§ 1591. Fraudulent Transfer Suits Instituted before Four Months.—Suits to set aside fraudulent transfers instituted more than four months preceding the bankruptcy may not be enjoined, nor may the property be ordered turned over to the trustee in bankruptcy.³⁹

Similarly, fraudulent transfer suits against the bankrupt as transferee, whether instituted before or within the four months, are not superseded by bankruptcy subsequently occurring.

In re United Wireless Co., 27 A. B. R. 1, 192 Fed. 238 (D. C. N. J.) [wherein the court seemed to think it an essential point however, that the suit had been started before the four months period]: "The purpose of that suit is to set aside a certain conveyance of property made by the International Company to the American De Forrest Wireless Telegraph Company, and a conveyance of the same property made by the latter to the United Company, upon the ground that the first conveyance was without consideration and in fraud of the creditors of the International Company, and that the conveyance to the United Company [the bankrupt] was made without consideration and with knowledge on the part of said last named company of the want of consideration and fraud charged concerning the first conveyance. * * * More than four months thereafter the petition in bankruptcy was filed as aforesaid. The suit in the State court is one within its cognizance, and having first obtained such jurisdiction, it should be permitted to finally dispose of it, not only because of the spirit of comity that prevails among courts having concurrent jurisdiction, but also because of necessity, as otherwise the administration of justice would be seriously hampered, if not scandalized, unless by the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings the United States District Court obtained exclusive jurisdiction over the subject matter.

§ 1592. Fraudulent Transfer Suit within Four Months in Aid of Levy Made before Four Months, Not Abated.—And a suit in equity instituted within the four months' period to enforce a judgment lien created before the four months' period will not be superseded because of the creditor's seeking therein to set aside a fraudulent conveyance that interferes with the enforcement of his judgment lien, the lien itself being acquired before the four months and the fraudulent conveyance suit being simply an incident to the enforcement of the lien.⁴⁰

Obiter, In re Boner, 22 A. B. R. 151, 169 Fed. 727 (D. C. § 1596. Trustee's Intervention in State Court Proceedings Does Not Oust State Court.—The trustee in bankruptcy, by intervening in an action to enforce a specific lien upon an insolvent's assets, in a State Court, does not thereby oust the State Court of jurisdiction.⁴⁵

§ 1597. State Courts Administer Bankrupt Law and Trustee, Intervening, Not Confined to Rights Accorded by State Law.—The Bankrupt Act is equally binding on State and Federal Courts, and where the trustee has intervened in a State Court proceeding, he is not confined to the rights accorded by State law in the absence of bankruptcy but may urge rights and defenses given by the Bankrupt Act; it being simply as to the forum and not as to the rights that he is relegated to the State court.⁴⁶

Carling v. Seymour Lbr. Co., 8 A. B. R. 41, 113 Fed. 483 (C. C. A. will retain jurisdiction if it is the first to obtain custody of the property, there are three exceptions: First, where the possession of the State Court has itself created a lien by legal proceedings within four months of the bankruptcy, whilst the debtor was insolvent; second, where a receiver, assignee or trustee appointed by the State Court within four months of the bankruptcy, is in possession; third, where the possession is under State Insolvency proceedings that are superseded by the Bankrupt Act.

First exception: Where the possession of the state court has created a lien by legal proceedings within four months of the bankruptcy and while the debtor is insolvent, the State Court does not retain jurisdiction; but the property affected must, upon adjudication of bankruptcy, be surrendered to the bankruptcy court.⁴⁸

This is so for the reason that the lien thus created is itself null and void, and being created by the legal proceedings the legal proceedings themselves are null and void and fall to the ground. This exception, then, does no real violence to the principle that the court first obtaining jurisdiction of the res retains jurisdiction.

§ 1600. Same Subject Discussed, Ante, "Liens by Legal Proceedings Nullified by Bankruptcy."—The nature of § 67 "f" nullifying such liens, and the elements that must be in attendance in order that the lien be nullified, and the limitations of the rule, are fully expounded ante, under the subject of "Liens by Legal Proceedings Nullified by Bankruptcy;" as are also the general rules as to procedure in obtaining surrender of such property to the trustee.⁴⁹

Thus, if a creditor has attached property of an insolvent debtor and, within four months thereafter, a bankruptcy petition is filed by or against the debtor and the debtor is eventually adjudged bankrupt, the attachment proceedings, as already noted, are nullified, and the sheriff or constable may be required to surrender possession of the property; although, of course, nothing prevents the suit from continuing to its finish to a judgment in personam against the debtor, if the debtor himself does not stay it. But as to the property, the bankruptcy court seizes possession of it, and wholly supersedes the state court in its administration.⁵⁰

It is to be borne in mind, also, that the bankruptcy must have occurred within four months of the levying of the attachment or other creation of the legal lien, else the legal proceedings are not made null nor void;⁵¹ and the only thing the trustee can do in case the bankruptcy comes later than four months thereafter, is to get admitted to the proceedings in the State court, as a party, and to litigate his rights there, being content with whatever the State court may say is his rightful share of the proceeds.

Thus, also, where the suit is in part a mere foreclosure suit or other suit to realize upon a valid pre-existing lien and in part creates a lien by legal proceedings upon other assets of the insolvent during the four months' period, the jurisdiction of the State Court will be protected as to the first part and be superseded as to the latter part.⁵²

Thus, also, until the adjudication in bankruptcy takes place the legal proceedings are not superseded and a court officer in possession of assets may not be proceeded against summarily. It may occur that the lien may never be rendered void.⁵³

But when the adjudication does take place, the nullity and invalidity relate back to the date of the levy or seizure by legal proceedings, and the State Court is superseded.⁵⁴

This could not be denied."

§ 1603. Basis of Superseding Custody of Assignee and Receiver.—The rule that the bankruptcy court supersedes the custody of the State court in cases of assignments, receiverships, etc., created within the four months period, is said to have for its basis the necessary implication arising from such assignments and receiverships being specifically declared to be acts of bankruptcy. Since they operate—if allowed to stand—to take away the very fruits of the adjudication itself and to render the adjudication purposeless, the necessary implication arises, it is said, that the assignments and receiverships themselves become void.⁵⁷

Obiter, Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 A. B. R. 3: "It is admitted that a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, made within four months from the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, is void as against a trustee in bankruptcy, so far as it interferes with his administering the property assigned. This could not be denied. West Co. v. Lea Bros., 174 U. S. 590, 595, 2 Am. B. R. 463, 43 L. Ed. 1098, 1099; Boese v. King, 108 U. S. 379, 385, 27 L. Ed. 760, 762; Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, 45 L. Ed. 814. It hardly is necessary to discuss whether such an assignment should be held to be embraced in the express avoidance of conveyances made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors in § 67e of the Bankruptcy Law. * * * It is possible to say that constructively a general assignment falls under that description. * * * One ground for such a construction would be that making the assignment is declared an act of bankruptcy by § 3. As it could not have been intended that the very conveyance which warranted putting the grantor into bankruptcy should withdraw all his property from distribution there, it seems sufficient to rely upon the necessarily implied effect of § 3. * * * If by declaring the assignment an act of bankruptcy, the statute means that the conveyance shall not be effectual against the bankruptcy proceedings, as is agreed, the natural and simple construction is that it means that the deed shall be avoided as a whole when the trustee takes the goods."

In re Knight, 11 A. B. R. 6, 125 Fed. 35 (D. C. Ky.): "* * * it is the established doctrine in bankruptcy that an assignee, under a deed of general assignment, and the execution of which deed is the act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication is made, although he has qualified in the County Court and is acting under its orders, does not hold the estate of the bankrupt adversely to the trustee in bankruptcy. It thence logically and necessarily follows that the assignee holds the property subject to the right of the requisite number of creditors having debts amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $500 to avail themselves of the act of bankruptcy and secure an adjudication, and that when this is done the rights of the creditors relate back to the act of bankruptcy, and override all intermediate or intervening attempts by the assignee to overreach or defeat the results of the act of bankruptcy, or the rights of creditors arising out of it. The general principle which underlies the subject, and which cannot be ignored, must be this: When a general assignment for the benefit of creditors is made by a debtor, eo instanti there is generated by the statute a right in his creditors to have his affairs wound up and his estate administered in the bankruptcy court pursuant to the Bankruptcy Law, which has suspended the operation of all State insolvency laws; and, if the enforcement of this right is demanded by a proper proceeding within four months after its inception, no action in any court in any suit brought after the commission of the act of bankruptcy can defeat it without the consent of the bankrupt court. Quoad hoc, the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is necessarily exclusive and supreme. * * * In other words, the rights of creditors, inchoate from the making of the assignment, ripen into maturity when the adjudication is made. If it were otherwise the Bankruptcy Law could be evaded with the utmost facility."

Davis v. Bohle, 1 A. B. R. 412, 92 Fed. 325 (C. C. A. Mo.): "This (§ 3, making assignments acts of bankruptcy) was but another form of saying that if a person, subject to the provisions of the act, should make a general assignment, it should entitle his creditors to have him adjudged a bankrupt within four months after the commission of the act, and to have his estate administered by a trustee or trustees of their own selection, pursuant to the provisions of the act, rather than by the assignee who had been chosen by the insolvent debtor for that purpose. Inasmuch as an assignee under a voluntary deed of assignment is not a purchaser for value of the assigned property, but is merely an agent or trustee of the assignor and his creditors, and holds the assigned property solely for their benefit, Congress, when it provided that a general assignment should be regarded as an act of bankruptcy, did not deem it necessary to say further, and in so many words, that the assigned property might be taken from the custody of the assignee at the instance of creditors, if the assignor was subsequently adjudged a bankrupt. It was assumed, no doubt, that by declaring a general assignment to be an act of bankruptcy, with all which that declaration implied, the assignee named in such a deed would take a defeasible title to the assigned property, which would instantly fail when the assignor was adjudged a bankrupt, and that he would thenceforth be accountable to the trustee appointed in bankruptcy proceedings for the assigned property or its proceeds. Such, we think, is the necessary effect of the clause making a general assignment an act of bankruptcy, when that clause is read in the light of decisions both in this country and England construing prior bankruptcy laws, which decisions must be presumed to have been well known to the lawmaker. Thus, under an English bankrupt act (6 Geo. IV. ch. 16, § 3), which made it an act of bankruptcy if a person executed any fraudulent conveyance or transfer with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, it was repeatedly held that a voluntary assignment by a debtor of his whole estate for the equal benefit of all his creditors was an act of bankruptcy, within the meaning of the aforesaid statute, not because such a conveyance was fraudulent in fact, but because it was constructively fraudulent, and in violation of the Bankrupt Act, in that it provided for a different mode of administration upon the effects of the insolvent debtor than that contemplated by the act."

Hooks v. Aldridge, 16 A. B. R. 664, 145 Fed. 865 (C. C. A. Tex.): "We have before us a record showing that a State court, because of insolvency, appointed a receiver for a corporation and placed him in possession of its property, and that thereupon, and on that ground, among others, the court of bankruptcy adjudged the corporation a bankrupt, pursuant to the amendment we have quoted. In enacting these additional grounds of involuntary bankruptcy, it could not have been the intention of Congress that the receiver of the State court appointed 'because of the insolvency' of the corporation, should continue to hold possession of the property and to administer and settle the estate. The Supreme Court observed in a recent case that 'the operation of the bankruptcy laws of the United States cannot be defeated by insolvent corporations applying to be wound up under State statutes' (In re Watts & Sachs, 190 U. S. 1, 27, 10 Am. B. R. 113, 23 Sup. Ct. 718, 47 L. Ed. 933): nor can they be defeated by the appointment of receivers, because of insolvency, at the suits of their officers, stockholders, or creditors."

The obvious weakness of such reasoning would seem to be that the right to supersede the State court's custody would logically apply only where such general assignment or receivership is the very ground of the adjudication in bankruptcy itself, thus leaving assets to continue in the control of the State Court receiver or assignee where the adjudication is based on other grounds or is on voluntary petition. One court, in evident anticipation of such argument, in a case where a general assignment was first made and afterwards a receiver was appointed in a mortgage foreclosure suit to collect the rents of the mortgaged property in behalf of the mortgagee, held that, although the assignment was the act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication was obtained, nevertheless not only was the assignment itself nullified but also all subsequent dispositions of the property.

In re Knight, 11 A. B. R. 1, 125 Fed. 35 (D. C. Ky.): “* * * can the rights of the creditors to have the bankrupt’s estate administered in the bankruptcy court, and under the Bankruptcy Law be defeated by the expedient of thereafter hurriedly bringing suit in the State court, in which, upon an allegation of insolvency, a receiver is appointed and put in charge of the debtor’s property—things which, of themselves, under the amendment of 1903, * * * constituted a further act of bankruptcy, upon which alone an adjudication could have been secured? And just at this point we may well inquire whether, if an adjudication in bankruptcy had been made upon a creditor’s petition alleging, in the language of the amendment of February 5, 1903, that because of insolvency a receiver had been put in charge of Knight’s property by the State court, that court, under the doctrine and rule of comity, and the supposed teachings of the case of Peck v. Jenness, would be still entitled to administer the assets, notwithstanding the Bankruptcy Law. This inquiry would seem to reach the kernel of the matter, for if a State Court could thus do the very thing which constitutes an act of bankruptcy, and at the same time defeat it on the doctrine of comity and priority of jurisdiction, the new ground of bankruptcy is a manifest delusion. These suggestions seem to me to show that the expedient resorted to in this case, under the facts and circumstances surrounding it, cannot defeat the rights of the general creditors, which related back to the doing of the thing upon which the adjudication in bankruptcy was made.”

But this counter argument only partly avoids the weakness adverted to. What would become of the prior assignment had not it, but rather the subsequent receivership, been the ground of the adjudication, both being within the four months period?

More naturally, one would expect to find the basis of the superseding of the state courts in some express provision of the statute concerned in pari materia with the subject of the right of the trustee to recover assets from third parties, such as are §§ 67, 70, etc., rather than in § 3, relating merely to the determination of the status of the debtor as a bankrupt. Moreover, § 3, relating solely to what acts warrant adjudication of bankruptcy, equally as well makes a preferential transfer an act of bankruptcy, yet Congress did not leave the avoidance of preferences to mere “necessary implication” from that section of the statute, but provided specifically therefor in § 60. The question naturally arises then why Congress should have left the superseding of the custody of the state court in the important cases of assignments, receiverships, etc., to mere implication from the provisions of another section of the act and yet deem it necessary elsewhere to make specific provisions as to the recovery of preferences, although preferences are likewise referred to in that same section as acts of bankruptcy.

It has also been held that the basis is that such assignments and receiverships are transfers made to hinder, delay and defraud creditors under § 67 (e).⁵⁸

58. In re Gray, 3 A. B. R. 647 (N. Y. Sup. Ct.); inferentially, Randolph v. Scruggs, 10 A. B. R. 3, 190 U. S. 533; obiter, Chem. Nat’l Bk. v. Meyer &

In re Knight, 11 A. B. R. 1, 135 Fed. 25 (D. C. Ky.): "Besides, it is important to remember that, whether so in fact or not, a deed of general assignment is constructively fraudulent, and, in legal contemplation, its purpose is to hinder and delay creditors, within the meaning of § 67e of the Statute of 1898 (30 Stat. 564), and consequently that under that section the assigned property, if the deed was made within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, belongs to the trustee, and by the express terms of the section it is made his duty to recover and reclaim it."

West Co. v. Lea, 174 U. S. 590, 2 A. B. R. 467: "Such consequences was held to arise, from a deed of that description, as a legal result of the clause, in the Act of 1867, forbidding assignments with 'intent to delay, defraud, or hinder' creditors, and from the provision avoiding certain acts done to delay, defeat, or hinder the execution of the act."

It would seem to be improper, however, to classify such resorting to the duly constituted courts of the State among the fraudulent transfers reprobated by § 67 (e), unless an actual fraudulent intent existed.

Ketcham v. McNamara, 6 A. B. R. 162, 72 Conn. 709: "The present bankruptcy law differs from that of 1867 in its mode of treating assignments for the benefit of creditors made without preferences prior to the institution of bankruptcy proceedings. The Act of 1898 declares every assignment of that kind an act of bankruptcy. * * * Under that of 1867 (§§ 26, 86, as amended in 1868 [15 Stat. at L. 228]), it was such only if made in fraud of creditors, and the assignee in bankruptcy could not recover the property without proof that the person receiving it 'had reasonable cause to believe that a fraud on this act was intended.' While the law stood thus, we therefore held that an honest conveyance by an insolvent debtor under our insolvent laws, without actual fraud, and with no actual intent to defeat the operation of the Act of Congress, could not be treated as absolutely void. Hawkin's Appeal, 34 Conn. 548, 551. The claim that it was such was set up in that case by one of the general creditors, but apparently only because, if sustained, it would prevent the assignment from operating as a dissolution of an attachment which he had previously made, and thus work a preference in his favor. Such a result the court was indisposed to promote by a construction of the bankruptcy law which would frustrate its main purpose. Reed v. McIntyre, 98 U. S. 507, 513.

"The Supreme Court of the United States, in another case, where the equities were of a similar character, held that if the Act of 1867 ipso facto suspended the operation of the insolvent laws of the States, general assignments under those laws, not followed by bankruptcy proceedings, when made with no actual intent to defraud, were not so absolutely void that a judgment creditor of an assignor could hold the assignee to account for the proceeds of the property. Boese v. King, 108 U. S. 379, 385, affirming 78 N. Y. 471."

And in still other cases it has apparently been held that the basis is to be found in the principle that the Bankruptcy Law is paramount in the administration of insolvent estates, and that the custody of another court is inconsistent therewith and hence superseded.⁵⁹

In re Watts, 190 U. S. 1, 10 A. B. R. 113: "And the operation of the bankruptcy laws of the United States cannot be defeated by insolvent commercial corporations applying to be wound up under State statutes. The Bankruptcy Law is paramount, and the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in bankruptcy, when properly invoked, in the administration of the affairs of insolvent persons and corporations, is essentially exclusive. Necessarily when like proceedings in the State courts are determined by the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, care has to be taken to avoid collision in respect of property in possession of the State courts. Such cases are not cases of adverse possession or of possession in enforcement of pre-existing liens, or in aid of the bankruptcy proceedings. The general rule as between courts of concurrent jurisdiction is that property already in possession of the receiver of one court cannot rightfully be taken from him without the court's consent, by the receiver of another court appointed in a subsequent suit, but that rule can have only a qualified application where winding up proceedings are superseded by those in bankruptcy as to which the jurisdiction is not concurrent. Still it obtains as a rule of comity, and accordingly the receiver of the District Court brought his appointment to the knowledge of the Floyd Circuit Court and requested the delivery of the assets."

In re Curtis, 1 A. B. R. 444, 91 Fed. 737 (D. C. Ill.): "The object of enumerating in the National Bankruptcy Act what shall constitute an act of bankruptcy is for the very purpose of specifying with certainty what estates shall be administered in the Bankrupt Court. And, in declaring that whosoever should attempt to distribute his estate by a general assignment should be adjudged a bankrupt, it is also the plain intent of the law that such person should not be permitted, after the first day of July, 1898, to do so, but, instead, such estate must be administered in the precise manner pointed out by the National Bankrupt Act.

"From this it is obvious that not only the main object of the State and Federal laws are identical, but also that they both expressly provide a manner of administering the estate of whosoever shall make a general assignment. This being the case, one must yield to the other. One must be operative, and the other inoperative. Both cannot be in full force and effect at the same time. Which remains paramount and operative cannot be in doubt. That the State law shall be suspended is now well settled, and it is therefore the opinion of this court that the proceedings under the general assignment made by the Bank of Waverly, and in the Morgan County Court, are wholly unauthorized and void."

But the reasoning of such rule would apply equally to all cases of insolvency, regardless of the four months' limitation. In reality, such reasoning can only be applicable to cases where the legal proceedings amount to State bankruptcy or State insolvency proceedings, which themselves are superseded in toto, and would come rather under the next division, which discusses the third exception to the main rule. It would hardly apply to mere general assignments and receiverships, except perhaps when they amount, in effect, to State bankruptcy or State insolvency proceedings.

Perhaps, on ultimate analysis, this basis is more properly reducible to the fact that such assignments and receiverships operate to create liens by legal proceedings in behalf of creditors and thus are made null and void by § 67 (c) and (f), if created within the four months period. Although such liens redound to the benefit of all creditors and not simply to a part, they are nevertheless liens by legal proceedings, quite as much as those created by creditors' bills or suits, brought in behalf of all creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyances, which are held to be clearly within § 67.⁶⁰

Mauran v. Carpet Lining Co., 6 A. B. R. 739, 50 Atl. 331, 387 (Sup. Ct. R. I.); "The United States Bankruptcy Act, § 67, clause 'f,' contains this provision [quoting § 67 'f']:

"It seems to us that the word 'judgment,' as used above, is sufficiently broad to apply to the judgment of this court in appointing the receiver of the Crown Carpet Lining Co., and that the adjudication of bankruptcy against said corporation nullified and avoided the judgment of this court, and that the property held by the receiver must be turned over for administration under the bankruptcy proceedings."

The case In re Farrell, 23 A. B. R. 826, 176 Fed. 505 (C. C. A. Ohio), quoted at § 1632, although reaffirming the doctrine of Mayer v. Hellman, 91 U. S. 496, and holding that the general assignment must be within the four months of bankruptcy else it will be valid, does not aid us in ascertaining the basis of the superseding of the custody of the assignee in such a case. The case In re Farrell seems to assume that Congress has expressly fixed a limit of four months for the avoidance of assignments, but Congress has done no such thing in express terms, and it is only by construction that the qualification of four months limit is to be made.

Impliedly, In re Fish Bros. Wagon Co., 21 A. B. R. 149, 164 Fed. 553 (C. C. A. Kans.): "We think that a title or lien acquired by an assignee under a general assignment valid according to the laws of the State where it is made, that is to the advantage of the estate when it has passed into bankruptcy, is not necessarily destroyed by the supersession of the assignment proceeding, but that upon the order of the court of bankruptcy it may be retained by the trustee for the benefit of the creditors. This conclusion is in harmony with the object sought by express provisions of the Bankruptcy Act for the preservation of liens obtained in judicial proceedings against the debtor. * * * Attention therefore turns to the effect of the general assignment and the provisions of § 67. * * * The general doctrine is that an assignee in a general assignment under a State statute is neither an innocent purchaser nor a creditor having a lien on the assigned property, but that, like a trustee in bankruptcy, he stands in the shoes of his insolvent and is possessed of no greater right. It seems, however, to be otherwise in Kansas. In Withrow v. Citizens' Bank, 55 Kan. 378, 40 Pac. 639, it was held that an assignee is not merely the representative of the debtor but is also a trustee for the creditors, in whom title is vested by the deed of assignment, and that an unfiled chattel mortgage is void as against the right so secured by him. The effect of the assignment in question here is to be determined by the Kansas law (First Nat. Bank v. Staake, 202 U. S. 141, 15 Am. B. R. 639, * * *) and it is the same upon an unfiled contract of conditional sale as upon an unfiled chattel mortgage. So, had no bankruptcy proceeding been instituted, the assignee would have prevailed over the wagon company in a contest for the possession of the property. Is the right of the assignee available to the trustee, or was it wholly destroyed by the bankruptcy proceeding? The trustee relies upon subdivisions 'a,' 'c,' and 'f' of § 67 of the Bankruptcy Act. The last of these authorizes the preservation, for the benefit of the bankrupt estate, of liens obtained, through legal proceedings against the insolvent debtor within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, and subdivision 'c' provides for the subrogation under certain conditions of the trustee to the rights of one who acquires a lien by a suit or proceeding at law or in equity begun against the debtor within the four months' period. There is difficulty in the application of these provisions to the case at bar. Although the right of the assignee under the assignment might be called a 'lien' in the sense that it is a right to resort to specific property for the satisfaction of the debts of the assignor, and is therefore a charge upon such property, and while the assignment proceeding considered in its entirety may be termed a 'legal proceeding,' because under the Kansas law it is conducted in a court of record, yet it is a voluntary proceeding, and is not, as contemplated by the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act above referred to, a proceeding against the insolvent debtor. We think, however, that § 67a is sufficiently comprehensive to cover the case. It provides: 'Claims which for want of record or for other reasons would not have been valid liens as against the claims of the creditors of the bankrupt shall not be liens against his estate.' At the time of the institution of the bankruptcy proceeding the creditors, through the assignee as their representative, had obtained by the general assignment, which was entirely valid under the local law, a right to have the property now in controversy subjected to the payment of their debts, to the exclusion of the claim of the wagon company under its unfiled contract of conditional sale. Because the assignment was superseded by the bankruptcy proceeding, it does not follow that no rights whatever could grow out of it. True, the making of the assignment was an act of bankruptcy; but, when made, it was authorized by the law of the State, and was valid until done away with by a proceeding that took precedence. An assignment cannot be said to be absolutely prohibited by the Bankruptcy Act, irrespective of the institution of a bankruptcy proceeding. Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 537, 10 Am. B. R. 1. Though the title of a trustee in bankruptcy to the property he takes is not by way of succession to that of an assignee under an assignment that is superseded, yet in such cases many things done by the latter for the benefit of the estate may be retained and enjoyed by the former. As already observed, the assignee, as the representative of all the creditors, had secured a specific right in the property in controversy by a deed of assignment valid under the Kansas law; and if this right, beneficial, as it is, to the bankrupt estate, is to be stricken down, it must be because the assignment was wholly invalid for every purpose and the invalidity related back to the date of the deed. That might be so in case of actual fraud, but there was no such element in the particular transaction."

Inferentially, In re Gutwillig, 1 A. B. R. 388, 92 Fed. 337 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming 1 A. B. R. 78): "These provisions of (§§ 67 'c' and 67 'f') manifest unmistakably the intention of Congress, not only not to permit preferences to be acquired upon the bankruptcy of a debtor when he is about to become a bankrupt, but also to annul all dispositions of his property, except to innocent purchasers, which will defeat the rights of creditors to a distribution by the instrumentalities and according to the schemes of the Bankrupt Act."

And possibly the nullification would come about rather from the provisions of § 67 "c," than from those of § 67 "f," for proof of insolvency is essential under § 67 "f," but is not essential under § 67 "c," where the lien by legal proceedings within the four months period was "sought and permitted in fraud of the provisions of the act."⁶¹

Compare reasoning West Co. v. Lea, 174 U. S. 590, 2 A. B. R. 466: "Under the English bankruptcy statutes (as well that of 1869 as those upon which our earlier acts were modeled), and our own bankruptcy statutes down to and including the Act of 1867, the making of a deed of general assignment was deemed to be repugnant to the policy of the bankruptcy laws, and, as a necessary consequence, constituted an act of bankruptcy per se. This is shown by an examination of the decisions bearing upon the point, both English and American. In Globe Insurance Co. v. Cleveland Insurance Co., 14 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 311; 10 Fed. Cas., 488, the subject was ably reviewed and the authorities are there copiously collected. The decision in that case was expressly relied upon in Re Beisenthal, 14 Blatchf. 146, where it was held that a voluntary assignment, without preferences, valid under the laws of the State of New York, was void as against an assignee in bankruptcy, and this latter case was approvingly referred to in Reed v. McIntyre, 98 U. S. 513. So, also, in Boese v. King, 108 U. S. 379, 385, it was held, citing Reed v. McIntyre, that whatever might be the effect of a deed of general assignment for the benefit of creditors, when considered apart from the Bankruptcy Act, such a deed was repugnant to the object of a bankruptcy statute, and therefore was in and of itself alone an act of bankruptcy. The foregoing decisions related to deeds of general assignment made during the operation of the Bankruptcy Act of 1867, or the amendments thereto of 1874 and 1876. Neither, however, the Act of 1867, nor the amendments to it, contained an express provision that a deed of general assignment should be a conclusive act of bankruptcy. Such consequence was held to arise, from a deed of that description, as a legal result of the clause, in the Act of 1867, forbidding assignments with 'intent to delay, defraud, or hinder' creditors, and from the provision avoiding certain acts done to delay, defeat, or hinder the execution of the act."

Compare, inferentially, Coal Land Co. v. Ruffner Bros., 21 A. B. R. 474 (C. C. A. W. Va.), though basing it upon another clause of § 67c: "In the present case, Clark & Krebs, creditors, had filed a petition against the Cataract Colliery Company in a State court of West Virginia, and in that proceeding the court had appointed a special receiver of the property of the said company. As above set forth, the New River Coal Land Company filed its answer and cross-bill in the suit and set up a claim thereby to the entire property of the Colliery Company, basing the claim on amounts alleged to be due for royalties accruing under a contract of lease, for taxes paid and for forfeiture of all said property as liquidated damages for the failure of the Cataract Colliery Company to fulfill the terms of said lease. The whole proceeding in the State court from the commencement of the action was within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy and of the adjudication of the Cataract Colliery Company bankrupt. It is evident from the character of the suit and the condition of the Colliery Company, as disclosed by the pleadings, that at the time of the commencement of the suit it was insolvent; it was unable to meet its obligations or to carry on its work, so alleged in the bill filed, and by the cross-bill of the Coal Land Company its entire property was claimed by one creditor to the exclusion of all others. The appointment by a court of a receiver for an insolvent debtor is an act of bankruptcy on the part of such debtor. Section 67c of the Bankrupt Act provides that a lien created by, or obtained in or pursuant to, any suit or proceeding at law, or in equity, including a judgment upon mesne process or a judgment by confession, which was begun against a person within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy by or against such person, shall be dissolved by the adjudication of such person to be a bankrupt, if, first, it appears that said lien was obtained and permitted while the defendant was insolvent and that its existence and enforcement would work a preference."

There is no fatal weakness in the fact that all other parts of § 67 are taken up with attempts of single creditors, or creditors less than all, to get advantage over their fellows, whilst assignments and receiverships are presumably created for the equal benefit of all. Liens by legal proceedings, it will be remembered, are nullified by § 67 irrespective of their creating preferences.^{61a} Moreover, neither the principle of "noscitur a sociis" is violated nor that of "in pari materia," for § 67 is taken up with the broad subject of recovery of assets held by other courts, rather than with the narrower subject of the recovery of assets held by courts in behalf of some creditor seeking a selfish advantage.

Furthermore, the very wording of § 67 "c" avoiding liens created by legal proceedings within the four months' period where the same is "sought and permitted in fraud of the provisions of this Act," strikes precisely at such custody of the state courts as would take away from the bankruptcy courts the entire administration of the insolvent's estate. Indeed, frequently, when the basis of the superseding of the State Court's custody under receivers and assignees has been discussed, it has been placed upon such custody being a "fraud upon the Bankruptcy Act."⁶²

Instance, In re Congdon, 11 A. B. R. 219, 129 Fed. 478 (D. C. Minn.): "Assignments have generally been considered frauds on the Bankruptcy Law."

Instance, In re Slomka, 9 A. B. R. 637, 122 Fed. 630 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Moreover, by the Bankrupt Law, the assignment was void having been executed within four months prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition. Such a transfer by an insolvent debtor is made with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors because its necessary effect is to defeat the operation of the Bankrupt Act and the rights of creditors to such an administration of the assets of the debtor as that Act is intended to secure."

Obiter, Singer v. Nat'l Bedstead Mfg. Co., 11 A. B. R. 285 (N. J. Ch.): "The debtor, other than a corporation, who undertakes to make a general assignment of his estate so that the same may be administered under a State law, is deliberately avoiding and evading the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, and is proceeding in defiance of its policy. He plainly is perpetrating a fraud on the act."

It has been held in one case, though by a course of reasoning that seems somewhat too finely drawn, that the basis of the superseding is to be found, to be sure, in clause c of § 67, but not by virtue of receiverships being within any of the classes of liens by legal proceedings therein enumerated as dissolved unless dissolution thereof "would militate against the best interests of the estate;" that, on the contrary, the lien of the receivership would not be dissolved by the adjudication at all, but is simply "preserved" for the benefit of the trustee in bankruptcy, and without any order of preservation.

First Nat. Bank v. Guarantee Title, etc., Co., 24 A. B. R. 330, 178 Fed. 187 (C. C. A. Pa.): "By the appointment of a receiver by the State court on Sept. 12, 1906, upon a creditor's bill on the ground of insolvency, the receiver became vested with the rights of a levying creditor. * * * It must be conceded then, that between September 12, 1906, when the receiver was appointed by the State court, and September 29th, 1906, when the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced, the claim of the bank was subordinate to that of the receiver appointed by the State court. The question is, whether the lien, which that receiver had, passed to the trustee in bankruptcy. That question is to be determined by the Bankruptcy Act. Section 67c of the Bankruptcy Act is as follows: * * *

"The lien obtained by the receiver appointed by the State court was in a proceeding in equity begun against Jonathan A. Perley within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him. It is obvious, therefore, that the lien may have been dissolved by the adjudication of bankruptcy if it was such a lien as is described in clause 1, clause 2, or clause 3 of the first sentence of 67c. We think each of these clauses refers to a lien obtained in a proceeding at law or in equity for the benefit, not of the bankrupt's creditors in general, but of one or more creditors less than all of them. If such be the proper construction of the first sentence of the section, it follows that the lien was not dissolved by force of any of its three clauses. But the second sentence of the section provides that, if the dissolution of 'such lien' would militate against the best interests of the estate of the bankrupt, the lien shall not be dissolved, but that the trustee shall be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the lien and empowered to perfect and enforce it as such holder might have done 'had not bankruptcy proceedings intervened.'

"If bankruptcy proceedings had not intervened, the receiver appointed by the State court could have perfected and enforced his lien. We think the words 'such lien,' in the second sentence of 67c, refer to any 'lien created by or obtained in or pursuant to any suit or proceeding at law or in equity,' mentioned at the beginning of the section, and not merely to a lien described by the language of clause 1, clause 2, or clause 3. It is not the intent of the section to dissolve a lien where its retention will benefit the general body of the bankrupt's creditors." Quoted further at § 1463.

It would seem, however, that the term "such lien," occurring in the clause, "Or if the dissolution of such lien would militate against the best interests of the estate," from its context naturally refers to none other than the three classes of liens therein enumerated as otherwise dissolved by the adjudication. Furthermore, the term "preserved" presupposes a lien otherwise "dissolved."

To be sure, if a corporation has been placed in the hands of a receiver at the suit of dissentient stockholders who are complaining of mismanagement on the part of the directors and officers, though asserting its solvency notwithstanding, but is thereafter adjudged bankrupt within the four months of the receivership, undoubtedly the receivership would be superseded by the bankruptcy proceedings, since the rights of creditors would take precedence over those of dissentient stockholders, regardless of Bankruptcy Act, § 67, and if the corporation be insolvent nothing would remain for stockholders in any event; yet, such a situation could hardly arise on the state of facts mentioned, since the receivership would not itself be an act of bankruptcy, neither being on the "ground of insolvency" nor being the act of the corporation itself (though the corporation might in fact be insolvent), and so the corporation could not be forced into involuntary bankruptcy; whilst it would be equally barred from voluntary bankruptcy, since the functions of the directors, by the same hypothesis, would have been superseded by the receiver, the old board being incapacitated from the voluntary action requisite to voluntary bankruptcy.

§ 1604. Possession under General Assignments Superseded.—Thus, the possession of the State Court under an assignment for the benefit of creditors within the four months, is superseded.⁶³

§ 1605. Likewise, under State Court Receiverships.—Likewise the possession of the State Court under receiverships within the four months period, is superseded.⁶⁴

Creditors Committee Taking Possession and Selling without Bankrupt's Consent, a Conversion.—Again, if a creditors' committee takes charge of the bankrupt's assets, the bankrupt having absconded, and sells the same without the consent or ratification of the bankrupt, it amounts to a conversion and the trustee in bankruptcy subsequently appointed may pursue the property or sue the committee for its value. In re Thomas-McNally Co., 29 A. B. R. 945, 208 Fed. 291 (D. C. N. Y.). See § 146.

Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 A. B. R. 3: "The assignment was not illegal. It was permitted by the law of the State, and cannot be taken to have been prohibited by the Bankruptcy law absolutely and in any event. It had no general fraudulent intent. It was voidable only in case bankruptcy proceedings should be begun."

Summers v. Abbott, 10 A. B. R. 258, 122 Fed. 36 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The deed of assignment covered all the property of the bankrupts. It was honestly made for the laudable purpose of applying all the property of the debtors to the payment, ratably, of all their debts. This is conceded. No claim is made that there was a secret trust reserved for the grantor's benefit, or that there was otherwise any fraud in fact in the execution and delivery of the deed. It was not made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, but to pay creditors. Fraud cannot be predicated of such a deed. It constituted an act of bankruptcy, which entitled the debtor's creditors, if they saw proper to do so, to have the administration of the trust transferred from the assignee to the bankrupt court, but this is no impeachment of the honesty of the transaction; and the debtors, when adjudged bankrupts, would be entitled to their discharge, precisely as though they had made no such assignment. It is also admitted that the appellant, who was named in the deed as assignee, accepted the trust in good faith, and for the purpose of executing it according to law and the terms of the deed; and that he did execute it intelligently, successfully, and honestly, is conceded. Neither fraud in fact nor in law can be imputed to such an assignee.

"The contention of the trustee in bankruptcy is that all assignments for the benefit of creditors since the passage of the Bankrupt Act are fraudulent, and that every assignee under such a deed is a fraudulent vendee or assignee, and hence entitled to no compensation for his services. This contention is probably grounded on the assumption that it is the legal duty of an insolvent debtor who wants to apply his property to the payment of his debts to apply to the bankrupt court to be adjudged a bankrupt, and then turn his property over to the trustee of his estate in bankruptcy. But neither in the present nor any previous Bankrupt Law this country has ever had will there be found any provision making it obligatory upon a debtor to go into court and have himself adjudged a bankrupt. The Bankrupt Act declares the making of 'a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors' shall constitute an act of bankruptcy, but it nowhere declares that when the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy he shall go into the bankrupt court and have himself adjudged a bankrupt. Many debtors who commit acts of bankruptcy struggle on and finally pay all the debts they owe, which is much more than would have been done had they gone into the bankrupt court and had themselves adjudged bankrupts. It is open to the creditors of one who has committed an act of bankruptcy to proceed to have him adjudged a bankrupt, but it is optional and not obligatory upon his creditors to do this. As a matter of fact, thousands of debtors commit acts of bankruptcy who are never adjudged bankrupts; their creditors preferring to let their debtor administer his own estate, rather than turn it over to a bankrupt court."

In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 677, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I.): "That there was nothing unlawful in such an assignment, but that it was merely voidable by proceedings in bankruptcy, and meritorious unless avoided, has been clearly affirmed by the Supreme Court under the prior statutes. * * *

Obiter (being case of act of bankruptcy) In re Hirose, 12 A. B. R. 154 (D. C. § 1610. Assignee or Receiver May Be Enjoined.—The assignee or receiver may be enjoined.⁷¹

Obiter, Carling v. Seymour Lbr. Co., 8 A. B. R. 41, 113 Fed. 483 (C. C. A. Ga.): "While it is a general rule that a Federal court may not enjoin proceedings in a State court, an exception is made in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy. Rev. Stat., U. S., § 720. When the State court is in possession through its receiver, of assets that it is without jurisdiction or authority to hold against a receiver or trustee appointed in bankruptcy proceedings, instead of making a peremptory order on the receiver of the State court to surrender the funds an injunction, if necessary, might be granted by the bankruptcy court to prevent the unlawful distribution of the assets, until application could be made to the State court for an order to its receiver to surrender the assets to the proper custodian. The laws of the United States being equally binding on all the courts, we cannot assume that the State court would refuse to administer them. We are not now called on to decide what course should be taken in the event of a disregard of the Bankrupt Law by the State court."

New River Coal Land Co. v. Ruffner Bros., 21 A. B. R. 474, 165 Fed. 881 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "In an act forbidding courts of the United States to stay proceedings in a State court the courts of bankruptcy are specifically excepted and the bankruptcy law of 1898 expressly confers upon these courts the power to issue injunctions to stay proceedings within this exception. * * * The prime purpose of the Bankruptcy Act is to secure an equal distribution of an insolvent's estate among the creditors, and it is not only a power conferred upon the court in a bankruptcy proceeding to take jurisdiction of the unencumbered property of a bankrupt, but also of property to which liens attach, provided the judge of the court in bankruptcy shall determine that such property should be administered by that court. It has not unfrequently been the case that the bankrupt courts have issued injunctions to stay proceedings in a State court, to foreclose mortgages, to enforce other liens, and even to forbid State officers from proceeding with executions upon judgments, where in the opinion of the judge of the bankruptcy court, it was to the interest of the general estate to do so."

§ 1611. May Be Ordered Summarily to Surrender Assets.—And the assignee or receiver may, after the adjudication of bankruptcy, be required by the bankruptcy court to surrender the assets to the trustee in bankruptcy; and the assignee or receiver may be so required by summary order from the bankruptcy court.⁷²

(Sup. Ct. Wash.). But compare (this principle evidently overlooked), In re Zeigler Co., 26 A. B. R. 761, 189 Fed. 259 (D. C. Conn.), in which case the proper remedy would have been an injunction.

In re Hecox, 21 A. B. R. 314, 164 Fed. 823 (C. C. A. Colo.): "By operation of law, on the adjudication in bankruptcy and the selection and qualification of a trustee, all right, title, and interest of the bankrupt in and to any and all property passed to and vested in such trustee. The scheme as well as the policy of the Bankrupt Act is that the collecting, marshaling, administration, and distribution of the bankrupt's estate shall reside exclusively in the court of bankruptcy. As the Bankrupt Act is a national law, enacted pursuant to the power vested by the Constitution in Congress, it is a paramount law of the land, to which all State authority, legislative and judicial, must submit. As the receiver in question was appointed by the State court within four months next preceding the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the debtor being insolvent, his appointment constituted an act of bankruptcy. In contemplation of the Bankrupt Act, in so far as concerned his right to the custody of the property of the bankrupt, he stood as if he had never been appointed by the State court. In such situation, as he holds the property not in his own right, but solely in his claimed official capacity, it was his duty, on notification and demand by the trustee in bankruptcy, to deliver the property to him. But inasmuch as he was the appointee of the State court, as a mere act of courtesy, sometimes, but hardly accurately, termed 'judicial comity,' the bankrupt court in the first instance directed the trustee to prefer a request of the State court for an order on its receiver to deliver the property in his custody to the trustee. In such case, if the State court decline to reciprocate the consideration thus paid to its dignity, the law is well settled that it is then competent for, and the duty of, the bankrupt court to order the receiver to deliver the property over to the trustee, and he would be in contempt if he refuses to comply therewith. Controlling authorities affirm the foregoing propositions."

And the rule applies though the assignment be not one by formal deed of assignment; as, for example, in cases of trust arrangements for effecting compositions out of court.

Obiter, In re Hersey, 22 A. B. R. 856, 171 Fed. 998 (D. C. Iowa): "The instrument provides that Hart shall be first paid from the proceeds of the sale of the property for his services and for the expenses * * * incurred by him in caring for and disposing of the same, and in effecting a settlement

Apparently contra, as to summary jurisdiction, In re Manning, 10 A. B. R. 497, 123 Fed. 180 (D. C. S. D.). But the facts in this case show the funds had already been disbursed as to which the summary order was sought.

The Supreme Court in the case of Louisville Trust Co. v. Cominger, 184 U. S. 18, 7 A. B. R. 421, affirming Sinsheimer v. Simonson, 5 A. B. R. 537, is not contra, for there the as-

Compare, Ludowici Tile Roofing Co. v. Penn. Inst., 8 A. B. R. 739 (D. C. Penn.): "A trustee of individual partners has no right to interfere with firm assets."

But the assignee of an individual partner will be required to surrender the individual assets, by summary order, to the trustee in bankruptcy of the partnership itself, on the partnership's subsequently becoming bankrupt, In re Stokes, 6 A. B. R. 262, 106 Fed. 312 (D. C. Penn.).

with the creditors of the bankrupt, or in attempting to do so. While the instrument is not an 'assignment' under the State statute for the benefit of creditors, such is its effect, and Hart thereunder was but the agent of the bankrupt, with the rights given him by the instrument, for the sale of the property and distribution of its proceeds as provided therein."

Of course, plenary action may be instituted, instead.⁷³

§ 1611½. But Only on Due Notice and Hearing.—But such summary order may be granted only upon notice and after due hearing; and the rule is not different, in this regard, where such assignee or receiver has been elected trustee in the subsequent bankruptcy.

Loveless v. Southern Grocer Co. Lim., 20 A. B. R. 180, 159 Fed. 415 (C. C. A. La.): "The record shows, without dispute, that the trustee, as such, had paid out in costs and dividends about $1,300 under orders of the bankruptcy court. The summary order requiring him to make payment into the bankruptcy court raises a controversy as to $660.34. This sum, or most of it, petitioner claims that he paid out legally and properly while he was acting as receiver in the State court, and his contention is that he should not be required to pay the money again, and, at least, that he should not be required by a summary proceeding to pay the money into the bankruptcy court without a hearing, either in that court or in the bankruptcy court, on the question as to whether or not he is entitled to credits for the payments made by him as receiver. The question as to the correctness of these disbursements has not been passed on by the State court, nor by the court below, and, of course, is not before this court for decision. We are asked to review and vacate or correct the summary order of the court below requiring the payment of the sum in dispute into court before the petitioner has had a hearing on the correctness of his accounts and the legality of the contested disbursement. If the order to pay the money into courts stands, summary proceeding against the trustee can be made the basis of proceedings for contempt if he fails to obey the order. It seems to us just and right that he should have an opportunity to present his accounts to a court and to have his claim for credits for payments made by him while receiver in the State court passed on. He should not be required to pay the money into court by a summary proceeding that deprives him of the right to a hearing on the disputed items of his account. It is true that the bankruptcy proceedings operated to suspend the further administration of the insolvent corporation's estate in the State court; 'but it remained for the State court to transfer the assets, settle the accounts of its receiver, and close its connection with the matter. Errors, if any, committed in so doing, could be rectified in due course and in the designated way.'"

§ 1612. No Summary Order as to Sums Already Disbursed.—In no event, however, may the assignee be required by summary order of the bankruptcy court, to account for (in the sense of paying over the equivalent of) disbursements already made before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.⁷⁴

Nor for commissions retained and spent by him before then.⁷⁵

Louisville Trust Co. v. Comingor, 184 U. S. 18, 7 A. B. R. 421, the syllabus of which reads: "An assignee for the benefit of creditors has the right to have his claims for the amount paid to counsel or retained by him on account of commissions as assignee before the bankruptcy of the assignor adjudicated in the State Court in the customary mode of proceeding, and the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to finally adjudicate the merits of his claims unless by his consent and then only by plenary suit."

Nor may he be required to account for disbursements made by him before the four months;⁷⁶ but probably he may be required to account for commissions retained by him after the bankruptcy,⁷⁷ although a transferee under an instrument for effecting a composition out of court has been held not within summary jurisdiction as to moneys retained by him for expenses and compensation, even though subject thereto for the remaining assets in his control.⁷⁸ And the rule is not altered because of the assignee's voluntary offer to account.⁷⁹

As to sums already disbursed, the assignee is to be reached only by plenary action in the State court, or in case of diversity of citizenship, etc., in the United States District Court.⁸⁰

Bank* (178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163), the payment of those moneys by the wives for the stock could not be disregarded, nor could the money be retained by the trustee upon setting aside the sale, but it would have to be returned. * * * For any relief, supposing I were to grant an order setting aside the sale, a bill in equity must be filed in the State court for an accounting as respects the goods or their proceeds, to which all persons concerned in the disposition of the goods subsequent to the sale and against whom relief was sought, would be necessary parties. After this lapse of time and the various changes that have occurred, I think the prosecution of such a suit would be attended with much labor and expense, and looking at all the circumstances, I have so much doubt as respects any beneficial final result, that I think I ought not to set aside the sale except upon security given by the creditors to indemnify the trustee against any loss or expense occasioned thereby, or by the subsequent proceedings to recover assets."

§ 1614. Assignee Has Lien upon Surrendered Assets for Expenses and Compensation.—When the bankruptcy court takes over the assets from the state court which has been administering the assignment, the assets come over subject to a lien for the reasonable expenses and compensation of the assignee, incurred or earned while performing services beneficial to the estate and necessary to its preservation, where the assignment was bona fide.⁸³

Compare, to same conclusion, In re Klein & Co., 8 A. B. R. 559 (D. C. N. Y.): This decision is placed upon the ground that creditors, having permitted the assignee to go ahead and administer the estate in the insolvency court, are bound to reimburse him therefor. This might be good ground for holding those who did so permit him to proceed and therefore might be held to have assented thereto, but how about those who objected and dissented and did their best to get enough creditors together to file a petition in bankruptcy?

Compare, In re Pattee, 16 A. B. R. 450, 143 Fed. 994 (D. C. Conn.), where an assignee was allowed compensation and reimbursement for what was done after bankruptcy proceedings were instituted but not for what was done before: being directed to present the latter as a "claim."

Rulings on Assignee's Claims in Bankruptcy before Randolph v. Scruggs.—Before the Supreme Court announced its decision in Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533; S. C., 10 A. B. R. 1, supra, there were various contrary holdings, to the effect that an assignee for the benefit of creditors was not entitled to reimbursement for expenses nor compensation as assignee incurred nor earned before the filing of the bankruptcy petition; inasmuch as they were incurred with the full knowledge that an act of bankruptcy was being committed, and that the assignment was likely to be nullified; also because the Bank-

Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 A. B. R. 1: "The assignment was not illegal. It was permitted by the law of the State, and cannot be taken to have been prohibited by the bankruptcy law absolutely in every event, whether proceedings were instituted or not. * * * It seems to us that it would be a hard and subtle construction to say, as seems to have been thought in Bartlett v. Bramhall, 3 Gray 257, 260, that when they were instituted they not only avoided the assignment, but made it illegal by relation back to its date, when, if they had not been started, it would have remained perfectly good."

In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 677, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I., reversing In re Gladding, 9 A. B. R. 171 [Ref. R. I.] and in effect overruling Wilbur v. Watson, 7 A. B. R. 54): "In the present case, the claims of petitioners constituted a lien on the assets in their hands adverse to the trustee, and the portion of the statute cited appertains to nothing of that nature. * * *

"The fact that, under the circumstances, the petitioners paid the trustee the gross amount received by them, and delivered them the other assets, does not, as is clearly settled, deprive them of the right to apply to the court for payment of the sums for which they once had a lien."

§ 1615. Assignment Must Be "General" and "Bona Fide" Not "Partial" nor "Fraudulent."—But the assignment must be a general assignment for the equal benefit of all creditors, and not a partial nor preferential assignment, and must be bona fide, else the lien will not attach.

ruptcy Act itself limits reimbursement for the preservation of the estate to expenses incurred subsequently to the filing of the petition.

In re Peter Paul Book Co., 5 A. B. R. 105, 104 Fed. 786 (D. C. N. Y.); In re Gilblom & King, 2 N. B. N. & R. 60 (Ref. Ohio); In re Mays, 7 A. B. R. 764 (D. C. W. Va.); Stearns v. Flick, 4 A. B. R. 723, 103 Fed. 921 (D. C. Ohio); In re Tatam, Mann & Co., 7 A. B. R. 52, 112 Fed. 50 (D. C. N. Car.); Wilbur v. Watson, 7 A. B. R. 54, 111 Fed. 493 (D. C. R. I.). In this connection, see In re Gladding, 9 A. B. R. 171 (Ref. R. I.), reversed by C. C. A. sub nom. In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 677, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I.). Also, see In re Kingman, 5 A. B. R. 251 (Ref. Mass.).

But even before the Supreme Court's decision in Randolph v. Scruggs there were various holdings to the same effect: In re Bussey, 6 A. B. R. 603 (Ref. Mo.); In re Schlotz, 5 A. B. R. 782, 106 Fed. 834 (D. C. Iowa); In re Klein & Co., 8 A. B. R. 559, 116 Fed. 523 (D. C. N. Y.); In re Pauly, 2 A. B. R. 333 (Ref. N. Y.).

However, it was held that such assignee should be allowed to prove his claim as a general claim against the estate and be allowed to share in the dividends therefrom the same as any other agent to whom the bankrupt before bankruptcy might have entrusted his property for care and distribution. In re Gilblom & King, 2 N. B. N. & R. 60 (Ref. Ohio); In re Mays, 7 A. B. R. 764 (D. C. W. Va.); Impliedly, In re Tatam, Mann & Co., 7 A. B. R. 52, 112 Fed. 50 (D. C. N. Car.).

Year's Limitation for Proof of Claims Does Not Apply to Assignee's Lien.—The assignee's claim is not a claim within the meaning of § 57 (n) prohibiting proofs of claims after the expiration of a year from the date of adjudication; nor a "debt," as defined by § 1, In re Levitt, 11 A. B. R. 411 (D. C. Wis.).

Pledge Redeemed by Assignee.—In re William W. Rudd, 25 A. B. R. 35, 180 Fed. 312 (D. C. N. Y.): "A pledge redeemed from a pawnbroker by a third party (in this case by an assignee for the benefit of creditors) is no longer the subject of the pawnbroker's lien, as the person redeeming it is not qualified to act as pawnbroker. Nor do the State laws give a statutory lien to any person who may pay something for the account of another, even if personal property, may pass as security for the account. But the doctrine of subrogation is well-established, and a court of equity, or even a court of law, would accept the proposition that if a third party pays a debt, and takes into his own possession personal property which has been held as security."

The decisions generally qualify the doctrine by saying an assignment "honestly" made.

In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 677, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I.): "No criticism is made of the terms of the assignment nor any suggestion that it was not framed in all respects for the advantage of all the creditors."

Summers v. Abbott, 10 A. B. R. 254, 122 Fed. 36 (C. C. A. Mo.): "To prevent misapprehension it is proper to say that this case has none of the odious features about it that sometimes crops out in cases where insolvents make deeds of assignment for the professed benefit of their creditors, but which are in fact made to embarrass and defraud them, and where the assignee is a willing instrument of the fraudulent debtor."

Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 A. B. R. 1: "The assignment has no general fraudulent intent; mere constructive fraud in an assignment for the equal benefit of all creditors is not a bar to the assignee's receiving compensation, though the case would be different if the assignee were a party to actual fraud."

In re Harson Co., 11 A. B. R. 516 (Ref. R. I.): "In all three of the above cases it is to be noted, however, that the assignment was for the equal benefit of all creditors, while the question now before us is whether an assignment which was for the benefit only of such creditors as chose to assent to receive in full satisfaction, whatever the assignee paid them, is on the same footing. The assignee contends that this was not a preferential assignment. But that an assignment which is so drawn is preferential seems to be the settled law even where such an assignment is held good."

When will the court decide the assignment is not within the rule because not "honestly" made? One case, In re Congdon, 11 A. B. R. 219 (D. C. Minn.) held that, under the circumstances of that case, the assignment was fraudulent, the bankrupt being left in charge of his store, to run it, on a salary, under an agreement that the stock should be replenished from time to time; in addition to which the assignment deed itself was peculiar; and, finally, all parties knew bankruptcy proceedings were inevitable.

It must not be partial nor preferential.⁸⁴ But that the assignment provides, in accordance with the state law, permission that only those may participate in its benefits who consent to the debtor's release from his remaining debts, would not necessarily make it fraudulent.⁸⁵

It is none the less "general" though expressly limited to be for the benefit of creditors becoming parties and signing the agreement.⁸⁶

It is not essential that the assignment shall have been an assignment by a formal deed.⁸⁷

In re Zier & Co., 15 A. B. R. 648, 142 Fed. 102 (C. C. A. Ind., affirming 11 A. B. R. 527): "The bankruptcy jurisdiction when properly invoked, supercedes the prior proceedings in the State court for winding up the corporation, 'as to which the jurisdiction is not concurrent' (In re Watts and Sachs, 190 U. S. 1, 27, 10 Am. B. R. 113), so that the rule upheld in Randolph v. Scruggs, supra, in reference to a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, is equally applicable to this claim. Such claim is allowable only upon equitable considerations for services from which the estate in bankruptcy has derived benefit, and to the extent only that they were beneficial in fact. The rule thus governing the claim was recognized by the District Court in its conclusions, and the order of reversal and its allowance rests primarily on the finding of fact that the services 'were not beneficial to said estate.' Upon the record certified by the referee, and without reference to other matters for the consideration of which error is assigned, we are constrained to the opinion that the services embraced in the claim were so largely directed to delaying and obstructing rightful proceedings in bankruptcy that they cannot be treated as beneficial to the estate, and are without equity for support of the claim to be compensated out of the estate in bankruptcy.

"Institution of the suit against the corporation was plainly within the rights of the plaintiffs therein and their attorneys, the appellants. So the application for and appointment of a receiver to administer the assets and rightful possession thereunder up to the intervention of bankruptcy proceedings are not questionable."

Compare, analogously, In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 683, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I.): "But neither the present statutes of bankruptcy nor any prior act do, or did unqualifiedly denounce an assignment like that at bar, intended for the equal distribution of the property of a failing debtor among creditors, without any attempt to defraud or embarrass persons to whom he is under liability. In this respect, assignments at common law stand precisely as do proceedings for the appointment of receivers by Federal courts or State courts, which, under the act to amend the Act of July 1, 1898, approved February 5, 1903, become a sufficient basis for an involuntary petition. In § 2 of that act (32 Stat. 797, ch. 487), the making a general assignment and an application for a receiver, under the circumstances named therein, are classed together; so that there is nothing in the terms of the present statutes of bankruptcy to justify a claim that an assignment for the benefit of creditors, like that at bar, is any more in fraud of the statutes, or denounced by them, than the action of a State tribunal, which may be one of the highest authority, in proceeding on an honest application for receiver. It can be no more reprehensible to make an assignment in favor of creditors, free from any attempt to embarrass them and from any dishonest purpose, than to apply to a Federal court or State court for the appointment of a receiver; and the bankruptcy statutes do not seek to punish one more than the other."

Conversely, where no benefit resulted therefrom.⁸⁹ Even before the amendment making receiverships acts of bankruptcy was passed, such lien was recognized.⁹⁰

Inferentially, Wilson v. Parr, 8 A. B. R. 230, 115 Ga. 629: "The services of the receiver and his attorneys inured to the benefit of the creditors of the bankruptcy. They were rendered under the order of the State court, and the fund in that court was the result of the services of the receiver and his attorneys acting under the orders of the court, and ought to be paid. As this fund in any court would be property chargeable with such costs and expenses, and as the services of both the receiver and the attorneys in the original equitable petition were concluded by the order of transfer, there existed no reason why, before the transfer was made, the expenses of raising the fund transferred should not be paid."

And the same rule apparently has been held applicable in favor of the

But a claim for attachment costs where the attachment lien is vacated by the adjudication and not preserved for the benefit of the estate is not a lien upon the property coming into the bankruptcy court nor is it entitled to priority of payment, ante, § 1485.

sheriff where the attachment lien is not preserved.⁹⁵ But such latter holding seems entirely wrong in principle. The sheriff's costs are a debt of the attaching creditor. They are not at all analogous to receivers' or assignees' charges, incurred in equity for the benefit of all. A sheriff's costs on attachment are not in and of themselves a lien on the funds; they are simply part of the attaching creditor's judgment lien. The judgment for costs in attachment is like the rest of the judgment in favor of one party against the other—"and that he do recover his costs herein" is the ordinary formula—and the court officer is not a party and has not an independent lien. His rights rise no higher than those of his principal—the judgment creditor; and there is no reason why one part of the judgment creditor's lien—that for his costs—should be unaffected by the debtor's bankruptcy whilst the rest of it is affected thereby.

§ 1619. Where Attachment Really for Benefit of All, Creditor Entitled to Reimbursement.—Where, however, an attachment suit has in reality been brought for the benefit of all the creditor may be entitled (although not in every State nor in every case) to reimbursement of his costs and expenses. Thus, where the state statute provides for such priority in cases of subsequent sequestrations by receivers, assignees, etc., the same priority may be allowed under § 64 (b) (5).⁹⁶

Again, where property which had been concealed or transferred by the bankrupt, has been recovered through the efforts of the creditor, the creditor may be entitled to reimbursement, under § 64 (b) (2), though such efforts be taken in the form of an attachment, emergency existing.

§ 1620. Whether Extent of Lien May Be Fixed by State Court before Surrender.—It has been held impertinence for the state court to fix the amount of the lien upon the assets in favor of its own officers, at least in state insolvency proceedings suspended by the Bankrupt Act; and that the extent and validity thereof should be left to the bankruptcy court for determination.

Compare, inferentially (only indirectly in point), In re Hays, 24 A. B. R. 691, 181 Fed. 674 (C. C. A. Ohio): "The relation of the assignee to the estate of the bankrupt made it manifestly proper that he render his account to the bankruptcy court, and have there determined the questions of his compensation and disbursements in executing the trust."

In re Rogers, 8 A. B. R. 723 (D. C. Ga.): "The trustee either has or has not the right to the possession of the assets of the bankrupt in the hands of the temporary receiver of the State court. * * * If, then, the proceedings are suspended, as is clearly the effect of the bankruptcy law (this being a State insolvency proceeding) the State court has no right or authority to fix the fees of its receiver having charge of the property and less right to refuse to turn over the same until those fees have been paid by the proper officer of the Bankrupt court. * * * Should such a precedent be recognized, it may not be impossible that in a large number of bankruptcy cases the assets might suffer from a mulcting process of this sort before they reach the hands of the officers appointed under the act of Congress to administer and distribute them."

And there is no good reason for applying a different rule where the custody of the state court is under nullified legal liens,⁹⁷ assignments and receiverships, unless perhaps under the doctrine that as to the insolvency proceedings the court was absolutely without jurisdiction in any event, whilst in the other cases the state court's jurisdiction was good until bankruptcy intervened.

It was held not proper for the state court to make the order turning over the assets conditional on the payment of the receivership expenses where the assets had not been converted into money, and that, under such circumstances, the extent and validity of the lien was to be left to the discretion of the bankruptcy court.⁹⁸

Hanson v. Stephens, 11 A. B. R. 172, 116 Ga. 722, wherein the court says: "While a fund raised by the sale of the property of an insolvent debtor, through the medium of a receiver under the orders of a State court, may, on the application of a trustee, appointed after an adjudication of such debtor as a bankrupt, for a transfer of such fund in the State court to him, be charged with the cost and expenses of converting the property of the debtor into cash, yet after the property of a debtor has been seized under the order of a State court and placed in the hands of a temporary receiver, and after the adjudication of such person as a bankrupt, and before the conversion of his property into cash has been made by the receiver, the trustee, on application to the State court, is entitled to the possession of the property for the purpose of being sold and administered in the court of bankruptcy; and it is error on the part of the judge of the State court to order the transfer of such property to the trustee on condition that the fees for the attorneys and receiver shall be first paid.

"Where no fund is in the hands of the receiver, out of which such payments may be made, the persons claiming to be paid out of the property must be remitted to the bankruptcy court for the adjudication and establishment of their respective claims."

Contra, Mauran v. Carpet Lining Co., 6 A. B. R. 734, 23 R. I. 324: "In so doing, however, the question of procedure arises, whether the expenses already incurred shall be first paid out of the fund, or whether the whole fund shall be surrendered and our receiver sent to the Federal court to ask for his fees and expenses. We think that the former is the proper course for several reasons.

"A receiver is an officer of the court, holding property under its order for the benefit of the party entitled to it. All courts therefore hold that the receiver should be paid from the fund, as a part of the expenses of the proceeding. It would greatly embarrass courts in securing good receivers if this rule should not be adhered to. They should not be subjected to the uncertainty, inconvenience and delay of awaiting other proceedings and of seeking their pay from other courts."

⁹⁷. Instance, In re Hecox, 21 A. B. R. 314, 164 Fed. 823 (C. C. A. Colo.).

⁹⁸. Contra, Wilson v. Parr, 8 A. B. R. 230, 115 Ga. 629.

It has also been held improper for the state court to order the sale of the assets for the purpose of raising the money to pay such charges.

But at all events, in cases where the assets were in the State bankruptcy or insolvency court, the extent and validity of the lien must be left to the United States bankruptcy court for determination;¹ and it will be considered an impropriety, which may be disregarded, for the state court to attempt to fix them.²

And yet as to receiverships and assignments superseded by bankruptcy, at any rate, the rule seems to be that it is not improper for the State court to settle its receiver's or assignee's account before turning over the assets.³

Obiter, In re Watts and Sachs, 190 U. S. 1, 35, 10 A. B. R. 113: “* * * but it remained for the State court to transfer the assets, settle the accounts of its receiver, and close its connection with the matter. Errors, if any, committed in so doing could be rectified in due course and in the designated way.”

But at any rate if the State court receiver voluntarily turns over the property to the bankrupts, under order of the State court, and then the bankruptcy court takes possession, the State court has lost jurisdiction to determine allowances to its receiver, even though the State court had obtained possession originally more than four months before the bankruptcy.

In re Rogers & Stefani, 19 A. B. R. 566, 156 Fed. 267 (D. C. Ark.): “This case, therefore, stands in this attitude, the State court, by its own orders, caused its receiver to surrender the bankrupts' estate to the bankrupts, in whose possession it was subsequently seized by the trustee in bankruptcy. Afterwards that court made an order fixing the allowance of its receiver, his attorney, and its clerk, and made such allowance a preferred claim upon the assets of the bankrupt in the hands of the trustee, and caused the same to be certified to the Bankrupt Court accordingly. In effect the making of his order was tantamount to an effort on the part of the State court to administer, as far as this order went, the estate of the bankrupt, rightfully and previously in the possession of the bankrupt court.”

The statutory rate of compensation under the State law cannot be considered binding upon the Bankruptcy Court.

In re Hays, 24 A. B. R. 691, 181 Fed. 674 (C. C. A. Ohio): “The referee took the view, and we think correctly, that the right to commissions under the Ohio Statute, rather than under the Bankruptcy Act, was not a matter of fixed legal right, inasmuch as the assignment had never been completed and had in fact existed but a short time previous to the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings.”

§ 1621. Only Expenses and Compensation for Services Beneficial to Estate and Reasonable, Allowed.—Only such expenses and compensation as were incurred, or earned, in performing services beneficial to the estate or necessary to its preservation, and that are reasonable in amount, may be allowed as part of the lien.⁴

Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 A. B. R. 1: "We are not prepared to go further than to allow compensation for services which were beneficial to the estate. Beyond that point, we must throw the risk of his conduct on the assignee, as he was chargeable with knowledge of what might happen."

In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 683, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I.): "From the time the assignor declares his insolvency by making an assignment, his property must be held equitably for the benefit of his creditors, and he can do nothing which will embarrass or prejudice them in realizing therefrom, whether the result is that they are administered under the common law assignment or ultimately go into the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy. Therefore, in no event can he impress on them a lien for any amount of compensation arbitrarily agreed on. Anything in this direction beyond what would be reasonable and equitable would be contrary to the policy of the law, and would be declared invalid by the court having jurisdiction of the trust if the assignment is worked out at common law, or by the court in bankruptcy if the property finally comes under its control. * * *

"Therefore, in the present case, the District Court should ascertain and determine whether, under all the circumstances, the petitioners are equitably entitled to their disbursements, or any part thereof, reasonable allowances for their services, and protection against outstanding claims for rent."

Thus, attorney's services to an assignee that are beneficial to the estate, rendered before the adjudication in bankruptcy, may form part of the assignee's lien upon the assets turned over, where the assignment itself provides for priority of expenses out of the assigned property.⁵ And an attorney who represents certain creditors, or their agents, in an attempt to administer the debtor's assets so as to avoid bankruptcy proceedings, may be entitled to compensation; and the creditors, or their agents, may be allowed therefor on accounting to the estate, should the debtor be subsequently adjudged bankrupt.⁶

But attorney's services in preparing the deed of assignment are not entitled to a place in the lien upon the assets thus turned over;⁷ though they may be proved as a general claim against the bankrupt's estate.⁸ Nor

In re Zier & Co., 11 A. B. R. 527 (D. C. Ind., affirmed 15 A. B. R. 648): "The reason of this rule is that general creditors should pay for services which have actually benefited them. It was never intended to make them pay for unsuccessful assaults upon their interests as well as resistance to those assaults. The suit in the Floyd Circuit Court was collusive and fraudulent. It was fraudulent as against general creditors in bankruptcy, because it permitted the manager of an insolvent corporation to take from its assets a sum equal to one-third of them, and to apply that sum upon the claims of particular creditors. Its natural and inevitable result was to uphold and protect fraudulent preferences, while the bankruptcy proceedings were in the interest of all the creditors alike. Watts, as attorney for the receiver of the Floyd Circuit Court, aided in every possible way in the promotion of this result."

In re Zier & Co., 15 A. B. R. 648, 142 Fed. 102 (affirming 11 A. B. R. 527): "Nor is it material to the present issue that the Supreme Court (In re Watts and Sachs, supra) held that these parties 'entertained the conviction in good faith that the custody of the State court could not be lawfully interfered with by the bankruptcy court,' and were acting erroneously, but not in contempt of the District Court, and so discharged them from the adjudication of that court for contempt. The services of the appellants were persistent in obstructing both resort to and proceedings in bankruptcy, and caused injury and expense to the estate which were unaffected by their motives; so that their incidental service in making sundry collections and negotiating settlements is not entitled to independent recognition for allowance."

But allowance may be made for services and for reimbursement of expenses occurring after the filing of the bankruptcy petition as well as before, if the assignee remains in possession.

In re Hays, 24 A. B. R. 691, 181 Fed. 674 (C. C. A. Ohio): "We think it clear the view that under the decision in Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 Am. B. R. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 710, 47 L. Ed. 1165, the assignee was entitled to compensation for such services and disbursements as he had made which benefited the estate. In view of the relations of the assignee to the estate subsequent to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, he included in the same rule the services and disbursements up to the time of the appointment of the trustee in bankruptcy. In our opinion the referee took the right view. It is true that after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy the assignee took the risk of having his proceedings under the assignment set aside, but as no application for receivership was made, the assignee may not improperly be treated (with respect to the settlement of his accounts) as a quasi receiver during the pendency of the proceedings for adjudication in bankruptcy."

§ 1622. Others' Rights to Be Worked Out Through Assignee or Receiver.—And the rights of the assignee's attorney and others serving the assignee or receiver, in the bankrupt fund are to be worked out through the assignee or receiver, and by virtue of the latter's lien; and such attorney or other person has no independent standing in the bankruptcy court.¹⁰

Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 A. B. R. 1: "The more difficult question is how to deal with the services rendered to the voluntary assignee. The claim for them must be worked out through the assignee, and cannot be put higher than his claim for allowance, supposing that they had been paid."

In re Byerly, 12 A. B. R. 186, 128 Fed. 637 (D. C. Pa.): "As pointed out in Randolph v. Scruggs, the claim as is now presented must be worked out through the accountant in his former capacity as assignee and cannot be put any higher than an allowance to him, for necessary counsel fees paid."

Thus, the attorney may not except to the referee's ruling thereon nor prosecute error nor appeal.¹¹ So, also, must be worked out the rights of parties furnishing material to the state receiver; and lienholders thereon will have no rights in the bankruptcy court unless the property can be shown to have come into the custody of that court.¹²

§ 1623. How Assignee's or Receiver's Rights to Be Presented.—The assignee or receiver in the State court should present his claim to the bankruptcy court by way of a petition, or perhaps deposition for proof of a secured debt, like any other party claiming a lien on a fund in the custody of the bankruptcy court.¹³

And where the assignee submits his account to a court of bankruptcy for judicial examination, he will be bound by its determination.¹⁴

§ 1623½. Adverse Claimant's Rights Preserved.—Properly, the order of surrender should provide that the turning over of the property should be subject to the rights of adverse claimants and others; although the failure of the order to specifically so provide could not prejudice the claimant's rights.

Thus, where the trustee in bankruptcy makes distribution of the property, or turns it back to the bankrupt on confirmation of a composition, without having the court first pass upon an adverse claimant's rights, the trustee may be held, in proper cases, personally liable to such adverse claimant.¹⁵

And the finding of the bankruptcy court, as to the amount to be surrendered by the assignee, where made on proper notice and hearing as to funds still in the assignee's hands, or voluntarily accounted for by him, may be the basis for the suit on the bond.¹⁷

However, the surety upon the assignee's bond will not be bound by the bankruptcy court's order of accounting, where such surety has not been notified nor allowed to defend.¹⁹

Inferentially, In re Watts, 190 U. S. 1, 10 A. B. The Bankruptcy Law is paramount, and the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in bankruptcy, when properly invoked, in the administration of the affairs of insolvent persons and corporations, is essentially exclusive. Necessarily when like proceedings in the State courts are determined by the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, care has to be taken to avoid collision in respect of property in possession of the state courts. Such cases are not cases of adverse possession or of possession in enforcement of pre-existing liens, or in aid of the bankruptcy proceedings. The general rule as between courts of concurrent jurisdiction is that property already in possession of the receiver of one court cannot rightfully be taken from him without the court's consent, by the receiver of another court appointed in a subsequent suit, but that rule can have only a qualified application where winding up proceedings are superseded by those in bankruptcy as to which the jurisdiction is not concurrent."

Potts v. Smith Mfg. Co., 12 A. B. R. 392, 25 Pa. Superior Ct. 209: "The Pennsylvania Act of June 4, 1901, relating to insolvency is suspended by reason of the existence of the Federal Bankrupt Act of July 1, 1898, and does not become operative as to the persons and subjects to which the Federal act applies."

§ 1626. Basis of Supersedence, Paramount Authority Conferred by Constitution, and Necessary Implication from § 70.—The superseding of State Bankruptcy and State Insolvency proceedings comes about from the fact that the Constitution of the United States in Article 1, § 8, authorizes Congress "to establish * * * uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States;"²¹ and that § 71 of the original Act [since stricken out on Amendment], providing that "Proceedings commenced under State Insolvency laws before the passage of this Act shall not be affected by it," necessarily implies the superseding of all other classes of State insolvency proceedings than those expressly excepted.

when Congress has legislated upon the subject by the enactment of a bankrupt law the power of the States is controlled and suspended."

Mauran v. Carpet Lining Co., 6 A. B. R. 737, 23 R. I. 324: "The plenary and paramount power of Congress to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States,' says Hall, J., in In re Deposit and Savings Inst., Fed. Cas., No. 12, 211, p. 141, 'is given in express terms by the Constitution of the United States. It is therefore very clear that when Congress has exercised the power thus conferred their action must necessarily control or limit the exercise of the power of the States over the same subject matter; and that whenever any State legislation, or any action of the State courts, comes practically into actual conflict with the proper execution of the laws of Congress, constitutionally passed under such grant of power, State legislation and the jurisdiction and action of the State courts must yield to the paramount authority of the national government.'

"The object and intent of the national bankruptcy law is to place the administration of the affairs of insolvent persons and corporations exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Federal courts sitting as courts of bankruptcy; and the enactment of the national bankrupt law now in force suspended all action and proceedings under State insolvent laws not commenced before the passage of the national Bankruptcy Act, at least in all cases provided for by such Bankruptcy Act. In re Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Biss. 162, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 43, Fed. Cas. No. 9, 441; U. S. Bankruptcy Act, § 70, last clause."

Herron Co. v. Superior Ct., 8 A. B. R. 493, 136 Calif. 279: "The provisions in the Constitution of the United States conferring upon Congress the power 'to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States,' of necessity makes any act of Congress pass upon that subject the supreme law of the land, and it was at a very early day determined that the effect of such action of Congress is to suspend and supersede the operation of any State law of insolvency whenever there is any conflict between the two. There can be no concurrent jurisdiction in the two sovereignties over the same subject, and, as the people of the several States have yielded to the United States the power to enact laws upon this subject, it follows that when the United States has enacted a law the power of the State to enforce its own law upon that subject, whether it be similar or different, must yield to what is the supreme law of the land."

Wescott v. Berry, 4 A. B. R. 265, 45 Atl. 352 (Sup. Ct. N. H.): "The power of the several States to enact insolvency laws is subject to the power of Congress to establish 'uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.' Accordingly a general bankruptcy act suspends State insolvency laws from the time it goes into effect. * * * The provisions that 'proceedings commenced under State insolvency laws before the passage of this act shall not be affected by it' seems conclusive evidence that this was not the intention of Congress; for the provision that this act shall not affect proceedings begun under the State law before its passage necessarily implies that no proceedings can be brought under State insolvency laws after that date."

Carling v. Seymour Lumber Co., 8 A. B. R. 36, 113 Fed. 483 (C. C. A. Ga., reversing In re Macon Lbr. Co., 7 A. B. R. 66): "The Constitution limits the power of a State to legislate on this subject, for it is not permitted to so legislate as to impair the obligation of contracts. U. S. Const., art. I, § 10. This act is clearly a State insolvency law, within the power of the State to enact when the Congress has not exercised its power to pass a uniform bankrupt law. The administration of the estates of insolvents by the State courts under this statute would be inconsistent with the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of bankruptcy under the bankrupt law. The passage of the bankrupt law by Congress, therefore suspended the operation of the State statute. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122-186; Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201-210; Butler v. Gorely, 146 U. S. 303-314."

Ketcham v. McNamara, 6 A. B. R. 163, 72 Conn. 709: "The Constitution of the United States gives Congress power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States. At the date of the assignment to the plaintiff such laws had been established. They covered, so far as respects the rights of the parties to the case at bar, the same field previously occupied by the insolvent laws of this State, and consequently they superseded them. * * *

"The Act of 1898 also differs from that of 1867 in that it makes direct reference to its effect upon State insolvent laws. Its concluding provision is that 'proceedings commenced under State insolvency laws before the passage of this act shall not be affected by it.' The necessary implication is that any such proceedings commenced after the passage of the act are affected by it."

Parmenter Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton, 1 A. B. R. 41, 172 Mass. 178: "The only saving clause affecting the jurisdiction of the State Courts provides for cases commenced in those courts before the passage of the act.

"The plain implication is that proceedings commenced in the State court after the passage of the act are unauthorized. This is in accordance with the earlier language giving the statute full force and effect from the time of its passage, except that the filing of petitions is to be postponed for a short time.

"We are of opinion that the language was chosen to make clear the purpose of Congress that the new system of bankruptcy should supersede all State laws in regard to insolvency from the date of the passage of the statute."

§ 1627. State Bankruptcy and Insolvency Laws Not Prohibited.

—This constitutional provision does not prohibit the states-enacting State bankruptcy laws.²²

Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122: "This establishment of uniformity is perhaps incompatible with State legislation on that part of the subject to which the act of Congress may extend. * * * It does not appear to be a violent construction of the constitution, and is certainly a convenient one, to consider the power of the States, as existing over such cases as the laws of the Union may not reach; but, be this as it may, the power granted to Congress may be exercised or declined, as the wisdom of that body shall decide. It, in the opinion of Congress uniform laws concerning bankruptcies ought not to be established, it does not follow that partial laws may not exist, or that State legislation on the subject must cease. It is not the mere existence of the power, but its exercise, which is incompatible with the exercise of the same power by the States. It is not the right to establish these uniform laws, but their actual establishment, which is inconsistent with the partial acts of the States."

Potts v. Smith Mfg. Co., 12 A. B. R. 392, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 209: "It is not contended that the power vested in Congress by the Constitution of the United States is exclusive of that of the States, and that there remains no power in the latter to legislate upon the subject. It is an established doctrine that the powers granted to Congress are only exclusive of the powers upon the same subject existing in the States when an exclusive power is expressly delegated to Congress, or there is such incompatibility in the exercise of it by the States as to produce the necessary conclusion that it is exclusive in Congress. Where there is no such exclusive grant to Congress, of such incompatibility, concurrent power remains with the States. Where, however, in the case of concurrent powers Congress has exercised its powers on a given subject, the control of the State over that subject is by such action of Congress prohibited. 1 Kent's Com. 390."

Singer v. Nat. Bedstead Co., 11 A. B. R. 27 (N. J. Ch.): "A more or less indefinite, and I think misleading, notion has sometimes been expressed that the Constitution has committed to Congress the whole subject of bankruptcy and insolvency for appropriate legislation, and that therefore whenever Congress passes a general bankrupt law, which it has done four times, each time naming, it a 'uniform system of bankruptcy,' all power on the part of the States to legislate upon the subject of bankruptcy or insolvency is immediately suspended. The premise may be deemed to be correct, but it seems to me that the conclusion is entirely erroneous. Congress is not obliged to legislate on the whole subject of bankruptcy, it may deal with only one or several parts. It is the enactment by Congress of a law applicable to a particular case which suspends any State law which otherwise would be applicable to that case. If every case of bankruptcy or insolvency were within the operation of a National Bankrupt Act, then no possible State law on the subject of bankruptcy or insolvency would have any vigor, but every such law would ipso facto be suspended." Quoted further at § 1628.

Analogously, In re Milling Co., 16 A. B. R. 455, 457, 144 Fed. 314 (D. C. Tex.): "The prohibition against impairing the obligation of contracts * * * is directed against the States only, and there is no other clause in the constitution laying a like inhibition upon Congress."

