. Hudibras.

This last allusion gall'd the panther more;

Yet seem'd she not to winch, though shrewdly pain'd.

Dryden.

Their consciences are galled; and this makes them winch and fling, as if they had some mettle.

Tillotson.

WINCOPEPE, win-kô'pipe. n. s.

There is a small red flower in the stubble fields, which country people call the wincopipe; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a fair day will follow. Bacon.

WIND, wind, or wind. n. s. [pinð, Saxon;

wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other,

with an impetus that is sensible to us:

wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air. Muschenbroek.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak, not to be wind shaken. Shakspeare.

Love's heralds should be thoughts

Which ten times faster glide than the sun beams,

Driving back shadows over low'ring hills

Therefore do nimble pinion'd doves draw love;

And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Shakspeare.

Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carew.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by a rarefaction more in one place than another, by the sun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions. Cheyne.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point; as eastward, westward.

I'll give thee a wind,

I myself have all the other,

And the very points they blow;

All the quarters that they know

I' th' shipman's card. Shakspeare.

In the year 1300, one Flavio of Malphi, in the realm of Naples, found out the compass, or piris nautica, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral; and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds or points. Heylin.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakspeare.

His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observed the rule of drinking with one breath. Hakewill.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in pursy old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple.

It stopp'd at once the passage of his wind,

And the free soul to fitting air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any action.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,

With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem

To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.

Shakspeare.

In an organ, from one blast of wind,

To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.

Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.

Where the air is pent, there, breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.

Their instruments were various in their kind;

Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.

Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.

A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,

By often shifting into distant grounds,

Till finding all his artifices vain,

To save his life, he leap'd into the main,

But there, alas! he could no safety find,

A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.

7. Flatulence; windiness.

It turns

Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind of airy threats to awe

Milton.

9. Down the WIND. To decay.

A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still. L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper hand.

Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much; for else counsellors will but take the wind of him, instead of giving free counsel. Bacon.

To WIND, wind. v. a. pret. wound. in Pope

winded; part. wound. [pinðan, Saxon;

winden, Dutch; from the noun.]

1. To blow; to sound by inflation.

The 'squire gan nigher to approach,

And wind his horn under the castle wall,

That with the noise it shook as it would fall.

Spenser.

Every Triton's horn is winding,

Welcome to the wat'ry plain. Dryden.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your

blood,

Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.

Pope.

2. To turn round; to twist.

Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low.

Bacon.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths; in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain. Wilton.

Wind the woodbine round this arbour. Milton.

3. To regulate in motion; to turn to this or that direction.

He vaulted with such ease into his seat,

As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,

And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

Shakspeare.

In a commonwealth or realm,

The government is call'd the helm;

With which, like vessels under sail,

They've turnd and winded by the tail. Hudibras.

4. To nose; to follow by scent.

5. To turn by shifts or expedients.

Whence turning of religion's made

The means to turn and wind a trade. Hudibras.

Mr. Whiston did not care to give more than short,

general hints of this famous challenge, and the issue of it; but he endeavours to wind and turn himself

every way to evade its force. Waterland.

6. To introduce by insinuation.

You have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakspeare.

Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame

the business after your own wisdom. Shakspeare.

Little arts and dexterities they have to wind

in such things into discourse. Govern. of the Tongue.

7. To change.

Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy.

Addison.

8. To entwist; to enfold; to encircle.

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.

Shakspeare.

You know me well, and herein spend but time

To wind about my love with circumstance. Shaksp.

Sometime am I

All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues

Do hiss me into madness. Shakspeare.

9. To WIND up; to extricate.

When he found himself dangerously embarked,

he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in. Clarendon.

10. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.

Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain. Locke.

11. To WIND up. [used of a watch.] To convolve the spring.

I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Shakspeare.

12. To WIND up. To put into a state of renovated or continued motion.

Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years,

Yet freshly ran he on ten winters more:

Till, like a clock worn out with calling time,

The wheels of weary life at last stood still. Dryden.

Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still or gone true? Greiv.

Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up? Young.

13. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.
These he did so wind up to his purpose, that they withdrew from the court. Hayward.

When they could not coolly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretic: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity. Atterbury.

14. To WIND up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.

Hylas! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?

Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing. Waller.
Your lute may wind its strings but little higher,
To tune their notes to that immortal quire. Prior.

15. To WIND up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.

O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses I wind up
Of this child-changed father. Shakspeare.

The weyr sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:
Peace! the charm's wound up. Shakspeare.

To WIND, wind. v. n.

1. To turn; to change.

So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind. Dryden.

2. To turn; to be convolved.

Some plants can support themselves; and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.

Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their centre; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the staircase. Moxon.

3. To move round.

If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about till thou hast topp'd the hill. Denham.

4. To proceed in flexures.

It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakspeare.
Ever more did winde

About his bosome a most crafty minde. Chapman.
He wind's with ease

Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars. Milton.

It was a rock winding with one ascent. Milton.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;

And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again. Dryden.

You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds.
Dryden.

Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the passes open, wind along. Gay.

5. Wound is commonly the preterit. Pope has used winded.

Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that winded to the cave. Pope.

6. To be extricated; to be disentangled; with out.

Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison. Milton.

WINDBOUND, wind'bóund. adj [wind and bound]. Confined by contrary winds.

Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd:
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd. Dryd.

When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house;
and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are wind-bound. Spectator.

Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be wind-bound? Spectator.

WINDEGG, wind'ég. n. s. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.

Sound eggs sink, and such as are added swin;
as do also those termed hypencmia, or windeggs.
Brown.

WINDER, wind'úr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from wind.]

1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.

The winder shows his workmanship so rare
As doth the fleece excel, and mocks her looser clew;
As neatly bottom'd up as nature forth it drew. Drayt.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack, to fall on their heads. Swift.

2. A plant that twists itself round others.

Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony. Bacon.

WINDFALL, wind'fáll. n. s. [wind and fall.]

1. Fruit blown down from the tree.

Gather now, if ripe, your winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls. Evelyn.

2. An unexpected legacy.

WINDFLOWER, wind'flóu-úr. n. s. The anemone.

WINDGALL, wind'gáll. n. s. [wind and gall.]

Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fetlock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent straining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows. Far. Dict.

His horse infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, and sped with spavins. Shakspeare.

WINDGUN, wind'gún. n. s. [wind and gun]. Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.

The windgun is discharged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe;
the strife and distention of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuts within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted. Wilkins.

which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this. Brewerwood.

WINDING, wind'ing.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from wind.]
Flexure; meander.

It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us. Addison.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends. Addison.

WINDINGSHEET, wind'ing-shéét. n. s.

[wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.

These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go. Shakspeare.

The great windingsheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes. Bacon.

The chaste Penelope having, as she thought, lost Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband.
Spectator.

air and light are intromitted.

Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see. Spenser.

A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields. Waller.

He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily. Dryden.

When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too. Swift.

2. The frame of glass or any other materials that cover the aperture.

To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:

Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still. Shaksp.

In the sun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens. Newton.

A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead. Pope.

2. To place at a window.

Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see

Thy master thus with pleach arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdued

To penetrative shame? Shakspeare.

3. To break into openings.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,

That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and wind-w'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shakspeare.

WINDPIPE, wind'pipe, or wind'pipe. n. s.
[wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath; the aspera arteria.

Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shakspeare.

The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration; thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.

The quacks of government, who sat
At th' unregarded helm of state, Considered timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudibras.

Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with an-nular cartilages. Ray.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.
Arbuthnot.

Windy attornies to their client woes,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakspeare.

What windy joy this day had I conceiv'd, Hopeful of his deliv'ry, which now proves Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost! Milton.

Look, here 's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured.
South.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name
Such toys as these have cheated into fame, Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden.

4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.

On this windy sea of land the fiend
Walk'd up and down. Milton.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water; and when we see it windy and dusty, the wind does not make but only raise dust. South.

5. Puffy; flatulent.

In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy
after a surfeit of fruit. Arbuthnot.

A bachelor, a handsome stripling too,
I wis your grandam had a worse match. Shaksp.

When for more worlds the Macedonian cried,
He wist not Thetys in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue. Waller.

WI'SDOM, wiz'dûm.¹⁶⁶ n. s. [pij'dom, Sax. wiisdom, Danish.]

1. Sapience; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.

As from senses reason's work doth spring,
So many reasons understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain. Davies.

Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction. Temple.

As science is properly that knowledge which relateth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations. Grew.

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By the pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid. Young.

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shaksp.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Shaksp.

Wise, wize. adj. [pij, Saxon; wiis, Dut. and Danish.]

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heav'n is for thee too high; he lowly wise. Milt.
All the writings of the ancient Goths were composed in verse, which were called runes, or wises, and from thence the term of wise came. Temple.

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land,
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

The wisest and best men, in all ages, have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

2. Judicious; prudent; practically knowing.

There were ten virgins; five of them were wise, and five were foolish. Matthew.

I would have you wise unto that which is good,
and simple concerning evil. Romans.

The young and gay declining, Alma flies
At nobler game, the mighty and the wise:

By nature more an eagle than a dove,
She impiously prefers the world to love. Young.

3. Skillful; dexterous.

Speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments Exodus.

Do we count him a wise man, who is wise in any thing but his own proper profession and employment, and wise for every body but himself? Tillotson.

They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. Jeremiah.

