MENNED-SALEM-LINCOLN

Souvenir Album

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2011 with funding from

The Institute of Museum and Library Services through an Indiana State Library LSTA Grant

DAY 361 6 1119

....Souvenir Album

EDITED AND PUBLISHED BY

THE ILLINOIS WOMAN'S COLUMBIAN CLUB

OF MENARD COUNTY

Petersburgh, Illinois ...1893...

COPYRIGHT, 1888
BY
THE ILLINOIS WOMAN'S COLUMBIAN CLUBOF MEXARD COUNTY

PRINTED AND BOUND BY THE
PANTAGRAPH PRINTING & STATIONERY COMPANY
BLOOMINGTON, ILL

ARRANGED WITH SPECIMENS FROM NEW SALEM BY G. W. L. MEEKER, PETERSBURGH, ILL.

PIERRE MENARD

ve@nu

T a session of the legislature in 1838-39, Menard County was struck off from Sangamon County, and named in honor of "Colonel Menard," a Frenchman, who settled in Kaskaskia in 1790. MENARD was so popular in his day with the people of Illinois, that when the convention framed the constitution of the State, a clause was included in the schedule to the constitution, providing that "any citizen of the United States who had resided in the State two years, might be eligible to the office of lieutenant governor." This was done in order that COLONEL MENARD, who had been naturalized a year or two at the time, might be made lieutenant governor under Shadbach Boxd, first governor of Illinois after its formation into a state, in 1818.

Menard, though possessing but a limited education, was a man of quick perception and almost unerring judgment. He was candid and honest, full of energy and industry, and these qualities soon marked him as a leader among the scattered population of his adopted home. He died in 1844, in Tazewell County, at the good old age of seventy-seven. Such was the man for whom the county was named.

MENARD COUNTY

HE entire area of Menard county within the limits of its given boundary is one hundred and ninety-eight thousand six bundred and seventy-five acres. The Sangamon river flows through the county from south to north, dividing it into almost equal parts. Salt Creek on the northeast boundary flows into the Sangamon: a number of small streams flowing into these afford an abundance of pure, fresh water for every purpose. The greater portion of the county in its natural state is prairie. Beautiful groves of timber are interspersed over the entire county. Along either side of the Sangamon river are heavy hodies of timber comprising almost every kind that grows in Central Illinois.

The soil is adapted to agricultural pursuits to a remarkable degree. The county is well supplied with various kinds of live stock. "Little Menard" has as good a display of cattle and horses as any other in the State.

Inexhaustible deposits of bituminous coal of the best quality underlies the entire county, and at such a depth that it can be mined at a triling cost. Along the banks of the Sangamon river are found deposits of fine sand in quantities. Stone is not splentified as might be desired, yet there are some quarries, especially one on Rock Creek, where a large field is underlaid with a fine strata of line-stone; it is also found at New Salem and at Petersburg. There is no county in the State that possesses finer natural advantages for all purposes than "Little Memand."

The county is intersected by two railroads, viz: the Chicago & Alton, and the Jacksonville Southeastern, so the facilities for transportation of its products to market are ample.

It will be seen that the county contains within her borders everything that is calculated to make a great prosperous, and wealthy people. Her educational facilities are equal, if not superior, to any other in the State. The status of Menard will compare favorably with any other in the State. Her churches are numerous and of almost all denominations; religious and charitable associations are to be found within her borders.

THE FIRST SETTLERS

OHN CLARY, who came with his family and settled in a grove near Tallula. April, 1819, was the first settler in the county of Menard. This grove is known far and near as "Clary's Grove."

The same year the Arbstrong, Greeks, and Spears settled here also. The Boyers, Meadows, and McNadds settled at "Sugar Grove". The same year (1919), the Blanes came to Tribi Grove." Jesse Arbsstrong, Wa. Sampson, and Royal Potter settled on "Sandridge." in the fall of the Computer of

Most of these pioneers built what is known as a 'three-faced camp,' that is they erected three valls, about xis or seven feet high, of logs, leaving one entire side open. Poles were laid across a distance of three feet apart, and on these a roo for clapboards was laid and these were held down by weight poles. No floors were laid in these camps nor were there windows or chimneys. Just in front of the open sides were built large log heaps, which gave warmth and light and were used for cooking purposes all the year around. It was shout the year 1e35 that we have the first account of glass windows. Hamy Room's bringing the first glass from St. Louis. All cabins were built with a log left out on one side with oiled paper tacked over the opening to admit the light.

At this early day cotton and cloth of all kinds were hard to get; so after the first year or two they began to sew hemp and flax. The women spun and wove this into cloth, but they had to resort to nature for assistance. Vast fields of wild nettles grew here, and this produces a most excellent lint. The year after James Meadows settled, his wife spun and wove thirty vards of this nettlectoth.

During the year 1822 the first school house was built in Sugar Grove by BOYER, MEADOWS, and McNabs. It was constructed of split logs, sixteen feet square, covered with hewn boards held in place by weight poles. The floor was made of puncheons, the seats a half of a log ten or twelve feet long, with four pins set in for legs. The window was a log left out along one side. The books used were a New Testament for a reader and Smiley's arithmetic. James McNabs taught this school. A school was taught about the same time by Robert Arkstrong in Clarry's Grove.

The first church in the county was Clary's Grove Baptist church, organized on Christmas day, 1824. The first church built was a Methodist church, on the farm of Harny Riggis. in 1825. It was a near, hewn-log building, twenty-two by thirty-six feet, with glass windows. Rev. John Barny, the great a posdle of Cumbertand Presbyterianism in Menard county, was the first minister, and he labored for his congregation for years. May 20, 1822. Rev. J. G. Berriers organized the North Sangamon church of Indian Point.

The first mill of which he have any record, was a horse mill, built by DAVID ONSTOTT as early as 1820, near the mouth of Salt Creek. The oldest cemetery was at Sugar Grove. The first representative to the General Assembly from the new county of Menard, was John BENNETT. The first brick houses in the county were built by GEO, SPEARS and ROBERT CONOURL in 1828, and they stand to-day in a state of end preservation.

From 1846 we look back to 1849, a period of almost a century, and are struck by the great changes wrought in this flourishing region. In 1849 the first Angle-Saxon plitched his tent in a grove of timber in this portion of the county when naught met his eye but one vast, gloomy wilderness, infested by wild beasts and savages. Others folcked to the grove with determined courage and area to contest their rights, and succeeded in gaining a foothold that has developed into the state of civilization we find around us today. These people knew nothing of rallicads, steam threshers or sulky plows: these inventions never entered into their wildest dreams. The old Cary, or sod plow, drawn by two or three yoke of ozen, was their mode of breaking the sod for cellivation. Their nearest postodine was Springfield, and a letter from their old homes cost twenty five cents and sometimes lay in the office for months before the requisite quarter could be obtained, as "Uncle Sam' required his little fees in advance.