Some of the states have very complete bankruptcy laws providing for both involuntary and voluntary proceedings, as for instance, Massachusetts, whose law is called an insolvency law, yet possesses all the distinguishing features of a true bankruptcy law, even to the discharge of debtors from the remainder of their debts. So, also, with the following states: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island, California, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Nevada, Pennsylvania^{22a} and North Dakota. But as to Pennsylvania, one case holds contra.²³

The following States have provisions for assignments, or for the discharge of the debtor, but not for involuntary proceedings: New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

It naturally occurs to the mind that for a state to pass a law discharging a debtor from his debts would contravene § 10 of the same Article of the United States Constitution, providing that "no State shall * * * pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts;" and, in truth, so would such law, were it made to apply to obligations arising outside the boundaries of the state or arising before the law was passed. But these state insolvency laws discharging debtors from their obligations uniformly have been held not to be retroactive and to be applicable only to debts contracted within the state after their enactment; and thus, under the familiar rule that an existing statute is to be read into every contract as a part of its terms the same as if expressly written into it, the courts have held such discharges do not impair the obligation of contracts made within the state after the law has been enacted. It was impliedly part of the very contract itself that its obligations should be liable to be discharged in the event that the debtor was adjudged insolvent.²⁴

But these state insolvency laws discharging debtors from their obligations uniformly have been held to be applicable only to debts contracted within the state.

Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. 223: "Insolvent laws of one State cannot discharge the contracts of citizens of other States, because they have no extraterritorial operation, and consequently the tribunal sitting under them, unless in cases where a citizen of such other State voluntarily becomes a party to the proceeding, has no jurisdiction in the case. Legal notice cannot be given, and consequently there can be no obligation to appear, and of course there can be no legal default. The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore affirmed with costs."

Smith v. Parsons, 1 Ohio 236: "State insolvent laws discharging debtors from their debts upon surrendering up all their property are valid as to contracts made between citizens of the same state, within its jurisdiction, after the law is enacted."

Analogously, In re Milling Co., 16 A. B. R. 454, 457, 144 Fed. 314 (D. C. Tex.): "The Bankruptcy Act which was of force at the time of the execution of the two notes in question, entered into and formed part of the contract of the parties as if it had been expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms."

As to debts owed outside the state, the creditor is usually required to consent to the proceedings before he will be allowed to share in the dividends. Perhaps, indeed, it is held that he waives his constitutional right to object to a discharge of his claim against the debtor, by merely proving his claim in the proceedings. However that may be, state bankruptcy laws are legal and are on the statute books of many of the states.²⁵

§ 1628. But Suspended during Existence of Federal Bankruptcy Law, as to All Classes Subjected to Latter.—But whenever Congress does pass a bankruptcy law, the law supersedes, as long as it is in existence, all state insolvency or bankruptcy laws relative to persons and acts declared therein to be subjects of bankruptcy; and proceedings under the state insolvency laws regarding debtors who could, upon the doing of the particular act complained of, be subjected to the operation of the federal bankruptcy law are absolutely void, whether or not federal bankruptcy proceedings actually follow; the constitutional provision making the law passed in pursuance of it paramount.²⁶

However, as it obviously must be classed among the insolvency laws of the State, its operation remains suspended as to any matter over which a court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction except in so far as the Bankruptcy Act preserves and enforces such act.”

Few of the cases state the complete rule as thus given, and it will be necessary to consider the different modified forms of the rule as the various decisions give them.

Singer v. Nat'l Bedstead Co., 11 A. B. R. 279 (N. J. Ch.): “As I read the present Bankrupt Act, the intention of Congress is that every case of bankruptcy or insolvency of which the bankrupt court has jurisdiction is to be dealt with exclusively by that court. The intention of the act is to supply the law of certain cases, and to supply a special court to enforce that law. All other cases of bankruptcy or insolvency are left to be dealt with as the State Legislature may see fit. * * *

“It may be conceded that Congress can provide a law for only a limited number of cases of bankruptcy and insolvency and expressly prohibit the enactment of any other bankrupt or insolvent laws by the States. For present purposes the concession may be that Congress might pass a voluntary system of bankruptcy, and enact that there should be no other law on the subject of bankruptcy or insolvency, voluntary or involuntary, throughout the United States. Even if this be a sound view, it need not be considered, because the present Bankrupt Act contains no words prohibiting States from passing insolvent or bankrupt laws which deal with cases which are not within the operation of the National Bankrupt Act—which are expressly excluded from it. It would be a singular result, indeed, if because Congress has not seen fit to provide a bankrupt law applicable to corporations engaged in operating railroads, steamboats, insurance companies, laundries, livery stables and large numbers of other business enterprises, the inference must be drawn that Congress did not intend that any bankrupt or insolvent laws should be applied to this class of corporations, but that State insolvency laws applicable to them should be suspended.

“So, also, where the corporation might be within the operation of the Federal Bankrupt Act, if it had committed an act of bankruptcy, it remains, it seems to me, without the scope of that act, and within the full operation of State acts in respect of a charge of insolvency which includes no act of bankruptcy as defined by the Bankrupt Act.

“Of course, as I have intimated, it may be admitted that Congress has the power to say in the Bankrupt Act that no natural person or corporation, subject to its provisions, shall be liable to be involuntarily deprived of his or its property because of insolvency, at the instance of his or its creditors, under any State statute or in any State court. Congress, however, has said nothing of this kind, nor do I think can such an intention be gathered in any way from any or all of the provisions of the Bankrupt Act. * * *

"When the present Bankruptcy Act was under discussion in Congress, my recollection is that a large and influential body of our national legislators earnestly proposed to enact merely a voluntary law—a law under which debtors could come into a bankrupt court, lay down their assets and get a discharge. Would anybody seriously argue that if such a 'uniform system of bankruptcy' had been enacted by Congress it would have had the effect to suspend the operation of State bankruptcy and insolvent laws under which insolvent debtors or fraudulent insolvent debtors are brought involuntarily into court and stripped of their assets for the benefit of their creditors?"

"The present 'system of bankruptcy,' which Congress saw fit to enact in 1898, does not pretend to cover the whole field of either voluntary or involuntary bankruptcy and insolvency. Corporations are not allowed to become voluntary bankrupts. [Since changed by Amendment of 1910.] Large classes of natural persons and corporations are excluded absolutely from the operation of the involuntary system. All corporations as well as natural persons are excluded if their debts do not amount to $1,000. It would be a most extraordinary state of affairs if transportation companies, insurance companies and many other kinds of business corporations not within the classes enumerated in the present Bankrupt Act, and also manufacturing, mercantile and trading corporations whose debts do not amount to $1,000, could not be subjected to the operation of our New Jersey statute, which provides a means for winding them up and distributing their assets. The result would be that such corporations, when insolvent, could not be wound up at all at the instance of their creditors. The Bankrupt Act, § 4 (b), expressly provides that national banks and banks incorporated under State or Federal laws shall not be adjudged involuntary bankrupts, the intention plainly being to leave these respective banking corporations to be wound up under national or State statutes particularly applicable to them.

"It is perfectly plain that State systems of voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy may remain today in full operation upon large numbers of insolvent natural persons and corporations who cannot be brought within the operations of the National Bankrupt Act under any possible state of facts.

"It is also, it seems to me, equally plain that a State system of involuntary insolvency also remains in full operation upon persons and corporations, who are as possible bankrupts within the operation of the National Bankruptcy Act, so far as the State system deals with cases of which the bankrupt courts under the Federal act can obtain no jurisdiction. To state the point otherwise, I may say that to my mind there is no distinction between an insolvent insurance company, railroad company or laundry company, which owes $1,000 of debts and has committed an act of bankruptcy, on the one hand, and an insolvent manufacturing, mercantile or trading company which has committed no act of bankruptcy, or does not owe debts amounting to $1,000, on the other hand, in respect of the operation of the National Bankrupt Act and the New Jersey Insolvent Corporation Act. In neither instance is a case presented of which the Federal bankrupt court can take cognizance. Each case, therefore, is within the full and complete operation of the New Jersey statute."

In re F. A. Hall Co., 10 A. B. R. 96, 121 Fed. 992 (D. C. Conn.): "* * * by its terms, it went into full force and effect upon its passage, and, ipso facto, at once suspended and superseded all State insolvent laws. Whether it cuts any deeper it is unnecessary to inquire at the present juncture. It is not important that by an express provision of the Bankruptcy Act a corporation is excepted from the category of those who are permitted to enjoy its privileges as voluntary bankrupts. A way is provided by which the district courts can and do acquire and retain jurisdiction of the property which, before the passage of the act, could and would have been administered by the probate court."

Parmenter Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton, 1 A. B. R. 40, 172 Mass. 178: "The act is 'to go into full force and effect upon its passage.' That is to say, the rights of all persons in the particulars to which the act refers are to be determined by the act from the time of its passage. Among these rights is the right to have insolvent estates settled in bankruptcy under the provisions of the act, including the rights to have acts of bankruptcy affecting the settlement of estates determined by it (§ 3), to have the rights of debtors to file voluntary petitions and of creditors to file involuntary petitions determined by it (§ 4), and to have preferences and liens governed by the provisions of it (§§ 60 and 67).

"These various provisions affecting the rights and conduct of debtors and creditors are different from those previously existing in most of the States, and perhaps different from those found in the laws of any State; and they supersede all conflicting provisions."

In re Bruss-Ritter Co., 1 A. B. R. 58, 90 Fed. 651 (D. C. Wis.): "The power of Congress to enact a general bankruptcy statute is secured by constitutional provision. In the absence of such congressional enactment the States are free to provide for insolvency relief of limited extent; but when Congress exercises its authority by a general enactment all State action is suspended from such time, and subject only to such limitations as may be prescribed in the act. Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201, 209-10. As remarked in Platt v. Archer, 9 Blatch. 559; Fed. Cas. No. 11,213, this authority of Congress 'is paramount and exclusive, and so is the jurisdiction of the District Court thereunder.' The doctrine thus stated is well established, and is unquestioned upon this motion."

In re McKee, 1 A. B. R. 311 (Ky. County Court): "To whatever extent Congress has undertaken to provide remedies and prescribe procedure, its authority, being unquestionably paramount, State statutes designed for the same or similar purposes must give way. It cannot be, for a moment, presumed that Congress, having full power to prescribe the sole method of procedure, intended to allow concurrent jurisdiction to State courts, which might, acting under different statutes and governed by different precedents, reach entirely different conclusions than those entertained by the Federal courts, nor can it be reasonably contended, that it was ever contemplated, that the same, or similar, remedies, should be exercised by both State and Federal courts, thereby unnecessarily subjecting all parties to double labor and annoyance, and vastly increasing the costs of administering these trusts. Any other construction of this act must ignore the cardinal principle of uniformity, in the settlement and distribution of insolvent estates, that was made the basis for the constitutional provision, under which all national acts of bankruptcy have been passed."

§ 1629. State Insolvency and Bankruptcy Laws Ipso Facto Suspended.—State insolvency and bankruptcy laws are ipso facto suspended (as to the same classes covered by the Federal Bankruptcy Act) no matter whether federal bankruptcy proceedings follow in the particular case involved or not: the state court will not have jurisdiction.²⁷

Taylor*, 32 Ia. 209. These cases recognize the paramount authority of the Act of Congress, but hold that the State statute is operative up to the time when proceedings are instituted under the National Bankrupt Act. The efficiency of the State statute is made to depend upon action or nonaction under the Bankrupt law. This seems a foundation entirely too unsubstantial upon which to base the right to proceed under the State law, as to persons and subjects affected by the National Bankrupt Act. The law would be vain which would invite legal process liable to be avoided and defeated at any stage of the proceedings by the assertion of another and paramount authority; it should be effective for the purpose of carrying to conclusion proceedings instituted thereunder. It is conceded on all sides, however, that any proceedings under the insolvent law of the State might be rendered abortive by an insolvent debtor or his qualified creditors by filing a petition in bankruptcy where the debtor was subject to the operation of the National Bankrupt Act. The national and State laws are intended, in a large degree, to operate upon the same persons and property, and while there is a close resemblance in the methods of administration, the mode of procedure and remedies are not the same. There might, and doubtless would be, conflict in the operation of the national and State statutes. The latter must, therefore, yield to the former. The uniformity contemplated by the Constitution can only be secured through the Act of Congress, the prosecution of insolvent proceedings under the laws of the various States necessarily tending to confusion and lack of uniformity.

"In view of the manifest purpose of the constitutional provision on the subject of bankruptcy and the great weight of authority in support of the conclusion reached we feel constrained to hold that the Act of June 4, 1901, relating to insolvency, did not become operative, because of the existence of the bankruptcy law of the United States of July 1, 1898, as to the persons and subjects to which the latter act applies. The order of the court of June 23, 1903, vacating and setting aside the execution of the plaintiff is, therefore, reversed."

been repeatedly held to suspend the operation of State bankruptcy or State Insolvency Laws."

Some cases seem to hold that they are void only on the subsequent institution of federal bankruptcy proceedings; but on analysis such cases will be found not to be cases under state bankruptcy nor state insolvency laws but rather to be cases under division 1 or 2 of this chapter relating to the custody of property where there are legal liens nullified by bankruptcy, or where an assignment or receivership has been created, voidable only in case of bankruptcy within four months.

§ 1630. Not Suspended nor Inoperative as to Classes Not Covered by Federal Bankruptcy Act.—State insolvency and bankruptcy laws are not suspended nor rendered inoperative, nor void at all, as to those classes of persons exempted from, or not included within, the operation of the federal act.²⁸

Old Town Bank v. McCormick, 96 Md. 341, 10 A. B. R. 767: "This brings us to the real question in the case, namely, Is there any conflict between our Insolvent Law and the Federal Bankrupt Law? We have already transcribed the provisions of § 4, by which it appears that the defendant is expressly excepted from the provision of the act relating to involuntary bankruptcy, and therefore as to this class to which the defendant belongs (i. e., farmers or tillers of the soil) the Federal power has not been exercised. And it therefore follows that, if this class is not within the State law, there is no existing provision under which those embraced within it can be compelled to distribute their assets fairly and equally among their creditors. In Geery's Appeal, 43 Conn. 289, 21 Am. Rep. 653, it was said: 'The benefit of this principle [the equal distribution of a debtor's property without preference] cannot be denied to a creditor without doing him injustice. It is a remedy which he relied on in giving credit, and to which he is fairly entitled. If that remedy is not to be found in the Bankrupt Act, it will not be presumed that Congress intended to take away the remedy provided by the State. Congress having limited and restricted the operation of the Bankrupt Act, leaving a number of cases to which it does not apply, it will not be presumed that it was thereby intended to leave creditors in such cases entirely without remedy, as must be the case if the State law is entirely inoperative. But can it be properly or correctly said that any conflict can exist between the State and Federal law so long as the latter by express terms excludes from its operation the subject or class of persons expressly provided for by the State law? The power to enact insolvent or bankrupt laws is vested in the States, and it cannot be extinguished except by the establishment of a Federal system in conflict with the State law. And this Federal system of bankruptcy must be a genuine bankrupt law (Sturgis v. Crownshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. Ed. 529), or, in other words, as expressed in Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. Ed. 606, the power to pass a uniform system of bankruptcy must be actually exercised, and the State law must be in conflict with it in order to render the latter inoperative. The question, therefore, logically arises. Does the present Federal Bankrupt Law actually provide for involuntary proceedings against farmers? And the answer must be that it does not, but the answer of the defendant goes further and necessarily must do so in order to save his case. He says it is true that while this class is not included in, and is expressly excepted from, the involuntary feature of the system, yet it is included in the voluntary feature, and therefore it is within the scope of the national system. We cannot approve of this method of reasoning, not only because it would seem to be a 'contradiction in terms to say that cases excepted from the operation of the most important part of the act are included in its scope,' but because it would seem to involve the proposition that the Federal power can render inoperative the State insolvent laws applicable to involuntary insolvency, without establishing a genuine bankrupt law to take the place of the State law. As we have already seen, it has been held from an early day that it is only to the extent that Congress has actually legislated upon the subject that the statutes of the several States are suspended by its legislation. How, then, can it be said that a failure to legislate—in other words, an express exclusion—raises a conflict? But without pursuing this question further, it seems to us that the position taken by the defendant must necessarily lead to the conclusion that if the Congress of the United States can, by including this class in the voluntary part of the system, and excepting it from the involuntary part, withdraw it from the operation of our State Insolvent Law, it can do the same in regard to any two or more classes (as, for instance, merchants, traders, and corporations); and the result would be that, in spite of the failure on the part of Congress to establish a bankrupt law (that is, to actually exercise the power conferred by the Constitution to pass a genuine bankrupt law, State legislation would become inoperative, and creditors would be deprived of a remedy to which, as was said in Gerry's Appeal, 43 Conn. 289, 21 Am. Rep. 653, they are fairly entitled.

"But it was forcibly argued on the part of the defendants that § 70, subsection 'b,' of the Bankrupt Act of 1898, shows that it was the intention of Congress to substitute that act for every provision of every insolvent law of the several States. It provides as follows: 'Proceedings commenced under State insolvent laws before the passage of this act shall not be affected by it.' To sustain their view, the case of Parmenter Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton, 1 A. B. R. 39, 172 Mass. 178, decided in 1898 was relied on. But all this case decides is that the Federal act deprives the State court of jurisdiction to entertain jurisdiction in insolvency proceedings filed after 1st July, 1898, when the Federal act went into force. Or as the court said: 'The act is to go into full force and effect upon its passage. That is to say, the rights of all persons, in the particulars to which the act refers, are to be determined by the act from the time of its passage.' After mentioning a number of the rights which are determined by the act, the opinion continues: 'These various provisions affecting the rights and conduct of debtors and creditors are different from those previously existing in most of the States, and perhaps different from those found in the laws of any State, and they supersede all conflicting provisions.' In the concluding part of the opinion the distinguished judge who has recently been appointed chief justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts said that the language of § 70, subsection 'b,' 'was chosen to make clear the purpose of Congress that the new system of bankruptcy should supersede all State laws in regard to insolvency from the date of the passage of the act;' but necessarily this language means only that all conflicting provisions of the State law were thus superseded, for this is the well-settled proposition which he had just announced in a preceding sentence, and which we have quoted above. If, therefore, we are correct in the conclusion already reached, that there is no conflict between the provisions of our Insolvent Law and the present Bankrupt Law, it follows that the language of § 70 relied on by the defendant can have no influence upon our conclusion in this case."

"But again, it was urged that there is a distinction between this case and cases which arose under laws which did not include the class within its scope—as, for instance, where the Bankrupt Act applied only to debtors whose debts exceeded $300. It was held in Shephardson's Appeal, 36 Conn. 23, that in cases where the debts were less than $300 the State law was not suspended, and debtors of that class could be proceeded against under State laws. But the true rule was laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in Sturgis v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. Ed. 529, that the power of the State continues to exist over such cases as the Federal law does not reach. And, therefore, if cases involving involuntary proceedings against a class are not provided for by the Federal law, such cases are within the reach of the State law, in spite of the fact that the members of this same class may avail themselves of the voluntary feature; otherwise the rule laid down by Chief Justice Marshall would have to be changed so as to read that the power of the State exists only over such cases as are against natural persons or corporations not within any class provided for by any provision of the Federal law. If this were the rule, then, of course, it would follow, as contended, that the defendant, being of the class called 'Farmers,' and the Bankrupt Act having provided that he may avail himself of the voluntary feature, no case against him could be reached by the State law. But, in our opinion, this is not the proper view, for, as we have already said, it is not within the power of Congress to render inoperative the involuntary feature of State insolvent laws as to any particular class by excepting that class from the involuntary part of the national law. Otherwise the result would be that the State laws as to involuntary insolvency would become inoperative by the mere existence of the power of the United States to establish a system of involuntary bankruptcy. We have seen, however, that it is not the mere existence, but the exercise of the power to establish a genuine bankrupt law in conflict with the State laws, which renders the latter inoperative."

Herron Co. v. Superior Court, 8 A. B. R. 492, 68 Pac. 814, 136 Calif. 279: "If the Bankruptcy Act excepts a class of cases from its operation, either in express terms or by necessary implication, it must be considered that it was the intention of Congress not to interfere in that class of cases with the laws of the several States in reference thereto. The State laws will remain operative in all cases which are not within the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. * * * Congress may enact a bankruptcy act for certain classes of creditors, and leave to the several States the right to legislate upon the subject with reference to other classes. In such a case there can be no conflict of jurisdiction, as the legislation of the two governments is not upon the same subject. Each statute is operative within its own jurisdiction, and may be enforced without in any respect infringing upon the jurisdiction of the other.

"The Bankruptcy Act passed by Congress in 1898, is not operative upon all classes of creditors, or upon all classes of corporations."

Thus, in the case, The Old Town Bank v. McCormick, 96 Md. 341, the court held that a State insolvency law by which persons engaged chiefly in the tillage of the soil may be proceeded against in involuntary insolvency by their creditors, is not superseded as to such persons by the Federal Bankruptcy Act of 1898.

Again, unless a corporation is among the classes that can be proceeded against in bankruptcy it is still subject to the State insolvency law.²⁹

²⁹. Herron Co. v. Superior Court, 8 A. B. R. 492, 68 Pac. 814, 136 Calif. 279: A mining corporation before the

Nor are state insolvency or bankruptcy laws suspended as to those persons who have done acts not mentioned as acts of bankruptcy in the federal law but which are prohibited by or come within the purview of the state insolvency law: ³⁰

McCullough v. Goodhart, 3 A. B. R. 85 (Penn. Com. Pleas): “* * * the bankruptcy law of 1898 does not contain any enactment concerning absconding or concealed debtors, and therefore does not come in conflict in any way with the State law relating to domestic attachment.”

Nor as to acts committed before the passage of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.³¹

Other decisions hold broadly that the state insolvency proceedings are absolutely null and void and inoperative as to any person who, either involuntarily or voluntarily, could become subject to the operation of the federal bankruptcy law.

Littlefield v. Gray, 8 A. B. R. 409, 52 Atl. 925 (Me.): “The question here involved is whether the insolvency law of this State is superseded by the Bankruptcy Act of the United States as to debtors owing more than $300 and less than $1000.

“The insolvency law of this State is not wholly superseded by the Bankrupt Act, but when they come in conflict the latter must prevail. Damon's Appeal, 70 Me. 155. So far as the person and subject-matter fall within the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, and are within the jurisdiction of the bankrupt court, the State Insolvency Law is superseded and cannot be revoked. Bank v. Ware, 95 Me. 395, 50 Atl. 24; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Ex parte Eames, 2 Story, 324, Fed. Cas. No. 4,237.

“In the case before us, Blackington, the insolvent debtor, owing less than $1,000, was petitioned into insolvency in 1899 by his creditors, while the United States Bankrupt Act was in force. The State insolvency court took jurisdiction, decreed him insolvent, and appointed the plaintiff assignee. This action is to set aside a conveyance by Blackington, as a preference under the State law.”

“Under the Bankrupt Law, Blackington could have gone into bankruptcy voluntarily, but could not be forced in by his creditors under involuntary proceedings. He was asked to go in and refused. It was argued with great ability that in that condition the State insolvency law may be invoked. Plausible as the argument is, we do not regard it as sound. At any time after proceedings under the State Law, Blackington could have voluntarily invoked the Bankrupt law, and thereupon all proceedings under the State law would necessarily cease. The test of jurisdiction under the State law does not rest upon the volition of the debtor. If his person and property are or may be subject to the Bankrupt Law, then as to him and his possession the State insolvency law is in abeyance and powerless. Upon any other view, it would be in the power of the debtor at any time to oust the jurisdiction of the State court after it had been assumed. This would result in great confusion. It may be avoided by holding, as we do, that where the person falls within the purview of the Bankrupt Act, whether by voluntary or involuntary proceedings, the State insolvency law must be silent.

30. Singer v. Nat'l Bedstead Mfg. Co., 11 A. B. R. 276 (N. J. Ch.), which was a case of dissolution of a corporation.

31. Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell, 11 A. B. R. 603 (Sup. Ct. New Mex.).

"When this case was previously before the court (52 Atl. 925), we said that there might be cases where the insolvency court would have jurisdiction, notwithstanding the Bankruptcy Act. If such cases can arise, it can only be in instances not within the purview of the Bankrupt Act, where its provisions cannot be invoked either by the debtor or his creditors. This case does not fall within that rule.

"It follows that the insolvency court was without jurisdiction in this case, and an appointment of plaintiff as assignee was unauthorized and void. He therefore has no standing in court."

In re F. A. Hall Co., 10 A. B. R. 96, 121 Fed. 992 (D. C. Conn.): "It is not important that by an express provision of the Bankruptcy Act a corporation is excepted from the category of those who are permitted to enjoy its privileges as voluntary bankruptcy. A way is provided by which the district courts can and do acquire and retain jurisdiction of the property which, before the passage of the act, could and would have been administered by the probate courts."

There is considerable force in the argument of the court in Littlefield v. Gray, and in In re Hall, supra, that when the framers of the Constitution gave over to Congress the function of making uniform laws "on the subject" of "bankruptcies" throughout the United States, it must have been their intention that the laws passed by Congress in relation to "bankruptcies," whether including or excluding certain classes of persons, should be the only laws relating to bankruptcies that should be considered to be in force; and that it would follow that persons whom Congress upon grounds of public policy deemed best to exempt from bankruptcy, thereby have been given protection against all kinds of bankruptcy proceedings; also, that Congress having been given exclusive jurisdiction over the entire "subject" of "bankruptcies," and having spoken as to what classes may be proceeded against and as to what may not be proceeded against, those exempted and those included are equally within the scope of its mandate; and that therefore when the States attempt to enforce bankrupt laws of their own, they are encroaching on the functions given by the federal Constitution to Congress, there being no more power in them to nullify the exemptions or exceptions granted by Congress than to nullify the prohibitions.

While the main proposition (ante, § 1628), undoubtedly states the true rule as far as it goes, it is not to be assumed that all state bankruptcy or state insolvency proceedings not within the terms of the rule are necessarily not superseded. The converse of the main proposition is not necessarily true. The converse may be stated as follows: It being true that whenever Congress passes a national bankrupt act that act is paramount as far as it speaks, by virtue of the Constitution, and supersedes ipso facto all state insolvency and bankruptcy laws in case the National Bankrupt Act itself so provides; yet, in case it does not so provide, it supersedes the state insolvency and bankruptcy laws only to the extent that it makes the particular persons mentioned therein subject thereto upon the doing of the particular acts mentioned therein as grounds for its involuntary action; it being necessary that the person and the act both be within its purview, else it will not supersede the state law in the particular case. This converse rule is laid down in Singer v. Nat'l Bedstead Co., supra.

But this converse rule will have to be still further limited by the qualification that the state and federal proceedings must both be involuntary or both voluntary; otherwise no natural person could be proceeded against in state bankruptcy proceedings since all natural persons may go voluntarily into bankruptcy. Interesting questions arise under this construction. Thus, what would be the situation, for instance, as to a natural person who owes less than $500 of debts and whom creditors are seeking to proceed against in state bankruptcy proceedings: is he or is he not exempt from all bankruptcy proceedings against him, state as well as federal, by virtue of his express exemption under the Federal Act? Or, suppose he has perpetrated an act forbidden by state bankruptcy law and not by the federal bankruptcy law: does he remain liable to proceedings under the state law and will the state bankruptcy court retain jurisdiction of his assets if he goes voluntarily into bankruptcy under the federal law within four months?

The reasoning of Singer v. Nat'l Bedstead Co. in its statement of the converse rule is exceedingly broad, and the difficulties in the way of adopting its construction are quite serious.

§ 1631. State Bankruptcy and Insolvency Laws Simply Held in Abeyance.—The state insolvency and state bankruptcy laws are simply held in abeyance whilst the federal bankruptcy statute is in operation, and upon the repeal of the federal bankruptcy statute, the state insolvency and bankruptcy laws spring again into full vigor without re-enactment.³²

When the Bankrupt Law has been repealed, the insolvent laws of the States become operative; and, if amended during the existence of the Bankrupt Law, they doubtless become operative in their amended form. Counsel for the trustee sought in argument an analogy between the insolvent laws thus suspended and law unconstitutional, and therefore void, but the analogy is very imperfect. To establish that the insolvent laws of the several States now upon their statute books are not 'laws of the States,' it must be shown that they are not laws at all; that they are wholly void, and not merely restricted in their application. Inasmuch, therefore, as the Bankrupt Act of 1898 expressly recognizes the existing validity of these insolvent laws as applied to proceedings commenced before the passage of the Bankrupt Act, and inasmuch as the insolvent laws revive, ex proprio vigore, on the repeal of the Bankrupt Law, it follows that the insolvent laws have not been wholly void but are still laws of the States which adopted them."

Of course mere general assignments are an entirely different thing, as we have heretofore seen; and they are not involved in the discussion as to whether or not insolvency laws are suspended by the bankruptcy act.³³

§ 1632. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Laws, and General Assignment Laws, Distinguished.—There have been many finely drawn distinctions made between insolvent laws and bankruptcy laws but the courts do not seem to have struck an exact line of demarkation.³⁴

Hanover Nat'l Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 181, 8 A. B. R. 1: "The whole subject is reviewed by that learned commentator in chapter 16, §§ 1102 to 1115, of his work, and he says (§ 1111) in respect of 'what laws are to be deemed bankrupt laws within the meaning of the Constitution:' 'Attempts have been made to distinguish between bankrupt laws and insolvent laws. For example, it has been said that laws which merely liberate the person of the debtor are insolvent laws, and those which discharge the contract are bankrupt laws. But it would be very difficult to sustain this distinction by any uniformity of laws at home or abroad. * * * Again, it has been said that insolvent laws act on imprisoned debtors only at their own instance, and bankrupt laws only at the instance of creditors. But, however true this may have been in past times, as the actual course of English legislation, it is not true, and never was true, as a distinction in colonial legislation. In England it was an accident in the system, and not a material ground to discriminate, who were to be deemed in a legal sense insolvents, or bankrupts. And if an act of Congress should be passed, which should authorize a commission of bankruptcy to issue at the instance of the debtor, no court would on this account be warranted in saying that the act was unconstitutional, and the commission a nullity. It is believed that no laws ever were passed in America by the colonies or States, which had the technical denomination of "Bankrupt laws." But insolvent laws, quite co-extensive with the English bankrupt system in their operations and objects, have not been unfrequent in colonial and State legislation. No distinction was ever practically, or even theoretically, attempted to be made between bankruptcies and insolvencies. And a historical review of the colonial and State legislation will abundantly show that a bankrupt law may contain those regulations which are generally found in insolvent laws, and that an insolvent law may contain those which are common to bankrupt laws.'"

Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat 122, 195: "The Bankrupt Law is said to grow out of the exigencies of commerce, and to be applicable solely to traders:

33. But see In re Scholtz, 5 A. B. R. 782, 106 Fea. 834 (D. C. Iowa), where the court fails to make the distinction, although deciding rightly that the Iowa general assignment law is not suspended by the Bankruptcy Act but is only superseded as to the particular bankruptcies involved.

34. Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell, 11 A. B. R. 602 (N. Mex. Sup. Ct.).

but it is not easy to say who must be excluded from, or may be included within this description. It is like every other part of the subject, one on which the legislature may exercise an extensive discretion. This difficulty of discriminating with any accuracy between insolvent and bankrupt laws, would lead to the opinion that a bankrupt law may contain those regulations which are generally found in insolvent laws; and that an insolvent law may contain those which are common to a bankrupt law."

Also much has been said as to whether a particular law has amounted to an insolvency or bankruptcy law, or is a mere assignment law. There is a substantial difference between a proceeding under a state insolvency statute, and one under a state statute permitting general assignments.³⁵

Ketcham v. McNamara, 6 A. B. R. 161, 72 Conn. 709: "These statutes constitute, in the fullest sense, an insolvent law. They make the title under a general assignment executed by an insolvent debtor in trust for the benefit of all his creditors, which is lodged for record in the Court of Probate, only an inchoate one. To perfect it, requires a judgment of confirmation from that court. Nor, when perfected, is the estate assigned to be applied as directed by the terms of the conveyance. Creditors do not share equally. Certain claims for the wages of labor may be preferred."

These discussions are pertinent because it seemed, at least formerly, to have been conceded to be the rule that the passage of a federal bankruptcy statute ipso facto suspends all state insolvency and bankruptcy laws, no matter whether bankruptcy proceedings under federal law were brought within four months, or, for that matter, were ever brought, although it was conceded that mere general assignments for the benefit of creditors were invalidated only in case bankruptcy followed and followed within the four months period.³⁶

Thus, it was held by the United States Supreme Court during the existence of the old bankruptcy law of 1867, in the case of Mayer v. Hellman, 91 U. S. 496, that the Ohio system of administering voluntary assignments for the benefit of creditors did not amount to an insolvency law, and that a general assignment, therefore, was not absolutely void from the very beginning, but was merely voidable by the institution, within the prescribed time, of federal bankruptcy proceedings. In that case, the bankruptcy occurred more than six months after the assignment, so it had become pertinent to ascertain whether the assignment proceedings were absolutely void or only voidable.³⁷

If we are to be guided at all by the history of bankruptcy legislation during the last four hundred years, it is obvious that in order for any system to amount to a bankruptcy system, it must provide machinery for the throwing of a debtor into insolvency involuntarily, and for completely administering his assets; and that, if a system of laws does so operate, then it is a bankruptcy system no matter by what name it might be designated. General assignment laws do not have this operation. Primarily, such laws simply provide a system for the administration of voluntary assignments in trust. That is to say, it has always, of course, been possible for a debtor to deed his property in trust to pay all, or some class of his creditors, and chancery always has had jurisdiction to compel such trusts to be properly carried out, precisely as it has as to any other trusts. Indeed, in the Mayer v. Hellman case it appears that originally such trusts for the benefit of creditors were simply administered in the Common Pleas Court of the State like any other trust, and no special court, like the probate or insolvency court, had jurisdiction. The Supreme Court in that case seems to have held that simply because such trusts subsequently were taken out of the Common Pleas Court and given over to a special court for administration, did not effect a change in their essential features; and that they were not absolutely void, but merely voidable.³⁸

Compare to this effect, In re Gutwillig, 1 A. B. R. 81, 90 Fed. 475 (D. C. N. Y., approved in Lea v. West, 174 U. S. 590): "Proceedings like those under the Massachusetts act rest wholly upon State statutes. Such statutes are practically bankruptcy acts, operating, however, only to the extent of the power and jurisdiction of State authority.

"Voluntary assignments for the benefit of creditors, on the other hand, as practised in this and other States, do not originate in the State statutes, but in the common-law power of the debtor to dispose of his property. The statutes of this State passed in 1860, and subsequent acts, regulate to a certain extent this power of distribution, and provide various securities therefor. To a considerable extent, therefore, these statutes, and assignments made in conformity with them, though they make no provision for the discharge of the debtor, do cover in part the original purpose of bankruptcy laws, namely, the equal distribution of the debtor's property among his creditors. The New York Statutes, nevertheless, allow, besides preferences to employees, preferences to other creditors, at the debtor's option, to the extent of one-third of the assets (see Central N. Bank v. Seligman, 138 N. Y. 435); in this regard being, therefore, directly opposed to that equality of distribution which bankruptcy laws aim to secure. Though the precise limits of the terms 'bankruptcy' and 'insolvency,' in defining the character of statutes, may not be easy to determine (see Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat 194-6; In re Klien, 1 How. (U. S.) 277, I do not think that a general assignment made in conformity with laws like those of the creditor as a condition of receiving any benefit.

State of New York, can be considered 'as a proceeding commenced under State insolvency laws' within the meaning of the last paragraph of the Act of 1898; and the question presented on this motion must therefore be decided upon the general principles of bankruptcy law and upon the other provisions found in the present act."

Likewise in Missouri, see In re Sievers, 1 A. B. R. 117, 91 Fed. 366 (D. C. Mo.): "While the insolvency laws of the several States are superseded by the enactment of the National Bankrupt Law, this is not the case with State statutes which merely regulate the administration of the trust created by an assignment for the benefit of creditors; and proceedings under such statutes or under a common law deed of assignment are not void or voidable by reason of the existence merely of a Bankrupt Law or unless proceedings in bankruptcy are subsequently instituted against the assignor."

Compare, Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell, 11 A. B. R. 603, 12 N. Mex. 192: "No one can contend that the passage of a bankruptcy act by Congress would render void a general common-law deed of assignment made by a debtor conveying all of his property for the benefit of his creditors ratably according to their claims, but not providing for the release of the debtor. It would be perfectly valid as to all men unless they seasonably took proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act."

As to whether a proceedings is an insolvency proceedings or not, the test is what can be accomplished under it—will it operate to supplant the federal act.³⁹

It is probably not essential to the idea of a bankruptcy or insolvency law that it shall provide for the discharge of the debtor.⁴⁰

In re Salmon & Salmon, 16 A. B. R. 134, 143 Fed. 395 (D. C. Mo.): "Again, to render a state insolvency law inoperative because in contravention of the federal bankrupt act, it is not essential that the State Act shall contain a provision for the discharge of the debtor. It is rather thought such provision for discharge is an incident to, but not an essential part of such law."

The holding of the state courts as to whether an assignment law amounts to a general insolvency statute will control.⁴¹

It is to be remarked that the courts have re-enunciated the doctrine of Mayer v. Hellman, as to the Ohio statute regulating assignments for the benefit of creditors.

In re Farrell, 23 A. B. R. 826, 176 Fed. 505 (C. C. A. Ohio): "This, [Ohio Revised Statutes, § 6335] as pointed out in Mayer v. Hellman, presupposes the existence of a deed of assignment and creation of a trust, and simply undertakes to regulate the trust later for the equal protection of the creditors. The right so to dispose of the property in trust is not dependent upon the statute; it is an ordinary attribute of ownership. * * * Section 6343 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio was amended twice (in 1898 and in 1902) between

S. 379] were rendered, and the dates of the general assignment and the filing of the petition in bankruptcy in question. * * * It cannot escape attention, moreover, that both of these changes plainly tended to remove, rather than to enhance, conflict between § 6343 and the Bankruptcy Act; * * * We therefore see no reason why the language employed in Mayer v. Hellman to meet the claim there made, as here, that the Bankruptcy Act suspended the 'operation of the act of Ohio regulating the mode of administering assignments,' is not quite as applicable now as it was then. * * * It follows that the present deed of assignment is valid, both as respects the common law and the statutes of Ohio."

§ 1633. Various Holdings as to What Amount to "Insolvency" Proceedings.—There are various holdings as to what amount to insolvency proceedings.

Thus, a proceedings in the form of a creditor's bill, filed under §§ 2716-2722, Code of Georgia, with the averments and prayers essential under those sections, is an insolvency or state bankruptcy proceedings.⁴²

Carling v. Seymour Lumber Co., 8 A. B. R. 35, 113 Fed. 483 (C. C. A. Ga., reversing on other grounds In re Macon Lumber Co., 7 A. B. R. 66, 112 Fed. 322): "These sections, in brief, provide that when any corporation not municipal, or any trader being insolvent, fails to pay debts at maturity, creditors representing one-third or more of the unsecured debts of the insolvent may invoke by petition the power of a court of equity to collect the debts and distribute the assets of such insolvent. The chancellor is authorized, in cases where the insolvent has fairly surrendered his property for distribution, 'to recommend to the creditors of the defendant that they may release him from further liability.' This insolvent traders' act is held by the Supreme Court of Georgia to be a kind of state bankrupt law. Describing the procedure, the court said: 'It is putting a trader in bankruptcy, and relieving him from past debts, as far as state legislation can do so.' Comer v. Coates, 69 Ga. 491-495. In a later case this language is repeated and approved, and the court added: 'The act does in many respects resemble the bankruptcy acts of congress.'"

Likewise under the Arkansas statute.

In re Weedman Stave Co., 29 A. B. R. 460, 199 Fed. 948 (D. C. Ark.): "What constitutes an insolvency law? The elements of an insolvency law are insolvency, surrender of property, its administration by a receiver or trustee, distribution of the assets among the creditors, and a provision for priorities or other matters not permissible in the absence of such a statute. A provision for the discharge of the debtor from the unpaid balance of his debts is not essential to make it an insolvency law."

has also been held that the Pennsylvania statute of July 12, 1842, is not an insolvency statute, but merely a proceedings in aid of execution, and therefore not ipso facto suspended by the Bankruptcy Act.⁴⁵

In re Crawford, 18 A. B. R. 618, 154 Fed. 769 (C. C. A. Pa., affirming Johnson v. Crawford, 18 A. B. R. 608, 154 Fed. 761, C. C. Pa.): "The Pennsylvania statute of July 12, 1842, is not an insolvent law. The proceeding it provides is not designed to effect the distribution of the debtor's assets among his creditors. It is a proceeding in aid of execution. Its object is to reach property of the judgment debtor which he fraudulently conceals."

But if the proceedings may also operate as a mere suit in equity to foreclose a pre-existing and valid mortgage lien, it will not be superseded because of its being able also to operate as a proceedings under a state insolvency statute; and this is so, although, as incident thereto, a receiver is appointed to preserve the mortgaged assets.⁴⁶

Thus, in some instances general assignments under state statutes have been declared to be in effect general insolvency laws,⁴⁷ but in other instances, general assignments for the benefit of all creditors who will accept and release the debtor have been held not to be so.⁴⁸

§ 1634. Receiverships and Winding Up of Insolvent Corporations, Whether Insolvency Proceedings.—Certain receiverships under state law have sometimes been held to amount to state insolvency proceedings and as such to be superseded by bankruptcy.⁴⁹

Thus, proceedings under state statutes to wind up and liquidate insolvent private banks have been held to amount to state insolvency proceedings and not to be within any exception on account of being an exercise of the police power.⁵¹

On the other hand fraudulent conveyance suits instituted by a receiver of a judgment debtor have been held not to amount to insolvency proceedings;⁵² likewise, fraudulent conveyance suits instituted by creditors without judgment, under favor of state statute.⁵³ And suits under state statutes to set aside preferential transfers have been held not to be insolvency proceedings within the meaning of the law superseding insolvency proceedings by bankruptcy proceedings.⁵⁴

So, a state law for the regulation of building and loan associations whereby their business might be discontinued and their affairs wound up, when found to be in an unsafe condition, has been held to be enforceable in the state courts in so far as such enforcement does not conflict with the due administration of the bankruptcy act.⁵⁵

§ 1635. Procedure to Procure Surrender from State Bankruptcy or Insolvency Courts.—The same rules as to the method of procedure prevail in regard to obtaining surrender or possession where the state court has custody under state bankruptcy or state insolvency proceedings, as in cases of nullified assignments, receiverships, etc., under state laws not amounting to state bankruptcy or state insolvency laws.⁵⁶

§ 1636. Thus, State Court Receiver May Be Enjoined.—Thus, injunctions may issue to restrain the proceedings in the state court.

Carling v. Seymour Lumber Co., 8 A. B. R. 41, 113 Fed. 483 (C. C. A. Ga.): "The jurisdiction and authority of the bankruptcy court for the enforcement of the Bankrupt Law is paramount. State insolvency laws are superseded by the Bankrupt Act. While it is a general rule that a Federal court may not enjoin proceedings in a State court, an exception is made in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy, Rev. Stat., U. S., § 720. When the State court is in possession, through its receiver, of assets that it is without jurisdiction or authority to hold against a receiver or trustee appointed in bankruptcy proceedings, instead of making a peremptory order on the receiver of the State court to surrender the funds, an injunction, if necessary, might be granted by the bankruptcy court to prevent the unlawful distribution of the assets, until application could be made to the State court for an order to its receiver to surrender the assets to the proper custodian. The laws of the United States being equally binding on all the courts, we cannot assume that the State court would refuse to administer them. We are not now called on to decide what course should be taken in the event of a disregard of the Bankrupt Law by the State court. That such application should be made in the first instance to the State court is sustained, not only by the analogous cases relating to comity, but by adjudication directly in point on this question of practice under the Bankrupt Law."

§ 1637. Comity Requires Resort First to State Tribunal.—Thus, likewise, comity requires resort first to the tribunal of the state court for an order of surrender.⁵⁷

And this principle has been applied even in the case of a state trust company which was a designated depository for the money of bankrupt estates, and which failed and was placed in charge of the state superintendent of banks.

In re Bologh, 25 A. B. R. 726, 185 Fed. 825 (D. C. N. Y.): "It is argued that the court in designating a depository in which a receiver is required to deposit that portion of the assets which consists of money in effect appoints two custodians, one the receiver, who is to act as a custodian of the assets other than cash, and the other a trust company, which is to act as a custodian of the cash, and that therefore any trust company designated as a depository is subject to the summary order of the court in the same manner as a receiver. This suggestion seems to me unsound. A receiver or other officer of the court who deposits money in a trust company, in my opinion, simply creates thereby the same relation of debtor and creditor as is created by any bank deposit. The debt may have a preference, but it is nevertheless a debt, and I do not think that the bankruptcy court can exercise the same summary authority over such a depository that it can over a receiver. If the trust company is appointed directly a receiver, then the bankruptcy court can undoubtedly, so long as the trust company continues to conduct its business as a solvent institution, exercise the same immediate control over it that it can over other receivers; but when it simply acts as a depository for receivers' funds it seems to me that even when the trust company is conducting its business in the ordinary way the court has no summary jurisdiction over it. But in any event, when a trust company has ceased to conduct its business and its property has been taken possession of by an officer authorized to liquidate its affairs, I think it clear that a court of bankruptcy cannot by a summary order direct that the bankruptcy funds deposited with it shall be paid over. If such a power existed bankruptcy receivers and trustees might obtain a preference over other preferred creditors under the statute. If a trust company had been appointed directly a receiver or a trustee, and had become insolvent and its assets had been taken possession of by an officer authorized to wind up the institution, I do not think that in that case the court could order the funds turned over by a summary order in the same manner in which it could make such an order if the company had remained solvent. When the insolvency of a corporation occurs, or any such condition arises that the law authorizes an officer to step in and stop the business and take possession of the property for the purposes of liquidation, the status is completely changed, and the officer who succeeds to the possession of the assets is not subject to the same control or to be proceeded against in the same summary manner as the company was in its capacity and as officer of the court so long as it continued in business."

And the resort first to the State court is not such an election of forum, nor is an adverse ruling there such a res judicata, as to preclude the subsequent issuance of a restraining order by the bankruptcy court.⁵⁸

Whenever the state court surrenders the assets, the validity and extent of any lien thereon in favor of the insolvency officers must be left to the bankruptcy court for determination, and there is no jurisdiction in the state court to fix the same, and any order to that effect will be disregarded;⁵⁹ although the rule might be different in cases of the superseding of assignees and receivers in other than state insolvency or state bankruptcy proceedings, since such proceedings are not absolutely void.⁶⁰

VOLUNTARY SURRENDER OF CUSTODY BY STATE COURT.

§ 1638. Voluntary Surrender by State Court.—If the state court voluntarily surrenders possession it is divested of jurisdiction, and the bankruptcy court is invested therewith.

In re American, etc., Co., 25 A. B. R. 651, 184 Fed. 694 (C. C. A. Ohio): "The reason why the bankruptcy court would refrain from interfering with the proceedings in a state court and anticipate its judgment is the obligation of the comity necessary to be observed to avoid conflict between the state and federal courts, and this reason would be wanting if the other court waives its priority of right to possession."

In re Hymes Buggy & Implement Co., 12 A. B. R. 477, 130 Fed. 577 (D. C. Mo.): "But passing this by, it affirmatively appears from the referee's findings, and the evidence amply sustains it, that whatever possession of the goods the sheriff acquired under the writ of replevin was on the 4th day of May, 1904, voluntarily surrendered by him to the receiver in bankruptcy. This constituted an abandonment of his seizure, and entitled the receiver in bankruptcy, as the representative pro hac of the debtor and creditors, to receive and to hold it. It is a well-settled rule of law that a release of the goods levied on or seized under writ by a sheriff is an abandonment thereof, and invalidates the levy."

SUBDIVISION "A."

PENDING SUITS BY AND AGAINST BANKRUPTS.

§ 1639. Pending Suits against Bankrupt—Subrogation of Trustee to Creditor's Lien Where Lien Preserved.—A trustee may be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff and be substituted for him in pending actions, wherein a lien by legal proceedings has been obtained within four months, which would otherwise be nullified by the adjudication in bankruptcy, but which is preserved for the benefit of the estate.⁶¹

§ 1640. Pending Suits by Bankrupt—Substitution of Trustee.—The trustee may, with the approval of the court, be permitted to prosecute as trustee any suit commenced by the bankrupt prior to the adjudication, with like force and effect as though it had been commenced by him.⁶² He may, but need not, be permitted so to prosecute.⁶³

Kessler v. Herklotz, 22 A. B. R. 259, 132 N. Y. App. Div. 278: "We are of opinion, however, that the appellant is not liable for any part of the costs. He did not become a party to the action, and he did not accept the subject-matter of the litigation as an asset, nor did he intend to become in any manner responsible for the litigation without the authority of the Federal court, if that was necessary. It is well settled that the trustee in bankruptcy is not obliged to intervene in a pending action by or against the bankrupt. This is upon the ground that it may not be for the interests of the estate to make any claim on account of the matter in controversy and that the trustee in such circumstances may elect to abandon any claim thereto. Fleming v. Courtenay, 98 Me. 401; Hahlo v. Cole, 15 Am. B. R. 591, 112 App. Div. 636. All rights of action in favor of the bankrupt arising on contract vest in the trustee by virtue of the provisions of clause 6 of subdivision a of § 70, of the Federal Bankruptcy Act of 1898. * * * He may, however, allow them to proceed without intervention and accept the fruits if successful."

§ 1641. Preliminary Order of Approval Proper.—An order, signifying the court's approval, should, as a prerequisite, be entered by the referee, authorizing or directing the trustee to prosecute the suit.⁶⁴ The court which appointed the trustee is the court which may authorize him to intervene.⁶⁵

Such preliminary order is not requisite, however, where the trustee institutes the action himself and is not merely substituted for the bankrupt in an action already pending.⁶⁶

§ 1642. Probability of Success Should Appear.—Probability of success, not certainty of it, is all that is necessary to show in the application for such an order; or, if a proposition of settlement has been made, that more could probably be obtained by the suit than by the settlement.⁶⁷

The trustee will not be ordered to defend a suit wherein success is doubtful, against the wishes of a majority of the creditors, unless the minority creditors desiring him to do so shall indemnify the estate against costs and expenses.⁶⁸

§ 1643. Only Suits on Rights Passing to Trustee Authorized.—Only such suits will be authorized to be prosecuted as are founded on rights of action that would pass to the trustee in bankruptcy.⁶⁹

Thus, the court would not authorize the trustee to prosecute a slander suit, or a suit for malicious prosecution, begun by the bankrupt before adjudication.⁷⁰ Nor will substitution be permitted in an action for libel.⁷²

It has been held that, after judgment has been entered in a local court against a bankrupt plaintiff for costs, if the trustee is permitted to intervene at all it will only be for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal; such intervention, it was held, will not be allowed where the only purpose and effect of it would be to relieve the plaintiff from the judgment or costs.⁷³

Thus, the liability of stockholders for unpaid stock subscriptions in a bankrupt corporation the trustee will be ordered to enforce by appropriate action.⁷⁴

§ 1644. Defendant Not Released by Failure of Trustee to Assume Prosecution.—If the trustee does not take up the prosecution of the suit, the defendant is not released, even where the right of action is one that might have passed to the trustee; but the bankrupt may continue the prosecution.⁷⁵

Hahlo v. Cohn, 15 A. B. R. 593 (Sup. Ct. N. Y.): "An action by or against the bankrupt in the State Court does not abate upon the adjudication in bankruptcy or appointment of a trustee, and in the absence of an application by the trustee for substitution it may be prosecuted or defended by the bankrupt."

though no trustee were appointed.⁷⁷ And the bankrupt need not get leave from the bankruptcy court to continue the suit, at any rate where the right of action could not, in any event, have passed to the trustee.⁷⁸

§ 1645. Ordering Trustee to Apply for Leave to Defend.—The bankruptcy court may order the trustee to apply for leave to enter his appearance and to defend any pending suit against the bankrupt.⁷⁹

§ 1646. Intervening Not Usually Proper Except Where Property Involved.—Here, again, the touchstone is whether any property of the creditors in bankruptcy is involved.⁸⁰ If the suit is a foreclosure suit, or a creditor's bill, or replevin⁸¹ or other suit affecting the property of the bankrupt, of course it will be proper for the trustee to defend and prove the invalidity of the liens, or reduce their amount, or prove right of property; for thus he will increase the assets of the estate.⁸²

The trustee may be required to respond to garnishment proceedings pending at the time of bankruptcy, wherein the bankrupt was garnishee; but only to the extent of dividends, and only by order of the bankruptcy court. And the garnishment proceedings may be stayed until the dividends can be ascertained.⁸³

Again, the trustee may be interested in a pending suit against the bankrupt for infringement of a patent.⁸⁴

§ 1647. Intervening in Suits in Personam.—The court would hardly order the trustee to defend a suit in personam against the bankrupt, for such suit ordinarily would not affect the rights of the creditors. Yet, inasmuch as it is possible for judgments obtained after bankruptcy but before discharge to be proved (§ 63 (5)), occasion will arise when it will be to the creditors' interest to have the trustee defend even a suit merely in personam. Especially is this so where the bankruptcy court itself has ordered that a pending suit be maintained as a method of liquidating an unliquidated demand, under § 63 (b).⁸⁵

Bank of Commerce v. Elliott, 6 A. B. R. 409, 109 Wis. 648: "Counsel insists that because § 11 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act provides that in a proceeding under it, the Federal Court may order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend any pending suit against the bankrupt, and the trustee in the matter of Elliott's bankruptcy was so ordered, the Circuit Court having the garnishee actions in question in charge was found to give effect to such order by granting the motion to make him a party to such actions. That subject was before this court and was fully considered in Distilling Co. v. Seidel, 103 Wis. 489, 79 N. W. 744. We there held, and now affirm, that the Federal statute, however mandatory its terms, does not control the practice in State courts, and was not intended to do so. If an order be made under it commanding a trustee to intervene in the State court in an action to which the bankrupt is a party, the former performs his full duty when he makes a proper application to such court to be let in to such action. In disposing of such application the statutes of the State, and the rules and practice of its court, must necessarily govern, the same as when any other party invokes the court's jurisdiction.

"Testing the ruling of the court, refusing to make the trustee in bankruptcy a party to the garnishee actions, by State laws and judicial policy, we fail to see why the trustee had any interest in the action that required his presence therein for his due protection, or why the entire controversy in such action, as to the plaintiff, was not susceptible of a complete determination without the trustee being brought in. Therefore, § 2610, Rev. St. 1898, did not require the trial court to grant the motion, but left it free to exercise its discretion in respect thereto. If we say plaintiff acquired a right, by the commencement of the garnishee action, to hold the garnishee liable for some part of its indebtedness to Elliott, and that such right, by operation of law, was displaced by the right of the trustee in bankruptcy so as to bring the latter within the scope of § 2801, id., then it would follow that the action of the trial court could not be disturbed unless it clearly appeared that there was an abuse of judicial discretion. Granting or refusing a motion under that section is, by its terms, addressed to the sound discretion of the court. In any event, since, as will be hereafter seen, there was no controversy between the trustee and appellant as to who should have the benefit of the liability of the garnishee to Elliott, appellant was not prejudiced by the denial of the motion to make the trustee a party, and cannot be heard to complain of such denial on this appeal. Section 2829, id.

"Again, regardless of the rights of the trustee under section 2901, Rev. St. 1898, appellant has no standing here to recover on the assignment of error under discussion, because the privilege was one to be asserted by the trustee. He did not appear in the court below and ask to be made a party, as we understand the record, nor is he a party to the appeal."

to determine the validity of a lien on property in the bankruptcy court's custody and to make the trustee a party defendant.

86. Compare, In re Price, 1 A. B. R. 606, 92 Fed. 987 (D. C. N. Y.). Instance, Murtaugh v. Sullivan, 27 A. B. R. 431 (Sup. Ct. N. Y.).

If such an application to intervene is denied, only a party aggrieved by the adverse decision can be heard on appeal therefrom; and the trustee can not be so heard unless he shall first have applied to the State court, failed in his application and appealed specially from the decision, Bank of Commerce v. Elliott, 6 A. B. R. 409 (Sup. Ct. Wis.).

By intervening, the trustee does not oust the state court of jurisdiction, although the trustee claims the transfer involved is a preferential transfer given within four months of the bankruptcy.

Savings Bk. v. Jewelry Co., 12 A. B. R. 781, 123 Iowa 432: "That the enactment of a general bankruptcy law so far supersedes and suspends the operation of State insolvency laws as that a receiver or assignee in insolvency proceedings instituted under State statutes may be properly required to surrender possession to a trustee in bankruptcy, may be conceded. And such are the cases cited by counsel for appellant. But such doctrine cannot be extended to an action for the enforcement of a specific lien. Jurisdiction of such actions in the State court is not sought to be taken away by the Federal statute, and such could not well be. The action is not one to administer upon the estate of the bankrupt, or any portion of such estate. The purpose thereof is to ascertain if the plaintiff have a right to resort, by virtue of a specific lien claim, to the particular property in controversy, as against all other creditors or claimants, for the payment of his debt or the satisfaction of his demand. His rights would be the same whether presented to the State or the Federal court in an action to foreclose, or by way of a claim made in the bankruptcy proceedings. Hence it is that the court which first takes jurisdiction and assumes control of the property retains it for all the purposes of a final order or decree. True, the trustee in bankruptcy may intervene in such action pending in the State court, as did this intervener, and be heard to contest the existence or the validity of the specific lien claimed, and he may well be awarded the property in the event the existence of the lien claimed is denied by the decree. But that a trustee may work an ouster of jurisdiction in the State court in such cases by pointing out the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings has no support in reason or well-considered authority."

§ 1649. Manner of Intervention.—The intervention may be by way of substitution of the trustee for the bankrupt.⁸⁷

The trustee may limit his application to certain objects.

The application, in the first instance at least, should be made to the court where the action is pending and which has power to protect the other party by the imposition of proper conditions.⁸⁸

§ 1650. Trustee Bound as Any Other Litigant, on Intervention.—When the trustee is substituted for the bankrupt, his submission to the jurisdiction binds him to the judgment rendered, subject only to his rights as a litigant in the state courts.⁸⁹ But he incurs no liability for costs ac-

In re Horgan, 21 A. B. R. 31, 164 Fed. 415 (C. C. A. Mass.). In this case sureties on a bail bond for the bankrupt were sustained in their objection to the jurisdiction of the court, to summarily order them to surrender moneys left with them as security where they claimed liens for expenses and for attorney's fees, though the liability on the bail was terminated by the court's exoneration of the bankrupt.

In re Buntrock Clothing Co., 1 A. B. R. 455, 457, 92 Fed. 886 (D. C. Iowa). This case was decided before the Amendment of 1903, and might have been decided on the broader grounds that no jurisdiction, either plenary or summary, existed, yet the decision was placed on the ground that the proceedings were summary; the court saying:

"* * * Upon their refusal to yield up possession thereof he obtained from the referee the issuance of an order directing them to show cause why they did not deliver up possession of the property to the trustee. * * * As is said by the Supreme Court in the case just cited (Yeatman v. Inst., 95 U. S. 764), if the trustee questions the validity of the mortgages, he can attack the same by proper proceedings to that end, or he may redeem the property by payment of the mortgage liens, or in other ways may perhaps protect the who now claimed it adversely to the assignee, could only be enforced by a plenary suit, at law or in equity, under the second section of the Act of 1867; and not by summary proceedings under the first section thereof, notwithstanding the declaration in that section that the jurisdiction in bankruptcy should extend 'to the collection of all the assets of the bankrupt,' and 'to all acts, matters and things to be done under and in virtue of the bankruptcy' until the close of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Smith v. Mason (1871), 14 Wall. 419; Marshall v. Knox (1872), 16 Wall. 551, 557; Eyster v. Gaff (1875), 91 U. S. 521, 525."

In re Andre, 13 A. B. R. 134, 135 Fed. 736 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Prior to the decision in Bardes v. Hawarden Bank, * * * it was supposed by some of the Federal courts that pursuant to the provisions of § 23 of the Act, the bankruptcy courts had jurisdiction of all suits brought by trustees respecting property claimed to belong to the bankrupt's estate which was being administered by the trustee and which the bankrupt had transferred in contravention of the Act, and many of the courts which had adopted this construction of the section sanctioned the exercise by the bankruptcy courts of the power under §§ 2 and 69 to take such property into its custody for the preservation of the estate pending the appointment of the trustee, notwithstanding it was in the possession of some third person claiming an adverse title to it. The Bardes case decided that it was the intention of Congress, manifested by § 23, 'that controversies not strictly or properly part of the proceedings in bankruptcy, but independent suits brought by the trustee in bankruptcy, which assert a title to money or property as assets of a bankrupt against strangers to those proceedings should not come within the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States 'unless by consent of the proposed defendant.' If Congress did not intend these controversies to be adjudicated by the bankruptcy courts, it cannot be reasonably supposed that Congress intended to permit the bankruptcy courts to adjudicate controversies respecting the title to the bankrupt's property with adverse claimants before the appointment of a trustee against the consent of the adverse claimant, and it would follow that the reasonable construction of the power con-interests of creditors, but he can not by summary proceedings compel the delivery of possession of property by third parties, who hold the same as mortgagees, and whose possession antedates the filing of the proceedings in bankruptcy."

In re Davis Tailoring Co., 16 A. B. R. 486, 144 Fed. 285 (D. C. N. J.); intentionally, Horskins v. Sanderson, 13 A. B. R. 102, 132 Fed. 415 (D. C. Vt.); Publishing Co. v. Hutchinson Co., 17 A. B. R. 427 (Sup. Ct. Mich.).

Similarly, out of line with the great weight of authority is In re Haupt Bros., 18 A. B. R. 585, 153 Fed. 239 (D. C. N. Y.), wherein the court (before adjudication), ordered the receiver to take summary possession of property in the hands of relatives of the bankrupt claiming to own it. The addendum of the court that "remedy here asked for is confessedly a most drastic one; it should not be used except in the clearest case and to prevent obvious loss through equally obvious fraud," hardly seems to lay down any workable rule for exceptions to the well-established proposition that adverse claimants in possession are not to be proceeded against summarily, nor does it furnish an excuse for the creditors' or the receiver's failure to resort to the remedies which rightfully lay open to them. Similarly out of line with the authorities, appears to be the case In re Nechamkus, 19 A. B. R. 189, 153 Fed. 867 (D. C. N. Y.), wherein the court ordered a transferee of a horse to surrender it, though perhaps, in this case there was no objection raised to the jurisdiction; similarly out of line appears the obiter, In re Berkowitz, 22 A. B. R. 227, 173 Fed. 1012 (D. C. N. J.).

Contra, where the court sustained the referee in ordering seizure from the possession of an irresponsible vendee of the bankrupt's entire stock of goods, In re Knopf, 16 A. B. R. 432, 144 Fed. 245 (D. C. S. C.). This decision is out of line with the cases and cannot be brought into harmony with the great weight of authority.

ferred by § 2 and § 69 should be that it extends only to taking custody of property belonging to the bankrupt or which is in his possession or that a third person, as his bailee or agent, and not the property in the possession of an adverse claimant. This power must of course confer jurisdiction upon the bankruptcy court to ascertain whether the property is in the possession of the bankrupt or his bailee or agent, or whether it is in the possession of an adverse claimant and consequently to institute and entertain an appropriate proceeding for that purpose, and this proceeding must necessarily be a summary one, because as no trustee had been appointed there is no person to represent the estate as a party to a formal suit. Section 23 of the Bankrupt Act, as amended in 1903, confers jurisdiction upon the district courts without the consent of the defendant in suits for the recovery of property where the bankrupt has within a specified time made a preferential or fraudulent transfer of any of his property (subdivision b of § 60 and subdivision e of § 67). This amendment, however, cannot affect the original meaning of §§ 2 and 69, and the construction of these sections must remain as it was before. We conclude that it is only in cases in which the property of the bankrupt is in the possession of a party not an adverse claimant that the courts of bankruptcy have authority under these sections to interfere with it unless the adverse claimant chooses to consent, but that these courts have jurisdiction to entertain proceedings to ascertain whether there is an adverse claimant and that the mere refusal of a person in possession to surrender the property does not constitute him an adverse claimant."

In re Grassler & Reichwald (Consani v. Brandon), 18 A. B. R. 694, 154 Fed. 478 (C. C. A. Calif.): "The only question * * * is whether the proper remedy of the trustee to recover the money which was obtained by the petitioner was a plenary suit in court or a summary proceeding such as he adopted. If the property had been in the adverse possession of the petitioner [petitioner on review] before the bankrupts filed their petition to be adjudicated bankrupts there can be no doubt that a plenary suit would have been necessary. For further quotation, see post, § 1796. Goodnough Mercantile & Stock Co. v. Galloway, 19 A. B. R. 244, 156 Fed. 504 (D. C. Ore.).

Cooney v. Collins, 23 A. B. R. 840, 176 Fed. 189 (C. C. A. Montana): "John W. Cooney, by his verified answer not only claims the absolute right to hold all the property in question as against everybody, but specially alleges the reasons for his claim of ownership of it. Of course, his allegations in that behalf may not be true; still they make a case of adverse claim to the property on his part, to overcome which it was essential for the trustee to proceed in accordance with the provisions of § 23 of the Bankruptcy Act and not by summary proceedings in bankruptcy. We think the case of Jaquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 Am. B. R. 525, is directly in point, on the authority of which the judgment of the District Court should be reversed, with directions to order the dismissal of the trustee's petition."

McNulty v. Feingold, 12 A. B. R. 338, 129 Fed. 1001 (D. C. Pa.): "The parties here have been adjudged bankrupts, a trustee appointed, and suit is instituted by him against third parties for the value of property fraudulently conveyed to them by the bankrupt. It is therefore a controversy at law or in equity, within the provision of § 23, and not a proceeding in bankruptcy, wherein summary proceeding can be had."

In re Adams, 12 A. B. R. 367, 130 Fed. 381 (D. C. R. I.): "As it is clear from the report of the referee, and from his decree, that Nash was, properly speaking, an adverse claimant, the referee, upon objection, should have declined to finally adjudicate the merits of the case on a summary petition."

In re Teschmacher & Mrazay, 11 A. B. R. 549, 127 Fed. 728 (D. C. Pa.): "As I understand the decisions of the Supreme Court in Bardes v. Bank, 178 U. S.

524, 4 A. B. R. 163; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 A. B. R. 224; Louisville Trust Co. v. Comingor, 194 U. S. 18, 7 A. B. R. 421; Jaquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 A. B. R. 525, and other decisions cited in those cases, a court of bankruptcy, before the amendments of 1903 were passed, had jurisdiction to inquire summarily upon petition and answer whether property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, but found in the possession of a third person when the petition was filed, was held by such person as the bankrupt's agent or mere representative; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction the court was of necessity empowered to inquire to some extent concerning the merits of the claim of title, or of a right to retain possession, that might be set up by the person in whose hands the property was found. If the result of the inquiry was to satisfy the court that a real adverse claimant existed—no matter how ill-supported it might appear to be—the court had no power to go further in that form of proceeding and decide summarily the question whether or not the claimant was entitled to prevail. It then became necessary, because the Bankrupt Act so declared, to remit the contestants to a plenary suit, either in a State court or in a Circuit Court of the United States, whichever might prove to be the appropriate tribunal. In either forum, however, the dispute was to be conducted by a plenary suit, and not in a summary fashion. The amendments of 1903, as I understand their scope, have made at least one change in these rules. They have conferred jurisdiction upon the District Court to entertain some of the plenary suits which theretofore could only have been brought in a State court or in the Circuit Court, but the other rules of procedure laid down by the Supreme Court are still to be followed. The District Court, sitting as a court of bankruptcy, may still inquire summarily concerning the ownership of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, although it be found in the possession or custody of a third person. But, if the court should discover that such person is holding the property under a real claim of title or right of possession and is not merely the alter ego of the bankrupt, it is still the duty of the court to desist from pursuing the summary remedy further, and to remit the contestants to a plenary suit, although the suit, instead of being brought in a State court or a Circuit Court of the United States, may now be brought in the District Court itself, and may there be pursued to final judgment."

In re Manning, 10 A. B. R. 497, 123 Fed. 180 (D. C. S. Car.): "The court in bankruptcy has no jurisdiction by summary proceedings to collect money from parties who are indebted to the estate of the bankrupt."

In re Knickerbocker, 10 A. B. R. 384, 121 Fed. 1004 (D. C. N. Y.): "On the other hand, if, in the exercise of sound judicial discretion, the referee is satisfied that the asserted adverse holding of the third party is in good faith, and without intent to thwart or obstruct a just and equitable distribution of the bankrupt estate among the creditors, the moving party must be relegated for his remedy to an action, and is not entitled to summary relief from this court. * * * The remedy of the trustee, however, must be sought in a plenary suit brought under the provisions of § 23 (b), as amended (Act Feb. 5, 1903, chap. 487, § 8; 32 Stat. 798), either in this court or the proper State tribunal, at his election."

In re Cohn, 3 A. B. R. 421, 98 Fed. 75 (D. C. N. Y.): This case also was decided before the Amendment of 1903 but was placed upon the ground that the proceedings were summary, the court saying:

"She was, therefore, in the position of a third person, not only claiming title, but in possession of the business, as much as its intangible nature was capable of being in possession. If there was any fraud as between her and her mother, so that her title could be avoided in favor of the trustee, that could only be inquired into and adjudged in a plenary suit brought against her by the trustee.

Her rights could not be adjudicated in a summary manner by the referee in the bankruptcy proceeding."

In re Walsh Bros., 21 A. B. R. 14, 163 Fed. 352 (D. C. Iowa): "The application of the trustee is for a summary order requiring Burns Bros. to return to him property alleged to have been transferred and delivered to them by the bankrupts a month before the bankruptcy proceedings were instituted. This property, therefore, has never come into the custody of the court of bankruptcy. Burns Bros. appeared before the referee and made claim to the property, and alleged facts plainly showing their title and right to it. The claim so made and asserted is not a mere colorable one, but is one that arose before the bankruptcy proceedings, and clearly appears from the allegations of the answer to be one that is adverse to the bankrupts, though it may be voidable at the election of the trustee. The application of the trustee is in the nature of an independent action by him against Burns Bros., who are not parties to the bankruptcy proceedings, to avoid the transfer because, as he alleges, it is a voidable preference. Such a suit is not a part of the 'proceedings in bankruptcy,' but is a controversy either at law or in equity between the trustee and a third party, within the meaning of § 23, cls. 'a' and 'b,' of the Bankruptcy Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 552 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3431]). * * * Has a referee in bankruptcy jurisdiction to determine such a controversy, even with the consent of both parties? If the subject matter of a controversy is not within the jurisdiction of a referee, of course, consent will not confer it, and the court upon a petition for review will acquire none, except to determine the jurisdiction of the referee. * * * The word 'court' may include the referee. Section 1 (7). But this obviously means the referee when acting upon a matter of which is given jurisdiction by the act. The jurisdiction of the referee is prescribed by § 38, as follows: * * * "While much of the authority of the court of bankruptcy is exercised by the referee, and rightly so in proceedings in bankruptcy proper, none of these clauses, nor any other provision of the act, confers upon a referee any authority or power to act except in such proceedings. It is easier to state what are not 'proceedings in bankruptcy' than to definitely name all that are; and it is perhaps not advisable to now attempt to accurately distinguish between such proceedings and 'controversies at law and in equity between trustees as such and adverse claimants concerning the property claimed by the trustees.' It is sufficient for the present to know that it is definitely settled by the Supreme Court in the cases before cited that an action by a trustee to recover property from a third party which is alleged to have been transferred by the bankrupt prior to the bankruptcy as a preference is not a 'proceeding in bankruptcy,' within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act. If the application of the trustee in question can be upheld as a part of the proceedings in bankruptcy, then a suit to set aside a conveyance of real estate, or an action to recover real property, or any action at law or suit in equity against a third party claiming to own the property as against the bankrupt, might also be brought before the referee, and the only requisite to his jurisdiction would be that the bankrupt once owned the property sought to be recovered. This proposition cannot be assented to. When a referee may, and when he may not, proceed summarily in bankruptcy proceedings before him, is well illustrated in two cases in the Supreme Court, viz, Mueller v. Nugent, * * * and Louisville Trust Co. v. Cominger. * * * The rule deducible from these decisions is that, where a third party holds property at the time of the bankruptcy merely as agent or bailee of the bankrupt, he may be summarily required by the referee or the court of bankruptcy to turn the property over to the trustee; but where he acquires the possession prior to the bankruptcy, and claims the right to hold the property as against the bankrupt or the trustee, then the authority of the referee, and of the court of bankruptcy in summary proceedings is limited to determining whether the claim made is colorable merely, or is in fact adverse to the bankrupt, and according as it determines that question will it deny or retain jurisdiction of the controversy. * * * In the present case there can be no doubt that Burns Bros. set forth in their answer facts showing that they acquired possession of the property prior to the bankruptcy, and asserted a claim thereto adverse to the bankrupts, and offered evidence before the referee tending to support such claim. Upon this appearing, the referee should have declined to proceed further with the controversy and permitted the trustee to resort to a court of competent jurisdiction to recover the property, if he, or the creditors, should so elect." Quoted further at § 1796.

In re Carlile, 29 A. B. R. 373, 199 Fed. 612 (D. C. N. Car.): "It is a mistake to suppose that all persons having transactions with one who is adjudged a bankrupt, acquiring rights of property adverse to the bankrupt, and therefore to his trustee, who succeeds to the bankrupt's rights, may be drawn, without their consent, into the bankruptcy court before the referee, and such rights summarily dealt with, depriving them of trial by jury and other rights which, but for the intervening bankruptcy, are secured to them. Such a person is not required to go into the bankruptcy court to assert his rights, nor can he, without his consent, be drawn into it by summary process. It is equally clear that if one be in possession of property as the bailee or agent of the bankrupt, or if he takes from the possession of the trustee property belonging to the bankrupt, he may, upon notice, be summarily ordered to surrender such property to the trustee. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 46 L. Ed. 405. The referee may, upon petition of the trustee, and upon notice to such person, proceed to ascertain whether the person in possession is a bailee or agent, or otherwise holds such possession for the bankrupt, or whether he is an adverse claimant. If, upon such examination, he finds that such person is an adverse claimant, he must dismiss the petition and remit the trustee to his plenary action; otherwise, he may order the delivery of the property to the trustee."

Coder v. Arts, 213 U. S. 223, 22 A. B. R. 1: "The Bankruptcy Act, as originally passed, did not give the bankruptcy courts jurisdiction over plenary suits to recover the property alleged to belong to the trustee in bankruptcy, except with the consent of the defendant. This was the subject of full consideration and determination in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524. Subsequent decisions of the court construed the act to give the bankruptcy courts jurisdiction over controversies concerning the property in the possession of the bankruptcy courts."

Of course, since no jurisdiction over such claimants existed in the bankruptcy court at all, a fortiori no jurisdiction existed over them by summary proceedings. Thereupon, in 1903, Congress amended the Act so as to confer upon the bankruptcy courts (the United States District Courts sitting in Bankruptcy) jurisdiction over suits brought by trustees for the recovery of property or the proceeds of property that had been preferentially or fraudulently transferred by the bankrupt within the four months preceding the bankruptcy, or which otherwise had been transferred by transactions that would have been voidable by creditors had there been no bankruptcy. The Amendment, as later will be noted, does not confer jurisdiction over suits of all kinds in which the trustee is interested, but only over those brought by him for the recovery of property or its proceeds where the property has been transferred by voidable transfer. Likewise, as later will be noted, this additional jurisdiction conferred by the amendment was not to be exercised by summary process, but by regular plenary action. Therefore, the summary jurisdiction exercisable by the bankruptcy courts was not enlarged whatever by the Amendment of 1903, but was left precisely as it existed prior to the amendment.

Although, then, the decisions before the Amendment of 1903 as well as those since, deny jurisdiction to the bankruptcy court over adverse claimants by summary process, few of them place the denial squarely upon the single ground that the attempt to exercise it was by summary process, but rather upon the more inclusive ground that no jurisdiction whatever over adverse claimants existed. So the cases before the Amendment of 1903 are not, in general, strictly in point under the proposition that no summary jurisdiction over adverse claimants exists in the bankruptcy courts. Yet, in order to understand the scope of the Amendment, it is proper to consider the law as it stood before the Amendment.²

Apparently, contra, In re Moody, 12 A. B. R. 718, 131 Fed. 523 (D. C. Iowa); In this case, however, the facts show the bankrupt had actual custody though an adverse claim existed.

Cases before Amendment of 1903, holding bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to entertain plenary suits by trust-

The Supreme Court, in Bardes v. Bank, combated the doctrine that § 2 of the Bankruptcy Act conferred jurisdiction over adverse claimants, and showed that the source of such jurisdiction, if any existed, must be found elsewhere.

Bardes v. Bk., 178 U. S. 524, 4 A. B. R. 163: "In Lathrop v. Drake, 91 U. S. 516, the jurisdiction conferred on the District Courts and the Circuit Courts of the United States by the Bankrupt Act of 1867 was defined by this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Bradley, as consisting of 'two distinct classes; first, jurisdiction, as a court of bankruptcy, over the proceedings in bankruptcy, initiated by the petition, and ending in the distribution of assets amongst the creditors, and the discharge or refusal of a discharge of the bankrupt; secondly, jurisdiction, as an ordinary court, of suits at law or in equity, brought by or against the assignee in reference to alleged property of the bankrupt, or to claims alleged to be due from or to him,' and the jurisdiction of the District and Circuit Courts over suits to recover assets of the bankrupt from a stranger to the proceedings in bankruptcy brought by the assignee in a district other than that in which the decree in bankruptcy had been made, was upheld, not under the provisions of § 1 of that act, giving to the District Court original jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, and of § 2, giving to the Circuit Court supervisory jurisdiction over such proceedings; but wholly under the distinct clause of § 2, which gave to those two courts concurrent jurisdiction of all suits, at law or in equity, brought 'by the assignee in bankruptcy against any person claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against such assignee, touching any property or rights of property of said bankrupt transferable to or vested in such assignee.' * * *

"The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States over all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy, as distinguished from independent suits at law or in equity, was of course exclusive. But it was well settled that the jurisdiction of such suits, conferred by the second section of the Act of 1867 upon the circuit and District Courts, of the United States for the benefit of an assignee in bankruptcy, was concurrent with that of the State courts. * * *

"The section (§ 2) nowhere mentions civil actions at law, or plenary suits in equity. And no intention to vest the courts of bankruptcy with jurisdiction to entertain such actions and suits can reasonably be inferred from the grant of the incidental powers, in clause 6, to bring in and substitute additional parties 'in proceedings in bankruptcy,' and in clause 15, to make orders, issue tees. Some cases before the Amendment of 1903 maintained erroneously that the bankruptcy courts had jurisdiction to entertain plenary suits by trustees: Carter v. Hobbs, 1 A. B. R. 215, 92 Fed. 594 (D. C. Ind.); In re Kerski, 2 A. B. R. 79 (Ref. Wis.); In re San Gabriel Sanatorium, 4 A. B. R. 197, 102 Fed. 310 (C. C. A. Calif.), reversing Perkins v. McCauley, 3 A. B. R. 445 (C. C. A.); Norcross v. Nathan, 3 A. B. R. 613 (D. C. Nev.); Lehman v. Crosby, 3 A. B. R. 662 (D. C. N. Y.); Cox v. Wall, 3 A. B. R. 664, 99 Fed. 546 (D. C. N. Car.), affirmed in 4 A. B. R. 659, but reversed by Sup. Ct., 5 A. B. R. 727; In re Newberry, 3 A. B. R. 158 (D. C. Mich.); Murray

v. Beale, 3 A. B. R. 284 (D. C. Utah); Louisville Trust Co v. Marx, 3 A. B. R. 450 (D. C. Ky.); Pepperdine v. Headley, 3 A. B. R. 455 (D. C. Mo.); In re Woodbury, 3 A. B. R. 457 (D. C. N. Mass.): But this case is wholly obiter on this point, for it was a case of a lien by legal proceedings nullified by bankruptcy as to which the bankruptcy court always has had summary jurisdiction. Obiter, Robinson v. White, 3 A. B. R. 88 (D. C. Ind.). Obiter, In re Sievers, 1 A. B. R. 117, 91 Fed. 366 (D. C. Ky.).

process and enter judgments, 'necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.'

"The chief reliance of the appellant is upon clause 7. But this clause, in so far as it speaks of the collection, conversion into money and distribution of the bankrupt's estate, is no broader than the corresponding provisions of section 1 of the Act of 1867; and in that respect, as well as in respect to the further provision authorizing the court of bankruptcy to 'determine controversies in relation thereto, it is controlled and limited by the concluding words of the clause, 'except as herein otherwise provided.'