4. Skilled in hidden arts: a sense somewhat ironical.

There was an old fat woman even now with me—
—Pray, was't not the wise woman of Brainford? Shaksp.

5. Grave; becoming a wise man.

One eminent in wise deport spake much. Milton.
It must be a wise Being that is the cause of those wise effects. Wilkins.

WISE, wise. n. s. [pij, Saxon; wyise, Dutch; weise, German; guise, French; guisa, Italian.] Manner; way of being or acting. This word, in the modern dialect, is often corrupted into ways.

This song she sings in most commanding wise;
Come, shepherd's boy, let now thy heart be bow'd
To make itself to my least look a slave. Sidney.

Ere we farther pass, I will devise
A passport for us both, in fittest wise. Spenser.
On this wise ye shall bless Israel. Numbers.

The lovers standing in this doleful wise,
A warrior bold approached. Fairfax.

With foam upon thy lips, and sparkling eyes,
Thou say'st and dost in such outrageous wise,
That mad Orestes, if he saw the show,
Would swear thou wert the madder of the two. Dryden.

'Tis in no wise strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled. Woodward.

WI'SEACRE, wize'â-kûr.⁴¹⁷ n. s. [It was anciently written wissegger, as the Dutch wiseggher, a soothsayer.]1. A wise or sententious man. Obsolete.

2. A fool; a dunce.

Why, says a wiseacre that sat by him, were I as the king of France, I would scorn to take part with footmen. Addison.

WI'SELY, wize'lê. adv. [from wise.] Judiciously; prudently.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.

He sits like discontented Damocles,
When by the sportive tyrant shown
The dangerous pleasure of a flatter'd throne. Dryden.

Admitting their principles to be true, they act wisely: they keep their end, evil as it is, steadily in view. Rogers.

The doctors, tender of their fame,
Wisely on me lay all the blame:
We must confess his case was nice,
But he would never take advice. Swift.

WI'SENESS, wize'nês. n. s. [from wise.]Wisdom; sapience. Obsolete.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wiseness. Spenser.

To WISH, wish. v. n. [pijcran, Saxon.]

1. To have strong desire; to long.

The sun beat upon the head of J ah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die. Jonah.

W I S

If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come.
Shakspeare.

They have more than heart could wish.
Psalms.
Eve

With lowliness majestic from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose, and went forth.
Milton.
There are ships prepared by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port.
Addison.

That Noah and Janus understood navigation, may be very well supported by his image found upon the first Roman coins. One side was stamp'd with a Janus bifrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for.
Arbutnot.
And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part.
Parnel.

2. To be disposed or inclined.

Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shewn respect to his personal character.
Addison.

3. It has a slight signification of hope or fear.

I wish it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune, to have met with such a miser as I am.
Sidney.

To WISH, wish. v. a.

1. To desire; to long for.

He was fain to pull him out by the heels, and shew him the beast as dead as he could wish it.
Sidney.

2. To recommend by wishing.

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death.
Shaksp.

3. To imprecate.

If heavens have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee;
O let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation.
Shakspeare.

4. To ask.

Digby should find the best way to make Antrim communicate the affair to him, and to wish his assistance.
Clarendon.

WISH, wish. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Longing desire.

To his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies.
Milton.
A wish is properly the desire of a man sitting or lying still; but an act of the will, is a man of business vigorously going about his work.
South.

2. Thing desired.

What next I bring shall please thee; be assur'd,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish, exactly to thy heart's desire.
Milton.

3. Desire expressed.

Shame come to Rome! —
—Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish!
Shakspeare.
I admire your whig principles of resistance in the spirit of the Barcelonians: I join in your wish for them.
Pope.

WISHEDLY, wish't'le. adv. [from wished.]
According to desire. Not used.

What could have happened unto him more wishedly, than with his great honour to keep the town still.
Knolles.

WISHER, wish'ur. n. s. [from wish.]

1. One who longs.

2. One who expresses wishes.

Wishers and woulers are never good householders.
Proverbs.
With half that wish the wisher's eyes be dress'd.
Shakspeare.

WISHFUL, wish'ful. adj. [from wish and full.]

1. Longing; showing desire.

From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,

W I T

To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.
Shakspeare.

2. Desirable; exciting wishes.

Nor could I see a soile, where e'er I came,
More sweete and wishful.
Chapman.

WISHFULLY, wish'fùl-è. adv. [from wish-ful.] Earnestly; with longing.

WISKET, wis'kit. n. s. A basket.
Ainsworth.

WISP, wisp. n. s. [wisft, Swedish and old Dutch.] A small bundle, as of hay or straw.

A wisp of straw for a ballad.
Shakspeare.

A gentleman would fast five days, without meat, bread, or drink; but the same used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on;
and amongst those some esculent herb of strong scent, as onions.
Bacon.

Jews, who their whole wealth can lay
In a small basket on a wisp of hay.
Dryden.

WIST, wist. The pret. and part. of wis.

WISTFUL, wist'ful. adj.

1. Attentive; earnest; full of thought.

Why, Grubbinel, dost thou so wistful seem?
There's sorrow in thy look.
Gay.

2. It is used by Swift, as it seems for wishful; though it may mean earnest, eager.

Lifting up one of my sashes, I cast many a wistful melancholy look towards the sea.
Swift.

WISTFULLY, wist'fùl-è. adv. [from wist-ful.] Attentively; earnestly.

With that he fell again to pry
Through perspective more wistfully.
Hudibras.

WISTLY, wist'le. adv. [from wis.] Attentively; earnestly.

Speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;
As who shall say, I wistly thou wert the man.
Shakspeare.

To WIT, wit. v. n. [witān, Saxon.] To know. This word is now only used in the phrase to wit, that is to say.

There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire,
whose office it is to walk up and down his hailwick.
Spenser.

Yet are these feet; whose strengthless stay is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;
As *wit*ting I no other comfort have.
Shakspeare.

WIT, wit. n. s. [wiȝe, Saxon; from witān, to know.]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects. This is the original signification.

Who would set his wit to so foolish a bird?
Shakspeare.

The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatched wit and judgment.
Shakspeare.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth;
Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still;
And as from wit the power of wisdom riseth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.

Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor
Which doth for common good in council sit;
And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power
To execute what is advis'd by wit.

For wit and pow'r their last endeavours bend
T' outshine each other.
Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them — Alas, in our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the old man govern'd by one.
Shakspeare.

Lewd, shallow, hair-brained huffs make atheism, and contempt of religion, the only hodge and character of wit.
South.

W I T

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ,
Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit.
Dryden.

Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another ideas wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude.
Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame!
Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy, or by genius; the effect of wit.

All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me.
The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter than what I invent, and is invented on me.
I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men.
Shakspeare.

His works become the frippery of wit.
B. Jonson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world.
Sprat.

The definition of wit is only this, that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject.
Dryden.

Let a lord once hut own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens, and the style refines!
Pope.

4. A man of genius.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe, and make themselves the common enemies of mankind.
L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author.
Dryden.

To tell them would a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire.
Pope.

5. A man of genius.

Hence 'tis a wit, the greatest word of fame,
Grows such a common name;
And wits by our creation they become,
Just so as titular bishops made at Rome:

'Tis not a rule, 'tis not a jest
Admir'd with laughter at a feast,
Nor florid talk which can that title gain;

The proofs of wit for ever must remain.
Cowley.

Searching wits, of more mechanick parts,
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts;
Those who to worth their houny did extend,
And those who knew that houny to commend.
Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign;
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!

The great man's curse without the gain endure:
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor.
Pope.

Nought but a genius can a genius fit;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit.
Young.

6. Sense; judgment.

Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not,
Their states far off, and they of wary wit.
Daniel.

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit.
Ben Jonson.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline.
Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.

If our wits run the wildgoose-chase, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five.
Shakspeare.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of understanding; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits.
Shakspeare.

Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?

Shakspeare.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him: but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unsatiable man.

Ecclesiasticus.

No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation, and continuity of bodies.

Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does.

Tillotson.

No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity.

Bentley.

9. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.

How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them?

Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me.

Shakspeare.

Slights from his wit and subtlety proceed.

Milton.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue.

L'Estrange.

WITCH, wits'h. n. s. [picce, Saxon.]

1. A woman given to unlawful arts.

Wise judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft.

Bacon.

View the ruder witch, the conjurer by root, and has she not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief?

Holyday.

The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lah'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms.

Milton.

When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instances of it.

Spectator.

2. [from pic, Saxon.] A winding sinuous bank.

Leave me those hills where harbrough nis to see;
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch.

Spenser.

To WITCH, wits'h. v. a. [from the noun.]
To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms,
And honour's suit, my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou withest, to attend.

Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When church-yards yawn.
I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.

Shakspeare.

Shakspeare.

WITCHCRAFT, wits'h'kráft. n. s. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.

People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft.

Bacon.

2. Power more than natural.

Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow.

Sidney.

Have not some of learning and gravity thought themselves wise, in thinking witchcraft rather a mistake than a crime?

Holyday.

If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in 's tongue.

Shakspeare.

What subtle witchcraft man constrains
To change his pleasure into pains?

Denham.

WITCHERY, wits'h'úr-é. n. s. [from witch.]
Enchantment.

Another kind of petty witchery, if it be not altogether deceit, they call charming of beasts and birds.

Raleigh.

Great Comus!

Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries.
WITCHCRACKER, wits'krák-úr. n. s. [wit and cracker.] A joker; one who breaks a jest.

