Find out how to engage with and contribute to Wikipedia, other open knowledge projects, and open licensing with Ally Crockford, the National Library of Scotland's Wikimedian in Residence.

Wikipedia is the most widely used reference work in the world, available in 285 languages. The English language Wikipedia alone averaged between 8 and 10 billion page views per month in 2012-2013. It is an incredibly useful resource but can always be improved.

Free training sessions are available at any time until March 2013 for anyone who would like to learn about Wikipedia, other Wikimedia projects, or how to contribute knowledge, images, or translations. You can also learn how to reuse any of the 17 million images and other free content. These training sessions can be tailored to your needs and interests.