"These words, 'herein otherwise provided,' evidently refer to § 23 of the act, the general scope and object of which, as indicated by its title, are to define the jurisdiction of United States and State Courts in the premises. The first and second clauses are the only ones relating to civil actions and suits at law or in equity.

"The first clause provides that 'the United States Circuit Courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy' (thus clearly recognizing the essential difference between proceedings in bankruptcy, on the one hand, and suits at law or in equity, on the other), 'between trustees as such and adverse claimants, concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees,' restricting that jurisdiction, however, by the further words, 'in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants.' This clause, while relating to the Circuit Courts only, and not to the District Courts of the United States, indicates the intention of Congress that the ascertainment, as between the trustee in bankruptcy and a stranger to the bankruptcy proceedings, of the question whether certain property claimed by the trustee does or does not form part of the estate to be administered in bankruptcy, shall not be brought within the jurisdiction of the national courts solely because the rights of the bankrupt and of his creditors have been transferred to the trustee in bankruptcy.

"The second clause positively directs that 'suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt whose estate is being administered by such trustee might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant.'

"But the second clause applies both to the District Courts and to the Circuit Courts of the United States, as well as to the State courts. This appears, not only by the clear words of the title of the section, but also by the use of this clause of the general words, 'the courts,' as contrasted with the specific words, 'the United States Circuit Courts,' in the first and in the third clauses.

"Had there been no bankruptcy proceedings, the bankrupt might have brought suit in any State court of competent jurisdiction; or, if there was a sufficient jurisdictional amount, and the requisite diversity of citizenship existed, or the case arose under the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States, he could have brought suit in the Circuit Court of the United States. Act of August 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 434. He could not have sued in a District Court of the United States, because such a court has no jurisdiction of suits at law or in equity between private parties, except where, by special provision of an act of Congress, a District Court has the powers of a Circuit Court, or is given jurisdiction of a particular class of civil suits.

"It was argued for the appellant that the clause cannot apply to a case like the present one, because the bankrupt could not have brought a suit to set aside a conveyance made by himself in fraud of his creditors. But the clause concerns the jurisdiction only, and not the merits, of a case; the forum in which a case may be tried, and not the way in which it must be decided; the right to decide the case, and not the principles which must govern the decision. The bankrupt himself could have brought a suit to recover property, which he claimed as his own, against one asserting an adverse title in it; and the incapacity of the bankrupt to set aside his own fraudulent conveyance is a matter affecting the merits of such an action, and not the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain and determine it.

"The Bankrupt Acts of 1867 and 1841, as has been seen, each contained a provision conferring in the clearest terms on the Circuit and District Courts of the United States concurrent jurisdiction of suits at law or in equity between the assignee in bankruptcy and an adverse claimant of property of the bankrupt. We find it impossible to infer that when Congress, in framing the Act of 1898, entirely omitted any similar provision, and substituted the restricted provisions of § 23, it intended that either of those courts should retain the jurisdiction which it had under the obsolete provision of the earlier acts.

"On the contrary, Congress, by the second clause of § 23 of the present Bankrupt Act, appears to this court to have clearly manifested its intention that controversies, not strictly or properly part of the proceedings in bankruptcy, but independent suits brought by the trustee in bankruptcy to assert a title to money or property as assets of the bankrupt against strangers to those proceedings, should not come within the jurisdiction of the District Courts of the United States, 'unless by consent of the proposed defendant,' of which there is no pretense in this case."

Jacquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 A. B. R. 528: "The objection that it is not a suit within the meaning of the 23d section of the Bankruptcy Law is without force. The proceeding was a summary application to the court in bankruptcy to grant an order in a matter, the result of the granting of which would be to immediately take from the surety moneys which had been deposited with him before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and thus compel him to come into the bankruptcy court for the litigation of questions as to his right to retain the money claimed by him. It would also enjoin the plaintiffs in the State suits from proceeding to collect their judgments from the surety in the bail bonds. To extend such a jurisdiction over an adverse claimant would be within the prohibition of § 23, a and b * * * whether such jurisdiction were exerted by an action strictly so-called or by a summary application to the court in bankruptcy. It is the exercise of jurisdiction which the section prohibits, and the particular method of procedure in the court is immaterial. The surety in whose hands the money was deposited to indemnify him for his liability on the bail bond was an adverse claimant within the meaning of that section of the act, and could not be proceeded against in the bankruptcy court unless by his consent, as provided for therein."

Bank v. Title & Trust Co., 198 U. S. 280, 14 A. B. R. 106 (reversing In re Rodgers, 11 A. B. R. 78, 125 Fed. 569): "The distinction between steps in bankruptcy proceedings proper and controversies arising out of the settlement of the estates of bankrupts is recognized in §§ 23, 24 and 25 of the present Act. * * * This distinction existed under the prior bankruptcy law, and the then decisions in respect of a proceeding in bankruptcy and an independent suit are applicable. It was settled that the bankruptcy court was without jurisdiction to determine adverse claims to property, not in the possession of the assignee in bankruptcy, by summary proceedings, whether absolute title or only a lien was asserted. * * *

"The present Act was plainly framed in recognition of the principle of these cases."

In re Baudouine, 3 A. B. R. 651, 101 Fed. 574 (C. C. A. N. Y.): “* * * the language of clause 7 (of § 2) would seem to be sufficiently comprehensive to authorize the determination by Courts of Bankruptcy of every controversy relating to the estates of bankrupts. * * * Nevertheless, it is capable of a narrower construction, and can be read as extending only to controversies about property which actually belongs to the bankrupt’s estate, or which arise strictly in the bankruptcy proceeding, such as those in reference to the marshaling of assets, or the extent and priority of conflicting liens.”

Obiter, In re Rochford, 10 A. B. R. 608, 124 Fed. 182 (C. C. A. S. Dak.): “The District Court sitting in bankruptcy has no jurisdiction over a controversy between trustees in bankruptcy and an adverse claimant relating to the title or possession of property in the custody of the latter, in the absence of his consent, but such an issue is a controversy at law or in equity, as distinguished from a proceeding in bankruptcy, within the meaning of § 23 of the Bankrupt Act of 1898.”

Sheldon v. Parker, 11 A. B. R. 170, 92 N. W. 923, 66 Neb. 610: “Under the law his official character as trustee gives him no greater right to commence an action in the Federal court against residents of this State than he possessed as an individual, and the Federal Congress, having relegated such cases to the jurisdiction of the State courts, has conferred upon the State court full authority to act, and to tax the usual costs and expenses attending such suits, the same as in other cases.”

In re Sheinbaum, 5 A. B. R. 187, 107 Fed. 247 (D. C. N. Y.): “The evidence shows that Wasserman was in possession claiming title before the bankruptcy, and hence, under Bank v. Bardes, I cannot oust him by summary proceedings, except he consent to proceedings in this court.”

In re Ward, 5 A. B. R. 217, 104 Fed. 985 (D. C. Mass.): “* * * the district court is without jurisdiction to take property alleged to belong to the bankrupt out of the possession of a third party, as well temporarily and by summary process, as permanently and by plenary suit.”

Hicks v. Knost, 2 A. B. R. 153, 94 Fed. 625 (D. C. Ohio): “Now, is it necessary, within the meaning of the law, in order to accomplish these ends, to invest bankruptcy courts with jurisdiction to hear and determine all controversies incident to the collection and conversion into money of the bankrupt’s estate? Must all suits and actions for that purpose, actions on accounts, promissory notes and contracts, and suits to foreclose mortgages, set aside fraudulent conveyances and the like, be brought in the bankruptcy courts without reference to the amount involved, the citizenship of the parties, or the questions presented. Must the dockets be crowded and the time of the District Courts be taken up with the hearing of minor controversies at great inconvenience and expense to the litigants, who may be compelled to travel long distances to attend the courts, or was it the intention of Congress to follow its long-established policy of permitting such controversies to be determined in the local State courts, at the doors of the people without necessary expense or inconvenience? * * *

“It seems to me that it was the intention of Congress to permit such controversies, when they could not be settled by compromise or arbitration, to be litigated in the courts, which, under the general law, would have jurisdiction of them, just as assignees under State insolvency laws bring suits in courts of general jurisdiction to collect assets which are afterwards distributed by the Court of Insolvency. The Bankruptcy Court controls the trustee, supervises the administration of his trust, settles his accounts and orders the distribution of the moneys in his hands, but is not required to assume the burden of the litigations necessary for the collection of assets, nor are adverse claimants of property, acquired or claimed by trustees, to be put to unnecessary inconvenience and expense in litigating their rights."

In re Steuer, 5 A. B. R. 213, 104 Fed. 976 (D. C. Mass.): "Bardes v. Bank must be taken to decide that a trustee cannot, by petition in bankruptcy, recover from a third party property alleged to belong to the bankrupt's estate, if objection is seasonably taken to the form of the proceedings. Even with the defendants' consent to the general jurisdiction of the court, the court must, if the defendant insists, proceed by plenary suit. But Stickney v. Wilt, Milner v. Meek, and perhaps White v. Ewing must still be taken to authorize a proceeding by way of petition where (1) the court has jurisdiction to proceed by way of plenary suit, (2) where no seasonable objection is taken to the form of procedure, and (3) where, under the forum of a petition in bankruptcy, the rights of the respondent are secured as substantial as in a plenary suit. In the case at bar no objection was made to the form of proceeding until the argument before the District Court, and, inasmuch as this court has, through the defendants' submission thereto, jurisdiction by way of plenary suit of the proceedings in question, the objection to the form of proceedings has come too late."

§ 1654. Injunctions on Adverse Claimants Issuable in Bankruptcy Proceedings.—The doctrine of Bardes v. Bank does not affect the jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Court to issue restraining orders and injunctions in the bankruptcy proceedings themselves, upon adverse claimants in possession, in aid of the bankruptcy proceedings to preserve the status quo: it affects merely the forum for the recovery of property and debts.³ However some courts have held that injunctions come under the same doctrine; that the enjoining of the disposition of property is the exercise of the same right involved in the ordering of its surrender.⁴

But restraining a litigant in the State court from proceeding further therein is to be distinguished from restraining the court or its officers.⁵

§ 1654½. Whether "Adverse Claimant in Possession" Determined by Pleadings.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction in the summary proceedings to determine the existence of the facts requisite to give it the jurisdiction to proceed summarily.⁶

Nevertheless, it will only examine far enough to determine whether the facts are alleged in good faith (even though they be fraudulent) and whether, if true, they would constitute the adverse party an "adverse claimant" within the meaning of the law.⁷

And it has been held that the bankruptcy court is not concluded by the

DIVISION 1.

WHO ARE ADVERSE CLAIMANTS.

§ 1655. "Adverse Claimants" Not Confined to Absolute Owners.—“Adverse claimant” is a term not to be confined to those who claim absolute ownership.⁹ Thus a surety holding funds of his principal as indemnity, placed there coincidentally with the signing of the bail bonds, may not be proceeded against summarily.¹⁰ Chattel mortgagees and vendees of bills of sale, are adverse claimants where the trustee claims they are fraudulent.¹¹

One who has a substantial claim to a mortgage lien antedating the bankruptcy is equally an adverse claimant with one who claims absolute title.¹²

Of course, one who denies the possession, and makes no claim of title to property which is alleged to be in his possession, cannot consistently object to summary proceedings for the recovery of such property, on the ground that he is an “adverse claimant.”¹³

§ 1656. Adverse Claimant and Bankrupt Holding Jointly, Bankruptcy Court Has Jurisdiction.—But where such third person has not the exclusive possession, but holds along with the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court may have jurisdiction.¹⁴

§ 1657. Adverse Claimant Obtaining Voluntary Possession from Bankruptcy Officer Whether Subject to Summary Jurisdiction.—It has been held that one gaining possession voluntarily from the receiver in bankruptcy, if he be an “adverse claimant,” may not be proceeded against summarily by the trustee to regain possession, the summary jurisdiction previously existing being extinguished by the gaining of such voluntary possession afterwards.¹⁵ This is doubtless true where it is the trustee from whom the possession was obtained; but, on the other hand the opposite has been held where it is the receiver from whom the possession was obtained, since the receiver has no power to make a voluntary surrender.¹⁶

Thus, a holder of a receiver's certificate has been held subject to summary order to return money paid on the certificate by the receiver contrary to the court's order.¹⁷

§ 1657½. Creditors Receiving Property after Filing of Petition, Not "Adverse" When.—Creditors receiving property from the bankrupt, which was once in the custody of the receiver in bankruptcy but had been released by him to the bankrupt under order of court (because of the receiver's failure to qualify), have been held not to be adverse claimants, but to be subject to summary jurisdiction.^{17a}

§ 1658. Adverse Claimant Himself Becoming Bankrupt Gives Jurisdiction.—Adverse claimant becoming bankrupt gives jurisdiction to the bankruptcy court as between the two trustees in bankruptcy.¹⁸

§ 1659. Attaching Creditor Receiving Proceeds, within Four Months, Adverse Claimant.—An execution or attaching creditor in receipt of the proceeds of the execution or attachment sale before the bankruptcy although within the four months, is an adverse claimant,¹⁹ but is not such adverse claimant when he receives the property itself by virtue of a redelivery bond.²⁰

§ 1660. Receiving Proceeds after Bankruptcy, Not "Adverse Claimant."—But where the attaching or execution creditor receives the proceeds afterward and with knowledge of the filing of the petition, the creditor is not an adverse claimant; for this would be a case where it was not in the possession of the creditor at the "time of bankruptcy."²¹ However, the rule would be different if the property were exempt and claimed as such, even though, after the proceeds were paid over, the bankrupt attempted to waive the exemption.^{21a}

the proceeds are still in the hands of the court or officer at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy; ²² nor is the officer an adverse claimant. ²³

§ 1662. Court Officers in Possession, Adverse Claimants until Adjudication.—Court officers in possession of property are not subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court until adjudication has nullified the liens. Thus, a sheriff holding the proceeds of an attachment sale in his hands after the filing of the bankruptcy petition but before adjudication, is an adverse claimant where he is claiming a lien thereon for poundage. He represents a creditor and is holding adversely to the bankrupt by a lien that is not yet void. ²⁴ And they are not adverse claimants after adjudication, ²⁵ and may be summarily ordered to surrender the property in their possession. ²⁶

But it has been held, though on doubtful authority, that court officers in possession, where the property itself is not under the direct custody of the court as it would be in cases of judicial sales and is being simply held for execution sale, may be ordered to turn over the property, notwithstanding the execution levy and lien were obtained before the four months' period and are therefore good, the lien following the property into the trustee's hands for administration. ²⁷

§ 1663. Whether Garnishee Adverse Claimant Where Garnishment within Four Months.—The courts have appeared, in some decisions, to incline somewhat to the doctrine that the garnishee is not an adverse claimant, where the garnishment is instituted within the four months preceding the bankruptcy. ²⁸

The true rule would seem to be that the garnishee is an adverse claimant if he claims any interest in or lien upon the property in his possession, or if he is a mere debtor of the bankrupt; and that if he is a debtor of the bankrupt or is in possession of property under claim of a right thereto or an interest therein, he is not subject to summary process; the fact that he is a garnishee not changing the usual rules in these respects.

mon pleas of Philadelphia county. These were begun nearly three months before the petition in bankruptcy was filed, and J. Joseph Murphy was summoned as garnishee. He then held in his hands, and still holds, the sum of $500, to which, either in whole or in part, there are several claimants, including each of the bankrupts. The money has never been in the control of the District Court, and its ownership is a fairly disputable question. Clearly, as it seems to me, the Court of Common Pleas is the proper tribunal to settle this controversy, unless all parties in interest have submitted themselves to the court in bankruptcy. The referee thought that such submission had been made, and therefore decided the case on the merits, and entered an order directing the garnishee to pay over to Mary Murphy the $500 now in his hands. In making this order, I think the referee was in error. It may be that Mary Murphy, Kane and Sweeney did submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the District Court, but it is plain that the garnishee declined to follow this course, and that he has an individual claim upon part of the fund."

The cases affirming summary orders on garnishees have been either cases where the point was not raised or where there was no adverse claim on the part of the garnishee and where the garnishee was simply a stakeholder.

§ 1664. Wife "Adverse Claimant" as to Property She May Hold Adversely to Husband.—The bankrupt's wife may be an adverse claimant in Alabama;³⁰ also in Pennsylvania;³¹ also in New York.³²

Money saved by the wife from allowances made to her for household expenses may, under some circumstances, be retained by her as against the trustee in bankruptcy of a partnership of which her husband was a member.

In re Simon No. 2, 28 A. B. R. 616, 197 Fed. 102 (D. C. N. Y.): "It has been broadly held, as contended by counsel for the trustees, that money saved by a wife from an allowance by her husband for household expenses belongs to him; yet such adjudications proceed upon the theory that the wife is the agent for her husband in the conduct of the household affairs, and that, in the absence of an intention to bestow a gift upon her, a trust relationship is created. But this principle is not applicable to the facts under consideration, as the surrounding circumstances, together with the testimony, negative any trust relationship, and clearly support the implication that any amount saved from the weekly allowance was to be the separate property of the wife. The burden of proof rested upon the trustees to show that the presumptions were to the contrary, and that instead of a gift to the wife a trust relationship was created. In this they have failed. The rationale of the entire transaction, the station in life of the parties, the solvency of the donor during the entire period, the economy of the wife in performing her household duties and dispensing with the assistance of servants, all point with persuasive cogency to an intention by the husband to relinquish possession, control, and ownership of the various amounts paid the wife and to vest her with title to unexpended amounts. Knowledge that the wife was in the habit of concealing unused sums was not essential to the validity of the gift. In the cases cited by the counsel for the trustees, of which Aaronson v. McCauley, 19 N. Y. Supp. 690, is most directly in point, the holding of the court, that the surplus arising out of the economy of the wife in managing her household remains the property of the husband, doubtless rested upon facts showing that there was no intention to bestow the remainder as a gift upon the wife."

Indeed, the bankruptcy court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, will aid the wife in recovering her separate estate from her husband's trustee in bankruptcy.³³

§ 1665. Assignee or Receiver Not "Adverse Claimant" as to Proceeds Still in Hands.—An assignee or receiver for creditors is not an "adverse claimant," but is an agent of the assignor.³⁴

Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 A. B. R. 623: "The general assignment, made by Abraham to Davidson, did not constitute Davidson an assignee for value, but simply made him an agent of Abraham for the distribution of the proceeds of the property among Abraham's creditors."

Similarly, a bank holding a fund produced from the sale of the debtor's entire stock of merchandise made within the four months period under a receipt expressing on its face that the fund was to be pro-rated among the debtor's creditors as their interests might appear, is a mere agent of the bankrupt and may be summarily ordered by the bankruptcy court to surrender the property; and it does not become an adverse holder by virtue of the fact that after the adjudication, without consent of the debtor nor purchaser, it credits the fund on a claim of its own and also on that of one of the other creditors: as the fund was deposited for a special purpose the bank held it as a trustee before the adjudication, and not as an adverse claimant.³⁵ Thus, also, an assignee for creditors under a void general assignment who claims in his individual capacity part of the assets in his possession as assignee, is not in possession as adverse claimant but as assignee.³⁶ The purchaser at a collusive sale by an assignee under a void general assignment preceding the bankruptcy of the assignor is an adverse claimant.³⁷

In re Hays, 24 A. B. R. 691, 181 Fed. 674 (C. C. A. Ohio): "The assignee contends in this court that the referee in bankruptcy had no jurisdiction by summary proceeding to direct an assignee appointed under the State law to turn over to the trustee in bankruptcy the funds to which he claims the right to credit, on account of commissions, compensation for extra services, and bills for legal services and expenses. This contention rests upon the proposition that the claim of the assignee is adverse to the estate of the bankrupt. There is no doubt that if the claim presented by the assignee is an adverse claim within the meaning of the decisions, the District Court had no jurisdiction by summary proceeding to require the turning over of the moneys to the estate of the bankrupt as against the assignee's objection to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. Louisville Trust Co. v. Comingor, 184 U. S. 18, 7 Am. B. R. 421; First Nat. Bank v. Title & Trust Co., 198 U. S. 280, 14 Am. B. R. 102. But in our opinion, upon the case presented on this review, the District Court had jurisdiction to make the order complained of. The assignment by Hays to Stewart did not constitute the latter an assignee for value, but simply made him the agent of Hays for the distribution of the proceeds of the property among the latter's creditors. Being such agent his possession was that of the principal, and he therefore did not hold adversely to the bankrupt or to the latter's trustee by the mere fact that he held in his hands funds received by him under the assignment. Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 192, 193, 5 Am. B. R. 623; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 17, 7 Am. B. R. 224."

"The assignee contends that this case is ruled by Louisville Trust Co. v. Comingor, supra, in which, under the facts there presented, the bankruptcy court was held to have no jurisdiction to make an order for the surrender by an assignee of moneys which had been received by him under the assignment. The Comingor case differs from the case before us in these respects: In that case the assignee denied the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, and showed in defense to the proceeding to require him to pay over the moneys in question that previous to the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings he had actually disbursed the entire amount by way of commissions retained by him as compensation and through payments to his attorneys, and that he was utterly unable to recover or repay any part of such moneys. He therefore could not comply with an order for surrender, and as pointed out by this court in the opinion of Judge Severens, imprisonment must inevitably follow the order for surrender. Ex parte Comingor (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 537, 107 Fed. 898, 907, 47 C. C. A. 51. As stated by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller: 'He (Comingor) was ruled to show cause, and the cause he showed defeated jurisdiction over the subject-matter, that is, jurisdiction to proceed summarily. He did not come in voluntarily, but in obedience to peremptory orders, and although he participated in the proceedings before the referee, he had pleaded his claim in the outset, and he made his formal protest to the exercise of jurisdiction before the final order was entered.'

"In the case we are considering, of the $18,000 and upwards received by the assignee there came into his hands previous to the proceedings in bankruptcy but $808.12. The accounts presented by him show that he had disbursed previous to the bankruptcy proceedings but $166. We find no assertion in the record that he has ever paid the claims of Stewart & Stewart for legal services (except the sum of $99.72, not in controversy) or any of the claims in controversy here except the expenses (as distinguished from legal services) connected with the resistance to the bankruptcy proceedings. The record is express that upon the proceedings for the settlement of his accounts before the referee, the assignee stated in open court, that the entire receipts, less certain disbursements which were allowed by the referee, "should be treated as cash now in the hands of the assignee." The order of the referee is for the surrender to the trustee by the assignee of the "sum of four thousand eighty-six and sixty-one one-hundredths dollars (4,086.61) so as aforesaid in his possession and belonging to said estate."

§ 1666. But "Adverse Claimant" as to Proceeds Already Disbursed.—But an assignee for creditors, as to disbursements made out of the assigned property before the bankruptcy of the assignor, is an adverse claimant and may not be summarily ordered to account to the bankruptcy court therefor.³⁸ Likewise, an assignee for creditors retaining and expending, before the bankruptcy of the assignor, his commissions out of the assigned property, is an adverse claimant, and may not be summarily ordered to account to the bankruptcy court therefor.³⁹ But an attorney for an assignee, holding property of the estate, is not an adverse claimant, but is subject to summary order.⁴⁰

§ 1667. Agent in Possession Applying Funds on Salary.—Similarly, an agent in possession claiming to have applied, by agreement with the bankrupt, funds in his possession as manager upon his salary, is an adverse claimant; and, as to funds so applied, can only be reached by plenary action, although as to funds not so applied he is subject to summary jurisdiction.⁴¹

§ 1668. Trustee in Possession under Mortgage for Benefit of Certain Creditors, "Adverse Claimant."—A trustee in possession under a mortgage or trust deed made for the benefit of certain creditors, is an adverse claimant, and not subject to summary jurisdiction.⁴²

If the fund can be reached by the trustee in bankruptcy after it has come into the hands of the bankrupt, the testamentary trustees are not necessary parties to an action. But if it is sought to be reached before they have discharged their fiduciary and statutory obligation towards the beneficiary, they are in duty bound to resist. In defending their trust duties they are hostile to the trustee in bankruptcy, and if they are entitled to be heard at all they are entitled to contest his title as fully as though they were the equitable owners of the fund."

Pledgor of Certificate of Membership in Board of Trade, Query.—It has been held that the pledgor of a certificate of membership in a Board of Trade or Exchange or other similar body cannot be required by the bankruptcy court to make written application to the Board of Trade for the posting and sale of the certificate although the certificate is in the trustee's hands as assets of the estate. In re Silberhorn, 5 A. B. R. 568, 105 Fed. 809 (D. C. Ills.). This decision seems out of harmony with the weight of authority.

It is difficult to see why a pledgor of property in the trustee's hands is not subject to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court for all proceedings requisite to the realization upon the trustee's interest in the pledged property.

But where the rules of the Stock Exchange provide for a committee to act as a tribunal to settle the rights and liens of creditors upon a member's seat such tribunal is one established by contract and its determinations will be respected subject, of course, to the usual rules regulating the relations of such tribunals to the regularly constituted courts of the land. subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.⁶⁰ Thus, where a bankrupt has assigned his future earned wages both the assignee and employer are adverse claimants, not subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.⁶¹

Likewise, sureties in possession of deposits made within the four months by the bankrupt for indemnity have been held to be adverse even after exoneration of the bankrupt, if the sureties claim a lien or other interest in the fund.⁶²

Again, the sister of the bankrupt is an adverse claimant where she holds as security a bond for title to real estate which her brother had transferred to her after having deeded the property to a third person for a loan, taking the bond in return.⁶³

But a liveryman, holding possession at the time of the bankruptcy under his lien, has been held subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.⁶⁴

It has been held that an attorney holding chattel mortgages belonging to the bankrupt, upon which he claims an attorney's lien for services performed before the bankruptcy, is within the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court;⁶⁵ but this is doubtless based upon the general doctrine that all courts have summary jurisdiction over attorneys practicing before them as regards their relations with their clients.

In re Zotti, 23 A. B. R. 812, 178 Fed. 304 (D. C. N. Y.), reversing S. C., 23 A. B. R. 601, affirmed in In re Zotti, 26 A. B. R. 234, 186 Fed. 84 (C. C. A.): "The bankrupt's property was the chose in action against the bank; to speak of it as 'money on deposit' is confessedly a colloquialism. * * * Here the bank has not meddled with the bankrupt's assets at all. The property was, as I have said, a chose in action to which it was an incident that the obligor should honor sight drafts. It did honor such a draft, innocently, as all sides concede, and in so doing it availed itself of the conditions of the very obligation under which the trustee now sues. Of course the trustee is subject to the same conditions when he sues as the bankrupt is under: one of these conditions is the right of the debtor bank to treat as a valid extinguishment pro tanto any payment made upon cheque. It is only by what seems to me a confusion of the fundamental relation between the bank and the bankrupt that I can hold liable the former. The bank in no sense transferred property of the bankrupt for it had no such property. He himself, the bank's customer, alone had any property, and that was a right to sue, subject to a condition which has occurred. I can only conclude that the order was erroneous and it must be reversed."

First Nat. Bank v. Hopkins, 29 A. B. R. 434, 199 Fed. 877 (C. C. A. Ga.): "The amount named in the judge's order, and which the bank was directed to pay over at once to the trustee, was on deposit in the bank to the credit of the Montgomery Drug Company when bankruptcy proceedings were instituted against that company. The bank held notes against the Montgomery Drug Company for a larger amount than the Drug Company's total deposits, and claimed the right to set off the notes against the deposits. The objection to this on the part of the trustee for the Montgomery Drug Company was that nearly all of the deposits standing to the credit of the Montgomery Drug Company in the bank had been deposited under a special arrangement, by which it was put there for the benefit of all the creditors of the Drug Company, to be paid to them on their debts, pro rata, and that the bank officers had notice that such was the character of the deposits.

"This was the matter at issue between the parties—that is, between the trustee in bankruptcy and the bank—when this summary proceeding was instituted. The deposits were entered on the books of the bank to the credit of the Montgomery Drug Company, and were ordinary deposits put by the bank on the Drug Company's deposit book. There was nothing whatever on the books of the bank to show that it was anything other than an ordinary deposit. The proceeds of a note given to the Montgomery Drug Company, for the purchase of its goods, amounting to $10,000, and put to the credit of the Montgomery Drug Company, constituted the greater part of the deposits at the time of the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings.

"We must determine, therefore, on the facts of the present case, before going into it further, whether there was a real adverse claim on the part of the bank, without reference to what its merits might be when heard and determined, or whether it was merely colorable. It is perfectly clear to us that the claim of the bank in this case was a real adverse claim, and not merely colorable."

that lies at the very threshold: the court even when the lienholders come in would have no power to "require" the owners to pay their debts into the bankruptcy court. The obligation of the owner is a mere debt—to pay the contract price, and mere debts as we have seen the bankruptcy court cannot "require" to be paid into its registry by either plenary or summary process.

termine any excessiveness. As to this apparent exception, it is to be observed, first, that courts have always assumed summary jurisdiction over their officers and attorneys for the sake of preserving purity in the administration of justice; and, second, that, doubtless, the re-examination would not result in a summary order on the attorney to repay the excess if the attorney were shown to be unable to respond or were a non-resident. In these latter contingencies, the trustee would be obliged, doubtless, to sue for a judgment in a court whose judgment could be executed. In such suit, however, the order of the bankruptcy court determining the excess would be binding and final upon the parties.⁷³

IN WHAT COURTS MAY PLENARY ACTIONS AGAINST ADVERSE CLAIMANTS BE BROUGHT BY TRUSTEES AND RECEIVERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

§ 1684. Plenary Suits against "Adverse Claimants" in State Courts.—Plenary suits against adverse claimants always may be brought in the State court, or the United States district court, that would have had jurisdiction of the parties had not bankruptcy intervened.⁷⁴

§ 1685. Distinction between Proceedings in Bankruptcy and "Controversies" Arising Out of Bankruptcy.—The distinction between proceedings in bankruptcy and controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings is elsewhere elucidated.⁷⁵

⁷³. See post, § 2099.

Bankr. Act, § 23 (a): "The United States circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy between trustees as such and adverse claimants concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustee, in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants."

Bankr. Act, § 70 (e): "The trustee may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided, and may recover the property so transferred, or its value, from the person to whom it was transferred, unless he was a bona fide holder for value prior to the date of the adjudication. Such property may be recovered or its value collected from whoever may have received it, except a bona fide holder for value. For the purpose of such recovery any court of bankruptcy as hereinbefore defined, and any State court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction."

Frank v. Vollkommer, 17 A. B. R. 808, 205 U. S. 521; Hobbs v. Frazier, 26 A. B. R. 887 (Sup. Ct. Fla.).

Bankruptcy proceedings proper are those concerned with the adjudication of the debtor as a bankrupt and his discharge, and also such as concern the election of the trustee by creditors, the sale of assets belonging to the bankrupt estate, and the allowance of creditors' claims, and the distribution of the proceeds to creditors. The bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction of such proceedings. "Controversies" "arising in bankruptcy proceedings," on the other hand, are all other bankruptcy controversies than those mentioned, arising with regard to property in the possession of the bankruptcy court or perhaps (though this point is not settled) with regard to property not in its possession. As to the former, the bankruptcy court in the bankruptcy proceedings themselves has jurisdiction, equally as well as in bankruptcy proceedings proper. Of the latter, the bankruptcy court has no summary jurisdiction whatever, and has only such plenary jurisdiction as is conferred by the Amendment of 1903, to recover property fraudulently or preferentially conveyed.⁷⁶

Compare, Brumley v. Jones, 15 A. B. R. 581, 141 Fed. 318 (C. C. A. Ga.): "The District Court does not possess the general power to entertain a suit in equity, and, unless the Bankrupt Act has conferred upon it jurisdiction to entertain a plenary suit in equity, such a suit cannot be maintained. * * * The bankrupt act confers on the District Courts, as courts of bankruptcy, such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings. As courts of bankruptcy they are vested with power to collect, reduce to money, and distribute the estates of bankrupts, and to determine controversies in relation thereto. * * * We think it clear that the controversies referred to relate to the collection, sale, and distribution of such estates. The jurisdiction of the District Court, as granted by the Bankruptcy Act, is unquestionably bankrupt jurisdiction, and not general jurisdiction to hear and determine controversies between adverse third parties, which are not strictly and properly a part of the bankruptcy proceedings."

§ 1686. Jurisdiction of United States District Court in Bankruptcy Matters.—The Bankruptcy Act, by § 23 (a) does not enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States District [formerly the Circuit] Courts. They would only have jurisdiction over suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy in case diversity of citizenship or some other jurisdictional fact existed, which, in the usual procedure, would have conferred jurisdiction on the District [formerly the Circuit] Court of the United States in case the bankrupt had sued;⁷⁷ nor unless the amount involved exceeds

$2,000;⁷⁸ and even "consent" cannot confer jurisdiction upon the District [formerly Circuit] Court in bankruptcy cases, unless diversity of citizenship, etc., exists.⁷⁹

But the "diversity of citizenship" relates to the bankrupt's citizenship, not to the trustee's citizenship:

Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 A. B. R. 661: "That is, while the jurisdiction of the courts was not to be extended because of the bankruptcy proceedings or the citizenship of the trustee, it was preserved to the trustee in the jurisdiction where the bankrupt might have brought or prosecuted the suit but for the bankruptcy proceedings. While this section preserves the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Courts [now District] over cases coming within clause a, in clause b the right of suit by the trustee is limited to courts wherein the bankrupt might have brought or prosecuted the action had the bankruptcy proceedings not been instituted. * * *

"The action in the present case was to recover a sum of money alleged to have been due, prior to the bankruptcy proceedings, to the Southern Car and Foundry Company, which was a citizen of the State of New Jersey. The amount involved and the diverse citizenship of the parties were such that the car company might have sued the defendant, a citizen of the State of Alabama, in the Circuit Court of the United States independently of the bankruptcy proceedings. We think, by the terms of this section, it was intended to preserve this right to the trustee in bankruptcy, and that the citizenship of the trustee is wholly immaterial to the jurisdiction of such a case."

Thus, the Circuit [now District] Court has been held to have jurisdiction of an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover usurious interest paid by the bankrupt to a national bank.

Reed v. American-German Nat. Bank, 19 A. B. R. 140, 155 Fed. 233 (U. S. C. C. Ky.): "The provision of this section which is particularly material is, therefore, that part of clause 'b' which enacts that suits by the trustee shall only be brought in the courts 'where the bankrupt * * * might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted.' If the bankruptcy proceeding had not been instituted, could the saddlery company have brought suit in this court to recover the usurious interest paid to defendant; it being a national banking association organized under a law of the United States, viz, the national act? the statutory test established for such cases in which, and in those described in the clause of the section which we have italicized and which was added by the Amendment of 1903, the right of the trustee to sue in the Federal courts does not depend upon the consent of the person sued, though in other cases it does. * * * Under the judiciary act, jurisdiction is given generally to the Circuit Courts of the United States [now District] of cases arising under the laws of the United States. The national banking act itself, as amended, gives the Circuit Courts concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of the State having jurisdiction in similar cases of suits to recover interest knowingly collected at a higher rate than allowed by law; and, if this were all, it might well be held that the judiciary act and the national banking act, when construed together, give this court jurisdiction of a case like this. But, as the plaintiff here derives his powers and rights as trustee from the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, it has seemed to the court that his right to sue must also be tested by the provisions of that act. As we have seen, § 23b of the Bankruptcy Act gives him the right to sue here if the saddlery company could have done so, had there been no bankruptcy proceeding. The saddlery company would have had that right, as the claim exceeds $2,000 and arises under the laws of the United States. This court, therefore, has jurisdiction, and the demurrer must be overruled, both because the plaintiff has capacity to sue and because the court has jurisdiction of the action."

But the district [formerly circuit] court will not be permitted, even by the express order of the bankruptcy court, to carry on controversies over assets in the custody of the bankruptcy court.⁸⁰

Drew v. Myers, 22 A. B. R. 656, 81 Neb. 750, 116 N. W. 781: "It is plain from the reading of these sections that, if this action was to avoid a preference or to recover property fraudulently conveyed by the bankrupt, the state court would have concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal court of the same. Of all other actions brought by the trustee to recover property belonging to the bankrupt the State court retains sole jurisdiction." The rule is not quite broadly enough stated here. The Federal court also would have jurisdiction of suits to set aside any transfer which any creditor might have maintained had there been no bankruptcy.

The United States district [formerly circuit] court has no jurisdiction of a bill in equity the purpose of which is to control the distribution of a fund belonging to an estate in bankruptcy, and in the possession of the trustee thereof; nor does the fact that such a suit was begun in the district [formerly circuit] court with leave of the court of bankruptcy confer such jurisdiction.⁸¹

§ 1687. Jurisdiction of State Courts in Bankruptcy Matters.—Therefore, as a rule, the state court would be the one to which the trustee would be relegated, were it not for still further exceptions found in § 23 (b) and in § 70e, later discussed.

Thus, even since the Amendment of 1903, the state court has been a

The state court is not debarred from jurisdiction over suits against adverse claimants by any of the provisions of the Act.⁸³

Frank v. Vollkommer, 205 U. S. 521, 17 A. B. R. 808: “* * * the Amendment gave the bankruptcy court concurrent and not exclusive jurisdiction.”

And where rights conferred by the peculiar provisions of the Bankruptcy Act are involved, such rights are cognizable in the state court and the state court will enforce the Bankrupt Law wherever applicable.⁸⁴

Heath v. Shaffer, 2 A. B. R. 102, 93 Fed. 647 (D. C. Ia.): “If, upon the hearing, the State Court holds and adjudges the plaintiff’s claim or lien to be invalid and void either at the common law or under the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, that court would, undoubtedly, order the property to be delivered to the possession of the trustee. If the State court holds and adjudges the lien of the plaintiff to be valid, it would, upon the proper showing, also recognize the title and rights of the trustee subject to the lien of the plaintiff and would enforce the same according to the true intent and meaning of the Bankrupt Act. In some of the discussions had upon this general subject, it seems to be assumed that the State courts cannot aid in carrying out the general provisions of the Bankrupt Act, and that the trustee can only appeal to the courts of bankruptcy when seeking to secure a disposition of a bankrupt’s estate under that act; but this is a mistaken view of the law. The State courts, in all proceedings pending before them, have the right to apply and enforce the provisions of the Bankrupt Act in the determination of the questions at issue before them, and can give full protection to the rights of the trustee. The Bankrupt Act is the law of the land, and the State Courts have full right to enforce its mandates in all proceedings properly before them. Of course, it is not meant by this that a State court can adjudge a person to be bankrupt, or grant him a discharge, or control the distribution of the bankrupt’s estate; but what is meant is that in all suits pending before them, wherein may be involved a contest between the trustee and a third party, which depends, in whole or in part, upon the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, the State Court must of necessity have full right and jurisdiction to apply and enforce the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, not only in deciding the question of right at issue, but in securing to the parties the proper protection accorded to them under the act."

The conferring of jurisdiction upon state courts over federal bankruptcy questions is constitutional.⁸⁵ And where the trustee thus resorts to the state courts to recover property he is entitled to all remedies and relief that would be afforded any other party litigant under the same facts.⁸⁶

Bindseil v. Smith, 5 A. B. R. 40 (N. J. Ch. App. & Err.): "The appellant further insists that, as fraud in the transfer is not alleged, but merely illegality under the Bankrupt Act, a court of equity has no jurisdiction by common law, and such jurisdiction cannot be conferred on a State court by a Federal statute. Conceding that our own laws must point out which of our own courts is competent to afford a remedy in such cases, we think the relief prayed is properly sought in the Court of Chancery. The complainant seeks to compel the defendant to transfer the legal title of certain choses in action, which he now holds. Such a transfer requires the execution of a written instrument by the defendant for obtaining which the procedure in equity is more adapted than that in the courts of law. A judgment against the defendant for damages would not be an adequate remedy for the loss of claims against other persons, one of which is secured also by a lien on lands. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree the transfer of such writings is clear."

And, on the other hand, where the trustee thus resorts to the state court he is bound, as res adjudicata, by the final determination of the state court.⁸⁷

§ 1688. But by Amendment of 1903 Jurisdiction Conferred Also in Certain Cases upon Bankruptcy Courts.—By the Amendment of 1903 to §§ 23 (b) and 70 (e) jurisdiction was conferred also in certain cases upon the bankruptcy courts where formerly lacking. Section 60, subdivision (b), and § 67, subdivision (e), expressly referred to in the Amendment to § 23 (b), are the sections relating to the recovery of property preferentially and fraudulently conveyed, respectively, within the four months preceding the bankruptcy, whilst § 70 (e) provides that the trustee may avoid any transfer which any creditor might have avoided had not bankruptcy intervened; and all these sections, as separately amended, contain similar provisions that "For the purpose of such recovery any court of bankruptcy as hereinbefore defined, and any state court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction," although only § 60 (b) and § 67 (e) were expressly mentioned again, in the Amendment of 1903 to § 23 (b).⁸⁸

Lynch v. Bronson, 20 A. B. R. 409, 160 Fed. 139 (D. C. Conn.): "The amendment without doubt gives to this court concurrent jurisdiction with the State courts, without the consent of the proposed defendant of any suit which sets forth such facts as will bring it under either of the excepted subdivisions."

§ 1689. Cases under § 70 (e) Included.—In the Amendment of 1903 to § 23 (b), whereby jurisdiction was granted to the bankruptcy court over adverse claimants in certain cases, Congress by obvious inadvertence failed to include cases arising under § 70 (e); and it was denied in some cases that that amendment gave to the federal courts jurisdiction, without consent, to entertain suits by trustees in bankruptcy to set aside any transfer other than fraudulent or preferential transfers.⁸⁹

That construction, however, rendered senseless the addition of the amended words to § 70 (e).

“The trustee may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided, and may recover the property so transferred, or its value, from the person to whom it was transferred, unless he was a bona fide holder for value prior to the date of the adjudication. Such property may be recovered or its value collected from whomsoever may have received it, except a bona fide holder.

“For the purpose of such recovery any court of bankruptcy as hereinbefore defined, and any state court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction.”

Though even before the Amendment of 1903 the bankruptcy court already had been held to have such jurisdiction by consent; and the true rule, even before the Amendment of 1910, was that cases under § 70 (e) were also included.⁹⁰

But the question has been set at rest by the Amendment of 1910⁹¹ as follows:

Bankr. Act, § 23b, as amended in 1910: “Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant, except suits for the recovery of property under section sixty, subdivision b; section sixty-seven, subdivision e; and section seventy, subdivision e.”

And now, proceedings under § 70 (e) for the recovery of property fraudulently transferred may be taken by the trustee without the defendant's consent in any court of bankruptcy where the defendant may be reached by process.⁹²

Ga.): "Jurisdiction is concurrent with that of the State court and is here invoked to set aside a transfer on the part of an insolvent debtor, which it is alleged is declared to be null and void, as against the creditors of such debtor, by the law of the State. The amendment expressly confers jurisdiction by the proceedings in equity in a District Court to set aside such conveyances."

Jurisdiction to Recover from Vendee of Bankrupt, Who Knew the Facts, Property Bought by Bankrupt Through Fraudulent Misrepresentations.—In one case it has been held that the trustee succeeds to the rights of defrauded sellers to pursue property bought by the bankrupt through fraudulent misrepresentations and by him retransferred to third persons who had full knowledge of the fraud, such defrauded sellers having proved their claims as creditors and thus waived the tort. Lynch v. Bronson, 20 A. B. R. 409, 160 Fed. 139 (D. C. Conn.). This holding is peculiar, however. It would seem that the right of such creditors was to have pursued the property themselves, and that by waiving the right they did not confer it on the trustee, but that the trustee must depend solely upon the fraudulent nature of the transfer as between all the bankrupt's creditors and the vendee, rather than as between these particular sellers and the vendee.

Jurisdiction Where Transfer after as Well as before Filing of Petition.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction in a plenary suit, independently brought, to recover property transferred after as well as before the filing of the petition and even where possession has been obtained by the adverse claimant from the bankruptcy receiver or trustee himself. Whitney v. Wenman, 14 A. B. R. 45, 198 U. S. 539.

Jurisdiction Where Property Surrendered by Bankruptcy Receiver without Authority.—Thus, it has jurisdiction in a plenary suit, to recover from an adverse claimant property surrendered to him by its own receiver (and probably also even if surrendered by the trustee) without authority of court and perhaps for other reasons. Whitney v. Wenman, 14 A. B. R. 45, 198 U. S. 539; but it has been held, that the bankruptcy court has not jurisdiction to do so by summary process in a case where the receiver was persuaded to ruptcy by the amendments of 1903 to the bankruptcy law. It extends by the amendment of § 70 (c) * * * to the recovery of any property from any transfer which any creditor might have avoided; by that of § 60b * * * to the recovery of unlawful preferences; and by that of § 67e * * * to the recovery of property conveyed or transferred within the four months."

§ 1691. Plenary Suits by Trustees Not "Proceedings in Bankruptcy," but "Controversies."—Plenary suits by trustees are not "proceedings in bankruptcy," but are "controversies" arising out of bankruptcy proceedings.⁹⁶

§ 1692. But When Not to Be Brought in Bankruptcy Court.—But when the adverse claim is not by way of a preference, nor by way of a fraudulent transfer made within the four months preceding the bankruptcy, nor by way of a transfer by the bankrupt that would have been voidable at the suit of some creditor had there been no bankruptcy, the suit for recovery cannot be brought in the bankruptcy court, at all, unless by consent of the adverse claimant so in possession or unless possession has been obtained by him after bankruptcy from an officer of the bankruptcy court himself; but such suit must be brought in the state court or (where facts exist, by way of diversity of citizenship, etc., that would have operated, surrender property voluntarily to an adverse claimant, Moore v. Hinds, 14 A. B. R. 1 (C. C. A. Tenn., reversing Leeds Woolen Mills, 12 A. B. R. 136, 129 Fed. 922.).

But that this is doubtful, see suggestive quere, Whitney v. Wenman, 14 A. B. R. 45, 198 U. S. 539.

And certainly such would be the rule if the surrender were procured collusively.

Query: Whether Where Summary Jurisdiction Exists, Plenary Jurisdiction Also Exists.—Probably it is the rule that wherever summary jurisdiction would exist in the bankruptcy court plenary jurisdiction, a fortiori, would also exist. Compare tenor of court's opinion, Whitney v. Wenman, 14 A. B. R. 45, 198 U. S. 539. Also, compare general tenor of the court's decision in Rytenberg v. Schaefer, 11 A. B. R. 652, 131 Fed. 313 (D. C. N. Y.).

Trustee Not Confined to Suing in Own District Court.—The trustee is not confined to suing in the same district court wherein the bankruptcy proceedings themselves are pending: he may go into districts and sue there, if jurisdiction otherwise exists. Lawrence v. Lowrie, 13 A. B. R. 297 (D. C. Penn.).

Nonresident Protected from Service of Summons While in Attendance at Bankruptcy Court in Support of His Claim.—A nonresident is protected from the service of summons upon him in a suit brought by the trustee against him, while he is in attendance at the bankruptcy court in support of his claim as creditor. Morrow v. Dudley & Co., 16 A. B. R. 459 (D. C. Penn.).

Trustee Not Confined to Suing in Own District Because of Adjudication Being Based on Service by Publication.—Adjudication upon service by publication is precisely as effective as upon personal service, and the trustee is not confined to his own district in his suit to recover property. *Hills v. in case bankruptcy had not intervened, to confer jurisdiction) may be brought in the United States District court.⁹⁷

Hull v. Burr, 18 A. B. R. 541, 153 Fed. 945 (C. C. A. Fla.): "Does the Amendment of 1903 affect the case at bar? The amendment makes exceptions to the limitation on the jurisdiction of the District Courts, and thereby extends their jurisdiction; but the extension does not include cases like that presented by the petition of the trustee. The amendment confers jurisdiction on the District Courts in 'suits for the recovery of property under section sixty, subdivision b, and section sixty-seven, subdivision e.' Turning to § 60, we find that subdivision 'a' defines a preference, and that subdivision 'b' provides that the trustee may sue the person receiving a preference and recover the property or its value. Under the amendment, suit for that purpose may be brought in 'any court of bankruptcy.' The case at bar involves no question of preference. Examining § 67, subd. 'e,' we find that it relates to fraudulent conveyances by the bankrupt and conveyances made within four months prior to the time of filing the petition in bankruptcy. The amendment confers jurisdiction on any court of bankruptcy of suits to recover property so conveyed. The petition of the trustee in the case at bar contains no charge of fraud, and the deed and contracts in question were executed more than four months before the beginning of the bankruptcy proceedings. It follows that the amendment quoted has no application to this case. The case, when viewed as a controversy at law or in equity, not being affected by the amendment, must be governed by the principles announced in Bardes v. Hawarden Bank, supra, which denies the jurisdiction of the District Court. The only other part of the act that might be referred to in this connection is § 70, subd. 'e.' * * * Such jurisdiction as is conferred by this language relates to suits by the trustee to 'avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided.' The petition of the trustee in the instant case does not seek to avoid a transfer. It does not allege that the deed to Hull was made under circumstances that made it voidable at the suit of his creditors. In fact, it is not alleged in the petition that the corporation owed any debts at the date of its transfer to Hull. No charge of fraud against creditors is made. On the contrary, it is alleged that the deed to Hull was based on a large consideration, not less than $25,000. A careful consideration of the trustee's petition convinces us that it was not intended as a suit under § 70e, and that subdivision has not been cited by learned counsel for the trustee as conferring jurisdiction. The trustee is vested by the act with all the rights and title of the bankrupt, as well as with the rights of the bankrupt's creditors, and, when he seeks to enforce rights or to recover property in another district outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the court which appointed him, he stands in the position of those whose rights he has acquired, and can resort only to the same courts, State or Federal, and is confined to the same remedies. * * * This general rule is, of course, subject to the exceptions made by the Amendment of 1903, which has been quoted in this opinion and shown not to be applicable to this case."

in bankruptcy to avoid a preference or to recover property, fraudulently conveyed by the bankrupt. Of all other actions brought by the trustee to recover property belonging to the bankrupt the State court has sole jurisdiction." The rule is not completely stated by this holding, however; for jurisdiction is also extended to the Federal Court over suits to set aside any transfer that a creditor might have set aside had there been no bankruptcy. However, the case itself was rightly decided, because it would appear that the suit was not brought to set aside a "transfer."

Thus, the title to property in the possession of an adverse claimant alleged to have been sold to him before the bankruptcy may not be tried out in the bankruptcy court; although, when the purchaser comes into the bankruptcy proceedings to present his claim, it may be diminished, or denied participation in dividends.⁹⁸ Thus, the owner of property holding a fund, or owing money, on a building contract subject to mechanics' or subcontractors' liens, may not be sued in the bankruptcy court.¹

A suit to recover damages for conspiracy may not be brought in the district court.² Thus, also, one who has seized the bankrupt's property wrongfully may not be sued by the trustee in the District Court of the United States for its recovery, unless the seizure was made within four months before the bankruptcy and was made by legal proceedings, or unless it amounted to a voidable preference. Nor may a suit be brought there against one who has obtained goods from the bankruptcy court, unless by his own consent to the jurisdiction, for his case does not come within any of the exceptions of the Statute: It is not a case of fraudulent conveyance within four months, nor a voidable preference, nor is it the result of a "transfer" by the bankrupt voidable by creditors. Nor may trust property belonging to the bankrupt, but never in his possession, nor "transferred" by him, be reached in the federal courts.

Nor may a suit to recover unpaid stock subscriptions be brought there;³ nor a suit to declare a trust in property, where no transfer by the bankrupt is alleged.⁴

Facts conferring jurisdiction on the federal court must be pleaded and proved; and it is not sufficient that they simply be pleaded,—the proof must support them.⁵

Suit may not be maintained in the District Court by the trustee to recover a leasehold interest claimed by the landlord to have been terminated by a

Act, § 70e] provides for avoiding transfers of the bankrupt's property which his creditors might have avoided, and for recovery of such property, or its value, from persons who are not bona fide holders for value. In this action, no such transfer is alleged; no attack is made upon a transfer by the bankrupt which would have been void as to creditors. The petition seeks to recover property held by the bank, if the allegations are true, which belonged to the bankrupt, and consequently passed to the trustee as the representative of the bankrupt's estate. The recovery sought is of property held for the bankrupt estate, which the defendant wrongfully refused to surrender."

§ 1693. Third Parties Not to Resort to Bankruptcy Court Where Neither Property in Its Custody nor Either Party, Party to Bankruptcy Proceedings.—Nor may third parties resort to the bankruptcy court to litigate their rights there, where neither the bankruptcy court has custody of the property, nor either of the parties was a party to the proceedings in bankruptcy;⁷ nor any property is recoverable by general creditors.⁸

§ 1693½. Lienholders on Property in Custody of Bankruptcy Court Maintaining Plenary Suits in District Court.—It has been held that where the property is in the custody of the Bankruptcy Court a lienholder may institute an independent plenary action in the same District Court, to bring in the trustee and other parties and marshal the liens and for sale as in foreclosure, though not in terms a foreclosure.

Goodnough Mercantile & Stock Co. v. Galloway, 19 A. B. R. 244, 156 Fed. 504 (D. C. Ore.): "The relation of the parties in the case at bar is the exact reverse of that of those in that case [Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539] but the principle involved appears to me to be the same. The purpose is to determine the validity of the alleged lien claimed upon the property of the bankrupt. The fund derived from the sale of the lumber and logs had passed into the hands of the trustee, and, although the contracts for the timber with the Lewises are in the hands of plaintiff by assignment as collateral, yet the corpus of the lien, to wit, the timber, whatever may be the interests of the bankrupt, has passed into the constructive possession, at least, of the trustee, so that the whole property is within the possession, actual or constructive, of the bankrupt court, and the suit is brought in that court, by the lienholder, to determine the correlative rights of the parties. The plaintiff does not in any way hold, or assume to hold, adversely to the trustee in bankruptcy, and I see no reason why a plenary suit may not be maintained by the lienholder against the trustee to determine those rights, as well as by the trustee against the lienholder. The suit is plenary in either case, and the court is in the possession of the property involved. That the case is in name one for a foreclosure does not in itself determine the jurisdiction. The court will not foreclose in the way that foreclosure proceedings are finally adjusted, but it will declare the lien, if any exists, and leave the trustee to dispose of the property, and the assets will be marshaled in accordance with the relative rights of the creditors of the estate; the legitimate lienholder being preferred, of course, to the general creditor. This disposes of the question of jurisdiction."

§ 1694. Actions in Personam for Debts Not to Be Brought in Bankruptcy Courts.—Likewise, actions for merely money judgments or for other relief in personam, where the court does not attempt to recover any property transferred by the bankrupt, nor its value, but merely to render judgment in personam for a debt or other obligation not arising from a transfer by the bankrupt, or to order specific performance of some contract or duty, may only be instituted against a debtor, or other third party, in the court in which the bankrupt himself, or his creditors had there been no bankruptcy, might have instituted them, and may not (except by consent) be instituted in the bankruptcy court.⁹

Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 A. B. R. 565: "The excepted suits, for the recovery of property, covered by the Amendment of 1903, pertain to actions to recover property conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of the Act and do not concern actions of the character now under consideration. * * * to recover certain sums of money alleged to have been lent by the bankrupts for goods sold and delivered to the defendant and upon an account stated and for money paid for them by the bankrupt."

Hinds v. Moore, 14 A. B. R. 1, 134 Fed. 221 (C. C. A. Tenn., reversing In re Leeds Woolen Mills Co., 12 A. B. R. 136, 129 Fed. 922): "The case is distinguishable in its facts and upon principle from White v. Schloerb. There has been no use of the writ of another court. There has been no taking by force or fraud. Neither is it possible to restore the goods themselves to the custody of the court. A money judgment for the value of the goods is the relief sought, and the only relief possible. To obtain that relief, the trustee concedes that the question of title and value must be tried out under a rule to show cause. * * * Confining ourselves to the case before us, we think the bankrupt court did not have jurisdiction to require the appellant to show cause why he should not pay to the bankrupt's estate the value of the goods so voluntarily surrendered by the referee to him. The court, having voluntarily parted with the custody of the goods, has not the jurisdiction to proceed summarily for their value.

9. Also, see instances among cases cited under the main proposition of this chapter, ante, § 1652, et seq.

Only in Cases Where Bankruptcy Occurred Since Amendment.—And such plenary suits cannot be brought in any case in the District Court of the United States unless they grow out of bankruptcy proceedings which were instituted after the amendatory Act of 1903 took effect. That amendment was not retroactive. In re Hartman, 10 A. B. R. 387, 121 Fed. 940 (D. C. Mass.). Contra, Pond v. N. Y. Exch. Bk., 10 A. B. R. 343, 124 Fed. 992 (D. C. N. Y.). Compare, In re White (Froehling v. Amer. Trust & Savings Bank), 24 A. B. R. 197, 177 Fed. 194 (C. C. A. Ill.).

Thus, suits to recover unpaid stock subscriptions may not be brought there.¹⁰

And a suit to recover damages for conspiracy is not a suit to set aside a transfer nor to "recover" property, and therefore it may not be brought in the district court.¹¹

§ 1695. No Plenary Suits before Referee.—Plenary suits in no event can be brought in the referee's court;¹² for the referee, though included within the term "the court" by clause 7 of § 1 of the Act, has not the machinery at his disposal for carrying on a plenary suit, with its requirement of formal service of process, rule days, pleadings, trial and verdicts. A plenary suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy is, as we have above seen, not a bankruptcy proceeding nor a proceeding in bankruptcy, although it is an action or a proceeding growing out of a bankruptcy proceeding. Referees seem to be restricted in their jurisdiction to purely bankruptcy proceedings, and also to such controversies arising out of bankruptcy proceedings as concern property within the possession or control of the bankruptcy court. They have no power to render judgments in personam.¹³

The plenary jurisdiction conferred by the Amendatory Act of 1903 upon courts of bankruptcy over property in certain specified cases, is not to be construed as stretching to the referees.¹⁴

10. See cases cited under § 1692.

11. Lynch v. Bronson, 24 A. B. R. 513, 177 Fed. 605 (D. C. Conn.): "As the matter now stands, however, the complaint appears to state nothing more nor less than a suit by reason of a conspiracy to recover damages. It is, therefore, in no sense within the provisions of § 67 (e)."

Contra, In re Shults & Marks, 11 A. B. R. 690 (Ref. N. Y.): The referee in this case lays stress on the fact that "the case" was referred to him. The case referred to him, however, was not the independent suit of the trustee against the alleged preferential or fraudulent transferee but the bankruptcy proceedings themselves. All questions relating to the property actually or constructively in the custody of the court are within the referee's jurisdiction; questions relating to other property are not. Thus, property in the possession of a mere agent or one not claiming to hold beneficial interest therein, is not adversely held, and so the referee's jurisdiction extends to such property.

Compare, In re Steuer, 5 A. B. R. 209, 104 Fed. 976 (D. C. Mass.). Quere, In re Goldberg, 1 A. B. R. 385 (Ref. Utah). But compare, when no objection to jurisdiction is made, obiter, In re Scherber, 12 A. B. R. 616, 131 Fed. 121 (D. C. N. Y.).

Also, compare, where it appears the referee was acting as an arbitrator, though evidently considering jurisdiction existed anyway, In re O'Brien, 21 A. B. R. 11 (Ref. Mass.).

Lack of Referee's Original Jurisdiction, Cured by Appeal without Original Objection.—And one case has held that where the jurisdiction of the referee was not objected to and the summary petition contained all the substantial allegations of a bill in equity, the judge on appeal had jurisdiction to order the return of the preference involved, whether the referee originally had jurisdiction or not. In re Steuer, 5 A. B. R. 209, 104 Fed. 976 (D. C. Mass.). But compare, In re Scherber, 12 A. B. R. 616, 131 Fed. 121.

But, undoubtedly, if the property involved is placed within the control of the bankruptcy court, the referee has jurisdiction to try out its title and the rights of lienholders and others in it.

SUBDIVISION "A."

JURISDICTION BY CONSENT.

§ 1696. Jurisdiction by Consent.—Jurisdiction may be conferred on the bankruptcy court by the defendant's consent in cases wherein otherwise it has no jurisdiction, and if adverse claimants in possession of the property who would otherwise not be within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, nevertheless voluntarily surrender custody of the property, or consent to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, then the question of ownership and all other questions in relation thereto, as, for instance, the extent, validity and priority of liens upon and interests in the property, may be tried out in the bankruptcy proceedings.¹⁵

But Not on United States District Court.—But consent will not confer jurisdiction on the United States District Court when it is not "sitting in bankruptcy," unless that court has jurisdiction over the subject matter as well. But see, analogously, contra, In re Seebold, 5 A. B. R. 358, 105 Fed. 910 (C. C. A. La.).

In re Blake, 17 A. B. R. 668, 150 Fed. 279 (C. C. A. Mo.): "A court of bankruptcy may acquire by consent of all the parties in interest jurisdiction to determine a controversy between the trustee and an adverse claimant concerning an indebtedness of a third party and the lawful power to adjudicate all the claims of the parties thereto and to enforce their rights against each other by decree and execution."

In re Connolly, 3 A. B. R. 842, 100 Fed. 620 (D. C. Penn.): "Such conduct is certainly 'consent;' and, while it is usually true that consent cannot give jurisdiction, this is not universally true. money into the bankruptcy court by consent of all parties, then the bankruptcy court will have complete jurisdiction.

In re Blake, 17 A. B. R. 668, 151 Fed. 279 (C. C. A. Mo.): "A court of bankruptcy may acquire by consent of all parties in interest jurisdiction to determine a controversy between the trustee and an adverse claimant concerning an indebtedness of a third party and the lawful power to adjudicate all the claims of the parties thereto and to enforce their rights against each other by decree and execution.

"A court of equity which has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties to a controversy may, and it should, grant complete relief, to the end that litigation over it may cease and a multiplicity of suits may be avoided.

"A trustee in bankruptcy and a county each claimed to recover an indebtedness of a bank for $16,000, the consideration of which was credits transferred to it by the bankrupts pursuant to an executed agreement to suppress competition in bidding for the use of the county deposits and to divide them. The bank filed a bill in the bankruptcy court wherein it set forth the claims of the county, and the trustee offered to deposit the $16,000 in court, and prayed to be discharged. The claimants filed answers in which they pleaded their claims and asked to recover the $16,000. They then made an agreed statement of facts and stipulated that their claims should be determined by the court upon this statement of facts. The court considered the statement, held that the county was entitled to the $16,000, and ordered the bank to pay it over to the county. The trustee presented a petition for revision. Held, the adjudication in bankruptcy, the controversy between the trustee and the county, and the consent of the parties conferred jurisdiction upon the court to hear the issues upon the agreed statement of facts and to render the judgment, and there was no error in the proceedings nor in the conclusion which had not been waived by the trustee."

Thus, also, an adverse claimant in possession of goods, notes and accounts, may confer jurisdiction on the bankruptcy court by surrendering the same to the receiver; and where the surrender is made to a receiver under the stipulation that it shall be without prejudice to the rights of the parties, the trustee subsequently appointed may not repudiate the stipulation.¹⁷

Bryant v. Swafford Bros., 214 U. S. 279, 22 A. B. R. 111 (affirming In re Newton & Co., 18 A. B. R. 567, 153 Fed. 841): "There seems to be no reason for a nice consideration of the powers of receivers and trustees. When the receiver was appointed he found all the property in dispute in the hands of the dry goods company, to which it had been delivered by the Newtons, as and for the property of the company, and by which it had been received as its own property. When the receiver made his demand for it the return was at first refused. The parties in the controversy then being at arms' length, agreed that if the dry goods company would give up the advantages of possession, and, instead of converting the goods, notes and accounts into cash in its own way and on its own account, permit the receiver to do so, then those goods should be deemed part of those delivered under the contract, and the notes and accounts the proceeds of other goods delivered under the contract. This arrangement was approved by the referee. The trustee has taken the property under it and has never offered to return the property, or any part of it. The property has in large part been sold or otherwise disposed of in the course of the bankruptcy administration. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the trustee, the appellant in this case, was bound by the agreement of the receiver, that all the property in dispute should be conclusively deemed that which passed under the original conditional contract, or the proceeds thereof."

But, in case of garnishment, where the garnishee also is an adverse claimant to part of the fund, the consent must also be on his part.¹⁸

Thus, also, an adverse claimant confers jurisdiction by consent when he comes into the bankruptcy court and asks for the surrender of property, or for the declaration of a lien thereon, where the property is in the custody of a trustee in another state.¹⁹

§ 1697. Likewise Debtors Owing Money May Confer Jurisdiction by Consent.—Likewise debtors owing money to the bankrupt, or adverse parties obligated to him otherwise than by reason of property fraudulently or preferentially transferred, may confer jurisdiction on the bankruptcy court by consent.²⁰

§ 1698. What Constitutes Consent.—Whether consent is given or not is a question of fact, to be decided in general in conformity with the usual rules as to consent to jurisdiction over the person. And the findings of the lower court will not be disturbed on a conflict of evidence.²¹

But it appears from some decisions that the consent required by the Bankruptcy Act is intended to be more complete than is sometimes held sufficient to confer jurisdiction elsewhere.²²

Filing a "demurrer" to the jurisdiction and at the same time answering to the merits; and, upon the hearing, urging both grounds, does not show the "consent" meant by the Act;²³ nor does the failure to object to jurisdiction until, by amended petition, a good case is made, constitute such "consent."²⁴

Going to a hearing on the merits, after an overruling of objections to the jurisdiction, of course does not amount to "consent," nor to a waiver of objections.²⁵ of their objections or to a consent to an exercise of jurisdiction against which they protested."

And the fact that the defendant did not voluntarily appear, but objected to the power of the court at the hearing, negatives consent.²⁶

The mere proving of one's claim in the bankruptcy proceedings is not a consent to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over property of the bankrupt seized more than four months prior to the bankruptcy by the creditor so proving, where, at any rate, the creditor in his proof insists on his rights by virtue of the seizure; and the State court retains jurisdiction;²⁷ nor does the mere proving of a claim give jurisdiction to render personal judgment against the claimant for the excess of the value of the security retained by him over the amount of his claim.²⁸

On the other hand, answering to the merits without objection is a consent,²⁹ and it has been held that by appearing generally and demurring on grounds going to the merits as well as to the jurisdiction of the court, a defendant waives the objection that the court is without jurisdiction.³⁰ The appearance in the bankruptcy proceedings and, without objection to the jurisdiction, the submission of the questions of ownership or of priority to the referee for adjudication, amount to consent.³¹

The invoking of the affirmative action of the bankruptcy court is certainly a consent;³² as, for instance, a chattel mortgage creditor procuring the bankruptcy court to appoint a receiver and enjoin interference.³³ Acceptance of the benefits of an order of the bankruptcy court is consent.³⁴ And where a third party intervenes in a proceedings brought by the trustee to compel the bankrupt to execute assignments or other papers in aid of the collection of assets, such as assignments of insurance policies or of licenses or of stock exchange seats, such third parties thereby consent to the jurisdiction;³⁵ although perhaps the res is not strictly in custodia legis.

So, the filing of a petition for reclamation of property which, as assets of the estate, was taken from the person of the bankrupt's agent, confers jurisdiction by consent.³⁶ And where a lienor voluntarily appears before the referee, presents his claim as a secured claim and seeks its allowance, the referee may summarily determine the validity of the lien so asserted.³⁷ An assignee for the benefit of creditors where the assignment has been nullified by the bankruptcy, who invokes the aid of the bankruptcy court, thereby consents to summary jurisdiction,³⁸ even though subject thereto in any event.

Failure to object to the jurisdiction of the federal court over the person of the defendant until the case reaches the reviewing court, constitutes consent and the defendant is too late.³⁹ Failure to object to the jurisdiction of the referee until an adverse decision on the merits, also is a consent.⁴⁰

Compare, In re Steuer, 5 A. B. R. 209, 104 Fed. 976 (D. C. Mass.): There are some remarks in this case indicating the court held the opinion that jurisdiction to declare a transfer void as a preference could be exercised in any event by the referee upon the transferee's consent to the jurisdiction, but it will be noted the facts do not take the case beyond the rule—the property, to be sure, was not in the actual possession of the bankruptcy court but its representative, the bond for its forthcoming, was in the court's control. Moreover, the consent of the parties actually continued until the case reached the District Judge who had plenary jurisdiction and who in fact treated the proceedings as a plenary suit where the issues had been referred to a referee as special master.

Apparently contra, and apparently to the effect that by consent the referee may order the return of money as a

Compare, inferentially, Louisville Trust Co. v. Comingor, 184 U. S. 18, 7 A. B. R. 421: "And the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to finally adjudicate the merits of his claims unless by his consent and then only by a plenary suit."

In re Teschmacher & Mrazay, 11 A. B. R. 550, 127 Fed. 728 (D. C. Penn.): "The District Court sitting as a court of bankruptcy, may still enquire summarily concerning the ownership of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, although it be found in the possession or custody of a third person. But if the court should discover that such person is holding the property under a real claim of title or right of possession, and is not merely the alter ego of the bankrupt, it is still the duty of the court to desist from pursuing the summary remedy further, and to remit the contestants to a plenary suit, although the suit, instead of being brought in a State court or a Circuit Court of the United States, may now be brought in the District Court itself, and may there be pursued to a final judgment."

Inferentially and obiter, Hicks v. Knost, 2 A. B. R. 153, 158 (D. C. Ohio): "I am inclined to think it has reference not to jurisdiction in bankruptcy courts, but to courts having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, but not of the person of the proposed defendant."

Thus, consent of a garnishee and all lienholders, unaccompanied with delivery of the fund into the custody or control of the bankruptcy court, will be insufficient to confer jurisdiction; a fortiori, the consent of merely the lienholders is insufficient.⁴² The consent of merely the garnishee also is insufficient, even where the garnishee pays the money into court, unless such garnishment were void for being a lien created within four months by legal proceedings.

But, at any rate, where the objection is not raised until appeal from the referee's order it comes too late, for the judge has jurisdiction even if the preference, see obiter, In re Scherber, 12 A. B. R. 618, 131 Fed. 121 (D. C. Mass.): "In re Steuer (D. C.), 5 Am. B. R. 209, 104 Fed. 976, this court decided that, in proceedings to recover a preference, where the jurisdiction of the referee was not objected to, and where the summary petition contained all the substantial allegations of a bill in equity, the judge, on appeal, from the referee, had jurisdiction to decree the return of the preference, whether the referee originally had jurisdiction of the proceedings or not. See Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, where it is implied, if not expressly decided, that consent will give jurisdiction to the referee over a summary petition against an adverse claimant, although, without consent, the court of bankruptcy would be altogether without jurisdiction."

Also, apparently contra, In re Fowler, 1 A. B. R. 637 (Ref. Conn.): But in this case it must be noted that the subject matter of the controversy was a patent and that it is doubtful whether it can be said to have been "held" by the trustee. If the property were actually "held" by the trustee there would have been no reason for refusing jurisdiction to the Bankruptcy Court. Moreover, the point was made that the trustee was not consenting.

Also, apparently contra, In re O'Brien, 21 A. B. R. 11 (Ref. Mass.), although in this case it was evident the referee was acting rather as an arbitrator.

Perhaps, impliedly, contra, although it does not definitely appear that the proceedings were before the referee, In re White (Froehling v. Amer. Trust & Savings Bank), 24 A. B. R. 197, 177 Fed. 194 (C. C. A. Ill.).

The case In re Blake, 17 A. B. R. 668 (C. C. A. Mo.), while evidently a case of plenary action, yet on the facts, might have been cognizable before the referee, for there the fund itself was placed in the custody of the Court.

referee does not have it.⁴³

And where the bankrupt's wife has permitted the bankrupt to surrender to the custody of the trustee certain stocks, etc., claimed by her, under an agreement that her rights of ownership shall be determined, but without objection to the jurisdiction, she has consented.⁴⁴

And where the property once was in the custody of the bankruptcy court, but has been erroneously taken therefrom, the referee has jurisdiction summarily to order its return, under the doctrine of § 1800, post.

Obiter, In re Tarbox, 26 A. B. R. 432, 185 Fed. 985 (D. C. Mass.): "If it be said that Mrs. Piper might have waived all objections to the referee's jurisdiction, had she been summoned, it is doubtful whether consent can give jurisdiction in summary proceedings."

§ 1700. No Jurisdiction by Consent Where No Custody and Neither Litigant Party to Bankruptcy Proceedings.—But, as noted ante, § 1693, third parties cannot by consent confer jurisdiction on the bankruptcy court when neither that court has custody of any property involved nor neither litigant was a party to the proceedings in bankruptcy. Thus, the bankruptcy court will not entertain a bill by a third party against a purchaser from the trustee where the dispute is wholly between such third party and purchaser.⁴⁵

Henrie v. Henderson, 16 A. B. R. 621, 145 Fed. 316 (C. C. A. W. Va., reversing In re Henderson, 15 A. B. R. 760): "Even though it appears that the petitioner did not object to the Federal Court taking jurisdiction of this case, this court would of its own motion refuse to entertain jurisdiction of the parties if it does not affirmatively appear in the record that the court below had jurisdiction. * * *

"This is not a case in bankruptcy in any sense of the word. It is not contended that either the plaintiff or defendant were parties to the proceeding before the referee in bankruptcy."

But, of course this proposition is to be taken with the qualification of § 1800, that property once in the custody of the bankruptcy court but wrongfully taken therefrom, may be summarily ordered returned.

Babbitt, Trustee, v. Dutcher, 216 U. S. 102, 23 A. B. R. 519: "On the authority of these decisions it must be, and is, conceded that under the Bankruptcy Acts of 1841 and 1867 ancillary jurisdiction, both in summary proceedings and in plenary suits, existed in all District Courts within their respective districts; and the question really is whether the provisions of the Act of 1898 are to the contrary, or, as appellee's counsel puts it, show an intention on the part of Congress to restrict such jurisdiction so as to cut off the inferences drawn from the language of the earlier acts. But neither the Act of 1867 nor the Act of 1898 expressly confers or expressly negatives ancillary jurisdiction in courts other than the court of adjudication. The provisions as to summary jurisdiction in the two acts are substantially identical, and, it appears to us, should receive the same construction."

Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman Co., 222 U. S. 300, 27 A. B. R. 262: "As to the injunction, we are of the opinion that there was no power in the District Court to issue an ex parte injunction, without notice or service of process, attempting to restrain the Beekman Lumber Company from suing in a State outside the jurisdiction of the District Court. Such proceeding could only have binding force upon the Lumber Company if jurisdiction were obtained over it by proceedings in a court having jurisdiction, and upon service of process upon such creditor.

"Whether ancillary proceedings could be had in a District Court in aid of the jurisdiction of an original court of bankruptcy was a subject of much discussion and divers decisions in the Federal courts. In Babbitt, Trustee, v. Dutcher, 216 U. S. 102, 23 A. B. R. 519, and Elkus, petitioner, In the Matter of the Madson Steel Company, Bankrupt, 216 U. S. 115, 23 Am. B. R. 614, the matter came before this court, and it was there determined that there was ancillary jurisdiction in the courts of bankruptcy, in aid of the original jurisdiction in the bankruptcy court, to make orders and issue processes summarily in aid of the original jurisdiction. In the opinion in Babbitt v. Dutcher it was pointed out by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, speaking for the court, that the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts under the act of 1898 was limited to their respective territorial limits, and was in substance the same as that provided by the act of 1867, giving such courts jurisdiction in their respective districts in matters of proceedings in bankruptcy. The necessary deduction from these cases is to deny to the District Courts jurisdiction such as was sought to be asserted in this case by the issuing of an injunction against one not a party to the proceeding, and which undertook to have effect in the distant jurisdiction outside the territorial jurisdiction of the District Court. Under the act of 1898, as expounded in the two cases in 216 U. S. (23 Am. B. R.) supra, the injunction might have been sought in the District Court of the United States in the District in Missouri where personal service could have been made upon Beekman Lumber Company. Since the decision in the cases just referred to, Congress has passed the act of June 23, 1910, amending the bankruptcy law, specifically giving ancillary jurisdiction over persons and property within their respective territorial limits to the District Courts of the United States in aid of the receiver or trustee appointed in a bankruptcy proceeding pending in another court of bankruptcy. Statutes of the U. S. of 1909 and 1910, part 1, page 838."

Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gaskell, 28 A. B. R. 4, 195 Fed. 865 (C. C. A. Mo.): "Attention is called to the fact that by the Act of June 25, 1910, 'ancillary jurisdiction over persons or property within their respective territorial limits' is granted to the District Courts 'in aid of a receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceedings pending in any other court of bankruptcy,' and it is contended that the true construction of this grant is that it makes the District Court the agent, the mere hand of the receiver or trustee appointed by the court of primary jurisdiction, bound to seize, convert into money, pay over to him and send to that court the proceeds of any property in its territorial jurisdiction which he may point out as the property of the bankrupt, without judicial power or duty to inquire or to decide, whether the property it takes and sends forth beyond its jurisdiction is that of the bankrupt or of a stranger what legal or equitable liens are held upon it by the citizens of its district, what the expenses of its officers are, or what their compensation shall be and without power to pay them out of the proceeds of the property it seizes and sells. If such had been the purpose of Congress it would undoubtedly have conferred this power on the receiver or trustee of the court of primary jurisdiction directly. It was probably because the Congress was unwilling to entrust the power to such an officer and desired to invoke the judicial power and discretion of a court of equity to inquire and decide what property ought to be seized and sold and what proceeds ought to be sent to the court of primary jurisdiction as the property of the bankrupt's estate that it conferred this ancillary jurisdiction upon the District Courts within their respective territorial limits. Under it these courts must appoint their own receivers, must guard them against wrongful action and consequent liability and must direct the course they shall pursue. Conscience, good faith and reasonable diligence alone move courts of equity to action. They may not be divested of their judicial functions and made mere cat's paws to do the will of private parties or public officers, even by legislative action, much less by mere construction. Moreover, it would be unjust, unwise and detrimental to the administration of justice to establish the rule that courts of ancillary jurisdiction under the bankruptcy law are without judicial power or duty to hear and decide whether the property they take is that of the bankrupt or of strangers, that they must seize and send to the court of original jurisdiction the proceeds of whatever property the receiver or trustee appointed by that court claims as the property of the bankrupt and that adverse claimants of title to or liens upon it, and even its own officers, have no remedy for the enforcement of their claims but to follow the proceeds to other jurisdiction or to sue the receiver. Nor is this the natural or national interpretation of the Act of Congress or of the decisions of the Supreme Court. That Act and those decisions are that the District Courts sitting in bankruptcy, and consequently in equity, have ancillary jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings pending in other districts. Ancillary jurisdiction is a term which has a plain and well-known meaning in the equity jurisprudence of the United States, a meaning fixed by settled practice and adjudged by the uniform current of the decisions of the courts of the United States. As neither the court nor the Congress modified or limited the term the unavoidable presumption is that they used it, and intended to use it, in its recognized legal significance. In that significance ancillary jurisdiction includes the power to hear and adjudge, at the request of interveners, their claims to title to, or legal or equitable lien upon, the property it takes, or holds in its legal custody, by virtue of that jurisdiction and to send the proceeds to the court of original jurisdiction, or to apply it to the discharge of the claims of the interveners in accord with its decision."

Issuing and Enforcing Process Outside District.—Whilst the bankruptcy court in possession of a res may issue citation or other process and have it served upon parties in another district to appear and show what interest they have in such res and why contemplated action in relation thereto should not be taken, yet it cannot issue nor enforce summary orders nor process in another district.

Stanton v. Wooden, 24 A. B. R. 736, 179 Fed. 61 (C. C. A. Calif.); "In the present case the court made a summary order, directed against a resident of another State, ordering him to surrender property in that State to the trustee. It may be conceded that the court in which the petition in bankruptcy is filed has plenary jurisdiction in bankruptcy, coextensive with the United States, to order and control the disposition of the bankrupt's estate, and is vested with jurisdiction to determine all liens thereon and all interests affecting it. Thomas v. Woods (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 132, 173 Fed. 585, 97 C. C. A. 535; In re Dempster (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 751, 172 Fed. 353, 97 C. C. A. 51; In re Muncie Pulp Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 56, 151 Fed. 732, 81 C. C. A. 116; Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285; In re Granite City Bank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 404, 137 Fed. 818, 70 C. C. A. 316. But this is not to say that the court of bankruptcy may issue its process to run into another district. It is one thing to issue citation to persons in another jurisdiction to appear before the court of bankruptcy in a proceeding which, in its exclusive jurisdiction, it is authorized to institute with a view to determining liens or rights of property wherever situate; but it is quite another thing to issue process to be enforced in another jurisdiction.