A college of witchcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram?

Shakspeare.

WITCRAFT, wits'kráft. n. s. [wit and craft.]
Contrivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witcraft, and picture it accordingly.

Camden.

To WITE, wite. v. a. [pietan, Saxon.] To blame; to reproach.

The palmer 'gan most bitterly
Her to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more scornfully
Scoffing at him, that did her justly wite,
She turn'd her boat about.

Spenser.

WIFE, wite. n. s. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach.

Spenser.

WITH, wits'h and wits'h. preposit. [pið, Saxon.]

1. By: noting the cause.

Truth, tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon.

Shakspeare.

With thy pow'ful blast,
Heat apace, and cool as fast.

Carew.

They adhered to John, their deprived bishop; and could not be charmed with the saintship of any second bishop, during his life.

Lesley.

With ev'ry stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than horn.

Rowe.

2. Noting the means.

Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study.

Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.

Boreas through the lazy vapour flies,
And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted skies.

Rowe.

By perflations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air.

Woodward.

4. On the side of; for: nothing confederacy or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee.

Genesis.

5. In opposition to: in competition or contest.

I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever 'gainst thy valour.

Shakspeare.

He shall lie with any friar in Spain.

Dryden.

6. Noting comparison.

Can blazing carbuncles, with her compare?

Sandys.

7. In society; noting connexion.

God gave man a soul that should live for ever, although the body be destroyed; and those who were good should be with him.

Stillingsfleet.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasing fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee.

Taller.

8. In company of.

At the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor from Rome.

Shakspeare.

9. In appendage: noting consequence or concomitance.

Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and, with it to their obedience.

Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you.

Shakspeare.

11. Noting confidence; as I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

12. In partnership.
Though Jove himself no less content would be,
To part his throne and share his heaven with thee.

Pope.

13. Noting connexion.
Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate.

Dryden.

14. Immediately after.
With that she told me, that, though she spake of her father Cremes, she would hide no truth from me.

Sidney.

With that, he crawled out of his nest,
Forth creeping, on his catiff hands and thighs.

Fairy Queen.

In falling, both an equal fortune tried;
Would fortune for my fall so well provide!
With this he pointed to his face and show'd
His hands and all his habit smear'd with blood.

Dryden.

With that the god his darling phantom calls,
And from his falt'ring lips this message falls.

Garth.

15. Among.

But interest is her name with men below.

Dryden.

16. Upon.
Such arguments had invincible force with those pagan philosophers who became christians.

Addis.

17. In consent: noting parity of state.
See where on earth the flow'ry glories lie!
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die.

Pope.

18. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lax and various. With and by it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps is any distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as, the vermin which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison: if these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

19. With, in composition, signifies opposition or privation; except withal.

A present natural good may be parted with, upon a profitable expectation of a future moral good.

Wilkins.

WITHA'L, wits'h-áll',⁴⁰⁶ adv. [with and all.]

1. Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which he farthest from perfection.

Hooker.

How well supplied with noble counsellors!
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution.

Shakspeare.

The one contains my picture, prince;
If you chuse that, then I am yours withal.

Shakspeare.

This that prince did not transmit as a power, to make conquest, but as a retinue for his son; and, withal, to enable him to recover some part of Ulster.

Davies.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and so large withal, chilleth the air.

Heylin.

God, when he gave me strength to shew withal How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair.

Milton.

'Tis necessary men should be out of their noage before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and, withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties.

Wilkins.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son!

Perish his sire, and perish I withal,

And let the house's heir and the hop'd kingdom fall.

Dryden.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not.

South.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly.

Time brings means to furnish him withal;

Let him but wait th' occasions as they fall.

Daniel.

It is to know what God loves and delights in, and is pleased withal, and would have us do in order to our happiness.

Tillotson.

We owe to christianity the discovery of the most perfect rule of life that ever the world was acquainted withal.

Tillotson.

To WITHDRAW, WITH-DRAW'. v. a. [with and draw; from pið, or piðer, Sax. against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one, who from the other withdraw unnecessary obedience.

Hooker.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite.

Hooker.

2. To call away; to make to retire.

Nausicaa is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Ulysses.

Broome.

To WITHDRAW, WITH-DRAW'. v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew.

Milton.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,

The foremost of his foes awhile withdraw:

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,

Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw.

Dryd.

Duumvir has passed the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments which are pardonable only before that stage of our being.

Tatler.

WITHDRAWINGROOM, WITH-DRAW'ING-RÖÖM. n. s. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawingroom, with a kitchen, but-teries, and other conveniences, is sufficient.

Mortim.

WITHE, with. n. s.

1. A willow twig.

An Irish rebel put up a petition that he might be hanged in a withe, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels.

Bacon.

There let him lie

Till I, of cut-up osiers, did imply

A withe, a fathom long, with which his feete

I made together in a sure league meete.

Chapman.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs. [piðe signifies a band.]

These cords and wythes will hold men's consciences, when force attends and twists them.

King Charles.

Birch is of use for ox-yoaks, hoops, serews, wythes for faggots.

Mortimer.

To WITHER, WITH'ÛR. v. n. [zeriðerod, Sax. dry, faded.]

1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.

That which is of God we defend, to the uttermost of that ability which he hath given: that which is otherwise, let it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung.

Hooker.

When I have pluck'd thy rose,

I cannot give it vital growth again;

It needs must wither.

Shakspeare

It shall wither in all the leaves of her spring.

Ezekiel.

The soul will sooner leave off to subsist than to love; and, like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace.

South

2. To waste, or pine away.

Are there so many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time?

Temple.

3. To loose or want animal moisture.

Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave, Now warm in love, now with'ring in the grave.

Dryden.

To WITHER, WITH'ÛR. v. a.

1. To make to fade.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth.

James.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety.

Shakspeare.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm

Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up.

Shakspeare.

What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,

That look not like th' inhabitants o' the earth,

And yet are on 't?

Shakspeare.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey.

Milton.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy:

No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,

To hatch the seasons in a timely birth.

Dryden.

WITHERBAND, WITH'ÛR-BÄND. n. s. A piece of iron which is laid under a saddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight that form the bow.

Mortimer.

WITHERS, WITH'ÛZ. n. s. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder.

Farrier's Dict.

Let the gall'd beast winee;

We are unwrung in the withers.

Shakspeare.

Rather than let your master take long journies, contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers.

Swift.

WITHERWRUNG, WITH'ÛR-RÛNG. The hurt expressed by witherwrung sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebrae of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders.

Farrier's Dict.

To WITHHOLD, WITH-HÖLD'. v. a. [with and hold.] Withheld or withholden, pret. and part. Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme, very licenti'usly written withhaul.

1. To restrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

That hour, which as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary.

Hooker.

Sith mine he is, or free or bound;

Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand From knitting leaguc with him.

Spenser.

The prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace; And by his mother was perforce withheld.

A great number of suits are for abusive words, or a box on the ear, or other trivial matters, which leave no permanent ill effects, but, if our passions may be withheld from estimating them, pass off without making us the worse, or doing us any prejudice.

Kettlewell.

Be careful to withhold

Your talons from the wretched and the hold:

Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;

For, though your violence should leave them bare

Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain.

Dryd.

Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from, any particular action.

Locke.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

What difficulties there are which as yet withhold our assent, till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear.

Hooker.

3. To take away; to refuse.

Soon as Titan 'gan his head exault,

And soon again as he his light withhaul,

Their wicked engines they against it bent.

Spenser.

WITHHÖLDEN, WITH-HÖLD'N. part. pass.

of withhold.

The word keep back, sheweth that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before.

Spelman.

WITHHÖLDER, WITH-HÖLD'ÛR. n. s. [from withhold.] He who withholds.

WITHT'N, WITH-IN'. preft. [piðinnan, Sax.]

Patience, good lady; wizards know their times.
Shakspeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be.
Shakspeare.

That damn'd wizard, hid in sly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey.
Milton.

The prophecies of wizards old
Increase her terror, and her fall foretold.
Waller.

The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.
Dryden.

WO, wò n. s. [pa, Saxon.]

1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.
The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves.
Shakspeare.

So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-weary'd tongue is still.
Shakspeare.

Her rash hand in evil hour

Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, she eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton.

O'er dreary wastes they weep each other's wo.
Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be;
or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is; anciently wo wurth; pa pupð, Saxon.

All is but lip wisdom which wants experience:
I now, wo is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.

Wo is my heart;
That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose rags shan'd gild arms, whose naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found.
Shakespeare.

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shaksp.

Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief-justice. Shakespeare.

He took and laid it by, and wept for wo. Chapm.

If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.

Woe to the vanquish'd, woe! Dryden.

3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.

Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice, of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one confusion? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective; as particularly in the following lines, which seem improper and ungrammatical.

Woe are we, sir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakespeare.

Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.
Under the name of church, I understand a body or collection of human persons professing faith in Christ, gathered together in several places of the world for the worship of the same God, and united into the same corporation. Pearson.

He wad'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryd.
The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship:
hence religion is described by seeking God. Tillotson.

There was a voyage of the Egyptians under Osiris up the Danube; from them the Suevi had their worship of Isis. Arbuthnot.

6. Honour; respect; civil deference.

The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him. Luke.
Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others;
for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expressing a due regard to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it;
which, among mankind, is called civil worship.
Stillington.