Many were the hardships and trials the early settlers underwent.

--prairie fires, wolves, the deep snows, the sudden changes, and a hundred trials met them of which the present generation knows nothing.

PETERSBURGH **

ETERSBURGH. the metropolis of Menard county. is beautifully situated on the left bank of the Sangamon river. Peter Lukins and George Warburton were the original owners of a bundred and sixty acres of land on which Petersburg now stands. They laid out the town about the year 1832, and quietly sat down and waited for the place to grow, but finally becoming discouraged they sold out to Heisenkini Kinso and Joint TavLoin. These gentlemen employed Armaham Lincolay, then deputy surveyor of Sangamon county, to re-survey and plat it, which was admitted to record February 22.1838. The town was named for Petris Liveni, the original owner of the land. The accident which led to the name of Petersbarg instead of Georgetown occurred in this way, both vishing to be immortalized in history, became involved in a dispute as to whether it should be called Petersbargh or Georgetown. They finally agreed to play a game o'fold selegic or seven up, then the popular game. Liveniss won the game and, rising from the nail leg on which he sat, called out "Petersbarch".

The first shanty on the present sight of Petersburgh was erected by ELBAH ESTEP in 1926. He also owned a gear mill run by horse power used for sawing. The first families to locate were those of LUKINS and DAVIDSON. The first grist mill on the town site was built by Dorrell on the ground where the Charter Oak mills now stand. The first store was opened in 1828 by John Taylor. Taylor afterwards sold this store to John Bennett. A postoffice was established in the same year with Janes Taylor as postmaster.

The first lawyer was David M. Rutledge, brother to Miss Anna Rutledge, the fiance of Abraham Lincolm. In 1938, Nathan Dressser was the first circuit and county clerk: A. D. Wright, probate indee: Jacob Laning, treasurer: and James Goldsby, sheriff.

The first located physician was Dr. R. E. Bennert. The first taverence where the present curins, afterwards by Dr. R. E. Bennert. who built a more commodition one, and the old sign that swung in the wind with "lan" upon its face welcomed many a weary traveler to its lossitable board. The ruins still remain as a landmark of days gone by.

HARDER BALE erected a carding machine at New Salem in 1890. He moved it to Petersburg in 1840. This mill was run by borse power but was replaced by an engine in 1852. The enterprising owner enlarged bis establishment, and introduced a spinning jack of a hundred and sixty-eight spindles in four looms, and manufactured as fine cloth and blankets as any found in the market. In 1865 the entire factory was destroyed by fire. Nothing damnted HARDER BALE: being the owner of a large brick pork packing establishment, he at once placed all necessary machinery in it and was soon running two hundred and forty spindles, cards, fulling mill and five looms. The fire destroyer soon hald this in ashes. Again the energetic man rebuilt and had another fine mill in operation, but that, too, met the same fate. In 1878, HARDES BALE, in company with his son, turned his attention to the manufacture of drain tile, an industry that is carried on quite extensively to the urcessar day.

The first newspaper was established in the fall of 1854, named the "Petersburgh Express." The first bank was established by Brahm and Greene in 1866.

There are four cemeteries,—first, the old burying-ground donated to Petersburgh by John Taylor, Rose Hill, Oakland, and Calvary (Catholic) cemeteries.

Petersburgh of today is a beautiful city of three thousand, inhabitants, noted for its picturesque scenery of river and hills. The Sangamon river on the east winds its way from south to north having located on its banks two flouring mills, an elevator, bed-spring factory, tile factory, and water works. The city is well lighted by electric lights of the latest improved systems. The main or business part of the city is in the valley. The public square is a well shaded spot ext with grass, in the center of which stands the old, moss-covered Menard County court house, erected in 1943. Within its venerable walls the eloquence of Dorcials, Incorol, Yatts, Haguis, Barkin, Hainbox, and Figures on have often thrilled the hearers and made the wellon ring with thunders of applause. Her citizens are justly proud of her stores, banks, and general business prosperity. Her hills are covered with many handsome residences, and her schools compare favorably with any of her sister cities.

Petersburgh has two railroads, the Chicago & Alton and the Jacksonville Southeastern.

City of Petersburgh

Sangamon River
EAST OF THE CITY OF PETERSBURGH

Eastep House
FIRST HOUSE BUILT IN PETERSBURGH

Court House of Menard County

Edmund's Springs

THE DISCOVERY OF COAL

LijaH TAYLOR familiarly known as "Uncle Lije," was among the first to arrive in Petersburgh. He bore the good will of all who lenew him: he was scientific and well read, always studying nature, and in his rambles up and down the river was often heard to remark that "there was a wealth of coal sanderlying Mentard county." In 1956 he began sinking the first coal sanderlying Mentard county, "In 1956 he began sinking the first coal sanderlying Mentard county," In 1956 he began sinking the first coal should be time and money wasted, and tried to dissuade him but could not. At the depth of sixty five feet, he struck a vein of coal three feet thick. He never lived to realize the value of his discovery. The State geologist says: "The strata of coal in this part of Illinois will make twenty-five feet in thickness." For safety we will estimate it at six feet, which will give up one bandred and twenty million bushels to each square mile, an inexhaustible source of wealth. Menard has twelve coal shatts in operation today.

WILLIAM SPROUSE

N the pioneer days of Menard county the first settlers were, with few exceptions, of limited means, and when they opened up their farms they underwent many hardships. Farming implements were scarce: even the "wooden mold board," or Cary plow, was considered a luxury. Many farmers relate how they planted their first two acres of corn by digging up the soil with a common mattock. The great trouble was to get an implement that would scour and turn Illinois black alluvial soil. In 1948, WILLIAM SPHOUSE came to Peterburgh. He was a blacksmith by trade, and it was this man that invented the first diamond iron mold board plow that proved to turn the virgin soil better than anything ever invented. Many improvements have been added, but the plow of today still holds the SPHOUSE invention.