"By whom is the summary order in this case to be executed, and in what manner is obedience to it to be enforced? There is no express provision in the Bankruptcy Act, or in any statute, indicating the intention of Congress to confer such power. In Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. 328, 9 L. Ed. 1093, it was said: 'Whatever may be the extent of their jurisdiction over the subject-matter of suits, in respect to persons and property, it can only be exercised within the limits of the district. Congress might have authorized civil process from any Circuit Court to have run into any State of the Union. It has not done so.' The Bankruptcy Act of 1867 (Act March 2, 1867, c. 176, 14 Stat. 517) limited the jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy to 'their respective districts.' The present act invests them with jurisdiction 'within their respective territorial limits as now established, or as they may be hereafter changed;' and it has been held that a court of bankruptcy may not extend its process beyond the territorial limits of the district within which its ordinary jurisdiction may be exercised. In re Waukesha Water Co. (D. C. Wis.), 8 Am. B. R. 715, 116 Fed. 1009; In re Alpin & Lake Cotton Co. (D. C. Ark.), 12 Am. B. R. 653, 161 Fed. 886. In view of these considerations, and the authorities, we are of the opinion that the District Court was not possessed of jurisdiction to make and enforce the summary order."

[1867] Lathrop v. Drake, 91 U. S. 516: "When the Act says they shall have jurisdiction in their respective districts, it means that the jurisdiction is to be exercised in their respective districts."

Such citations or other process must issue out of the court exercising ancillary jurisdiction within the district wherein they are to be served.⁵⁰

§ 1706. But May Marshal Liens and Sell Personal Property in Actual Custody Though in Another State.—But the bankruptcy court, including the referee, has the power to marshal liens and sell free therefrom personal property in the actual possession of its trustee, receiver, bankrupt, or agent of either, although the property and lienor are located in another state.⁵¹

In re Granite City Bank, 14 A. B. R. 404, 137 Fed. 818 (C. C. A. Iowa, affirming In re Wilka, 12 A. B. R. 727, 131 Fed. 1004): "Counsel for the bank seem strangely affected with notions about State lines under the Bankrupt Act. They challenge the right to reach the bank in South Dakota by notice sent out by the referee in Iowa, and the right of the court in bankruptcy in Iowa to draw the bank from its residence in South Dakota to determine its rights as a preferred mortgagee. Under the scheme of the Bankrupt Act, the District Court of the domicile of the bankrupt takes exclusive jurisdiction of the bankrupt and his property, wherever situated, to administer it and distribute the proceeds pari passu among the creditors according to their respective rights and priorities. Only one court—the court making the adjudication—collects, marshals, administers, determines priorities of the parties, and directs the distribution of the assets. There are no such things in bankruptcy proceedings as courts of primary and ancillary jurisdiction. The court in this instance acquired jurisdiction as to the Granite City Bank by giving the notice prescribed by § 58 of the Act, which in this case was supplemented by notice served personally on the president of the bank where the bank was located. The bank could have appeared and contested at its pleasure the propriety of the referee ordering the sale of the property free from all liens, and the District Court of Iowa, and it alone, could pass upon the validity of the bank's claim to the proceeds of the sale of the property. In re Kellogg, 10 Am. B. R. 7, 121 Fed. 333, 57 C. C. A. 547. The trustee was authorized to sell the property on the premises in South Dakota, or drive it away, as the court might direct. The Granite City Bank could not replevin it from the trustee. White v. Schloerb, 178 U. S. 542, 4 Am. B. R. 178."

Although the decision of the Supreme Court in Babbitt v. Dutcher [quoted at § 1705] holds ancillary jurisdiction to exist, and the Amendment of 1910 expressly confers ancillary jurisdiction, yet such right of the court of original jurisdiction, to marshal liens and to sell property in actual custody, though in another State, doubtless still exists.

But compare, In re Owings, 15 A. B. R. 476, 140 Fed. 759 (D. C. N. Car.), as to setting apart homestead in property located in another State.

Setting Apart Dower in Another State.—It has been held, however, that the court of bankruptcy wherein the proceedings are pending has jurisdiction to set apart dower and determine rights in land in the custody of the trustee or bankrupt in another State. Hurley v. Devlin, 18 A. B. R. 627, 151 Fed. 919 (D. C. Kan.), quoted at § 1706½; Thomas v. Woods, 23 A. B. R. 132, 173 Fed. 585 (C. C. A. Kans.), quoted at § 1706½.

§ 1706½. How as to Real Estate in Another State.—But it is doubtful whether the bankruptcy court wherein the adjudication of bankruptcy was had may marshal liens upon, or determine rights in, real estate located in another State. Nevertheless, it has been held that dower rights may be so determined where the trustee has actual custody of the real estate in the other State.

Hurley v. Devlin, 18 A. B. R. 627, 151 Fed. 919 (D. C. Kan.): “From the facts as stated, and from the very nature of the jurisdiction possessed by this court in bankruptcy proceedings, I am of the opinion the jurisdiction and power to determine the rights of the widow to dower in the property of her bankrupt husband, deceased during the pendency of the proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, is exclusively in this court; that the State courts of Illinois and Missouri do not possess such jurisdiction; that the ancillary bill presented to this court by the trustees, and the order of this court made thereon restraining the resident widow from further prosecuting such suits brought by her in the State courts where the property is located, were rightfully filed and made, and that the motion to set aside such order must be overruled and denied.” Quoted further at § 1166½.

And it seems that real estate located in another district or its proceeds may be in the custody of the bankruptcy court, so that marshaling of liens thereon may be had in the original bankruptcy proceedings, without the institution of ancillary proceedings.⁵²

Thomas v. Woods, 23 A. B. R. 132, 173 Fed. 585 (C. C. A. Kans.): “The objection of the appellant that the trial court was without jurisdiction of the property, because it was not situated in the District of Kansas has no merit. Upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, all property held by or for the bankrupt is brought within the custody of the court of bankruptcy, and, upon adjudication, that court is vested with jurisdiction to determine all liens and interests affecting it. This jurisdiction is co-extensive with the United States.”

§ 1707. Property in Other States Not in Actual Custody, to Be Protected Only by Independent Suit or Ancillary Proceedings.—

Property not in the actual custody of the receiver or trustee in bankruptcy, located in other districts than the one where the bankruptcy proceedings are pending, can be protected only by separate suits brought within such districts, or by ancillary proceedings therein instituted;⁵³ and neither summary nor plenary proceedings can be maintained in the original bankruptcy case to reach such property in other districts.⁵⁴

In re Heintz, 29 A. B. R. 19, 201 Fed. 388 (C. C. A. Ohio): "Congress, by express enactment, has vested in the several courts of bankruptcy, 'within their respective territorial limits,' full and complete power and authority to try and determine bankruptcy controversies and specifically to 'cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto.' The jurisdiction thus defined and conferred is exclusive within the territorial limits of each court and confined to those limits. While a summary proceeding to collect property belonging to the estate of a bankrupt which is in the possession of a stranger who resides outside of the territorial limits of the court of the original adjudication is ancillary in character, nevertheless it presents a completely distinct and separable controversy, and, therefore, one which must be determined by the court within whose jurisdiction the property is located and the respondent resides. Any other rule would result in unnecessary confusion of authority and would do violence to the plain provisions of the Bankruptcy Act."

In re Rathfon Bros., 29 A. B. R. 22, 200 Fed. 108 (D. C. Mich.): "Upon reason and principle, as well as authority, a trustee in bankruptcy, in a proceeding of this kind, ought to be compelled to resort to the court within whose territorial jurisdiction respondent resides and the property sought to be covered is located. By so doing both confusion of authority and circuitry of action will be avoided, for it must be conceded that the court of the original bankruptcy proceedings has no authority to compel the performance of or to enforce obedience to its orders beyond its territorial limits, and in those regards the aid of another court must be asked and procured. While the proceedings in another court is ancillary in character, it presents a completely distinct and separable controversy, and Congress, by express enactment, has vested in the several courts of bankruptcy, 'within their respective territorial limits,' full and complete power and authority to try and determine all bankruptcy controversies, whether arising in original or ancillary proceedings."

In no event may the bankruptcy court in the original case maintain proceedings against a person in possession of property in another district to inquire whether he is a bona fide "adverse claimant," such that summary process may be proper.⁵⁶

§ 1708. Bankruptcy Receiver's Power in Another District Before Adjudication.—Before adjudication the bankruptcy receiver may not go into another State and institute proceedings there for the recovery of property.⁵⁷

one district cannot maintain an action in the District Court of another district to recover assets in the hands of strangers. The extraterritorial power of a receiver was carefully considered in the case of Clark v. Booth, 17 How. 327, and it was there decided that the receiver possessed no such power. This case was referred to in the case of Hale v. Allison, 188 U. S. 56, where Mr. Justice Peckham in commenting on the case of Clark v. Booth, said: 'We do not think anything has been said or decided in this court which destroys or limits the controlling authority of that case.' In our own circuit Judge McPherson, sitting in the Eastern district of Pennsylvania, in the case of In re National Mercantile Agency, 128 Fed. 639, 12 Am. B. R. 189 (D. C.), decided that a receiver in bankruptcy under an order to collect and take possession of all the assets of an alleged bankrupt is not authorized to bring suits in a district other than the one in which he was appointed, and shows that this position is sustained by the highest authority. We must therefore conclude that the receiver in the case at bar cannot maintain a suit in this district. Under the prevailing authorities he certainly cannot by a summary proceeding such as is brought in this case either restrain the state officers or recover the assets of the bankrupts from the hands of strangers."

The proper practice is for creditors, during the meanwhile, themselves to institute the ordinary remedies of creditors, or for ancillary proceedings to be instituted in aid of the receiver.⁵⁸

§ 1709. After Adjudication, Trustee (and Perhaps Also Receiver) May Institute Proceedings in Another District.—After adjudication the trustee and perhaps the receiver, appointed in one district, however, may go into another district and institute replevin suits or fraudulent transfer suits;⁵⁹ or any other actions necessary to protect the property there;⁶⁰ but a receiver may not do so,⁶¹ unless he be authorized by order of court, for he has only such power as the court that appoints him chooses to give; and, unless he is authorized to leave the court of original jurisdiction and sue elsewhere, he is not competent to bring such suit.⁶² And apparently it has been held in some cases that the receiver may not do so even when ex-

The trustee, however, need not obtain special authority to go into another district to institute legal proceedings.

Obiter, In re Nat'l Mercantile Agency, 12 A. B. R. 189, 128 Fed. 639 (D. C. No injury, however, is likely to be done to the bankrupt estate, for, as I am informed, a trustee has since been appointed and he has ample power to bring an action in the proper form to recover whatsoever assets of the bankrupt may be found in the possession of other persons."

Of course, ancillary proceedings may be instituted in another district in aid of either the receiver or trustee.

§ 1709½. Scope of Ancillary Proceedings.—Any District Court in bankruptcy in the exercise of ancillary jurisdiction in aid of another bankruptcy court may grant injunctions, stay proceedings and enforce compositions.⁶⁴

Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gaskell, 28 A. B. R. 4, 195 Fed. 865 (C. C. A. Mo.): "A court exercising ancillary jurisdiction acts independently of the court of primary jurisdiction, or of its officers and for itself. It appoints its own receiver, generally the same person appointed receiver by the court of primary jurisdiction, but in the seizure, management, sale and distribution of the property seized within the territorial limits of its district, of which it takes the legal custody, this receiver is, and must be, governed by its orders exclusively."

It may also order the summary delivery of property and documents,⁶⁵ and enforce the examination of bankrupts and witnesses,⁶⁷ and marshal liens,⁶⁸ the same as the original bankruptcy court could have done had the parties been within the jurisdiction.

It may order the treasurer, or other officer, of a bankrupt corporation, to file schedules in bankruptcy, especially where such officer is the person who knows most about the bankrupt's affairs.⁶⁹ course may maintain other suits than those brought to recover property fraudulently or preferentially transferred.⁷⁰

Thus he may maintain a stockholder's bill to vacate a sale of the assets of a corporation whereof the bankrupt was a member.⁷¹

§ 1711. Whether May Maintain Partition Proceedings.—But it is doubtful whether the trustee may institute partition proceedings, although to realize upon a bankrupt parcener's share.⁷²

Nevertheless, the trustee of a bankrupt heir may file exceptions to the account of the decedent's administrator and contest the same, and so even where the bankrupt is himself the administrator.⁷⁴

Lindsay, as Trustee, v. Runkle, 82 Ohio State, 325, 24 A. B. R. 612: "Is he a tenant in common, or is he but the trustee of a tenant in common? He is invested with the title of the bankrupt, not as a purchaser, or under other form of contract, but solely by operation of law and for a special purpose, that he may convert the estate into money with which to pay the debts of the bankrupt. He may, in the bankruptcy proceedings, and according to the law on that subject, sell the undivided interest of the bankrupt in the lands, and convey such interest to the purchaser, who may thus become a tenant in common with the owners of the other interests, and that path appears to be free from doubt or obstruction.

"But what confronts the trustee as he asks partition in the state court? The suit must be entertained and conducted under the laws of the State. What would the trustee do or say, in case one or more of the tenants in common should answer and charge that the bankrupt tenant in common had received and enjoyed the rents and profits of the estate for years, and ask an accounting for the same? * * *

"The sale in the partition case is governed by prescribed rules which, as we see by comparison, are in plain conflict with the provisions for sale in the bankrupt proceeding, and the trustee seems insistent in promoting and maintaining that conflict. We know of no method of blending these jurisdictions in order to have partition made that will be just and equitable to the widow and all the tenants in common as their rights may appear.

"It is not our duty to entertain the suit of the trustee when it is inevitable that a conflict of jurisdiction will arise between the State and Federal courts. The trustee may sell the estate of the bankrupt without partition, as before observed, with results less harmful than a complication of questions and interests likely to follow such an action for partition."

WHO MAY BRING PLENARY SUITS AGAINST ADVERSE CLAIMANTS.

§ 1712. Who May Bring Plenary Suits against "Adverse Claimants."—Before (but not after) the appointment and qualification of the trustee creditors may institute the ordinary suits for the sequestration or recovery of assets to which they would have been entitled had there been no bankruptcy, subject to the control, by restraining orders, of the bankruptcy court; and upon adjudication and the appointment of a trustee, the trustee may be made a party therein, and the lien of the legal proceedings be preserved for the benefit of the estate.⁷⁵

As we have seen (ante, § 399, et seq.), creditors, until adjudication, are entitled to make use of all the usual and ordinary remedies of creditors in the State or Federal Courts to recover property; for in the event there subsequently be no adjudication, their right to sue in the ordinary tribunals would be undoubted; and they should not be prevented meanwhile from making use of the ordinary remedies for their protection, nor be deterred from doing so by any fear that subsequent adjudication of bankruptcy will not only rob them of all special advantage, but also throw the costs of suit upon them.⁷⁶

§ 1713. Legal Proceedings Resulting in Recovery of Concealed Assets, etc., Creditor Entitled to Reimbursement.—In the event the legal proceedings ultimately result in recovery of assets transferred or concealed by the bankrupt, the creditor will be entitled to reimbursement for his reasonable expenses in the suit.⁷⁷

This provision was added by the Amendment of 1903, yet, without it, it would doubtless have been true that such assets would have come into the bankruptcy court burdened with a lien in favor of the creditor through whose efforts and expense they were ultimately recovered. Such would be a logical deduction from the doctrine enunciated in Randolph v. Scruggs, 10 A. B. R. 1, 190 U. S. 533, where the Supreme Court held assets turned over by a state court assignee came into the bankruptcy court with such a lien upon them.

§ 1714. Must Have Resulted to Benefit Estate, Else No Reimbursement.—As was noted (ante, § 400), probably only those suits that were undertaken for the benefit of all creditors are strictly entitled to the benefits of § 64 (b) (2); yet the advantages of that section have been extended to cases operating to the advantage of all creditors, although the cases were not so intended originally.⁷⁹ Thus, where an attachment lien, dissolved as to the attaching creditor by the debtor's bankruptcy, is preserved for the benefit of the estate under § 67 (f), the lien for the costs also is preserved.⁸⁰

§ 1715. Property Must Have Been "Transferred," or "Concealed" by "Bankrupt," Else No Reimbursement.—The wording of § 64 (b) (2) permitting reimbursement would seem to restrict the benefits of that section to cases of recovery of assets that had been transferred or concealed by the bankrupt, thus not covering cases of recovery of debts due the bankrupt or assets belonging to the estate not transferred or concealed by the bankrupt. Yet, it is considered that, under the doctrine of Randolph v. Scruggs, supra, and of the other cases cited supra, it is probable that, on showing made of benefit to the estate, reimbursement might be allowed in the latter cases as well.

§ 1716. Creditors May Not Bring Independent Plenary Actions in Bankruptcy Court.—But creditors, even though they may bring plenary actions, as above stated, nevertheless may not bring them in the federal courts of bankruptcy; for the jurisdiction conferred by the Amendment of 1903, upon the bankruptcy courts, to entertain plenary suits for the recovery of property, or its value fraudulently or preferentially transferred, authorizes only suits by trustees and not by creditors.⁸¹ statutory provisions. He derives his power from the statute, and to it must look for the duty imposed upon him. He possesses such power only as the statute confers, or such as may be fairly inferred from the general scope of the law of his appointment. We are therefore referred to the Bankrupt Act (30 Stat., ch. 541) to ascertain the powers of the bankruptcy court to appoint a receiver, and the extent of the power which the act confers upon him. * * * We can now discover, as we think, the general purpose of this law. It was that the property of the bankrupt should be vested in a trustee, to be selected by creditors; that such officer should have the general control and management of the estate, and the right to recover for the benefit of creditors all property transferred in fraud of the act. It contemplated that between the filing of the petition and the adjudication of bankruptcy an emergency might arise with respect to the care of the bankrupt's property; and in involuntary cases for the protection of the property in the interval between the filing of the petition and the adjudication, the bankruptcy court was authorized to direct the marshal to seize and hold the property pending adjudication. So, also, in voluntary or involuntary cases, when it was found absolutely necessary for the preservation of an estate, the court should appoint a receiver or the marshal to take charge of the property of the bankrupt until the petition is dismissed or the trustee is qualified. It plainly was not contemplated that the receiver or the marshal so designated should supersede the trustee or exercise the general powers conferred upon a trustee. There is no such power specifically conferred or any provision in the act from which such power can reasonably be implied. Such temporary receiver, whether he be the marshal or another, is not a trustee for the creditors, but is a caretaker and custodian of the visible property pending adjudication and until a selection of a trustee. If in any sense a trustee, he is trustee for the bankrupt, in whom is the title to the property until it passes by operation of law as of the date of adjudication to the trustee selected by the creditors. The duty required and the power conferred clearly are that the receiver or the marshal should take possession of the property that would otherwise go to waste, and hold it and preserve it, so that it might come to the trustee, when selected, without needless injury. There might also be an occasion when the business of the bankrupt ought not, in the interest of the creditors, to be temporarily suspended, as for example, in the case of a hotel or other business, where the value of the goods will require that it should be kept a going concern until the trustee should be appointed, and for a limited time after the trustee was appointed, that he might dispose of it profitably for the creditors."

In re Schrom, 3 A. B. R. 352, 97 Fed. 760 (D. C. Iowa): "Under these circumstances it is difficult to see how this court can exercise jurisdiction or control over the property in Illinois, or can confer any authority on the receiver to bring suit in Illinois against third parties to obtain possession of the property. The proper course to pursue is for the petitioning creditors to take proceedings in the proper court, State or Federal, in Illinois, in their own name, setting up the proceedings now pending in bankruptcy in this court as the basis of their action, and asking that court to protect the rights of the creditors in the property situated in Illinois, either by the appointment of a receiver, by injunction, or any other appropriate remedy. If the adjudication in bankruptcy is had, then the trustee who will be appointed can then appear in that case on behalf of the creditors, and take control of the proceedings."

Contra, obiter, In re Fixen & Co., 2 A. B. R. 822, 96 Fed. 748 (D. C. Calif.): "The duty of a receiver is 'to take charge of the property of the bankrupts.' If an action at law or suit in equity is necessary to the accomplishment of that purpose, the receiver not only has the power, but it is his duty, to institute such action or suit. To say that he cannot resort to legal proceedings when necessary to take charge of the property of the bankrupt, while conceding that he may employ all other suitable agencies and instrumentalities for the purpose, is wholly illogical. Legal proceedings are sometimes the only means whereby the property of bankrupts can be preserved. Suppose that an estate consists of personal property, which has come into the hands of wrongdoers, who are about to secrete it or carry it beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Can it be seriously claimed in such a case that the receiver must sit quietly by and suffer the property to be irretrievably lost, on the ground that his functions are limited to the receipt of such property as may be voluntarily surrendered to him? The statement of the claim is its refutation. I hold that, it is clearly within the jurisdiction of the court appointing a receiver in bankruptcy to authorize him to institute necessary actions for the recovery of the bankrupt's property."

But where the receiver is duly authorized to maintain suits, his right to do so cannot be collaterally attacked even though the order were erroneous.⁸³

§ 1718. After Appointment of Trustee Suits Not to Be Instituted by Creditors.—After the appointment and qualification of the trustee suits may not be instituted by creditors to recover or protect assets for the estate, except in the trustee's name and when the court has authorized it upon the trustee failing to act. It is a general rule that after the appointment of the trustee all actions and proceedings for the recovery of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt estate must be brought by the trustee or in his name.⁸⁴

Compare, under law of 1867, Glenny v. Langdon, 98 U. S. 20: "1st. It is only through the instrumentality of his assignee that creditors can recover, and subject to the payment of their claims, the property which the bankrupt fraudulently transferred prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, or which he concealed from and fails to surrender to his assignees."

Viquesnay v. Allen, 12 A. B. R. 402, 131 Fed. 21 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "Neither the original Bankruptcy Act nor the amendment seems to us to afford any ground for the contention of the appellee. The original act, § 23a, relates only to controversies between the trustee in bankruptcy and adverse claimants to property acquired or claimed by the trustee. So, also, 23b relates only to suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy. And the amendment, if applicable here, likewise only applies to suits by trustees in bankruptcy."

Smith v. Belden, 6 A. B. R. 423 (Supt. Ct. N. Y.): "His only interest is that of a general creditor in the successful prosecution of the action and in the disposition of its fruits. It is settled that on account of such interest he should not be made a party in the absence, as is the case upon this motion, of any allegations touching the good faith and diligence of the trustee for the creditors."

In re Adams, 1 A. B. R. 96 (Ref. N. Y.): "As has been seen, the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 not only vests in the trustee property fraudulently conveyed by a bankrupt, but, more than that, subrogates the trustee to all rights of creditors to recover such property. Under a provision of the former Bankruptcy Act (U. S., R. S., § 5046) vesting in the assignee under that act 'all property conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of his creditors,' it was held, that the sole right to attack a fraudulent assignment, belonged to the assignee in bankruptcy; and it was repeatedly decided that it was only through the instrumentality of the assignee that a creditor could recover and subject to the payment of his debt property fraudulently transferred by a bankrupt prior to the adjudication of bankruptcy. Olney v. Tanner, 22 Blatchf. 540; Glenny v. Langdon, 98 U. S. 20; Trimble v. Woodhead, 102 U. S. 647; Moyer v. Dewey, 103 U. S. 301. In the case of Olney v. Tanner, it was further held, that all the creditor's right of action to reach such property passes to the assignee, now the trustee, as a statutory right, and he acquires not only all the rights of the creditor, but he is enabled to assail transfers which the creditor could not assail, unless he had acquired a right to or lien upon the specific property.

"If, by reason of their diligence in commencing their creditor's action before the filing of the petition in this case, and because the property fraudulently transferred was transferred before the passage of the act, the creditors opposing this motion have obtained equities superior to those of other creditors, undoubtedly they have no more to be lost under the provisions of the existing Bankruptcy Law than they were under the former law, under which it was held that the assignee took the estate in the plight in which he found it and subject to all vested liens and equities. Yeatman v. Savings Institution, 96 U. S. Rep. 764. Nor will those superior equities, if they exist, be lost when a trustee is appointed in this proceedings, because he will then be subrogated to the right of these creditors to prosecute their action."

§ 1719. Creditors Maintaining Suits in Trustee's Name.—Undoubtedly, creditors may maintain suits, using the trustee's name by leave of court, in cases where the trustee refuses or fails to act.⁸⁵

In re Bailey, 18 A. B. R. 226, 151 Fed. 953 (D. C. Penn.): "The order of the court is that upon the * * * filing of a bond in the court in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00), conditioned for the payment of costs that may accrue in any litigation which the petitioner may require the trustee to institute for the recovery of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt's estate, that the trustee is hereby directed to institute such suits for the recovery of property as the petitioner and his counsel may direct, and any litigation so instituted to be directed and conducted for the trustee by petitioner's counsel; and it is so ordered."

And the court may require such creditors to indemnify the trustee against the costs and expenses of the litigation.⁸⁶

Traders' Ins. Co. v. Mann, 11 A. B. R. 269, 118 Ga. 381: "There is a marked difference between the two (receiver and trustee). The powers of a receiver are not fixed by law but by the order of appointment. His duties vary in each case. In some instances they are active. He must operate a railroad, sell a stock of goods, manage a farm, or collect rents. He is often a mere stakeholder to preserve the property until final decree. He has no fixed duty or inherent power. Unless authorized so to do he has no right to bring suit. Civ. Code, 1895, §§ 4900, 4906. But the duties of a trustee in bankruptcy are fixed by statute. 'They shall collect and reduce to money the property of estates for which they are trustees'—words as fully warranting him to sue as an administrator, with the same power and duty. The fact that this is to be 'under the direction of the court' no more requires a preliminary order to sue than it would necessitate a special order to authorize him to go in person and present a note and demand payment. The money, when collected, after suit or without suit, and the use to be made thereof, was to be 'under the direction of the court.' But being bound to collect, he was not obliged to secure a special order to bring suit necessary to collect. As to actions by or against the bankrupt pending at the time of the adjudication, the act requires him to obtain instructions from the court intervening. But the express requirement that he must obtain an order in such instances, while being silent as to the necessity therefore in cases like this, is conclusive that special permission was not necessary where he had to sue in order to collect a debt due the estate. The fact that the original Bankrupt Act (Act, March 2, 1867, ch. 176, 14 Stat. 517) required this action to be brought in a State court is here sufficient authority to begin this proceeding. rules of practice of such bills,⁹⁴ and the trustee is not confined to suits at law to recover the property or its value.

Pond v. N. Y. Exch. Bk., 10 A. B. R. 343, 124 Fed. 992 (D. C. N. Y.): "This suit is analogous to a judgment creditor's suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. The original payment when made was valid. It would not have been voidable by the bankrupt. It has only become voidable at the election of the trustee in bankruptcy, in the same manner as a fraudulent conveyance may be set aside by a judgment creditor. The jurisdiction in such cases has always been in equity. Many such suits in equity were brought by trustees in bankruptcy under the Act of 1867, for instance, Grant v. National Bank, 97 U. S. 80; Rogers v. Palmer, 102 U. S. 263; Stucky v. Masonic Savings Bank, 108 U. S. 74."

Thus, he may sue at law for the recovery of a preference.³

§ 1730. And Should Sue at Law unless Remedy Inadequate.—And the trustee should sue at law unless his remedy at law is inadequate.^{3a}

Warmcuth v. O'Daniel, 20 A. B. R. 101, 159 Fed. 87 (C. C. A. Tenn.): "The question on this appeal which arises on the first two of the assignments of error is whether the court below was right in overruling the appellant's contention on his demurrer that the suit was not properly brought in equity for the reason that there was a plain, adequate, and complete remedy by an action at law. The objection was taken at the threshold, and the question is not embarrassed by the laches of the defendant in raising it. We think the court should have sustained the demurrer. The judgment sought was for a definite sum of money, precisely that which the court by its decree awarded to the complainants. And the whole sum was recoverable, if any of it was; for the assets of the estate would not come near the amount of the debts. There was no contingency in the liability, or apportionment of the burden among several defendants to be made by the judgment. The response of the court to the demand of the complainants was simply an allowance or refusal of it. Nor was there any embarrassment in the procedure. The evidence produced would be, and was in this case, as completely available in an action at law as in a court of equity. No injunction was sought or required. The issue was one which a jury could readily understand and decide under proper instructions from the court in respect to the law. It is suggested that the court must first set aside the transfer before it could proceed to judgment, and that it is the peculiar province of a court of equity to set aside unlawful transfers. This is an ingenious, but unsubstantial figment. No distinct or formal preliminary action was required or contemplated by the statute. If the defendant had obtained part of the estate which should have come to all the creditors, proof of that fact would entitle the trustees to recover it. Perhaps there may be cases where a declaration of the court may be necessary to completely fulfill all requirements, as where the transfer has been accomplished by a deed or other solemn instrument which may be made matter of record, or is a muniment of title the existence of which would indicate ownership and the right to sell and convey or mortgage, or do such other things with it as belong to ownership. But in the present case nothing is stated in the bill which makes such a proceeding necessary, nor indeed is anything more required than in any ordinary action at law where the plaintiff is always bound to establish the facts which create the liability, whereupon, and without more, the court gives judgment for the sum he is entitled to recover. And that was what occurred in the present instance. There was no preliminary declaration that this transfer be set aside. The suggestion made would be the adoption of a device for evading the statute forbidding a resort to a court of equity. The right of a defendant to have his liability determined in an action at law is a substantial one, the value of which is recognized and protected by the statute (§ 723, Rev. St.), which declares that 'suits in equity shall not be sustained in either of the courts of the United States in any case where a plain, adequate, and complete remedy may be had at law.' The defendant is thereby given an opportunity to have his controversy tried by a jury, a privilege of sufficient importance to be secured by the Constitution and guarded by this positive statute. * * * Even in cases of trust, when the conditions had been reduced to the simple fact that a certain sum of money was due from the trustee on account of his trust, a court of law was the proper forum, and a bill in equity would not lie."

But the defendant may waive the trial by jury;⁴ and the objection that the trustee does not sue at law comes too late when first made after submission of an adverse report of a special master.⁵

Objections to the charge to the jury can not be availed of unless exception was taken thereto.⁶

Sessler v. Nemcof, 25 A. B. R. 618, 183 Fed. 656 (D. C. Pa.): "If the trustee has an adequate remedy at law, a bill in equity cannot be maintained, in this or in any other court. Whatever equitable jurisdiction may have been conferred upon the District Court by the Bankruptcy Act and the amendments thereto, it is confined to controversies relating to a bankrupt estate. Within this limited area, whether or not a bill in equity may be maintained must be tested by the ordinary rules that govern bills before any other tribunal, and perhaps the most familiar test is to inquire whether the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law."

While, no doubt, only those exceptions to the final report are good which were taken by objection to the draft report, the objections will themselves come up with the final report, and ordinarily will not be regarded at all, unless some point should be made as to the validity of the exceptions. It is, in my judgment, better that a report read as a narrative, and certainly it should not be cut up with statements as to what the master declined to find."

Proper Practice in Accounting before Special Master.—Ommen, trustee, v. Talcott, 23 A. B. R. 572, 175 Fed. 261 (D. C. N. Y.).

12. It has been held that where the schedules filed by the bankrupt declare that he has no assets, then such an allegation in the trustee's petition becomes unnecessary. In re Schoenfield, 27 A. B. R. 64, 190 Fed. 53 (D. C. W. Va.). But the obvious reply to such a holding is, that if it is necessary to allege and prove it, it ought to be alleged in the petition and be proved by competent evidence.

Mueller v. Bruss, 8 A. B. R. 442, 112 Wis. 407; "A third proposition is that the trustee cannot maintain this action unless it is shown by the complaint that he has not sufficient assets in his hands to satisfy the claims of the creditors of the debtor. No such showing is made in the complaint. For all that appears therein, there may be money and property enough in his hands to pay every claim against the debtor. The conveyances attacked were good between the parties thereto. Ellis v. Land Co., 108 Wis. 313, 84 N. W. 417. Third parties are not allowed to impeach them unless it is necessary to do so in order that justice may be done. The trustee has no right superior to that of the creditors he represents. If we admit that the facts stated show such transfers to have been fraudulent, still no right to avoid them exists unless it appears that some one was harmed. It seems quite evident, without argument, that unless it is made to appear that the property so conveyed is needed to pay the claims filed against the debtor, the trustee has no right to set such conveyances aside. The complaint is insufficient in this respect. It ought to show the amount of claims filed, and the value of the assets in his hands, so that the court may determine the necessity of resorting to this proceeding. Its infirmity in this respect renders it susceptible to the demurrer."

Prescott v. Galluccio, 21 A. B. R. 229, 164 Fed. 618 (D. C. N. Y.): "It must appear that the property of the bankrupt is not sufficient to pay his creditors in full. This should be alleged and there will be an amendment accordingly."

Although compare, apparently but not really contra, Breckons v. Synder, 15 A. B. R. 112, 211 Pa. St. 176: "The adjudication was evidence of the bankrupt's insolvency at its date, and it was not necessary to prove insolvency at the trial."

However, since the Amendment of 1910 to § 47a (2) endowing the trustee with the rights and remedies of a creditor "armed with process," such averment and proof may not be necessary.

Kraver v. Abrahams, 29 A. B. R. 365, 203 Fed. 782 (D. C. Pa.): "The defendant demurs upon the ground that the statement contains no averment that the trustee, the plaintiff, has not sufficient assets on hand to pay all of the bankrupt's creditors in full, relying upon the cases of Mueller v. Bruss, 9 A. B. R. 442, 112 Wis. 406, 88 N. W. 229, and Prescott v. Galluccio (D. C. N. Y.), 21 A. B. R. 229, 164 Fed. 618, in which it was held that in a suit to set aside a transfer of property by the bankrupt upon the ground that it was fraudulent as to creditors, the trustee must aver and prove that the property of the bankrupt is not sufficient to pay his creditors in full. The rule laid down in the cases cited was based upon the ground that the trustee has no rights superior to the creditors whom he represents and that even if the transfer is fraudulent there is no right to avoid it unless it appears that the assets of the bankrupt estate are insufficient to pay the creditors in full. The necessity, if it existed, to aver and prove a deficiency of assets appears, however, to have been removed by the amendment of 1910 to § 47a (2) of the Bankruptcy Act by which it is provided that as to all property not in the custody of the bankruptcy court the trustee shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies and powers of a judgment creditor holding an execution returned unsatisfied. In other words, under the amendment where a transfer is alleged to have been fraudulent as to creditors and insolvency is alleged to have existed at the time, the trustee is in the position of a creditor who has proved by an execution returned unsatisfied that a deficiency of assets exists. There is, therefore, no necessity for its averment in the statement of claim."

And, of course, inadequacy of assets need not be alleged where the action is one which the bankrupt himself might have maintained.

Drew v. Myers, 22 A. B. R. 656, 81 Neb. 750, 116 N. W. 781: "Where a trustee in bankruptcy seeks to recover the property of the bankrupt in an action which the bankrupt might have prosecuted but for the intervention of the bankruptcy, he is not required to allege that he has not sufficient assets of the estate in his hands to pay the liabilities thereof. Such allegation is only necessary when the action is brought to avoid a preference or fraudulent conveyance made by the bankrupt. The rule enunciated in Flint v. Chaloupka and the cases cited to support the same is restricted to cases brought by the trustee to avoid preferences or to recover property converted by the bankrupt in fraud of the creditors. The reason for the rule is that such actions are essentially in the nature of creditors' bills, and the insufficiency of the property left in the debtor's hands after making fraudulent conveyances is an essential element of the right of the creditor to question such conveyances. Here the plaintiff claims that defendant's father, who was an officer of the bankrupt corporation, taking advantage of this position, withdrew or possibly embezzled some $500 of its funds, which he turned over to the defendant, his son, and which was by him deposited in the defendant bank. In such a case the bankrupt, but for the appointment of the trustee could have maintained this action to recover such money. We think it safe to say that the trustee of a bankrupt may maintain any action which the bankrupt might have maintained but for the intervention of the bankruptcy, and that it is not necessary in such a case for him to state that the property already in his hands is insufficient to pay the debts of the bankrupt. It is only when he brings an action which is in the nature of a creditor's bill that he is required to make such allegation."

But at any rate it is no defense to an action by a trustee that the trustee might recover against officers and directors for dereliction of duty and against stockholders for unpaid subscriptions.

In re Standard Tel. & Elec. Co. (Knapp v. Milw. Tr. Co.), 216 U. S. 545, 24 A. B. R. 761, quoted further at § 1207 $\frac{1}{4}$ and § 1258: "In Mueller v. Bruss, 8 Am. B. R. 442, 112 Wis. 406, it was held that a trustee in bankruptcy could maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, but that the complaint must aver and the trustee must show that the estate had not sufficient assets in the trustee's hands to satisfy the claims filed against the debtor. And, it is insisted, that a showing of this character is lacking in the present case. Without deciding that under the Bankruptcy Act the answer of the trustee in bankruptcy was required to make this averment, accompanied by proof, if necessary, it is sufficient upon this point to say that the intervening petition of the trustee of the mortgage sought to assert a lien upon all the property of the bankrupt in the trustee's hands. The suggestion in appellant's brief, that the trustee in bankruptcy may possibly recover against directors and officers of the corporation for dereliction of duty, and against stockholders for unpaid subscriptions and additional liability on their part, presents no reason why he may not resist an attempt to take all the available property in his hands to apply on a mortgage void as to creditors at the time of the adjudication."

§ 1732. Return of Execution Unsatisfied, Not Always Prerequisite.—It was held in some cases, even before the Amendment of 1910 to Bankr. Act, § 47 (a) (2), that the obtaining of judgment and issuance and return of execution unsatisfied as evidence of exhaustion of legal remedies might be excused.¹³

Mueller v. Bruss, 8 A. B. R. 442, 112 Wis. 406: "Obtaining judgment on the claim with a return of an execution unsatisfied, is prima facie evidence of the exhaustion of all legal remedies against the debtor. The rule stated, however, is not inexorable and without exceptions. If it appears that for any reason a judgment against a debtor cannot be obtained, it will be excused as a preliminary to a creditors' suit. Smith Eq. Rem. of Cred., § 167. The exceptions noted and discussed in the book last referred to, fairly illustrate the law on that subject. The principle involved in the exceptions to the rule is that when a party has done all that is possible for him to do to prepare his case for equitable cognizance, he is not to be denied access to the only tribunal capable of granting relief. This leads us to the consideration of the situation presented by the allegations of the complaint. It is not alleged that any of the creditors have ever obtained judgment on their claims. The trustee has not secured a judgment, and it is not perceived how either he or the creditors could do so, under the provisions of the Bankrupt Act. By section 11 all suits founded on a claim from which a discharge would be a release, pending at the time of the petition, are to be stayed until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition, and, if such person be adjudged a bankrupt, such suits are to be stayed until 12 months after the date of such adjudication, or, if within that time such person applies for a discharge, then until the question of such discharge is determined, so that, unless the creditor had obtained a judgment before petition filed, he could not do so until after a discharge. Such discharge releases the bankrupt from all provable debts except such as are mentioned in § 17. In the meantime the trustee is vested with all the rights the creditors had to avoid transfers made by the debtor. The creditors could not sue and obtain judgment pending the bankruptcy proceedings. The trustee had no greater right. Hence, by the operation of a paramount law of the United States, the creditors were prevented from obtaining a judgment upon which to base the right to attack the conveyance of their debtor, alleged to have been fraudulently made. This brings the case within the exception before mentioned, and excuses the trustee from obtaining a judgment and issuing execution as a preliminary to the suit."

Compare, Brown v. Barker, 8 A. B. R. 450, 458, 68 App. Div. 594, 74 N. Y. Supp. 43: "The courts are not inclined to extend the cases in which a plaintiff will be excused from pursuing the ordinary course of obtaining a judgment upon his indebtedness, and we think that it will not be going too far to hold that a plaintiff seeking to make such an excuse as is urged in this case shall clearly allege and show that the restraining order has been made against his opposition and without his procurement or consent."

In re Martin, 5 A. B. R. 424, 105 Fed. 723 (D. C. N. Y.): "Is it essential that the plaintiff proceed to judgment, and exhaust his remedy in the manner specially pointed out by the undertaking? I am clearly of the opinion that it is not necessary. The plaintiff, by the restraining order of the bankruptcy

But compare, Viquesney v. Allen, 12 A. B. R. 402, 131 Fed. 21 (C. C. A. W. Va.): This was a peculiar case. A simple contract creditor undertook after the involuntary proceedings had begun although before adjudication, to institute an independent suit in aid of the bankruptcy proceedings, as ancillary thereto, to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance. The court held two points: a simple contract creditor could not maintain the action, and that a creditor was not the proper party, in any event.

court, is prevented from proceeding to judgment and execution in the pending suit before the justice of the peace by the paramount authority of the bankruptcy court. This court has power to stay pending suits founded upon a claim for which a discharge would be a release. The performance of the conditions imposed on the plaintiff in the suit by virtue of the stay becomes impossible, and the discharge of the bankrupt from his debts has the same effect as the return of an execution wholly or partly unsatisfied."

Beasley v. Coggins, 12 A. B. R. 355, 57 So. Rep. 213 (Sup. Ct. Fla.): "The general rule is that, before a creditor can maintain a bill in equity to set aside a conveyance by his debtor of his real estate on the ground of fraud, the creditor must reduce his claim to judgment, or its equivalent, a decree for a balance remaining after a foreclosure sale of mortgaged property, creating a lien on such real estate; and, when personal property or equitable assets are pursued, he must have an execution issued and returned nulla bona. Robinson v. Springfield Company, 21 Fla. 203. But does this rule apply to such a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy? * * * Section 70e * * * was intended to provide simply that the trustee in bankruptcy should have the same right to avoid conveyances as was possessed by creditors, or any of them, and this with especial reference to the statute of 13 Elizabeth. Under the Bankruptcy Act, when one is thereunder adjudged a bankrupt creditors are not permitted to attack fraudulent conveyances of their debtor, made more than four months of the adjudication of bankruptcy; and, if the trustee could not do so, then the act would constitute 'a device to permit fraudulent conveyances to take effect with impunity in case they are successfully concealed for the specified four months.' * * * The case of Platt, Assignee v. Matthews (D. C. N. Y.) 10 Fed. 280, arose under the bankrupt law previous to that of 1898. A bill was filed by the assignee to reach property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred by the bankrupt. It was contended on demurrer that, as no creditor had a judgment and execution against the bankrupt, such a bill would not lie. The court held that, inasmuch as the Bankruptcy Act vested the assignee with the title of all property conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of creditors, the assignee acquired his rights through the act, and not through what had been done by the creditors. The court overruled the demurrer.

"In Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, § 553, it is stated that, in order for an assignee in bankruptcy to maintain a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, it is not necessary that he shall have a lien on the property, and obtain a return of nulla bona. In Cady v. Whaling, 7 Biss. 430, Fed. Cas., No. 2,285, an assignee in bankruptcy filed a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made before the Bankrupt Act was passed. It was contended that such a bill could not be maintained on behalf of general creditors who had no specific lien. The contention was overruled."

The Amendment of 1910 to the Bankruptcy Act, § 47a (2), endowing the trustee with the attributes of a "creditor armed with process" is conclusive on the right of the trustee to maintain such actions as would have required the obtaining of a judgment and the return of an execution unsatisfied. Thus, in jurisdictions where such return of execution is essential in order to pursue conspirators collusively transferring and concealing assets.

Sattler v. Slonimsky, 28 A. B. R. 729, 199 Fed. 592 (D. C. Pa.): "This action in trespass is brought to recover damages arising from an alleged unlawful conspiracy entered into by the defendants prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy to fraudulently and collusively transfer and conceal moneys of Harry Ruderman and Jacob Ruderman, the bankrupts for the purpose of hindering and delaying their creditors.

"Prior to the amendment of June 25, 1910 to § 47a of the Bankruptcy Act, such a suit could not have been maintained upon a cause of action arising prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy because the rights of action which vested in the trustee upon his appointment were only such as were vested in the bankrupts prior to the adjudication. The amendment to § 47a provides, however, that the trustee 'as to all property not in the custody of the bankruptcy court shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied.'

"That a creditor may bring an action of trespass on the case upon a conspiracy to fraudulently secrete and transfer the property of a defendant in an execution from the reach of the plaintiff is well settled."

Thus, also, to recover fraudulent transfers.¹⁴ merely constructively so, the claim of the transferee has been allowed; and he has been subrogated to the rights of those who had received the consideration paid by him, less deduction of the expense of setting aside the transfer.¹⁷

Barber v. Coit, 16 A. B. R. 419, 144 Fed. 381 (C. C. A. Ohio): "In order to set aside a transfer under this section (§ 6343, Rev. Stats. Ohio) it is not necessary that actual fraud or intent to defraud be shown. The intent to prefer is made constructively fraudulent and renders the transfer voidable. * * * This is a finding that the sale was made to prefer certain creditors and therefore was constructively fraudulent. It goes no further. * * * Under these circumstances, since the creditors have received the full benefit of the money which Coit paid to Payne, and since Coit has nothing to show for this money, the property which he received in exchange having been taken away from him and handed over to the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, it seems to us that Coit has a valid claim against the trustee for the full amount of the money he paid, less the expenses of setting aside the sale. The creditors lose nothing they are justly entitled to by giving up the money, for they have the property, and it would be manifestly inequitable for them to hold both property and money."

And such fraudulent transferee has been allowed reimbursement or offset for taxes, repairs and interest actually paid by him.¹⁸

§ 1735. Pleadings to Show Trustee's Representative Capacity.—The pleadings of course must show that the trustee sues in his representative capacity. But the title and pleadings may be considered together to determine the capacity. Thus, where the title simply shows "trustee" but the petition clearly shows he sues in his representative capacity "as trustee," it will not be construed as descriptio personæ merely.¹⁹

§ 1736. Trustee Presumed to Represent Creditors and to Be Authorized to Act; Though No Claims Proved.—The trustee may sue although no claims are proved by creditors in the bankruptcy proceedings. The trustee is entitled to institute and maintain a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance even though no creditor has proved his claim in the bankruptcy proceedings. He is presumed to represent creditors, and the burden of proof of rebuttal is upon those who deny his authority.

Oliver v. Hilgers, 11 A. B. R. 178, 92 N. W. 911 (Minn.): "We think it is necessarily implied from the language and spirit of that act that the trustee is empowered to proceed to protect the rights of creditors, and to take possession of all property of the bankrupt, without waiting for any proof to be filed by any particular creditors, and that, when it appears that such trustee has been appointed in voluntary bankrupt proceedings, it will be presumed that he represents creditors; and will also be presumed that the creditors in existence at the time of filing the petition were not paid subsequently, and the burden was upon appellants to show the contrary."

But compare, inferentially, contra, but obiter, Breckons v. Snyder, 15 A. B. R. 115, 211 Pa. St. 176: “* * * It is argued that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show that there were unsatisfied creditors at the time of the transfer, at the time the suit was brought, and at the time of the trial, for the reason that, if there were no creditors when the transfer was made, there was no one to be defrauded by it, and if there were none afterwards there was no one in whose interest the trustee could maintain the action. The first ground of objection would not be without merit if a recovery had been sought because of a preferential transfer within the time prohibited by law. But the second count was withdrawn, and the only issue at the trial was whether a debt had existed and had been paid. No other right to retain the money was set up. If it had not been given to the defendant in discharge of a debt, it was the bankrupt’s money in the defendant’s hands, which the trustee could recover for creditors.”

The presumption is that the trustee has complied with all the requirements of the Bankrupt Act and is qualified to act, although the record does not show he has obtained an extension of time for filing his bond after the expiration of the time provided by the Bankrupt Act.²⁰

The defendant may set up, however, that certain alleged creditors failed to file their claims in the bankruptcy proceedings in the time allowed therefor, and were therefore barred from participation in the distribution of the bankrupt’s estate, and that there can be no recovery by the trustee for the benefit of such creditors.²¹

§ 1737. Tender of Actual Consideration Paid, Not Necessary.—The tender of the actual consideration paid which is necessary in a suit to rescind a sale between the vendor and vendee, need not be alleged where the bill sufficiently alleges a sale for an inadequate consideration with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, participated in by the purchaser. Whether refund of any part will finally be decreed is to be determined later.²²

§ 1738. Whether Transfer Voidable Only as to Some Creditors, Nevertheless, Avoided as to All.—Where a transfer which is not void as to all creditors but only as to a part of the creditors, is set aside and thereby property recovered, it is probable that, in the absence of local law to the contrary, the transfer being set aside, it is set aside for all purposes and all creditors are entitled to share therein, although as to some so sharing the transfer would not have been void.²³ The bankrupt law entitles the trustee to avoid for the benefit of all creditors any transfer which any creditor might have avoided.²⁴ The estoppel of some creditors does not necessarily work an estoppel of the trustee.²⁵

However, this is largely a matter of state law.²⁶ In states where the law makes such a distinction, it has been held that the petition or bill is demurrable unless it sets forth the debts and the dates of their creation.²⁷

§ 1739. Charging Same Transaction in Alternative, Fraudulent or Preferential, Not Inconsistent.—The joinder of a fraudulent conveyance and a voidable preference, alleged as to the same facts, is not a joinder of inconsistent causes of action.²⁸

But of course it would be different if the fraudulent conveyance were alleged to be wholly without consideration. Such a conveyance would be inconsistent with a preference, for a preference can only be made to a creditor.

§ 1740. All Matters Proper in Creditor's Bill, Proper Here.—All matters and causes of action proper in a creditor's bill are proper in an action brought by the trustee in the bankruptcy court to set aside a fraudulent transfer.²⁹

§ 1741. Both Bankrupt and Transferee in Fraudulent Transfer Proper Parties, Though Bankrupt and Intermediate Transferee Not Necessary.—Both the transferrer and the transferee in an alleged fraudulent transfer are proper parties, though charged with different acts of fraud affecting different parts of the estate, their acts having been done with a common fraudulent purpose;³⁰ but the bankrupt is not a necessary party;³¹ nor is a fraudulent transferee who has transferred to another fraudulent transferee all the property rights received under the transfer a necessary party.³²

that the object of the suit is simply to wipe out the fraud, clear the title and recover the value of the property for the creditors, the fraud, as alleged, relating to the same general subject in which each defendant has a common interest, centering in the real point in issue.³³

§ 1742½. Conspiracy to Defraud.—Action may be brought against several for conspiracy to defraud creditors;³⁴ and the petition will not be demurrable for failure to specify which one of them actually received the property.³⁵

But if such action be one merely to recover general damages for the conspiracy rather than for the recovery of property or the proceeds of property wrongfully transferred by the bankrupt, it may not be brought in the District Court.³⁶

Thus, in the case of the fraudulent transfer by a bankrupt beneficiary of an insurance policy on the life of another, the petition must show that such beneficiary's interest was of a kind that made it transferable by some means or leviable upon at the time of the bankruptcy.³⁸

§ 1747. Schedules and General Examination of Bankrupt Inadmissible against Transferee.—The schedules of the bankrupt are inadmissible against the transferee: they are not his admissions.⁴⁴ Likewise, the general examination of the bankrupt is inadmissible.⁴⁵

Taylor v. Nichols, 23 A. B. R. 310, 134 App. Div. (N. Y.) 787: "These schedules and part of the evidence so given by him in the bankruptcy proceeding were offered in evidence by the plaintiff upon the trial for the purpose of establishing the insolvency of the said Nichols at that time. To this offer the defendant objected, that as to him they were hearsay and that he was not bound by these declarations. The objections were overruled, the evidence was admitted, and the defendant excepted to the ruling. We are unable to see upon what ground this evidence was competent. It was the declaration of a bankrupt in a proceeding in which it does not appear that this defendant was a party. As to this defendant the evidence would seem clearly to be hearsay and inadmissible."

no dispute concerning the fact that the vendee was a creditor, and the declarations were received without objection. In the Circuit Court of Appeals only one question was raised, and that concerned a different matter. But even if such declarations are evidence in an issue like this, the value of the testimony is evidently not great, and it certainly should be scanned with much care, especially since it stands alone without corroborating testimony. A peculiar result of sustaining the referee's finding might be, that in a suit by the trustee in bankruptcy against Frank the bankrupt's declarations made after the transfer could not be heard to affect his vendee's title, unless, perhaps, collusion were first shown (Grimes Co. v. Malcom, 164 U. S. 490; Padgett v. Lawrence, 40 Am. Dec. 232, note, and Horton v. Smith, 42 Am. § 1750 $\frac{1}{2}$. Badges of Fraud and Latitude of Evidence.—The badges of fraud are to be considered together, for facts considered separately may be entirely insufficient to establish fraud, whilst considered together they may form an incontestible chain of proof of it.⁴⁸

Houck v. Christy, 18 A. B. R. 330, 152 Fed. 612 (C. C. A. Kans.): "Moreover, we think the evidence before recited brings the case well within the rule that badges of fraud, altogether inconclusive if separately considered, may, by their number and joint operation, especially when corroborated by moral coincidences, be sufficient to constitute conclusive proof of fraudulent intent on the part of both vendor and vendee."

And great latitude should be allowed in the admission of evidence, for questions of fraud can scarcely ever be proved by direct evidence.⁴⁹

In re Luber, 18 A. B. R. 476, 152 Fed. 492 (D. C. Pa.): "In the investigation of questions of fraud, as a rule, great latitude is allowed in the admission of evidence, in order that the jury may be able to determine from all the circumstances whether the transaction was fraudulent or not. Questions of fraud can scarcely ever be proved by direct evidence, hence the necessity for the admission of all the circumstances fairly connected with the transaction."

existed at the date of the transfer complained of, than simply the ones or one to whom the transfer was made. Subsequent creditors cannot complain unless it is shown a scheme existed to defraud future creditors.⁵¹ But if the transfer were made in pursuance of a scheme to defraud subsequent creditors, it may be avoided.⁵²

§ 1751½. Election of Remedies.—It has been held that where a trustee, knowing the facts, has procured an order on the bankrupt for a surrender of the proceeds of an alleged fraudulent transfer still in his hands, the trustee will be held to have elected to affirm the transfer, in a subsequent suit against the alleged fraudulent transferee.

Thomas v. Sugerman, 19 A. B. R. 509, 157 Fed. 669 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "If the complainant was entitled to set the transfer aside as fraudulent, he could have recovered the account from Sugerman, but would have had to return to him the price or any part of it paid to the bankrupt which the complainant had received. This is because the right of the creditors was simply to be made whole. For the same reason, he would not have had to credit Sugerman with anything paid by Sugerman to the bankrupt which he, the complainant, had not actually received from the bankrupt. Of course, if the trustee had found the $30,000 in the bankrupt's deposit box and taken it into his possession, or if the bankrupt had voluntarily paid the sum to him, the mere receipt of the money would not amount to an election by the trustee to affirm the transfer. But that is not the case. The trustee here, with a full knowledge of all the facts alleged in a formal proceeding that the bankrupt had in his possession and was concealing money, and by that proceeding he has, so to speak, created a fund. Nor can we adopt the appellant's theory that in this proceeding the trustee was merely seeking to get in the bankrupt's estate in order to determine, after it was in his hands, whether to affirm or to repudiate the transfer to Sugerman. The papers and proceedings show nothing of the kind, but, on the contrary, that he was seeking to get the money as a part of the bankrupt's estate to be distributed among the creditors. The case presents an election between inconsistent rights. It makes no difference that the defendant Sugerman was not a party to the proceeding in which the complainant charged the bankrupt with the money paid for the accounts transferred by him, or that the complainant actually recovered nothing in that proceeding. This act confirmed the title to those accounts in Sugerman." But see, dissenting opinion in same case. * * * "It is conceded that if the bankrupt had kept the $30,000 in a private safe in some deposit company, and, upon learning of the appointment of the trustee, had delivered it to the latter, receipt of it would not constitute an election, and I cannot see how the situation is changed by the circumstances that the bankrupt delivers it in obedience to an order to show cause, or turns over only part of it because he has squandered the remainder. It would seem to be a disastrous rule to apply that, whenever a trustee insists that a bankrupt shall turn over all the property in his possession, he thereby ratifies by election all sorts of transactions which the bankrupt may have had with the persons from whom he got the prop-

Westall v. Avery, 22 A. B. R. 673, 171 Fed. 626 (C. C. A. N. C.): "But independent of this, it is also well settled that a proceeding instituted by a bankrupt's trustee to set aside fraudulent conveyances or illegal preferences is not a proceeding in bankruptcy but, while ancillary to such proceeding and authorized by the Bankruptcy Act to be instituted in either the Federal District Court or in a State court of competent jurisdiction, it must be governed, so far as pleading and practice are concerned, by the laws and rules of the court wherein it is instituted. * * * And further, it is to be borne in mind, that the equity practice of the Federal courts is independent of, and unaffected by State laws as to procedure in State courts. Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 430, 19 L. Ed. 261; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. Ed. 358. In Federal courts the rules of the High Court of Chancery in England are recognized as 'the common law of chancery' and an authoritative exposition of the principles, rules and usages belonging to courts of equity except so far as they may be modified by Federal statute and by rules promulgated by the Supreme Court. Penn'a v. Wheeling &c. Bridge Co., 13 How. 563, 14 L. Ed. 249. Finally it is to be observed, that Federal courts, both when exercising general jurisdiction and also when exercising the special one conferred by the Bankruptcy Act in this particular, require suits to set aside deeds and contracts as fraudulent to be instituted in equity."

The rule that the bankruptcy court has no terms and that its orders may be vacated on good cause and proper application even after expiration of the current term of the District Court is hardly applicable to plenary actions for the recovery of property. court to be incompetent, immaterial, or otherwise inadmissible, in order that a reviewing court may not be obliged to remand the case for admission of the rejected evidence, exception being made, however, of cases where the testimony is privileged or the evidence so clearly incompetent or irrelevant as that its production or admission would amount to abuse of process.

Missouri Elec. Co. v. Hamilton-Brown Co., 21 A. B. R. 270, 165 Fed. 283 (C. C. A. Mo.): "A proceeding in bankruptcy is a proceeding in equity, and it is the duty of examiners, masters, referees, and the court, when taking evidence in controversies therein in the absence of a jury, to take, record, and in case of an appeal, to return to the reviewing court, all the evidence offered by either party, that which they hold to be incompetent or immaterial as well as that which they deem competent and relevant, to the end that, if the appellate court is of the opinion that evidence rejected should have been received, it may consider it, render a final decree, and thus conclude the litigation without remanding the suit to procure the rejected evidence. From this rule evidence plainly privileged, the testimony of privileged witnesses and evidence which clearly and affirmatively appears to be so incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial that it would be an abuse of the process or power of the court to compel its production or permit its introduction, are excepted."

§ 1753¹/₂. But Bankruptcy Court Has Full Equity Powers.—The bankruptcy court, in such suits, exercises full equity powers and is not confined to the mere avoidance of the transfer and decree for the recovery of the property, but may protect and enforce rights of the parties in other particulars.⁵⁶ And in proceedings in equity instituted by the trustee the rules of equity practice established by the United States Supreme Court are to be followed as nearly as may be.⁵⁷

§ 1753³/₄. Statutory Prerequisites to "Maintaining Suits."—State statutes prohibiting parties from maintaining or instituting suit until they have complied with certain registry or deposit requirements, etc., have no applicability to suits in the federal courts; the federal court may accept the substantive rights of the parties as it finds them under the State statutes; but will itself determine what shall be the prerequisites to the maintenance of suits in its own forum.⁵⁸

In re Dunlop, 19 A. B. R. 361, 156 Fed. 545 (C. C. A. Minn.): "This statute has received the consideration of the highest judicial tribunal of Minnesota, and it has held that such a foreign corporation cannot maintain an action in the courts of that State to recover the purchase price of goods sold by it in the transaction of business in the State without complying with the conditions of this statute * * * or for the recovery of moneys collected for it by its agent on account of the sale of its goods and evidenced by the agent's note. * * * The reason which induced the Supreme Court of Minnesota to reach these conclusions, as we understand its opinions, was not that the contracts upon which the actions were brought were void because violative of the statute, but it was that the State had the undoubted right to exclude foreign corporations which would not submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the courts of the State from the privilege of enforcing rights and litigating controversies in those courts, and that it had clearly done so in the cases which have been cited. But the provision of the State statute which forbids the maintenance of suits in the courts of that State was not intended to apply to, and it does not affect, suits and proceedings in the Federal courts. A State is without power to prohibit or condition the exercise by a foreign corporation of its right to institute and defend its suits in the national courts and to invoke their independent judgment upon its controversies in the cases and in the manner prescribed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, which are the supreme law of the land."

But in Alabama the statute goes further than merely to prohibit the maintenance of the suit: it makes the contract itself illegal and void, so that the trustee of a foreign corporation which was doing business there without compliance with the state statute cannot maintain a suit on the contract nor on quantum meruit even in the federal court, the contract furthermore not being in interstate commerce.⁵⁹

§ 1754. Allegation of Diverse Citizenship Not Requisite.—Allegation of diverse citizenship is not necessary, except where the action brought in the United States District Court is not one for the recovery of property transferred by the bankrupt preferentially or in fraud of his creditors or for the recovery of its proceeds. The jurisdiction depends upon its being a bankruptcy controversy cognizable under the Act, not upon diversity of citizenship.⁶⁰ But the facts constituting it such a cognizable controversy must be pleaded and proved.⁶¹

§ 1757. Answering under Oath Requiring Testimony to Overcome.—If suit be in the United States District Court and the defendant answers under oath it will require the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness and corroborating circumstances to overcome the oath; if the answer under oath is waived, however, it will not so require.⁶⁵

§ 1758. If Suit in United States District Court, Party Not to Impeach Own Witness.—If the suit be brought in the United States District Court a party may not impeach his own witnesses and is bound by their testimony, except that he may show a mistake.⁶⁶

Compare, instance, Entwisle v. Seidt, 19 A. B. R. 185, 155 Fed. 864 (D. C. N. Y.): "The witnesses called on behalf of the complainants are the defendants, and the persons engaged as principals in the various transactions. Their examination was conducted apparently on the theory that they were biased witnesses, to such an extent that the complainant would not be bound by the statements made, and the direct examination is in almost all cases in reality cross-examination. But the complainant has presented no proofs showing any of the facts alleged, outside of the testimony of these witnesses produced by himself, and aside from the general situation there is nothing brought out to show bias nor fraudulent motives on the part of the parties to the transaction. The attorneys for all the parties have so violated the rules of evidence that the most of the testifying has been done by the attorneys, apparently without objection, and it is impossible from a reading of the testimony as transcribed to form an opinion as to whether the witnesses were telling the truth, or whether they were following the lead of the testimony put into their mouths by the questions of the attorneys. On the whole testimony, it would appear that the complainant is bound by the statements of his own witnesses, and in every instance these statements show a valid consideration and an actual transfer of property. There is no extraneous or disinterested testimony to prove the contrary. As to the mortgage in question the testimony shows plainly that the transaction occurred exactly as claimed by the bankrupt. It appears that the defendant Cohen, assignee of the mortgage, is a brother-in-law of the bankrupt, and the apparent object of the action, as far as the mortgage is concerned, is to show that Cohen purchased a valid mortgage for the benefit of the bankrupt, and, inferentially, with funds supplied by the bankrupt. But no evidence whatever is furnished as to these surmises, and no examination of the defendant Cohen, as to the source of the funds with which he purchased the mortgage, and no evidence of other witnesses as to where the money used by him was obtained, is offered. The complainant's case as to this mortgage rests merely upon the contradictory statements and the rather lame explanations of motive on the part of the defendant Cohen, who, nevertheless, is shown by the testimony to have actually purchased for a valid consideration the assignment of the mortgage in question."

§ 1759. State Statutes Permitting Cross-Examination of Adverse Party, etc., Not Followed.—State statutes permitting the cross-examination of the adverse party and providing that his answers shall not conclude the party so examining but may be rebutted, are not applicable to federal equity practice.⁶⁷

§ 1759½. No Demurrer to Answer in Federal Court.—If the suit be brought in the federal court no demurrer to the answer will lie; but such a demurrer may be treated as an application to set the cause down for hearing on bill and answer, or as an exception to the answer for impertinence or for failure to answer fully.⁶⁸

Vitzthum v. Large, 20 A. B. R. 666, 162 Fed. 685 (D. C. Iowa): "This proceeding is quite irregular, and if stipulations like these are to be observed it will enable the parties to a suit in equity to abrogate entirely the equity rules, and require the court to proceed in equity causes as in actions at law. While the equity rules should not be so strictly enforced as to do injustice to either party, a reasonable adherence to them is necessary to orderly procedure, and to enable the court to bring the parties to final issues upon the merits. Under the practice as prescribed by the State statute, which counsel desire to have observed, a demurrer admits the allegations of the pleading demurred to for the purpose of the demurrer only, and if the demurrer is overruled, and the party demurring shall answer or reply, which he may do, the ruling on the demurrer shall not be considered as an adjudication of any question raised by the demurrer, and no pleading shall be held sufficient because of a failure to demur thereto. Code Iowa 1897, §§ 3564, 3565. Such a practice is so at variance with the equity procedure in the national courts that parties should not be permitted to introduce it into those courts to the exclusion of the procedure prescribed by the equity rules. But Communications Privileged by State Law, Privileged in Federal Courts.—Communications privileged under State law have been held to be privileged in the U. S. District Court. § 1760. Where Trustee Sues in State Court, Suit Follows Usual Course and Parties Have Usual Rights, There.—Where the trustee resorts to the state court to recover fraudulently conveyed property or property otherwise recoverable, he is entitled to all remedies and all relief that would be afforded any other party litigant under the same facts.⁶⁹ Thus, where the state law permits a simple contract creditor to maintain a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the trustee has the same right⁷⁰ and is bound to make proof in accordance with the state law.

Impliedly, Miller v. Acid & Fertilizer Co., 21 A. B. R. 416, 211 U. S. 495: "Undoubtedly, the trustee, in prosecuting the suit to judgment, was obliged to prove to the existence of the facts which were essential under the State laws, since, to hold otherwise would be but to decide that he could recover without proof of his right to do so."

And the rules of procedure of the state court will control.⁷¹ So, also, as to the form of action.⁷² Thus, also, in New York it is held, in suits brought by trustees in the state courts, that the rule that unfiled chattel mortgages are "void as against creditors" does not require the existence of levying creditors, but that, if judgment creditors exist, it is enough.⁷³ Such does not, however, seem to be the rule where the suit is brought in the federal court there.

Thus, also, the trustee is bound to give security for costs where such security would be required of others,⁷⁴ and the trustee may be ordered to pay the taxable costs of an action wherein he has been defeated,⁷⁵ and the alleged fraudulent transferee is entitled to urge all defenses against the trustee.

So, the State law will control as to the right of trial by jury.⁷⁶

SUBDIVISION "C."

PLEADINGS AND PRACTICE IN PROCEEDINGS TO SET ASIDE AND RECOVER PREFERENCES.

§ 1761. Representative Capacity of Trustee to Be Alleged.—The representative capacity of the trustee of course must be alleged. But the entire pleading may be taken to ascertain the allegation.⁷⁹ Also, whether the suit is brought in a state court⁸⁰ or in the federal court the trustee's appointment should be proved.

§ 1761½. Pleading Claims of Creditors and Inadequacy of Assets.—The trustee need not plead, nor prove, specifically, that claims against the bankrupt have been filed and allowed, although it is probably necessary to plead and prove in some form that the bankrupt is indebted to general creditors who may share in the preference recovered.⁸¹

Gering v. Leyda, 26 A. B. R. 137, 186 Fed. 110 (C. C. A. Neb.): "It is contended in behalf of plaintiffs in error that the trustee's petition failed to state a cause of action entitling him to recover a preference because it is not averred therein that at the time of the commencement of the action the claims of any creditors had been proved and allowed against the estate of the bankrupt. In our opinion it was not necessary for the trustee to allege and prove that claims of creditors had been filed and allowed against the estate of the bankrupt prior to the commencement of the suit. The trustee's petition alleged that at the time of the transfer in question the bankrupt was hopelessly insolvent and that his indebtedness amounted to over $24,000 and that the only unexempt property then owned by him was the stock of merchandise conveyed to plaintiffs in error, and we are of opinion that these allegations sufficiently charged that at the time of the transfer complained of the bankrupt was indebted to general creditors, who were not secured, and who were entitled to share in the preference recovered. We think the trustee's petition stated a good cause of action, for the recovery of a preference. Swartz v. Fourth Nat'l Bank (C. C. A. 8th Cir.), 8 A. B. R. 673, 117 Fed. 1; *Coder v. "(1) It is not necessary in such a case for the trustee to plead and prove that claims against the bankrupt have been filed and allowed; (2) it is necessary for him to plead and prove that the bankrupt is indebted to general creditors who may share in the preference recovered (3) the complaint sufficiently alleges that the bankrupt was indebted in an amount very much in excess of the claims secured by the preference so that it is sufficient in this regard; (4) the defendants below by objecting to the proof of indebtedness of the bankrupt on the ground that such proof was immaterial and obtaining a ruling sustaining this objection, estopped themselves from claiming that evidence of such indebtedness was requisite to sustain the trustee's cause of action, notwithstanding this ruling, sufficient evidence crept into the case to constitute substantial evidence of indebtedness of the bankrupt to general creditors not secured."

It has been held that the petition must allege an insufficiency of assets in the trustee's hands.⁸³ Where proof of insolvency at the time of the alleged preference is made at the trial, such proof is prima facie proof that insolvency existed at the time of the filing of the bankruptcy petition.⁸⁴

§ 1762. Each Element of Preference to Be Alleged and Proved.—Each element of the preference must be alleged and proved.⁸⁵

§ 1763. Insolvency at Time of Transfer.—Thus, the petition to recover the preference must allege that the bankrupt was, at the time, insolvent,⁸⁶ and an allegation that he was in failing circumstances and unable to meet his debts is insufficient on demurrer, such allegation not being the equivalent of insolvency.⁸⁷ But the pleader should not allege the amount of the indebtedness, nor the value of the debtor's assets.⁸⁸

§ 1763 2/10. Admissibility of Bankrupt's Books.—Books of the bankrupt are competent evidence on the question of his insolvency.⁹² Of course, their competency is not on the basis of their being admissions, but rather on their being contemporaneous memoranda.

§ 1763 3/10. Whether Sale by Receiver in State Court or by Trustee in Bankruptcy Competent.—Whether sales by a receiver in the state court or by the trustee in the bankruptcy court are evidence of the value of the assets, in a suit between the trustee and a preferred creditor, is discussed ante, in § 1358.

§ 1763 5/10. Return of Execution Unsatisfied, Whether Prima Facie Proof of Insolvency.—It has been held that the return of an execution unsatisfied in whole or in part is not even prima facie proof of insolvency.⁹³

§ 1764. Reasonable Cause of Belief.—It must allege that the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that enforcement of the transfer would effect a preference, and such fact must be alleged definitely and certainly.⁹⁴

Carey v. Donohue, 31 A. B. R. 210, 209 Fed. 328 (C. C. A. It is not necessary also to allege that the creditor had reasonable grounds to believe the debtor was insolvent; belief of insolvency is included within belief of preferential intent. Compare, ante, § 1404. Contra, Hicks v. Langhorst, 6 A. B. R. 178 (Com. Pleas Ohio).

But it should not allege why the creditor had such reasonable cause, nor the evidence to demonstrate it. Crooks v. People's Bk., 3 A. B. R. 244, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 335.

Obiter, Carey v. Donohue, 31 A. B. R. 210, 209 Fed. 328 (C. C. A. Ohio).

The test of sufficiency for submission to the jury is not to rest on assertions of lack of intent or belief but on inferences which may fairly be drawn from the facts in evidence. Obiter (creditor being exonerated), Hamilton Bank v. Balcomb, 24 A. B. R. 538, 177 Fed. 155 (C. C. A. Ills.).

However, on appeal from a decree in favor of the trustee, the failure of the petition to allege the existence of the reasonable cause for belief will only cause a reversal and remanding of the cause for the purpose of appropriate amendment and re-entry of the decree.⁹⁵

§ 1765. Effect of Transfer to Give Greater Percentage of Debt.—It must allege that the effect was to give the creditor, etc., a greater percentage of his claim than some other of the same class;⁹⁶ but it need not set forth facts showing why.⁹⁷ It need not, on the other hand, allege the legal conclusion if it does set forth the facts.⁹⁸

West v. Bank of Lahoma, 16 A. B. R. 733, 16 Okla. 508: "A petition by a trustee in bankruptcy against a creditor of the bankrupt to recover money alleged to constitute a preferential transfer, must, among other averments, show that, if the transfer is permitted to stand, the creditor will receive a greater percentage of its debt than other creditors of the same class, and, failing to show such state or facts, it is not error to sustain a demurrer to such petition."

§ 1766. Antecedent Debt.—It must also be alleged and proved that the transfer was to apply upon an antecedent debt.⁹⁹

§ 1767. Facts, Not Evidence, nor Legal Conclusions, to Be Pleaded.—The pleader is to state facts, not to demonstrate them nor allege the evidence of them.¹ And the legal conclusion that the transfer is voidable is not necessary when the facts pleaded show it to be voidable.²

§ 1768. Burden of Proof of Each Element on Trustee.—The burden of proof is on the trustee to prove each element of the preference.³

Tumlin v. Bryan, 21 A. B. R. 319, 165 Fed. 166 (C. C. A. He must prove that the bankrupts (1) while insolvent, (2) within four months of the bankruptcy, (3) made a transfer of the property, e. g., a payment of money, (4) and that the creditor receiving the payment was thereby enabled to obtain a greater percentage of his debts than other creditors of the same class; and

§ 1769. Demand Not Requisite.—No allegation of demand is necessary, and no demand need be proved;⁴ for the beginning of the action is sufficient demand, even if the action be in trover.⁵ Demand is unnecessary where it would be useless.⁶

§ 1770. Nor Tender Back.—The trustee need not tender back any of the preference actually already received.⁷

§ 1770⅛. On Surrender, Creditor Entitled to Prove Claim for Share of Dividends.—After the transfer has been set aside, the creditor is entitled to prove his claim for sharing in dividends.⁸

§ 1770¼. Or, Dividends May Be Offset.—And if the suit be in the bankruptcy court wherein the estate is being administered, the decree may provide for applying the dividends on the amount ordered surrendered, the preferential transferrer being entitled to his dividend, in any event.

Page v. Rogers, 211 U. S. 581, 21 A. B. R. 496: "Now that this litigation has come to an end, and the defendant has been compelled to surrender the preference which he received, he is entitled to prove his claim and to receive a dividend on it upon an equality with other creditors. Keppel v. Tiffin Sav. Bank, 197 U. S. 356, 13 Am. B. R. 552, 49 L. Ed. 790, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443. In view of the fact that this suit was brought in the bankruptcy court itself, and a final decree is to be entered by the judge of that court, it is entirely practicable to avoid the circuitous proceeding of compelling the defendant to pay into the bankruptcy court the full amount of the preference which he has received, and then to resort to the same court to obtain part of it back by way of dividend."

But if the suit be in another court it has been held that the preferred creditor may not offset but must surrender first and then prove his claim for dividends on the whole amount.⁹ However, even where the suit be thus in another court, it probably is the better rule that if the suit be in a court of equity the preferred creditor may still retain his prospective dividend, the court sometimes requiring the giving of a bond as a condition of such retention.¹⁰

§ 1770¹/₂. Procedure to Follow Procedure of Forum.—Whether the suit be instituted in the State or in the federal court, the procedure follows the usual course of procedure of the court where the action is pending.

Westall v. Avery, 22 A. B. R. 673, 171 Fed. 626 (C. C. A. N. Car.): “It is also well settled that a proceeding instituted by a bankrupt’s trustee to set aside fraudulent conveyances or illegal preferences is not a proceedings in bankruptcy but while ancillary to such proceedings and authorized by the Bankruptcy Act to be instituted in either the Federal District Court or in a State Court of competent jurisdiction, it must be governed, so far as pleading and practice are concerned, by the laws and rules of the court where it is instituted.”

§ 1770⁵/₈. Directing a Verdict.—Thus, the court, in some jurisdictions may direct a verdict on the question of insolvency.

Utah Ass’n v. Boyle Furniture Co., 31 A. B. R. 488, 39 Utah 518: “One of the principal reasons assigned in the petition for a rehearing why a rehearing should be granted was that we had erred in holding that there was not sufficient evidence of the bankrupt’s insolvency to require a submission of that question to the jury. * * * We have again carefully gone over the whole list of the property claimed by counsel and the valuation put upon it by them, and, without going into the details of setting forth the several items we are more firmly convinced than ever that under no possible view of the evidence could a jury of reasonable men have found that the bankrupt’s property, taken at a fair valuation at the time of the transfer was sufficient to pay his debts which were undisputed. * * * The District Court committed no error in determining as a question of law, that the bankrupt was insolvent at the time of the transfer.”

§ 1770³/₄. Interest.—The preferential transferee is chargeable with interest, although it is not clear as to the time from which the interest should begin, whether from the date of the transfer, the date of demand, or the date of notice.

Compare Ommen, Trustee, v. Talcott, 23 A. B. R. 572, 175 Fed. 261 (D. C. N. Y. partly reversed but on other grounds, S. C., 26 A. B. R. 689, 188 Fed. 401): “First as regards the question of interest. By December 19th, 1902, the defendant had received clear intimation that the receiver regarded his possession as wrongful, for he attempted by summary order to obtain possession. It is, of course, quite true, at least in theory, that a subsequent trustee might not agree with the receiver, but I am satisfied that the defendant took his chances in retaining possession after that time, and that no demand was necessary. From then he became a trustee ex maleficio, having seized from the estate property which he had no right to retain, and which he knew was being claimed. Interest must therefore be charged against him at least from the time when he sold the property, and I can see no reason why he should not pay interest at the legal rate. Were he a duly constituted trustee he would be obliged to pay only such interest as he in fact received or should have got, but I think it will not be contended that he has any such exemption from the time when his retention became wrongful. A question does arise as to interest between December 15th, 1902, and the date of sale of the property, which was all substantially completed by the end of June, 1903. As this suit was in the first instance to obtain the property itself and not an action of conversion, I do not think that interest should be charged against the defendant while the property remained in specie. While the contract authorized the sale, it certainly did not mean to authorize his possession either of the property or of the proceeds. I shall, therefore, charge him with interest at six per cent. from the date of the sale of each article and from the collection of each account."

Utah Ass'n v. Boyle Furniture Co., 31 A. B. R. 448, 39 Utah 518: "We are of the opinion that in view of the authorities interest should be allowed from the time it is shown that the transferees wrongfully held the property or money received by him, i. e., from the time a demand is made upon him to return the same, and, in case no formal demand is made, then from the time a suit is instituted to recover back the money or property, since the commencement of an action in itself constitutes a demand. This rule seems to be based upon the theory that before demand for the property or money is made the party receiving and holding the same, although it may constitute a preference, is, notwithstanding, not holding it wrongfully, and that he is not chargeable with interest until he does so."

§ 1770 $\frac{7}{8}$. Reimbursement for Expenses, etc.—It has been held that the preferential transferee may not be given compensation nor expenses for the care of the property after notice or demand by the trustee.

Ommen, Trustee, v. Talcott, 23 A. B. R. 572, 175 Fed. 261 (D. C. N. Y. partly reversed, but on other grounds, S. C., 26 A. B. R. 689, 188 Fed. 401): "As to the items of 'discharge,' prior to January 15th, they must be all disallowed in accordance with the well-settled rule that any services rendered, or disbursements made, by a trustee ex maleficio, are made upon his own account, and cannot be credited to him when he comes to account in a court of equity. There is nothing unjust in this. The defendant wrongfully seized the goods and at once began selling them, which he had no right to do, and which he knew he would be held liable for doing. In selling them he made certain disbursements, but they were not made at the request of the trustee or of receiver or of any other person. By all rules of equity they must be held to be purely voluntary, and he cannot credit himself with them."

SUBDIVISION "D."

RES ADJUDICATA IN ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST TRUSTEES.

§ 1771. Referee's Order of Allowance or Disallowance, Res Judicata.—The referee's order of allowance or disallowance of a claim is res

judicata in subsequent actions between the same creditor and the trustee.¹¹

Clendening v. Red River Valley Nat'l Bk., 11 A. B. R. 245 (Sup. Ct. N. Dak.): “* * * referees are judicial officers clothed with power to adjudicate in the first instance over the allowance or disallowance of claims presented against the bankrupt's estate, and their findings are entitled to the respect and credit given to officers acting judicially. * * * It is unnecessary to say that we have no supervisory or appellate jurisdiction over referees in bankruptcy or over the decisions of courts of bankruptcy.

“The question which the plaintiff seeks to have us determine has been judicially determined by a tribunal having jurisdiction, and is therefore binding upon us. Smith v. Walker, 77 Ga. 289, 3 S. E. 256. Whether the referee intended to decide these questions is not material. As we have seen, they were necessarily involved, and were in fact determined by his adjudication. Whether, his decision was right or wrong we need not discuss. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case to say that the question has been adjudicated by the order of allowance made by the referee, and that the same has not been reconsidered by him or reversed by the judge upon a petition for review. If the trustee was dissatisfied with the adjudication made by the referee, he had a speedy remedy in the bankruptcy court upon a petition for review, and also by appeal from the order of the bankruptcy court if adverse to him.”