7. Idolatry of lovers; submissive respect.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakspeare.

To WO'RSHIP, wûr'shîp. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.

Thou shalt worship no other God. Exodus.

WO'RSHIPFUL, wûr'shîp-fûl. adj. [worship and full.]

1. Claiming respect by any character or dignity.

This is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit like myself. Shakspeare.
When old age comes upon him, it comes alone, bringing no other evil with it; but when it comes to wait upon a great and worshipful sinner, who for many years has ate well and done ill, it is attended with a long train of rheums. South.

2. A term of ironical respect.

Every man would think me an hypocrite; and what excites your most worshipful thought to think so? Shakspeare.
Suppose this worshipful idol he made, yet still it wants sense and motion. Stillington.

WO'RSHIPFULLY, wûr'shîp-fûl-ê. adv. [from worshipful.] Respectfully.

Hastings will lose his head ere give consent
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it, Shall loose the royalty of England's throne. Shakspeare.

WO'RSHIPPER, wûr'shîp-pûr. n. s. [from worship.] Adorer; one that worships.

What art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers? Shakspeare.
Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height. South.

If posterity takes its notions of us from our medals, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo. Addison.

By sanctifying the seventh day after they had laboured six, they avowed themselves worshippers of that only God who created heaven and earth.
Nelson.

WORST, wûrst. 165 adj. [the superlative of bad, formed from worse; bad, worse, worst.] Most bad; most ill.

If thou hadst not been born the worst of men, of weave.

WOULD, wú'd.³²⁰ The preterit of will.

1. It is generally used as an auxiliary verb with an infinitive, to which it gives the force of the subjunctive mood.

If God's providence did not so order it, cheats would daily be committed, which would justle private men out of their rights, and unhinge states.
Ray.

2. I Would do it. My resolution is that it should be done by me.

Thou Wou'ldest do it. Such must be the consequence to thee, that such should be thy act.

He Would, or it would. This must be the consequence to him or it, that such should be his act, or its effect.

3. The plural as the singular.

To themselves they live,

And to their island, that enough would give
A good inhabitant. Chapman.

He, by the rules of his own mind, could construe no other end of men's doings but self-seeking, suddenly feared what they could do, and as suddenly suspected what they would do, and as suddenly hated them, as having both might and mind
so to do. Sidney.

There are several who would, or at least pretend they would, bear much in their own business, who will bear nothing at all. Kettlewell.

4. Was or am resolved; I wish or wished trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion with milk put into new beer and stirred with it. Bacon.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I fray. This, I believe, is improper, and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will, might God decree. From this phrase, ill understood, came would to God, thence I would to God; and thence I would, or elliptically would, came to signify I wish: and so it is used even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

Shakspeare.

I would this musick would come.

I, this sound I better know. Shakspeare.

miraculously.

Whatever things were discovered to St. Paul, when he was wrapped up into the third heaven, all the description he makes is, that there are such things as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive. Locke.

6. To transport; to put in ecstasy: for raft.

Much more the reverend sire prepar'd to say,
Wrapp'd with his joy, how the two armies lay. Cowley.

7. Perhaps the following passage should properly be rafted; though wrapped is now frequently used in this sense.

Wrapt up in silent fear he lies. Waller.
Wrapp'd in amaze the matrons wildly stare. Dryden.

WRA'PPER, rãp'púr.⁹⁸ n. s. [from wrap.]

1. One that wraps.
2. That in which any thing is wrapped.
My arms were pressed to my sides, and my legs closed together by so many wrappers, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Spectator.

WRATH, rôth, or rãth.⁴⁷⁴ n. s. [wrað,
Saxon; wrede, Danish; wreed, cruel,
Dutch.] Anger; fury; rage.

Thou dost the prayers of the righteous seed
Present before the majesty divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemency incline. Spenser.

With one fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two:

Sweet adieu! I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wrath. Shakespeare.
I fear, lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes. Corinthians.

He hop'd not to escape, but shun
The present, fearing guilty what his wrath
Might suddenly inflict. Milton.

Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! sing. Pope.

WRA'THFUL, rôth'fùl, or rãth'fùl. adj.
[wrath and full.] Angry; furious; raging.

He cried, as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten. Spenser.

Fly from wrath:
Sad be the sights, and bitter fruits of war,
And thousand furies wait on wrathful swords. Spenser.

How now? your wrathful weapons drawn. Shakespeare.

The true evangelical zeal should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than the vehement and wrathful passions. Sprat.

WRA'THFULLY, rôth'fùl-è, or rãth'fùl-è.
adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.

Gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully. Shaksp.

WRA'THLESS, rôth'lès, or rãth'lès. adj.
[from wrath.] Free from anger.

Before his feet so sheep and lions lay,
Fearless and wrathless, while they heard him play. Waller.

To WREAK, réke. v. a. old preterit and part. pass. wroke and wroken, now wreaked. It is likely that the word wrought, which is only used in the past tense, is originally the preterit of wreak.
[wraecan, Saxon; wrecken, Dutch; reck- en, German.]

1. To revenge.

In an ill hour thy foes thee hither sent,
Another's wrongs to wreak upon thyself. Spenser.

Him all that while occasion did provoke
Against Pyrocles, and new matter fram'd
Upon the old, him stirring to be wroke
Of his late wrongs. Spenser.

Pale death our valiant leader hath oppress;
Come wreak his loss, whom bootless ye complain. Fairfax.

You could pursue
The son of Perops then, and did the goddess stir
That villany to wreak the tyrant did to her. Drayt.

2. To execute any violent design. This is the sense in which it is now used.

On me let death wreak all his rage. Milton.
He left the dame,

Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame,
But that detested object to remove,
To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love. Dryden.

Think how you drove him hence, a wand'ring exile,

To distant climes; then think what certain vengeance

His rage may wreak on your unhappy orphan. Smith.

Her husband scour'd away
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.

3. It is corruptly written for reck, to heed;
to care.

My master is of churlish disposition,
And little wreaks to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality. Shakespeare.

WREAK, réke.⁴⁷⁴ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Revenge; vengeance. Obsolete.
Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Spenser.

Join with the Goths, and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. Shaksp.

Some ill's behind, rude swaine, for thee to heare;
That fear'd not to devour thy guests, and brake
All laws of humanes; Jove sends therefore wreake. Chapman.

2. Passion; furious fit. Obsolete.

What and if
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shakespeare.

WRE'AKFUL, réke'fùl. adj. [from wreak.]
Revengeful; angry. Not in use.

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven. Shakespeare.

She in Olympus' top Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to serve her wreak- ful son. Chapman.

WRE'AKLESS, réke'lès. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreak, revenge, and means unrevenging.]

So flies the wreckless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless flock doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.

Shakspeare.

WREATH, réth, or réth.^{487 427 499} n. s.
[πρωθ, Saxon.]

1. Any thing curled or twisted.

The wreath of three was made a wreath of five:
to these three first titles of the two houses, were added the authorities parliamentary and papal.

Bacon.

Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths reluctant flames.

Milton.

He of his tortuous train

Curled many a wanton wreath.

Milton.

Let altars smook,

And richest gums, and spice, and incense roll

Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n.

Smith.

2. A garland; a chaplet.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakspeare.
Dropt'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground.

Roscommon.

The boughs of Lotos, form'd into a wreath,
This monument thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view.

Dryden.

When for thy head the garland I prepare,

A second wreath shall bind Aminta's hair;

And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim,
Alternate verse shall bless Aminta's name. Prior.

To WREATH, rét. v. a. preterit wreath- ed; part. pass. wreathed, wreathen. [from
the noun.]

1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.

Longaville

Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor ever laid his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shakspeare.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble, in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,

And with indented glides did slip away. Shakspeare.

The beard of an oat is wreathed at the bottom, and one smooth entire straw at the top; they take only the part that is wreathed, and cut off the other.

Bacon.

2. It is here used for to writhe.

Impatient of the wound,

He rolls and wreaths his shining body round;

Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide.

Gay.

3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.

Two chains of pure gold, of wreathen work, shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches. Exodus.

As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots, so in such base noisome hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indivisibly wreathed and twisted together. South.

4. To encircle as a garland.

In the flowers that wreath the sparkling bowl

Fell adders hiss, and pois'nous serpents rowl. Prior.

5. To encircle as with a garland; to dress in a garland.

For thee she feeds her hair,

And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance. Dryden.

The soldier, from successful camps returning,

With laurel wreath'd and rich with hostile spoil,

'Severs the hull to Mars. Prior.

To WREATH, rét. v. n. To be interwoven; to be intertwined.

Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd a bow'r

Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour. Dryden.

WREATHY, réthé. adj. [from wreath.]

Spiral; curled; twisted.

That which is preserved at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about,
which agreeth with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown.

WRECK, rék.⁴⁷⁴ n. s. [πρᾶκce, Saxon, a miserable person; wracke, Dutch, a ship broken.]

1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.

Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,

As is a rock amidst the raging floods;

'Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,

Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.

Like those that see their wreck

Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,

That death may not them idly find t' attend

To their uncertain task, but work to meet their end.

Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate;

I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate.

Dryden.

2. Dissolution by violence.

Not only paradise,

In this commotion, but the starry cope

Had gone to wreck. Milton.

The soul shall flourish in immortal youth,

Unhurt amidst the war of elements,

The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.

Addison.

3. Ruin; destruction.

Whether he was

Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel

With hidden help and vantage; or that with both

He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not.