ABORIGINAL INHABITANTS

X the highest bluffs along the Sangamon river are seen at the present time, remains of the work of the strange people called Mound Builders. Many relies have been picked up and some of the mounds have been opened, but nothing of value was found. There is one circle of mounds near the mouth of Salt Creck, located on one of the highest bluffs, that shows of a long used camp.

as the mussel shells thrown over the edge of the steep bank of the river are several feet deep mixed with earth and broken pottery, and hones of many kinds of wild animals. Further down the river are many graves in which specimens of pottery are found. When the first settlements were made in the limits of this county, the Kickapoo Indians had a village at Indian Point, and the Pottawatomies on the bluffs along the Sangamon river, north of Petersburgh. They all left with the exception of Shambolee and Shick-Shack with a few of their relatives. Shick-Shack was a very old Indian and wandered up and down the river, clinging to this old hunting ground, wishing to die on the old camp ground, where he was attached to every lake and grove that furnished meat and sustenance for his famity. It is related that the old man was on his knees scraping a deer skin when a white man, seeing him, wilfully shot him. Wishing to hide his crime, he cut a hole in the ice of the lake near him, and gave him a watery grave. The lake to this day is called 'Indian Lake.'

Collected by E. S. Hamilton, of Petersburgh

Along the Sangamon

THOMAS L. HARRIS

IECOND only to ABRAHAM LINCOLN, the most conspicuous man in the history of Menard county was Thomas Lang-HELL HARRIS. He was born in Norwich, Connecticut, October 29, 1916. His early life was spent in a struggle to obtain an education. He attended the day school in his native town, and when he had acquired sufficient education, be taught school in order to procure funds to take him through college. After many struggles he was graduated from college. After many struggles he was graduated from Washington College, at Hartford, in his native state. He left his Connecticut home in 1941 for Virginia, where he stayed long enough to receive his license to practice law. He then turned westward travelling part of the way on foot. He arrived at Springfield, Illinois, in June of 1842, with only three dollars in his pocket. His Virginia license is dated March 8, 1842, and his Illinois license September 5, 1842.

He made the acquaintance of the late SAMUEL H. TREAT STEPHEN
A. DOUGLAS, WM. WATERS, and other leading men of Springfield:
these men advised him to go to some small town and "grow up with the country." Some time in December of that year. Mr. HARRIS took their advice and footed it to the little village of Petersburgh, and immediately determined to make it his future home. HARRIS brought with him from the East an indomitable will and talents that rendered him a consplcuous character wherever he was thrown among men. He bad met in Springfield during his brief stay, two men who quickly discovered the latent talents of the young man, and they encouraged him to push himself forward in this growing State of Illinois. These two men (TREAT and DOUGLAS) were judges at the time and their names are attached to the Illinois license to practice law, which HALEBS held. They were frast friends of the young attorray, and so remained during his life. In Peterburgth, for a while, he had a hard struggle to live. It is said that one of the accomplishments which he had acquired in his Connecticut home was the handy use of the scythe and, clients being scarce, he hive to a Mr. Tayton to mow a meadow that adjoined the town. The twenty odd acres he converted into hay for the sum of five dollars. He did considerable work of this kind and gained a reputation among the farmers for his skill.

Mr. HARRIS soon developed a talent for public speaking and as he was an uncompromising democrat, he met many of the whig champions on the stump. HARRIS was a ready debater and a close student of passing events. Perhaps no man in Illinois had a better use of language than he, and his girl of sarcasm was "as keen as a Damascus blade." After his admission to the bar he climbed rapidly to the position occupied by the first attorneys of the State. As an advocate and pleader he showed himself a peer of any man at the bar. Scarcely had he attained a secure footing in his profession when he was called to other fields. The misunderstanding between Mexico and the United States made it necessary to resort to arms to settle the differences between the two governments. At the first call to the soldier. He started to the scene of war as captain of a company recruited from his friends and neighbors in Menard. In the "tented field" be demonstrated that he was a leader of men and that his breast knew no fear. As acting colonel of his regiment at the battle of Cerro Gordo. "For bravery on the field of battle." he gained the applicance of the nation and was afterwards presented by the State of Illinois with a magnificent sword, which is treasured by his family as a precious heirloom. Harris returned from the arid fields of Mexico broken in health and prepared to resume the practice of law. In his absence he was elected to the senate. In this capacity he did not serve.

In December of 1847 he was married to Many I. Direckson, of Maryland, and brought his bride to Petersburgh, where they were welcomed by the entire populace. In 1846 HARIES first entered upon a political career that made him famons alike at home and in the nation. In 1848 he was nominated by his party to a seat in the Thirty-Fourth Congress of the United States. His opponent was STEPHEN T. LOGAN. whom he defeated. In 1850 he was again nominated but was defeated by RICHARIO YATES. In 1852, very unjustly, JOHN CAL-HOUS was made the democratic nominee, yet YATES beat him the election. In 1854. HARIES was again put up and was again elected.

defeating RICHARD YATES. In 1856 he defeated Colonel JOHN WIL-LIAMS, of Springfield. In 1858 he defeated Colonel J. H. MATHEREY, of Springfield, the latter election occurring only a few days before his death, November 24, 1858.

MAJOR HARRIS, as he was familiarly called by his friends in Illinois, was one of the most conspicuous characters in the Congress of the United States during the tumultons decade preceding the Civil War, and his voice was often raised in defense of democratic principles enunciated by the leader of his party. STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS. He was preeminently the leader on the democratic side of the House, and had few equals and no superiors in the debates of that body. As an evidence of the regard in which he was held by his constituents he was re-elected but a few days before his death, although his health was so precarious he was unable to leave his bed during the entire

In the death of MAJOH HARUIS, Illinois sustained the loss of one of her most brilliant men, who, had he lived, would have made his mark in a higher sphere. He was eloquent, loyal, of strong conviction, bold, earnest in the advocacy of what he deemed right, of rigid personal integrity, and sound morals. He was that "noblest work of God, an honest man." Menard has ever loved to honor the name of Throaxa L. Haruis, who by sheer energy and ability climbed from poverty and obscurity to the first position within her borders. He lies buried in a private cemetery near the family residence. His deeds are cherished by the surviving friends of his day, and his reputation a priceless heritage left to his family is a spotless name among men.

Costumes and Relics of New Salem

THE LEGEND OF INDIAN LAKE

MAGGIE S MILLER CHEANEY

NDER the glow of the warm, Western sky Lies beautiful, tale-haunted Iodian Lake: Chafing the shore with a soft, restless sigh. As though it were weary of wondering why The dead Past would never awake.

11.

Blue hills in the distance, broad fields round

Tis the heart of the garden of fair fillinois: Once the home of the great Pottawatomie tribe When care was a jest and existence a joy.