And state courts are without power to review, revise or reverse a referee's order allowing a claim.¹²

In re Osborne's Sons, 24 A. B. R. 65, 177 Fed. 184 (C. C. A. N. Y.): “In it depositors in an insolvent national bank in the hands of the comptroller of the currency whose claims had been paid in full were held entitled to interest on the ground that when their claims were proved to the satisfaction of the comptroller they were to be treated as judgments. Mr. Justice Swayne said at page 438: ‘The fiftieth section of the National Banking Act, 13 Stat. 113, requires the comptroller of the currency to apply the moneys paid over to him by the receiver “on all such claims as may have been proved to his satisfaction, or adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction.” The act is silent as to interest upon the claims before or after proof or judgment. Can it be doubted that a judgment, if taken, would include interest down to the time of its rendition? Section 996 of the Revised Statutes, page 182, declares that all judgments in the courts of the United States shall bear the same rate of interest as judgments in the courts of the States respectively where they are rendered. Interest is allowed by the law of New York upon judgments from the time they are perfected. Rev. Code of N. Y. (Ed. 1859), Vol. III, page 637. If these claims had been put in judgment, whether in a court of the United States or in a State Court of that State, the result as to interest upon the judgment would have been the same. It was unnecessary to reduce them to judgment, because they were proved to the satisfaction of the comptroller. After they were so proved, they

Contra, Credit Men v. Furniture Co., 26 A. B. R. 867 (Utah), wherein the court erroneously speaks of an allowance by the “trustee.” The trustee is a party and does not make the order of “allowance.” It is the referee who, by § 1 of the Bankrupt Act, as “the court of bankruptcy,” makes the order of allowance, and it is res adjudicata. There is no such thing as an allowance by the trustee.

were of the same efficacy as judgments, and occupied the same legal ground. Hence, they are within the equity, if not the letter of these statutes, and bear interest as judgments would have done. Sedgw. on Constr., 311, 315.' We think that allowed claims in bankruptcy are as much entitled to be treated as judgments. Section 57 of the Bankruptcy Act provides that the proof of debts shall be in writing signed and sworn to by the creditor, stating the consideration and other particulars, and when this proof is filed in the court or before the referee the claim shall be allowed unless objected to. The subject is further regulated by General Order XXI and by forms prescribed by the Supreme Court."

So, likewise, are the United States District Courts unless by way of due appeal or on petition for review.

§ 1772. Also His Order Determining Validity and Priority of Liens.—The referee's order determining the validity and priority of a lien on the bankrupt's property is res judicata. Thus, a mortgagee of the bankrupt's real estate, to whom, after due hearing, has been awarded the amount of her lien from the proceeds of sale, is protected by the order of the referee, which established her right to the money, until the order is set aside by proceedings directly taken for that purpose.¹³

§ 1773. Referee Not to Impeach Own Order.—A referee will not be permitted to testify that he had not undertaken to pass upon the question of preference when he allowed the claim: it was necessarily involved in the allowance.¹⁴

But he may be permitted to testify that entries in his record book were not authorized by him.¹⁵

§ 1774. Adjudication as to Fraud on Discharge, Not Res Judicata in Suit by Trustee.—An adjudication as to the fraudulent character of a transfer, made on the discharge, is not res adjudicata in a suit by the trustee to set aside the alleged fraudulent conveyance.

Paxton v. Scott, 10 A. B. R. 80, 92 N. W. 611 (Neb.): "It is now claimed that the discharge operated as a bar to these proceedings, and that the whole question of fraud is res judicata, and that the State court had no jurisdiction to proceed further after that decision.

"We are not able to sustain this contention as to the effect of the discharge."

The question has not arisen, however, where the discharge was opposed by the trustee under favor of the Amendment of 1910 to Bankr. Act, § 14 (b). Yet it would seem that that fact would not be sufficient to make it res judicata.

§ 1774^{1/4}. Unsuccessful Opposition to Discharge for False Written Statement Not Res Judicata That Debt Not on False Pretenses.—An unsuccessful opposition to a discharge or composition on the ground of a false statement in writing to obtain credit is not res judicata in subsequent litigation that the same debt is not one founded upon false pretences and hence excepted from the operation of discharge.¹⁶

§ 1774½. Adjudication of Bankruptcy for Fraudulent Transfer Whether Res Adjudicata on Trustee's Suit.—It has been held, though in an obiter, that an adjudication of bankruptcy on the ground of a fraudulent transfer is not res adjudicata in a suit by the trustee to recover the property.¹⁷

§ 1775. Refusal of Summary Order to Surrender Assets Not Res Adjudicata in Plenary Action.—The refusal of a summary order is not necessarily res judicata in a plenary suit against the same person for the same property; present possession must be proved to obtain the summary order, but is not necessary to a judgment to recover the value of property unlawfully transferred; likewise, the degrees of proof are different.

Murray v. Joseph, 16 A. B. R. 716, 146 Fed. 260 (D. C. N. Y.): "Ordinarily, of course, if a man is sued in a lawsuit, and there is a judgment recovered in that case, he cannot sue again for the same thing. The first judgment determines the question. But this was a summary proceeding, based upon the theory that there was clear and conclusive proof that the parties proceeded against in this case had property in their possession. In those cases, where the proof is perfectly clear and substantially decisive, the courts of bankruptcy exercise a summary jurisdiction in such cases, and order that property be turned over to the trustee; and, if it is not obeyed, the parties under those circumstances are committed to jail for contempt for not obeying the order. But it is perfectly well-settled law that a case may be sufficiently doubtful to prevent the court of bankruptcy from making a summary order in one of those proceedings, although there may be sufficient evidence in the case, such that if it were submitted to a jury on a trial it would justify a verdict against the party, which the court would not feel authorized to set aside. Therefore, it is my opinion that any order made in a proceeding of this kind which does not find the party proceeded against liable to pay over is not a legal bar to a suit brought by a trustee where the evidence can be taken in full, and the jury can pass upon the question."

§ 1776. Whether Adjudication in Bankruptcy Res Adjudicata as to Insolvency When Act Committed, if Insolvency Essential Element.—It has been held that the adjudication in bankruptcy will be evidence of the bankrupt's insolvency at and since the act of bankruptcy was committed.¹⁸

Lazarus v. Egan, 30 A. B. R. 287, 206 Fed. 518 (D. C. Pa.): "While it is true as argued, the filing of a petition and adjudication in bankruptcy does not generally establish the insolvency of the bankrupt at any date prior to such filing, it is equally certain that in the case of an involuntary proceeding where insolvency is one of the issues, the bankrupt, by the adjudication, is conclusively proven to have been insolvent at the time of the commission of the act of bankruptcy. * * *. And it matters not that Egan was actually without notice of these proceedings. An adjudication being an adjudication in rem, all persons interested in the res are regarded as parties to the bankruptcy proceedings. Among such parties are not only the trustee but all creditors, including lienors."

At any rate, if insolvency was a necessary element in the proof of the act.

But the better reasoning seems to be that the doctrine of res judicata does not apply in such cases, for the reason that the subject matter in the two cases is not the same. In the first case the status of the debtor is the subject matter, and upon that point the adjudication in bankruptcy is binding upon the whole world, being an adjudication in a proceedings in rem; but in the latter case the subject matter is the property, and though it is also a proceedings in rem, the res is different and the interests of the parties different.¹⁹ It might well be that the debtor should be declared bankrupt and that the creditor might properly desire such result, therefore the creditor should not be bound simply because the desired and proper result were brought about by an allegation and proof involving a transaction in which he was a party. He should only be bound when the ultimate adjudication is one to which he is adverse.

§ 1776 $\frac{1}{4}$. Adjudication Not Binding on Those Not Entitled to Oppose.—Of course the adjudication is not binding on those not entitled to oppose. Thus, the adjudication of a partnership is not binding either as to the existence of a partnership or the ownership of alleged partnership assets as against a trustee in bankruptcy of one of the alleged partners.²⁰

§ 1776 $\frac{1}{2}$. General Adjudication, Where Several Acts Charged, Not Res Adjudicata.—Where the adjudication is general in its terms and several distinct acts are charged, it is not res adjudicata as to any act.²¹

§ 1777. At Any Rate, Adjudication on Ground of Preference Not Res Judicata on Issue of "Reasonable Cause for Belief."—At any rate, an adjudication on the ground of preference is not res judicata on the issue of the existence of a reasonable cause for belief.²²

§ 1777¹/₈. No Collateral Attack on Adjudication.—The adjudication of bankruptcy may not be attacked by an alleged preferential or fraudulent transferee in a suit by the trustee to set aside the transfer, so long as the record of adjudication on its face does not affirmatively show lack of jurisdiction.²³

Huttig Mfg. Co. v. Edwards, 20 A. B. R. 349, 160 Fed. 619 (C. C. A. Iowa): "The manufacturing company attacks the validity of the adjudication that D. Winter was a bankrupt upon the ground that one of the three petitioners in the involuntary proceeding was not a creditor, but since the attack was made in a proceeding by the trustee to annul a preference it is a collateral, not a direct, one. An adjudication of bankruptcy is entitled to the same verity and is no more to be impeached collaterally than other judgments or decrees of courts of competent jurisdiction. It cannot be assailed by the defendant in a suit by the trustee to recover or avoid a preference upon the ground that one of the petitioners was not in fact a creditor of the bankrupt. When the record shows jurisdiction the adjudication of bankruptcy is subject to impeachment only by a direct proceeding in a competent court. Michaels v. Post, 21 Wall. 398, 22 L. Ed. 520; Sloan v. Lewis, 22 Wall. 150, 22 L. Ed. 832."

§ 1777¹/₄. Nor on Regularity of Appointment.—Nor may the regularity of the receivers' or trustees' appointment be attacked in a proceeding by adverse claimants to recover possession of property.²⁴

§ 1777³/₈. Nor on Administrative Order.—Nor may the findings of an order surcharging the trustee be collaterally impeached.

Hebert v. Crawford, 228 U. S. 204, 30 A. B. R. 24: "The finding in the summary proceeding that Le Blane received possession as trustee was conclusive against him and was not subject to collateral attack by third persons. Noble v. Union Pac. Logging Co., 147 U. S. 173, 174."

§ 1777¹/₂. Bankruptcy Court's "Call" or "Assessment" or "Unpaid Stock Subscription."—The findings of the bankruptcy court, in exercising its jurisdiction to make "calls" or "assessments" upon "unpaid stock subscriptions" to bankrupt corporations are conclusive upon the stockholder in the subsequent plenary suit against him to enforce the same, upon the questions of the necessity and percentage of the "call" or "assessment," and incidentally upon the amounts of the corporate indebtedness and assets respectively, and, probably, if he has been duly notified, also upon the amounts paid in by other stockholders.²⁵

But, it would seem, on principle, that the effect of the "call" or "assessment" by the bankruptcy court would extend no further than to the matters mentioned, and no further than would that of the bankrupt corporation itself, had it made the call or assessment, since the trustee succeeds merely to the bankrupt in performing this function and the

§ 1778. Receivers and Trustees as Defendants in Plenary Suits.

—Receivers and trustees in bankruptcy may be sued elsewhere than in the bankruptcy proceedings.¹

§ 1779. May Be Made Party Where State Court Has Custody of Res.—Where another court has jurisdiction over the res, the parties therein may make the trustee or receiver a party defendant, to cut off his rights.²

Thus, they have been permitted to make him a party defendant to a suit for infringement of a patent.

Victor Talking Machine Co. v. Hawthorne, 23 A. B. R. 234, 173 Fed. 617 (D. C. Pa.): "The complainant now asks leave to file a supplemental bill to make the trustee a party to the suit, and the application is resisted, on the ground that the suit for infringement seeks redress for a tort, with which the bankrupt's estate has no concern, since a claim for damages founded upon a tort, unconnected with a contractual liability, cannot be proved against the assets and is not affected by the discharge. Re Boston, etc., Iron Works (C. C.), 23 Fed. 880; Re United Button Co. (D. C.), 15 Am. B. R. 390, 140 Fed. 495. It is therefore contended that the trustee should not be compelled to appear in such suit and spend the money of the estate in litigation, which may be prolonged and expensive, and can in no way benefit the creditors.

2. In re Smith, 9 A. B. R. 603, 121

It will be observed, however, that the present motion does not attempt to compel the trustee to make an active defense. It merely asks permission to make him a party, leaving him free to take such action thereafter as he may be advised, or as the bankruptcy court may direct. Certainly he is not bound to defend the suit, if the interest of the estate will not be affected by the litigation; but I can see no good reason for declining to make him a party of record, in order that he may be bound by the decree, so far as that result may properly follow. For example, part of the relief prayed for—the delivery of infringing apparatus to be destroyed—may apply to some of the bankrupt's property that has come into his hands; and in other respects, also, it is impossible to decide upon this motion whether or not the bill may injuriously affect the estate in his charge. In a given case it is readily conceivable that a decree for the complainant might seriously injure a valuable patent belonging to the bankrupt but not directly involved in the suit, and it might therefore be desirable to defend the action. This and like matters are for the trustee's consideration in the first instance, and he may then take whatever steps may seem most advantageous. The order that is now to be entered will only permit the complainant to make him a party. What else, if anything, he should be compelled or permitted to do, is a matter for future consideration by the proper court."

§ 1780. May Be Sued in Personam for Conversion or Trespass for Wrongful Seizure.—Also a receiver or trustee may be sued in the state court in an action in personam for a money judgment for converting property in his possession belonging to another.³

In re Gutman & Wenk, 8 A. B. R. 252, 114 Fed. 1009 (D. C. N. Y.): "The fact that the petitioner was a receiver of a court would not ordinarily afford him immunity for a tortious act."

officers of the bankruptcy court, where they go entirely beyond their duties as such officers and are guilty of conduct which is actionable in its character, particularly as against third persons."

Or for wrongfully detaining property belonging to another.⁵

Skilton v. Codington, 15 A. B. R. 810, 185 N. Y. 80: The court in this case held in substance that where a trustee in bankruptcy retains out of the proceeds of the sale of the bankrupt's property a certain sum for the benefit of any liens or claims that might be established against the property, the State Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine an action brought against such trustee for detaining the property covered by a chattel mortgage executed by the bankrupt and recover the amount due on a note which the mortgage was given to secure, if the bankruptcy court does not enjoin the prosecution of such action.

Thus, he may be sued in personam for damages for wrongfully detaining property from a landlord.

In re Hunter, 18 A. B. R. 477, 151 Fed. 904 (D. C. Pa.): "The landlord having, therefore, been entitled to the possession of his property on April 1st, and the trustee having refused to surrender, the latter became a trespasser and was liable in damages. The direct and immediate consequence of its refusal was that the new tenant threw up the lease, and, as the landlord was not able to find another tenant within the term, he lost the rent for three months. For this sum I think the trustee would be directly and personally liable to be sued."

But compare limitations of rule that such occupancy constitutes trespass, In re Rubel, 21 A. B. R. 566, 166 Fed. 131 (D. C. Wis.): "The claimant's attorneys cite the case of Hunter (D. C.), 18 Am. B. R. 477, 151 Fed. 904, and insist that it is applicable and controlling here. An examination of this case will show that the lease of the bankrupt had expired before the trustee went into possession, and therefore he was held by the court to be a trespasser. In the instant case the receiver and the trustee entered under the lease, and therefore could not be held to be trespassers. The notice to quit provided for by the Wisconsin statute which was served upon the receiver was ineffectual to change the status of the parties. The receiver is not invested with the title, but is a mere custodian, without discretion, and until the trustee was appointed on the 29th day of April there was no legal representative of the estate who was clothed with title or authority in regard to the same. It appears that the trustee occupied the property only two days. The sale was made, and confirmed by the court on the 30th day of April, at which time the trustee abandoned his possession. There was then no reason why the petitioner might not have entered and taken possession on the evening of the 30th day of April. Certainly greater expedition could not have been expected. The fact that the petitioner permitted the purchaser of the stock of goods to remain in the store until the 15th day of May is not to be charged against the trustee."

§ 1780¹/₂. Also for Debt Contracted as Receiver.—There is no reason to suppose that the receiver or trustee may not be sued in plenary actions in personam for debts contracted in carrying on the receivership.⁶

But in such cases it has been held that he may not be sued except in his capacity as receiver, unless he specially binds himself or unless he exceeds his authority.

In re Kalb & Berger Mfg. Co., 21 A. B. R. 393, 165 Fed. 895 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "While, ordinarily, a receiver acting within his powers is not personally liable upon his contracts, yet he may so contract as to bind himself; and if he acts beyond his powers he necessarily assumes individual responsibility. The action in the Municipal Court in so far as it was against the defendant personally could not be stayed by the District Court. The power conferred by the Bankruptcy Act to determine controversies with respect to the collection and distribution of the bankrupt estate, cannot be extended to confer jurisdiction to stay proceedings against officers in their individual capacities. It may be that in this case the receiver acted within the scope of his authority and was not personally liable. If so the Municipal Court will undoubtedly decide in his favor. * * * The order of the District Court staying the action in the Municipal Court in so far as it was brought against the receiver as such, presents a more difficult question, in view of the fact that leave does not appear to have been granted to bring such action."

It has been held that the receiver may be sued in the state court for rent of premises where he had made himself personally liable therefor.^{6a} But where it was agreed that the debt or expense incurred was to be paid out of the bankrupt estate, the receiver will not be held personally responsible therefor.⁷

It has been held that a holder of a receiver's certificate may not sue the receiver in an independent plenary action but must come into the bankruptcy court and apply for an order therein, to pay out of the funds.⁸

Such holders are chargeable with notice of the limitations imposed by the court's order.⁹

Obiter [summary jurisdiction actually exercised; fund ample to pay certificates in full as prior charge on assets], In re Burkhalter [Rogers v. People's Bank], 24 A. B. R. 553, 179 Fed. 403 (D. It was a promise to pay only from a fund in court in process of administration and subject only to the orders of the court which was administering it. The payment of the certificate in full was conditioned upon the sufficiency of the fund to answer all claims of equal priority. If insufficient to pay all, proportional payment only could be demanded. The court in whose control the fund was, was alone competent to determine the sufficiency of the fund and the proper proportional payment, if it was insufficient for payment in full. Referring to such certificates, the court, in the case of Turner v. Peoria & Springfield Railroad Company, 95 Ill. 134, 35 Am. Rep. 144, said: 'It usually appears on the face of such instruments by what authority they were issued, and for what specific purpose. Holders thereof will always be chargeable with notice of these facts. Considerations of the highest concern to all parties interested in the trust property make it imperative that the court that charges the fund, through its appointed officer, should have the most vigilant care that the property is not improvidently wasted. All persons dealing in such securities must know that payment can only be coerced by application to the court having the control of the trust property for an order upon its acting officer.'

"The respondent, if the money had not been paid to it by the receiver wrongfully and without authority, could have coerced payment only by petitioning the court having control of the fund to direct its receiver to make the payment. It had no right to demand a determination of its right to payment in a plenary suit. Its position is in no way improved by the wrongful payment to it. Hence the respondent cannot complain of the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to order it restored upon condition that petitioner shows that there was no existing indebtedness to the respondent when it was paid, and to determine for itself in a summary proceeding the issue as to the existence of such indebtedness, as it would have had exclusive jurisdiction to do if no wrongful payment had been made. This is what the Circuit Court of Appeals determined, since it directed the remanding of the cause with instructions 'that it be referred to the special master to restate the account between the bank and the receiver in conformity with these views;' and not that a plenary suit be instituted by the receiver against the bank to recover the amount so paid."

§ 1781. Such Suits Generally Not Enjoined by Bankruptcy Court.

—And such actions will not be restrained by the bankruptcy courts.¹⁰

In re Roberts, 22 A. B. R. 908, 169 Fed. 1022 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The State suit is brought against the receiver and his clerk personally. § 1782. But May Be Enjoined, if Equity Demands It.—Nevertheless, the bankruptcy court has power to prohibit the prosecution thereof if equity so demands.¹²

In re Gutman & Wenk, 8 A. B. R. 252, 114 Fed. 1009 (D. C. N. Y.): “But the statutes which permit such actions without leave of court, provide that they should be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which the receiver was appointed, so far as the same shall be necessary to the ends of justice.”

In re Schermerhorn, 16 A. B. R. 509, 145 Fed. 341 (C. C. A.): “After various proceedings before the referee the District Court made an order permitting the petitioner to sue the trustee in a State Court, but it was upon an ex parte application and showing and without notice to the trustee or his counsel of record. The District Court, upon being advised of the true situation as disclosed by the record, found that its order had been improvidently granted and it promptly vacated it, and enjoined the petitioner from proceeding further in the State Court. There can be no doubt of the power of the court to do this, nor that its power was well exercised.”

In re Mertens, 12 A. B. R. 706, 131 Fed. 507 (D. C. N. Y.): “Is not the bankruptcy court, in possession of the property, possessed of power and jurisdiction to try and determine this question? Or must it await the trial and determination of a suit for conversion against its officer in the State Court before proceeding to administer the trust and wind up the bankruptcy proceedings? It is conceded that in such a case as this the bankruptcy court may enjoin an action in replevin in the State Court against the receiver or trustee to recover the property. Why may it not enjoin an action in trespass or for conversion brought against the receiver or trustee in bankruptcy in the State Courts to recover the proceeds of a sale of the property or its value as damages for a conversion, based on the claim that the title was in the vendor? Does the one action interfere with the property or the proceedings in the court of bankruptcy any more or less than the other? If so, wherein?”

However, where the lower court had restrained a landlord from prosecuting a suit in personam against the trustee, sounding in tort, on the ground that it was but an indirect method of obtaining rent for use and occupation, claim for which the landlord had delayed presenting as part of the expenses of administration until almost all the funds of the estate had been paid out, the upper court reversed the ruling because the question as to whether the suit really was in tort was one for the state court to determine.¹³

And the bankruptcy court may revoke a leave if improvidently granted.¹⁴

But the receiver or trustee may only be sued in personam, or where the property is not in the custody of the bankruptcy court; and any suit against the receiver or trustee, instituted to recover property in his custody as such, will be restrained.¹⁵ receiver may be sued without leave of the bankruptcy court being first obtained.¹⁶

In re Kelley Dry Goods Co., 4 A. B. R. 528 (102 Fed. 747) (D. C. Wis.): "No leave to sue the receiver in such case is necessary under the recent legislation of Congress."

But under the Federal statutes¹⁷ he may be sued "as receiver" without leave only "in respect to some act or transaction of his in carrying on the business;" and if he be not carrying on the business or if the matter be not one occurring in the carrying on of the business, he may not be sued except on leave.

In re Kalb & Berger Mfg. Co., 21 A. B. R. 393, 165 Fed. 895 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Suits against receivers, as a general rule, cannot be brought in any other court than that of their appointment, without leave previously obtained from such court. An exception to this rule exists under certain conditions in case of Federal receivers. The statute (Act March 3, 1887, and August 13, 1888) provides in substance that a receiver appointed in a Federal court may be sued without leave of the court 'in respect to any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with' the property in his charge. It is held that this statute applies to receivers appointed in bankruptcy proceedings as well as other Federal receivers. In re Kanter and Cohen, 9 Am. B. R. 372, 121 Fed. 984; In re Smith, 9 Am. B. R. 603, 121 Fed. 1014; In re Kelley Dry Goods Co., 4 Am. B. R. 528, 102 Fed. 747. But such receivers cannot be sued without leave unless they are carrying on the business of the bankrupt estate, as they may be authorized to do by the bankruptcy court. In the present case, however, it does not appear that the receiver was authorized to carry on or was carrying on the business. In this transaction he merely arranged for the storage of certain machinery which had come into his possession as receiver. His act related to the care and preservation of the property but had no relation to any business carried on by him. In our opinion the contract of the receiver for the use of the premises was not an act or transaction in carrying on the business, within the meaning of the statute. The action against the receiver as such having been brought without leave of the court which appointed him—the District Court—was properly enjoined by that court. This having been done the District Court went forward and determined the terms of the contract between the parties and the amount due thereunder."

§ 1784. Need Not Be Sued in Official Capacity, but Merely as Individual.—The receiver or trustee, it appears, need not be sued in his official capacity, but merely as an individual,¹⁸ at least in cases where he has personally obligated himself or exceeded his authority.¹⁹

§ 1785. Execution against Receivers and Trustees.—Levy of execution upon a judgment obtained in such suit against the receiver or trustee doubtless may be made out of the receiver's or trustee's individual estate, the bankruptcy court determining whether reimbursement be proper out of the estate.

Compare, obiter, Treat v. Woodin, 14 A. B. R. 737, 138 Fed. 934 (C. C. Mass.): "How far the Court of Appeals would permit the action of trover to proceed, and upon what property it would permit a levy of execution, does not appear. To levy execution upon the individual estate of a trustee in bankruptcy in order to satisfy a judgment for damages arising from his compliance with an order for the sale of specific property made by a court of competent jurisdiction seems to bear hardly upon the trustee. Even the Court of Appeals, however, expressly refused to disturb the control of the court of bankruptcy over the bankrupt estate."

§ 1786. Orders by Bankruptcy Court to Pay Judgments Out of Funds of Estate.—The bankruptcy court may, by order, require the receiver or trustee to comply with the judgment or decree against him out of the funds of the estate, if there are any funds. But the bankruptcy court may not so order where there are no funds.

In re Howard, 12 A. B. R. 462, 130 Fed. 1004 (D. C. Calif.): "The judgment of the Circuit Court, in so far as it relates to costs, can only be enforced by execution or action. It cannot be enforced in this summary proceeding, as it is conceded that there are not now, and never have been any funds in the hands of the trustee belonging to the petitioner or to the estate of the bankrupt with which to satisfy the same. The motion that the trustee be directed to pay such costs is denied, without prejudice to the right of the petitioner to enforce judgment for the same by action or execution as he may be advised."

§ 1786½. Or May Order Indemnity Direct from Estate to Injured Party without Judgment.—Or the bankruptcy court may, where all the parties are before it, order such indemnity paid direct to the injured party without the necessity of a judgment against the trustee.

In re Hunter, 18 A. B. R. 477, 151 Fed. 904 (D. C. Pa.): "Ordinarily, no doubt, a claim for damages against a trustee should first be prosecuted to judgment, in order that he may have an opportunity to make defense against the charge of wrongdoing; but, as the present trustee is a party to this proceeding with a full opportunity to be heard, and has made no sufficient defense, and as all parties in interest are before the court, I feel justified in treating the case as if recovery had already been had against the trustee. "If, therefore, the bankrupt estate ought to indemnify the trustee, I see no reason why the indemnity should not be paid directly to the landlord."

§ 1787. Garnishees, etc., as Bankrupts—Trustee to Respond.—Where a garnishee goes into bankruptcy his trustee may be required to re spond.²⁰ But no judgment can be rendered on the garnishment that can be enforced against the trustee except in the bankruptcy court itself. And the garnishment proceedings will be stayed until the dividend sought to be subjected can be ascertained.²¹

§ 1788. Dissatisfied Litigants in Bankruptcy Proceedings Attempting to Obtain Indirect Review by Bringing Independent Suit against Trustee.—Dissatisfied litigants cannot obtain an indirect review of orders made in the proceedings in bankruptcy by instituting plenary actions against the trustee.

Thus, the United States District Court will not entertain an action to restrain the trustee from complying with an order to pay dividends.²²

§ 1788½. Nor May the Trustee Be Controlled in His Discretion, in the Administration of the Estate by Proceedings Brought in Another Court.—Nor may the trustee be controlled in his discretion in the administration of the estate, by proceedings brought in another court. Thus, the bankrupt will not be permitted to enjoin the trustee by a suit in equity in the State court, from carrying out a compromise of a controversy with the bankrupt's wife.²³

LIMITATIONS OF PLENARY ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST TRUSTEES.

Synopsis of Chapter.

§ 1789. Limitation of Plenary Actions by and against Trustees.

§ 1790. No Suit to Recover Property after Two Years from Closing of Estate.

§ 1791. Not Barred by Expiration of State Limitation after Bankruptcy and before End of Two Years.

§ 1792. Otherwise, State Limitations Prevail.

§ 1793. Nondiscovery of Fraud as Tolling Bar.

§ 1789. Limitation of Plenary Actions by and against Trustees.—The trustee may not bring action nor be sued subsequently to two years after the closing of the estate, but within that period state statutes of limitation are suspended, except as to causes of action barred thereby before the bankruptcy.

§ 1790. No Suit to Recover Property after Two Years from Closing of Estate.—The trustee may not institute legal proceedings subsequently to two years after the estate is closed.¹

§ 1791. Not Barred by Expiration of State Limitation after Bankruptcy and Before End of Two Years.—Suit may be commenced by the trustee upon any action that was not barred by limitation at the beginning of the bankruptcy, and may be so commenced at any time within the two years after the closing of the estate, notwithstanding the State statute of limitations may bar the action before the two years have expired.² In short, the Act creates a new statute of limitations, except as to actions already barred when the bankruptcy proceedings were instituted. It has been held that the statutes of limitation of the states do not apply to actions by trustees under § 60b of the Bankruptcy Act.

Query, if Estate Reopened after the Two Years, Is Bar of Statute of Limitations Tolled?—An estate once closed may be reopened after two years because it is not a "suit" within the meaning of the statute. In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 246 (D. C. Ky.).

The question then arises whether, on the estate being again closed, the statute of limitations is again tolled for a further period of two years. There appears to be no case decided on the point.

tract expressed or implied, as set forth in the Georgia Civil Code 1910, §§ 4362-68, does not apply to an action by a trustee in bankruptcy, under § 60b of the Bankruptcy Act, for goods received by the bankrupt in payment of a pre-existing debt less than four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.

"The Bankruptcy Act which conferred upon trustees in bankruptcy the right to institute actions of the character mentioned in the preceding note, also by § 11d, fixed a statute of limitations applicable to such conditions. The action was not barred.

"Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1867 the actions by or against an assignee in bankruptcy, touching any property transferred to or invested in such assignee, were required to be brought within two years from the time when the cause of action accrued for or against the assignee. This was applied as a statute of limitations. Freelander v. Holoman, 9 N. B. R. 331, Fed. Cas. No. 5081; Avery v. Cleary, 132 U. S. 604; Jenkins v. International Bank, 106 U. S. 571; Bailey v. Glover, 88 U. S. 342 [1867]: 'Congress has said to the assignee: You shall commence no suit two years after the cause of action has accrued to you, nor shall you be harassed by suits when the cause of action has accrued more than two years against you. Within that time the estate ought to be nearly settled up and your functions discharged, and we close the door to all litigation not commenced before it has elapsed.'

§ 1792. Otherwise, State Limitations Prevail.—Otherwise than as above described, the state statutes of limitation will prevail.³

§ 1793. Nondiscovery of Fraud as Tolling Bar.—Where the bar of the statute of limitations is tolled by the nondiscovery of the fraud, the pleader need not set forth the particulars of, nor reasons for, the nondiscovery.⁴

§ 1796. Possession of Res, Test of Summary Jurisdiction.—The determination of the questions, first, as to whether the property is tangible or merely a debt, and second, if existing in tangible form, as to who has possession or control of it, determines the forum to which the parties must resort to work out their rights and the manner of procedure, as to whether summary or plenary.

If the possession, actual or constructive, of the property is in the bankrupt, or in his agent, or in someone not claiming a beneficial interest in it, or is in the receiver, marshal or trustee in bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court has summary jurisdiction over it by orders made in the bankruptcy proceedings themselves, and may summarily order its surrender or delivery;¹ may bring all parties claiming interests in it into court; may determine all rights to it; if, on the other hand, some third party claiming some beneficial interest in the property has possession (except in certain instances where court officers are in possession), or if the property does not exist in tangible form, but is a mere debt owed by the third party, then such third party need not come into the bankruptcy pro-

Summary jurisdiction not precluded, in proper cases, by existence also of plenary jurisdiction. In re Holbrook Shoe & Leather Co., 21 A. B. R. 511, 165 Fed. 973 (D. C. Mont.).

Murphy v. Hoffman, 211 U. S. 562, 21 A. B. R. 487: "Before going further it is well to ascertain the principles of law which are applicable to the situation. The Bankrupt Act * * * as originally enacted, did not confer jurisdiction on the District Courts of the United States over suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy to assert title to property as assets of the bankrupt, or to set aside transfers made by the bankrupt in fraud of the creditors or by way of preference, unless by consent of the defendant. Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163, * * *; Frank v. Vollkommer, 205 U. S. 521, 17 Am. B. R. 806. * * * The act, however, preserves the jurisdiction, otherwise existing by statute, of the courts of the United States, though it is limited to courts where the bankrupt himself could have prosecuted the action. Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 Am. B. R. 656. * * * But, where the property in dispute is in the actual possession of the court of bankruptcy, there comes into play another principle, not peculiar to courts of bankruptcy, but applicable to all courts, Federal or State. Where a court of competent jurisdiction has taken property into its possession, through its officers, the property is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts. The court, having possession of the property, has an ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions respecting the title, possession, or control of the property. In the courts of the United States this ancillary jurisdiction may be exercised, though it is not authorized by any statute. The jurisdiction in such cases arises out of the possession of the property, and is exclusive of the jurisdiction of all other courts, although otherwise the controversy would be cognizable in them. Wabash R. Co. v. Adelbert College, 208 U. S. 38, 54. * * * Accordingly, where property was in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the appointment of a receiver, it was held that the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to determine the title to it as against an adverse claimant, and that the receiver had no right to deliver it to him without the order of the court. Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 Am. B. R. 45. * * * On the day the opinion in the Bardes case was announced the same justice delivered the opinion of the court in White v. Schloerb, 178 U. S. 542, 4 Am. B. R. 178, * * * a case in which the facts were essentially those of the case at bar. Certain persons, co-partners in trade, were adjudicated bankrupts and the case was sent to a referee in bankruptcy. They had a stock of goods in a store, the entrance to which was locked by the referee. Certain other persons claimed title to part of the stock of goods as obtained from them by a fraudulent purchase, which had been rescinded. After the adjudication, these persons brought an action of replevin of the goods against the bankrupt in a State court, which was executed. It was held that replevin would not lie in the State court, and that the District Court had jurisdiction by summary proceedings to compel the return of the property seized. The court said: 'The goods were then in the lawful possession of and custody of the referee in bankruptcy, and of the bankruptcy court, whose representative and substitute he was. Being thus in the custody of a court of the United States, they could not be taken out of that custody upon any process from a State court.' The last two cases cited proceed upon and establish the principle that when the court of bankruptcy, through the act of its officers, such as referees, receivers, or trustees, has taken possession of a res, as the property of a bankrupt, it has ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine the adverse claims of strangers to it, and that its possession cannot be disturbed by the process of another court. And see Skilton v. Codington, 15 Am. B. R. 810, 185 N. Y. 80, 85, 86, 113 Am. St. Rep. 885, 77 N. E. 790, and Frank v. Vollkommer, which, by implication, approve the same principle."

Babbitt v. Dutcher, 216 U. S. 102, 23 A. B. R. 519: "There are two classes of cases arising under the Act of 1898 and controlled by different principles. The first class is where there is a claim of adverse title to property of the bankrupt based upon a transfer antedating the bankruptcy. The other class is where there is no claim of adverse title based on any transfer prior to the bankruptcy, but where the property is in the physical possession of a third party or of an agent of the bankrupt, or of an officer of a bankrupt corporation, who refuses to deliver it to the trustee in bankruptcy. In the former class of cases a plenary suit must be brought, either at law or in equity, by the trustee, in which the adverse claim of title can be tried and adjudicated. In the latter class it is not necessary to bring a plenary suit, but the bankruptcy court may act summarily and may make an order in a summary proceeding for the delivery of the property to the trustee, without the formality of a formal litigation. The former class falls within the ruling in the case of Bardes v. Hawarden Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163, and in the case of Jaquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 Am. B. R. 525, which hold that such a suit can be brought only in a court which would have had jurisdiction of a suit by the bankrupt against the adverse claimant, except where the defendant consents to be sued elsewhere. In the latter class of cases a plenary suit is not necessary, but the case falls within the rule laid down in Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, and Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224, which held that the bankruptcy court could act summarily."

Bank v. Title & Trust Co., 198 U. S. 280, 14 A. B. R. 102 (reversing 11 A. B. R. 79): "The distinction between steps in bankruptcy proceedings proper and controversies arising out of the settlement of the estates of bankrupts is recognized in §§ 23, 24 and 25 of the present Act, and the provisions as to revision in matter of law and appeals were framed and must be construed in view of that distinction. Holden v. Stratton, 191 U. S. 115, 10 Am. B. R. 786; Denver First National Bank v. Klug, 186 U. S. 202, 8 Am. B. R. 12; Elliott v. Toepfner, 187 U. S. 327, 333, 334, 9 Am. B. R. 50.

"This distinction existed under the prior bankruptcy law, and the then decisions in respect of a proceeding in bankruptcy and an independent suit are applicable. It was settled that the bankruptcy court was without jurisdiction to determine adverse claims to property, not in the possession of the assignee in bankruptcy, by summary proceedings, whether absolute title or only a lien was asserted. Smith v. Mason, 14 Wall. 419; Marshall v. Knox, 16 Wall. 551; In re Bonesteel, 7 Blatch. 175, Mr. Justice Nelson; Knight v. Cheney, 14 Fed. Cas. 760, Mr. Justice Clifford; In re Ballow, 4 Ben. 135, Mr. Justice Blatchford, the district Judge; In re Marter, 16 Fed. Cas. 857, Mr. Justice Brown, then district judge.

"The present Act was plainly framed in recognition of the principle of these cases."

Hebert v. Crawford, 228 U. S. 204, 30 A. B. R. 24: "If the rice was then in their possession the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to administer it as assets of the estate, and to determine all claims to the property. * * * Whatever may have been the legal or equitable rights of the Beaumont Mills under their contracts with Moore & Bridgeman (the bankrupt) and under the bill of sale of June 15, 1906, it still appears that, first, Moore & Bridgeman (the bankrupt) and later LeBlanc, as trustee [in bankruptcy] engaged in gathering, threshing, hauling and delivering the rice. This physical possession, under the decision in Murphy v. Hofmann Co., 211 U. S. 562, 21 A. B. R. 487, gave the bankruptcy court control of the res, and authority to administer it along with all other property in their physical possession when their petition was filed. That petition operated as an attachment and brought the rice into the custody of the bankruptcy court."

Coder v. Arts, 213 U. S. 223, 22 A. B. R. 1: "The Bankruptcy Act, as originally passed, did not give the bankruptcy courts jurisdiction over plenary suits to recover the property alleged to belong to the trustee in bankruptcy, except with the consent of the defendant. This was the subject of full consideration and determination in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163. * * * Subsequent decisions of this court construed the act to give the bankruptcy courts jurisdiction over controversies concerning the property in possession of the bankruptcy courts."

Inferentially, Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 555, 14 A. B. R. 49: "We think the result of these cases is in view of the broad powers conferred in § 2 of the bankrupt act, authorizing the bankruptcy court to cause the estate of the bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto, and bring in and substitute additional parties when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy, that when the property has become subject to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court as that of the bankrupt, whether held by him or for him, jurisdiction exists to determine controversies in relation to the disposition of the same and the extent and character of liens thereon or rights therein."

In re McMahon, 17 A. B. R. 531, 147 Fed. 685 (C. C. A. Ohio): "The controlling fact in the matter of the jurisdiction of the bankrupt court is that the actual possession of the premises upon which Enos asserts an adverse lien was in Enos, the trustee in bankruptcy of Campbell, the bankrupt mortgagor. * * * Sec. 2 * * * confers jurisdiction 'to cause the estate of the bankrupt to be collected * * * and determine the controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided. This exception refers to § 23 [as to suits brought by trustees]. By the Amendment of February, 1903, this jurisdiction is extended. * * * But we are now dealing with the jurisdiction of the District Court which had possession through its trustee of the property of the bankrupt, against which the protesting petitioner asserts a mortgage lien. If the District Court, having possession of the res, did not have jurisdiction to hear and determine claims to or against the res, unless the claimant should consent, what court did? Could the petitioner go into the State court and there assert his lien, and then obtain a decree for its enforcement, and thus deprive the court of primary jurisdiction of the control and custody of the controverted property?"

"The possession of the res draws to the court jurisdiction of all questions in respect to title or liens, irrespective of citizenship.

"What is said in Bardes v. Hawarden Bank about the absence of intention of Congress to give under § 2, clauses 6 and 7, jurisdiction to the District Court to entertain independent actions and suits to determine the title to property or liens thereon, refers to property not held by the bankrupt or some one for him at the date of adjudication."

Odell v. Boyden, 17 A. B. R. 756, 150 Fed. 731 (C. C. A. Ohio): "* * * there exists no ground for entertaining jurisdiction to adjudicate his claim or lien unless we shall agree with the court below in holding that the 'membership' or 'seat' was an asset which passed to the trustee and was in custodia legis when the petition was filed."

Loeser v. Bank & Trust Co., 20 A. B. R. 845, 163 Fed. 212 (C. C. A. Ohio): "It involved the claim of the bank under a chattel mortgage to assets in the possession of the bankrupt's trustee. The bankrupt court, under the broad powers conferred by § 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, had the power to determine controversies relating to the estate of the bankrupt in its possession, whether the controversy related to the title or to liens thereon or rights therein. The property here involved had been surrendered by the bank to the trustee; the bank reserving its rights against the proceeds of sale. Having the actual possession, it mattered nothing whether the trustee instituted a proceeding to bring the bank in for the determination of the controversy, or whether the bank had intervened by petition to assert its rights."

In re Grassler v. Reichwald, 18 A. B. R. 694, 154 Fed. 478 (C. C. Calif.): "The only question, therefore, presented for our consideration on this petition is whether the proper remedy of the trustee to recover the money which was obtained by the petitioner was a plenary suit in court or a summary proceeding such as he adopted. If the property had been in the adverse possession of the petitioner before the bankrupts filed their petition to be adjudicated bankrupts there can be no doubt that a plenary suit would have been necessary. But assuming, as we may under the record, the facts to have been, as it is claimed by the respondent herein that they were, that certain property of the bankrupts was taken upon void attachment and that the money realized on the sale thereof was paid to the petitioner on a judgment entered in his favor by default against the bankrupts several weeks after they had filed their petition in the District Court to be adjudicated bankrupts, and that this was known to the petitioner, we think there can be no question that under the provisions of § 2 (7) and § 67f of the Bankruptcy Act, authorizing the referee to compel the surrender of funds to the trustee, the proceeding had before the referee in this case was permissible. Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 185, 5 Am. B. R. 523; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224; In re Breslauer (D. C.), 10 Am. B. R. 33, 121 Fed. 910; In re Goldberg (D. C.), 10 Am. B. R. 97, 121 Fed. 578. And, if the referee could lawfully make the order, it follows that the court below could deal with the petitioner as for contempt, and commit him to imprisonment for refusal to obey the order."

In re Epstein, 19 A. B. R. 89, 156 Fed. 42 (C. C. A. Colo.): "A court of bankruptcy, may by summary process, require those who assert title to, or an interest in, property which was rightfully come into its possession and control as part of the bankrupt's estate, to present their claims to that court, and, the notice being reasonable, may proceed to adjudicate the merits of such claims."

Johnston v. Spencer, 27 A. B. R. 805, 195 Fed. 215 (C. C. A. Colo.): "According to these controlling decisions the possession of property by the bankrupt at the time of the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy, is a necessary condition to jurisdiction in the District Court to determine the rights of third parties to it except when such jurisdiction is invoked by their consent. The possession may be in the bankrupt himself or by someone for him as his agent or bailee."

Mound Mines Co. v. Hawthorne, 23 A. B. R. 242, 173 Fed. 882 (C. C. A. Colo.): "The law is now settled that the interest of a third party in property claimed to belong to the bankrupt estate, which, at the time of the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy, is in the possession of such third person, claiming an interest therein, can only be determined by an original suit brought for that purpose. Where, however, property which is in the possession of a bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy proceedings, and passes as part of his estate into the possession of the trustee in bankruptcy, and a third party claims an interest therein, the referee may, by a summary proceeding, require such third party to appear in the bankruptcy court, present his claim, and the referee adjudicate the rights of the parties in respect thereof."

In re Baudouine, 3 A. B. R. 651, 191 Fed. 574 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Standing alone, the language of clause 7 would seem to be sufficiently comprehensive to authorize the determination by Courts of Bankruptcy of every controversy relating to the estates of bankrupts. * * * Nevertheless, it is capable of a narrower construction, and can be read as extending only to controversies about property which actually belongs to the bankrupt's estate, or which arise strictly in the bankruptcy proceeding, such as those in reference to the marshaling of assets, or the extent and priority of conflicting liens."

In re Kellogg, 10 A. B. R. 7, 121 Fed. 333 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming 7 A. B. R. 623): "It would seem that the controversies in relation to the bankrupt estate, which, by reason of the limitations referred to in the clause 'except as herein otherwise provided,' do not come within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts, are those where the trustee must bring an independent suit to assert title to money or property not in the possession or control of the trustee."

In re Andre, 13 A. B. R. 132 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "We conclude that it is only in cases in which the property of the bankrupt is in the possession of a party not an adverse claimant that the courts of bankruptcy have authority under these sections to interfere with it unless the adverse claimant chooses to consent, but that these courts have jurisdiction to entertain proceedings to ascertain whether there is an adverse claimant and that the mere refusal of a person in possession to surrender the property does not constitute him an adverse claimant."

Inferentially and obiter, In re Bacon, 20 A. B. R. 107, 159 Fed. 424 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The property in question was in the actual custody of the trustee, having been turned over to him by the bankrupt himself, when the claim of title was examined into. Having elected to go on with such examination without taking any steps to review the orders under which it was conducted, petitioner [the bankrupt's wife] cannot now be heard to question the jurisdiction. If consent were necessary to give jurisdiction, such consent will be inferred from the circumstances that she proceeded under the order of July 15, 1905, without seeking to review it. In disposing of the case on this ground, however, we are not to be understood as expressing the opinion that such consent was necessary. The situation of the case as presented, renders it unnecessary to decide that question, to which the briefs and arguments were mainly addressed."

In re Brooks, 1 A. B. R. 531, 91 Fed. 508 (D. C. Vt.): "In this case the court held in substance that the mortgagee of chattels has no right to foreclose a mortgage upon the chattels of a bankrupt unless he obtains permission of the Court of Bankruptcy in which the petition is filed, or unless some action is commenced to make such foreclosure in a State court and such court gets jurisdiction over such chattels, or unless the mortgagee or the officer making such sale gets exclusive possession of the chattels before the adjudication in bankruptcy."

In re Rose Shoe Mfg. Co., 21 A. B. R. 725, 168 Fed. 39 (C. C. N. Y.): "It is clear the returned merchandise came into the actual possession of the receiver as a part of the bankrupt's property. * * * And being in the custody of the receiver the merchandise was in the possession of the bankruptcy court which had the right when such possession was disturbed, to regain it by summary proceedings and to adjudicate with respect to all claims concerning the property."

In re Leeds Woolen Mills, 12 A. B. R. 136 (D. C. Tenn., reversed, on the facts, in Hinds v. Moore, 14 A. B. R. 1): "The facts pertinent to the element of jurisdiction are that at the time of the bankruptcy the goods in controversy were in the actual manual possession of the bankrupt corporation and passed from it into the manual possession of the referee as custodian, upon the surrender of these and all the other goods to him. In my judgment, the simple fact of this possession by the referee in bankruptcy is conclusive in favor of our jurisdiction. By that possession the goods were in custodia legis—whether rightfully or wrongfully, is another question. But that question may be rightfully decided by us. Whether it might also be rightfully decided by any other jurisdiction it is not necessary to determine. The bare possession by the court, through its officers, of the property, was sufficient to give us jurisdiction to determine to whom the goods properly belonged. The case belongs to the category of those controlled by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of White v. Schloerb, 178 U. S. 542, 4 Am. B. R. 178, and not to that of those controlled by the decision of that court in Bardes v. Hawarden Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163.”

In re Lemmon & Gale, 7 A. B. R. 291, 112 Fed. 296 (C. C. A. Tenn.): “This property was, consequently in the possession of the court when undertaken to be levied upon by the sheriff executing process issued upon the judgments rendered in the State court. In view of this situation the bankruptcy court undoubtedly had jurisdiction to determine the rights of others asserting a lien upon or interest in the property, and the property could not be taken from the control of the bankruptcy court by the process of the State court.

“The United States Court having lawful possession of the res, might retain it until it had disposed of the property.”

In re Lines, 13 A. B. R. 318, 133 Fed. 803 (D. C. Pa.): “It is undisputed that after the distress had been made, title to the goods, which was then in Mrs. Fannie Dryden, was transferred by her to her father, John M. Lines, the present bankrupt, and that he immediately filed a voluntary petition and was adjudged a bankrupt. The necessary effect of this was to put the property under the control of this court, and compel the landlord to seek redress here.”

In re Noel, 14 A. B. R. 720, 137 Fed. 694 (D. C. Md.): “I think the distinction between the controversies arising in bankruptcy which must be determined by plenary independent suits and those which may be heard on summary petition depends upon who has possession of the subject matter of the controversy. If the bankruptcy court has possession, then, as a rule, the matter may be heard upon petition and answer. If a stranger has possession, and is holding by adverse claim, then an independent plenary suit is in most cases proper. In this case, the property was in the possession of the bankrupt, and upon his adjudication his title and possession passed to the trustees. The possession of the trustees could not be disturbed by any form of adverse legal proceedings without the concurrent sanction of the court of bankruptcy. That court, having possession of the property, had jurisdiction, upon notice to those claiming to have liens and incumbrances upon it, to order the property to be sold by the trustees free of all incumbrances, if the court, in its discretion, should determine that such a sale was for the benefit of the unsecured creditors; and after such a sale, having in its control the fund arising from the sale, it would have jurisdiction to determine the conflicting claims of the parties whose liens had been displaced as to the property sold, and transferred to the fund in the court. Ray v. Norseworthy, 23 Wall. 128, 23 L. Ed. 116.”

Obiter, impliedly, In re Hadden-Rodee Co., 13 A. B. R. 605, 135 Fed. 886 (D. C. Wis.): “Questions of the power to entertain summary proceedings against adverse claimants of property have frequently arisen, and the doctrine is settled that such proceedings are authorized only when the property is in the possession of the court, or in cases wherein the statute so provides in express terms."

Plaut, Trustee, v. Gorham Mfg. Co., 20 A. B. R. 269, 159 Fed. 754 (D. C. N. Y.): "The complaint alleges that the receiver occupied the premises for the month of August, 1906, and that the defendant, the Gorham Mfg. Co. wrongfully dispossessed him in September, under a dispossess warrant issued by a magistrate without jurisdiction, and has since been in possession. I think that these allegations show that this court has jurisdiction. I understand the test to be whether the property is or has been in the possession of an officer of the bankruptcy court. If it is in such possession, claimants can be cited into the bankruptcy court to determine the validity of any claims or liens asserted against it. In re Rochford, 10 Am. B. R. 608, 124 Fed. 182; In re Kellogg, 10 Am. B. R. 7, 121 Fed. 333; In re Epstein, 19 Am. B. R. 89, 156 Fed. 42. If it has been in such possession and has been wrongfully withdrawn from such possession, suits may be brought in the bankruptcy court to recover it. Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 Am. B. R. 45. It is in the cases where property claimed to belong to the bankrupt is and always has been in the possession of another party that this court has no jurisdiction, as held in Bardes v. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163, unless the property has been fraudulently or preferentially transferred as provided for in the amendments of the Bankrupt Act in 1903."

Obiter, In re Walsh Bros., 21 A. B. R. 14, 163 Fed. 352 (D. C. Iowa): "* * * where the court has acquired possession in the course of such proceedings * * * the power inheres in the court of bankruptcy, as in every court exercising equitable jurisdiction to inquire and determine in a proper way the ownership of or right to the property in its custody, and award it accordingly, and this, though the property may have been wrongfully seized and brought into its custody." Quoted further at § 1652.

And it has been held that jurisdiction attaches to this end even though the property has been wrongfully seized and brought into custody.³

Even where the state court had taken possession of property, real estate, by its receiver, before bankruptcy, in a foreclosure suit, and where there was no claim made of a preferential transfer or any invalidity of liens for other causes, yet the state court receiver having voluntarily surrendered possession, the bankruptcy court was held, on indisputable grounds, to have complete jurisdiction to marshal liens and determine all rights of parties, even to the extent of enjoining the further prosecution of the foreclosure suit itself.

In re Dana, 21 A. B. R. 683, 167 Fed. 529 (C. C. A.): "The principal question arising on this petition to revise is whether a District Court of the United States, in which proceedings in bankruptcy are pending, and which is in the actual possession of certain real property conceded to belong to the bankrupt, has jurisdiction to determine the amount and the order of priority of liens thereon, and to liquidate such liens, to the end that the property may be sold free of incumbrances, and in aid thereof to enjoin the lienholders from prosecuting the foreclosure of their liens in a suit brought in a State court before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, but within four months thereof; and this, though the lienholders object to such jurisdiction, and it is not contended that their liens are preferential or fraudulent, or invalid for any other reason. Bearing in mind the property was the property of the bankrupt, the title to which had passed to the trustee in bankruptcy, and that it was in the actual possession of the District Court of the United States, we think an affirmative answer should be given upon the authority of In re Schermerhorn [quoted supra]; In re Epstein, 19 A. B. R. 89, et seq. * * * Indeed, it appears that before the injunction in question was awarded, the State court, which by its receiver had actual possession of the property, voluntarily surrendered it to the receiver appointed in the bankruptcy proceedings upon request being made."

3. Obiter, In re Walsh Bros., 21 A. B. R. 14, 163 Fed. 352 (D. C. Iowa), quoted at § 1796, citing Krippendorff v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276; obiter, In re Moody, 12 A. B. R. 724, 131 Fed. 525 (D. C. Iowa), quoted at § 1797.

SUMMARY JURISDICTION OF BANKRUPTCY COURT, IN GENERAL.

§ 1797. Jurisdiction Once Attaching, Complete for All Purposes.

were in the store of the bankrupts, and in their actual possession, and were claimed by them as their property. On the same date, that court referred the case to a referee in bankruptcy, and by his direction the entrance to the store was locked. The goods were then in the lawful possession and custody of the referee in bankruptcy, and of the bankruptcy court, whose representative and substitute he was. Being thus in the custody of a court of the United States, they could not be taken out of that custody upon any process from a State court. * * * 'After an adjudication in bankruptcy, an action in replevin in a State court cannot be commenced and maintained against the bankrupt to recover property in the possession of and claimed by the bankrupt at the time of that adjudication, and in the possession of a referee in bankruptcy at the time when the action of replevin is begun.' * * *

"Not going beyond what the decision of the case before us requires, we are of the opinion that the judge of the court of bankruptcy was authorized to compel persons, who had forcibly and unlawfully seized and taken out of the judicial custody of that court property which had lawfully come into its possession as part of the bankrupt's property, to restore that property to its custody; and therefore our answer to the first question must be: 'The District Court sitting in bankruptcy had jurisdiction by summary proceedings to compel the return of the property seized.'"

Murphy v. John Hofman Co., 211 U. S. 562, 21 A. B. R. 487: "When the court of bankruptcy, through the act of its officers, such as referees, receivers or trustees, has taken possession of a res, as the property of the bankrupt, it has ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine the adverse claims of strangers to it and its possession cannot be disturbed by the process of another court."

Compare, Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 A. B. R. 45: "This case holds, not that the action must be taken in the bankruptcy court, for that issue was not raised nor necessary to be determined, but rather that the bankruptcy court possessed jurisdiction. See the opinion of the court on page 51:

"We think the result of these cases is, in view of the broad powers conferred in § 2 of the Bankrupt Act, authorizing the bankruptcy court to cause the estate of the bankrupt to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto, and bring in and substitute additional parties when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy, that when the property has become subject to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court as that of the bankrupt, whether held by him or for him, jurisdiction exists to determine controversies in relation to the disposition of the same and the extent and character of liens thereon or rights therein."

In re Epstein, 19 A. B. R. 89, 156 Fed. 42 (C. C. A. Colo.): "The question of jurisdiction is not free from doubt but we are of opinion that the result of the cases is that a court of bankruptcy may by summary process require those who assert title to or an interest in, property which has rightfully come into its possession and control as part of the bankrupt's estate to present their claims to that court, and, the notice being reasonable, may proceed to adjudicate the merits of such claims."

In re Antigo Screen & Door Co., 10 A. B. R. 359, 123 Fed. 249 (C. C. A. Wis.): "We take it that any court, whether one of equity, common law, admiralty or bankruptcy, having in its treasury a fund touching which there is dispute, may, by virtue of its inherent powers, determine the right to the fund thus in its possession. Jurisdiction in that respect is an incident of every court. * * * A fund so possessed, is in custodia legis and right to it may only be asserted and determined in the court which possesses it."

In Rodgers, 11 A. B. R. 89, 125 Fed. 169 (C. C. A. Ills. reversed on facts sub nom. First Nat'l Bk. v. Chic Title & T. Co., 14 A. B. R. 102, 198 U. S. 280): "The court below properly ruled that it had jurisdiction of the subject matter. Its officers acquired possession of the property in dispute from the bankrupt. It is, indeed, claimed by the storage company that the writings and the facts embodied in the statement of the case show that it, and not the bankrupt, had possession prior to the bankruptcy; but the receiver had in fact acquired peaceable possession of the property, and subsequent proceedings in the bankruptcy court upon petition of the present objectors to the jurisdiction, by which the property was sold by the bank under stipulation that it should hold the fund subject to the order of the court, placed the property and its proceeds in custodia legis, and the court had the right to determine the ownership of the fund in its possession."

In re Schermerhorn, 16 A. B. R. 508, 145 Fed. 341 (C. C. A.): "Upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, followed by an adjudication, all property in the possession of the bankrupt of which he claims the ownership passes at once into the custody of the court of bankruptcy, and becomes subject to its jurisdiction to determine by plenary action or summary proceedings, as the nature of the case demands, all adverse or conflicting claims thereto whether of title or of lien, and that court may, by the process of injunction, protect its jurisdiction against interference. It may draw to itself the determination of all controversies over the property in its possession, and when it once lawfully attaches, its jurisdiction cannot be destroyed or impaired by the unauthorized surrender of possession of the property by the officers of the court or through a seizure thereof by any adverse claimant."

In re Kellogg, 10 A. B. R. 7, 121 Fed. 333 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming 7 A. B. R. 623, 113 Fed. 190): "The final question is whether the Supreme Court of the State of New York acquired jurisdiction of the property, to the exclusion of the United States District Court, by the filing of the summons, complaint, and notice of pendency of the foreclosure action, before the trustee was appointed; the bankruptcy court having previously acquired jurisdiction by the filing of the petition in bankruptcy and the appointment of a receiver, who had qualified and taken possession of the property prior to the commencement of said action and foreclosure * * * The court in the foreclosure suit had not attempted to take possession. The adjudication was equivalent to the commencement of an action and the filing of a lis pendens. It must be held that the bankruptcy court, upon such acquisition by the receiver of possession and undisputed legal title, had jurisdiction to determine the validity of the mortgage."

In re Rochford, 10 A. B. R. 615, 124 Fed. 182 (C. C. A. S. Dak.): "In the case in hand the court below lawfully acquired the possession of the mortgaged goods, and it lawfully converted them into money. The rightful custody of the property and its proceeds imposed upon that court the duty to distribute the latter to their true owners. This possession and this duty necessarily empowered it to call the petitioners by a notice or order to show cause to present their claims to the property or its proceeds to the court which held them within a reasonable time, or to be barred of any right to receive the property or the proceeds or any part of either."

Chauncey v. Dyke Bros., 9 A. B. R. 447, 119 Fed. 1, 3 (C. C. A. Ark.): "A court which has lawfully acquired the custody of property or money must of necessity dispose of the same according to law; and, when conflicting claims are preferred, it is not bound to require the claimants to litigate their claims in some other forum, and to adopt the judgment of that tribunal, although it may do so, but it is at liberty to dispose of such controversies according to its own ideas of right and justice. This is one of those incidental powers which may be exercised by any court of record in the absence of an express prohibition."

Turrentine v. Blackwood, 4 A. B. R. 338, 28 So. 95 (Sup. Ct. Ala.): "Conceding that the State and Federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction in certain instances over the bankrupt's property, another principle is universally acknowledged, 'that when two courts have concurrent jurisdiction, that which first takes cognizance of the case, has the right to retain it, to the exclusion of the other; that if a trust estate is being administered by a court of competent jurisdiction, or when property is in gremio legis of a court of rightful jurisdiction, no other court can interfere and wrest from it the possession and jurisdiction first obtained.'"

In re Drayton, 13 A. B. R. 602, 135 Fed. 883 (D. C. Wis.): "The property or proceeds in question in the present case is in the hands of the trustee, in custodia legis, and the Bankruptcy Court is necessarily vested with both power and duty to determine all rights therein, upon proper notice, as 'controversies in relation thereto.' * * *

"It would be anomalous indeed if the Act were interpreted to deprive the tribunal of such jurisdiction as a court of bankruptcy in possession of the res."

Carter v. Hobbs, 1 A. B. R. 215, 92 Fed. 594 (D. C. Ind.): "The decree operates in rem and from the moment of the adjudication of bankruptcy the bankrupt's estate is in custodia legis and under the jurisdiction of this court. It is fundamental that no court or individual can interfere with such custody and possession. The assertion of any right against, or to participate in, the res so in custodia legis, must be sought in the court in whose custody it is. An attempt to assert such right elsewhere would be regarded as a contempt.

"The adjudication proceeds in rem, and all persons interested in the res are regarded as parties to the bankruptcy proceeding. These parties include not only the bankrupt and trustee, but also all the creditors of the bankrupt."

In re Cobb, 3 A. B. R. 130, 96 Fed. 821 (D. C. Car., reversed, on other grounds, in Cobb v. Overman, 6 A. B. R. 324, 109 Fed. 65): "After an adjudication in bankruptcy, the bankrupt court takes jurisdiction of the estate and all matters pertaining thereto, and will administer the same to a final settlement. Parties having or claiming an interest in the bankrupt estate must submit them to the bankruptcy court. * * * The trustee is vested by law with the estate, and could, by a proper action, recover possession of the securities in possession of any one as collateral, subject to any valid lien such person might have on the proceeds of such securities."

In re Reynolds, 11 A. B. R. 758, 127 Fed. 760 (D. C. Mont.): "In virtue of the adjudication of bankruptcy, this court acquired jurisdiction over the res. The jurisdiction thus acquired was both complete and exclusive. Being prior to that of the State court, it was permanent. The State court was without jurisdiction in the premises, and any judgment it may have rendered as a result of the litigation between Strain and said trustee, it was and is powerless to enforce, and is not binding upon this court; and such judgment cannot affect the right and power of this court to assert its jurisdiction over the property in question, and proceed to a determination of the right to its possession. * * *

"An adjudication of bankruptcy operates in rem, and from the moment of the adjudication the bankrupt's estate is under the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, which will not permit any interference with its possession, even though it be by an officer of a State court acting under its process. Being a proceeding in rem, all parties interested in the res are regarded as parties thereto, including the bankrupt and trustee, as well as the creditors secured and unsecured. The adjudication vests in the trustee or temporary receiver the title of the bankrupt's property, and stays all seizures made within four months. An adjudication of bankruptcy has the force and effect of an attachment and an injunction. It is a caveat to all the world."

In re Brooks, 1 A. B. R. 531, 91 Fed. 508 (D. C. Vt.): In this case a chattel mortgagee sold chattels of the bankrupt through a constable who had levied on the same before the bankruptcy, but had left them locked up on the bankrupt's premises. The court said: "But the assets of the bankrupt are brought by the proceedings within the reach and control, and subject to the orders, of the court, and no one has any right to remove or meddle with them, but for their preservation, without leave of the court, except the trustee."

In re McCallum, 7 A. B. R. 596, 113 Fed. 393 (D. C. Penn.): "It seems to me, that the present application is the ordinary case of a claim against a fund in the hands of a court, and such claims the court in possession of the fund has the right to hear and determine. It is an incident to the power to distribute, and, except where this power is expressly so limited by competent authority that a claim to a share of the fund must be sent to some other court for determination, the court that has possession of the fund is the proper tribunal to decide all controversies concerning its ownership."

Keegan v. King, 3 A. B. R. 79, 96 Fed. 758 (D. C. Ind.): "After this court has taken actual possession of property, through its receiver and trustee, as the property of the bankrupt, and has retained the actual and continuous possession of the same from a time long anterior to the commencement of the suit in the State court, is it competent for parties who claim to be the owners of the property so in the actual custody and possession of this court to maintain a suit in the State court for the purpose of setting the title and enjoining the officer of this court from the proceeding to the disposition of property so in the actual possession of this court? The statement of the question would seem to carry its own answer. This court, being in the actual possession of the property in controversy, has the exclusive right to determine all conflicting claims as to the title and right of possession of the property so in its custody. * * * From the time such property, by the adjudication of bankruptcy, comes into the custody of the Bankruptcy Court, it is in custodia legis; and that court will not permit any person, even though he be an officer of a State court, acting under its process, to interfere with the custody or possession by the Bankruptcy Court or its officers of the property thus in its custody."

Inferentially, In re Moody, 12 A. B. R. 724, 131 Fed. 525 (D. C. Iowa): "It is a familiar principle of equity jurisprudence that property in the custody of a court of equity is always held by it in trust for those to whom it rightly belongs; and the jurisdiction to inquire into and determine to whom it so belongs, and to that end to require all claimants thereto to present their claims within a stated time, or be barred of any interest in or right to the property, is inherent in every court in equity. In re Rochford (C. C.), 10 Am. B. R. 608, 124 Fed. 187, above. And this though the property may have been wrongfully seized, and so brought into the custody of the court."

Crosby v. Spear, 11 A. B. R. 613, 98 Me. 542: "When a court, State or Federal, has once taken into its jurisdiction a specific thing, no court, except one having a supervisory control or superior jurisdiction in the premises has a right to interfere with and change that possession."

In re Porterfield, 15 A. B. R. 18, 138 Fed. 192 (D. C. W. Va., reversed sub. nom. Moore v. Green, 16 A. B. R. 607, 145 Fed. 480, C. C. A., on question as to whether State laws regarding priorities on setting aside of transfers should control in bankruptcy): "The jurisdiction of the bankrupt court is exclusive, at least when fully and rightfully obtained over the property itself, as held in such cases as In re Watts (10 A. B. R. 113, 190 U. S. 1); and all State laws for the administration of insolvent estates, and all actions and proceedings under such laws, under such circumstances, are suspended."

In re McBride & Co., 12 A. B. R. 83, 132 Fed. 285 (Ref. N. Y.): "The jurisdiction conferred on courts of bankruptcy of § 2, subdivision 7, of the Act over bankrupt estates, 'to determine all controversies in relation thereto,' is applicable to proceedings of this nature, where the property is actually in the possession of the court or its officers, and is subject to distribution under its directions."

In re Mertens, 12 A. B. R. 698, 131 Fed. 972 (D. C. N. Y.): "When property sold to the bankrupt prior to proceedings in bankruptcy is found in his possession, mingled with his stock in trade or other property, it is presumably his, and when the bankruptcy court has taken possession of it and assumed control through its duly appointed receiver before a rescission of the sale, the vendor who assumes thereafter to rescind the sale on the ground of fraud practiced by the vendee (now the bankrupt), and who seeks to recover the property, or its proceeds, or damages from such officer of the court who has held and sold it pursuant to the order of the court, should be compelled to come into the court having the possession and control of the property, and try the question of title thereto there, unless that court is without jurisdiction to try the question, or the law of the United States has expressly placed concurrent jurisdiction elsewhere. If the court should find that the sale was procured by fraud, then the rescission would be valid, and the title would be in the vendor, and he would be entitled to the property, or its value, from the estate of the bankrupt, and this court would so award; but should the court find that such sale was not procured by fraud, then the rescission would be of no avail, and the title would be in the trustee in bankruptcy when appointed."

In re Sentence & Green Co., 9 A. B. R. 649, 120 Fed. 436 (D. C. N. Y.): "As the property has been taken by the court, and is now subject to its control and direction, it has, upon the alleged lienor's application, power to determine the question of the mortgage lien, notwithstanding the objection of the trustee."

In re Lines, 13 A. B. R. 319, 133 Fed. 803 (D. C. Pa.): "He immediately filed a voluntary petition and was adjudged a bankrupt. The necessary effect of this was to put the property under the control of this court and compel the landlord to seek redress here."

In re Pittelkow, 1 A. B. R. 473, 92 Fed. 901 (D. C. Wis.): "Upon the general question of jurisdiction, I am of opinion that the District Court is vested with exclusive jurisdiction over the property of the bankrupt, and with sufficient equity powers to have all claims by mortgagees brought in and administered; that sales may be authorized, under proper circumstances, free and clear from the mortgages, or other liens, by preserving and transferring the claims to the fund thus provided; and that the commencement of foreclosure proceedings can be restrained to that end."

But in some cases it has been held that if it once determines the right of possession to be in an adverse claimant, the bankruptcy court is without jurisdiction to order distribution, and may only order surrender to such claimant.⁵ And the bankruptcy court is to determine whether its jurisdiction exists.⁶

of such property to settle questions of title to fixtures.¹¹

Although, probably an independent suit for damages in personam against the trustee might be maintained, for the wrongful detention after bankruptcy and election of trustee.¹²

But in one case such independent suit, though alleged to be sounding in tort, was restrained because the landlord had waited until almost the entire estate was distributed without presenting his claim for use and occupation and was using this indirect means to get his rent.¹³ Nor will levy of distraint be permitted.¹⁴

In re Bishop, 18 A. B. R. 635, 153 Fed. 304 (D. C. S. Car.): "While a voluntary proceeding in bankruptcy is in effect equivalent in some respects to an assignment for the benefit of creditors, there is this essential difference—that inasmuch as the adjudication of bankruptcy is a judicial act, and thereby the property is taken in custodia legis, the landlord cannot distraint upon such property. It would be a contempt of the court for any constable or any other agent of the landlord to interfere with the possession of the court. If such a levy was attempted, the landlord would gain nothing by it."

§ 1800. Property Taken Out of Custody, etc., after Bankruptcy, Summarily Ordered Returned.—And property taken out of the custody of the bankruptcy court, or the possession of which was acquired after bankruptcy by persons not bona fide purchasers at judicial sale, may be ordered returned and even summarily ordered returned.¹⁵

Instance, In re Corbett, 5 A. B. R. 224, 104 Fed. 872 (D. C. Wis.), which was the case of a bankrupt prepaying his attorney, after the filing of an involuntary petition, by designating part of his stock as payment, but where the attorney failed to remove the same until after the adjudication, the court holding that the attorney may be ordered to return the same to the custody of the bankruptcy court.

Instance, In re Brooks, 1 A. B. R. 531, 91 Fed. 505 (D. C. Vt.), which was where a chattel mortgagee, by a constable, locked up goods on the mortgagor's premises; thereafter the mortgagor went into bankruptcy; then the mortgagee sold out under his mortgage; held, the bankruptcy court may order the return summarily.

Instance, replevin by third person from sheriff holding under attachment that was nullified by the bankruptcy, where sheriff notified by referee, In re Walsh Bros., 20 A. B. R. 472, 159 Fed. 560, 163 Fed. 352 (D. C. Iowa), quoted at § 1488½; instance, sheriff surrendering attached property to a third party claimant, after oral notice of bankruptcy and of restraining order and receivership, In re Lufty, 19 A. B. R. 614, 156 Fed. 873 (D. C. N. Y.).

Babbitt, Trustee, v. Dutcher, 216 U. S. 102, 23 A. B. R. 519: "It was not stated in the opinion whether the assignment was prior or subsequent to the proceedings in bankruptcy. If prior thereto, then neither the court where the bankruptcy proceedings were pending nor any other court could grant a summary order disposing of the title of the adverse claimant claiming title to the policy by assignment. That could only be determined in a plenary suit, and would fall within the rule in the Bardes and Jaquith cases. But if the assignment was subsequent to the bankruptcy proceedings, then it would be a nullity and would be disregarded by the bankruptcy court and possession could be given to the trustee by a summary order, as in the Bryan and Mueller cases."

And, it would seem under the doctrine of Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman that property transferred by or taken out of the hands of the bankrupt after the filing of the bankruptcy would be property thus taken out of the custody of the bankruptcy court equally as much as if taken out of the possession of a marshal or receiver.¹⁶

Thus, subsequent to adjudication, the concealment or the removal by a bankrupt, in collusion with another, of property which was in the bankrupt's possession at the time of adjudication, is an interference with the custody of the bankruptcy court and summary jurisdiction exists over the parties thereto.

Clay v. Waters, 24 A. B. R. 298, 178 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Mo.): "But the property here in controversy was in the possession of the bankrupt when the petition was filed and when the adjudication was made and it then passed within the jurisdiction of the District Court below. The District Court sitting in bankruptcy has jurisdiction to determine by summary proceedings, after a reasonable notice to claimants to present their claims to it, controversies between the trustee and adverse claimants over liens upon and the title and possession of (1) property in the possession of the bankrupt when the petition in bankruptcy is filed, (2) property held by third parties for him, (3) property lawfully seized by the marshal as the bankrupt's under clause 3 of section 2 of the Bankruptcy Law, and (4) property claimed by the trustee which has been lawfully reduced to actual possession by the officers of the court." This case quoted further at § 2331½.

In re Landis, 18 A. B. R. 483, 151 Fed. 896 (D. C. Pa.): "I regret to differ from the learned referee, but I am constrained to do so on two grounds: The first is that the horses were in the actual custody of the District Court, acting by its receiver, and that Cleaver's conduct in taking them away by force was wholly without warrant. This wrongful removal might have been summarily redressed, and the order asked for by the referee might have been granted for this reason alone."

And a state court's officer, who replevies after he has orally been notified of the appointment of a receiver, is guilty of contempt.¹⁷

Thus, where, after an involuntary petition was filed but before a receiver could qualify, the bankrupt secured an order dismissing the receiver and returning the property in his hands to the bankrupt, which forthwith made a settlement with most of its creditors and paid over to them money, but the bankruptcy petition was not dismissed, and subsequently other creditors intervened and procured adjudication of bankruptcy, it was held that the referee had summary jurisdiction to order the money returned to the trustee.

Knapp & Spencer v. Drew, 20 A. B. R. 355, 160 Fed. 413 (C. C. A.): "According to the pleadings and the proof the proceeding was one to secure a redelivery to the court of property formerly in its custody, and which it then had a right and duty to administer. The appellant in taking the money from the bankrupt after proceedings in bankruptcy had been instituted against him violated the spirit and purpose of the Bankruptcy Act by attempting to prevent the administration of the estate by the proper court after it had taken jurisdiction over it and had already taken the money in question into actual possession through its receiver. Not only so, but the officers of appellant in doing what they did, if the same was knowingly and fraudulently done, committed an offense denounced by § 29b, subd. 4, Bankruptcy Act * * * which reads: 'A person shall be punished by imprisonment for a period not to exceed two years upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently * * * received any material amount of property from a bankrupt after the filing of a petition, with intent to defeat this act.' Appellant clearly had no such adverse claim or right to the money as exonerated it from liability to summary proceedings for its restoration to the estate from which it had been improperly taken."

Where, however, restoration in kind has become impossible because of the commingling of property, the defendant may be ordered to pay the actual value in lieu thereof.¹⁸

§ 1801. Even Property Voluntarily Surrendered by Bankruptcy Receiver or Trustee, Still within Summary Jurisdiction.—Even property voluntarily surrendered to adverse claimants by the bankruptcy receiver without order of court, may be recovered.¹⁹

Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 A. B. R. 51: "It is insisted that in the present case the property was voluntarily turned over by the receiver, and thereby the jurisdiction of the District Court, upon the ground herein stated, is defeated, as the property is no longer in the possession or subject to the control of the court. But the receiver had no power or authority under the allegations of this bill to turn over the property. He was appointed a temporary custodian, and it was his duty to hold possession of the property until the termination of the proceedings or the appointment of a trustee for the bankrupt. The circumstances alleged in this bill tend to show that the transfer of this property was collusive, and certainly if the allegations be true, it was made without authority of the court. The court had possession of the property and jurisdiction to hear and determine the interests of those claiming a lien therein or ownership thereof. We do not think this jurisdiction can be ousted by a surrender of the property by the receiver, without authority of the court. Whether the rights of the claimants to the property could be litigated by summary proceedings, we need not determine."

In re Rose Shoe Mfg. Co., 21 A. B. R. 725, 168 Fed. 39 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Although the referee has found that the bank took the merchandise from the possession of the receiver without his knowledge or consent, yet if it be assumed that the receiver turned it over, still the bankruptcy court was not deprived of jurisdiction. The receiver had no authority to turn over the property."

And if the property has been sold, the proceeds may be summarily ordered surrendered.

In re Rose Shoe Mfg. Co., 21 A. B. R. 725, 168 Fed. 39 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Nor does the fact that the bank sold the shoes change the situation. The proceeds stood in their place. The court had power to direct the turning over of such proceeds to the trustee. In Trust Nat. Bank v. Chic. Title & Trust Co., 14 A. B. R. 102, 198 U. S. 280, the Supreme Court said: 'The sale in the circumstances did not change the situation. The proceeds stood in the place of the property and the order returning the proceeds was equivalent to an order returning the property.'"

But where a receiver has, with the apparent assent of the bankruptcy court, vacated premises claimed by the landlord, and the landlord has made peaceable entry thereon, the trustee cannot by summary proceedings oust the landlord and retake possession.

In re Rothschild, 18 A. B. R. 682, 154 Fed. 194 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The argument here has been widely extended, involving a discussion as to the general powers and limitations of courts of bankruptcy, when proceedings affecting rights of the bankrupt have been begun in a State court before the filing of the petition. It is unnecessary to enter upon any such discussion, since we are clearly of the opinion that after the representative of the bankrupt's estate (the receiver) has, with the apparent assent of the bankruptcy court, vacated premises of which a third party is claiming possession, and such third person has thereupon made peaceable entry thereon, a subsequently appointed representative of the estate (the trustee) cannot oust the third party and retake possession thereof by any such summary proceeding as this, either in a bankruptcy court or in any other court of whose procedure we have any knowledge."

No distinction seems to be made between the surrender by the receiver and by the trustee, although the trustee has title and power to alienate title.²⁰ out of the assets of the bankrupt estate may be summarily recovered;²¹ thus, as to preferences.²²

§ 1803. Whether Recovery Be Plenary or Summary.—But it is a question whether such recovery may be by summary order or requires plenary action.²³ Some courts have held that such property cannot be summarily recovered,²⁴ and that its value may not be summarily ordered paid.²⁵

The better rule would seem to be that summary jurisdiction exists, if the right itself exists.²⁶

In re Leigh, 31 A. B. R. 379, 208 Fed. 486 (D. C. Ills.): "It is urged that the referee was without jurisdiction to direct the repayment, because the beam company was an adverse claimant, so that a plenary suit against it to recover the money was necessary. Since Leigh paid the execution thirteen days after the filing of the bankruptcy petition, it is clear that a summary proceeding was proper."

§ 1804. Purchasers at Sales by Trustees or Receivers Subject to Summary Jurisdiction.—Purchasers at judicial sales by trustees and receivers are subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.²⁷

In re Jungmann, 26 A. B. R. 401, 186 Fed. 302 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "By voluntarily becoming a purchaser of property sold under order of the court, he submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and when such purchaser refuses without cause to carry out his contract he may be compelled to do so by rule or attachment issuing out of the court under whose decree the sale is had."

Mason v. Wolkowich, 17 A. B. R. 714, 150 Fed. 699 (C. C. A. Mass.): "Aside from the power of the District Court with regard to the assets of bankrupts, which is especially given it by the statutes, it has all the authority which any court exercising equitable jurisdiction has to protect its receivers and the contracts made by them. Wherever a receiver, by direction of the court appointing him, makes a sale of assets in his possession, the parties concerned in the sale are bound to recognize him as an officer of the court; and consequently the court appointing the receiver, not only has power to enforce in a summary manner the completion of the contract of sale, but the parties involved are deemed to have consented to such a proceeding."

§ 1804½. Holders of Receivers' Certificates.—It has been held that holders of receivers' certificates may not sue the receiver thereon in independent plenary action but must come into the bankruptcy court and there apply for an order upon its officer in charge of the fund.²⁸

§ 1805. Obstructive Suits Brought after Bankruptcy Court Acquires Custody.—Obstructive suits brought after the bankruptcy court has obtained custody of the property involved, which interfere with the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over third parties, will be disregarded if brought in the same federal court, or be enjoined if brought in the state court.²⁹ Thus, the state court will not be permitted to restrain the trustee in bankruptcy, at the suit of the bankrupt, from carrying out a proposed compromise of a controversy with the bankrupt's wife.³⁰

§ 1806. Thus, Foreclosure Suits, Where Bankruptcy Court Already Has Custody.—Thus, foreclosure suits brought in the state courts, although instituted before the appointment and qualification of a trustee, are ineffectual to confer jurisdiction on the state courts where, previously, actual possession had been taken of the property by the receiver in bankruptcy.³¹

trict Court to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent.