Shakspeare.

4. It is misprinted here for wreak.

He cried as raging seas are wont to roar,

When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten.

Spenser.

5. The thing wrecked; as, the ship was considered as a wreck.

To WRECK, rék. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.

Have there been any more such tempests wherein she hath wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser.

A pilot's thumb,

Wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shakspeare.

The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.

2. To ruin.

Weak and envied, if they should conspire,

They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire.

Daniel.

3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Shakspeare.

I faint! I die! the goddess cried:

O cruel, couldst thou find none other

To wreck thy spleen on, parricide?

Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.

To WRECK, rék. v. n. To suffer wreck.

With manlier objects we must try

His constancy, with such as have more shew

Of worth, of honour, glory and popular praise,

Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd.

Milton.

WREN, rén.⁴⁷⁴ n. s. [πρᾶenna, Saxon; re- gulus, Latin.] A small bird.

The poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,

Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakspeare.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds; yet the discoveries of America have shewen us one far less, the hum-bird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

To WRENCH, rénsh. v. a. [πρᾶngan, Sax. wrenghen, Dutch.]

1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.
Wrench his sword from him. Shakspeare.
Oh form!

How often dost thou with thy ease, thy habit,

Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls

To thy false seeming!

Shakspeare.

Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron.

Shakspeare.

Cæsar's army, wanting something, demanded a mission or discharge, with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires. Bacon.

Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,

Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs.

Dryden.

Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground. Swift.

2. To sprain; to distort.

O most small fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!

Which, like an engine, wrencht my frame of nature

From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,

And added to the gall. Shakspeare.

You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay. Swift.

WRENCH, rénsh.⁴⁷⁴ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twist.

2. A sprain.

Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.

3. Wrenches, in Chaucer, signifies means, sleights, subtilties; which is, I believe,
the sense here.

He resolved to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon.

To WREST, rést. v. a. [πρᾶrestan, Sax.]

1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Ascham.

To what wretched state rcserv'd,

Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,

To be thus wrested from us? Milton.

Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.

Our country's cause,

That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hands,

And bid us not delight in Roman blood

Unprofitably shed. Addison.

O prince, I blush to think what I have said;

But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addison.

2. To distort; to writhe; to force.

So far to extend their speeches is to wrest them against their meaning. Hooker.

My father's purposes have been mistook,

And some about him have too lavishly

Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakspeare.

Wrest once the law to your authority;

To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakspeare.

WREST, rést.⁴⁷⁴ n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Distortion; violence.

Whereas it is concluded, out of weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill; what needeth this wrest to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.

2. It is used in Spenser and Shakspeare for an active or moving power: I suppose,

from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his rest.

Adown he kest it with so puissant wrest,
That back against it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groneful sound.
Fairy Queen.

Antenor's such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slacken,
Wanting his manage.
Troilus and Cressida.

3. An instrument to tune.

WRE'STER, rê's'tûr. n. s. [from wrest.]
He who wrests.

To WRE'STLE, rê's'sl.⁴⁷² v. n. [from wrest.]

1. To contend who shall throw the other down.

If ever he goes alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more.
Shakespeare.

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon.
Wiseman.

To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better.
Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground.
Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend: followed by with.

I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it.
Shakespeare.

James knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies and so abhorred to be entangled in such.
Clarendon.

WRE'STLER, rê's'lûr.⁹⁵ n. s. [from wrestle.]

1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletick art.

When the young wrestlers at their sport grow warm,
Old Milo wept to see his naked arm.
Denham.

'Tis not from whom, but where we live;
The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He, that the world subdued, had been
But the best wrestler on the green.
Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.

So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n.
Waller.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down
Dryden.

WRETCH, rê'tsh. n. s. [pnecca, Saxon.]

1. A miserable mortal.

When I loved, I was a wretch.
She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more.
Shakespeare.

The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives.
Shakespeare.

Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply;
View not what heav'n ordains with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high
Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.

Base-minded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some pauntry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate?
Sidney.

He now
Has these poor men in question: never saw I Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forswear themselves as often as they speak.
Shakspeare.

Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile.
Daniel.

When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places.
L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.

VOL. II.

When soon away the wasp doth go:

Poor wretch was never frighted so;
He thought his wings were much too slow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted.
Drayton.

Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She issues forth, and runs along her loom:
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home.
Dryd.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Excellent wretch.
Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch she put into her breast.
Sidney.

WRE'TCHED, rê'tsh'éd.³⁶⁶ adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.

These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcheder sort there are, on whom whereas nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God.
Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind
Than to the wretched mortals left behind.
Waller.

Why dost thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends.
Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some men's minds, that the best of every thing they had being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God.
Hooker.

Affected noise is the most wretched thing
That to contempt can empty scribblers bring.
Roscommon.

Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess.
Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.

An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness.
Sidney.

WRE'TCHEDLY, rê'tsh'éd-lê. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably; unhappily.

From these two was, so wretchedly entered into,
the duke's ruin took its date.
Clarendon.

2. Meanly; despicably.

When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man sneak, who finds himself guilty and baffled too.
South.

WRE'TCHEDNESS, rê'tsh'éd-nês. n. s. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.

My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am; and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness.
Sidney.

He 'gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that catif's thrall the thrall of wretched-
ness.
Spenser.

Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then Such rancour in the hearts of mighty men?
Spenser.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace, till they have recovered their strength again.
Spenser.

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing.
Shakspeare.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel.
Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRE'TCHLESS, rê'tsh'lês. adj. [This is, by

I know not whose corruption, written for reckless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his later repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretchless presumption, and bath no promise of mercy annexed to it.
Hanmond.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchless oscitancy? Government of the Tongue.

WRE'THOLESSNESS, rê'tsh'lês-nês. n. s.
[from wretchless.] Carelessness.

The devil drives them into desperation, or into wretchlessness of unclean living.
Common Prayer.

To WRI'GGLE, rig'gl.⁴⁰³ v. n. [pûrgan, Saxon; ruggelen, Dutch.] To move to and fro with short motions.

If sheep or thy lamb fall a wriggling with tail,
Go by and by search it, whiles help may prevail.
Tusser.

The busy importunities of these extensional paantasms I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires.
More.

The excellency of sawing is to keep in the line marked to be sawn, without wriggling on either side.
Moxon.

To bed went the bridegroom and the bride:

Was never such an ill-pair'd couple tied;
Restless he toss'd, and tumbled to and fro,
And roll'd and wriggled farther off for woe.
Dryden.

How wildly will ambition steer!
A vermin wriggling in the usurper's ear.
Dryden.

And both he and his successors would often wrig- gle in their seats as long as the cushion lasted.
Swift.

To WRI'GGLE, rig'gl.⁴⁷⁴ v. a. To put in a quick reciprocating motion; to introduce by shifting motion.

Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over.
Hudibras.

A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wrig- gle his body into a hen-roost.
L'Estrange.

WRI'GGLETAIL, rig'gl-tâle. n. s. For wrig- glingtail. See WRIGGLE.

My ragged ronts all shiver and shake:
They wait in the wind wagg their wriggletails,
Peack as a peacocks, but nought it avails.
Spenser.

WRIGHT, rite.^{293 474} n. s. [pûhta, pûhta, Saxon.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.

Nor place the neighbour Cyclops their delights
In brave vermilion prow deckt ships; nor wrights
Useful and skillful.
Chapman.

It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine Architect, and condemning the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance.
Cheyne.

The verb To write has the same sound with wright, a workman, right or equity; aud rite, or ceremony; but spelled very differently.
Watts.

To WRING, ring. v. a. preter. and part.
pass. wringed and wrung. [pûngan,
Saxon.]

1. To twist; to turn round with violence.
The priest shall wring off his head, and burn it on the altar.
Leviticus.

2. To force by contortion: with a particle, as out.

He thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of it, a bowl full of water.
Judges.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen clothes; in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain.
Wotton.

Apply mild detergents on pledgets of lint over it,
with a compress wring out.
Wiseman.

3. To squeeze; to press.

In sleep I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand.
Shakespeare.

4. To writhe.

The silly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands.
Shakespeare.

5. To pinch.

The king began to find where his shoe did wring him, and that it was his depressing the house of York that did raukle and fester the affections of his people
Bacon.

If he had not been too much grieved, and wringing by an uneasy and streight fortune, he would have been an excellent man of business.
Clarendon.

6. To force by violence; to extort.

I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection.
Shakespeare.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for tis wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?
Shaksp.

That which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you Thirty spies.
Shakespeare.

Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me, and tell to them, my secret.
Milton.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters
Doubts, dangers, wringing of the conscience,
Fear and despair, and all these for his marriage
Shakespeare.

Pleasure enchants, impetuous rage transports,
And grief dejects and wrings the tortur'd soul.
Roscommon.

Didst thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly.
Addison.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong purpose.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason.
Ascham.

Lord, how dare these men thus wring the scriptures?
Whitgift.

9. To persecute with extortion.

The merchant adventurers have been often wronged and wringed to the quick; but were never quick and lively in thanks to those by whose endeavours they were freed.
Hayward.

To WRING, ring.⁴⁷⁴ v. n. To writhe with anguish.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;

wrinkel, Dutch.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet! Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds?
Shakespeare.

She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle, of old age.
Hovel.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow.
Dryden.

Though you, and all your ceaseless tribe,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen.
And hold for ever at fifteen;

No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore.
Swift.

