THE KLECTIONS. As we write, the telegraphic accounts of the elections which took place on the 5th are not complete or definite. But enough is known to indicate with considerable emphasis the general complexion of the results. In two States Penneylvania and Indiana, State officers and members of Congress were elected, and in another, Ohie, members of Congress only. The losses and gains of the respective parties in the two States first named would seem nearly equal, while in the State last mamed the Reputlicans appear to have swept the field completely taking away the few Democratic or Conserva. taking away the few Democratic or Conserva-tive members that formerly qualified its Con-gressional delegation. In addition to this gain hey claim one more member as positively elec-ted in Pennsylvania and they dispute the elected in Pennsylvania and they dispute the ele-tion of a Democratic member whose sant will be contested. We may assume, then, supposing that the telegraph reports correctly, that they make a gain of at least two in this State, inar-much as a contest for a seat in a Republican Congress has herotofore invariably resulted in the award of the seat to the Republican con-testant. On the other hand, the aggregate vote in Pennsylvania does not seem as favorable to the Republican party as in late preceding elacthe Republican party as in late preceding elec-tions. They arquestionably expected a large majority than ten thousand, or even liftee thousand, for Ceary, and their disappointmen in this respect is not calculated to inspire then ith a lively sense of gratitude towards For reconstructed formed so prominents part of the campaign ornstory on the Republican side. Hence there may be some room to hope that, though the Pennsylvania election has gone against the Democrate, it will not prove to be a decided victory for the arty.

In briefly resuming the news thus far received, it may be said that its effect is to show that in three large States, one a representative middle State, and the two others representative. Western States, the Kepublicans have not only held their ground but realized a not gain of Congressional strength.

Must we anticipate corresponding results in succeeding elections? Are we to infer that the Kepublicans will lose no ground anywhere, with prepondersting chances of increasing still with prepondersting chances of increasing attiepublicans will lose no ground anywhere, rith preponderating chances of increasing still, arrher their strength in Congress or in some-ther quarter! We fear that a clear and candid-riew of the situation will admit of no other conclusions. Pennsylvania was proverbial, but the property of the property of the conrener years, as the precursor in election cam-ages leading the way in which other States, oming afterwards in electoral order, were regards Ohio; but there is reason to look on the issue of the recent struggle of parties. Indiana as a revelation of political thought injer and tendency in the West. If in that are, then, the Kepublicans, though they may of have gained a brilliant victory, have not, the other hand, but any er hand, lost any ground, we are not ermitted to doubt, with the present lights be re us, that there is a strong probability that he remaining. Western States which vote it. November, a little more than three weeks hence, will at least continue to be Republican in so far as they have already been so. These t maining States are Michigan, Illinois, Wis-consin, Iowa, Minnosota, Kansas, Nevada; and Missouri, Essistantiaed through the disfranchiz-ing effect of a partism Constitution, may be added to the list. The local Governments of all these are Republican, and also a large ma-youty of the aggregate of their representation in both Houses of Congress.