But compare, Crosby v. Miller, 16 A. B. R. 805, 25 R. I. 172 (Ct. App. D. C.), wherein the lower court was reversed for dismissing a bill filed, after the election of a trustee, to declare an equitable trust upon property belonging to the bankrupt.

And compare apparently erroneous application of this principle in Cruchet v. Red Rover Mining Co., 18 A. B. R. 814, 155 Fed. 486 (C. C. Mass.), quoted at § 399, the court evidently overlooking the fact that, before adjudication, the remedies of creditors are unaffected by the mere pendency of an involuntary petition. As to property not in custodia legis, see ante, § 399; also, that decisions under the law of 1867 would not be quite in point, since under that act the title of the assignee in bankruptcy revested to the date of the filing of the petition, not as under the present act, merely to the date of the adjudication, see § 1117.

closure had been already started before the bankruptcy.³² But such could not be the rule, of course, if the receiver in the foreclosure proceedings had not surrendered possession to the bankruptcy court.³³

However, the rule properly goes no further than to prevent the ousting of the bankruptcy court from its possession of the property; for, inasmuch as the bankruptcy court has not itself jurisdiction to "foreclose" a mortgagor's equity of redemption (see post, § 1972), but may only sell free and clear of liens, obviously, where formal foreclosure is desired, the mortgagee must be permitted to maintain suit therefor in the state court, even though the property itself remain in the custody of the bankruptcy court.

In re Victor Color & Varnish Co., 23 A. B. R. 177, 175 Fed. 1023 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "We are clearly of the opinion that the holder of the chattel mortgage was entitled to have his day in court, in a suit to foreclose it, and that so much of the order as refused him leave to begin such a suit, on the ground that the property was in the hands of a receiver in bankruptcy, must be reversed. It was entirely proper, however, for the bankruptcy court to refuse to give petitioner immediate possession of the property; it should remain in the custody of the receiver till the suit is determined, although, of course, if all parties agree, it may be sold and the proceeds held by the receiver. Order modified."

§ 1806¼. Attempts to Control Bankruptcy Administration by Injunctions, etc., in Other Suits.—Attempts to control the bankruptcy court in its disposition of assets, allowance of claims, etc., by injunctions or other orders in other suits will not be permitted. Thus, where the defendant in a pending patent infringement suit becomes bankrupt, the court in which the infringement suit is pending will leave all questions as to the priority of claims against the bankrupt and of the payment of moneys from its estate, to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, which is exclusive; nor will the bankruptcy receiver or trustee be compelled to render any active assistance to the complainant in the infringement suit other than to produce the bankrupt's books, under subpoena.

Graphophone Co. v. Leeds and Catlin Co., 23 A. B. R. 337, 174 Fed. 158 (U. S. C. N. Y.): "It is not for this court to say what moneys the receiver shall or shall not pay out. All questions as to priority of claims and as to payment of moneys in the custody of the District Court should be submitted to that court for determination. If the claim be one not provable in bankruptcy presumably that court will make no provision for its payment. If it be a provable claim it is equally presumable that whatever funds there may be in the hands of receiver, over and above the expenses of administering the estate, will be retained, until all provable claims are liquidated and all questions of priority (if any arise) are determined. The whole matter is exclusively in the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. The receiver owes no active duty to complainant to expend the money of the estate in an effort to ascertain the facts asked for. Undoubtedly the receiver will afford all reasonable facilities, as he said he would, for the examination of the records which contain the information sought for. Personally he knows nothing about it. And the officers and employees of defendant may be produced by subpoena before the master at the same time as the books, and interrogated on the subject."

§ 1806½. Interference Otherwise than by Suit.—Not merely interference by suit or other legal process but other forms of interference with the custody of the bankruptcy court are equally forbidden. Thus, the mere procuring of a tax deed from the county authorities, after the bankruptcy, has been held violative of the custody of the bankruptcy court.

In re Epstein, 19 A. B. R. 89, 156 Fed. 42 (C. C. A. Colo.): "We do not mean that property in the course of administration under the Bankruptcy Act is exempt from taxation, or freed from tax liens or claims theretofore fastened upon it (Swartz v. Hammer, 194 U. S. 441, 11 Am. B. R. 708, and cases supra), but that it is in custodia legis, and that any act interfering with the court's possession, or with its power of control and disposal, and done without its sanction, is void. The general rule is practically conceded, but it is said that the procurement of the tax deed was not such an interference, because it merely perfected an incipient title, and did not disturb the possession. The distinction does not impress us. The issuance of the deed was the principal act connected with the sale. If effective, it extinguished the right of redemption, which was still alive, transferred to the vendee the title and right of possession, became prima facie evidence of the validity of the sale and the proceedings anterior to it, and started the statute of limitations to running against any claim to the contrary. The attempt to thus strip the court of all but the naked possession was plainly an interference with its power of control and disposal, and consequently was of no effect without its sanction, although the possession was not then disturbed."

But it is difficult to see how such a mere perfecting of legal rights could constitute interference with the court's custody. On the same principle it would seem that the mere perfecting of mechanic's liens by the filing of the affidavit after the bankruptcy would likewise constitute interference—a position not at all tenable.³⁴

§ 1807. What Constitutes "Custodia Legis" and "Assumption of Jurisdiction."—Actual or constructive possession by the receiver, trustee, marshal or referee, or (after the filing of the petition) by the bankrupt or his agents, constitutes "custodia legis" for the purpose of "assumption of jurisdiction" by the bankruptcy court. And the bankruptcy court "assumes jurisdiction" over property, and the property comes into "custodia legis," if it is in the custody or control of the receiver in bankruptcy, or of the trustee, marshal, referee, or (after the filing of the bankruptcy petition) of the bankrupt or his agent.³⁵

Acme Harvester Co. v. Beckman Lumber Co., 222 U. S. 300, 27 A. B. R. 262: "It is none the less certain that an attachment of the bankrupt's property after the filing of the petition and before adjudication cannot operate to remove the bankrupt's estate from the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court for the purpose of the administration under the act of Congress. It is the purpose of the bankruptcy law, passed in pursuance of the power of Congress, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, to place the property of the bankrupt under the control of the court, wherever it is found, with a view to its equal distribution among the creditors. The filing of the petition is an assertion of jurisdiction with a view to the determination of the status of the bankrupt and a settlement and distribution of his estate. The exclusive jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is so far in rem that the estate is regarded as in custodia legis from the filing of the petition. It is true that under § 70a of the act of 1898 the trustee of the estate, on his appointment and qualification, is vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt as of the date he was adjudicated a bankrupt, but there are many provisions of the law which show its purpose to hold the property of the bankrupt intact from the time of the filing of the petition, in order that it may be administered under the law if an adjudication in bankruptcy shall follow the beginning of the proceedings. Paragraph 5, § 70a, in reciting the property which vests in the trustee, says there shall vest 'property which prior to the filing of the petition, the bankrupt could by any means transfer or which might have been levied upon and sold under judicial process against the bankrupt.' Under § 67c attachments within four months before the filing of the petition are dissolved by the adjudication in the event of the insolvency of the bankrupt, if its enforcements would work a preference. Provision is made for the prompt taking possession of the bankrupt's property, before adjudication if necessary (§ 69a). Every person is forbidden to receive any property after the filing of the petition, with intent to defeat the purposes of the act. These provisions, and others might be recited, show the policy and purpose of the Bankruptcy Act to hold the estate in the custody of the court for the benefit of creditors after the filing of the petition and until the question of adjudication is determined. To permit creditors to attach the bankrupt's property between the filing of the petition and the time of adjudication would be to encourage a race of diligence to defeat the purposes of the act and prevent the equal distribution of the estate among all creditors of the same class which is the policy of the law. The filing of the petition asserts the jurisdiction of the Federal court, the issuing of its process brings the defendant into court, the selection of the trustee is to follow upon the adjudication, and thereupon the estate belonging to the bankrupt, held by him or for him, vests in the trustee. Pending the proceedings the law holds the property to abide the decision of the court upon the question of adjudication as effectively as if an attachment had been issued, and prevents creditors from defeating the purposes of the law by bringing separate attachment suits which would virtually amount to preferences in favor of such creditors."

Murphy v. John Hofman Co., 211 U. S. 562, 21 A. B. R. 487: "When the court of bankruptcy, through the act of its officers, such as referees, receivers or trustees, has taken possession of a res, as the property of the bankrupt, it has ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine the adverse claims of strangers to it and its possession cannot be disturbed by the process of another court."

Clay v. Waters, 24 A. B. R. 293, 178 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The District Court, sitting in bankruptcy, has jurisdiction to draw to itself and to determine by summary proceedings after reasonable notice to the claimants all controversies between the trustee and adverse claimants over liens upon and the title and possession of (1) property in the possession of the bankrupt when the petition in bankruptcy is filed, (2) property held by third parties for him, (3) property lawfully seized by the marshal as the bankrupt's under clause 3 of § 2 of the bankruptcy law, and (4) property claimed by the trustee which has been lawfully reduced to actual possession by the officers of the court."

Crosby v. Spear, 11 A. B. R. 615, 98 Me. 542: "There (in White v. Schloerb) the property was in the possession of the referee, here it was in the possession of the trustee. The latter was as much the officer and agent of the District Court as the former. It matters not what particular officer of the court is holding the property or what may be his title. He holds it as the agent of the court whose representative he is. His possession is its possession. It brings it within the jurisdiction of that court, and from that jurisdiction it cannot be taken by any process issuing out of this court. An adverse claimant may bring suit in the State court and try the title to the property; but after the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court has once attached he cannot take the property in specie out of the possession of that court or of any of its agents."

Carriage Co. v. Solanas, 6 A. B. R. 227, 108 Fed. 532 (U. S. C. C. La.): "A thing is in 'custodia legis' when it is shown that it has been and is subjected to the official custody of a judicial executive officer in pursuance of his execution of a legal writ. The officer holding such a thing cannot, after he has made his return on the writ, release it on his own motion to any one claiming title to the thing. The status of the thing so seized, as to third parties, is fixed by his return, and its status can be changed only by an order of the court. If a defendant on whom a marshal is executing an attachment writ turns over movables, the ownership of which he claims, to such officer, the marshal, after he has made his return to the court showing that such things were subjected to his custody in pursuance of his execution of the court's writ, is dispossessed of any power to treat with the parties to the suit in relation to the thing being so held by him in any other than his official capacity. The thing so seized by him, without reference to the question as to whether or not the defendant turned over the property of another person, will remain, by operation of law, in custodia legis until it is withdrawn from such custody by the order of a competent court."

In re Lumber Co., 17 A. B. R. 446, 147 Fed. 852 (D. C. N. J.): "But the judgment was against the bankrupt. The command of the writ of execution was to levy on the property of the bankrupt. This was not done. The property levied on was that of the trustee in bankruptcy. The title was in him and not in the bankrupt. Besides, he is an officer of the law. He took his title as such., The property is in custodia legis."

In re Renda, 17 A. B. R. 523, 149 Fed. 614 (D. C. Pa.): "The receiver is the officer of the court, and his possession is that of the court itself. The money in his hands is thus in custodia legis, against which no attachment lies."

Thus, it is broadly stated that the filing of the bankruptcy petition is itself an assumption of jurisdiction.³⁶

Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman Co., 222 U. S. 300, 27 A. B. R. 262: "The exclusive jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is so far in rem that the estate is regarded as in custodia legis from the filing of the petition." [Quoted further ante this section.]

In re Jersey Island Packing Co., 14 A. B. R. 691, 138 Fed. 625 (C. C. A. Calif.): "The filing of a petition in bankruptcy * * * places the property of the bankrupt constructively in the custody of the court of bankruptcy."

In re Weinger, Bergman & Co., 11 A. B. R. 424, 126 Fed. 875 (D. C. N. Y.): "When a petition is filed before a State court acts, the State court cannot, by any subsequent action, claim to have first taken possession of the res. The fact that the bankruptcy court may not have yet made an adjudication, and that no receiver or trustee has yet been appointed, in my opinion, is immaterial."

In re Briskman, 13 A. B. R. 57, 132 Fed. 201 (D. C. N. Y.): "That the property of the bankrupt comes within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court upon the filing of either a voluntary or an involuntary petition is not controverted."

In re Walsh Bros., 20 A. B. R. 472, 159 Fed. 560, 163 Fed. 352 (D. C. Iowa): "The adjudication also operated as a seizure of the property [although a sheriff was still in possession under levy made within the four months] and it was in custodia legis from that time."

But this rule is to be taken with the qualification that the property involved is not in custodia legis of the bankruptcy court unless it is in the actual or constructive possession of the marshal or receiver or (after the filing of the petition) of the bankrupt or his agent, in accordance with the principles stated; and none of the cases cited are, on their facts, contrary to this qualification.³⁷

And where, under an attachment levied before the petition was filed, the property had been put into the hands of a receiver, without notice of the petition, a sale by the state court because of the "perishable nature" of the property, will be upheld as valid.

36. Compare, post, § 1808; In re Donnelly, 26 A. B. R. 304, 188 Fed. 1001 (D. C. Ohio).

37. Compare, In re Donnelly, 26 A. B. R. 304, 188 Fed. 1001 (D. C. Ohio), wherein the court unnecessarily, it seems, reiterated the much abused phrase that the filing of the petition in bankruptcy is a caveat and injunction, although the facts did not require the discussion, since the bankruptcy court undoubtedly has power to enjoin even adverse claimants who are in possession until a trustee can be elected to intervene for the protection of the rights of general creditors.

Jones v. Springer, 226 U. S. 148, 29 A. B. R. 204: "It is true that the estate is regarded as in custodia legis from the date of the petition, as against a subsequent attachment. Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman, 222 U. S. 300, 27 A. B. R. 262. But in a case like the present, where, under an attachment levied before the petition was filed, the property had been put into the hands of a receiver, without notice of the petition, it is not true that all power and jurisdiction of the local court were ended before notice of the bankruptcy proceedings."

Possession, therefore, by the bankrupt, or his agent, at the time of the filing of the bankruptcy petition or afterwards is custodia legis.³⁸

The cases show considerable confusion on the above proposition (although on the facts there is very little conflict), some courts laying down the rule that possession by the bankrupt (at or after adjudication) is possession by the bankruptcy court, while other courts state the true rule as before enunciated.⁴⁰ Care, therefore, should be exercised in reading the cases on this subject to note just what the facts are in the particular case.

In re Granite City Bk., 14 A. B. R. 406, 137 Fed. 818 (C. C. A. Iowa): "The chief contention of the petitioner is based upon a misconception of the scheme and policy of the Bankrupt Act. The filing of the petition in bankruptcy 'was a caveat to all the world. It was in effect an attachment and injunction. Thereafter all the property rights of the debtor were ipso facto in obedience until the final adjudication. If that were in his favor, they revived, and were again in full force. If it were against him, they were extinguished as to him, and vested in the assignee (trustee) for the purposes of the trust with which he was charged. The bankrupt became, as it were, for many purposes, civili-ter mortuus.' * * *

"In short, the adjudication operates as a seizure of the property of the bankrupt, by which it is taken in custodia legis. * * * The possession of the bankrupt without more, is transferred to the trustee. No demand for the surrender and possession of the bankrupt's property is necessary. Indeed he would stand in contempt of court were he to assert the right to hold and possess the property against the trustee. He could not maintain trespass or replevin respecting any personal property owned by him prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy."

In re Schermerhorn, 16 A. B. R. 509, 145 Fed. 341 (C. C. A.): "Upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, followed by an adjudication, all property in the possession of the bankrupt of which he claims the ownership passes at once into the custody of the court of bankruptcy, and becomes subject to its jurisdiction. * * * At the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed and at the time of the adjudication on the following day, it was the bankrupt, not the petitioner, who was in the possession of the buggies under a claim of ownership. The buggies were entered by the bankrupt in his schedules as part of his estate. They were in a building which he had rented of the petitioner, of which he had the customary keys, and over which he was exercising dominion and control as a tenant. He had within the building other property than that in controversy. All that the petitioner had in the nature of possession was a key to the back door of the building, and this he had reserved to himself without the knowledge or consent of the bankrupt, his tenant. There had been no declaration of forfeiture of the bankrupt's tenancy for nonpayment of rent or other reason, and no surrender of the possession of the building. The tenancy still subsisted. The bankrupt did not know that the petitioner claimed to have purchased the buggies, nor did he agree to hold them for him. Some time after the adjudication the petitioner gained access to the building by his rear door key, changed the locks, and then asserted exclusive adverse possession. But the buggies were then in the custody of the court, and the petitioner could gain nothing by an interference therewith. It was therefore proper for the court to repossess itself of them."

In re Schloerb, 3 A. B. R. 224, 97 Fed. 326 (D. C. Wis., affirmed sub nom. White v. Schloerb, 4 A. B. R. 178, 178 U. S. 542): "On this state of facts I am of opinion that this court obtained complete jurisdiction over the property in the possession of the bankrupts and scheduled as owned by them, from the date of adjudication on September 13th, if not from the filing of the petition, and that the property taken by the sheriff was, therefore, in custodia legis, and not subject to seizure on the replevin process."

In re Duncan, 17 A. B. R. 288, 148 Fed. 464 (D. C. S. Car.): "The filing of a petition against him is a caveat to all the world, and all persons dealing with him during the interval from that date to the date of final adjudication do so at their peril. The property of the bankrupt, after the filing of the petition against him and before adjudication thereon, is in custodia legis. It is subject to the prehensory power of the court, and the person against whom such petition has been filed cannot make any legal disposition of it. No creditor can lay hands on it, and no court, State or federal, can attach it. It is under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction and control of the bankruptcy court, and, if such court adjudges the party a bankrupt on the petition, the title to his property vests in the trustee as of the date of the filing of the petition; that date being the point of cleavage."

Possession by the bankrupt may give jurisdiction to the bankruptcy court even if the possession is not exclusive;⁴¹ and regardless of the capacity in which he holds, whether in his own right or as agent for another.⁴²

Hebert v. Crawford, 228 U. S. 204, 30 A. B. R. 24: "The firm of Beaumont Mills claimed, however, that for value and in good faith, they had acquired the title and possession of the rice * * * thirty days before the petition in bankruptcy was filed; that they had employed Moore & Bridgeman (the bankrupts) to harvest and deliver it; and that LeBlanc who was soon thereafter elected trustee [in bankruptcy], used labor, teams and machinery of the bankrupts in harvesting and threshing the crop. The Beaumont Mills paid him, as trustee, for these services * * * [he was however a member of the firm of Beaumont Mills] * * * whatever may have been the legal or equitable rights of the Beaumont Mills under the contracts with Moore and Bridgeman [the bankrupts] and under the bill of sale of June 15, 1906, it still appears that, first, Moore & Bridgeman, and, later, LeBlanc, as trustee, engaged in gathering, threshing, hauling, and delivering the rice. This physical possession, under the decision in Murphy v. John Hofman Co., 211 U. S. 562, 21 A. B. R. 487, and cases cited, gave the bankruptcy court control of the res, and authority to administer it along with all other property in their physical possession when their petition was filed. That petition operated as an attachment, and brought the rice into the custody of the bankruptcy court. * * * Nor was this jurisdiction lessened because LeBlanc, trustee, after gathering the crop, delivered the rice into the possession of Beaumont Mills at their warehouse. * * * Under these decisions the physical possession of the crop brought the property within the exclusive jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. The finding in the summary proceeding that LeBlanc had received possession, as trustee, was conclusive against him, and was not subject to collateral attack by third persons. Noble v. Union Pacific Logging Co."

Compare, In re Mundle, 14 A. B. R. 680, 139 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Y.): "In view of the fact that the bankrupt was in possession of the property, and the only claim of the moving parties is, that he was so as their agent, it seems to me that it is incumbent upon them to prove their claims, and that the property in the meantime or the proceeds thereof, should remain in the possession of the representative of the court."

The possession may be constructive; thus, a "seat" or "membership" in a stock exchange is held to be in the bankrupt's possession and hence to be in custodia legis, even though the approval of a board of directors is necessary.

41. In re Brooks, 1 A. B. R. 531, 91 Fed. 508 (D. C. Vt.).

42. Compare, on the facts, In re Emrich, 4 A. B. R. 91, 101 Fed. 231 (D. C. Penn.).

O'Dell v. Boyden, 17 A. B. R. 756, 150 Fed. 731 (C. C. A. Ohio): "Did the bankrupt court have such custody of the 'membership' or 'seat' as to give it jurisdiction to bring in adverse claimants and adjudicate their rights. The New Stock Exchange is an unincorporated association having a limited membership. No formal certificate of membership is issued, and aside from repute, Henrotin's only evidence of membership consists in a letter notifying him of his election and asking him to sign the constitution and by-laws. This letter is the document referred to as the 'certificate' assigned to O'Dell. Though the membership is personal it is transferable, subject to the conditions imposed by the articles of the association already referred to. But the transfer is not made except by the acceptance of a candidate for membership who is elected in the room and stead of the retiring member. When a 'transfer' of membership is made according to the terms which clog such transfers, the transferee becomes a member and the transferor ceases to be one. It follows, therefore, that the mere execution of a paper preparatory to transferring or assigning a membership works no change in membership whatever. Thus, in 1892, this same membership which was personal to Henrotin was transferred or assigned to a partnership of which he was a member. That did not deprive Henrotin of his 'seat' or 'membership'. He continued to be a member and to exercise all of the privileges of a member. In May, 1905, he again joined one of his partners in transferring or assigning this same membership to the appellant O'Dell. Nevertheless, he continued to be and act as a member, and O'Dell did not thereby become a member. What was then the effect of these transfers or assignments made of this 'seat,' first to Holzman and Company and then to O'Dell? * * *

"The transfer and assignment preceding bankruptcy may have fastened liens upon the pecuniary results of a valid sale and transfer which may be effectually enforced in the bankruptcy court, but subject to such equitable liens as may result from such prior transfers or assignments. The 'seat' or 'membership' continued to be the 'seat' of Henrotin and was a pecuniary asset which passed to his trustee. It was as much in his custody and possession as such a species of property is capable of. To deny the trustee's possession would be to deny the capability of possession of a chose in action or other incorporeal right or equity. The possession may be constructive and not manual, but it is only so because such property is not capable of a more tangible custody. Only through a court of equity can the pecuniary value of such an asset be realized to creditors or assignees. Only by decree in personam compelling the bankrupt member, can such a transfer of membership be effectuated as will put the buyer in the place of Henrotin as a member. Over him for that purpose the bankrupt court has exclusive control, and, in this sense, also, may it be said, that the 'seat' or 'membership' was in custodia legis when the trustee sought the aid of the court to adjudicate the claims and liens asserted by O'Dell.

Thus, a receiver in a pending involuntary proceeding in New York has been held, impliedly at any rate, to have such constructive possession of timber in the State of Arkansas that a suit thereafter started in the Arkansas state court claiming the property has been enjoined.⁴³

It has also been held that the possession of a sheriff under a levy made

43. In re Muncie Pulp Co., 18 A. B. R. 56 (C. C. A. N. Y.): However, the case seems to be based on wrong principles as to jurisdiction. The first within the four months not only is not adverse but is so much that of the bankruptcy court itself that third parties may not, after adjudication of bankruptcy, replevy from the sheriff under claim of title, where at any rate the referee has notified him to hold for the bankruptcy court and he has assented.

In re Walsh Bros., 20 A. B. R. 472, 159 Fed. 560, 163 Fed. 352 (D. C. Iowa): "The sheriff in an affidavit says that he was informed by the referee of the adjudication in bankruptcy and requested by him to hold the property for the referee until a trustee could be appointed, but that he continued to hold it under the writ of attachment. If he did continue to so hold it, he held it wrongfully; for the attachment was dissolved by the adjudication, and he could not thereafter rightly hold it, except for the referee or the court of bankruptcy. It is wholly immaterial whether or not he agreed with the referee to so hold it. If he remained in possession of the property, he could rightly do so only as custodian for the court of bankruptcy. It is clear, however, that he retained it at the request of the referee, and was therefore in fact the custodian of it for the time being for the court of bankruptcy, and the taking of the property from him was the taking of it directly from that court."

And similarly that third parties to whom he had surrendered possession after oral notice of the bankruptcy, and of the granting of a restraining order and of a receivership, are within the summary jurisdiction and may be required to return the property.⁴⁴

Again, it has been held that, where, during the pendency of an involuntary petition, between the entry of a decree appointing a receiver in bankruptcy and the filing of his bond, an officer of the state court takes goods of an alleged bankrupt from his possession under a writ of replevin, such seizure is an unauthorized interference with the possession of the bankruptcy court.⁴⁵

But where there had been an attempted settlement before bankruptcy, and at the time of bankruptcy, a portion of the settlement money was still undistributed in the hands of the lender's agent, who had been making the distribution, it was held the bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction over the fund except to release the trustee's claim thereto.⁴⁶

But possession by the bankrupt (at and after adjudication) is possession by the bankruptcy court.

Clay v. Waters, 24 A. B. R. 293, 178 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Mo.): "An adjudication in bankruptcy is a seizure by the court of bankruptcy and a transfer to that court of all property in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication in which he has any interest. from the custody of the bankruptcy court, and would have been improper, since, until adjudication, the assignee's possession was not superseded. See ante, § 1609.

The trustee in bankruptcy may have custody of property situated in another State.⁴⁷

And like principles apply where the property comes into the actual or constructive possession of a court in the exercise of ancillary jurisdiction.

In re Lipman, 29 A. B. R. 139, 201 Fed. 169 (D. C. N. J.): "The exceptant insists that she is an adverse claimant in possession, and not subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. By the Bankruptcy Act, § 2, the bankruptcy courts are empowered to (cl. 3), appoint receivers to take charge of the property of bankrupts whenever absolutely necessary for its preservation; (cl. 6) bring in additional persons in the bankruptcy proceedings when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy; (cl. 7) cause such estates to be collected and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as by the act otherwise provided; (cl. 15) make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments in addition to those specifically provided for as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act; and (cl. 20) exercise ancillary jurisdiction over persons or property within their respective territorial limits in aid of a receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceedings pending in any other court of bankruptcy.

"Section 23b of the Act invoked to sustain exceptant's contention, and which limits to some extent the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over controversies relating to the collection, etc., of estates of bankrupts referred to in section 2, cl. 7, of the Act, relates only to suits brought by the trustees, and has no restrictive effect on the right of receivers (or trustees for that matter) to maintain or defend their possession of goods seized as those of the bankrupt. Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, 21 Sup. Ct. 557, 45 L. Ed. 814; Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 Am. B. R. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 778, 49 L. Ed. 1157; Murphy v. John Hoffman Company, 211 U. S. 562, 21 Am. B. R. 487, 29 Sup. Ct. 154, 53 L. Ed. 327. Ancillary jurisdiction is exercised for the purpose of aiding the court of primary jurisdiction to collect the estates of bankrupts and distribute them among those entitled thereto. The following of property transferred within four months of the institution of bankruptcy proceedings in such circumstances as suggest the probability of an effort to defraud creditors, and the taking charge of it though in the possession of third parties claiming title thereto, when it may be done peaceably, or failing that, to insure by proper restraining order, its production when wanted, is necessary if the beneficent purposes of the Bankruptcy Act are to be achieved. When such property is obtained, whether willingly or reluctantly yielded, it is in the possession of the court exercising such ancillary jurisdiction, and that court, by its very possession, draws to itself the power to determine the interests therein of all parties making claim thereto, and it becomes its duty to so determine and grant complete relief, that further litigation in regard thereto may be avoided. *Fidelity Trust Co. v. "Whether the goods were in the possession of the bankrupt or the petitioner at the time they were taken by the ancillary receiver, and whether they were voluntarily surrendered, or were forceably taken by the receiver (not raised by her petition), are disputed questions of fact that need not be decided. The court having undoubted jurisdiction of the subject matter of the controversy, it follows that by petitioning this court for a discovery from the receiver of his right to take such goods, and for the return thereof to her, the petitioner is estopped from challenging the court's jurisdiction over her person, even if its jurisdiction in that respect depended upon her consent or acquiescence."

§ 1808. As to Adjudication in Bankruptcy "Ipso Facto" Passing Bankrupt's Property into Custodia Legis.—It is said, somewhat broadly, that the adjudication in bankruptcy ipso facto passes the bankrupt's property into the custody and under the protection of the Bankruptcy court; and that from the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy, the bankrupt's property comes into the custody of the Bankruptcy Court and is in custodia legis.⁴⁸

In re Reynolds, 11 A. B. R. 760, 127 Fed. 760 (D. C. Mont.): "An adjudication of bankruptcy operates in rem, and from the moment of the adjudication the bankrupt's estate is under the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, which will not permit any interference with its possession, even though it be by an officer of a State court acting under its process. Being a proceeding in rem, all parties interested in the res are regarded as parties thereto, including the bankrupt and trustee, as well as the creditors, secured and unsecured. The adjudication vests in the trustee or temporary receiver the title of the bankrupt's property, and stays all seizure made within four months. An adjudication of bankruptcy has the force and effect of an attachment and an injunction. It is a caveat to all the world."

In re Anderson, 4 A. B. R. 640, 103 Fed. 854 (D. C. S. C., reversed, on other grounds, in 7 A. B. R. 641): "Upon an adjudication in bankruptcy, all the property of the bankrupt, of every kind and description whatsoever, falls at once in custodia legis. Compare, contra, or, rather, modified statement, In re Zotti, 26 A. B. R. 234, 186 Fed. 84 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming S. C., 23 A. B. R. 304), quoted at § 1807.

In re Peacock, 24 A. B. R. 159, 178 Fed. 851 (D. C. N. Car.). This case is not contra to the author's views as expressed in the latter part of § 1270 9/10, although the court apparently gives adhesion to the unlimited doctrine that "immediately upon and by virtue of the adjudication, all the property of the bankrupt, wherever situate and in whosever's possession it may be, passes into the custody of the court, and upon the appointment of a trustee vests in him," the court saying: "This is undoubtedly correct and is fully sustained by the authorities cited." The proposition is not correct and never has been correct, for property does not pass "into the custody of the court" regardless of "whosever's possession it may be in." The facts of the case and the decision of the court are wholly in conformity with the correct view, as laid down in § 1270 9/10, limiting the maxim to cases where actual custody has first been obtained.

of the property of the bankrupt by himself or others is in derogation of the rights of the trustee, who is entitled to hold it for distribution among the creditors."

But this statement is to be taken with qualifications. The adjudication does bring it within the protection of the bankruptcy court, to be sure; but this is not the same as saying that, ipso facto, all controversies in relation to the property, title to which by operation of law passes on adjudication to creditors, may be determined in the forum of the bankruptcy court. On adjudication, ipso facto, all the property becomes a proper subject for the protection of the bankruptcy court, but the forum for action is not ipso facto the bankruptcy court. We have heretofore [ante, § 1807] endeavored to explain the limitations upon the exercise of jurisdiction by the bankruptcy court, and to mark the boundaries of its "custodia legis," and those decisions which state the rule thus broadly are not to be considered as determining the forum for bankruptcy controversies. All the cases using the broad term mentioned will be found, on analysis, to resolve themselves into some one of the classes hereinbefore distinguished. Thus, the case In re Reynolds, supra, was a case of "possession by the bankrupt."

§ 1809. Real Estate Generally Considered in Bankrupt's Possession.—Real estate, unless it be actually adversely held by others,⁴⁹ generally is to be presumed, from its nature, to be within the custody of the bankrupt; therefore, unless suit already has been started, actions in relation thereto generally are to be brought in the bankruptcy court.⁵⁰

And, even if a suit in foreclosure has already been instituted, yet if the receiver for the state court voluntarily surrenders possession to the bankruptcy court, the bankruptcy court will acquire thereby complete jurisdiction to marshal liens and determine all rights to the property, even to the extent of enjoining the further prosecution of the foreclosure suit.⁵¹ How-

Compare case where confusion evidently arose through failure to apply the principles of § 1796, the report being absolutely barren as to who had actual or constructive possession of the real estate, the facts merely showing that the bankrupt had deeded away the property to a third person as security, taking a bond for title in return, which, in turn he had transferred to his sister, the trustee's petition being for an order upon the bankrupt to "surrender" or "turn over" the property, rather than for an order to marshal liens and sell property already in the custody of the bankruptcy court. In re Pickens & Bro., 26 A. B. R. 6, 184 Fed. 954 (D. C. Ga.).

51. In re Dana, 21 A. B. R. 683, 167 Fed. 529 (C. C. A.), but this case seems to base its decision on the fact that the foreclosure suit was begun within four months of the bankruptcy, a wholly immaterial consideration, since the basis of the jurisdiction was simply possession of the res.

ever, if the trustee consents that the foreclosure may occur outside the bankruptcy court, he will be bound, and cannot afterwards withdraw nor repudiate the jurisdiction in whole or in part.⁵²

§ 1810. Mere Rights of Action in Personam, Not Property "in Possession" of Bankrupt.—Mere rights of action for money judgments or decrees in personam, and for debts owing to the bankrupt, etc., where no tangible property is involved, cannot be said to constitute property in the bankrupt's possession at the time of bankruptcy, and therefore the bankruptcy does not necessarily draw litigation in relation thereto into the forum of the bankruptcy court.⁵³

§ 1811. Whether Action to Be in Bankruptcy Proceedings Themselves, or Separate Plenary Action Maintainable in United States District Court.—And such action, on reason, must be taken in the bankruptcy proceedings themselves; and a separate plenary action may not be begun in the United States District Court concerning property already in the custody of the bankruptcy court in the bankruptcy proceedings proper.⁵⁴

Nevertheless, the United States District Court in bankruptcy occasionally has entertained proceedings in the nature of plenary actions concerning property in its custody, this jurisdiction always existing and not being dependent on the Amendment of 1903.

The possession by the bankruptcy court of the res gives it jurisdiction to determine all controversies in relation thereto, but such controversies may be and occasionally have been carried on by separate proceedings, in the nature of plenary actions in the District Court itself.⁵⁵

Clay v. Waters, 24 A. B. R. 298, 178 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Mo.): "As the District Court had jurisdiction of the $40,000 which was in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication with a part of which the defendant purchased the real estate and obtained the promissory notes and mortgages which were the subject matter of the plenary suit against him, and as that court had ample power to determine the controversies between the trustee and the defendant concerning all this property by summary proceedings upon reasonable

Y.), where the bankruptcy court stayed a suit to foreclose a subcontractor's lien which had been commenced after the bankruptcy, the bankrupt being the head contractor, although obviously the only property involved was the mere right in action of the bankrupt for a money judgment, to recover a debt from the owner.

But compare, apparently contra practice, In re Mundle, 14 A. B. R. 680, 139 Fed. 691 (D. C. N. Y.), in which case, however, perhaps, the court did not mean that an independent action should be instituted, but only that a hearing upon original testimony and not affidavits was proper.

notice to him, it also had jurisdiction of a plenary suit to determine them. The defendant may not successfully object that the District Court was powerless in such a suit because it thereby gave to him a longer notice and a better opportunity to prepare and present his claim to the property than the common practice in bankruptcy approved."

Or by summary proceedings in the referee's court, in either event the proceedings being in the District Court and in the bankruptcy court and properly entitled in the bankruptcy case. Possession of the res confers jurisdiction whether it be before the District Judge or before the referee, and it is not dependent on the Amendment of 1903. The right to begin plenary actions in the federal courts, conferred by the Amendment of 1903, relates merely to property not in the possession of the bankruptcy court, but sought to be recovered from adverse claimants.⁵⁶ Likewise, the right to prosecute suits in the federal courts by the defendants' consent, conferred by the original Act itself in § 23, refers only to cases where either property is sought to be recovered or a judgment in personam obtained against a third party.⁵⁷ But such plenary jurisdiction over adverse claimants in possession is different from the jurisdiction here being considered, which is dependent wholly on the possession of the res and which is exercisable either by the referee or by the District Judge by proceedings which, in their nature, are neither strictly summary nor yet fully plenary. So that, unless relegated to the summary proceedings before the referee by general reference to the referee or otherwise, the trustee may institute, and occasionally has instituted, proceedings to marshal liens directly in the District Court; and adverse claimants likewise may resort there although such practice is not to be favored so long as the res is already in the custody of the referee. These actions perhaps, strictly speaking, are neither "plenary" nor "summary." They do not follow any of the established forms of plenary actions, yet they are on due notice and hearing, subject to appeal or review and on that account are not perhaps, to be termed, strictly, "summary," either.⁵⁸

Thus, a mortgagee who alleged that he had been induced to release his mortgage lien by the false and fraudulent statements of the officers of the bankrupt corporation, has been permitted to institute a plenary action in the District Court, wherein the bankruptcy proceedings were pending, for the purpose of effecting a re-establishment of his lien.⁵⁹

Adverse claimants likewise may resort to the District Court although such practice is not to be favored so long as the res is already in the custody of the referee.⁶⁰

§ 1813. Bankruptcy Court Permitting Controversies over Property in Its Possession to Be Carried on Elsewhere.—But it has been held that the bankruptcy court may permit controversies over property in its possession to be carried on elsewhere, and to this end may authorize suits in state courts to be instituted or maintained by or against trustees; thus, as to suits concerning mechanics' liens;⁶³ also as to mortgages, for their foreclosure.⁶⁴

Likewise, it has been held, that the bankruptcy court may permit its own trustee to be sued in the state court in a suit started by a chattel mortgagee after the bankruptcy, in order to determine the validity of his chattel mortgage, but will retain custody of the property involved, or sell it and retain its proceeds, to await the outcome of the decision; and that the state court has jurisdiction unless enjoined.⁶⁵

Likewise, the bankruptcy court has refused to hear summarily the question of title to lands claimed by the state to belong to the public as being land under water and has required plenary action to be instituted therefor.⁶⁶ Again, it has been held that under order of the bankruptcy court, property in controversy may be deposited with a third party, or may be sold and its proceeds be thus deposited, to await the outcome of an independent suit to determine ownership or rights of parties therein;⁶⁷ but these cases are exceptional and do not seem to be founded on any very consistent rule. On analysis, some of them will be found to be based on a misconception or doubt as to the scope of the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in Bardes v. Bank, 4 A. B. R. 171, 174 U. S. 524.

And the better rule undoubtedly is that neither the state court nor the United States District [formerly, Circuit] Court has jurisdiction even by express permission of the bankruptcy court, to maintain an action the object of which is to reach and determine priorities in the distribution of the assets of a bankrupt's estate in the custody of the bankruptcy court, as the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is original and exclusive and it has no authority to confer jurisdiction on another court.⁶⁸

Bray v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 22 A. B. R. 363, 170 Fed. 639 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "If otherwise complainant had the right to assert a lien upon the property of the bankrupt contract company, such right could not be availed of by a suit in the Circuit Court, the object of which was to reach and determine priorities in the distribution of assets in the custody of the bankrupt court. Practically the effect of complainant's suit in the Circuit Court is to stay proceedings in the matter of the Evansville Contract Company, bankrupt, in the District Court, and to undertake to determine priorities or preferences in an estate in the custody and control of the latter court. This the Circuit Court is not empowered to do, for the jurisdiction of the District Courts in bankruptcy in this respect is original and exclusive. * * * Complainant's counsel insist that, as the fund sought to be subjected to the complainant's lien is within the territorial limits of the district, jurisdiction of the Circuit Court therefore attaches; but this fund which constitutes the res in this case is the estate of the bankrupt in the hands of the trustees, and in our opinion property or funds in custodia legis under the orders and decrees of a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be made the basis of jurisdiction in another court in an effort to establish liens upon such fund or property or otherwise deal with it. The District Court sitting in bankruptcy having this entire fund in custody and having complete jurisdiction to administer it, the Circuit Court has no power by its decree or order to interfere with it, nor is this want of power supplied by the order of the District Court permitting complainant's bill to be filed, for, if the Circuit Court was without jurisdiction, the District Court is not authorized to confer it."

And, of course, where the bankruptcy court relinquishes possession, or declines to take actual possession, or has only constructive possession, it may permit controversies over it to be litigated in independent suits in state courts. Thus, it has been held that the bankruptcy court may, in its discretion, refuse to enjoin the prosecution of a foreclosure suit although instituted after the mortgagor's adjudication, and may simply order the trustee to intervene in the state court.⁶⁹ Again, a trustee consenting to the sale of real estate under foreclosure of mortgage in the State Court is estopped from objecting to the jurisdiction of the state court.⁷⁰

Similarly, the bankruptcy court has surrendered possession of vessels to the admiralty court to avoid complications in the assertion of libels, but has insisted on the costs and expenses of the bankruptcy court in their preservation being a lien upon the vessels upon such surrender.⁷¹

On the other hand the bankruptcy court usually will not permit such proceedings to be carried on in the state court where a probable surplus will exist for creditors.

§ 1814. Suits in Personam against Trustees and Receivers.—But trustees and receivers in bankruptcy may be sued in the state court for trover or conversion, where no seizure of property is made in the suit.⁷²

In re Kanter & Cohen, 9 A. B. R. 372, 121 Fed. 984 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "If the action had been in replevin a different question would arise, but as it is we entertain no doubt that the court below properly refused the receiver's application."

Distinction Where Property in Original Possession of Bankrupts.—It had been held that the trustee could not be sued in the State Court for conversion where the bankrupt had had apparent possession, even if he might be sued there had he gone out and attempted to take possession of property not in the bankrupt's custody. In re Mertens, 12 A. B. R. 709 (D. C. N. Y., reversed 16 A. B. R. 831, 147 Fed. 177): "This court cannot assent to the doctrine that its trustee in bankruptcy is liable to an action in the State Court as for trespass, trover, or conversion, when he follows the order of the court in disposing of property in its possession. This is not a case where the receiver or trustee has taken and held and disposed of property which was outside of the possession and control and apparent ownership of the bankrupt at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, in which case this court should not and would not interfere. In such case the officer of this court would act on his own responsibility, and take his chances." To same effect, In re Schermerhorn, 16 A. B. R. 509, 145 Fed. 341 (C. C. A.).

Property Held Fraudulently on Secret Trust for Bankrupt's Benefit.—In one case it was held that property held fraudulently on secret trust for the bankrupt's benefit, never having been in his name or possession, could be subjected by suit in the State Court started after adjudication of bankruptcy, to the payment of a judgment creditor's claim. Evans v. Staalle, 11 A. B. R. 182 (Minn.). It would seem in this case that the trustee ought to have intervened: he certainly had title to the property.

In re Mertens & Co., 16 A. B. R. 831, 147 Fed. 177 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The order under review enjoins the American Woolen Company from prosecuting an action in the Supreme Court of the State of New York which it had brought against the trustee in bankruptcy to recover the value of certain personal property alleged to belong to the woolen company, and which the trustee took into his possession as the property of the bankrupts, and sold as a part of the bankrupt's estate. The order restrains the plaintiff in an action of trover from recovering the value of the property which, if its contention is correct, never became part of the bankrupts' estate, and was converted by the trustee. In effect the order overrules several decisions of this court."

And where mortgaged property has been sold by the trustee without notice to the mortgagee, and without his consent, the mortgagee may sue the trustee for conversion.⁷³

§ 1814½. Adverse Claimants Not to Be Defeated by Bankruptcy Court Surrendering Custody.—Adverse claimants to property in the custody of the bankruptcy court are entitled to have that court pass upon their rights and may not be defeated by the bankruptcy court's relinquishment of custody.

Thus, where a trustee in bankruptcy has notice of an adverse claimant's rights to property in his custody, he is not relieved from responsibility to the adverse claimant by an order of the bankruptcy court confirming a composition and ordering the property turned back to the bankrupt, such adverse claimant not having notice.⁷⁴

In re Cadenas & Coe, 24 A. B. R. 135, 178 Fed. 158 (D. C. N. Y.): "Therefore, the trustee, being charged in general with equities upon the fund, put it out of his hands without seeking to protect those equities by reserving any part of the fund or of the consideration. If he did this without knowledge of the existence of the claim, I do not consider that the terms of the order charged him; but, if he had adequate knowledge of the claim, he was in the same position as any other person who with knowledge of existing equities attaching to a res disposes of the res—that is, he became responsible as trustee to the person injured. This correspondence leaves no doubt that the trustee had the fullest notice of the claim before the composition was confirmed and went on without advising the petitioner of the composition till he supposed it was too late. Could there be a more absolute disregard of the petitioner's rights guaranteed him specifically by this court?"

DIVISION 2.

SUMMARY JURISDICTION OVER BANKRUPTS, BANKRUPT'S AGENTS AND OTHERS NOT CLAIMING ADVERSE INTERESTS.

§ 1815. When Summary Order Will Lie on Bankrupts, and Persons Not Adverse Claimants—In General.—Property belonging to the bankrupt estate which is in the hands of the bankrupt himself or his agent, ⁷³. In re Foundry & Machine Co., 17 A. B. R. 291 (D. C. Wis.).

⁷⁴. In re Cadenas & Coe, 24 A. B. R. 135, 178 Fed. 158 (D. C. N. Y.).

or some one who lays no claim to a beneficial interest in it, the trustee may seize, if he can do so peaceably. If he cannot peaceably obtain possession he is entitled to a summary order from the bankruptcy court, in the bankruptcy proceedings themselves, requiring the party in possession to surrender the property.⁷⁵

§ 1815½. Existence Also of Plenary Jurisdiction Does Not Preclude.—The fact that the bankruptcy court also has plenary jurisdiction which might be exercised in the case does not preclude the exercise of summary jurisdiction.

In re Holbrook Shoe & Leather Co., 21 A. B. R. 511, 165 Fed. 973 (D. C. Mont.): "Jurisdiction by bill in the nature of plenary suit obtains, as was held in Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539; but such jurisdiction does not preclude litigation of the rights of parties in bankruptcy proceedings, as distinguished from controversies by independent suits, where the trustee applies for an order requiring one to turn over property in his possession, basing the application upon the ground that the property so held belongs to the bankrupt, and is held without color of right."

§ 1816. Outstanding Claims by Third Parties on Property in Hands of Bankrupt or Agent, Summary Jurisdiction Not Divested.

—The trustee's right summarily to seize property found in the possession of the bankrupt or his agent or in the possession of one not claiming any beneficial interest in it, or to get an order from the bankruptcy court requiring the surrender, is not affected by the fact that liens in favor of third persons exist on the property, or that third persons, not themselves in possession, are laying claim to the property; for the property is brought into the bankruptcy court subject to all liens and claims, and the rights of the lienholders and claimants will be fully protected, and can be worked out through the machinery of the bankruptcy court.⁷⁶

Thus, even where a third party had attacked the sheriff by replevin and the sheriff had given a redelivery bond and was still in custody of the property, he was held still subject to the summary order of the bankruptcy court.

In re Francis-Valentine Co., 2 A. B. R. 522, 526 (C. C. A. Calif., affirming 2 A. B. R. 188): "The pendency of the action of replevin against the sheriff on behalf of the American Type Founders' Company is not ground for holding that the portion of the property involved in that litigation shall not be delivered to the trustee. The possession which the sheriff had of that property was not for the benefit of the American Type Founders' Company, but was antagonistic to it. The intervention of bankruptcy divested the sheriff of his possession, just as it would have divested the possession of the bankrupt itself in case a like action had been commenced against the bankrupt by the same party plaintiff. The sheriff had no right to the possession of the printing press, except upon the theory that the title was in the bankrupt. The property having been once taken from his possession upon a proper bond furnished by the American Type Founders' Company, in again securing the possession by a counter bond the sheriff asserted and relied upon the bankrupt's title. The American Type Founders' Company is not a party to the proceeding in the Bankruptcy Court, and its rights are in no way affected by the order upon the sheriff. It is not represented in the present proceedings. The question is purely one of the respective rights of the sheriff and of the trustee of the estate of the bankrupt."

This doctrine has been held even in cases where a sheriff was about to sell real estate under an execution levy made more than four months prior to bankruptcy.

In re Baughman, 15 A. B. R. 23, 138 Fed. 742 (D. C. Pa.): "In the present instance, while the execution creditor by virtue of its judgment has a lien upon the real estate proposed to be sold, which, antedating the bankruptcy proceedings by over four months as it does, may not be affected thereby, yet, bankruptcy having intervened, the sale and distribution of the property as well as the establishment of the correct amount due to the judgment creditor which seems to be in dispute, belongs to this court, unless it seems best to let it go on elsewhere, as might be the case if the liens were more than enough to exhaust the property leaving nothing for general creditors, although this is not always controlling and is entirely optional."

Likewise where he was about to sell personal property;⁷⁷ also where it was claimed that the bankrupt was holding the property as trustee for another.⁷⁸

§ 1817. But Beneficial Interest in Trustee Must Exist.—But a beneficial interest in the property must exist in the trustee. The bankruptcy court may not be used as a means to procure surrender from the bankrupt, of property belonging to a third party; thus, it has been held that it may not be used to procure surrender, where the vendor of the property rescinds the sale to the bankrupt and reclaims the property.⁷⁹

§ 1818. Order of Surrender before Appointment of Trustee and Even before Adjudication.—The order to turn over the property may be made even before the appointment of a trustee.⁸⁰

And even before adjudication such order may be made upon the bankrupt or a mere agent of the bankrupt not claiming adverse interest, where a receiver has been appointed.⁸¹

However, if the order be upon an officer holding under legal process, it may not, of course, be made before adjudication, for until then the officer is an adverse claimant and not even constructively a mere agent of the bankrupt.⁸²

Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber, 4 A. B. R. 299, 101 Fed. 810 (D. C. Wash., affirmed, on review, in 104 Fed. 1006): "To the merely formal objection that the bankruptcy law does not confer power upon the court to compel a bankrupt to surrender his estate to a trustee, there are two sufficient answers. In the first place, the act does give the power specifically. The seventh section requires the bankrupt to 'submit to an examination concerning the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind and whereabouts of his property, and, in addition, all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate.' Subdivision 7 of § 2 expressly confers power upon the court to 'cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto;' and subdivision 13 of the same section also expressly confers power upon the court to 'enforce obedience by bankrupts, officers, and other persons to all lawful orders, by fine or imprisonment, or fine and imprisonment.'"

In re Rosser, 4 A. B. R. 153, 101 Fed. 562 (C. C. A. Mo., in lower court, 2 A. B. R. 746, 96 Fed. 308): "There can be no doubt that under the general rules of law and under these specific provisions of the Bankrupt Act, the court and the referee were vested with the right and subjected to the duty of making the necessary orders to require the bankrupt and all other persons who had the possession and control of the property of the bankrupt estate to surrender and deliver it to the trustee. Such orders constitute one of the essential means by which the court and the referee are empowered to collect the estate of the bankrupt. It is a broad and comprehensive power, and great caution should be exercised to observe its limits and to issue under it only lawful orders. But, without its lawful exercise, the administration of the estates of bankrupts would in many cases be so complicated and tedious that all the assets would be wasted in litigation, and the beneficent purpose of the bankrupt law would fail of accomplishment. Two essential facts limit this power and condition its lawful exercise. They are that the money or property directed to be delivered to the trustee or other officer of the court is a part of the bankrupt estate, and that the bankrupt or person ordered to deliver it has it in his possession or under his control at the time that the order of delivery is made. If the property is not a part of the estate, obviously no lawful order for its delivery to the trustee can be made. If the money or property in controversy was a part of the estate of the bankrupt, but before the order for its delivery is made he has squandered, disposed of, or lost it, so that it is not in his control or possession, and he cannot obtain and deliver it at the time the order of delivery is made, or within a reasonable time thereafter, it cannot be a lawful order, because the court may not order one to do an impossibility, and then punish him for refusal to perform it. The punishment of the bankrupt for such acts must be sought under the provisions of the bankrupt law relative to the fraudulent concealment of the property of the estate and the making of false oaths relative thereto. But, if it appears to the satisfaction of the referee or the court that property of the bankrupt estate is in control or possession of the bankrupt, a lawful order for its delivery to the trustee may be made, and a refusal to obey this order may be punished as a contempt of court, both under the general law relative to contempts and under the specific provisions of the Bankrupt Act."

Obiter, In re Barton Bros., 18 A. B. R. 100, 149 Fed. 620 (D. C. Ark.): "Under the general rules of law, and under the specific provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, a court of bankruptcy has power and jurisdiction to make an order requiring the bankrupt to pay or deliver to his trustee in bankruptcy money or other property found to be in his possession or control, constituting a part of his estate in bankruptcy, and which he has not surrendered or accounted for, and to enforce his obedience to such order by commitment as for contempt.

"Two essential facts condition the lawful exercise of the power to require a bankrupt or other person to pay or deliver to the trustee money or property in his possession. They are that the money or property directed to be delivered to the trustee is a part of the bankrupt estate, and that the bankrupt or person ordered to deliver it has it in his possession or under his control at the time the order of delivery is made."

In re Kane, 10 A. B. R. 478, 125 Fed. 984 (D. C. Penn.): "It is not intended to punish the bankrupt for concealing assets from his trustee, for which the law otherwise provides; nor for frauds or delinquencies of which he may appear to be guilty."

In re Cotton Co., 14 A. B. R. 194, 134 Fed. 477 (D. C. Ark.): "On behalf of the respondent it is urged that, to warrant a finding against respondent, the evidence must be beyond reasonable doubt; that in view of the fact that, if an order is made requiring the respondent to pay over the money, and he fails to comply with it, he will be imprisoned for contempt of court, it is urged that the proceeding must be treated as a criminal proceeding, and be governed by the same rules. This court cannot assent to this proposition. If the fact that a failure to comply with the order of the court may result in imprisonment of the respondent for contempt makes it a criminal case, many proceedings, and especially proceedings in courts of equity, would have to be treated as criminal proceedings. The failure on the part of a defendant to execute a conveyance decreed by a court of equity in a proceeding for specific performance may be enforced by imprisonment as for contempt. Refusal to answer interrogatories in a bill of discovery, refusal to pay alimony in a divorce suit, disobedience to a writ of mandamus, or violation of injunction may result in such punishment; but no one will contend that for this reason such proceedings are in the nature of criminal actions. The punishment for contempt in bankruptcy proceedings is simply for disobedience of the judgment of the court after it is found that the respondent has money or property belonging to the bankrupt estate in his possession or under his control, and, although able to comply with the order of the court, willfully refuses to do so. These provisions in the Bankrupt Act, authorizing courts of bankruptcy to enforce obedience to their orders by punishment as for contempt are neither novel nor unusual. They were included in every Bankruptcy Act, and similar provisions have been enacted by almost every State in the Union, including the State of Arkansas. In proceedings supplemental to or in aid of execution, courts are authorized by these statutes to enforce the surrender of assets subject to execution, and for this purpose may commit to jail any person refusing to comply with such order."

In re Baum, 22 A. B. R. 295, 169 Fed. 410 (C. C. A. Ark.): "An adjudication in bankruptcy operates to transfer to the trustee the title to all of the property of the bankrupt which was subject to distribution among his creditors, and, if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that property of the bankrupt's estate is in the control or possession of the bankrupt, a lawful order for its delivery may be made."

Partners of a bankrupt partnership are subject thereto.⁸⁴

§ 1820. No Matter in What Capacity Bankrupt Holds.—No matter in what capacity the bankrupt may be holding, if he have actual possession, custody or control, it is the bankruptcy court to which resort must be had.⁸⁵

Thus, the bankrupt cannot refuse to turn over money on the ground that it, or part of it, is the property of others from whom he has fraudulently concealed it; especially where the owners thereof, being unable to trace the money, have proved claims against the estate as general creditors.⁸⁶

Even if his possession be not exclusive, yet the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court may not necessarily be defeated;⁸⁷ and the trustee may enter the private residence of the bankrupt, or upon his exempt homestead, to gain possession, even though it be exempt from entrance for levy of execution.⁸⁸

that the corporate records and stock books were 'documents relating to the property of the bankrupt,' and asserted that therefore the trustee in bankruptcy was not entitled to their possession. We have no doubt that the books and records in question passed, on adjudication, to the trustee, and belong in the custody of the bankruptcy court, and, there being no adverse holding, that the bankruptcy court had power upon a petition and rule to show cause to compel their delivery to the trustee."

Obiter, In re Royce Dry Goods Co., 13 A. B. R. 267, 133 Fed. 100 (D. C. The artificial being, the corporation, breathes, lives, and acts by and through its managing officers. It has no hands to hold and no pockets to conceal property. The actual custody and control of its assets are in and by its manager and director. * * * So it should follow that, for the assets intrusted to the hands of the managing officers of the bankrupt concern, they are jointly and severally liable."

§ 1822. Summary Orders on Agents and Others.—Also, if the property is in the hands of a mere agent of the bankrupt, or of one holding without claim of any beneficial interest therein (other, perhaps, than for his undisputed charges as bailee), and the agent or person in possession refuses to surrender it to the trustee, the bankruptcy court may, upon due notice and hearing, summarily order the agent or person in possession to surrender it, under penalty of punishment for contempt; and a plenary suit is not necessary.⁹³

"In other words, the question reduces itself to this: Has the bankruptcy court the power to compel the bankrupt, or his agent, to deliver up money or other assets of the bankrupt, in his possession or that of some one for him, on petition and rule to show cause? Does a mere refusal by the bankrupt or his agent so to deliver up oblige the trustee to resort to a plenary suit in the Circuit Court or a State court, as the case may be?

"If it be so, the grant of jurisdiction to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, and to determine controversies relating thereto, would be seriously impaired, and, in many respects, rendered practically inefficient.

"The bankruptcy court would be helpless indeed if the bare refusal to turn over could conclusively operate to drive the trustee to an action to recover as for indebtedness, or a conversion, or to proceedings in chancery, at the risk of the accompaniments of delay, complication, and expense, intended to be avoided by the simpler methods of the Bankrupt Law."

Thus, as to the bankrupt's bank deposit.⁹⁴

In re Kane, 12 A. B. R. 445, 131 Fed. 386 (D. C. N. This was the case of an order on a bank to turn over bankrupt's deposit.

In re Moore, 5 A. B. R. 151, 104 Fed. 896 (D. C. W. Were this the case, the trustee might be compelled to institute suit for every separate item of the bankrupt's estate not in the personal, physical possession of the bankrupt at the date of the adjudication; and the malice, caprice, or whim of the bankrupt, or the various parties who chanced to have physical control of portions of the bankrupt's estate at that date, could, on any pretext, or without pretext, nullify the entire purpose of the act."

Thus as to the wife's possession where her possession is colorable merely.

In re Friedman, 18 A. B. R. 712, 153 Fed. 939 (D. C. N. Y., affirmed in 20 A. B. R. 37, 161 Fed. 260, C. C. A.): "The story of Celia Friedman is inherently preposterous, as well as demonstrably false. I am convinced that she received (contemporaneously with the sale) $3,850, and has since acted as the confederate of her hiding husband. Considering the relationship between Mrs. Friedman and Levinson, and the connection by marriage with Wilchick, I am convinced that the three have been acting in concert to protect the proceeds of the Friedman fraud from creditors. * * * It may be admitted that the District Court on the bankruptcy side has no power summarily to try a question of title, if any real question of title exists. It may also be admitted that the same court has no power summarily to order the appropriation by a receiver or a trustee of property obtained from the bankrupt either by fraud upon him or in pursuance of his intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, if any property was so obtained. But if property which had once been in the possession of the bankrupt is found in the possession of any person, and such person is, in the opinion of the court, very clearly but a cover or receptacle for that property which as between that other person and the bankrupt is still the property of the bankrupt, or if (to vary the simile) the person who holds property which was formerly in the possession of the bankrupt is but the alter ego of the bankrupt, then a summary order is proper, and no pretended instruments of transfer, no apparatus of conveyances, should prevail."

In re Eddleman, 19 A. B. R. 45, 154 Fed. 160 (D. C. Ky.): "The bankrupt, however, rushed all the $2,057.29 over to his wife, and we see no reason why she might not be regarded as his agent and stakeholder in respect to it, and it is clear that when the petition in bankruptcy was filed, and when the adjudication was made, she had in her hands of money belonging to the bankrupt the difference between $2,057.29 and $1,605, viz., $452.29. It is not too much to assume that this sum was in easy reach of the husband. Certainly it was his property, and belonged to the bankrupt's estate eo instanti the adjudication. Under section 29 of the act, it might have been a somewhat serious matter to interfere with it. We shall not assume that any criminal act was committed with respect to it, but shall assume that it remains intact. Courts could not tolerate, and this court would be far from encouraging, any practices by which bankrupt debtors could convert their property into money on the eve of failure and deliver it over to wives, and then insist that the latter are adverse claimants, hoping thus to evade the powers of the bankruptcy tribunals. Under such circumstances, the wife should be regarded as agent of the husband, and treated accordingly."

Thus, as to a "seat" or "membership" in a stock exchange, the stock exchange holding the proceeds of sale of the seat, not being an adverse holder.⁹⁹ Thus, as to compelling a treasurer to file schedules.¹

One who not only denies possession, but also makes no claim of title to property which is alleged to be in his possession, cannot consistently object to summary proceedings for the recovery of such property, on the ground that he is an "adverse claimant."²

§ 1822½. State Institution as Depositary of Funds of Bankrupt Estates.—It has been held that upon the failure of a state corporation, which has been appointed a depositary of the money of bankrupt estates, and which is in charge of the state superintendent of banking, the bankruptcy court cannot exercise summary jurisdiction to order such corporation to pay over to the officers of that court, the funds deposited with it as depositary.³

§ 1823. Corporation Agent of Bankrupt, Subject Thereto.—And it has such jurisdiction even where the agent is a corporation, the order being made upon the officer or officers of the agent corporation.⁴

In re Berkowitz, 22 A. B. R. 227, 173 Fed. 1012 (D. C. N. J.): "I regard it as a serious reflection upon the administration of the Bankruptcy Act when a merchant can organize a corporation, transfer all of his assets to the corporation, continue his business in the same manner as he had before such transfer except for a change in the name over his door, and after he has been adjudicated a bankrupt, continue to conduct his business as theretofore except for the change of the name under which he is doing business. Under such circumstances, where the bankruptcy court has before it the sworn testimony of the bankrupt as to the transaction whereby he disposed of his property to the corporation, and where that evidence shows that the transfer was null and void, it seems to me that without regard to the authorities cited above, the court could summarily take possession of the property upon the theory that the corporation is not a third party setting up an adverse claim of title, but rather is holding the property as the agent of the bankrupt." § 1823¹. Bankrupt's Attorney, When Subject Thereto.—It has been impliedly held that the attorney for the bankrupt may be subject thereto,⁵ even where claiming a lien on papers of his client for services performed before the bankruptcy;⁶ but such holdings have doubtless been based, partly, at any rate, on the general doctrine that courts have summary jurisdiction over attorneys practicing at the bar, in their relations with their clients.

§ 1824. Part Adversely Held, Part Held as Agent or Not under Claim of Beneficial Interest.—And where part of the property is held as mere agent of the bankrupt, but the remainder is claimed by the agent as his own, summary jurisdiction exists to order the return of the property not claimed; but not of the property claimed.⁷

Likewise, the right to proceed summarily is not divested because the assignee in possession happens to be also an adverse claimant of part of the property in his individual capacity.⁸

Inferentially, In re Thompson, 11 A. B. R. 719, 128 Fed. 575 (C. C. A. N. Y.): In this case, however, it is to be noted that the assignee had voluntarily appeared in the first instance. The court says: "It is manifest that the court had jurisdiction to compel the assignee under the void state assignment to render an account. Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, 45 L. Ed. 814. This proposition is not disputed. The petitioner, Murray, recognizing the authority of the court, appeared voluntarily before the referee, presented his account and gave testimony regarding it. Having once acquired jurisdiction of the proceeding, the court did not lose it because the investigation took a wider range than the assignee expected or intended. His present contention, carried to its logical conclusion, is that the court acquired jurisdiction of those items which he chose to admit, but not to those which he chose to dispute, and that this jurisdiction was lost the moment he asserted a claim of title in his individual capacity. If this contention were sustained an assignee for the benefit of creditors could, by the mere assertion of a colorable claim, paralyze the arm of the court of bankruptcy and defeat the

But it has been held that where an attorney for a creditor who is subsequently employed by the bankrupt to file his bankruptcy petition and schedules, receives, on the morning of the day on which they are filed, full collection of the claim, which he immediately turns over to his client, the creditor, that the trustee must pursue the creditor, not the attorney, at least in the absence of fraud on the attorney's part, although in the decision the court seems to concede that, if the facts were sufficient, a summary order would lie, notwithstanding the money no longer was in the attorney's possession. In re Martin & Co., 20 A. intent and purpose of the law. It is asserted by the counsel for the trustee that since the amendments of 1903, the District Court has jurisdiction of any action or proceeding which the trustee may hereafter institute if the petitioner's present contention be upheld, and that a reversal of the order, while subjecting the parties to the expense and delay of retaking the testimony, will be absolutely inconsequential for the reason that the same result must inevitably be reached in the new proceeding. Whether this contention be well founded or not we do not decide, but the possibility that it may be furnished an additional reason why a decision reached after such careful consideration should not be overthrown. The petitioner was accorded the fullest opportunity to establish his defense, every fact bearing upon the controversy is now before the court and even though the question were involved in greater doubt than it is it would seem to be the duty of the court to resolve it in favor of jurisdiction."

And the summary order should not be made upon the third person unless the goods can be followed and sufficiently identified to enable the court officer to seize them.⁹

§ 1825. Lienholder in Possession after Satisfaction of Lien.—And a lienholder in possession after satisfaction of his lien may be ordered summarily to surrender the surplus;¹⁰ but sureties holding indemnity from the bankrupt, after exoneration of the bankrupt or satisfaction of his liability, are adverse claimants, if still asserting for themselves a lien for expenses, etc.¹¹

§ 1826. Whether Filing of Petition to Redeem from Undisputed Liens Gives Summary Jurisdiction to Order Surrender on Tender of Amount Due.—The filing of a petition to redeem property from undisputed liens perhaps gives jurisdiction summarily, upon the due notice and hearing of course, to order the surrender of the property on tender to the lienholder of the amount due, such lien perhaps not existing as an adverse beneficial interest in the property. Nevertheless, this doctrine comes dangerously near to a claim of summary jurisdiction over adverse claimants in possession, and is of doubtful authority.

Under this doctrine, however, even bailees, although lienholders by virtue of the bailment, and in actual possession at the time of the bankruptcy, have been held subject to the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, their liens following the property into the bankruptcy court.¹² And a mortgagee of real estate probably may, upon tender to him of his mort-

In re Knight, 11 A. B. R. 1, 125 Fed. 35 (D. C. Ky.): The reasoning of this case is somewhat defective although its conclusions are correct. Had the receivership been confined merely to the custody of the property covered by the mortgage sought to be foreclosed it would not have been nullified. It was nullified because it sought to seize property by legal proceedings not covered by the lien.

Superseding Custody of Court Officers under Execution, Though Levy Made before the Four Months.—The same doctrine has been announced as to court officers in possession under valid execution (but not if in possession in equity where the court itself has direct custody of the res) even where the execution levy was made prior to the four month's period and is conceded to be valid. See ante, § 1582, footnote.

In re Baughman, 15 A. B. R. 23, 138 Fed. 742 (D. C. Penn.), quoted ante, at § 1582, note. But in this case the property was real estate and was presumably in the actual custody of the bankrupt, thus differentiating the case slightly from In re Vastbinder, where the property involved was personal property.

In re Booth, 2 A. B. R. 770, 96 Fed. 943 (D. C. Ga.), quoted ante, at § 1582, note. This case, however, is somewhat out of harmony with the weight of authority. Thus it appears in this case that a special judgment was obtained against the particular property of which the execution creditor already held a deed as security. In effect the execution was simply the enforcement of a lien already existing, not the obtaining of a new lien within the four months period and according to the usual rules in such cases the court first obtaining possession of the res should have been permitted to retain it.

ing creditors do not occupy the relation of third persons in possession of, or adverse claimants dealing with the property of the bankrupt. * * * They are but creditors of the bankrupt, who have, in their effort to collect their money, sought an advantage which the law does not give and they cannot gain any favored position by reason of an act of theirs which the law condemns."

Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 2 A. B. R. 383, 95 Fed. 645 (C. C. A. Ohio): "It is generally true that, as between courts of concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first obtains possession of the res must retain possession of it until the res has been finally disposed of, and any one else interested in the res must apply to that court if he desires relief with respect to the property in the possession of that court. But, as between district courts sitting in bankruptcy and State courts for the administration of insolvent estates, there is no concurrent jurisdiction. The constitution of the United States, by giving to Congress the power to pass uniform bankruptcy laws, gives to the courts in which Congress shall vest this power paramount jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings. The orders in bankruptcy are therefore superior to those of a State insolvency court. Section 720, which forbids a court of the United States from enjoining proceedings in a State court, expressly except bankruptcy proceedings. This is the plain intimation, by Federal and paramount law, that, where a Federal Bankruptcy Court shall take jurisdiction, there the State insolvency court must yield. Hence it is that the assignee for the benefit of creditors of the defendant company, the grantee in the deed which is by the Federal law an act of bankruptcy, may be made a party in the Bankruptcy Court, and may be required to hold the assets of the bankruptcy subject to the order of the District Court in bankruptcy."

Davis v. Bohle, 1 A. B. R. 415, 92 Fed. 325 (C. C. A. Mo., affirming, In re Sievers, 1 A. B. R. 117, 91 Fed. 366): "Inasmuch as an assignee under a voluntary deed of assignment is not a purchaser for value of the assigned property, but is merely an agent or trustee of the assignor and his creditors, and holds the assigned property solely for their benefit, Congress, when it provided that a general assignment should be regarded as an act of bankruptcy, did not deem it necessary to say further, and in so many words, that the assigned property might be taken from the custody of the assignee at the instance of creditors, if the assignor was subsequently adjudged a bankrupt."

In re Francis-Valentine Co., 2 A. B. R. 525, 94 Fed. 793 (C. C. A. Calif., affirming 2 A. B. R. 188): "In the present case the sheriff had possession, not in opposition to the right of the bankrupt, nor in antagonism to its title, but his possession was based entirely upon the assumption that the title was in the bankrupt. Upon the adjudication of bankruptcy the sheriff's right to the possession terminated, for the writs were dissolved, and upon the appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy the right to the immediate possession vested in the latter. There was no question of conflicting claims to be adjudicated by the District Court."

In re Kennedy, 5 A. B. R. 355, 105 Fed. 897 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming 3 A. B. R. 353, and itself affirmed in 9 A. B. R. 476, 188 U. S. 486): "But, under the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, the judgment and the levy are to be held null and void. As a consequence, the goods have been forcibly removed, without right, from the bankrupt's possession by Clark and the sheriff, and are still to be considered a part of his estate, for the return of which the court (by explicit provision in the section) may provide summarily by order, except that the title of a bona fide purchaser for value shall not be interfered with. It makes no difference whether the creditor and sheriff, whose only title rests on 'null and void' proceedings, hold the goods themselves, or the money which represents them, nor whether, as soon as the sheriff sells under execution, it is his duty to turn over the proceeds to the judgment creditor, nor whether under the law of New York the sheriff holds the proceeds as the agent of the creditor, nor that ordinarily such proceeds would be the property of the judgment creditor. They cannot be his property in this case, because the only proceedings through which he can make out title to retain their possession are such as the bankruptcy courts must hold to be null and void.

"A further objection to the granting of the order, based on an alleged partnership between the bankrupt and a person who put some money in the business, is sufficiently discussed in the opinion of the district judge."

In re Chase, 10 A. B. R. 681, 124 Fed. 753 (C. C. A. R. I.): "* * * even if assignments were strictly void as such, the assignees, until the intervention of proceedings in bankruptcy, would stand as the agents of the assignors, coupled with possession; and so, having acted innocently in their behalf, they would become entitled as such agents to receive their disbursements and a reasonable compensation, and to hold a lien therefor on the property in their hands. This was well stated by Mr. Justice Brown, then a district judge, in Hunter v. Bing (D. C.) 9 Fed. 277, 281, where, under a previous statute in bankruptcy, he said that the respondent in that case, who was an assignee under a common law assignment, might be regarded as a 'factor or agent' of the assignor; so that he might be held 'as having done what he did under an implied request to that effect, and to have acquired thereby an equitable lien upon the property in his possession for his necessary services and disbursements therein, which should be respected in bankruptcy so far as they have been necessary and beneficial to the general creditors, or such as the assignee in bankruptcy would otherwise have incurred.' Mr. Justice Gray, in Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 192, 193, 5 Am. B. R. 623, noticed the same fact when he said that an assignee under a general assignment is not one for value, but simply 'an agent' for the distribution of the proceeds of the debtor's property among his creditors.

"Indeed, this proposition of agency is well illustrated by the fact that, ordinarily, common law assignments contain a clause expressly making the assignee the agent of the assignor; but this clause, of course, is not necessary, because, if the assignment becomes ineffectual as an assignment and as creating a technical trust, the agency is implied by law. On the other hand, it is not to be inferred that the assignor and the assignee are at liberty to create the terms of this agency at their own option. From the time the assignor declares his insolvency by making an assignment, his property must be held equitably for the benefit of his creditors, and he can do nothing which will embarrass or prejudice them in realizing therefrom, whether the result is that they are administered under the common law assignment or ultimately go into the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy. Therefore, in no event can he impress on them a lien for any amount of compensation arbitrarily agreed on. Anything in this direction beyond what would be reasonable and equitable would be contrary to the policy of the law, and would be declared invalid by the court having jurisdiction of the trust if the assignment is worked out at common law, or by the court in bankruptcy if the property finally comes under its control."

In re Tune, 8 A. B. R. 286, 115 Fed. 906 (D. C. Ala.): "When the only right of possession by a State court of attached property is based on an attachment lien, which is annulled by the adjudication in bankruptcy, the State court loses all jurisdiction of the rem, which is transferred into the exclusive jurisdiction of the court of bankruptcy. There is no longer any right of possession in the officer of the State court, who then holds as bailee for the person rightfully entitled to possession, and becomes a trespasser if he fails to deliver on proper demand."

Indeed, it was held in one case that it was contempt of the bankruptcy court to replevy property, after bankruptcy, that was still being held by a sheriff who had seized it under an attachment within the four months period, where the sheriff had been notified by the referee.¹⁵

Indeed, court officers in possession under nullified legal liens are so far from considered as holding adversely to the bankruptcy court, that, where such officers surrender the property to a third party claimant, such third party himself is subject to summary jurisdiction and may be ordered to return the property, precisely as if taken from the custody of the bankruptcy court itself.¹⁶

In re Hays, 24 A. B. R. 691, 181 Fed. 674 (C. C. A. Ohio): "The assignment by Hays to Stewart did not constitute the latter an assignee for value, but simply made him the agent of Hays for the distribution of the proceeds of the property among the latter's creditors. Being such agent his possession was that of the principal and he therefore did not hold adversely to the bankrupt or to the latter's trustee by the mere fact that he held in his hands funds received by him under the assignment." Quoted further at § 1665.

§ 1828. But, until Liens Nullified, Custodians and Court Officers, "Adverse Claimants."—But, unless the legal liens are nullified, that is to say, until adjudication in bankruptcy takes place, such custodians and court officers are adverse claimants, representing creditors in possession, and may not be proceeded against summarily, although, on subsequent adjudication, they may thus be proceeded against.¹⁷

In re Andre, 13 A. B. R. 133 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The attachment was process which the sheriff was bound to enforce for the benefit of the plaintiff in the action, and though it would be dissolved in the event of an adjudication of bankruptcy, it was his right and his duty to retain the property until the attachment should be dissolved, and even then until by competent authority he should be required to surrender it. Representing the party who had obtained the attachment, and as an officer whose duty it was to hold and dispose of the property in obedience to the process, he was in possession under a title paramount and adverse to that of the alleged bankrupt and he asserted his adverse title upon the application to require him to surrender the property by insisting that the application should be made to the court that had issued the process and by setting up his own lien for poundage."

Thus, a sheriff holding funds under an attachment and claiming a lien thereon for his poundage has been held an adverse claimant, not subject to summary order before adjudication.¹⁸

ings, becomes the legal custodian of funds to which lien claimants are asserting rights in a state court, is an adverse claimant against whom summary proceedings for the recovery of the fund will not lie.

In re Heintz, 29 A. B. R. 19, 201 Fed. 338 (C. C. A. Ohio): "It is equally clear that the controversy between these parties is of such character that it can be determined only by a plenary suit in a court of competent jurisdiction. While the respondent does not claim to be the owner of the money in question, yet it holds the fund as a legal custodian for lien claimants who are asserting rights in and to it adverse to those of the trustee in bankruptcy, and who, in accordance with the law, invoked the aid of the proper State court to perfect and enforce their liens more than eighteen months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. The regularity of the proceedings to foreclose the liens is not questioned, nor can it be denied that the State court acquired complete jurisdiction and control over all the parties and property long prior to the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings against Heintz."

But, of course, where the proceeds of an execution sale are turned over to the execution creditor, summary process will not lie, since the lien no longer exists and the creditor has become an adverse claimant in possession.¹⁹

§ 1829. Court Officers Holding under Nullified Legal Proceedings Subject to Summary Order.—But such agent or person in possession under a lien by legal proceedings which has been nullified by the adjudication of bankruptcy, even if he be a court officer, may be ordered to surrender the property to the trustee in bankruptcy, without the necessity of a plenary suit: a simple petition with notice upon the person, or upon the sheriff or other officer, upon the receiver or assignee, to show cause why he should not be ordered to surrender the property, being all that is necessary.²⁰

§ 1830. Order May Not Require Surrender of More than Is in Officer's Hands.—The order on the assignee, receiver or other court officer cannot require him to turn over more than he actually has in his possession. He cannot be required, on summary order, to make good disbursements he already has made under the assignment or levy before the bankruptcy adjudication.²¹

PROCEDURE ON SUMMARY PETITIONS.

§ 1831. Procedure on Summary Petitions, in General.—Summary jurisdiction over bankrupts and agents and others in possession not claiming adverse interest, is exercised without the usual formalities of recognized actions and without usual rule days, but, nevertheless, must be on due and reasonable notice and hearing, without impairment of constitutional rights.²²

§ 1832. What Is Summary Process.—Summary process is process, either with or without notice to the party affected, not made in accordance with the established rule days of regular suits, the court proceeding usually by order and not by judgment and execution. The process may be either by order for surrender or injunction, or by notice to appear and set up rights or be debarred.²³

Inferentially, Doroshov v. Ott, 14 A. B. R. 37, 134 Fed. 740 (C. C. A. N. J.): "Summary proceedings by the bankrupt court for the determination of questions of title against adverse claimants, have not ordinarily been countenanced in bankrupt legislation, and the courts have been careful to avoid giving sanction to such proceedings in a bankrupt court, as would deprive outside parties and adverse claimants of their 'day in court in the regular way—that is, by pleadings, trial and judgment.'"

Compare, In re McMahon, 17 A. B. R. 534, 147 Fed. 685 (C. C. A. Ohio): "The proceeding to which the petitioner McMahon was made a party was not a summary one in the strict sense of that term: It did not differ in any essential from that sustained in Whitney v. Wenman. Nominally an application for an order to sell property of the bankrupt in possession of the assignee, it was in its essence a petition to bring in persons asserting liens for the purpose of determining the rights of such persons, and to sell the property free from all liens. The defendants were made such by subpoena, and required to appear and answer or defend. It was in substance a plenary suit. In Whitney v. Wenman, the court said of the jurisdiction to determine claims to or upon the property of the bankrupt in possession of the trustee under § 2, clause 7, that it did not perceive 'that it makes any difference that the jurisdiction is not sought to be asserted in a summary proceeding, but resort is had to an action in the nature of a plenary suit, wherein the parties can be fully heard after the due course of equitable procedure.'"

Compare, impliedly, In re Steuer, 5 A. B. R. 213, 104 Fed. 976 (D. C. Mass.): "It remains to consider if, under the form of a petition in bankruptcy, the de-

23. And compare note, Shutts v. Bank, 3 A. B. R. 505 (D. C. Ind.), wherein it is apparently contended that a proceedings before a referee requiring a claimant to appear at a time certain and set up his rights to a certain fund in the custody of the bankruptcy court, is a plenary and not a summary proceeding.

Compare, inferentially, Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 525, cited in Bardes v. Bank, 4 A. B. R. 171, 174 U. S. 524. Also, compare, Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 A. B. R. 397, 116 Fed. 131 (C. C. A. Iowa). Compare, In re Rochford, 10 A. B. R. 611, 124 Fed. 182 (C. C. A. S. Dak.).

pendants' rights have been protected as substantially as if the suit had been plenary. In order that proceedings to recover property may be validly commenced by petition in bankruptcy, the petition must, as was suggested in Milner v. Meek, 95 U. S. 252, 257, 24 L. Ed. 444, contain a complete statement of the cause of action, and a sufficient prayer for relief. Upon such a petition process must be issued, and the parties must be given full opportunity to present evidence and arguments in their own behalf. In other words, though the formal requisites of a bill in equity may be wanting, yet the substantial requisites of equitable justice must be complied with as fully in a petition in bankruptcy as in a bill in equity. An injunction should not issue ex parte, unless in case of necessity. An order to show cause should precede the issuance unless the petitioner shows that delay will work irreparable injury. In this case it appears that all substantial requirements were met. Originally, it is true, an injunction was issued ex parte, but that may have been done because the referee deemed that irreparable injury would be wrought by delay. In any event, that preliminary injunction is not now in question. All parties were given full opportunity to introduce evidence and present arguments, and they seem to have availed themselves of the opportunity."