2. Rurple of cloth.

3. Any roughness.
Our British heaven was all serene;
No threatening cloud was nigh,
Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky.
Dryden.

delinquents; and all three famous writers. Bacon.
Peaceable times are the best to live in, though not so proper to furnish materials for a writer.

Addison.
Addison.

Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the publick good.

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments.

Swift
To WRITHE, rít'hé.⁴⁶⁷ v. a. [from write, Saxon.]

1. To distort; to deform with distortion.

Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakspeare.
Hatefullest disrelish writh'd their jaws
With soot and cinders. Milton.

Milton.
Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her sorrow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden

2. To twist with violence.

Then Satan first knew pain,
And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd. Milton.
Amid the plaited scales it took its course,
And in the spinal marrow spent its force;
The monster hiss'd aloud, and rag'd in vain,
And writh'd his body to and fro with pain;
He bit the dart. Addison.

3. To wrest; to force by violence; to torture; to distort.

The reason which he yielded, sheweth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writhed. Hooker.

4. To twist.

The king of heav'n
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His written bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming felon strook.
Dryden.

To WRITHE, rít'hé. v. n. To be convolv-ed with agony or torture.

Let each be broken on the rack;
Then, with what life remains, impal'd, and left,
To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake. Adliss.

To WRITHE, rít'hé. v. a. [from writhe.]

To wrinkle; to corrugate. Obsolete.
Her writhled skin, as rough as maple rind,

WRY'NECK, ri'nék. n. s. [torquilla, Lat.] A bird.

X.

X, éks. Is a letter which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language

Y.

Y A R

Y wi. At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two ii's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers. Y is, in old English, sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterits and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ge, the Saxon augmentum of the preterit. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but I think erroneously.

YACHT, yôt.³⁶⁶ n. s. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

YARD, yârd.⁷⁸ n. s. [geard, Saxon.]
1. Enclosed ground adjoining to a house.

One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up. Brown.

Xanthus one day sent Æsop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. L'Estrange.

His wanton kids, with budding horns prepar'd, Fight harmless battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [geard, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

The arms spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand to that of the other, made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast, is with us called a yard. Holder.

An aqueduct of a Gothic structure, that conveys water from mount St. Francis to Spoleto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Addison.

3. The supports of the sails.

A breeze from shore began to blow; The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row; Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails Let fall to court the wind. Dryden.

YARDWAND, yârd'wând. n. s. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand. Collier.

YARE, yâre. adj. [gearpe, Sax.] Ready; dexterous; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iros, quick.—Methinks I hear Antony call. Shakspeare.

I do desire to learn, sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakspeare.

YARELY, yâre'lè. adv. [from yare.] Dexterously; skilfully.

Y A W

The silken tackles
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. Shakspeare.
YARN, yârn.⁷⁸ n. s. [gearn, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakspeare.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues. Shakspeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged. Temple.

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Wilkins.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.

Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the sisters cut below your line:

The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap. Dryden.

To YARR, yâr. v. n. [from the sound; harr-rio, Lat.] To growl or snarl like a dog. Ainsworth.

YARROW, yâr'rô.⁸¹ n. s. [millefolium, Lat.] A plant.

YAWL, yâwl.²¹⁹ n. s. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

To YAWN, yâwn.²¹⁹ v. n. [geonan, Sax.]

1. To gape; to oscitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executor's pale
The lazy yawning drone. Shakspeare.

In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended. When a man yawneth, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.

At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame,
And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came? Dryden.

To whom the yawning pilot, fast asleep,
Me didst thou bid to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden.

2. To open wide.

The gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakspeare.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakspeare.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakspeare.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

Hell at last
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton.

The sword pierc'd his tender sides;
Down fell the beautiful youth, the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.

High she rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck

The yawning cliff: from its disparted height
Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn,

Y E A

is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poor as the apostles were. In which one circumstance if they imagine so great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hooker.

YAWN, yâwn. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Oscitation.

Thee, Paridel, she mark'd thee there,
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair;
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness. Pope.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,
That mingles with the baleful streams below;
And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead;
Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey,
And startle at the sudden flash of day. Addison.

YAWNING, yâwn'ing.⁴¹⁰ adj. [from yawn.]
Sleepy; slumbering.

Ere to black Hecate's summons
The shard-horn beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakspeare.

YCLAD, è-klâd'. part. for clad. Clothed.

Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yclad with wisdom's majesty,
Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys. Shakspeare.

YCLE'PED, è-klèpt'. [the participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Sax. with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English, in the preterits and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-easing mirth. Milton.

YDRA'D, è-drâd'. The old preterit of To dread. Spenser.

YE, yè. The nominative plural of thou.
Ye are they which justify yourselves. Luke.

YEA, yè.²²⁷ adv. [ea, or gea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.]

1. Yes. A particle of affirmation; meaning, it is so, or, is it so?

Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden? Genesis.

Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay. Matthew.

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. A particle by which the sense is intended or enforced: not only so, but more than so.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. Shakspeare.

A rascally, yea, forsooth knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakspeare.

From these Philippinæ are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too. Abbot.

All the promises of God are yea, and amen; that is, are verified which is the importance of yea; and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.

They durst abide Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thron'd

Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.
Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself; yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

To YEAD, or YEDE, yède. v. n. preterit yode. [This word seems to have been corruptly formed from geod, the Saxo.
preterit of gan.] To go; to march.
Obsoleto.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure,
And to their folds yade at their own leisure. Spens.
Then had the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw aside,
From whence she might behold that battle's proof,
And eke be safe from danger far descri'd. Spenser.

Yet for she yode thereat half aghast,
And kindly the door sprang after her fast. Spenser.
That same mighty man of God,
That blond red billows like a walled front,
On either side departed with his rod,
Till that his army dry-foot through them yod.
Spenser.

To YEAN, yène.²²⁷ v. n. [earian, Saxon.]
To bring young. Used of sheep.

This I scarcely drag along,
Who, yeaning on the rocks has left her young.

Mortimer

YEANLING, yène'ling.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from yeán.]
The young of sheep.

All the yeanelings which were streak'd and pied Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakespeare.

YEAR, yère.²²⁷ n. s. [geap, Saxon.]

1. If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprised of each other's meaning. Watts.

See the minutes, how they run:
How many make the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shaksp.

With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn.

Though we suppose but the addition of one man for every thousand years, yet long before this time there should have been a greater number than there could be sands in the earth. Wilkins

The doctor, upon occasion, calculating his experiences on himself, found them to be not above five pound in the year. Fell.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year.
Swift.

2. It is often used plurally, without a plural termination.

I fight not once in forty years. Shakespeare.

3. In the plural, old age.

Some mumble-news,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents Shakespeare

There did also Cecile, mother to king Edward IV, being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crowned, and four murdered. Bacon.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were seen
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.

YE'ARLING, yère'ling.⁴¹⁰ adj. [from year.]
Being a year old.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

YE'ARLY, yère'lè. adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakespeare.

Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green.
Prior

YE'ARLY, yère'lè. adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, to-morrow is Saint Crispin. Shakespeare.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
For freedom still maintain'd alive;
For these, and more, accept our pious praise.
Dryden.

Not numerous are our joys when life is new,
And yearly some are falling of the few. Young

To YEARN, yèrn.²³⁴ v. n. [earnan, Sax.]
To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn. It is by Spenser used for desire, or the pain of longing; it now implies tenderness or pity.

He despis'd to tread in due degree,
But chaff'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern,
And to be eas'd of that base burden still did yearn.
Spenser.

Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick:
But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earn'd it to wake,
And manfully therewith shot. Spenser.

Falstaff, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore. Shakespeare.

Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep, and he entered into his chamber. Genesis.

When the fair Leucothoe he spy'd,
To check his steeds impatient Phœbus yearn'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd.
Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain
Y' have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
I fear they'll prove so nice and coy,
To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy. Hudibras.

Where our heart does but relent, his melts;
where our eye pities, his bowels yearn. South.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions raised in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy Calamy.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addison.
Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd;
But Anticus, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

To YEARN, yèrn. v. a. To grieve; to vex.

She laments for it, that it would Yearn your heart to see it. Shakespeare.

I am not covetous of gold,
It yearns me not if men my garments wear. Shaks.

YEAST, yèst. n. s. See YEST.

YELK, yèlk. n. s. [from gealepe, yellow, Sax.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and oft n written, yolk.

The yolk of the egg conduceth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened, when it is new-hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some ancient philosophers, the people still opinion. Brown

All the feather'd kind
From the included yolk, not ambient white, arose.
Dryden.

To YELL, yèll. v. n. To cry out with horror and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor grisly vultures, make us once appear'd.
Spenser.

Each new morn,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heav'n on the face, that it resounds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllables of dolour. Shakespeare.

Now worse than ere he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted sore
Some treason had been wrought her. Drayton.

Yelling monsters that with ceaseless cry Surround me. Milton.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost.
Thomson.

YELL, yèll. n. s. [from the verb.] A cry of horror.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities. Shakespeare

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise.
Dryden.

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Reud the dark welkin. Philips.

YE'LLLOW, yèl'lo. adj. [gealepe, Saxon; gheleuwe, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakespeare.

He brought the green ear and the yellow sheaf.
Milton.

After a lively orange, followed an intense, bright, and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.

Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom.
Thomson.

YE'LLLOWBOY, yèl'lo-bòè. n. s. A gold coin.