III

Fleet-footed and fearless was each dusky brave That roamed th' wide prairies with tireless bow, But the fleetest of foot, the most fearless and fair. Was Shickshack, the Pride of th' Sangamo.

Not only his beauty and grave Indian grace. And his skill,—all fulfilling th' promise of youth,— Won his fame as a chieftain th' whole valley thro', But all manhood's hest weapon,—th' spirit of truth,

The pioneers knew him,—his word was a law From the lake to the mouth of the swift Sangamo: His people's protector,—the ploneer's friend,— Stanch and true as the arrows that sued from his bow.

VI

And when, in the councils near fair Indian Lake. The paleface invasion roused anger and fear. His voice was for mercy; so well did he carn The undying remembrance of each pioneer. VII.

But ah, let us leave, as a story untold.

The years that are marked by the saddened retreat

The years that are marked by the saddened retreat
Of the children of Nature; till ploughshare and spade
Furrows deep ev'ry trace of the moccasined feet.

VIII

The valley soon changed,—for the log cahins rose
Where the Indians picturesque wigwams had stood;
The pioneer hoarded the gold of the grain.
And his axe sounded early and late thre' the wood.

TX

The farm land that stretched to the brink of the lake, Where many a bright council fire had burned. Was called the Day farm; and as fertile indeed As ever the edge of a nlow overturned.

X.

And thus runs the legend: Sad, sad is the morn.—
The cold, winter morning,—when good Richard Day
Strides forth from his cabin with musket in hand,
In search of the game that is man's lawful prey.

XI.

The settlement sleeps 'neath a blanket of white; All the landscape looks desolate, dreary and cold, Save the bare, wind-hlowo lake where the glittering ice Is like sunshine congealed in some great, carthen mold.

IIX

On the shore of the lake, doth a wanderer stand:—
An Indian, in costume and stature and mien;
Tail, sad-eyed and silent, twould seem that his heart
Was girt with the chill of the desolute seems

XIII.

There, lost io his dreams of the days that were gone.

'Ere his trihe had been banished by avarice and hate.
He wists not the weapon full aimed at his breast

'Till he feels in his heart the cold iron of Fate.

XIV

But the very first glimpse of the still, uptured face Fills the soul of the settler with terror and woe: Lo! no "rayabond redskin" lies dead at his feet But Shickshack, the Pride of the Sangayon

XV

'Tis a crime, not the law of the nation alone But the hearts of the settlers, will quickly chastise Should he fail to conceal it; so desperate indeed is his plight, and no hope but the lake he espies.

XVI.

With guilt on his hands, (the regret in his heart,) He lifts the still form from the snow-covered shore, Breaks the glistening ice that imprisons the lake,— And the chieftain is lost to the world evernore.

XVII.

Strange, but true, tho' no mortal had witnessed the deed,—
The death, and the burial in fair Indian Lake,—

The death, and the burial in fair Iodian Lake,—
Fortune frowned evermore on good Richard Day,
And prosperity seemed to itself wings to take.

xvIII.

Still the farm hears his name as in days long ago.

And the log cabin stands where he built his first home;
But its master, like Shickshack,—so strange is the

Was forced from the valley forever to roam.

viv

This, then, is the legend of Indian Lake; Where the sweetest hirds sing and the sofest winds blow

Where, lulled by the waters he loved so well.

And awaiting the trump that all things shall foreteil,

Siceps Shickshack, the Pride of the Sangamo.

NEW SALEM

ODAY there is scarcely a vestige left of this once flourishing little rilgage—the first laid out in the county of Menard, and, hefore the birth of Petersburgh, the principal trading point in the county. In 1898 CAMP-RON and RUTLEOGE bill a mill on the Sangamon River and planted a cabin on the bilds: in a short time others came with their families and, after some two or three log cabins had been exceeded decided to lay out a town. CAMERON was given the privilege of naming the future city, and called it New Salem after his native town in Massachusetts. This town was surveyed by RETHEN HARRISON, and, although there was no boom. Salem for a time prospered. SAMER, HILL and JOHN MCNAMAR built a house and opened the first store in the new town. A postofice was established at Salem and JOHN MCNAMAR installed as postmaster, to be succeeded by ABRAHAM LINCOLN, who beld the office until his removal to Springfield.

Dr. JOHN ALLEN was the first practicing physician, and it was through his influence that the first Sunday school and temperance society were formed in the county. The first tavern was opened by one JOHN KEIS.

Salem at this time (1931) was the central point where the wild apirts of the day gathered to get their corn ground at the mill, and to exchange what produce they had for sugar, coffee, calico, and such other necessities and conforts as their primitive homes required reon Saturdays they would meet, run horses, engage in feats of strength, and try their skill with the rifts with which weapon many were experts.

ROWAY and JAMES HEISDON had opened a store in Salem, and becoming tired sold out to LINCOLA' & BERRY in the fall of 1822. LINCOLA' & BERRY had been established in business but a short time when RECENT RAPFORD, proprietor of another Salem grocery, who had incurred the displeasures of the Clary's Grove boys, decided suddenly to retire from business. RAPFORD, bearing the boys might wist his store at night, invalid in his windows, and take possession of his both, and take possession of this back, and fearing his home might share the fact of his windows, and take possession of his stock and fearing his home excitation of the number dollars. Obexas employed Lincoln to make an airwentory of the goods. This young merchant offered GREENE and advance of two hundred and fifty dollars on his westment. GREENE MINIOR OF LINCOLN BE REMIEW. By the spring of INSI SERVERY BY HOUSE AND ADDITIONAL OF LINCOLN BE REMIEW. By the spring of INSI SERVERY BY LINCOLN WAS WELLING HE WAS ADDITIONAL OF THE ADDITIONAL OF T

With the laying out of Petersburgh, the glory of Salem began to wane, and the location of the county seat at that place sealed its doom. Today there is scarcely a trace of Salem and its famous mill left. Some of its houses were moved to Petersburgh, while others were left to monlder away, and their cellars left to fill with debris. In the summer, grass and wild flowers do their best to hide the desolation from the eyes of the pilgrim. This locality will in time become almost as historic as Monnt Vernon. Salem is as sacred to the lover of human liberty as Mount Vernon in all its historic glory. Many a citizen seeks the spot where ABRAHAM LINCOLN spent the days of his early manhood, where he studied law, wrestled, romped, and sported with the young men of his age, and where those principles were imbibed which in after years made him the idol of a great mass of the American people, and wrote his name in tablets more enduring than granite. Here it may be said he made his start in this life, and the spot is endeared to the people of this country as the early home of the martyred president. This is the true cradle of the famous Illinoisan.