But compare, contra, obiter, In re Connolly, 3 A. B. R. 842, 100 Fed. 620 (Ref. Pa.): "Another objection made was that the proceedings deprived the respondent of his property by summary process. The referee cannot find that a proceeding by petition and answer is a summary process. A petition duly answered and followed by proof, has the full force and effect of a bill in equity. In the case of Milner v. Meek, 95 U. S. 252, 24 L. Ed. 444, the effect of pleadings by petition and answer in a bankrupt suit are discussed. Chief Justice Waite, in giving the opinion of the court, states: 'The pleading filed by the assignee was appropriate in form for a petition in the bankrupt suit, but it was equally good in substance as a bill in equity. It contains a complete statement of the cause of action cognizable in equity, and a sufficient prayer for relief.' * * *

"In Stickney v. Wilt, 23 Wall. 150, 23 L. Ed. 50, the petition was in all its essential features like the one in the case above—Milner v. Meek. It was filed by an assignee in bankruptcy against lien creditors entitled as of the bankrupt suit, and addressed to the district judge. Like that in the case above it contained no formal prayer for a subpoena, but there was a prayer for relief. "The petition contained every requisite of a good bill in equity, whether the pleadings be tested by the statement of the cause of action, or of the charging part of the bill, or by the prayer for relief.' Opinion by Clifford, J.

"A proceeding is summary where an order is made on the petition alone, as was the case in In re Abraham (2 Am. B. R. 266), 35 C. C. A. 592, 93 Fed. 767, previously cited; but where an answer to a petition is filed, and proof taken, respondent is not deprived of any right that he would have had if more formal proceedings by bill of equity had been instituted." It must be noted in this case however that the court had jurisdiction over the rem as well as by consent, and so summary proceedings were proper.

§ 1833. Summary Orders to Surrender Assets Not New Function.

—It is no new function for courts of equity to require surrender of property by bankrupts and others not claiming adversely: courts of equity have always had the power.²⁴

They were included in every Bankruptcy Act, and similar provisions have been enacted by almost every State in the Union, including the State of Arkansas. In proceeding supplemental to or in aid of executions, courts are authorized by these statutes to enforce the surrender of assets subject to execution, and for this purpose may commit to jail any person refusing to comply with such order."

Inferentially, In re Holland, 23 A. B. R. 835, 176 Fed. 624 (D. C. N. Y.): "The situation is much similar to that existing in proceedings supplementary to execution upon a judgment in a court of law, where authority is given by statute to impose a fine equal to the amount of the execution, with costs, and to imprison the party in contempt until the fine is paid."

§ 1834. Right of Trial by Jury Not Violated Thereby.—The right of trial by jury is not violated by summary process.

Ripon Knitting Wks. v. Schreiver, 4 A. B. R. 300, 101 Fed. 810 (D. C. Wash.): "As a court of bankruptcy, this court is a special tribunal, and when a case proceeds according to the usual practice in courts of bankruptcy a party against whom a decision is rendered has no more right to complain of being deprived of his rights without due process of law than have parties against whom judgments are rendered in equity or admiralty cases."

§ 1835. Bankrupt Ordered to Execute Necessary Papers.—The bankrupt may be ordered to execute assignments, applications and other papers necessary to obtain possession or title.²⁵

O'dell v. Boyden, 17 A. B. R. 759, 150 Fed. 731 (C. C. A. Ohio): "Only through a court of equity can the pecuniary value of such an asset be realized to creditors or assignees. Only by decree in personam compelling the bankrupt member, can such a transfer of membership be effectuated as will put the buyer in the place of Henrotin as a member. Over him for that purpose the bankrupt court has exclusive control, and, in this sense, also, may it be said, that the 'seat' or 'membership' was in custodia legis when the trustee sought the aid of the court to adjudicate the claims and liens asserted by O'Dell."

§ 1836. Referee Has Jurisdiction to Make Summary Order.—The referee has jurisdiction to make the summary order on bankrupts.²⁷

In re Miller, 5 A. B. R. 184, 105 Fed. 57 (D. C. Iowa): "Under the rule laid down in this case it is clear that the referee, upon whom is imposed the duty of collection through the trustee the property of the estate, had the right to enter an order directing the bankrupt to surrender to the trustee any money or property which the referee found to be in possession or under the control of the bankrupt, opportunity having been given to the bankrupt to be heard upon the question; and upon the refusal or neglect of the bankrupt to obey the order thus made the referee had the right to enter upon the record the fact that the bankrupt had refused obedience therefore was in contempt of the court."

In re Mayer, 3 A. B. R. 533, 98 Fed. 839 (D. C. Wis.): "The jurisdiction of the referee to entertain the hearing in question and to enter the order thereon is undoubted."

But that provision seems to refer only to the seizure of property by the marshal or a receiver prior to adjudication and the qualification of the trustee as provided by § 2, § 3e, and § 69, and it is at all events inapplicable here.

such as this, when the case has been referred, and in aid of the court of bankruptcy, and exercises in such cases 'much of the judicial authority of that court.'"

In re Kane, 12 A. B. R. 445, 131 Fed. 386 (D. C. N. Y.): "If it be clearly a nullity, the referee has jurisdiction, and may by summary process require the surrender of the property so withheld to the trustee in bankruptcy."

And the referee has jurisdiction to make such summary order, even though it be an order upon a court officer.³⁰ The lack of power in the referee to enjoin courts or officers,³¹ is evidently construed not to be the same as lack of power to order the summary delivery of property by such officers.³²

§ 1837. Written Petition Requisite.—A written petition must be filed or served making specific claim to certain described property in the possession or control of the bankrupt, agent, or other party and it must be so framed as to fairly apprise such party of what he is expected to meet. Thus, as to the bankrupt.³³

Inferentially, Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 A. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131 (C. C. A. Iowa): "No petition had been filed by the trustee claiming that the bankrupt had money or property in his possession or under his control which he should turn over to the trustee."

In re Ruos (No. 2), 21 A. B. R. 257, 164 Fed. 749 (D. C. Pa.): "If it had appeared in the course of this inquiry that the bankrupt probably controlled or was possessed of money or property that rightfully belonged to his estate, the correct proceeding to compel delivery would have been begun by presenting a petition making definite averments upon this subject and offering a definite issue. To such a petition the bankrupt would have been entitled to reply, and upon the issue raised by his answer both parties would have had the right to offer evidence, not only that which had been already taken, but such further evidence as might be relevant. The facts would thus appear, and the proper order would have the necessary support. Here, however, there was neither an appropriate petition nor an answer thereto, and therefore no issue to which the evidence can be definitely applied. On such a record I must decline to make an order that might be followed by the imprisonment of the bankrupt."

In re Lasch, 12 A. B. R. 158 (Ref. Penn.): "* * * A distinct issue must be raised upon petition and answer and testimony must be taken thereunder."

Inferentially, In re Thompson, 11 A. B. R. 719, 128 Fed. 575 (C. C. A. N. Y.), in which case the Circuit Court of Appeals sustained a referee's summary order on an assignee who had voluntarily appeared in the first instance and later claimed to be an adverse party as to certain items.

Compare, also, as to the point that the taking of property out of one's possession and the restraining such one's use of it are but different acts of the exercise of the same jurisdiction. In re Ward, 5 A. B. R. 215, 104 Fed. 985 (D. C. Mass.).

Thus, as to a court officer.³⁴

Obiter and inferentially, Louisville Trust Co. v. Comingor, 184 U. S. 18, 7 A. B. R. 426. "Nor in this matter was any petition by the trustee, or by any other person, filed against Comingor to recover these sums, and the orders were entered by the referee on the record as it stood, so that there was no pretense whatever of a plenary suit in that court, in form or in substance.

"The proceeding was purely summary."

Thus, as to a mortgagee who has (though under mistaken advice of counsel) waived title to goods under the mortgage, and yet receives the same from the receiver in bankruptcy and is ordered to surrender them.³⁵ But the description of the property need be no more particular than the nature of the case permits of.³⁶

Ripon Knitting Works v. Schrieber, 4 A. B. R. 303, 101 Fed. 810 (D. C. Wash.): "The principles of reason and justice do not exact of those who have incurred losses by extending credit to a dishonest merchant the impossible thing of tracing the proceeds of merchandise which he had handled before compelling him to surrender money in his possession which rightfully should be applied to the payment of their accounts. In this case it is impossible for the trustee or the creditors to identify the pieces of money which have come to the bankrupt's hands, or to identify or describe the particular pairs of shoes which were sold for money which the bankrupt now conceals; and, being impossible, it is unnecessary."

The petition must be filed in the trustee's name.³⁷

In re Rothschild, 5 A. B. R. 587 (D. C. Ga.): "The nature of the proceedings does not change the rule. All proceedings must be brought by or against the trustee, except such proceedings as affect one individual creditor or one class of creditors only."

If the averments of the petition are indefinite or uncertain, the proper remedy is by motion, or some other appropriate request, that it be made more definite and certain.³⁸

Demurring and answering to the petition at the same time effects a waiver of the demurrer.³⁹ order is requested, so that he may have reasonable time to prepare for his defense.⁴⁰

In re Rosser, 4 A. B. R. 153, 101 Fed. 562 (C. C. A. Mo., reversing 2 A. B. R. 746): "A more serious question is presented by the contention of the bankrupt, that the proceedings in the court below did not give him such a notice of, and such an opportunity to be heard upon, the propriety of the order for the payment of his money as constitute due process of law. Chancellor Kent says: 'The better and larger definition of "due process of law" is that it means law in its regular administration through courts of justice.' 2 Kent, Comm. 13. While it is perhaps impossible, and is certainly unwise, to attempt to give a concise and comprehensive definition of the term 'due process of law' and 'law of the land,' it is certain that notice to the party to be affected of the claim against him, and an opportunity to be heard upon it, are essential elements of every proceeding in a court of justice which can be said to constitute due process of law or to be in accord with the law of the land. 'Perhaps no definition,' says Judge Cooley, 'is more often quoted than that given by Mr. Webster in the Dartmouth College Case: "By 'law of the land' is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society.'" Cooley, Const. Lim. 431. The basic principle of English jurisprudence is that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, without a course of legal proceedings according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights. Such a course must be appropriate to the case and just to the party affected. It must give him notice of the charge or claim against him, and an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the order or judgment sought. The notice must be such that he may be advised from it of the nature of the claim against him, and of the relief sought from the court if the claim is sustained. And the opportunity to be heard must be such that he may, if he chooses, cross-examine the witnesses produced to sustain the claim, and produce witnesses to refute it, if a question of fact is in issue, and, if a question of law is presented, the opportunity to be heard must be such that his counsel may, if they desire, argue the justice and propriety of the judgment or order proposed. Judicial orders or judgments affecting the lives or property of citizens in the absence of such a notice and opportunity to the party affected are violative of the fundamental principles of our laws, and cannot be sustained. * * * Under the principle to which reference has been made, he was entitled to a citation or notice of a hearing upon this claim and of the proposed order before it was made. * * * No order to show cause why he should not pay it was made or served upon him before the absolute order for its payment was presented to him. No opportunity was afforded him to be heard upon the questions it presents. He was cited to appear and be examined under § 21 of the Bankrupt Act, and his testimony and that of various other witnesses were taken before the referee upon that citation, but no notice was served upon him that the claim, which culminated in the order for the payment of the $2,500, was made or was in issue at that examination, or that the testimony there elicited was taken for the purpose of establishing that claim, 40. In re Pearson, 2 A. B. R. 819, 95 Fed. 425 (Ref. Penn.); In re Miller, 5 A. B. R. 184, 105 Fed. 57 (D. C. Iowa); In re Oliver, 2 A. B. R. 783, 96 Fed. 85 (D. C. Calif.); In re Schachter, 9 A. B. R. 499 (D. C. Ga.). Impliedly, In re DeGottardi, 7 A. B. R. 728, 114 Fed. 328 (D. C. Calif.).

and no opportunity was presented to him to produce witnesses in his defense or to be heard upon the issues of fact or of law which the issue of the order involved. Such a proceeding lacks every element of due process of law. It contains no notice to the party affected of the claim against him, or of the proposed action upon it, no opportunity to contest the questions of fact which it presents by the cross-examination of the claimant's witnesses or the presentation of his own, and no chance to be heard upon the questions of law which it involves. It considers without notice, condemns without hearing, and renders judgment without trial."

In re Frank, 25 A. B. R. 486, 182 Fed. 794 (C. C. A. N. D.): "It is true that the case before us differs from the Rosser case in that the petitioner here was given two days' notice of the hearing upon the petition filed by the trustee. But that petition was based upon alleged disclosures of the petitioner when under examination before the petition was filed, and when he had no notice that his examination was to be used or would be used upon the hearing of the petition that was subsequently filed; and afterwards further testimony was taken to be used against him upon the hearing, no notice of the taking of which was given and no opportunity afforded him to appear and cross-examine the witnesses; in fact it appears that the petitioner was detained at Minot, N. D., by order of the referee at the instance of the trustee while such testimony was being taken. It therefore clearly appears that the order of the referee deprived the petitioner of his legal rights, and in respect of the taking of the testimony is in effect the same as the order in Re Rosser."

Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 A. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131 (C. C. A. Iowa): "Dispatch in judicial proceedings is commendable but in proceedings involving the liberty of a citizen, he has a right not only to be informed of the precise claim against him, but, after receiving that information, he has a right to a reasonable time to prepare his answer and present his proofs, and, lastly, to be heard by counsel on the law and facts of the case. While proceedings in bankruptcy may be summary, they should not be too summary; in other words, they should not be so summary as to deprive the bankrupt of those fundamental rights and privileges that belong to every citizen, among which are the right to be advised of the demand made upon him, and the right, after being so advised, to have a reasonable time to prepare his defense and produce his witnesses. The Bankrupt Act does not do away with these rights, and no citizen forfeits them by being adjudged a bankrupt. The Bankrupt Act contemplates that proceedings in bankruptcy shall go forward with all reasonable dispatch compatible with the due and orderly administration of justice and a proper regard for the fundamental rights of the citizen. Construing the proceedings before the referee as we do, we think they were too summary in their character, and that it was against this summary proceeding the bankrupt asked to be heard, and that there was not accorded to him, and not intended to be accorded to him, by the referee, a reasonable time to answer the trustee's application, or to be further examined or to introduce evidence after being advised of the specific claims made against him by the trustee. The referee did not advise him that he had these rights, and the record does not show that he waived them, or intended to do so. As we construe the record, this case is not, in this respect, different from that of In re Rosser, 4 Am. B. R. 153, 41 C. C. A. 497, 101 Fed. 562. It is true that in that case the referee made the order based on the bankrupt's general examination in his absence, but it is manifest from the opinion in the case that if the order had been made, as it was in this case, at the conclusion of a long and desultory examination, and the bankrupt heard only in a vain protest against such summary action, the result would have been the same."

Thus, notice must be served on an assignee or receiver from whom surrender is demanded.⁴¹

§ 1838½. Order to Show Cause.—The ordinary notice is that of an “order to show cause.”⁴³

In re Burkhalter & Co. (Rogers v. People's Bank), 24 A. B. R. 553, 179 Fed. 403 (D. C. Ala.): “The petition prays for a rule upon the respondent to show cause why the money should not be restored to the fund by the respondent. This has the effect of bringing the respondent into court.”

No notice of the granting of the order to show cause itself is necessary, however.

In re (Philip) Brady, 21 A. B. R. 364, 169 Fed. 152 (D. C. Ky.): “While a notice might not have been improper, it was not at all necessary because the show-cause order itself gives notice and affords an opportunity on a certain named future day to show cause why the special relief sought should not be granted. The order, per se, gives him his day in court.”

The order to show cause on a summary petition to surrender assets may not run into another district; for whilst it is true that the bankruptcy court of one district in possession of a res may issue a citation upon a party in another district to show cause why certain contemplated action in relation to the res should not be taken, yet it is quite another thing to issue process to be affirmatively enforced in the other jurisdiction, such as a summary order requiring a third party to do or abstain from doing a certain thing.⁴⁴

§ 1839. Due Hearing Requisite.—Due hearing must be had, and reasonable opportunity therefor is requisite.⁴⁵

Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 A. B. R. 397, 116 Fed. 140 (C. C. A. Iowa): “The alleged contempt in this case was not committed in the presence of the court, and is therefore what the law denominates a ‘constructive contempt.’ It is a criminal offense for which the punishment may be imprisonment without limit of duration, and one charged with it has the same inalienable right to be heard in his defense that he would if charged with murder or any other crime. In Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505—a proceeding to punish for contempt—the Supreme Court said:

“There may be cases, undoubtedly, of such gross and outrageous conduct in

The principle that there must be citation before hearing, and hearing or opportunity of being heard before judgment, is essential to the security of all private rights. Without its observance, no one would be safe from oppression wherever power may be lodged.'

"And this was said in a case where the alleged contempt was committed in the presence of the court."

Thus, a party's own testimony taken on general examination, whether reduced to writing or verbally testified to, is admissible (but admissible only) in proceedings directed against the particular bankrupt or witness who has given the testimony and against whom relief is sought.⁴⁶ This rule applies to the officers of a bankrupt corporation.⁴⁷

But the testimony of other witnesses, although taken on general examination, is not admissible against the bankrupt or other witness;⁴⁸ except so far, of course, as any witness may be confronted with former contradictory statements for the purpose of discrediting him.

In re Alphin & Lake Cotton Co., 12 A. B. R. 655, 131 Fed. 824 (D. C. Ark.): "But does this rule apply to the deposition of Smith (a third party) * * *. We are therefore called upon to determine whether the testimony of a person other than the bankrupt, or, in case of a bankrupt corporation, not an officer or member thereof, taken and reduced to writing under the provisions of § 21a of the Bankruptcy Act, before any proceedings to require the parties against whom the testimony is to be used to show cause had been instituted, is admissible as evidence in a proceeding of this kind against the bankrupt, or, if the bankrupt is a corporation, against its officers. * * * As a general rule, depositions of witnesses taken in a former suit pending between one of the parties and a party other than the opponent in the last-tried action, cannot be read in evidence at the trial of the latter suit, even if there has been cross-examination, nor, for that matter, if the parties to both actions were the same, but the issues involved or objects sought to be attained in the two suits were different—especially if the witness was competent to testify in the last action, and could have been used by the party as such."

amine his witnesses and the matter is closed, he should not be permitted to reopen the case for the introduction of evidence which he subsequently concludes would have been an advantage to him, unless for special reasons.⁵⁰

It often occurs, that, during the midst or at the end of a general examination of the bankrupt, and especially when some particularly flagrant and incredible statement, or some telling admission has been made by the bankrupt in his testimony, the trustee's attorney arises in indignation and demands that the court issue a peremptory order upon the bankrupt to turn over to the trustee at once the certain property then under discussion. This must not be done, however.

§ 1840. Courts Proceed with Great Caution in Granting Summary Orders.—Courts exercise this power of ordering the turning over of property with the greatest caution, lest the imprisonment for contempt which would follow the failure to comply with an order to turn over property might rather amount to imprisonment for debt.⁵¹

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 167, 142 Fed. 68 (D. C. Ga.): "While bankruptcy courts are invested with power, as we have already shown, to require bankrupts to surrender their property and to enforce obedience to the order by attachment for contempt, yet 'the power is far-reaching and drastic and should be exercised with cautious discretion.' Indeed, it may be said that it should never be exercised, except in a plain case, and always with a due regard to the constitutional rights of the citizen. In this immediate connection the apt words of Mr. Justice Bradley may be appropriately employed: 'It is the duty of the courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be "Obsta principiis."' Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 635. It is objected, however, that the failure of courts to exercise with a firm hand the power to punish by contempt proceedings, designing and unscrupulous bankrupts would practicably deprive the law of its efficacy and convert it into a mere shield for the protection of dishonest debtors. In doubtful cases the power should not be exerted; and in view of the stringent provisions of law punishing fraudulent conduct and other forms of dishonesty on the part of the bankrupt, the objection is untenable. The original act not only contains ample provisions for the punishment of the bankrupt in the regular mode of trial by jury, for false swearing and for the fraudulent disposition of assets (§ 29), but § 14, as amended by the act of February 5, 1903, renders it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the contumacious or dishonest bankrupt to secure a discharge from his indebtedness."

In re Lesaius, 21 A. B. R. 23, 163 Fed. 614 (D. C. Pa.): "No doubt in cases of this kind an order is not to be made except with caution and upon convincing evidence, lest a commitment for disobedience on contempt proceedings to follow should in effect be nothing more than imprisonment for debt."

No person may be imprisoned for debt on process issued from the courts of the United States in a State whose laws prohibit imprisonment for debt.⁵² Imprisonment for debt in most States has been abolished, and, at any rate, is conceded to be contrary to our policy, and courts will be exceedingly careful that an order upon a debtor to turn over assets does not degenerate into an order to pay when the debtor has not the means to pay, which would result in nothing less than imprisonment for debt were the order to be followed by commitment for contempt.⁵³

Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 A. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 140 (C. C. A. Iowa): "A court of bankruptcy cannot sentence a bankrupt to imprisonment for debt, any more than any other court of the United States can do that thing; and what it cannot do directly it cannot do by indirection, under another name. It cannot, therefore, lawfully order a bankrupt to deliver to the trustee money or property he has not got in his possession or under his control, and imprison him if he does not comply with the order. Plainly, that would be imprisonment for debt, and the order is not relieved of that illegal and odious quality by calling it 'imprisonment for contempt.' The court that makes such an order is in contempt of the law and constitution, and not the bankrupt in contempt of the court."

Compare, to same effect, Trust Co. v. Wallis, 11 A. B. R. 364, 126 Fed. 464 (C. C. A. Pa.): "An order made under such circumstances would be as absurd as it is inconsistent with the principle of individual liberty."

In re Holland, 23 A. B. R. 835, 176 Fed. 624 (D. C. N. Y.): "But the more serious question is whether the contempt of court has been willful, and whether there is ability to repay, because, in the absence of either of these elements, an order directing punishment for contempt, by compelling the payment in indebtedness through the compulsion of imprisonment (it being apparent that, if the person in contempt is unable to pay, the money to release him must be raised by other people), would be perilously close to imprisonment for debt or crime, and no authority for that method of collection can be found under the laws of the United States."

In re Dickens, 23 A. B. R. 660, 175 Fed. 808 (D. C. Ala.): "This proceeding cannot be invoked as a means of coercing payment of debts, or to punish the bankrupt for transferring his property with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, if such be the fact."

In re Marks, 23 A. B. R. 911, 176 Fed. 1018 (D. C. Pa.): "Unless he has the physical ability to comply, he should not be committed for contempt; in practical effect, although perhaps not in legal contemplation, this would revive the abolished penalty of imprisonment for debt."

against does not violate the prohibition against imprisonment for debt.⁵⁴

In re Rosser, 4 A. B. R. 157, 158, 101 Fed. 562 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The contention that the commitment of a contumacious bankrupt to jail until he complies with such an order constitutes imprisonment for debt, and is prohibited by the constitution of Missouri, is untenable. Such an order is not an order for the payment of a debt. All the property of the bankrupt estate is placed in custodia legis by the adjudication in bankruptcy. Every part of the estate belongs to the court, and vests in the trustee when appointed, and the bankrupt and every other party who has the possession or control of any part of it holds that part as the agent and trustee of the court and its officer. The money or the property of the estate which a bankrupt thus holds is not a debt which he owes to the court or to the trustee, but it is the money or property of the court or of the trustee, which it is alike the duty of the court, of the referee, and of the bankrupt to place in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy for distribution to the creditors pursuant to the provisions of the bankrupt law. An order for the payment of money or the delivery of property, which is a part of the estate in bankruptcy, and which is in the control and possession of the party directed to pay or deliver it, at the time of the making of the order, is not an order for the payment of a debt, and a commitment to jail until such order is complied with is not imprisonment for debt, under section 16, article 2, of the constitution of Missouri, and section 8954 of the Revised Statutes of that State."

Schweer v. Brown, 12 A. B. R. 178, 130 Fed. 328 (C. C. Ark., affirmed in 12 A. B. R. 673, 195 U. S. 171): "The first contention of the bankrupt is that the enforcement of the order of the District Court would constitute imprisonment for debt, and would therefore be in contravention of the provision of the Constitution of Arkansas (Const. art. 3, § 16) that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action on mesne or final process unless in case of fraud. This is no longer a debatable question. Assuming the correctness of the finding of the referee and of the District Court that the bankrupt had in his possession property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy, his obligation to comply with the order of the court by surrendering it to the trustee is not the obligation to pay a debt. The adjudication in bankruptcy operated to transfer to the trustee the title to all of the property of the bankrupt which was subject to distribution among his creditors. His obligation and his duty to surrender to the trustee property in his possession which belongs to the trustee, and not to him, cannot be converted into a debt, at his option, by his mere refusal to comply with the order of the court."

In re Schlesinger, 4 A. B. R. 361, 97 Fed. 930 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming 3 A. B. R. 342): "The answer to this objection is that the order was not for the payment of a debt, but for the delivery by the bankrupt of the assets of his estate to his trustee in bankruptcy. He was not indebted to the trustee. The money was a part of his assets and estate, which had, by operation of law, become vested in the trustee; and, while the order in this class of cases is for the delivery of the bankrupt's property to the trustee, it is in no proper sense a judgment or decree for the payment of a debt. If the enforcement of an order for the delivery to the trustee in bankruptcy of the assets of an estate which had been converted into money could not be had except by an execution, the power of a bankruptcy court would be minimized, and the assets of estates in bankruptcy would be subject to great reduction."

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 167, 142 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. Ga.): "The order to pay over money or to surrender other property as the case may be, in the possession, of the bankrupt and forming part of his estate, is not an order for the payment of a debt, but an order for the surrender of assets placed in custodia legis by the adjudication; and his commitment upon refusing to comply with the order is not imprisonment for debt."

In re Friedman, 18 A. B. R. 712, 153 Fed. 939 (D. C. N. Y., affirmed in 20 A. B. R. 37, C. C. A.): "The opposition to the punishment of the persons proceeded against for contempt is really based upon a proposition perfectly sound in itself, but, I think, inapplicable to the matter in hand. A person who has no money should not be punished for contempt in failing to turn over money. But the very point of this proceeding is that it is the opinion of the court that the persons proceeded against have the money and do not tell the truth when they assert their inability to pay. Instances are numerous where this same objection was made in limine, and the court became satisfied in time, either that the parties incarcerated had spent the money, or entrusted it to still other persons who had made away with it, and thereupon the prisoners were released. But if any person into whose possession money is traced can avoid the legitimate consequence of the possession of that money by swearing that he no longer has it, or never had it, the administration of justice would become a farce."

Imprisonment for contempt for failing to surrender property found to be in one's possession is not imprisonment for debt. The party proceeded against also may be punished by commitment for contempt of court for disposing of assets which, by law, he was required to hold for creditors,⁵⁵ but that is wholly different from committing him for failure to turn them over. He should not be committed for contempt of court in failing to obey an order he no longer is able to obey, no matter how great may be his culpability in thus rendering himself incapable of complying with the order. This distinction is of importance, for his commitment in the one instance properly would be until he turned over the assets, no matter how long he might be in arriving at the point of surrender, whilst in the other instance the court, properly, would fix a definite period for the commitment.⁵⁶

The court, in In re Taylor, 7 A. B. R. 410, 114 Fed. 607 (D. C. Colo.), released a bankrupt who had been committed for failure to obey an order to turn over assets, after he had been imprisoned for a month, evidently becoming convinced that whilst the bankrupt ought to have assets he did not in fact have them, the court saying:

"In a proceeding of this kind the court is not authorized to imprison a bankrupt indefinitely, especially when it is not certainly known that he has the money which he is called upon to surrender, and upon the ground that the bankrupt has been kept a sufficient time, probably, to induce him to surrender the money if he has it. I suppose he must now be discharged. In making such an order

I would not have it understood that I am at all convinced that he has not this money in some place of concealment."

The language of the court just quoted would seem to indicate an incorrect conception of the rule. The court should not have ordered the imprisonment in the first instance when it was not certainly known that the bankrupt had the money.

Stuart v. Reynolds, 29 A. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 711 (C. C. A. Ala.): "When the contemnor is ordered to do the impossible, and this appears from the record, his commitment for failure to obey is arbitrary and illegal; and the order has no justification as a contempt proceeding. And, as it has no purpose except to force by imprisonment the payment of money on debts, it is difficult to see why it is not aptly called imprisonment for debt. When the imprisonment occurs under such circumstances, no matter what may be said to the contrary, it remains a fact that the debtor is arrested and imprisoned to force the payment of a debt in whole or in part." (Concurring opinion per Shelby, C. J.) Quoted on other points at §§ 1643, 1845.

§ 1842. Clear, Certain, Convincing or Satisfactory Proof, or Proof beyond Reasonable Doubt, Requisite.—The evidence must, therefore, show with certainty and to the satisfaction of the court, and, perhaps, even beyond a reasonable doubt, that the bankrupt or other person proceeded against does still possess the means of complying with the order. Thus, the proof must at least be satisfying and certain.⁵⁷

Compare, analogously, similar rule as to punishment for contempt for failure to obey order, In re Levy & Co., 15 A. B. R. 169, 142 Fed. 442 (C. C. A.): "We are not unmindful of the general rule that the power to imprison for contempt in such cases should be exercised with great caution and only upon proof which establishes the facts found beyond a reasonable doubt, or which must, in any event, be clear and convincing. But we are satisfied that upon the facts herein a jury would necessarily find the fact of possession or control upon an admitted receipt of goods and repeated refusals to explain or account for their disappearance. The question of the power and duty of the court in such cases has been so often passed upon that it is unnecessary to discuss it in this connection."

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 167, 142 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. Ga.): "In such cases the order to deliver should be based upon clear and convincing proof that the party charged has possession and control of the property, since the penalty of disobedience is imprisonment for contempt. The order operates in personam.

upon the person of the offender, by requiring him to do the thing commanded upon pain of punishment for refusal; and such an order is erroneous, as matter of law, unless it plainly and affirmatively appear from the record that he has the power to comply with its requirements. If, having the property, he fail to surrender it in obedience to the order of the court, he voluntarily submits himself to the consequences."

Indeed, the almost overwhelming number of the decisions have laid down the rule (although not in cases where the distinction has been sought to be made, and in many instances in cases of contempt rather than of summary orders to surrender assets) that the court must be satisfied "beyond a reasonable doubt" upon this point or that the evidence must be "practically incontestible."⁵⁸

Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 A. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131 (C. C. A. Iowa): "And it must be made to appear by evidence which leaves no reasonable doubt in the mind of the court on the subject. Evidence which is merely persuasive will not suffice."

In re Feldser, 14 A. B. R. 216, 134 Fed. 307 (D. C. Pa.): "It is necessary that it should be, as stated by the referee, found beyond a reasonable doubt that the person against whom the order is made has the funds or property in his possession or control."

In re Walder, 16 A. B. R. 41 (D. C. Conn.): "If the order shall be affirmed, and the bankrupt shall fail to comply with its terms, contempt proceedings will naturally follow, and no good purpose would be served by adopting a lower order of proof now than will be required when action shall be taken in the next step."

Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber, 4 A. B. R. 299, 101 Fed. 810 (D. C. Wash., affirmed, on review, in 104 Fed. 1006): "His answer is not conclusive, but the rule in such cases requires that the denial be overcome by evidence proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the bankrupt actually has the present possession or control of money, or that any alleged transfer or other disposition of it is a mere subterfuge which does not prevent him from producing it."

In re Adler, 12 A. B. R. 19, 129 Fed. 502 (D. C. Tenn.): "The court has no doubt of the power of the court, where it reasonably appears that the bankrupt has the money in his possession or under his control, to compel him to pay it over; but that fact must appear by something more substantial than mere presumptions or inferences taken from such circumstances as those which have been proven in this case. To invoke that power requires something like incontestible proof as against the bankrupt's denial that he has the money. The fact that he accounts falsely for his dissipation of the money, the fact that he does not satisfactorily disclose his uses of it, the fact that he evades the exhibition of his conduct in the premises, may indicate that he has defrauded his creditors, that he has dealt falsely with them, that he has egregiously perjured himself and foresworn the truth, and may invoke other remedies under the statute; but not this of a peremptory order to pay the money to the trustee, and punishment by contempt for a failure to do so. That remedy applies only to a fund which can be designated and traced into his possession, so that it is, in a legal sense, a tangible fund on which the court can lay its hands; and it cannot be made to apply to some intangible money supposed to be kept in his possession which he can be forced to pay by raising or procuring the money to meet the orders of the court. No doubt many bankrupts could be made, under the coercion of imprisonment, to find the money with which to meet such a demand; but the law does not proceed upon the theory of thus compelling a bankrupt to pay his creditors that which he owes them. It would be in substance and in fact a mere revival of the discarded remedy of imprisonment for debt. Therefore, unless the court can see that the bankrupt is in possession of the money, and withholding it wrongfully, it will not make such an order as that which is applied for in this case. The bankrupt may be indicted under the criminal features of the act, his discharge may be refused, he may be compelled by contempt proceedings to answer questions which he evades and refuses to answer, and to disclose the rights of action that may belong to the trustee by reason of his dealings with others; and thus in many ways he may be compelled to give the fullest statement of his affairs; but, no matter how fraudulent his conduct may be, the creditors cannot resort to this method of compelling him to pay his debts, when there is not sufficient proof that he is concealing money or other property in actual possession or control."

In re Goldfarb Bros., 12 A. B. R. 389, 131 Fed. 643 (D. C. Ga.): "The evidence in such a proceeding should satisfy the court beyond a reasonable doubt that the bankrupt has the money or goods in his possession and control, and is able to turn them over when so ordered. * * *

"While the evidence in the case at bar showed very strong probability, and even more than a probability, that the bankrupts in this case have not dealt fairly with their creditors or with the trustee, it is not, to my mind, sufficiently definite and convincing to justify me in saying from this evidence that they are withholding any definite amount, or anything like an approximate amount of money or goods from the trustee. Certainly it fails to show with any degree of satisfaction, that they have withheld the amount found by the referee as in their hands. If there was evidence in the record to show with some definiteness the amount of stock on hand in the bankrupts' stores on the first of June, 1903, and any evidence to show the amount of goods sold by them for cash which they did not deposit in bank; how much of this money was paid out, or if not paid out, with some degree of certainty, how much was retained, data would then be had from which to make some fair calculation. But in the absence of this, I do not think that any one can take this evidence, and this entire record, and say that the bankrupts have any amount of goods or money, fixing it even approximately, in their hands, which has not been turned over to the trustee."

In re Mayer, 3 A. B. R. 533, 98 Fed. 839 (D. C. Wis.): "An order requiring the bankrupt to turn over money or property withheld from the trustee, when the bankrupt denies possession or control, can be so enforced only on indubitable testimony which establishes either the fact of his present possession, or that a purported transfer or disposition is a mere subterfuge, by which the property manifestly remains within his control, and can be produced by him. And in a proceeding of this nature the order is sustainable only to the extent the testimony so establishes the fact of actual possession or control with all reasonable doubt resolved in favor of the bankrupt."

The better rule on reason would seem to be that the proof need not be beyond a reasonable doubt; that, because imprisonment for contempt may be the punishment for failure to comply with the order, does not make the proceedings criminal, and the rules of evidence of criminal cases do not apply.⁵⁹

In re Cole, 16 A. B. R. 303, 144 Fed. 392 (C. C. A. Me.): "The issue whether an order should run against a bankrupt, requiring the bankrupt to make payment to the trustee, is purely of a civil character: and therefore that part of the order before us which directed payment may be supported by a mere preponderance of the evidence, presumptions or inferences."

In re Alphin & Lake Cotton Co., 14 A. B. R. 197, 134 Fed. 477 (D. C. Ark.): "On behalf of the respondent it is urged that, to warrant a finding against respondent, the evidence must be beyond a reasonable doubt; that in view of the fact that, if an order is made requiring the respondent to pay over money, and he fails to comply with it, he will be imprisoned for contempt of court, it is urged that the proceedings must be treated as a criminal proceeding, and be governed by the same rules. This court cannot assent to this proposition. If the fact that a failure to comply with the order of the court may result in imprisonment of the respondent for contempt makes it a criminal case, many proceedings, and especially proceedings in courts of equity, would have to be treated as criminal proceedings. The failure on the part of a defendant to execute a conveyance decreed by a court of equity in a proceeding for specific performance may be enforced by imprisonment as for contempt. Refusal to answer interrogatories in a bill of discovery, refusal to pay alimony in a divorce suit, disobedience to a writ of mandamus, or violation of an injunction may result in such punishment; but no one will contend that for this reason such proceedings are in the nature of criminal actions. The punishment for contempt in bankruptcy proceedings is simply for disobedience of the judgment of the court after it is found that the respondent has money or property belonging to the bankrupt estate in his possession or under his control, and, although able to comply with the order of the court, willfully refuses to do so. These provisions in the Bankruptcy Act, authorizing courts of bankruptcy to enforce obedience to their orders by punishment as for contempt are neither novel nor unusual. They were included in every Bankruptcy Act, and similar provisions have been enacted by almost every State in the Union, including the State of Arkansas. In proceedings supplemental to or in aid of executions, courts are authorized by these statutes to enforce the surrender of assets subject to execution, and for this purpose may commit to jail any person refusing to comply with such order. In this State, section 3312, Kirby's Dig. St. Ark., contains such a provision. And by sections 61 and 62, Kirby's Dig., probate courts are authorized to enforce their orders for the surrender of property belonging to the estate of a deceased person by attachment. These statutes have been uniformly sustained as civil proceedings."

In re Dickens, 23 A. B. R. 660, 175 Fed. 808 (D. C. Ala.): "The authorities are agreed that a bankrupt should not be committed for contempt for failing to obey an order requiring him to turn over money or property to his trustee, unless the court is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of his present ability to comply with the order."

In re Cramer, 23 A. B. R. 637, 175 Fed. 879 (D. C. Mass.): "A consideration of the facts set forth by the referee in his report and of the evidence which accompanies the report has led me to believe that the referee must have acted, in refusing the order asked for, upon the theory that proof beyond a reasonable doubt was necessary to sustain a finding that there had been any concealment of property from the trustee. But that a fair preponderance of evidence in favor of such a conclusion is enough seems to me sufficiently well settled, at least in this Circuit. In re Cole (C. C. A.), 16 Am. B. R. 302, 144 Fed. 392. * * * That there was such a preponderance of evidence in this case I find myself unable to doubt."

However, the court should not make the order unless, on the same evidence, if the order be disobeyed, the court would punish for contempt.⁶⁰

Impliedly, In re (Wolfe) Adler, 21 A. B. R. 371, 170 Fed. 634 (D. C. Okla.): "Ordinarily in cases of this character where the bankrupt conceives the order of the referee to be invalid, he refuses to obey the order, whereupon the referee certifies the facts to the judge, for a summary hearing, and punishment as for contempt, if he finds the fact warrants it. While this case comes up on petition of the bankrupt to review the order of the referee, it practically raises the questions which would come up on a citation for contempt, for the reason that unless the order is one the enforcement of which can properly be effected by imprisonment for contempt, it would be a futile order to make, and the case will therefore be treated as one in which an order has been disobeyed and is before this court in a contempt proceeding. * * * If I am correct in the conclusion that the evidence upon which this order is based is not sufficient to warrant this court to order the bankrupt imprisoned for contempt, should he fail to obey it, then it follows that the order should not have been made. An order which cannot be enforced is a dead letter. The order will therefore be annulled and set aside."

Nor should the order be made upon a third person where there exists a commingling of the property belonging to the bankrupt estate with other property, unless the property belonging to the estate can be followed and sufficiently identified to enable a court officer to take it into his possession.

In re Jackier, 24 A. B. R. 790, 179 Fed. 720 (D. C. Pa.): "It is clear that such an order should not be made unless the goods can be followed and sufficiently identified to enable the marshal to take them into his possession. The evidence in the present case does not go far enough to meet these requirements, and for this reason the petition must fail. In a plenary suit where a receiver or a trustee may recover a verdict for the value of goods even if the goods themselves cannot be precisely identified, a recovery may rest upon proof of a somewhat less definite quality, but in a proceeding like this it is necessary to follow specific articles with reasonable certainty."

§ 1843. Bankrupt's Sworn Denial Not Conclusive.—The bankrupt's⁶¹ or agent's⁶² sworn denial is not conclusive.

In re Meier, 25 A. B. R. 272, 182 Fed. 799 (C. C. A. Mo.), quoted post, § 1850: "The settled rule is that, when property of a bankrupt estate is traced to the possession of one who receives it upon the eve of the bankruptcy of its owner, it is presumed to remain in his possession or under his control until he satisfactorily accounts to the court of bankruptcy for its disposition or disappearance; that the burden is upon him to satisfactorily so account for it; and that he cannot escape an order for its surrender by simply denying under oath that he has it, or that it is the property of the bankrupt estate."

In re Weber Co., 29 A. B. R. 217, 200 Fed. 404 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Upon the application to punish for contempt he made no explanation as to how or why it was that this particular sum had disappeared, merely denying that he ever had it. His statement that he had no money, when the proceeding for contempt was instituted, without some such explanation was insufficient and the judge quite properly held him on contempt for not paying it over. To excuse disobedience of the order by such general denial would make it easy to evade the requirements of the Bankruptcy Act."

Obiter, In re Goldfarb, 12 A. B. R. 386, 131 Fed. 643 (D. C. Ga.): "It will not do, of course, to say that the mere denial of the bankrupt that he has any money or effects in his possession should be sufficient to exonerate him from a charge of this kind."

In re Schachter, 9 A. B. R. 497 (D. C. Ga.): "Otherwise the court would be powerless, in the face of the bankrupt's oath, to require the production of property, however conclusive might be the evidence that such property was in his possession or control."

It has been held, however, that a denial by the bankrupt may be conclusive in some cases.

Stuart v. Reynolds, 29 A. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 709 (C. C. A. Ala.): "The argument claims, in effect, that the trial judge should give no weight to the contemnor's sworn denial. Reynolds, by sworn answer, denied the charges against him. The answer of the contemnor is not taken as true, in the sense that it cannot be contradicted. It has been held by English common law writers as unassailable, and some federal courts have followed that rule. Rapalje on Contempt, § 119, and cases cited. The cases on both sides of the proposition are too numerous for citation, but they may be found collected in the briefs and opinion in United States v. Shipp, 203 U. S. 563, where the court decides that 'when the acts alleged consist in taking part in a murder it cannot be admitted that a general denial and affidavit should dispose of the case;' but the opinion recognizes the fact that there may be cases in which the answer would be conclusive. 'It may be that even now,' said the court, 'If the sole question were the intent of an ambiguous act, the proposition would apply.' In cases, like the present case, where the bankrupt is accused of withholding and refusing to surrender large stocks of goods, and he answers on oath, denying possession and control of them, his control and possession being an affirmative allegation of the trustee, it is not at all unreasonable to look on his answer as sufficient to secure his discharge, unless evidence of the most convincing kind is offered to sustain the charge against him. The affirmative in such case would not be difficult to prove if the charge were true. In cases where it is charged that he withholds large sums of money, and he makes sworn denial, it is not consistent with the admitted rule that his guilt, to authorize commitment, must be proved to the exclusion of reasonable doubt—to say that the burden can be put on the contemnor to prove his negative averment.

"In such cases, the rule undoubtedly goes to this extent, to quote the words of an author, which he sustains by many citations of authority." Quoted on other points at §§ 1841, 1845.

the one in possession, to deliver up the property as ordered, it would be an unwarranted stretch of power on the part of the court to resort to summary proceeding for contempt for the enforcement of its order."

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 170, 142 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. Ga., concurring opinion): "It follows unquestionably that an order imprisoning a bankrupt for contempt for failure to obey a decree to pay money or surrender goods into court is erroneous as matter of law, where the bankrupt by sworn answer denies that he has the money or the goods, and it does not appear clearly and affirmatively from the record, notwithstanding his denials, that he has the power to comply with the decree. The bankrupt is at least entitled to that much protection, if, indeed, the courts are to refuse to follow the wise rule of the common law which makes the sworn denials of the answer sufficient defense to the contempt proceedings, leaving the question of the truth of the answer to be contested in a prosecution for perjury. * * *

"The bankrupts, in their answers, have sworn that they have not in their possession or under their control the money or goods involved in this proceeding. It seems to me that any evidence that conclusively showed they presently had in possession and control either the money or the goods would necessarily show where the same was kept or deposited, so that it could be reached by the process of the bankruptcy court, or of some court in a suit by the trustee. But however that may be, the record in this cause, taken as a whole, fails to show that the bankrupts had in their possession at the date of the order committing them for contempt either the money or the goods referred to. If the bankrupts have sworn falsely in their pleadings or on their examination—and this proceeding is based solely on that hypothesis—the law provides for their punishment on indictment and conviction by a procedure which secures to them the right of trial by jury with all its constitutional safeguards."

In re Adler, 12 A. B. R. 19, 129 Fed. 502 (D. C. Tenn.): "To invoke that power requires something like incontestible proof as against the bankrupt's sworn denial that he has the money."

§ 1845. Proof of Present Possession or Control Requisite.—Present possession or control must be proved. It will not do simply to prove the bankrupt ought still to have the possession or control: it must be proved that he actually still has possession or control.⁶⁴

Long Delay Fatal.—Long delay in filing the petition for surrender may be fatal to the trustee's claim. Thus, where discharge was refused on the ground of concealment of assets, a delay of four years in filing a petition to surrender the assets will nullify the effect as res judicata of the refusal of the discharge. In re Barton Bros., 18 A. B. R. 98, 149 Fed. 620 (D. C. Ark.).

Refusal of Discharge as Res Judicata.—As to the effect of a refusal of discharge on the ground of concealment of assets, see: In re Barton Bros., 18 A. B. R. 98, 149 Fed. 620 (D. C. [On review of contempt order rather than of order to surrender assets.] Stuart v. Reynolds, 29 A. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 709 (C. C. A. Ala.): "But the counsel seek also to apply a rule that is in fact applicable to a class of criminal cases—that 'the recent possession of stolen property casts upon the possessor a suspicion of guilt from which he should free himself.' The argument, in effect, is, that, the recent unexplained possession of stolen goods would be sufficient to adjudge the possessor guilty of larceny, unless he rebutted the inference; and that, therefore, by 'analogy,' the recent possession of the goods by the bankrupt is sufficient, unexplained, to show that he still has them, and therefore sufficient to prove, as required by law, that he is in contempt in failing to produce them. But the possession of stolen property, however recent and unexplained, creates no presumption of law that the possessor committed the larceny, and instructions to that effect, 'casting the burden of proving the innocent character of the possession upon the accused,' is erroneous. Underhill on Criminal Evidence (2d edition), § 299, and cases there cited. Such possession, in connection with proof of the larceny is, of course, legal evidence from which the jury may infer guilt. But there is no analogy between the larceny case and the contempt case. The possession in the former case is evidence against the possessor only when the corpus delicti is proved. The inference against him is based on the fact that the property has been proved to have been stolen, and such possession, though it does not change the burden of proof, casts suspicion on the possessor. But the property that the respondent is charged with withholding has not been stolen. His possession is assumed to have been acquired so as to vest title in him. His former possession of it casts no suspicion on him. There is no analogy between the instant case and larceny case that relieves the trustee from proving affirmatively and as required by law that the respondent had in his possession the property in question, and was therefore able to obey the referee's order. The fact that the property passed into the possession of the bankrupt is, of course, one step in the effort to prove that he still has it. But if the property consists of twenty thousand dollars' worth of 'goods, wares and merchandise,' as indicated in one of the alternative recitals of the referee's order, this proceeding, of itself, is sufficient to show that he has not in his actual possession goods of such bulk and value, for if he so held them, they would be taken from him by writ. If, when the referee's report and finding says that the property withheld is 'goods, wares, merchandise, money, and other property,' it is meant that the goods, etc., shown by the 'expert's' examination of his books, have been sold, and that he has in money the $20,000, then, of course, to show guilt proof is required that he has in present possession the $20,000 in money. No case is made for the application of the doctrine of 'presumptions' so as to dispense with the necessity for evidence."

Amer. Trust Co v. Wallis, 11 A. B. R. 360, 126 Fed. 464 (C. C. A. Penn.): "Has the referee, or the court in bankruptcy, power to order the bankrupt to deliver and turn over to the trustee in bankruptcy, money collected from his debt-selling him to pay over the proceeds illegally withheld from his trustee."

ors after he had received notice or knowledge of the filing of the petition by creditors to have him adjudged a bankrupt, which money has since passed into the possession of others and is not under the control of the bankrupt? * * * In the absence of fraud or concealment, the bankrupt court can only order the delivery of property to the trustee which the bankrupt is physically able to deliver up, having the same in his possession or control. If it shall appear that he is not physically able to deliver the property required by the order, then, confessedly, proceedings for contempt, by fine and imprisonment, would result in nothing, certainly not in compliance with the order. The contempt in this case could only be purged by a reiteration of the physical impossibility to comply with the order whose disobedience is being thus punished. An order made under such circumstances would be as absurd as it is inconsistent with the principles of individual liberty. But it may be said that, to have collected this money from his debtors and distributed it to his creditors, with knowledge of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, was in contempt of the Bankrupt Law and of the proceedings in bankruptcy, which were a caveat to all the world as to the effect of such proceedings upon the property of the bankrupt in case he should be so declared. This, however, would be but a constructive contempt, and not liable to the summary punishment by fine and imprisonment which may be inflicted for actual contempt, committed in the presence of the court or by open and defiant refusal to comply with its lawful commands, where compliance is physically possible."

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 169, 142 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. Ga., concurring opinion): "But, unless the person can perform the act commanded, the court has no authority to punish for a failure to perform it. Any other rule would be unreasonable and unjust. To imprison one for not doing what he cannot do is inconsistent with the principles of individual liberty. There is no statute or law which confers such authority. Imprisonment under such circumstances for failure to pay money may force the friends of the prisoner to raise and pay the required sum, but such imprisonment is unwarranted by law in a jurisdiction where imprisonment for debt is forbidden. Where the prisoner has the power to comply with the order, having the money or thing in question in his possession, he may, of course, be punished for his failure to surrender it, without conflict with any rule of law against imprisonment for debt."

In re Baum, 22 A. B. R. 295, 169 Fed. 410 (C. C. A. Ark.): "The court, of course, could not require the petitioner to do an impossible thing and then punish him for refusing to perform it. Therefore, from the fact that the court ordered him to pay over the money, it must necessarily have had before it testimony sufficient to satisfy it of his ability to comply."

Impliedly (on contempt for failure to surrender), In re Rogowski, 21 A. B. R. 553, 166 Fed. 165 (D. C. Ga.): "If the rule be adopted, announced in some cases, that where a bankrupt shortly before his failure has on hand a large stock of merchandise, and when proceedings in bankruptcy are instituted he is found to have but a small amount of goods, the stock being depleted to such an extent that it could not have occurred in the ordinary course of business, and there are circumstances to indicate that the goods have been purposely and fraudulently removed so as to prevent their going into the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, that then the court may require the bankrupt to produce the goods or give some reasonable explanation of their disappearance, and on his failure so to do may hold him for contempt, then a case is made out by the record here. * * * On the other hand, if the rule be that, notwithstanding such condition of things as indicated above, the receiver, trustee, or creditor proceeding against the bankrupt is unable to point out any particular property or cash so removed, and its location, definitely and specifically, contempt proceedings are not justified, then no case is made here. I think the latter rule has been adopted by the Circuit Court of Appeals for this Circuit in Samel v. Dodd."

In re Walder, 16 A. B. R. 42 (D. C. Conn.): "The real question, then, is whether or not the bankrupt has accounted for the disappearance of the goods which he has been ordered to return, or, to put it more definitely, whether his explanation leaves the matter in such a shape that the court can find beyond a reasonable doubt that he now has possession or control of the goods, or of the money into which they have been converted."

In re Barton Bros., 18 A. B. R. 100, 149 Fed. 620 (D. C. Ark.): "It is seen by an examination of the two decisions last quoted, unless they were in possession of the money at the time the order is made to pay over, the court has no power to make the order. If the court were to make the order for them to pay over when they were without the means of paying over, the court would then be requiring them to do an impossible thing, and the effect of such an order would be equivalent to imprisonment for debt."

In re Goldfarb, 12 A. B. R. 389, 131 Fed. 643 (D. C. Ga.): "A bankrupt cannot be required, under a proceeding for contempt, to do that which it is out of his power to do. The evidence in such a proceeding should satisfy the court beyond a reasonable doubt that the bankrupt has the money or goods in his possession and control and is able to turn them over when so ordered. If he has placed them out of his possession and control, no matter how foolishly or how wrongfully, he cannot be required by order to turn them over to a receiver or to a trustee."

In re Mayer, 3 A. B. R. 534, 98 Fed. 839 (D. C. Wis.): "It is not applicable, however, to reach property beyond the present control of the bankrupt, and in the hands of third parties claiming title derived prior to the proceedings in bankruptcy, although the transaction is manifestly fraudulent. Nor can this means or provision be employed to punish for frauds committed by the bankrupt against the Bankrupt Act, nor can it be used to coerce the bankrupt or transferees to make restitution of money or property previously transferred in fraud of the act. Frauds which are made criminal by the act are punishable only on conviction by the verdict of a jury, or on plea of guilty, and fraudulent transfers which have been consummated cannot be reached by this summary proceedings. * * *

"The finding of merchandise to the amount and value of $20,392.39 in the hands of the bankrupt is predicated on a showing which raises strong suspicion of a large amount of goods unaccounted for during the half year preceding the failure, but the testimony is deemed insufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt the fact of abstraction of goods from the stock. No surreptitious transactions are shown respecting the goods, notwithstanding inquiry and search to that end, which appear to have been diligently pursued. The discrepancy stated in the findings rests upon valuations taken of the stock on hand without the presence of the bankrupt, not in reference to the present inquiry, not based on the bills rendered for the purchases nor on the actual cost to the bankrupt, and offered for this issue after the goods have passed beyond reach for testing the valuation by the bills—a test which would otherwise be practicable for a large portion of the stock made up of recent purchases. The testimony of certain of the appraisers that such valuations would approximate the cost to the bankrupt is forcibly met by proof of numerous instances wherein the cost, as shown by the bills, materially exceed the appraisal; and, after extended enumerations from the inventory in comparison with the bills, an estimate of such excess is tendered which would cover the discrepancy. Whether the shortage is thus satisfactorily accounted for is not the test, but it is sufficient that the valuation which constitutes the sole basis of the charge is placed in doubt, both as to the definite amount and to the fact of the surreptitious taking of goods, and no ground is established for an order of this nature to turn over either certain goods or a definite amount on pain of imprisonment; and, so regarded, the order, to that extent, is not sustainable."

In re Milk Co., 16 A. B. R. 731 (D. C. Pa.): "It is now sought to make him personally answerable for this money; not by suit, upon the ground that it was unwarrantably paid out, with the ordinary incidents of execution, etc., in case a judgment should be recovered; but by summary order of court, for disobedience of which he may be attached and committed, for contempt. It is not pretended that the money sought to be reached is actually in his possession, or control, nor is any concealment or subterfuge alleged, or if it is, it has not been made out. All that is contended for is, that it shall be treated as constructively in his hands; that is to say, that he shall be held, as though it were, because it ought to be. But this is a misconception of the remedy invoked, and the power of the court under it. It is effective to lay hold of a specific fund or thing, under the dominion or control of the party ruled, but cannot legitimately go beyond that. Undoubtedly the court will not permit a colorable evasion, and that which is held by another, in his interest, or with his connivance, is the same as though held by the party himself. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224. An adverse claim on the other hand made in good faith on what is apparently a sufficient basis, will be respected, and, subject always to the right to determine whether it is so made, the court will not undertake to override or pass upon it. It is true that there are cases where a party has been required to disgorge funds which are traced into his hands, notwithstanding his protest that he has spent them in payment of debts, or has otherwise disposed of them. In re Gerstel, 10 Am. B. R. 411; In re Michael Kane, Ib. 478; Schweer v. Brown, 12 Am. B. R. 178; In re Henderson, Ib., 351. But the orders there made proceed upon an entirely different basis, and are carefully to be distinguished. The statement of the bankrupt was simply not believed, and was therefore disregarded. They are not to be construed as undertaking to compel him to turn over what he has not, but what the court finds, notwithstanding his denials, that he in fact has."

In re Sax, 15 A. B. R. 456 (D. C. Pa.): "If it be clearly shown that a bankrupt has money or goods in his possession that belong to his trustee, he must take the consequences of a refusal to hand them over, but he should not be summarily directed to pay unless the court is morally certain that there has been concealment and that obedience to the order can be enforced. If the bankrupt has been guilty of fraudulent concealment, but no longer has the goods or the money, he should be prosecuted. He should not be imprisoned on a summary proceeding for contempt, unless he is disobeying an order with which he is able to comply."

In re Longbottom & Sons, 15 A. B. R. 437, 142 Fed. 291 (D. C. Pa.): "He does not find as a fact that * * * the bankrupts have in their possession or control the sums of money. * * * Such payments may have been preferential but this fact is not sufficient to support an order on a bankrupt to pay over money which he has already parted with in good faith to one of his creditors."

But if the bankrupt or other person proceeded against have control, it is sufficient, though he have not actual possession.⁶⁵

65. But compare, on the facts, In re Green, 6 A. B. R. 270 (D. C. Penn.).

In re Cole, 16 A. B. R. 304, 144 Fed. 392 (C. C. A. Me.): "It also cannot be denied that a bankrupt whose funds are deposited with an agent, cannot excuse himself from not delivering over the same to the trustee because so deposited, unless he shows as a matter of fact an inability to obtain the actual possession of what he ought to surrender."

In re Dickens, 23 A. B. R. 660, 175 Fed. 808 (D. C. Ala.): "The order of the referee in this case is that the bankrupt shall turn over to the trustee in bankruptcy the sum of $20,000. I do not find in the record sufficient evidence to justify an order requiring the bankrupt to turn over to the trustee the specific sum of $20,000. As I understand the evidence and the contention of the petitioner, an order requiring the bankrupt to turn over $40,000 or $50,000, or more, might as well have been made. There is no evidence clearly or satisfactorily showing that the bankrupt had the sum of money named in his possession or control on November 4, 1909, when the order was made, or on October 26, 1909, when the petition praying said order was filed, or that he recently had such sum of money prior thereto. There is evidence in the record that at some time prior to the said dates the bankrupt was shown, in a certain proceeding in the State Chancery Court, to have been short in the sum of $20,000 and more in his accounts with the English Manufacturing Company, of which he was the surviving partner, conducting its business. But that fact falls far short of establishing the fact that he had that sum of money in his possession on or about October 26, 1909. We may surmise from the evidence that he had that amount of money or much more in the past year or two; but conjecture, or speculation, or mere inferences, are not sufficient in this proceeding. There must be clear and convincing proof on which the court must act in making an order for contempt."

§ 1846. Similarly, Agents and Court Officers Not Subject to Summary Orders as to Disbursements Already Made.—Similarly, agents and court officers are not subject to summary orders to surrender property or assets already out of their possession or disbursed.⁶⁶

§ 1847. Likewise, No Interest to Be Included.—Likewise, interest may not be included in the summary order to surrender;⁶⁷ unless of course interest actually has been received.

§ 1848. Whether Possession at Time of Filing Summary Petition or of Granting Order, Requisite.—Nor will it, in order to obtain the order of surrender, probably suffice simply to prove that he had the possession of the assets at the time of the filing of the trustee's petition and that he has since disposed of them, he no longer having control over them or their proceeds.⁶⁸

Although, of course, he can be punished for contempt for having thus disposed of them in the meantime.

§ 1849. Circumstantial Evidence Sufficient.—It is not necessary that the possession of the concealed assets be proved by the direct evidence of those who actually saw—circumstantial evidence is sufficient, if strong enough.⁶⁹

In re Cole, 16 A. B. R. 303, 144 Fed. 392 (C. C. A. Me.): "* * * may be supported by a mere preponderance of evidence, presumptions or inferences."

Obiter, In re Felson, 10 A. B. R. 716, 124 Fed. 288 (D. C. N. Y.): "In order to justify an order that the bankrupt pay over money or deliver property, it is not necessary that the evidence show clearly and distinctly that the bankrupt has the money or the property in his possession in such shape, or in such a location, that witnesses have seen it, and may, therefore, testify that the bankrupt actually has the money or property in his possession at some particular place. It is sufficient if the evidence discloses the fact that at a certain date the bankrupt had the property or the money in his possession and has not lost the same by fire or other casualty, for which he is not responsible, or has not expended the same in gambling or in some other manner."

Indeed, the question most usually arises with regard to stocks of merchandise or their proceeds where it is next to impossible to prove by eye witnesses that the debtor still has possession or control of the proceeds. Proof of such possession or control most frequently is simply a deduction from a multitude of circumstances, usually derived largely from the statements of the debtor himself, upon cross-examination, in his efforts to explain the disappearance of assets.⁷⁰

§ 1850. Presumption of Continued Possession When Property Once Traced and Shortage Unexplained.—If it is proved that the debtor recently had the possession, then the presumption that he still has possession will follow, unless he reasonably accounts for the disposition or disappearance of the assets.⁷¹

it distinctly appears that the bankrupt had actually spent the money after the bankruptcy, yet the court ordered him to refund it.

Thus, where the court is satisfied that property came into the hands of the bankrupt shortly before the adjudication, and the schedules give no account of the property or its proceeds, and the bankrupt fails to make any credible explanation on his examination or elsewhere showing what has become of such property, the court is authorized to consider the property or its proceeds still in the control of the bankrupt and to require that it be produced and surrendered to the trustee.⁷²

In one case it was stated that as a rule, the presumption of possession by the bankrupt arising from his failure to account for property traced to his recent custody, is applicable only in those jurisdictions wherein it is held that the bankrupt has the burden of proving his innocence. But compare [on review, however, of contempt order rather than of order for surrender of assets] Stuart v. Reynolds, 29 A. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 709 (C. C. A. Ala.), quoted at § 1845.

who receives it upon the eve of the bankruptcy of its owner, it is presumed to remain in his possession or under his control until he satisfactorily accounts to the court of bankruptcy for its disposition or disappearance; that the burden is upon him to satisfactorily so account for it: and that he cannot escape an order for its surrender by simply denying under oath that he has it, or that it is the property of the bankrupt estate." Quoted ante, § 1843.

In re Levy & Co., 15 A. B. R. 168, 142 Fed. 442 (C. C. In re McCormick, 3 A. B. R. 340, 97 Fed. 566 (D. C. N. Y.): "As respects the sum of $1500 ordered to be paid to the trustee, the explanation given by the bankrupt that he carried that money in his trousers pocket for some two or three weeks until he lost it by having his pocket picked upon an Eighth avenue car, after a visit to Coney Island, though quite possible in itself, is accompanied by such improbable circumstances stated by him as occurring before and after that it is difficult to be credited."

In re Royce Dry Goods Co., 13 A. B. R. 266, 133 Fed. 100 (D. C. Mo.): "Making every reasonable allowance based on the evidence, there was at the time the company made its assignment, the 4th day of January, 1904, a discrepancy between the property W. K. Royce stated in writing to have been on hand November 30, 1903, of at least $25,000. What became of this difference? The presumption of law in such cases, in the absence of satisfactory explanation, is that the property traced to the hands of the bankrupt a short time prior to the suspension of business remains in his hands, and the bankrupt must answer therefore."

In re Averick, 22 A. B. R. 518, 170 Fed. 521 (D. C. Pa.): "As shown by his bills and invoices, he had bought for the fall trade goods to the amount of $10,427.19; and had on hand at the beginning of the season, as found by the referee, stock in the two stores of the value of $5,000, $4,000 at Susquehanna and $1,000 at Sidney. He paid out some $3,025 to creditors on various accounts in the three months preceding his bankruptcy, and had $1,100 of other cash expenses; besides losing $300 by sales on credit. These figures show $4,202.19 worth of goods unaccounted for, which the bankrupt must either have in his possession and keep back from his trustee, or else have disposed of them and put the money in his pocket. The conclusion so reached depends of course on the evidence and the deductions made from it, of which there can be no just criticism, provided the figures taken are accurate. That brand new goods of over $10,000 went into these stores within the few months immediately preceding bankruptcy is not and cannot be denied, being proved by the bills or invoices. * * * The value of the goods which the bankrupt had when he failed is put in the schedules, where he would be inclined to make the most of them, at $6,800. According to the appraisers they were worth only $4,800, and they were sold by the trustee the latter part of January, after taking out the $300 exemption, at $3,900. It is now claimed, that at cost prices with which comparison is to be made, they were worth $7,600. But all things considered, the estimate of the bankrupt, when he made up his schedules, may well be taken. There was no controversy then, as there is now, and he had no purpose to serve in fixing the value except possibly to enhance it. * * * What is there, then, to relieve the bankrupt from the logic of the situation? He lost no money by speculation, bad investments, or gambling. He had no bad debts outside of the $300 already allowed him. Neither his store nor his personal expenses were large, and all that he paid out on this account as well as on business debts or for borrowed money has been credited. The amount of goods which he bought was altogether beyond the needs of his business, and having been received within three or at most four short months, immediately preceding his bankruptcy, had disappeared at the end of that time with almost nothing to show for it. He could not have sold them in the ordinary course of trade, his business not being large enough to take them. And if he disposed of them at forced sales it would have been known and attracted attention. It is this that constitutes the strength of the case against him and gives an adverse cast to his so-called failure. All things considered, the only fair conclusion with the figures so seriously against him as they are, is that he covertly made away with so much as he cannot account for, and should now in consequence be required to produce and turn it over."

Ripon Knitting Wks. v. Schreiber, 4 A. B. R. 299, 101 Fed. 810 (D. C. Wash., affirmed in 101 Fed. 1006): "The decision of the court that the bankrupt has at least $3000 in his possession or under his control is based upon convincing evidence to the effect that a large amount of money actually came into his possession within a few months before the adjudication. Of the money so received, more than $2000 remains entirely unaccounted for after giving full credit for all expenditures shown by the respondent's books of account, and after allowing in full the extravagant amount which he claims to have used for his personal expenses, and in dissolute practice, and losses in gambling. As to so much of the money, this is not a case of failure to give a satisfactory account, or to show in a satisfactory way how it has been disposed of, but it is a case of total failure to account in any way whatever, or to give any explanation. I am also convinced that the amount which the respondent claims to have lost in gambling is considerably in excess of the total amount of his actual losses. I am also convinced that, with a deliberately formed intention to defraud his creditors, the respondent proceeded methodically to make liberal purchases of merchandise on credit, and to dispose of his stock for cash as rapidly as possible. During the spring and summer months he conducted a slaughter sale, selling goods so much below the market value as to create a rush of business."

In re Gerstel, 10 A. B. R. 412, 413, 123 Fed. 166 (D. C. Ills.): "The rule in these cases is that the answer of the respondent is not conclusive on the court; that the court may proceed to inquire into the facts, and where it has been shown that property has come into the hands of the bankrupt shortly before the adjudication, that the schedules give no account either of this property or its proceeds, and that the bankrupt, by answer or by examination under oath, fails to make any credible explanation, showing what became of such property, the court, when so satisfied, is authorized to consider the property or its proceeds as being still in the possession or under the control of the bankrupt, and to require by order that it be produced and delivered to the trustee, and, upon failure to obey such order, to punish by imprisonment for contempt."

In re Lasky, 20 A. B. R. 729, 163 Fed. 99 (D. C. Ala.): "From the above-cited cases it seems clear to my mind that the following principle of law is well settled, to wit: That the property of a bankrupt estate, traced to the recent control or possession of the bankrupt, is presumed to remain there until he satisfactorily accounts to the court for its disposition or disappearance. Now let us see what may be properly deduced from the evidence as showing the property to be in the bankrupt's possession during the five months next before his adjudication:

A stock of goods on hand worth at least.....	$2,500 00
Goods purchased within the five months for which not a dollar was paid	6,500 00

How and for how much of this does he account? First: He says that all goods were sold and converted into cash. The evidence indicates that they brought about cost, but let us allow $2,000 for his selling cheap and the little remnant left in the store, so we have:

Item 1. Discount to get quick sales.....	$2,000 00
Item 2. (He gives in detail his cost of doing business, and under that evidence $100 a month is a liberal allowance, so) expenses of running store were.....	500 00
Item 3. (His checks show exactly what he paid on old accounts, freight, and drayage in these five months.) Paid for goods, freight, and drayage about.....	1,300 00
Item 4. Goldberg's living expenses, $200 per month.....	1,000 00
Item 5. Lasky's living expenses, $200 per month.....	1,000 00
Item 6. Accident to sister.....	500 00
Item 7. Mother's and sister's trips.....	300 00
Item 8. Money which Mr. and Mrs. Goldberg took away for living expenses, about	300 00
Total	$6,900 00

This resolves every doubt in the bankrupt's favor and is more liberal to him than are the reported cases. It shows $2,100 coming into his possession and wholly unaccounted for, and the estimate made by the court certainly not overdrawn and, if anything, is rather below what may be sustained by the evidence. It is not attempted to state the exact amount of the bankrupt's frauds and concealments. The law does not require this, for, as is said in In re Schlesinger (D. C.), 3 Am. B. R. 342, 97 Fed. 930: 'A debtor is not, however, to go scott-free because the exact amount of his frauds and concealments are not ascertainable, nor should the Bankrupt Act be suffered to be paralyzed as respects the creditors by such means.' A merchant should not be permitted to shut his eyes to the disappearance of his goods, and when called upon by the court to account therefor escape the penalty of the law by simply saying: 'I have not the goods. I have no money.'

In re Kane, 10 A. B. R. 478, 125 Fed. 984 (D. C. Pa.): "Money having been traced directly into his hands, he cannot swear himself free from liability by any such general and sweeping statement."

In re Shachter, 9 A. B. R. 499 (D. C. Ga.): "The present case measures up exactly to the rule stated by Judge Sanborn (in concurring opinion in Boyd v. Glücklich, 8 A. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131) as follows: 'The rule by which this issue is to be determined is that the property of the bankrupt estate traced to the recent possession or control of the bankrupt is presumed to remain there until he satisfactorily accounts to the court for its disposition or disappearance.'"

In re Epstein, 15 A. B. R. 711 (D. C. Penn.): "Where it is shown that the

bankrupts have purchased goods to the extent of $20,000 within three months of their bankruptcy and have no other explanation to give of the disappearance of large sums of money traced to their hands than a general denial, entirely unsupported by facts or credible circumstances, the referee is justified in finding that property has been concealed and an order to pay will be sustained."

In re Fidler & Son, 21 A. B. R. 101, 163 Fed. 973 (D. C. Pa.): "The bankrupts have absolutely no explanation to offer for this large discrepancy. Their attention being called to it, that was the express answer which they gave. They admittedly experienced no loss by theft nor by fire, and, doing a cash and not a credit business, as they claim, they had no bad debts, if any could have accumulated in the short time in question. Indeed they even go so far as to say that they did not know that they were insolvent, and only went into bankruptcy because suits were being brought against them. But $8,000 worth of goods, obtained inside of three short months, if their bills are to be relied on, are not to be disposed of upon any such convenient lack of knowledge. They certainly could not have disappeared through the ordinary and legitimate channels without leaving some trace behind them."

In re Cramer, 23 A. B. R. 637, 175 Fed. 879 (D. C. Mass.): "The bankrupt may have been, as the referee thinks, a person of an extremely low order of intelligence; but there is no question that he had intelligence enough to carry on business as a wholesale and retail dealer in picture frames for five years in Worcester, not to mention," etc. "The purchases of goods on credit and their subsequent disappearance, or the disappearance of money received from them, if sold, within so short a time before the bankruptcy and while the bankrupt knew he was insolvent, together with the entire failure of the bankrupt to meet by reasonable and honest explanation the presumption against him which these facts create, would to my mind go very far, without more, to prove him guilty, of concealment. If, under the pressure of an inquiry into these doings of his, he has also made admissions of the kind testified to by the trustee, I am unable to believe that justice will be done if the case be treated as one wherein the power of the court to compel restitution of what is being dishonestly withheld from creditors cannot be exercised for want of sufficient evidence. The order denying the trustee's petition is disapproved, and is to be vacated. On the case as now presented, the referee, in my judgment, should make such an order as has been requested by the trustee."

And the same rules prevail where it is traced into the hands of an agent of the bankrupt.⁷³

But see, limitations of rule.^{73a}

In re Adler, 12 A. B. R. 19, 129 Fed. 502 (D. C. statute; but not this of a peremptory order to pay the money to the trustee, and punishment by contempt for failure to do so."

In re Idzall, 2 A. B. R. 741, 96 Fed. 314 (D. C. Iowa): "The mere fact of inability to account for money or property in possession of the bankrupt shortly prior to his bankruptcy does not itself show concealment of it."

In re Sax, 15 A. B. R. 456 (D. C. Pa.): "I do not deny that the bankrupt, who is certainly not a literate person has probably failed to account satisfactorily for some of the merchandise that went into his business during the year before his failure, but calculations and estimates based on such uncertain evidence as is now before the court are not reliable enough to justify an order that may send a man to jail for an indefinite period."

In re Switzer, 15 A. B. R. 470, 140 Fed. 976 (D. C. S. Car.): "The very earnest and learned counsel for the creditors has pressed very strongly for said exercise of authority, claiming that, in the nature of things, it is impossible for him to offer direct testimony showing that the bankrupt is in possession of goods or money; and his case, briefly stated, is that, having shown that the bankrupt was in possession of a certain stock of merchandise at a time stated, and that at the time he was adjudged bankrupt his stock of merchandise was only of a certain value, and that he has only shown payments of a given amount, it should follow as a conclusion of law that he is in the actual possession of all that he has not accounted for. If this rule was generally applied, scarcely any bankrupt would escape a like proceeding, for it is very rare that a bankrupt can satisfactorily account for everything which he ought to have in his possession and which he has not, and the result would be that the judge, under the guise of proceedings for contempt, could be called upon to try without a jury nearly every man who passes through the court of bankruptcy."

In re Lesaius, 21 A. B. R. 23, 163 Fed. 614 (D. C. Pa.): "It is also to be kept in mind that the object is to recover tangible property, and not to punish as on indictment for a fraudulent concealment or abstraction."

In re Rogowski, 21 A. B. R. 553, 166 Fed. 165 (D. C. Ga.): "If the rule be adopted, announced in some cases, that where a bankrupt shortly before his failure has on hand a large stock of merchandise, and when proceedings in bankruptcy are instituted he is found to have but a small amount of goods, the stock being depleted to such an extent that it could not have occurred in the ordinary course of business, and there are circumstances to indicate that the goods have been purposely and fraudulently removed so as to prevent their going into the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, that then the court may require the bankrupt to produce the goods or give some reasonable explanation of their disappearance, and on his failure so to do may hold him for contempt, then a case is made out by the record here. See concurring opinion of Sanborn, Circuit Judge, in Boyd v. Glucklich, 8 Am. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131-142, 53 C. C. A. 451, and cases cited. On the other hand, if the rule be that, notwithstanding such condition of things as indicated above, the receiver, trustee, or creditor proceeding against the bankrupt is unable to point out any particular property or cash so removed, and its location, definitely and specifically, contempt proceedings are not justified, then no case is made here. I think the latter rule has been adopted by the Circuit Court of Appeals for this circuit in Samel v. Dodd, 16 Am. B. R. 163, 142 Fed. 68, 73 C. C. A. 254."

And where reasonable accounting is made, no order will be granted.

In re Reese, 22 A. B. R. 521, 170 Fed. 986 (D. C. Pa.): "This shows a difference of $150.00 against the bankrupt, but must be regarded as practically balancing. Depending as it does on mere estimates, on one side and the other, it cannot be expected to come out even. And it is only in any case of this kind, where there are great discrepancies which cannot be explained except on the basis that the bankrupt has made away with his property, that the matter can be laid hold of by a summary order. Being satisfied therefore that the bankrupt has cleared himself in the present instance of the charge made by the trustee of withholding and appropriating what belongs to his creditors. The exceptions are sustained, and the petition of the trustee is dismissed."

§ 1851. Rejecting Improbable Explanations.—And the court is not debarred from using its own common sense in rejecting testimony that seems to it improbable.⁷⁴

Schweer v. Brown, 12 A. B. R. 181, 130 Fed. 328 (C. C. A. Ark.): "In proceedings of this character no punishment can be inflicted for reprehensible and dishonest conduct, but, in a careful effort to avoid such result, a court, when called upon to pass upon the weight of testimony and the credibility of witnesses, is not to be deprived of those faculties of judgment and discrimination as to what is true or probable on the one hand, and untrue, improbable, or absurd, upon the other, which are permitted to be exercised by juries in similar cases."

In re Deuell, 4 A. B. R. 60, 100 Fed. 634 (D. C. Mo.): "When asked if she did not talk this matter over with her husband and son, who were assisting her in running the store, and ascertain what explanation they gave, or as to what theory they had to account therefor, her answer was equally uncertain and indefinite. As the goods were not on hand when she was declared a bankrupt and as she claims the goods had not been spirited away, and testifies that they had been received and sold, the conclusion is irresistible that she must have the money in her possession, or that she knows who did receive it, and who has it. The business was conducted in her name. She thus published to the world that she was capable of transacting business, and she obtained credit for these goods upon the faith of her credibility and business capacity. Shall she be permitted thus to obtain property of other people, secrete and appropriate it, without even so much as rendering any intelligent account thereof, and escape the pains and penalties imposed by the bankrupt law, simply because she is a woman, and under the naked assumption, or bare possibility, that the husband and son embezzled the proceeds of these goods? When she assumed the office of a tradesman she became amenable to its obligations and responsibilities."

In re Lasky, 20 A. B. R. 729, 163 Fed. 99 (D. C. In re Kane, 12 A. B. R. 444 (D. C. N. Y.): "Having regard to what is involved it is to be exercised with caution; but where a proper case is presented by the evidence, the court is not to allow itself to be deceived by evasions nor deterred by the consequences."

Instance, In re Weinreb, 16 A. B. R. 702, 146 Fed. 243 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "This story is extremely improbable [accounting for assets by saying had purchased $18,200 smuggled diamonds from a stranger]. Of course, smuggled goods may be purchased, and, if purchased, the acts of the parties engaged in such a business are frequently stealthy and furtive. But if that is the explanation of the circumstances of this purchase, it is not enough for the bankrupts to simply say so. Their story, if true, could be corroborated in various ways. But it is entirely uncorroborated. It is precisely the kind of a story which bankrupts would tell, who had been engaged in the diamond business, and had been planning a fraudulent bankruptcy and had drawn $18,000 in cash just before their bankruptcy, for the purpose of concealing it from their creditors. I cannot avoid the conclusion that their story is an entire fabrication, and that the bankrupts have this money concealed from their creditors, and that they should be ordered to pay it to the trustee."

Instance, In re Friedman, 18 A. B. R. 712, 153 Fed. 939 (D. C. N. Y.) affirmed in 20 A. B. R. 37, 161 Fed. 260 (C. C. A.): "The story of Celia Friedman is inherently preposterous, as well as demonstrably false."

[1867] In re Goodridge, Fed. Cas. 5,547: "A fraud of this kind here alleged is one that can seldom be proved by other than circumstantial evidence. The parties to the transaction are generally, as in this case, the only witnesses, and if their stories are to be believed as told, no fraud can be established. External evidence is not to be had, and the truth must be reached by examining the evidence of the alleged parties to the fraud, and weighing its probabilities, and scrutinizing its general tenor and manner. * * * The determination of the question of fraud or no fraud must, under such circumstances, depend upon the impression made by the evidence of the parties concerned. Of course, those who would commit such a fraud, would swear falsely to carry it through. If their positive testimony to the honesty of the transaction is overborne by badges and indicia of fraud, deduced from their own testimony, the conclusion must be that there was fraud."

that they were paid out. To all enquiries for particulars, his answer was 'I don't know' or 'I don't remember.' * * * The ignorance he professed in regard to the disposition of his money is altogether incredible. I cannot regard his testimony on this subject as other than a tissue of perjuries. The destruction of vouchers while his papers in bankruptcy were preparing, is not consistent with any other inference than the intent to conceal the facts and defraud his creditors."

But the court need not refuse to accept admissions against interest as proof, simply because the bankrupt is such an enormous liar that even his testimony, adverse to his own interest, is of doubtful reliability—he should not escape through excessive falsehood.⁷⁶

Compare, to this effect, Murray v. Joseph, 16 A. B. R. 717, 146 Fed. 260 (D. C. N. Y.): "A trustee in bankruptcy has to do the best he can, and it would not do in such cases if you formed an unfavorable opinion of any of the witnesses to simply say you cannot put any reliance in such evidence, and thereby won't decide anything. It is just this class of cases in which it is the duty of the jury to investigate the case carefully and see that justice is done."

