ADVANCE. - In running westerly or the 320-foot level, and passing through good quartz, carrying sulphurets, strong body of water is encountered which necessitates working the pump to its full capacity, and, also, hoisting by tobs, to keep the mine free for working. We learn that a larger pump will be intraduced forthwith for the more economical working in the shaft and levels. This heavy water flow, and the favorable character of the ledge angures well for the early future of the mine.