The Old Mill at New Salem

YHOM THE PAINTING BY MRS. BESSETT.

IMMORTELLE

Below the town the river flows, And on its breast forever. The stars by night, the sun by day, Their mystic forms discover.

And on its brink the rustic mili To snow y flakes of flour.

Creaked on from hour to hour, While stony hands changed golden grain

Above the mill pond, glant trees Their lofty beads were swinging: Among the leaves the unseen birds Their happy songs were singing-

A youth who mused upon the scene, Just entering life's great portal, Dreamed not that in the coming years His name would grow immortal.

Till mill and wood, and winding stream Reflect alike the glory, The gathered splendor of his name, And live in art and story.

Lift up thy beads, O stately trees?

Flow on, O shining river? Thy fame shall last with Lincoln's name

Above the Pam at New Salem

The Oak and the Elm at New Salem

we beautiful trees so grand and majestic, the the the World and the Soult heep stand for to falle the North and the Soult heep stand for to for the source shorm away from each thence, thence, they are bocked in a friendly embrace.

On the oak a fond hand has carred Lincoln's feature. His face turned toward the awest, sunny South, And I almost fancy I heard the words of forgivenes

* ABRAHAM LINCOLN *

HE pen of the historian has never correctly recorded the most interesting chapter in the life of LINCOLN—the story of his struggles in the now historic village of New Salem, when he met the people who had more influence on his future life tima any of the friends of his later days. It reads more like romance than reality. LINCOLN entered this little hamlet in pioneer Illinois, a youth possessed of little save a fine constitution and physique that marked him as one of the types of rough back woodsmen, found scattered through the wilderness of virgin forests and wide prairies of those days. One day, in the year of 1931, there strode into the store of HILL & MCNAMAR a tall, lank, powerful, stoop-shouldered young man who asked for a drink of water. It was Lincoln. He had come to Salem to meet Denton OFFETT. for whom he had made one trip down the river to New Orleans with a flat boat, loaded with salted pork and a number of live hogs. OFFETT purchased a stock of goods and brought it up the river to Beardstown, then removed it to Salem by wagon, and opened it in the building which OFFETT had rented for a store, and Lincoln was duly installed as clerik. Mr. OFFETT's business soon increased to such an extent that he had to engage another clerk, so he employed W. G. GREENE for this position, and it was here that Lincoln and GREENE formed a friendshib that lasted for life.

In the fall of 1831, Lincoln was installed as postmaster. In this capacity he met the Clary's Grove boys, who lived southwest of Salem.

They were a rough, kind-hearted lot of settlers, always ready for a wrestle, foot race, or fight; and a new comer had to stand his ground with his fists on be kicked and cuffed by these: "sooners," and LINCOLN. after a physical demonstration that he was the superior of their picked champion, was taken in by them and ever after was considered their fast friend.

In 1839, LUNCOLN entered as private in the Black Hawk war and remained until the total defeat of Black Hawk. He then returned to Salem, and right here we want to put a matter correctly before our readers. Mentor Graham had come to Salem previous to Lincoln. and opened a school where he taught a few of the children of the town and surrounding country. GRAHAM was a very learned man for his day, a typical pedagogue of the border. During the long wait for OFFETT's goods to arrive, there sprang up between the two a lasting friendship. Graham was an enthusiast in his calling and took a great interest in anyone who showed a disposition to gather knowledge. He found Lincoln an apt scholar and strove in every way to instill in him his own ideas of education. LINCOLN became much interested in arithmetic, and to the great delight of his teacher he was soon able to recite the tables and to "do sums" in vulgar fractions as well as the most advanced scholar of his school. The school was located on the farm of Thomas Watkins near the town, and Mr. Watkins, (son of the owner of the land.) a scholar of the school days, says that on Friday afternoons Lincoln used to come in to attend the spelling match which always wound up the week's exercises of the country school. Among Graham's scholars, and the brightest student, was ANN RUTLEDGE. Mr. GRAHAM had directed her to procure a grammar. Her father sent to St. Louis and in four weeks time the coveted book arrived and she plunged into the intricacies of nouns, verbs, etc.

After LINCOLN had thoroughly mastered the arithmetic, while lounging on the counter of OFPET'S store or reclining in the shade of a tree at the door, ORAHAM insisted that he should take up the grammar. He had no book and at the suggestion of his teacher he borrowed Miss RUTLEDGE's after school hours. As in other pursuits of learning, LINCOLN progressed rapidly and soon advanced as far as Miss RUTLEDGE. It was then agreed that they should study together of evenings. It was here that LINCOLN fell in love with the attractive ANN RUTLEDGE, and that the young clerk was captivated was not supprising. Many were their strolls along the margin of the river and over the ranged blaffs in the vicinity of Salem.

In 1835 disease laid its crnel hand on this young maiden. Early in her illness Lincoln called and she sang a hymn for which he always expressed a great preference. It began "Vain man thy fond pursuits forbear." Day by day she sank until hope was banished. During the later days of her illness (her brother relates) she kept inquiring for Lincoln so continually, at times demanding to see him, that the family at last sent for him. On his arrival at her bedside the door was closed and he was left alone with her. What was said, what vows were made during this sad interview were known only to him and the dying girl. In spite of the love of friends and the skill of physicians Death claimed her as his own. She was buried four miles north of Petersburgh in Concord graveyard. It is said that LINCOLN was plunged in despair. He wandered up and down the river and into the woods in deepest distress. Whenever Lincoln had the opportunity he would wander alone to the hillock raised above her grave and sit and ponder in sadness.

Near New Salem, a little northwest from the town, nestled in the hills, stood a log cabin. It was of the primitive construction of the

Pac-Simile of Political Letter and Postoffice Receipt

WRITTEN BY ABRAHAM LINCOLN TO JOHN BENNETT AND GEORGE SPEARS, OF MENARD COUNTY, ILLINOIS

I understand you are a villnow you would like to defeat Buckousen and the thus powers in the sein inclear or wheen or election god from cong , own con , showing their lain, the is I now know the rotation straits of that stillings can can the votice If as between Fremont and Buckan a worn enth you. B Covey with form of ent po m Rock

x 18.000, State Ch The alone 85.000 the she File 和 pee pioneer and varied little from the other cabins except that it contained two rooms and a loft.

Here BOWLIN GREEN lived, a great big Kenthockian, broad of shoulder, wide of girth, and Lincoln was brought to Mr. Green's affect the death of Ann RUTLEDGE and be being a whole-souled, joint sort of a fellow did much to direct Lincoln and bring him back to his true condition.