A very low word.

lour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward.

YE'LLLOWISHNESS, yèl'lo-ish-nès. n. s. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.

Bruised madder, being drenched with the like alcalizate solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Boyle.

YE'LLLOWNESS, yèl'lo-nès. n. s. [from yellow.]

1. The quality of being yellow.

Apples, covered in lime and ashes, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon.

Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a sallow coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbutnot.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for jealousy.
 Ford I will possess with yellowness. Shakspeare.
- YE'LLOWS, yé'lóze. n. s. A disease in horses. When the gallpipe is stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is carried back into the blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, slaver, and all the parts of the horse that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow.
Farrier's Dict.
 His horse sped with spavins, and raised with the yellows. Shakspeare.
- To YELP, yélp. v. n. [gealpan, Sax.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.
 A little herd of England's tim'rous deer, Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakspeare.
- YEO'MAN, yó'mán.²⁶⁰ n. s. [Of this word the original is much doubted; the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from geman, Frisick, a villager.]
1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.
 Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.
 He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man: he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.
 2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeomen of the guard Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might,
 And were enranged ready still for fight. Spenser.
 You, good yeomen,
 Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
 The mettle of your pasture. Shakspeare.
 He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard. Bacon.
 Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
 And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
 Two brawny yeomen of his tusty guard. Dryden.
 At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
 The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
 Make room! as if a duke were passing by. Swift
 3. It was probably a frecholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.
 His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
 Third son to the third Edward king of England;
 Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root? Shakspeare.

 Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.
 2. The spume on troubled water; foam; froth.
 Now the ship horing the moon with her mainmast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hoghead. Shakspeare.
- YESTER, yés'túr. adj. [ghister, Dutch; hesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.
 Love might as well be sow'd upon our sands,
 As in a breast so barren:
 To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester sun beheld Must'ring her charms. Dryden
- YESTERDAY, yés'túr-dá. n. s. [gŷtandæg, Sax.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.
 To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
 Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
 To the last syllable of recorded time,
 And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
 The way to dusky death. Shakspeare.
 We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow. Job.
 You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
 Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
 Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same. Donne.
 If yesterday could he recall'd again,
 Ev'n now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.
Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Aldison.
 Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator Aldison.
 Naked from the womb
 We yesterday came forth, and in the tomb
 Naked again we must to-morrow lie;
 Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.
- YESTERDAY, yés'túr-dá. adv. On the day last past.
 Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.
- YESTERNIGHT, yés'túr-nite. n. s. The night before this night.
YESTERNIGHT, yés'túr-nite. adv. On the night last past.

 The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis yesternight. Bacon.
- YESTY, yés'té. adj. [from yest.] Frothy; spumy; foamy.

- Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yeasty waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up. Shaksp.
- YET, yét. conjunct. [gýc, gec, geca, Sax.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.
 They had a king was more than him before;
 But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.
- French laws forbid the female reign,
Yet love does them to slavery draw. Cowley.
 Though such men have liv'd never so much upon the reserve, yet, if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.
 The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth? Tillotson.
 He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy, yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden.
- Let virtuous's in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.
- YET, yét. adv.
1. Beside; over and above.
 This furnishes us with yet one more reason why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.
 2. Still; the state still remaining the same.
 They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.
 3. Once again.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
 Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night. Pope.
 4. At this time; so soon; hitherto; with a negative before it.

 5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.
 A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.
 6. It denotes continuance and extension, greater or smaller.
 Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
 Is ebbing to the last:
 A little longer, yet a little longer,
 And nature drops him down without your sin,
 Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryd.
Yet a few days, and those which now appear
 In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
 In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.
 7. Still; in a new degree.
 He that takes from a thief that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wickedest thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.
 8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.
 If any man neglects his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whigift.
 Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.
 Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
 Was absent, after all his mischief done,
 The prince of darkness. Milton.
 9. Hitherto: sometimes with as before it.
 Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hooker.

Y'EVEN, yêv'vii. for given.

Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?

Let that room to my lady be yeven;

She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,

And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.

YEW, yôô. n. s. [y, Saxon; yw, Welsh.

This is often written eugh; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See EUGH.] A tree of tough wood, used for bows, and therefore planted in churchyards.

It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.

The shooter eugh, the broad-leav'd sycamore, The barren plantane, and the walnut sound; The myrtle, that her foul sin doth still deplore; Alder, the owner of all waterish ground. Fairfax.

Slips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare.

He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew.

The distinguish'd yew is ever seen
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Dryden.

The distinguish'd yew is ever seen
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

YEW'WEX, yôô'n. adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.

His stiff arms to stretch with eughen bow,
And manly legs still passing to and fro.

And here the trembling Trojans quit the field, Pursued by fierce Achilles. Dryden.

2. To comply with any person, or motive power.

Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.

I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper. Shakespeare.

This supernatural soliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair?

With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Proverbs.

The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts.

They shew the world that they are not of a yielding temper, which will be wronged or baffled. Kettlewell.

3. To comply with things required or enforced.

There could be no secure peace, except the Lacedemonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.

If much converse Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milt.

4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.

If you yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.

5. To give place, as inferiour in excellence or any other quality.

The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dryden.

*Yokefellow*s in arms
Let us to France. Shakespeare.

2. Mate; fellow: commonly partner in marriage.

You cannot think me fit
To be th' yokefellow of your wit,

Nor take one of so mean deserts
To be the partner of your parts. Hudibras.
Before Toulon thy yokemate lies,
Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.
Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Spectator.
YOLD, yòld. for yielded. Obsolete.

YOLK, yòke. n. s. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.

Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg,
a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray.

YON, yòn. } adj. [ȝeond, Sax.]
YOND, yònd. } Being at a distance Yo'NDER, yòn'dûr.⁹⁵ } within view.

with you. Shakspeare.
Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakspeare.

Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle;
and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with sables? Ben Jonson.

Tigranes, being encamped upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambas-sage, and too few for a fight. Bacon.

For proof look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton.
Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder allies green. Milton.
Let other swains attend the rural care,
But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays. Pope.
Then hear me, gracious heav'n, and grant my pray'r,

Make yonder man the fav'rite of thy care:
Nourish the plant with thy celestial dew,
Like manna let it fall, and still be new. Harte.
If I were to fall down yonder precipice, and break my neck, I should be no more a man of this world. Beattie.

YON, yòn. } adv. At a distance YOND, yònd. } within view. It is Yo'NDER, yòn'dûr.⁹⁵ } used when we direct the eye from another thing to the object.
The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance,
And say what thou seest yond. Shakspeare.
First, and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
The cherub Contemplation. Milton.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbutnot and Pope.

YOND, yònd. adj. [I know not whence derived.] Mad; furious: perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind; in which sense it concurs with the rest.

Then like a lion, which hath long time sought
His robbed whelps, and at the last them found Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond;
So fierce he laid about him. Spenser.
Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairfax.

YORE or Of Yore, yòre. adv. [ȝeogara, Saxon.]

1. Long.
Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
Which, though he hath polluted oft and yore,
Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Spenser.
2. O. old time; long ago: with of before it.
And seated here a see, his bishoprick of yore,

Upon the farthest point of this unfruitful shore. Drayton.

Thee bright-eyed Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.
There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore.
A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.
In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.

The devil was piqued such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.

YOU, yòò.^s ³¹⁵ pron. [eop, uh, Saxon, of ȝe, ye.]

1. The oblique case of ye.
Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward. Ephesians.
I thought to show you
How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
And hanel fate before you. Dryden.

2. It is used in the nominative, in common language, when the address is to persons; and though first introduced by corruption is now established. In the following lines you and ye are used ungrammatically in the places of each other; but even this use is customary.
What gain you by forbidding it to tease ye?
It now can neither trouble ye nor please ye. Dryd.

3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.
In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.
But, madam, if the fates withstand, and you
Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.

4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on; any one; whosoever.
We passed by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clods. Addison.

5. You is used in the subsequent members of a sentence, as distinguished from ye.
Stand forth, ye champions, who the gauntlet wield,
Or you the swiftest racers of the field. Pope.

YOUNG, yùng. adj. [tonȝ, ȝeong, Sax.
jong, Dutch.]

1. Being in the first part of life; not old:
used of animal life.
Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew.
There 's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shaks.
I firmly am resolv'd
Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakspeare.
Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saller than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. Shakspeare.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful, fair, and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman.
In timorous deer he hannels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.

Nor need'st thou by thy daughter to be told,
Though now thy spry blood with age be cold,
Thou hast been young. Dryden.
When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed. Locke
It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it. Locke.

From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak.
Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakspeare.

3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.
There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.

YOUNG, yùng.³¹⁴ n. s. The offspring of animals collectively.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shaksp.
So many days my ewes have been with young
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yeau. Shaks.
The eggs disclos'd their callow young. Milton.
The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. More.

Not so her young; for their unequal line
Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
Their cartily mould obnoxious was to fate,
Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state. Dryd.
Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray.

YOU'NGISH, yùng'ish.³¹⁵ adj. [from young.]

Somewhat young.
She let her second room to a very genteel young- ish man. Tatler.

YOU'NGLING, yùng'ling.⁴¹⁰ n. s. [from young; ȝeongling, Saxon.] Any creature in the first part of life.

More dear unto their God than younglings to their dam. Fairy Queen.
Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
—Grey-beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspeare.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

Encourag'd thus she brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.

The stately beast the two Tyrreidæ bred,
Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.

