We have sincerely approved of the object of the meeting held on the 15th inst., by the respectable citizens of faubourg St Mary; but we may be permitted to doubt the propriety and efficiency of the means proposed by them to effect their object, in forming a port opposite that faubourg. Nowe are more anxious than we are that faubourg. Nowe are more anxious than we are that all parts indistriminately of the city should be improved; and none are less addicted to local prejudices or sectional feelings. or sectional feelings.

'And for the mooring of ships only, do we think that wharves are essential. Steam boats can as well be discharged and freighted by landing at a levee, as at are perfectly useless. If therefore a leves on an inclined plane were constructed where the river usually deposites its allavion and extends the batture, and conburg might be easily and effectively attained; and certainly in a better manner and at fees expence than that wharves; and annual appropriations for repairs could not be required. Besides such a leven could gradually be extended with the augmentation of the batters and with the augmentation of the battere; and of new once when those summinare over rendered usuless by an augmented batture. This subject should be seriously considered by those who are really favorable to the