When LINCOLN first essayed the law he was very anxions to try his hand as attorney, and although he had not received the coveted license to practice in the circuit court, he was qualified to appear before a justice. BOWLIN GREEN took the world easy and cared little as to what transpired so that a side of bacon bung in the smokehouse. and the meal barrel was full. He was a great hand to spin yarns and he and Lincoln became fast friends. His honse was ever full of visitors, for BOWLIN GREEN would never allow a caller to leave until he had crossed his feet under the table. At the first election for Justice of the Peace, Green was elected and duly qualified. Thereupon he put on his spectacles and as much dignity as he could muster and prepared for business. It happened that shortly after his elevation to office, two of Green's neighbors, John Kelso and John Fergu-SON got into a dispute as to the ownership of a hog and decided to try the rights of property before Esquire Green. John Ferguson employed Lincoln as his attorney who was sure he could gain his suit before his friend GREEN. They waived a jury and tried the case before the court. In the esquire's cabin a court room was improvised and after swearing the witnesses who all testified in favor of FERGU-SON. Mr. LINCOLN delivered a strong address to "his honor the court." dwelling on the preponderance of the evidence, for Kelso had no witness to sustain his own straightforward story. Certain of a verdict in favor of his client, Lincolex and down. Bowlin Girlex pushed up his glasses and turning to Keleso said "John, you can take your hog." After the little knot of witnesses and loungers had gone Lincolex asked Green how he could render such a decision in the face of such strong testimony? "Because," said Green. "I know that hog belongs to Keleo, and that I am not only an esquire but a familie of the Peace, and could not decide for your client when I linew that he and his witnesses swore lies. This was Lincolar's first law-suit. In 182 Green died and Lincolar was called on to deliver the funeral oration by the Masonic lodge. After many attempts his voice broke down with emotion, he could not form words of fervent praise he sought to utter and found it impossible to speak. He finally strode away sobbling bitterly.

Notwithstanding his tall and ungainly form and readiness of humor there was hid in his breast a heart as tender and full of sympathy as a woman's—a heart touched by every tale of sorrow and full to overflowing with milk of human kindness.

Lincoln allowed none of his lesizare time to pass unimproved and in addition to his duties in business at Salem acquired a knowledge of surveying and as deputy surveyor of Sangamon county he surveyed a portion of Menard county. Among his last operations in this profession he laid out Petersburch, the county seat of Menard.

He borrowed law books of his friend JOHN T. STEWART of Springfield, his former comrade in the Black Hawk war, frequently walking there to return one and borrow another, and in his walks would read and recite from the book be carried onen in his hand.

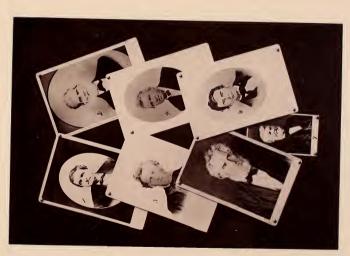

Lincoln owed more to Mentor Graham than to any one else for his advancement. Gifted with language, the lessons he learned under the intelage of Graham made it possible for him to climb to the bighest position accorded to man. He had learned much of the world and men. and had gained some true knowledge of himself. The discipline of those hard years of toil and pennry, so cheerfully and so manfully borne, was of more value to him, as time was to prove, than any heritage of wealth or ancestral eminence. In 1834, Lincolay was elected to legislature from this section of what was then Sangamon county, running upwards of two hundred votes ahead of his ticket. About the year 1857 or 1858 he removed to Springfield, and then entered upon the practice of law and, as the world has since learned, rose rapidly to eminence.

Abraham Lincoln and Legal Associates who have plead in the Menard County Court House

Menard County Citizens of Lincoln's Time

folia Bale
Shijaan Yastor,
A Memor Graham
1. Geo Spears
6. Harry Riggin
6. Samuel Hill
7. Wit G 1510 cm.

1. Relics of Ann Rutledge.
2. Lincoln's Store at Salem.
3. Lincoln's Boarding House at Salem.

View of Ann Rutledge's Grave
At OAKLAND CEMETERY, NEAR PETERSBURGH, ILLINOIS

Major Thos. L. Harris.
 Corporal C. Rourke
 Captain A. D. Wright.

Portraits of Officers of the Menard County Mexican Volunteers

Survivors of the Menard County Mexican Volunteers

MEXICAN WAR

1846, war was declared with Mexico. On May 25th, a call from President James K. Polk for volunteers was promptly responded to by the sons of "Little Menard." Hon. T. L. HARRIS as major, A. D. WEIGHT, captain; WM. C. CLARY, first lieutenant: SHELTON JOHNSTON, second lieutenant: and ROBERT SCOTT, third lieutenant. The whole number mustered in was eighty-three. This was Company F. Fourth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers. They returned in the fall of 1847, with only thirty-nine men. The following are the survivors at the present time: WM. STONE, TROMAS WATKINS, AMOS GUINSEY, WASHINGTON DENTON, GEORGE NANCE and AARON HOCUITON.

CIVIL WAR

HEN PRESIDENT LINCOLN issued his first call for troops on the lists of April. 1801, the soms of Menard answered that call promptly. On the 28th of April, Company E. Pourteenth Regiment, was mustered into service. Company E contained eighty men and was officered as follows:

Y A. K. JORNSTON. capitalis: J. M. EARKY, first lieuteenarty.

E. A. Norron, second lieutenant: A. J. Gillespie, third lieutenant. At every subsequent call a lille promjithes was shown, until Menard County furnished to the service one thousand and eighty-four men. Of this number, one hundred and eighty-four laid down their lives for the preservation of the Union. Menard stood faithfully by the Union, and freely gave her sons to the cause. No stain has marred her escutcheon, and her people are proud of the record made upon the battlefelds by her sons.

DR. B. F. STEPHENSON .

FOUNDER OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC

Benjami Franklin Stephenson was horn October 3, 1823, in Wayne County, Illinois. During his early childhood his father removed to Sangamon County, where the subject of our sketch grew to young manhood. His environment was that of other early Illinois settlers. His parents were poor, and his educational advantages limited. His mind, however, eagerly absorbed and assimilated the mental aliment with which it was brought in contact, whether in the primitive log schoolhouse, or in his father's small but well-thumbed library.