YOU'NGLY, yùng'ly.³⁸¹ adv. [from young.]

1. Early in life.
Say we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of. Shakspeare.

2. Ignorantly; weakly.
YOU'NGSTER, yùng'stûr. } n. s. [from YOU'NKER, yùngk'ûr.⁹⁵ } young.] A young person: in contempt.

What will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd? Shakspeare.

See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younker prancing to his love. Shaks
While Ulysses slept there, and close by
The other younkers he abroad would ly. Chapman.
Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;
And whilst the youngster from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
And would outdo his father in his course. Creech.

The youngster, who at nine and three Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast reads, till twelve o'clock,
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.

YOUNGTH, yùngth. n. s. [from young.]
Youth. Obsolete.

The mournful muse in mirth now list no mask,
As she was wont in youth and summer days.

Spenser.

YOUR, yóór.⁴²¹ pronoun. [εοπερ. Saxon.]

1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.

Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle. Shakspeare.

Impute your danger to our ignorance;
The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryden.

Ye dauntless Dardans hear,
Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.

2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.

Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakspeare.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your metallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.

A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Fenton.

3. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood: as, this is your book, this book is yours.

Pray for this man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspeare.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakspeare.

This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive and fare thee well.—
—Yours in the ranks of death. Shakspeare.

He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east. Shakspeare.

While the sword this monarchy secures,
'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
My wealth, my city, and myself are yours. Dryden.

It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURSELF, yúr-sèlf'. n. s. [your and self.]

1. You; even you; ye, not others.

If it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakspeare.

O heav'n's!

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause. Shakspeare.

2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before: as, you love only yourself; you have betrayed yourselves by your rashness.

Whenever you are more intent upon adorning your persons than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves than he that had rather have a laced coat than a healthful body. Law.

3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the nominative.

Be but yourselves. Pope.

YOUTH, yóðth'. n. s. [yéozuð, Saxon.]

1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

His starry helm unbuckled show'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbuthnot.

2. A young man.

Siward's son,
And many unrough youths even now,
Protest their first of manhood. Shakspeare.

If this were seen,
The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book and sit him down and die, Shakspeare.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost;
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
The fate appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train clefts,
And to the Latian court their course directs. Dryden.

3. Young men. Collectively.

As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben Jonson

About him exercis'd heroic games
Th' unarm'd youth of heav'n. Milton.

The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,

Than that young beauty by thy care is drest,
When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.
YOUTHFUL, yóðth'fùl'. adj. [youth and full.]

1. Young.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course,
East, west, north, south. Shakspeare.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress

Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the first part of life.

Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April bud in primrose season. Milton.

In his years were seen
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.

The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.

3. Vigorous, as in youth.

How is a good christian animated by a steadfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages, is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting, as at the first! no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.

YOUTHFULLY, yóðth'fùl'. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.

YOUTHLY, yóðth'lé'. adj. [from youth.]

Young; early in life. Obsolete.

True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That warlike feats dost highly glorify,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought, and many frays. Spenser.

YOUTHY, yóðth'è'.³⁸¹ adj. [from youth.]

Young, youthful. A bad word.

The scribbler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into railery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spectator.

YPI'GH'T, è-pite'. part. [y and flight, from pitch.] Fixed.

That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in a hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy cliff ypight,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spens.

YUCK, yùk'. n. s. [jocken, Dutch.] 1 tch.

YULE, yùle'. n. s. [geol, yeol, yehul, Saxon.] The time of Christmas.

Z.

Z, zéd, or iz'zùrd.⁴⁶³ Is found in the Saxon alphabets set down by grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonic: its sound is uniformly that of a hard s. No word of English original begins with z.

ZÁ'FFAR, { zá'ffere. } n. s.
ZÁ'FFIR, { zá'ffere. }

Powder the calx of cobalt fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints; this being wetted with common water, concretes into a mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral. Hill.

Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour: these German mineralists call zaffir. Woodw.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphra. Boyle.

ZÁ'NY, zá'né'. n. s. [Probably of zanei,

the contraction of Giovanni: from sanna, a scoff, according to Skinner] One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon

Some carrytale, some pleasanter, some slight zany.

Some mumblenews, some trencher knight, some Dick,
Told our intents before. Shakspeare.

Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy soil, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape. Donne.
Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany, of thy age. Pope.

ZAR'NICH, zâr'nik. n. s. A substance in which orpiment is found; it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Hill.

ZÉAL, zèle. n. s. [ζλος; zelus, Latin.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

In this present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill, meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever. Hooker.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pounds I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor shew doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him. Shakspeare.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare.

The bare fervour and zeal is taken in commutation for much other piety, by many the most eager contenders. Hammond.

Among the seraphims
Abdic, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Milton.

Had zeal anciently armed itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Holyday.

We must look our prayers be with zeal and earnestness: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Duty of Man.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.
She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste,
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overcome by the fury of the tide. Dryden.

The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English. Tillotson.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by overacting some things in their religion: by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul, but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it. Stillington.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.
There is nothing noble in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls; nor any thing poor in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Lav.

ZEA LOT, zê'lût, or zê'lût. ^{235 219} n. s. [zelo-teur, French; ζλωτης.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in dispraise.

But now, whereas these zealots complain of us, for partaking with the Roman church in things lawful and good, they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions which are of no good quality. White.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness, and division, were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.

Are not those men too often the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Sprat.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have wished or acted for the success of an enterprize, that might have ended in the extinction of the protestant religion. Addison.

ZEA'LOUS, zê'lûs, or zê'lûs. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion will be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere
A spirit, zealous, as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Decay of Piety.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons; but then it should be only for good things: a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things. Sprat.

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resort of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other. Dryden.

Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Lav.

ZEA'LOUSLY, zê'lûs-lê, or zê'lûs-lê. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To light thy odorous lamp with decds of fill,
And hope that reaps not shame. Milton.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Swift.

ZEA'LOUSNESS, zê'lûs-nês, or zê'lûs-nês. n. s. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZE'CHIN, tshê-kên'. n. s. [from Zecha, a place in Venice, where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZÉDOARY, zê'dô-â-rê. n. s. [zedoaire, Fr.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED, zêd, or iz'zûrd. ³²³ n. s. The name of the letter z.

Thou whorson zed, thou unnecessary letter. Shakspeare.

ZÉ'NITH, zê'nith. ⁶¹⁴ n. s. [Arabic.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live
Under the zenith of both frozen poles, Though none come thence advertisement to give Why bear we not the like faith of our souls? Davis.

These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun; when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer. Brown.

ZEPHYR, zêf'fêr. ⁶⁴³ } n. s. [zephyrus,
ZÉ'PHYRUS, zêf'fêr-ûs. } Lat.] The west wind; and, poetically, any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet. Shakspeare.

Zephyr you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about to sing. Peachment.

Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds, Eurus and Zephyr. Milton.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton.

ZEST, zêst. n. s.

1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.

2. A relish; a taste added.
Almighty vanity! to thee they owe Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe. Young.

To ZEST, zêst. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETE'RIK, zê-têr'ik. ⁶⁰⁹ adj. [from ζητέω.] Proceeding by inquiry.

ZÉ'ΥΓΜΑ, zûg'mâ. ¹² n. s. [from ζεύγω.] A figure in grammar when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, lust overcame shame, boldness fear, and madness reason.

ZO'CLE, zô'kl. n. s. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth. Dict.

ZO'DIACK, zô'dê-âk, or zô'jê-âk. n. s. [zodiacque, Fr. ζωδιακός, êκ τῶν ζώων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]

1. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shaksp.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel:

Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been
The stage's jewel. Ben Jonson.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiack and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being. Bentley.

Here in a shrine, that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.

By his side,
As in a glist'ring zodiack, hung the sword
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear. Milton.

ZONE, zône. n. s. [ζώνη; zona, Latin.]

1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a starry zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold,
And colours dipp'd in heaven. Milton.

An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist Dryd.
Thy statues, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer starry
The magic of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last. Granville.

Scaree could the goddess from her nymphs be known.

But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.

3. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the artick polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers. Anon.

True love is still the same, the torrid zones,

And those more frigid ones,

It must not know:

For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not

The thing we show:

For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:

Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less.

Suckling.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:

The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryd.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scaree the sun

Hath finish'd half his journey, and scaree begins
His other half in the great zone of heaven.

Milton.

ZOO'GRAPHER, zò-òg'grá-fúr. n. s. [ζωο and γράφω.] One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but in a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoographers called the prophet and praying locust. Brown.

ZOO'GRAPHY, zò-òg'grá-fè. n. s. [of ζωο and γράφω.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end, its principal final cause being the glory of its Maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimantal sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Glanville.

ZOO'LOGY, zò-òl'lò-jè. n. s. [of ζωω and λογω.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOO'PHYTE, zò-ò-fítè. n. s. [ζωοφυτον, of ζωω and φυτόν.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOO'PHORICK Column, zò-ò-fòr'ík. n. s. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal. Dict.

ZOO'PHORUS, zò-òf'ò-rûs. n. s. [ζωοφορός.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals. Dict.

ZOO'TOMIST, zò-òt'tò-míst. n. s. [of ζωοτομία.] A dissector of the bodies of brute beasts.

ZOO'TOMY, zò-òt'tò-mè. n. s. [ζωοτομία, of ζωον and τεμνω.] Dissection of the bodies of beasts.