On reaching early manhood he decided to become a physician, studied medicine with his brother, Dr. WM. STEPHENSON, and Dr. CLARKE, at Mount Pleasant, Lowa, and attended medical lectures, first at Columbus. Ohio, afterward at Rush Medical College, Chicago. From the latter institution he received his diploma, dated February Dr. STEPHENSON'S father had removed from Sangamon to Menard County in the fall of 1844, and hither he came on graduation. locating at Petersburg. Here he soon acquired a large practice. His first partner was Dr. Carants, an able physician and an excellent man, in this pleasant little town Dr. Stephenson yeased severnel years. He was known to his fellow townsmen as a young man of very social disposition and cordial manner, always at the disposal of his friends, yet vitally interested in his profession, and never allowing social pleasures to interfere with the closest attention to professional duties, On the 30th of March 1855, the young physician was narried to

On the 30th of March, 1855, the young physician was married to Miss Barbara B. Moore, of Springfield, Ill., a native of Kentucky.

At the urgent solicitation of the trustees and faculty of the prospective Iowa Medical College, Dr. Stephenson accepted a professorship in that institution, and during the winters of 1955 and '56, '50 and '57, he lectured there on General. Special and Surgical Anatomy. The next year, on account of sickness in his family, he resigned this professorship.

Always intensely patriotic, in the hour of the Nation's peril Dr. STEPHENSON was one of the first to offer his services. He enlisted at Jacksonville. Ill., and was appointed surgeon of the Fonrteenth Illinois Infantry, volunteers, Colonel (afterward Major-General) John M. Palamer commanding the regiment. The regiment started for the scene of war on the 10th of June, 1961. Dr. STEPHENSON was soon promoted to the post of senior brigade surgeon. His term of enlistment expired May 25, 1864, and he then returned home and was mustered out.

Dr. Stephenson then located in Springfield. Ill., where he immediately entered into a very large practice.

In the course of his extensive practice, at about this time, many cases of destitute widows and orphans of soldiers whose lives had been freely offered on the sacred altarsof their beloved country, many cases, also, of disabled veterans struggling against odds to earn a livelihood, came under Dr. Syrphinson's notice. He brooded over these things with a passionate and constantly intensifying sense that great and inexcusable injustice was being done the soldier. The more he brooded the more firmly he became convinced that a specific for these evils must be devised.

At length, in January, 1906, he conceived the idea of a National Soldiers' Mutual Benefit Society, whose motto should be logalty, fracterity, charity, and whose glorions name should be the Grand Army of the Republic. It should be a secret society, with grips and passwords non-partisan and loyal. He consulted with his friends about his new idea. Some encouraged it, but the majority thought it visionary and impracticable. The Doctor was a good fellow, they thought but infantated with his enthusians.

Soon after his conception of the G. A. R. idea he wrote down the ritual, rules, and regulations for the organization of the order. He submitted these, and his plan of organization, to Governor Oclessey, who approved the work, but thought the plan of organization would not succeed. Or, SEPERINSON, however, determined to realize his idea. procured the assistance of certain of his friends, Captain Howe.
of Ohio, Colonel FLOOD, of Wisconsin, Captain J. N. HILL and Colonel Daniel Grass, of Illinois, and sent them out to organize posts.

Having been urgently requested by his friends, Dr. J. W. ROUTH and Captain M. F. KARAS, of Decatur, Ill., to visit that city with a view to organizing, B. F. Streptnesson, on the sixth day of April, 1800, the anniversary of the battle of Shiloh, in which battle he and nearly all the charter members of the post had taken an active part, established the first encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 1, of Decatur, District of Macon, Department of Illinois. The next post organized was at Springeled, Ill.

When Dr. Stephenson had succeeded in organizing forty posts in Illinois, he called a convention of all soldiers in good standing to meet him at Springfield on the 12th of July. 1886. At this convention was organized the Department of Illinois, with Major-General John M. PALMER as department commander. The convention homored B. F. STEPHENSON by appointing him provisional commander-in-chief. G. A. R.

With indefatigable zeal, with confident faith in the ultimate success and utility of his scheme for assuring recognition of and reward for the soldier, with prophetic predictions of the power and the beneficent achievement which the fature held for the superstructure of his foundation, the patriotic and philanthropic order of the G. A. R., Dr. Stephiesson's labored on. At his own expense, he sent organizers into different parts of Illinois and other states. Soon after the permanent organization of Illinois, Indiana was provisionally organized. Next came Ohio, then Wisconsin. Thus the work was vigorously pushed forward until, by the time the Indianapolis convention was called, the new order was fairly on the road to success.

The first national convention, called by Dr. STEPHENSON as provisional commander-in-clief, for the purpose of perfecting the organzation of the order, met at Indianapoils Ind. November 20, 1866. At this convention the ritual, rules and regulations originated by B. F. STEPHENSON, after some alterations, were adopted. Gen. S. A. HURL-BURT, of Illinois, was elected commander-in-chief, and B. F. STEPH-ENSON, adjutant-general, that office being then elective.

Surgeon H. W. Davis offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

WHEREAS. We, the members of the Grand Army of the Republicrecognize in Major B. F. STEPHENSON. of Springfield. Ill., the head and front of the organization, be it therefore

Booked. That for the energy, loyalty, and perseverance manifested in organizing the Grand Army of the Republic he is entitled to the gratitude of all loyal men, and that we, as soldiers, tender him our thanks, and pledge him our friendships at all times and under all circumstances

The Major B. F. Stephenson referred to in the resolution was identical with Dr. B. F. Stephenson, major being an honorary title conferred on him for distinguished services in the battle of Shiloh.

During his term as adjutant general Dr. STEPHENSON continued to push the interests of the order energetically. General HURLBURL "recognizing him as the head and front of the organization." interfered very little with his management and, practically, Dr. STEPHEN-SON was still the lever behind the scenes. By the close of his term of office he had nourished the order to the point of standing alone, and it was assuming gigantic proportions.

At about the time of his retirement from office in the G. A. R. his health, already impaired, began to decline rapidly. He was offiged to give up his practice, and removed with his family to Bock Creek, a rural district situated about seven miles south of Petershurgh, Menard County, Illinois, Here, on the 80th of Aurust, 1871, he died. On the 29th of August, 1882, Estill Post, No. 71, G. A. R., reinterred the remains of the founder of their order in Rose Hill Cemetery, Petersburgh, Ill., with appropriate ceremonies. There his ashes now rest.

Through the mountful breath of the cypress bough.

Comes a undertone of cheer:
The spirits of Love, and of Justice, avow:
"Lo, one of our own lies bere!

Laid low in the mold,

Let him skep!

The Lord of the skickle, old.

With him elected tryst did keep;
The first molecular tryst did keep;
The first molecular tryst did keep;

MARY H. STEPHENSON.

City of Athens.

* ATHENS *

THENS is one of the oldest towns in the county. It was surveyed and platted by James Stevenson in 1831, he being at that time county surveyor, for Rev. John Overstreet. The town is a flourishing one, the country around being finely adapted to agricultural pusuits. Orimeal Clark built the first cabin. The first merchant was Overstreet, who purchased the remnant of a stock of goods of Harry Riggly, at his farm residence, in 1832. At an early date a pottery was established by Charles Pierson. Dr. Arbon was the first physician. The first one to distribute the mail for "Uncle Sam" was Matthew Robers. The first school taught was by J. A. Mendal, in a log cabin. Today Athens is justly proud of its public school, a commodious building, with all the modern improvements. Athens has two of the finest coal shafts in the county, and like the rest of the county, the coal is almost inexhaustible.

Athens is situated on the Jacksonville & Southeastern railroad, about eight miles from Petersburgh. It supports one bank, several stores and churches. The moral status of Athens is not surpassed by any of her sister towns. Such is the Athens of Menard today, venerable for her age and for the important part she has played in affording conveniences to the early settlers of that portion of the county.

North Sangamon Church

View of Indian Point Cemetery

INDIAN POINT

NDIAN POINT is one of the oldest settlements in the county. A little east of where the North Sangamon church and school now stand was once an Indian village of the Kickapoos. Many Indians were living here when the first settlers filed their claims for the lands of this section.

are living there have never marred or defaced its hillside slopes by cutting away the majestic trees that have swaved in the winds for centuries. Every spot seems dear to all living in the vicinity, and to a stranger coming into their midst, they appear as a family circle.

Among the first to settle here were Robert White, WM, Short, HARRY RIGGIN, JAMES WILLIAMS, and the KINCAIDS. The citizens around Indian Point, recognizing the need of a higher education for their children than could be obtained at common schools, conceived the idea of having a school of a higher grade in their midst. To this end individual subscriptions were secured to the amount of $3000, and in 1858 the North Sangamon was erected. The huilding is of brick, two stories high, and in a grove of native trees. During the first year of its existence it received pupils from Jacksonville and other towns, and is today kept up to the standard. They have a heautiful enclosure of seven acres for a cemetery, which occupies a commanding position overlooking Indian Creek and the surrounding country. The first person buried in it was a Captain HATHAWAY. While he and friends were on their way from Springfield to some point north of the county they passed through Indian Point and stopped at the place where the cemetery now stands. While they were at dinner and admiring the lovely country around them. Captain Hathaway remarked. "When I die. boys. I want to be buried here," little thinking that only a few short hours would elapse ere he would be laid to rest on the very spot where he made this remark. On attempting to ford Salt Creek he was drowned, and his friends brought his body back. The kind and henevolent hands at Indian Point have marked his grave with a large houlder with his name engraved thereon.

Near the Academy is the North Sangamon church, a well-built edifice. This congregation was organized May 20, 1832, and has kept its doors open ever since.

Village of Tallula

TALLULA *

HE name of Tailola, signifying Trickling Water, is appropriately given because of a spring near its site. This little village is situated in the western part of the county on the Chicago and Alton railroad, about eight miles from Petersburgh, in the midst of a fine rolling prairie. It was laid out in 1675 by W. G. GREENE, J. G. GREENE, RICHARD YATES.

T. BAKER, W. G. SPEALS. The first house was erected by W.

SPEARS. A store was first opened in 185 by SPEARS and THEAPP.
Dr. FHARUS REUNIER was the first practicing physician in the precinct and Dr. Wilson the first in the village of Talbula. Dr. Wilson established a bank in 1877. Talbula has one coal shaft about two hundred feet deep, at which depth an excellent vein of coal is reached. The Cumberland Preshyterians erected the first church. Talbula was incorporated as a village in 1871. The first school was taught by Miss SARAH BROCKMAN in 1859. Today they have as fine a school as any village in the county, erected on three acres of land donated by W. G. GRERNE in 1868.

The Baptist church, a handsome brick edifice, was erected in 1871.
This is the original Clary's Grove church, organized in a schoolhouse in 1824. Greenwood cemetery is carefully laid out and well kept. It is a beautiful place for the silent sleepers.

Near the village stands the ruin of the first log cabin built in the county of Menard by James White, in the fall of 1819.

There have been, with two exceptions, no saloons in Tallula, which speaks well for its morals. Tallula of today is a bright, busy and progressive village, a home of wealth and refinement.

Village of Greenview

GREENVIEW

ITUATED on the Chicago & Alton railroad, in the midst of a very fertile and productive region, is the city of Greenview, eight miles northeast of Petersburgh. In 1848, according to the survey of WM. ENGLE. It was laid out on the land of CHARLES L. MONTGOMERY, and named in honor of W. G. GREENE, of Talhula. The first dwelling erected was by ROBERT WGREYNOLDS. Who also opened a store about the same time. EMANUEL MYER opened another about the same date. The physicians who first hung out shingles were Drs. DAVIS and CALLAWAY. JACOB PROPST was the first to personate "Vulcan" in this village. John Wilkinson built the first hotel.

The Methodist Episcopal church was organized in Greenview in the fall of 1858. This church was originally formed at Newmatch but, upon the laying out of the willage of Greenview, was removed, or rather reorganized within the corporation. There was no school tanght in the village until the completion of the fine brick building erected in 1870. At the present date they have added crosses for higher studies. A strange feature in the history of Greenview is that it has no cemetery, its dead being carried to Petersburch or additioning cemeteries.

Greenview of today has many advantages. Its coal shaft, stores, bank, elevators, and the beautiful park in the center of its limits, its water-works and electric lights, are the oride of all who live within its borders.

Willage of Oakford

OAKFORD *

AKFORD is situated on the Jacksonville & Northeastern railroad. It was platted and surveyed by Jams-Kylla, county surveyor, for the proprietors, Willama OAKFORD and William Colson, in 1872. The first building on the town site was known as the "Railroad Store." Soon after the village was laid out, William Oakford built a store and opened a stock of groceries. In the summer of 1872, a general store was opened by Colyan Atterrerence. H. A. Bennett, of Petersburgh, opened a stock of drugs. Dr. J. D. William was the first practicing physician. Oakford has one church, Méthodist, and one school house.

Constructed by Miss Bale FROM SHELLS GATHERED AT NEW SALEM