Failure to produce important witnesses is an indication of falsehood.⁷⁷

§ 1852. No Presumption of Continued Possession if Circumstances Raise Counter Presumption.—If, from the nature of the circumstances, an equal presumption of loss or expenditure arises, the presumption of continued possession, of course, will not prevail. Thus, simply to prove that a business man received a consignment of goods would not raise a presumption that he still has them, for the circumstances would of themselves raise the offsetting presumption that these goods were sold. The presumption of continued possession is, then, only as strong as the nature of the circumstances permits. Thus, property in a wife's possession is not presumptively also in the bankrupt husband's control, and a summary order on the bankrupt is improper where the proof shows the bankrupt's wife still in possession of the assets, claiming to have received them from the bankrupt in repayment of a loan, even though the loan was fictitious, there being no presumption that the assets are still within the bankrupt's control from the mere fact that they are in the hands of his wife. The wife is also an adverse claimant and she cannot be denied the right to a plenary action to determine her right to the assets, by an order on her husband which she might feel she ought to aid him in obeying.⁷⁸

In re Adler, 12 A. B. R. 19, 129 Fed. 502 (D. C. Tenn.), where the bankrupt, however, himself said the statements "were untrue."

Refusal because of Incrimination.—The bankrupt may file a special plea to the petition for such an order, upon

§ 1853. Order to Describe Property—Orders to Pay Value of Goods, Alternative Orders, etc.—The order for surrender must describe definitely the property to be surrendered.⁷⁹

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 167, 142 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. Ga.): "The order should describe the property with reasonable certainty in order to assure its identity, and the command of the court to the bankrupt should be to surrender the very property sought to be recovered."

The order should follow the pleadings as to the description of the property.⁸⁰

Lesaius v. Goodman, 21 A. B. R. 446, 165 Fed. 889 (C. C. A. Pa.): "The other issue presented the question as to whether the bankrupt had fraudulently retained $10,000, or any part of that sum. The court's order, however, does not deal with that issue. It directs the bankrupt, not to pay over $4,000 which he has fraudulently retained, but to deliver 'gentlemen's furnishings and clothing to the extent and of the value of $4,000.' We think the order is not supported by the pleadings, and that it must be reversed."

It has been held, indeed, that the order should not be to pay the "value" of the goods: that the finding should not be so indefinite as not to show in what form the property exists at the present time.

Samel v. Dodd, 16 A. B. R. 167, 142 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. Ga.): "It is thus observed that the court found goods, wares and merchandise to be in possession of the bankrupts, and, in effect, rendered judgment for their value, and ordered the commitment of the bankrupts until the amount should be paid. We are of opinion that the order cannot be sustained. If the bankrupts had in their possession merchandise, which should have been delivered to the trustee, the appropriate order would have been for the delivery of merchandise. If they had money, which formed part of their estate, they should have been required to pay over money. * * *

"But it is not within the power of the court, in such a proceeding, to render judgment for the value of the property ascertained to be in the possession of, and contumaciously withheld by, a bankrupt, and attach for contempt upon his refusal to pay. Such procedure would approach dangerously near the line, if it did not overstep it, of imprisonment for debt. * * *

"It seems to me that any evidence that conclusively showed they presently had in possession and control either the money or the goods would necessarily the ground that to require him to answer thereto would tend to subject him to criminal prosecution, In re Glassner, et al., 8 A. B. R. 184 (Ref. Md.).

But the bankrupt may not refuse to surrender "documents" title to which is vested in the trustee, because they might furnish incriminating evidence against himself. See ante, § 1538.

And he must produce them for inspection in court for the court to ascertain whether incriminating evidence is contained therein and must not wholly refuse to produce the documents. See ante, § 1560.

Withholding Discharge until Sufficient Accounting Made.—In several cases the courts have assumed the doubtful power of withholding a discharge until the bankrupt has made a sufficient accounting, even where the facts were not sufficient to bar discharge nor to warrant an order upon the bankrupt to turn over property. In re Walther, 2 A. show where the same was kept or deposited, so that it could be reached by the process of the bankruptcy court, or of some court in a suit by the trustee."

In re Lesains, 21 A. B. R. 23, 163 Fed. 614 (D. C. Pa.): "The order it may be should be to turn over the goods, and not in the alternative to pay the value, the proceedings, as just stated, being supposed to be directed to the recovery of specific property. * * * But that does not prevent its being measured by its value; that being the only way to indicate the extent of it. Neither is it necessary to do more than describe the property generally, as consisting for instance in the present case of gentlemen's furnishings and clothing, such as the bankrupt was carrying. To require greater particularity would make such proceedings practically nugatory. * * * This would not be necessary even to convict upon indictment."

The rule has even been laid down, though too strictly, that there must be a finding not only of the precise property but also of its location.

In re Rogowski, 21 A. B. R. 553, 166 Fed. 165 (D. C. Ga.): "On the other hand, if the rule be that, notwithstanding such condition of things as indicated above (unexplained and abnormal shrinkage of assets on the eve of bankruptcy) the receiver, trustee or creditor proceeding against the bankrupt is unable to point out any particular property or cash so removed, and its location, definitely and specifically contempt proceedings are not justified, then no case is made here. I think the latter rule has been adopted by the Circuit Court of Appeals for this circuit."

And the order should not be made unless the goods can be followed and be sufficiently identified to enable the marshal to seize them.⁸¹

However on review, if the record does not contain the evidence, yet the Circuit Court of Appeals will presume from the fact that the order was granted to pay over money, that the property was money and that it was shown to be still in the bankrupt's control.⁸²

§ 1854. Review of Summary Orders—Set Aside Only for Manifest Error.—On review of a referee's summary order, the District Court will not set aside the order except in case of manifest error.⁸³

Impliedly, In re Cole, 14 A. B. R. 389, 133 Fed. 414 (D. C. Me., affirmed in 16 A. B. R. 303, 144 Fed. 392): "The referee has found affirmatively that the bankrupt has under her control the balance of the fund to the amount of $2,425, and that she had possession or control of it at the date of the filing of the petition bankruptcy; that she has withheld and concealed the same from her trustee, and is now withholding and concealing the same from him. sion of a competent referee, who has seen the witnesses, is entitled to great weight."

But see, contra, In re Mayer, 3 A. B. R. 533, 98 Fed. 839 (D. C. Wis.): "On review of the order in such case, I am of opinion that the ordinary rule as to the force of the findings of fact is not applicable, for the reason that determination is not governed by the weight of testimony. Enforcement of the order devolves upon the reviewing court, and with it the duty to ascertain that cause exists, beyond reasonable doubt, for the exercise of the severe means thus intrusted to the court, where an error in judgment as to the credibility or force of testimony involves indeterminate imprisonment without just cause. Let this opinion be certified to the referee for modification of the order in accordance therewith, and further proceedings thereupon as advised."

Nor will the Circuit Court of Appeals set aside the District Court's order affirming the referee's summary order except for manifest error.

In re Cole, 16 A. B. R. 303, 144 Fed. 392 (C. C. A. Me., affirming 14 A. B. R. 389): "The question whether the money was in the possession or control of Mrs. Cole is, under the circumstances of this case, what the law designates a question of fact, over which we could, of course, have no jurisdiction on this petition, which raises only questions of law, unless the finding of the District Court against her was so wholly unjustified on the proofs as would require us, on a writ of error, to set aside a verdict of the jury for want of any evidence whatever to sustain it, or for some other reason kindred thereto."

In re Levy & Co., 15 A. B. R. 166, 142 Fed. 443 (C. C. A.): "The referee has ruled, and the court has affirmed his ruling, that this failure of the petitioner to account sufficiently establishes that the goods are still in his possession. If it be assumed that there might otherwise have been a question as to the correctness of the view taken by the court, yet, as its order is based on the finding of the referee on all the evidence that the bankrupts have the property or its value in their possession, this order should not be reversed except upon clear proof of error."

And where the record, upon a petition to revise an order that a bankrupt pay into court a certain amount in cash, does not contain the evidence taken before the referee, it will be presumed that the facts were sufficient to sustain his finding and order, and only matters of law, apparent upon the face of the record, may be considered.⁸⁴

Likewise, where an order requires a bankrupt to pay over money, it will be presumed that such assets consisted of money in his possession and under his control at the time the order was made, and that he was able to comply with the order.⁸⁵

Obiter, In re Rosser, 4 A. B. R. 153, 101 Fed. 562 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The power of a court to punish for contempt of its proceedings, for disobedience of its lawful orders, is inherent in the being of every court of general jurisdiction. Without it the orders of a court would be without force or effect, would command neither respect nor obedience, and there would be neither warrant nor reason for its longer existence. From the earliest annals of our law this power has been exercised. It rests upon the fundamental principles of judicial establishments, and is inseparable from the existence, as well as from the usefulness, of a court of general jurisdiction."

The court may proceed either under the general power of all courts to punish contempt^{88a} as restricted by the provisions of the Federal Statute, U. S. Rev. Stat., § 725, specifying contempts in federal courts,^{88b} or under the specific provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, § 2 (13) for enforcing obedience to lawful orders, and § 2 (16) to punish contempts committed before referees.^{88c}

Punishment for contempt for failure to surrender property when ordered to do so is not the exercise of any new function in a court of equity.⁸⁹

An officer of a state court may be punished for such contempt,⁹⁰ but that he was acting under advice of counsel may excuse him.⁹¹ Advice of counsel will not excuse the failure of a petitioning creditor, to whom under claim of ownership a receiver in bankruptcy had surrendered certain property, to return the property where, later, it was judicially determined that the petitioner, under mistaken advice of counsel, had waived his claim as mortgagee (counsel considering it void for lack of proper record), and had assumed the sole position of a creditor.⁹²

to obey such order, ought not to go behind the order itself, if the order was not appealed from, and ought to take into consideration only facts arising subsequently thereto, leaving the propriety of the order itself remediable by appeal or petition for review, since otherwise the contempt proceedings would be diverted into an appeal from the order of surrender itself.⁹³

In re Lans, 19 A. B. R. 458, 158 Fed. 610 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Having failed to secure a review of the order of December 14th, 1906, which found that the bankrupt was concealing property and directed him to turn it over to the trustee, he is in no position to question its propriety upon this petition which brings up only the order adjudging him to be in contempt for failure to comply with the provisions of said order of December 14th."

In re Haring, 29 A. B. R. 387, 193 Fed. 168 (C. C. A. Mich.): "It appears both by the referee's findings and the court's opinion that the referee's statement of the account was in several material respects but an approximation; the findings do not purport to be based solely upon book entries or other controlling data. Surely it was quite as open to the judge, as it was to the referee, to draw inferences and deduce a conclusion from such a source as this. It was not even a case of conflicting evidence, depending upon the credibility of witnesses who were before the referee and not the court. Ohio Valley Bank Co. v. Mack (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 40, 163 Fed. 155, 158, 89 C. C. A. 605; In re Swift (D. C. Mass.), 9 Am. B. R. 237, 118 Fed. 348, 349; 1 Loveland on Bankruptcy, 4th ed., pp. 225, 226. The court, not the referee, was charged with the responsibility of exercising the power of commitment for contempt (Smith v. Belford (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 291, 106 Fed. 658, 661); and it will not do to say that findings like these operate (if indeed findings of the referee can ever operate) as an estoppel upon the bankrupt court or otherwise conclude it."

Compare, In re Haring, 27 A. B. R. 285, 193 Fed. 168 (D. C. Mich.): "There are two distinct lines of decision upon this subject founded upon different and divergent theories and conceptions of the law. In one line are the courts which hold in substance that an order of the referee, made after a hearing and supported by evidence, adjudging the bankrupt to have in his possession and control a certain sum of money or specific property belonging to his estate and requiring him to turn over to the trustee such money or property, which order he neither obeys nor seeks to have reviewed, creates a presumption of the ability of the bankrupt to comply with the order and casts upon him the burden of proving the contrary; and that such presumption becomes final and conclusive unless the bankrupt gives an adequate explanation of what has become of the money or property.

"In the other line are the courts which hold in substance that in proceedings against a bankrupt for contempt for failure to obey an order of the referee requiring him to turn over money or property to the trustee, such order may be referred to and given the weight to which it is entitled under all the circumstances, but the court should make a new and independent investigation and should consider all material evidence relating to what preceded as well as what followed the referee's report and, from such investigation and from such evidence, determine whether or not the order of the referee was justified, whether or not the bankrupt's disobedience thereof is willful and contumacious and whether or not the bankrupt has the present ability to comply therewith."

In re Home Discount Co., 17 A. B. R. 175, 147 Fed. 538 (D. C. Ala.): "He cannot ignore the order until the referee under § 14 certifies his disobedience to the judge, and then bring forward again, in his defense, matter contested before the referee prior to the making of the order, provided the order itself be not void. The method of correcting error is by appeal, and not by disobedience."

However some decisions that touch upon the point, although not directly deciding the proposition, seem to indicate that on contempt proceedings the evidence on which the original order was based may be re-examined.⁹⁴

At any rate, the order for surrender makes a prima facie case of possession, such that the trustee's petition for punishment for contempt need not allege ability to comply with the original order for surrender.

In re Stavrahn, 23 A. B. R. 168, 174 Fed. 330 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "We do not find in the statute, the General Orders or in any decision which has been called to our attention any authority for the proposition that the petition should contain an affirmative allegation of the bankrupt's present ability to comply with the order requiring him to turn over property. That is more properly a matter of defense. When the moving papers indicate that it has been determined after a full hearing that the bankrupt has concealed some specific piece of property; that he has been ordered to turn it over to the trustee; that he has been duly served with such order, and that he has failed to comply with such order; sufficient is charged to put him upon his defense. Of course he should have notice of the motion to punish him for such disobedience and have his 'day in court' when he may present what he may have to urge against such motion and an opportunity to be heard. All these the petitioner had in this case. * * * When the matter was before the District Court in February, 1909, on the final application to punish the bankrupt for a wilful and contumacious disobedience of the order of August 5, 1908, directing him to pay over, it appeared that before the last-named order was made there had been two adjudications, after full hearings, whereat the bankrupt testified and had the right to produce witnesses, both finding that the bankrupt had fraudulently concealed at least $5,000, the profits of a certain real estate transaction which he should have turned over with the rest of his estate. It further appeared that the bankrupt had not taken any steps to review either of these adjudications. Certainly this was sufficient, prima facie, to establish the proposition that at some time subsequent to the bankruptcy, and prior to August 5, 1908, he was in the actual possession of that particular sum of money. In the face of such a finding it was incumbent on the bankrupt to give some reasonable explanation as to why it was that he did not turn it over in compliance with the order requiring him so to do; it was for him to explain how and why it was that this particular sum, in his possession a few months before, had disappeared, so that he no longer 'had the ability to turn it over in compliance with the order.' This he wholly failed to do."

Also, compare, In re Marks, 23 A. B. R. 911, 176 Fed. 1018 (D. C. Pa.): "In this proceeding the court will not re-examine the question whether the order should ever have been made—either at all, or in the particular amount fixed by the referee. The trustee has therefore an unimpeachable right to the money specified in the order, and presumatively the bankrupt is able to pay it; but the admission must nevertheless be made, that the presumption may not correspond with the fact, and that in reality the bankrupt cannot comply with the order. Unless he has the physical ability to comply, he should not be committed for contempt; in practical effect, although perhaps not in legal contemplation, this would revive the abolished penalty of imprisonment for debt. If he cannot pay, and if his inability is the result of his own criminal act, he may of course be punished by the criminal law, although no civil remedy may be available in the situation. Even if he has misappropriated the money, the court has not the power to imprison him in a proceeding for contempt; for this would deprive him of his constitutional right to submit the charge of misappropriation to a jury in the proper criminal court, would deprive him also of the inseparable right to be exempt from imprisonment for such an offense until he shall have been lawfully convicted. And it is also true that he cannot be imprisoned in a proceeding for contempt, if for any other reason he cannot produce the money; for the court cannot imprison as a punishment, it can only imprison to compel obedience to its order. But with an order to pay in force against him, and with the need to overcome the presumption of his ability to comply, it will no doubt happen at times that a bankrupt may fail to meet the burden of proof, and may be obliged to go to jail until he satisfies the court that he was telling the truth when he pleaded poverty." Also quoted at § 1843.

bankrupt should be punished for contempt in the event of failing to comply with the order, as that question, although the one principally argued, is not here. If it should be sought to punish him for contempt the court below will doubtless give him an opportunity to prove his inability to comply with the order."

In re Cole, 16 A. B. R. 304, 144 Fed. 392 (C. C. A. Me., reversing, on this point, 14 A. B. R. 389): "We think, however, that there was error in that the District Court entered in substance a judgment for contempt, accompanying an alternative order for committal. It is plain that a proceeding for contempt is of a different character from one resulting in a mere order for the payment of money to a trustee in bankruptcy. It is claimed that it is criminal in its nature, while an order for the mere payment of money is purely civil; that it would be justified only by the proofs and the amount of proofs requisite on ordinary criminal issues; and that it is in effect an independent proceeding which can be initiated only after an order for payment of money has been disobeyed, and an order to show cause, or some other new notice, given to the person alleged to be in default. It is sufficient now to say that the record does not show that Mrs. Cole had any day in court on the issue involved in that part of the order in question. Without undertaking to say in what manner an issue may be so presented as to justify a proceeding for an alleged contempt, and entering a penal judgment on account thereof, we are of the opinion that the record should show that the issue had been made in some way, and that the person adjudged guilty of contempt had had an opportunity to be heard in reference thereto. Rapalje on Contempts (1887), 126, 127, 128. For this reason, the order to which this petition relates must be annulled, except only so far as it affirms the decision of the referee which directed that the money in question should be paid to the trustee."

A petition should be filed⁹⁶ and it should allege that the noncompliance with the order was wilful.⁹⁷ And due notice must be given.⁹⁸

A referee should not make a certificate of contempt, without such hearing and notice,⁹⁹ except where it consists of an affront in open court and the referee initiates the proceedings.¹

As to Whether Imprisonment for

Kirsner v. Taliaferro, 29 A. B. R. 832, 202 Fed. 51 (C. C. A. Va.): "We know no better way of stating the quantum of proof which should be insisted on than to say, as other courts have said, that it should be sufficient to establish the fact beyond reasonable doubt. Such a rule is required, not only for the protection of the liberty of the citizen, but for the preservation of the dignity of the court itself. It is not well that there should be many occasions in which, after sending a man to jail for refusing to obey an order, the court will feel constrained to release him without the order being obeyed. Unless the power of commitment as a means of compulsion is exercised only when there is no real question of the ability of the defendant to do what he is commanded, such an outcome will not be uncommon."

Stuart v. Reynolds, 29 A. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 709 (C. C. A. Ala.): "In contempt cases, and especially in those which involve the charge of another criminal offence besides the contempt, the rules of evidence applicable to civil cases in reference to presumptions and the shifting of the burden of proof, do not apply; but the proceedings and the rules of evidence and presumptions of law applied in criminal cases should be observed. * * * The numerous recent cases that hold that the guilt of an accused charged with contempt must be proved, not by a preponderance of evidence, but beyond a reasonable doubt, show an application of the rules of evidence as they are applied in criminal cases."

In re Cole, 20 A. B. R. 761, 163 Fed. 180 (C. C. A. Me.): "* * * and while also it seems to be conceded on all sides that, before committing for contempt, the court should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of a wilful refusal or a wilful act on the part of the person proceeded against yet neither the sixth amendment to the Constitution, nor any principle shadowed out by it, has strict application to proceedings of the character before us."

In re Switzer, 15 A. B. R. 470, 140 Fed. 976 (D. C. S. Car.): "The court, in making an order to commit a bankrupt to jail as for contempt for failure to account for goods and money, should be governed by the same considerations which would influence a jury in a criminal prosecution, giving to the bankrupt the benefit of any reasonable doubt."

In re Davidson, 16 A. B. R. 339, 143 Fed. 673 (D. C. R. I.): "The authorities seem to be agreed that no contempt order should be made unless the court is satisfied of the present ability of the bankrupt to comply with the decree for the payment of money. While the admitted receipt of goods or money, and repeated refusals to explain or account for their disappearance, may lead to a belief in a present possession or control, and be a sufficient basis for a contempt order (In re Levy & Co., 15 A. B. R. 166, 142 Fed. 442), yet it does not seem to me that the question of the present ability of a bankrupt to comply with an order should be determined upon an artificial rule of proof to be applied irrespective of the circumstances of the particular case.

Contempt for Failure to Obey Order to Surrender Assets, Criminal Proceedings.—As to whether imprisonment for contempt for disobedience of an order to surrender assets is a criminal proceedings, see ante, § 1842.

Force and weight of sworn denial: Moody v. Cole, 17 A. B. R. 818 (D. C. Me.). See also, similar proposition under "Summary Order to Surrender," ante, §§ 1843 and 1844.

"That a person has been guilty of fraudulent appropriation of property, and has concealed it by falsehood or perjury, does not always lead to the belief that the failure to make restitution upon an order is contumacious and wilful. Where the amount concealed is small, and such as might readily have been spent, or where the circumstances are such as to indicate that the bankrupt was merely the person in nominal control of the business, and merely the instrument of others in a scheme for defrauding creditors, it is quite reasonable, under such circumstances, to believe even a person who has been guilty of fraudulent appropriation, and of fraudulent statements, when she swears that she has not now the fruits of the fraud, nor any control over them. * * *

"If, having doubts of her present ability to pay, I should commit this bankrupt to confinement in jail upon a conjecture that her husband or other persons, actual principals in the fraud, may come to her relief with a sum of money equal to that which she has been ordered to pay over, I should, in my opinion, be abusing the power to punish for contempt. Creditors who sell to persons of doubtful or unknown financial standing, and of unknown or suspicious character for integrity, and who, by their own lack of ordinary diligence, have become the victims of fraud, should proceed for redress under the ordinary methods of legal procedure, and cannot expect to use, as an ordinary agent in the collection of debts, the power to imprison for contempt, which is to be applied only in cases of contumacious resistance to the orders of court. While there is no doubt of the power of the court to enforce its order for the surrender of property or money, when clearly satisfied that it is within the power of the bankrupt or other person to comply with such order, I am not so satisfied in this case."

And ability to comply with the order and wilful disobedience of it are essential.⁴ But the contempt proceedings are not criminal proceedings, and it is not forbidden to introduce the bankrupt's schedules nor his general examination against him, as would be the case were the proceedings criminal.⁵

§ 1859½. Whether "Petition for Revision" or "Writ of Error" to Review Contempt Proceedings.—The court, as above remarked (§ 1856), may proceed either under the general power of all courts to punish contempts as the same is modified by U. S. Rev. Stat., § 725, or under the specific provisions of Bankruptcy Act, § 2 (13) and (16); and the method of review, as in other cases, depends on whether it is "a proceedings in bankruptcy," or a "controversy arising in a bankruptcy proceedings." Thus, an order of the bankruptcy court committing the bankrupt to prison until he shall surrender to his trustee property of the estate in his control, is an order made in the progress of the bankruptcy proceedings with a view to the obtaining of the possession of the property of the estate or to enforce performance of an order of the court, and the proper procedure therefore would be to bring the matter before the Circuit Court of Appeals by a petition to revise. On the other hand, where the proceedings to punish for contempt are instituted to punish an act already committed and not for enforcing in the future the prompt administration of the estate, as, for instance, to punish the violation of an injunction, is an entirely different and distinct proceedings, and is reviewable by "writ of error" as a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings."^{5a}

Kirsner v. Taliaferro, 29 A. B. R. 832, 202 Fed. 51 (C. C. A. Va.): "The questions as to when in contempt proceedings an appeal will lie and when a petition for revision is the proper proceeding, has been discussed by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit. Morehouse v. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., 24 A. B. R. 178, 177 Fed. 337 (C. C. A. Nev.). In that case certain persons had been enjoined by the court of bankruptcy from prosecuting a suit in a state court. They had violated the injunction. It was sought to have them punished for contempt in the bankruptcy court. They brought the matter to the Circuit Court of Appeals by a petition to revise. In dismissing it, the court said that the order complained of 'was not made with a view to obtain possession of the property of the bankrupt or to enforce a prior order of the court, but it is a criminal proceeding to punish by fine or imprisonment those who have been guilty of violating an injunction of the court.' The opinion had previously declared that 'proceedings in bankruptcy' include among other things, 'orders requiring the bankrupt to surrender property of the estate in bankruptcy and orders requiring the bankrupt's voluntary assignee to surrender property of the estate.' 'These are questions which with a view to the prompt administration and distribution of the assets of the bankrupt the law permits to be summarily disposed of by revision.'

"We are therefore of opinion, as well upon reason as upon authority, that an order of the court of bankruptcy ordering the bankrupt to turn over to his trustees property of the estate and committing him to prison until he does so is an order made in a proceeding in bankruptcy and may be brought before the Circuit Court of Appeals by a petition to superintend and revise in matter of law under § 24b."

In re Cole, 20 A. B. R. 761, 163 Fed. 180 (C. C. A. Me.): "If the proceeding in the District Court was taken by virtue of the specific provision of the statute, it would be the natural presumption that the proper method of reaching us would be that which was in fact availed of, namely, a petition for revision under the same act. If, on the other hand, the proceeding in the District Court had relation to the general powers vested in superior courts of judicature with reference to contempts, the question would at once arise whether the present petitioner, Mrs. Cole, should not have come to us by writ of error."

§ 1860. Procedure on Obtaining Surrender from Court Officers.

—Where surrender from a court officer is sought, either the trustee makes direct application to the court whose officer has the custody, for a summary order upon the officer to surrender the assets; or he applies to the bankruptcy court itself therefor, the comity of courts prescribing that the latter method be not resorted to until efforts have reasonably been exhausted to get the order from the court already in charge of the property.⁶

^{5a} Compare post, § 2879¼, "Contempt Proceedings;" also, § 2330¼, "Distinction between Civil and Criminal Contempt."

⁶ See "Procedure on Annulling of Liens Obtained by Legal Proceedings," § 1471, et seq. See summary orders on "Assignees and Receivers," ante, § 1827 and § 1830, et seq. See ante, "Comity Requires Resort First to State Tribunal," § 1637.

Advice of counsel protects state re-

But the requirement that application should first be made to the state court where the proceedings are pending, does not prevail where an emergency exists; and the bankruptcy court in such case has the right to proceed at once by direct order upon the court officer.

§ 1861. If Application Be to State Court Whose Officer in Control, Procedure Follows That of Such Court.—If the application be made to the state court whose officer is in control of the property sought for, the procedure, of course, follows that of the state court.

§ 1862. If Application Be to Bankruptcy Court, Procedure Follows Ordinary Rules as to Summary Orders on Bankrupts and Agents.—If the application be made in the bankruptcy court, however, for the order of surrender upon the state court's officer, it follows the ordinary rules as to summary orders on bankrupts and others.

§ 1863. Jurisdiction to Determine Facts Requisite to Summary Jurisdiction.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction in the summary proceedings to determine the existence of the facts requisite to give it the jurisdiction thus to proceed summarily.⁷

Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 15, 7 A. B. R. 224: "But suppose that respondent had asserted that he had the right to possession by reason of a claim adverse to

Before applying to the state court, the trustee should first get authority from the bankruptcy court, Bear v. Chase, 3 A. B. R. 746, 99 Fed. 920 (C. C. A. S. C.); such authority may require the trustee to make a limited request, Bear v. Chase, 3 A. B. R. 746, 99 Fed. 920 (C. C. A. S. C.).

the bankrupt. The bankruptcy court had the power to ascertain whether any basis for such claim actually existed at the time of the filing of the petition. The court would then have been bound to enter upon the inquiry, and in so doing would have undoubtedly acted within its jurisdiction, while its conclusion might have been that an adverse claim, not merely colorable, but real, even though fraudulent and voidable, existed in fact, and so that it must decline to finally adjudicate on the merits. If it erred in its rulings either way, its action would be subject to review."

Bank v. Title & Trust Co., 198 U. S. 280, 14 A. B. R. 102, 107 (reversing 11 A. B. R. 79): "But, nevertheless, the District Court had jurisdiction to determine whether it could or could not proceed further."

In re Baird, 8 A. B. R. 649 (D. C. Penn.): "When a petition such as this is presented, asking the District Court to make a summary order directing a respondent to surrender the possession of certain property that is alleged by a trustee to belong to the bankrupt's estate, the court has the undoubted right—indeed, it lies under the duty—to examine the ground set up by the respondent for his refusal to deliver possession, and to determine whether a real, and not merely a pretended controversy exists upon this subject."

In re Kane, 12 A. B. R. 444, 131 Fed. 386 (D. C. N. Y.): "The referee is quite right where he says the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine in the first instance whether an asserted adverse claim to property is colorable or actual. If it be clearly a nullity, the referee has jurisdiction, and may by summary process require the surrender of the property so withheld to the trustee in bankruptcy. On the other hand, should evidence of a claimant satisfy the referee that an adverse right to such possession and control is asserted in good faith, and there is reasonable cause for believing that the intention of the claimant is to protect an asserted right of ownership and control, then the petition of the trustee should be dismissed. The remedy of the trustee for the recovery of the property may then be found in a plenary suit instituted in the proper tribunal."

Compare, In re Friedman, 18 A. B. R. 712, 153 Fed. 939 (D. C.), affirmed in 20 A. B. R. 37, 161 Fed. 260 (C. C. A.): "But if property which had once been in the possession of the bankrupt is found in the possession of any person, and such person is, in the opinion of the court, very clearly but a cover or receptacle for that property which as between the bankrupt and such other person is still the property of the bankrupt, or if (to vary the simile) the person who holds property which was formerly in the possession of the bankrupt is but the alter ego of the bankrupt, then a summary order is proper, and no pretended instruments of transfer, no apparatus of conveyances, should prevail. The question is: Whose is the property? And if, according to the evidence, it be the property of the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court should order its restoration to the representative of the creditors and enforce that order by the most drastic means. If this be not done, creditors in most cases are utterly without remedy, for a plenary suit against persons who are in truth but receivers of stolen goods (or money) is but an expensive illusion. In this case an unusually complicated scheme was pursued to hide the proceeds of the sale of the bankrupt stock. The complication of the method only renders more necessary the application of the rule which, I believe, exists."

A. B. R. 57, 185 Fed. 276 (D. C. Me.), though this case seems extreme; In re Franklin, etc., Co., 28 A. B. R. 278, 197 Fed. 591 (D. C. Pa.); In re Logan, 28 A. B. R. 543, 196 Fed. 678 (D. C. N. Y.); In re Kreuger, 28 A. B. R. 890, 196 Fed. 705 (D. C. Ky.).

Obiter, In re Norris, 24 A. B. R. 444, 177 Fed. 598 (D. C. N. Y.): "The court has power to ascertain, if an adverse claim be made by a third person in possession of the property whether such claim is in fact well founded, or if it is fictitious or colorable."

In re Ellis Bros. Printing Co., 19 A. B. R. 472, 156 Fed. 430 (D. C. N. Y.): “* * * the bankruptcy court has power to inquire into the facts for the purpose of determining whether any basis exists for the adverse claim of title to the property asserted by the respondent. The mere assertion of an adverse claim of title, even with an intention to protect it by the usual process of law, will not preclude the bankruptcy court from exercising its power to proceed summarily. In re Andre, 13 Am. B. R. 132, 135 Fed. 736, 68 C. C. A. 374. It is only when the evidence indicates that the asserted claim is not false or fraudulent that the bankruptcy court is deprived of jurisdiction. If it should appear from the proofs that the respondent, Strong, refuses to surrender the money collected by him to the trustee simply on the ground that the title to the same is conclusively evidenced by his possession of it, or if the claim is unreal or colorable, then it is the duty of this court to direct its payment to the trustee. This principle of law is so clearly and definitely stated by the Supreme Court in Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224. * * * that no other citations are thought necessary. In the prior cases decided by this court, in passing upon the right to exercise summary jurisdiction it is not intended to be understood as holding that, irrespective of whether the elicited facts were sufficient in law, the mere assertion of an adverse claim of title or ownership deprived the court of summary power. If the proofs show that in fact there is no legal basis for the asserted adverse claim, the summary power of the court is not defeated.”

And summary jurisdiction has been enforced against the bankrupt's attorney to compel him to surrender money collected by him for the bankrupt before bankruptcy, though he claimed the right to apply it on unpaid attorney's fees;⁸ but this doctrine is valid only within certain limits.^{8a}

The referee has jurisdiction to make the summary order.⁹

In re Holbrook Shoe & Leather Co., 21 A. B. R. 511, 165 Fed. 973 (D. C. Mont.): “A very careful study of the record certified in this matter leads me to conclude that it was the duty of the referee to hear the testimony, in order to pass upon the question whether the claim of the Packard Shoe Company to the property in its possession had an actual basis—that is, was it a real or merely colorable claim? Power and duty to make such inquiry must exist under the Bankruptcy Act, else we cannot escape from the illogical conclusion that the mere assertion of what may be designated an adverse claim can oust the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, and, as a result, the trustee cannot expeditiously collect the estate for the creditors. But we are not without judicial authority in the premises, as the Supreme Court has expressly declared there is no such ouster, and that jurisdiction exists. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224. But how much farther may the bankruptcy court go? * * * Manifestly, the statute requires a broader construction, one that not alone authorizes the inquiry of the hearing of testimony, but which also required a decision upon the merits by the referee. This decision may be that the claim is in good faith, but of doubtful validity, or of questionable faith, yet is probably real; and, hence, that there ought to be an independent suit brought to try the questions; but if the decision is that the claim is without any actual merit or legal foundation, the referee should regard the property as subject to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, as property of the bankrupt, and should, therefore, proceed to make an order requiring the actual wrongful holder to surrender to the court or trustee."

§ 1864. But Will Only Examine Far Enough to Ascertain if Facts Alleged in Good Faith and if True Would Constitute "Adverse" Party.—But the bankruptcy court will only examine far enough to determine whether the facts are alleged in good faith, that is to say are really considered by the respondent to have actually occurred (even though they constitute fraud in fact), and whether, if true, they would constitute the adverse party an "adverse claimant" within the meaning of the law.¹⁰

In re Tarbox, 26 A. B. R. 432, 185 Fed. 985 (D. C. Mass.): "The referee has jurisdiction under a summary petition to inquire and decide whether or not the claim under which property is held adversely to the trustee is merely colorable. But, unless he can find it merely colorable, he has no jurisdiction to proceed further. Re Hayden (D. C. Mass.), 22 Am. B. R. 764, 172 Fed. 623. He cannot hear and determine its merits under a summary petition, if there is a real controversy as to the merits. Plainly the trustee cannot enlarge the referee's jurisdiction merely by alleging that the claim under which the property is held has no merits or is fraudulent, or by calling it "merely colorable," when no other reasons appear for so describing it than its alleged want of merit or fraudulent character.

"In this case the referee was informed by the petition that the property had never been in the trustee's possession, that Mrs. Piper claimed it under a mortgage, and that the trustee intended to attack the mortgage on the ground that it was given in fraud of creditors and was, therefore, invalid as against him. I think the referee was right in holding that a mortgagee making such a claim could not be summarily ordered to surrender the property in her possession.

"To say that the trustee was bound to inquire whether the mortgagee's title was merely colorable, or not, would in this case be to say that he was bound to try the question whether the mortgage was fraudulent, or not, and to disregard the rule above stated."

less he thought it preferable to have it so tried. Such a plenary suit being then pending in the State court; the case was appropriately left to it to decide."

In re Kane, 12 A. B. R. 444, 131 Fed. 386 (D. C. N. Y.): "If he is satisfied, either from personal knowledge of the facts or from testimony, that an order to show cause ought to be directed to a person charged with having in his possession property belonging to the bankrupt estate, the essential inquiry upon return of the order to show cause, if an adverse claim is made, is whether such claim is colorable or fictitious. In short, if it is a colorable claim, it should be set aside, and the claimant summarily directed to deliver the property to the trustee; but if, as already indicated, the claim is asserted in good faith, substantiated by verified pleadings or by oral testimony, then the objection to the jurisdiction of the court is controlling. In such an event the property is no longer constructively in the possession of the bankrupt and subject to the order of the bankruptcy court."

In re Teschmacher & Mrazay, 11 A. B. R. 547, 127 Fed. 728 (D. C. Pa.): "As I understand the decisions of the Supreme Court * * * a court of bankruptcy, before the amendments of 1903 were passed, had jurisdiction to inquire summarily upon petition and answer whether property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, but found in the possession of a third person when the petition was filed, was held by such person as the bankrupt's agent or mere representative; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction the court was of necessity empowered to inquire to some extent concerning the merits of the claim of title, or of a right to retain possession, that might be set up by the person in whose hands the property was found. If the result of the inquiry was to satisfy the court that a real adverse claim existed—no matter how ill-supported it might appear to be—the court had no power to go further in that form of proceeding and decide summarily the question whether or not the claimant was entitled to prevail. It then became necessary, because the Bankrupt Act so declared, to remit the contestants to a plenary suit, either in a State court or in a Circuit Court of the United States, whichever might prove to be the appropriate tribunal. In either forum, however, the dispute was to be conducted by a plenary suit, and not in a summary fashion. The amendments of 1903, as I understand their scope, have made at least one change in these rules. They have conferred jurisdiction upon the District Court to entertain some of the plenary suits which theretofore could only have been brought in a State court or in the Circuit Court, but the other rules of procedure laid down by the Supreme Court are still to be followed. The District Court, sitting as a court of bankruptcy, may still inquire summarily concerning the ownership of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, although it be found in the possession or custody of a third person. But, if the court should discover that such person is holding the property under a real claim of title or right of possession, and is not merely the alter ego of the bankrupt, it is still the duty of the court to desist from pursuing the summary remedy further, and to remit the contestants to a plenary suit, although the suit, instead of being brought in a State court or a Circuit Court of the United States, may now be brought in the District Court itself, and may there be pursued to final judgment."

In re Baird, 8 A. B. R. 649 (D. C. Penn.): "And when it appears, as I think it sufficiently appears in the present case, that in some of its aspects, at least, the controversy requires a court to decide upon the validity of a real claim to the property in question, in my opinion the District Court is obliged to decline the jurisdiction, and to refer the matter to the appropriate tribunal of the State. To decide that the claim is unfounded would be to assume the jurisdiction that is denied by the act. The order I am about to make, however, must not be regarded as impairing in any respect the effect of the order heretofore entered upon the petition of the Juniata Limestone Company."

In re Adams, 12 A. B. R. 367, 130 Fed. 788 (D. C. R. I.): "The claim of Nass that, before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, he had received the property in question as part payment of a debt, and that he had no reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, was clearly an adverse claim. * * * The referee, however, found as facts that the taking of possession by Nass was without authority from Adams; that Nass knew, or had reasonable cause to know, that the taking constituted a preference, and that the taking of the property was equivalent to trover and conversion, and carried no title; that, in consequence thereof, Nass had not even a colorable claim to title. This was not a decision that, upon the facts as claimed by Nass, he was not an adverse claimant, nor an inquiry into the existence of an adverse claim; but a decision of the merits of an adverse claim of right, and a finding that the claim was not adverse because, in the opinion of the referee it was not, as a matter of evidence, meritorious in point of fact. As it is clear from the report of the referee, and from his decree, that Nass was, properly speaking, an adverse claimant, the referee, upon objection should have declined to finally adjudicate the merits of the case on summary petition."

Instance, In re Eddleman, 19 A. B. R. 45, 154 Fed. 160 (D. C. Ky.): "The evidence, however, further shows that $1,605 of the money was paid out by the wife to Mrs. Fredericka Nickel, to whom she owed a note for borrowed money. This payment seems to have been made before the petition in bankruptcy was filed. There may not be any presumption that it was so, yet it is possible that this transaction may have been a fraudulent one—a mere friendly contrivance. Nevertheless, it is fair to assume that Mrs. Nickel thereby acquired what is called by the Supreme Court, in Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. at page 15, 7 Am. B. R. 224, a basis for an adverse claim to that much of the $2,057.29, and, if so, we can hardly see how we can punish the bankrupt for contempt for not paying over the money which the testimony shows was, presumably at least, adversely claimed by another person."

In re Hayden, 22 A. B. R. 764, 172 Fed. 623 (D. C. Mass.): "It was the referee's duty to inquire whether any basis for such a claim to the property as that asserted by the three respondents above named actually existed at the time of the filing of the petition. He was bound to enter upon that inquiry, and in doing so undoubtedly acted within his jurisdiction. It was for him to ascertain whether the respondents' claim to hold the property against the trustee was really adverse, as would appear from their answers, or was merely colorable. * * * For this purpose and to this extent he had jurisdiction to investigate the merits of the questions raised. If, however, as the result of his investigation he found the claim to be really adverse, it followed from that conclusion that he was without jurisdiction to proceed further."

In re Tune, 8 A. B. R. 285, 115 Fed. 906 (D. C. Ala.): "Summary jurisdiction is ousted if determination of the validity of the adverse claim involves the decision of matters in pais and the weighing of conflicting evidence and finding of facts, which, when presented leave room for fair doubt as to the invalidity of the claim, since such a claim is not merely colorable. Delivery must then be compelled by suit in plenary proceedings in a proper court."

In re Horgan, 21 A. B. R. 31, 164 Fed. 415 (C. C. A. Mass.): "But one question is here presented: Was the petitioners' claim to the sum here in controversy, * * * a claim really adverse to * * * the trustees in bankruptcy or merely colorably so? The District Court had jurisdiction to pass upon this question; but, if the claim was really adverse, the court was without jurisdiction to proceed further under § 23 of the Bankruptcy Act. * * * Whether the lien claimed by the petitioners be deemed to arise by implication of law out of the deposit with them of security for their liability on the bail bond, or from the express contract set up in their affidavits, we are of opinion that their claim to the lien was not so clearly without foundation as to be merely colorable within the decisions of the Supreme Court. * * * We are not called upon to hold the petitioners' claim to be valid, and we do not so hold. We merely hold it to be really adverse to the claim of the trustees in bankruptcy."

And the court is bound to enter on the inquiry to ascertain whether an adverse claim, not merely colorable, but real, even though fraudulent and voidable, exists in fact.¹¹

§ 1865. Whether Concluded by Pleadings.—The bankruptcy court, it appears, is not concluded by the pleadings, but may inquire into the facts to see if the claim is really adverse or merely colorably so; if really adverse, although fraudulent and voidable, or not sustainable by the weight of the evidence, jurisdiction will not be assumed.¹²

Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 A. B. R. 224, 235: "But suppose that respondent had asserted that he had the right to possession by reason of a claim adverse to the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court had the power to ascertain whether any basis for such a claim actually existed at the time of the filing of the petition. The court would have been bound to enter upon that inquiry, and in doing so would have undoubtedly acted within its jurisdiction, while its conclusion might have been that an adverse claim, not merely colorable, but real even though fraudulent and voidable, existed in fact, and so that it must decline to finally adjudicate on the merits. If it erred in its ruling either way, its action would be subject to review."

In re Kane, 12 A. B. R. 444, 131 Fed. 386 (D. C. N. Y.): "The referee is quite right when he says the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine in the first instance whether an asserted adverse claim to property is colorable or actual. * * * The determination of the respective rights of the parties demands judicial investigation by the referee to ascertain the facts. Both sides are heard, and evidence may be taken though the conclusions of the court may be based upon the pleadings or affidavits presented to him. He must exercise a sound judicial discretion in the determination of questions of this character to the end that no injustice be done to either party."

Compare, In re Baird, 8 A. B. R. 650 (D. C. Pa.): "To decide that the claim is unfounded would be to assume the jurisdiction that is denied by the Act."

But the petition for the summary recovery must not fail to state that the adverseness of the claim is merely colorable, else the claim will be taken as really adverse.

In re Scherber, 12 A. B. R. 616, 131 Fed. 121 (D. C. Mass.): "But the respondent's claim in the case at bar is not alleged in the petition to be merely colorable, and must be taken to be really adverse. Where this is true, and where due objection to the form of proceeding is made, the decisions and language of the Supreme Court imply that a plenary suit must be resorted to."

And where the trustee's petition itself shows claimants' adverseness, evidence that such claim was merely colorable should be excluded.^{12a}

But, it would seem to be the better rule that, unless the bad faith were sufficient to warrant a court in striking the pleadings from the files, the pleadings, especially if positively verified, should bind the court as to whether summary jurisdiction exists: so that, in general, existence of summary jurisdiction would be rather a question of allegation than of proof.

Cooney v. Collins, 23 A. B. R. 840, 176 Fed. 189 (C. C. A. Montana): "All of the above-mentioned allegations of the defendant John W. Cooney were verified by him of his own knowledge. His objections to the determination, in such summary proceedings, of the right to the properties in question, were overruled by the referee in bankruptcy, which officer found, in effect, upon the conflicting evidence introduced before him, that all of the property in question really belonged to the bankrupt, Frank Henry Cooney, was paid for with his money, and put in the name of John W. Cooney for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of Frank Henry Cooney. The matter being brought before the court upon petition for revision of the action of the referee, like objections were there made by John W. Cooney to the jurisdiction of the referee, and of the power of the bankruptcy court to thus determine the property rights in question, resulting in the affirmance by the court of the referee's order. Hence the present petition for review. In so ruling we are of the opinion that the learned judge of the court below was in error. That court, as well as the counsel for the respondent here, largely rely in support of their position upon the case of Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224, which case was subsequently reviewed in the case of Jaquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 624, 9 A. B. R. 525, where the Supreme Court thus concluded its review of it: 'in other words, Nugent's case simply holds that where the agent held money belonging to the bankrupt to which he had no claim, but simply refused to give up the property, which he acknowledged belonged to the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court had power, by summary proceedings, to order him to deliver such property to the trustee in bankruptcy, which was not only a "wholly different" case from that of Jaquith v. Rowley, but also from that now before us. Like the surety in the case of Jaquith v. Rowley, the petitioner here, John W. Cooney, by his verified answer not only claims the absolute right to hold all of the property in question as against everybody, but specifically alleges the reasons for his claim of ownership of it. Of course, his allegations in that behalf may not be true; still they make a case of adverse claim to the property on his part, to overcome which it was essential for the trustee to protect in accordance with the provisions of § 23 of the Bankruptcy Act and not by summary proceeding in bankruptcy. We think the case of Jaquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 Am. B. R. 525, is directly in point, on the authority of which the judgment of the District Court should be reversed, with directions to order the dismissal of the trustee's petition.'"

What is sufficient to make the claim "colorable" is largely a question of the facts of each particular case; yet, if it is to be decided by the pleadings, as is the author's view, then the colorability is easily determinable; for, whether alleged by the trustee or by the adverse claimant, the allegations of actual possession and of facts which, if true, would constitute adverse title (i. e., that the possession is not under the bankrupt, nor as his agent, nor under the marshal, or receiver, nor trustee in bankruptcy, nor merely as a custodian or stakeholder, but as a party claiming rights in opposition thereto) then the bankruptcy court must refuse to take jurisdiction,¹³ unless the bad faith of the claim is so gross as to warrant the striking of his pleadings from the files under the usual rules in such cases, or unless the allegations of the pleadings are simply mere assertions of ownership or other conclusions of law, in which event it is the duty of the court to cause a preliminary investigation to be made summarily to determine whether or not the claim is merely colorable.¹⁴

In re Blum, 29 A. B. R. 330, 202 Fed. 883 (C. C. A. Wis.): "The term 'colorable' seems to have crept into the bankruptcy decisions without authority of statute—unless it be construed to mean merely that if a respondent sets up as facts, and not as conclusions of law, matters which, if true, would constitute a statement of an adverse claim, then the claim would be adverse and not colorable, and not within the jurisdiction of the referee. It can hardly have been the purpose of Congress to deprive a litigant of the benefit of a plenary hearing in cases involving the determination of contested questions of fact. Undoubtedly, one holding property of the bankrupt as an agent or bailee may be required summarily to turn it over to the trustee, and, in a proper case, to a receiver; but we are of the opinion that whenever the facts alleged on their face disclose possession and a legal right in the party claiming title, the referee has no jurisdiction in a summary proceeding to require the property to be turned over without the consent of the respondent. * * * We believe the true rule to be as above stated, viz. that where a party in possession sets out in his answer facts which, if true, would constitute an adverse title, the court may not in a summary proceeding, and against his protest, dispose of his rights in property. It therefore follows in the present case that petitioner was entitled to have her claim adjudicated in a plenary suit."

§ 1866. Notice Served Outside District Not Sufficient to Confer Jurisdiction to Make Inquiry.—Notice served outside the district where the bankruptcy proceedings are pending, upon an "adverse claimant" in possession of the property, will not confer jurisdiction on the bankruptcy court to make the inquiry.¹⁵

R. 224, and, if adverse claim to the property were asserted by the respondents, the court must ascertain whether it is of that character, and so takes cognizance to that extent at least. It determines for itself whether final jurisdiction exists.

ruling thereunder called to my attention. In the absence of statutory authority for the process of the court to run beyond the territorial limits of the district, the doctrine is well settled that no jurisdiction exists to that end."

§ 1867. Ancillary Jurisdiction in Bankruptcy Court of Another District to Make Summary Order.—As we have previously seen jurisdiction exists in the bankruptcy court of another district in ancillary proceedings there pending to make a summary order to surrender assets in aid of the original bankruptcy proceedings.¹⁶

DIVISION 3.

REDEMPTION OF PROPERTY FROM LIENS.

§ 1868. Jurisdiction to Redeem Property from Liens.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to redeem property from liens and charges.¹⁷

§ 1869. Procedure—Petition to Redeem and Notice.—Redemption may be ordered upon petition and notice. Ten days' notice, it appears from the Supreme Court's Official Form No. 43, is to be sent to all creditors,¹⁸ although § 58 does not specifically mention such applications among those matters notice of which must be sent to all creditors. Likewise, notice should be given to the lienholder, in similar manner to that given in cases of sales free from liens. The petition may be filed before the referee.

§ 1870. Gives Jurisdiction to Order Cancellation, Assignment or Release, on Tender of Amount Due.—In proceedings to redeem, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to order cancellation, release or assignment of the lien on tender of the amount due,¹⁹ at any rate if there be no controversy over such amount and no colorable adverse interest.

§ 1871. May Not, under Guise of Petition to Redeem, Gain Jurisdiction Over Adverse Claimants in Possession.—But the filing of the petition to redeem, and service of notice upon the lienholder, will not give jurisdiction over adverse claimants in possession, nor may controversies with them be litigated in such proceedings. The petition to redeem is more in the nature of an application to the court of bankruptcy for leave to pay off an uncontroverted lien than it is a proceedings in the nature of the old equity action for redemption. In case the lien be paid and there is no colorable adverse interest in the lienholder, the bankruptcy court will have jurisdiction under the petition to redeem to summarily order surrender of the property, under its ordinary jurisdiction.

DIVISION 4.

SUMMARY JURISDICTION TO ORDER TRUSTEE, ETC., TO SURRENDER PROPERTY TO RIGHTFUL OWNERS.

§ 1872. Summary Jurisdiction to Order Trustee to Surrender Property to Rightful Owner.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine the rights of third parties claiming property in its custody, and is bound to turn it over to the one entitled thereto,²⁰ and the bankruptcy court has summary jurisdiction over the trustee, to this end.²¹ The proper procedure is for an order to show cause to be issued upon the trustee, upon the claimant's petition, as in other cases.²²

§ 1873. Thus, to Order Surrender of Property Belonging to Third Parties.—And thus the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to order the surrender or redelivery of property in its custody belonging to third parties.²³ And, as incident thereto, the bankruptcy court may compel the trustee to execute assignments of the property, or other instruments necessary or proper.²⁴

§ 1874. Referee Has Jurisdiction.—A referee has jurisdiction to determine the ownership of property in the possession of a receiver or trustee appointed by the bankruptcy court, where a third party files a petition, or an intervening petition, claiming the ownership of such property.²⁵

§ 1875. Replevin Suits Not Maintainable against Trustee or Receiver.—Adverse claimants to any of the property must not resort to legal proceedings in other courts, or other methods of seizure or of taking possession of property in the custody of the bankruptcy court. They must come into the bankruptcy court and make application there for a return of the property,²⁶ excepting, possibly, as to property to which the trustee has failed to assert ownership.²⁷

§ 1876. Petitions for Reclamation, Surrender or Redelivery.—Surrender of property in the custody of the bankruptcy court but belonging to a stranger, is accomplished by filing before the referee a petition, variously styled a petition for redelivery, for surrender, for restitution or for reclamation.²⁸ A “proof of debt” is not a proper method.²⁹

These petitions should set up the facts, in accordance with the ordinary rules of pleading in an action of trover, conversion or replevin, that would entitle the claimant to the property.

Levi v. Picard, 17 A. B. R. 431, 148 Fed. 654 (D. C. N. Y.): “Viewing the petition in reclamation as a pleading, it seems to me obvious that it should contain all the allegations necessary to sustain a complaint in trover and conversion, or required by the strictest practice in an affidavit for replevin.”

But it has been held that in reclamation proceedings, it is not necessary that the petition should describe the property claimed with that degree of definiteness and particularity required in a complaint and writ in an action of replevin.

In re Pierce, 19 A. B. R. 664, 157 Fed. 757 (C. C. A. N. Dak.): “It is contended that the petition to the bankruptcy court is fatally defective because 164 Fed. 1007 (U. S. C. C. Idaho). And in one instance the court dispensed with formal reclamation proceedings and ordered the return of goods without a petition being filed, In re Kingston Realty Co., 19 A. B. R. 703, 157 Fed. 303 (D. C. N. Y.), which is, however, a practice not to be commended.

Payments to Trustees under Mistake of Law.—If money is paid or property turned over to a trustee in bankruptcy under mistake of law it should be surrendered to the rightful owner, the rule being different with court officers from what it is with individuals, obiter, Carpenter v. Southworth, 21 A. B. R. 390, 165 Fed. 428 (C. C. A. N. Y.); but it should not be surrendered even though at law not recoverable, if justly it should be retained. Carpenter v. Southworth, 21 A. B. the property claimed was not specifically described. It is not necessary in cases of this sort that the property claimed be described with that degree of definiteness and particularity that is required in a complaint and writ in an action in replevin. It not infrequently happens that the claimant is unable to give in the first instance more than a general description of his property, and is compelled to rely upon the proofs at the hearing for its separation from other property of similar kind. A court of bankruptcy exercising equity powers may be depended upon to see that justice is done, and that no more is secured by the claimant than he is entitled to. Moreover, in the present case there were attached to the petition of the company invoices in which the property delivered under the contract was described minutely and in detail, and reference was made to them in the body of the petition. The order of the referee directing surrender to the claimant contained a like reference. This was sufficient in a case of this character."

Notice should be served on the trustee; answer should be filed by him, and due hearing be had.³⁰ Thus, the hearing was held to have been too summary, where, in answer to the claimant's sworn petition, the receiver appears merely to have submitted a receipt and the judge thereupon to have concluded the hearing and forthwith ordered dismissal of the petition.³¹

The hearing should not be had upon affidavits,³² for the proceedings correspond to an action of replevin; for which reason it is that the pleading is styled a petition, rather than a motion.³³

A deposition for proof of debt, though given probative effect, as prima facie evidence of a "claim," is not to be held evidence in a petition for reclamation, as apparently was the obiter holding in one case.³⁴ Indeed, such deposition, being that provided for proof of debts, would, rather, be an implied ratification of the conversion and an admission that a mere debt exists—a waiver of the tort and a claiming upon the contract.³⁵

After the case has been closed it should not be reopened for the adagreement, express or implied, to the contrary, has a right at any time to retake possession of unsold goods consigned to a factor, on payment of all advances and liens (19 Cyc., p. 117, and cases cited); and I do not think that the fact that Goldberg, under the arrangement, was to be paid for his services by a part of the profits instead of by the usual percentage makes the rule inapplicable."

Likewise, where, by contract, the proceeds of property left on consignment were to be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the seller, such proceeds, if kept separate at any rate, are reclaimable.⁴⁴

Similarly, a bank has been granted reclamation of goods and of the proceeds of goods held in trust by the bankrupt under an arrangement whereby it had accepted and paid drafts for their purchase price, as they were imported from time to time, receiving bills of lading which it had immediately exchanged for trust receipts of the purchaser who had agreed therein to hold and sell the goods for the account of the bank as security for the advances, the bank having reserved the right at any time to cancel the trust arrangement and take possession of the goods.⁴⁵

Trustee Using Property Held on Conditional Sale, Pending Litigation over Its Title.—It is held that where the trustee uses property, such as machinery, during the continuance of the bankrupt's business under order of the court, pending which certain reclamation proceedings were being carried on, the conditional vendor cannot charge the trustee with the "rental" for such use, unless the vendor take some positive step, such as by order of the court, that will appraise the trustee of the contemplated charge. If it had applied to the court to do so and its application had been denied, it would have been entitled to recover of the trustee the value of its right."

Or the proceeds of such property if the same are traceable into the trustee's hands,⁴⁷ especially where such proceeds were to be held in trust for the seller.⁴⁸ But such property is not reclaimable where it would not be reclaimable under state law,⁴⁹ as laid down by the highest tribunal of the state;⁵⁰ as, for instance, where it is in reality an absolute sale disguised as one on condition.⁵¹

But the conditional seller need not always assert his rights by way of reclaiming the property in kind, for, in most states, he may have the property sold and the proceeds applied on the balance of the purchase price, on the theory of equitable lien.^{51a}

51a. Statute Requiring Refund on Taking Possession, Not Applicable When Property Sold Rather than Reclaimed.—In the event that the conditional seller does not petition for reclamation but asks the court to pay him from the proceeds, a statute requiring refund on taking possession will not be applicable. In re Max

Goldman, 23 A. B. R. 497, 174 Fed. 579 (C. C. A. Ohio): "It does not provide a remedy which is precisely according to the principles of equity, for it is provided that the refunding by the vendor shall not be required unless the amount he has received exceeds 25 per cent. of the contract price. If the vendor, instead of taking back the property, should foreclose the vendee's right by a proceeding in equity, there would be no such limitation. On the other hand, as the law then stood, the vendor, treating the title of the property reserved by the contract as a security for the payment of the price, might file his bill in equity to obtain a judicial sale of the property and an appropriation of the proceeds to the payment of the debt. By the latter course the equity of the vendee was protected by the conscience of the court and its power of control over the sale. He suffered no wrong of which he could complain. That the vendor has the right to proceed in this manner, we think, cannot be doubted. It is a favorite jurisdiction of equity to relieve against forfeitures, and the practice of this remedy will subserve the purposes of justice in such cases."

a security for the payment of the price, and in some States it is held that such a conditional sale is the equivalent of an out and out sale and a mortgage back to secure the payment of the purchase money. At law the transfer of the property gives to the vendee the right to the possession so long as he is performing his agreement to pay. But, when he fails to do this, his right to the possession ceases, and he then holds it for the vendor. But in equity these considerations are regarded as technical merely, and the court will look to see whether the vendor has such a hold or claim upon the property as entitles him to subject it to the payment of the purchase money. The maxim that equity follows the law is inapt where the legal remedy is inadequate to the enforcement of equitable rights. 16 Cyc. 137. There are many instances in the law of sales where even at the common law a lien is implied for the protection of the vendor in cases of ordinary sales. Although the agreement is perfected so as to pass the title for most purposes, still the vendor is allowed a lien for the price, while it remains in his own possession; or where he has delivered it to a common carrier according to agreement and the carrier is held to be the agent of the vendee for the purpose of accepting delivery, the vendor is allowed the privilege of recaption in transitu if the vendee becomes insolvent or becomes bankrupt, and in equity the vendor of real property is given a lien, a claim, a hold upon it, notwithstanding it has gone into the possession of the vendee, and no agreement for a lien has been made."

Proceedings for reclamation, however, are equitable; and, consequently, the owner may be directed, as a condition precedent to the recovery of the property, to return the payments received by him on account of the purchase price, less suitable allowances for its use, depreciation, etc., where, under the local law, such payments might have been recovered by an independent action.⁵²

§ 1879. Of Goods Bought under Misrepresentation or While Grossly Insolvent.—Thus, goods may be reclaimed that have been procured through the misrepresentations of the buyer as to his financial condition or by other fraud, or (in some states) under such circumstances of hopeless insolvency as to have precluded any intention to pay and where there was therefore no meeting of minds and no passing of title.⁵³

Thus, as to sales on misrepresentation as to financial condition, reclamation has, on the facts, sometimes been granted.⁵⁴

by false representations as to his solvency, knowingly made, induces the owner of goods, who, in ignorance of their falsity relies upon such representations, to sell them, he is entitled to disaffirm the contract and recover the goods. Fraud renders all contracts voidable ab initio, both at law and in equity. No man is bound by a bargain into which he has been deceived by fraud, because assent is necessary to a valid contract, and there is no real assent where fraud and deception have been used as instruments to control the will and induce the assent."

In re Marco Gany, 4 A. B. R. 576, 103 Fed. 930 (D. C. N. Y.): "It is not necessary that the false representations should be the sole and exclusive consideration for the credit; but only that they were a material consideration, without which in all probability the credit would not have been given."

Compare, analogously (plenary action in State Court), Silvey & Co. v. Tift, 17 A. B. R. 20, 123 Ga. 804: "If one purchasing goods makes a false representation as to a material matter, and the owner of the goods relies on such statement and sells upon discovering the fraud the owner may rescind and reclaim his property, or so much of it as is still in the possession of the purchaser."

And reclamation has sometimes been refused because the proof was insufficient;⁵⁵ or because there was no tender back of the consideration received.⁵⁶

In re Murphy Barbee Shoe Co., 11 A. B. R. 434 (Ref. Mo.): "In order to make a complete rescission of an executed contract of sale by a vendor, it is necessary for him to tender to the vendee all of value received by him from the vendee. The parties must all be placed in statu quo."

Reclamation also has been refused where it was doubtful whether there was any reliance on the false statement, the seller admitting he would have sold anyway, and the making of the false assertion that the buyer had two dollars for every one he owed being denied by the bankrupt.⁵⁷ Likewise, it has been refused where the seller knew the buyer was in failing circumstances, and was unreliable in his statements as to financial condition.⁵⁸ Where there was no reliance on a false statement made to a commercial agency, the mere fact that it was made will not entitle the seller to reclaim.⁵⁹

But reliance may be proved by circumstantial evidence and the mere facts that the statement was asked for and given as a basis of credit and that the goods were supplied within a reasonable time thereafter are sufficient proof that the creditor parted with the merchandise on the strength of the representation, if it be not overcome by adequate rebutting evidence.⁶⁰

And intention to deceive must exist in order to entitle to reclamation on the ground of misrepresentation.⁶¹ But it is not essential to prove that the intention was not to pay.⁶² Reclamation has been refused where the untrue statement was incomplete rather than false;⁶³ where the creditor's salesman read off from the printed forms a long list of questions and took down the bankrupt's answers thereto, omitting some, instead of submitting the printed form for the bankrupt to act on in his own way.⁶⁴ Reclamation will be refused where, notwithstanding fraud on the part of the bankrupt, the seller has affirmed the sale by some act on his part.⁶⁵ And merely that the bankrupt had failed to pay for the property bought by him shortly before bankruptcy would not warrant its recovery in reclamation proceedings.⁶⁶

Where there have been sales on other frauds, reclamation has sometimes been granted;⁶⁷ and sometimes been refused.⁶⁸

Thus, where a buyer mortgaged or assigned all its assets between the time of giving its order and the time of the delivery of the goods, rescission and reclamation have been allowed, the facts indicating design.⁶⁹

In some states the rule prevails that where goods have been sold at a time when the buyer knew he was so hopelessly insolvent that he could have had no reasonable prospect of being able to pay for them and so no real meeting of mind between the parties could be held ever to have taken place and no title ever to have passed, such apparent sale may be rescinded and the goods recovered. This rule does not appear to prevail in Pennsylvania,⁷⁰ however; but apparently does prevail in New York.⁷¹ It also prevails in Ohio⁷² and in Iowa.⁷³ ceiver nor a trustee in bankruptcy is such a purchaser. A decisive question in the case therefore is: Did Hough intend to pay for these hogs when he bought them. * * * Hough had then been insolvent, and had been aware of that fact for many months. * * *

"It is contended, and it is conceded, that the insolvency of a purchaser does not prove his intent not to pay for the goods which he buys. Many an insolvent obtains goods on credit with the honest intent to pay for them, and many times he succeeds in doing so. * * *

"But he was not in the same financial or mental condition when he purchased of the interveners that he had occupied when he bought of earlier vendors. When he made the earlier purchases he had a reasonable expectation that he could pay for the hogs he purchased with the proceeds of hogs of later vendors in the way in which he had paid for other purchases for months. But, when he bought of the interveners he knew that he had no money or credit with which to pay for their hogs, that the only way in which he could pay for them was by the purchase and the sale of the hogs of subsequent vendors and the appropriation of the proceeds of these later purchases through the bank to the payment of the interveners, and he knew that he could not pay for them in that way because subsequent vendors would not sell to him after his known failure, and the bank would not take his drafts or honor his checks. In this state of the case it is incredible that he intended to pay for these hogs when he bought them. He knew it was impossible for him to pay for them, and the human mind is so constituted that it cannot harbor a serious intent that the being it directs shall do that which it knows it is impossible for it to accomplish. An insolvent buyer, who knows at the time of his purchase that his financial condition is such that it is and will be impossible for him to pay for his purchases, is conclusively presumed to have bought them with an intention not to pay for them; and a persuasive legal presumption to that effect arises from the fact that such a purchaser's affairs were in such a condition at the time of the purchase of the property that he could then have had no reasonable expectation of paying for it."

Of course, however, proof of mere insolvency is not sufficient.⁷⁴

The buyer's omission to disclose his insolvency to the seller is not fraudulent in law.⁷⁵

Strict proof seems to be required of the claimer where the ground urged is fraudulent misrepresentation.⁷⁶ And where the rule prevails, it depends upon the condition and intentions of the buyer at the time the contract of sale was entered into, not at the time of the delivery of the goods.

In re Levi & Picard, 16 A. B. R. 756 (D. C. N. Y.): "The right of the petitioners to reclaim the goods so delivered is based upon the proposition that if at the time of the receipt or delivery thereof, the vendees had reasonable cause to believe that they were unable to pay for them, and did not then intend to pay for them, the sale may be rescinded and the goods recovered, even though no such cause to believe or intent not to pay, can be proven or inferred as of the date of the sale.

"The refinement upon the well-established rule regarding rescission is not, in my opinion, sustained by authority or reason.

"Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 631, is binding authority in this court. It was there held to be established that what entitles the vendee to disaffirm a contract of sale and recover his goods consists in the vendee's inducing the vendor 'to sell him goods on credit' when he was (a) insolvent, (b) concealed his insolvency, and (c) did not intend to pay for what he bought.

"Here the contract of sale was complete when the minds of the parties met on August 31st; and at that time, although the bankrupt firm was insolvent, there is no evidence that the partners knew that fact, and there is a plain inference that they then intended to pay for what they bought. * * *

"In practice, the petitioner's demand is especially vicious in bankruptcy. It is notorious that mercantile contracts for future deliveries, often many months distant, or extending over a long period of time, are the rule rather than the exception.

"That a contract for 'spring delivery' made in perfect honesty in October, may be avoided because an expert investigation after bankruptcy in May renders it probable or certain that when goods were delivered in April the vendee was insolvent, and therefore should have imputed to him an intent not to pay, contemporaneous with delivery, is intolerable. Such proceedings would render every mercantile failure a mockery to creditors who had given no credit or sold on short time, yet to this extent would the doctrine contended for lead the court."

The right of rescission is lost if the goods become a component part of a structure, not separable therefrom without manifest injury.⁷⁷

Reclamation will be refused where the property was not in the hands of the trustee but in the hands of the bankrupt, and the reclaimer had waited until the trustee had procured a summary order upon the bankrupt for surrender.⁷⁸

The right of reclamation is lost, of course, if the seller proves his claim as a creditor.⁷⁹

Amendment of 1910.—The Amendment of 1910 to Bankruptcy Act, § 47a (2), endowing the trustee with the attributes of a creditor "armed with process" does not, in general, cut off the right to reclaim property belonging to third parties.⁸⁰

tion never passed to the bankrupt, by reason of her fraudulent representations to the vendors, therefore the trustee took no title thereto inasmuch as, under the laws of Illinois, as construed by the courts of the State, the rights of the defrauded vendor prevailed over the claims 'of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon.'

In re [Appel] Suit & Clock Co., 28 A. B. R. 818, 198 Fed. 322 (D. C. Colo.): "The Amendment to § 47 of the bankruptcy act does not attempt to put the trustee in such a favored position [purchaser for value]. It only gives him 'the rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien.' Prior to the amendment the trustee would have taken title to these mortgages, subject to the claimants equities, i. e., a right to rescind the sale induced by the vendee's fraud. It must, therefore, be held that in this jurisdiction, said amendment does not cut off the right of petitioners to rescind the sale and reclaim the unsold part of his goods."

§ 1879¼. Election to Rescind.—If the transferor elects to rescind he must proceed promptly, and after having made his election, he will be bound.⁸¹

In re Kenyon, 19 A. B. R. 194, 156 Fed. 863 (D. C. Ohio): "Having made proof of his claim and secured its allowance, he is, in the absence of inadvertence, fraud or mistake, none of which are alleged, bound thereby, because when a creditor makes proof of his claim against a bankrupt's estate, he stands in the position of a plaintiff at law and becomes a party to the suit."

Varnish Works v. Haydock, 16 A. B. R. 286, 143 Fed. 318 (C. C. A.): "As the referee properly said in his opinion, it was open to the petitioner, the purchase having been procured by fraud, to elect whether to confirm the sale notwithstanding, and maintain the position of a creditor for the price, or to repudiate the sale and recover the goods. But the vendor must make his election promptly on discovery of the fraud. This is the settled law. Upon this principle Judge Ray held in In re Hildebrand, 10 Am. B. R. 184, 120 Fed. 992, that a vendor could not affirm the contract of sale as to part of the goods, and claim the price and disaffirm as to another part, and recover the goods in specie. And see Seavey v. Potter, 121 Mass. 297. And having made his election in such circumstances, the vendor makes it once for all. Kennedy v. Thorp, 51 N. Y. 174; Moller v. Tuska, 87 N. Y. 166; Heller v. Elliott, 44 N. J. L. 467; Carter v. Smith, 23 Wis. 497. The petition did not state when the petitioner became aware of the falsity of the bankrupt's representations of its solvency and of its fraudulent purpose, or whether it was before or after the petitioner proved its claim and participated in the proceedings as a creditor. And if, as it has in some cases been held, the burden of proof that the election was made with knowledge of the facts is upon the party who urges the estoppel, it would be difficult to resist the conviction that the circumstances attending the assignment and the adjudication of bankruptcy were sufficient to have shown the petitioner that the bankrupt in procuring the goods had made false representations in regard to its solvency. Not only did the petition make no claim that the petitioner was ignorant, at the time of proving its claim, of the facts in regard to the representations of the bankrupt and of its intention in making the purchase, but the facts stated by the referee are sufficient, prima facie, to support the conclusion that the petitioner had knowledge of the essential facts when it voted for the trustee. In these circumstances, the election of the petitioner to prove its claim as a general creditor was final. There is good ground for saying that it was too late for the exercise of an election after the petitioner had joined the general creditors in shaping and carrying forward the bankruptcy proceedings and influencing their associates in their action. The suggestion that the proceedings probably would have been the same without the petitioner's co-operation cannot avail. The assumption of the position of a general creditor toward the assets would naturally be a strong inducement to the other creditors in pursuing the bankruptcy proceedings, for this would imply a sharing of the assets, and this result would be defeated if their associates were permitted to turn about and reclaim the assets in specie."

Proof of Claim as Unsecured Debt, Not Waiver of "Vendor's Privilege" to Reclaim in Louisiana.—Sessler v. Paducah Distilleries Co., 21 A. B. R. 723, 168 Fed. 44 (C. C. A. La.).

Similarly, where funds have been converted, there arises a right of election either to follow the proceeds or to treat the conversion as a debt; and where the injured party accepts a transfer of other property for the converted property, he will be held to have elected to treat the conversion as a debt, in which case the transfer may be a preference.⁸²

Under the law of some states the right to rescind a sale and reclaim the property on the ground of fraud is lost not only where the goods have gone into the possession of an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration, but also where one, for a valuable consideration, has acquired a lien thereon; thus, by statute, in Georgia.⁸³

And it has been held, in such states, that the trustee in bankruptcy, because of the lien creditor's rights conferred upon him by the amendment of 1910 to § 47a (2), cannot be compelled to surrender property in his possession, even though the vendor could have successfully reclaimed it as against the bankrupt on the ground of fraud.

In re Whatley Bros., 29 A. B. R. 64, 199 Fed. 326 (D. C. Ga.): "While the courts are not in entire accord, I think it may be considered as settled now that the purpose of the act of June, 1910, was to give the trustee in bankruptcy a lien for the benefit of creditors generally, such as a creditor would have 'by legal or equitable proceedings.' Such is the plain language of the amendment, and there is no escape, so far as I can see, from the conclusion that this was the intent of Congress in its enactment. It is recognized, of course, that the main purpose of the amendatory act of 1910 was to relieve general creditors from the situation which had been created by many decisions, notably by the decision in the York Manufacturing Company Case, 201 U. S. 344, 15 Am. B. R. 633, 26 Sup. Ct. 481, 50 L. Ed. 782, by which the liens of unrecorded mortgages and conditional bills of sale, which, under the State laws, would be good as between the parties, were held as good against the bankrupt estate. But, though probably having this particular purpose more distinctly in mind, Congress gave to trustees in bankruptcy this lien, which operates generally and which attaches to all property coming into the custody of the bankruptcy court.

"It has the same effect as a judgment at law or in equity."

§ 1879 $\frac{1}{2}$. Delay in Rescission.—In bankruptcy the usual rules prevail as to the necessity for diligence in rescission and of putting the parties in statu quo.

Compare [William] Openhym & Sons v. Blake, 19 A. B. R. 639, 157 Fed. 536 (C. C. A. Mo.): "We do not think appellants should be denied relief because they delayed intervening in the bankruptcy court until after a partial dividend was declared. The fraud was practiced on appellants and the goods obtained July 13th, the sale was rescinded August 21st, and the intervening petition was filed in the bankruptcy court December 21st. At all times after the rescission of the sale the purpose of appellants to rely thereon was manifest. They were fairly diligent in the assertion of their rights, and no one seems to have been prejudiced by the short delay that occurred. That the filing of the intervening petition was delayed until after the dividend injured no one. The trustee and the court were aware that appellants had rescinded the sale, and the dividend took but a part of the funds on hand. There remained more than enough to pay the appellants, and had the intervening petition been presented and allowed much earlier the same dividend would probably have been declared. At least no reason appears why it should not have been."

§ 1879 $\frac{3}{4}$. Subrogation to Right of Reclamation.—Where a surety has paid the claim afterwards, or it has been assigned, the surety or assignee may be subrogated to the right of reclamation.⁸⁴

Sessler v. Paducah Distilleries Co., 21 A. B. R. 723, 168 Fed. 44 (C. C. A. La.): "* * * it is also contended that, as Menard Bros. took no express subrogation at the time of payment, they acquired no rights of the original creditor to rescind the sale. There may be some doubt as to whether any subrogation took place by contract; but as Menard Bros. were sureties * * * and paid the debt, we think they are legally subrogated under the Louisiana Code. * * * We have no doubt about the right of a surety to prosecute his claim in bankruptcy in the name of the principal creditor, when subrogation takes place after proof of debt."

§ 1880. Reclaiming Part Still in Trustee's Hands, Proving Claim for Balance.—Where part of the goods have been sold and the proceeds are no longer traceable, the weight of authority seems to be that the seller may reclaim the part still in specie and make proof of debt on an implied contract for the balance sold, and that the two claims are not inconsistent and that no election need be made;⁸⁵ although, on reason, it would seem that such course would amount to affirming and denying contractual relations at the same time.⁸⁶

tract of sale is not affirmed, but that what is affirmed is only the implied contract to pay for goods converted, as if bought, there is no inconsistency.⁸⁷

§ 1881. Goods Stopped in Transit.—Goods may be reclaimed where the right of stoppage in transitu existed and was duly exercised but delivery was made notwithstanding. The right of stoppage in transitu is lost if the goods reach the actual possession of the bankrupt or his agent or his trustee⁸⁸ at the designated terminus and the same rule has been held to govern when they have reached the possession of the receiver, even though the goods were shipped after the consignee had gone into bankruptcy;⁸⁹ though as to goods shipped after bankruptcy, doubtless title ordinarily would not pass, for other reasons;⁹⁰ moreover, the custody of the receiver differs from that of the trustee for the latter is an "owner" have title, by Bankr. Act, § 70 (a), whilst the receiver is a mere custodian.⁹¹ Seizure or interception before the goods have reached their destination,⁹² however, will not end the right of stoppage in transitu, nor will it be ended where the trustee or receiver has induced the carrier to deliver.

But notice to the carrier must be timely, and if it is not given to the particular agent in charge, it must be given to the principal in time for the latter to stop the delivery.

In re White, 29 A. B. R. 358, 205 Fed. 393 (D. C. Pa.): "It has often been held that when the goods are in the custody of the servant or agent notice to the principal must be in time by use of reasonable diligence to prevent the delivery to the vendee. While it may be said that this has generally been applied to contests between consignor and carrier, it nevertheless serves to indicate that notice to the principal not in immediate possession of the goods is not to be regarded as in itself sufficient. The notice must be communicated to the person in charge or served on the principal in time to permit of such. Something more remains to be done. To hold otherwise would, indeed, entail great hardship upon carriers, involving them often in loss and rendering their duties precarious, thereby necessarily impeding the dispatch of business.

"The carrier was requested by the shipper, through letter addressed to the Duquesne Freight Station at Pittsburgh, to stop delivery of the goods at Williamsport. The letter reached its destination at Pittsburgh upon the day the receiver made his demand upon the agent at Williamsport, possibly an hour or so before. Was this sufficient to justify stoppage at Williamsport when delivery was refused? I think not, the agent at Williamsport had not then, and in fact for several days thereafter, did not have any knowledge of the request made of the carrier. His refusal was not based on the consignors' demand to stop delivery, it was in pursuance of the rule of the company not to deliver when the property of consignee of goods is, to their knowledge, under levy by sheriff's execution. The refusal by the agent therefore being unwarranted, possession passed to the receiver and title vested."

§ 1882. Converted Property or Its Traced Proceeds, Reclaimable.—Property converted by the bankrupt may be recovered; so may its proceeds if they can be identified and traced;⁹³ but if neither the property itself nor its proceeds can be identified, the fact that it was converted will not entitle its owner to priority of payment out of the estate: the owner will simply have the right to waive the tort and present his claim as on contract for the value of the goods converted and pray to be allowed to share in the dividends.⁹⁴

Thomas v. Taggart, 209 U. S. 385, 19 A. B. R. 710: "The rule is generally recognized that if the title to property claimed is good as against the bankrupt and his creditors at the time the trustee's title accrued, the title does not pass and the property should be restored to its true owner; or, if the property has been sold, the proceeds of the sale take the place of the property."

In re Mulligan, 9 A. B. R. 11, 116 Fed. 715 (D. C. Mass.): "On the other hand, the mere misapplication of trust funds does not create in favor of the defrauded beneficiary a claim upon the general estate of the defrauding trustee superior to that of his general creditors. There are some cases, indeed, which give to the beneficiary a general priority or something very near it; but they are opposed to the great weight of authority. Other cases do not give to the defrauded beneficiary, merely as such, a general priority, yet allow him a prior charge upon the general assets of the defrauded trustee, where it is shown that the trust fund has been absorbed in the trustee's business or general estate, though it cannot be followed into any specific property remaining. Some of these latter cases distinguish between a dissipation of the trust fund, as in the payment of the trustee's debts, and an employment of the fund in the purchase of property; but, if the purchased property cannot be traced, there would seem to be no material difference. It might be possible, indeed, to require the general creditors of the defaulting trustee, in order to defeat the prior claim of the cestui upon any remaining property, to show affirmatively that the trust fund was not converted into the specific piece of property upon which the cestui seeks to enforce a lien; but to change the cestui's claim for priority into a mere shifting of the burden of proof, finds no considerable support in the decided cases."

Thus, converted shares of stock,⁹⁵ or the proceeds of converted shares of stock in a stockbroker's hands, where the relation between the stockbroker and his customer is held to be that of pledgee and pledgor or bailee and bailor rather than that of debtor and creditor, may be traced and recovered.⁹⁶

proved. In re McIntyre & Co., 24 A. B. R. 1, 176 Fed. 552 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The basis of the claimant's demand is the conversion of his stock. The only evidence tending to establish a conversion is the entries in the stock record book showing that upon one particular day there was a difference of only five shares between the receipts and deliveries of distillers stock. From this testimony the claimant seeks to draw the inference that on that day the brokers must have disposed of, and consequently, have converted his stock. But the testimony does not warrant the drawing of this inference. There is nothing to show that if the claimant had demanded his stock on the day in question he would not have received it. The entries do not show necessarily that the brokers did not have under their control sufficient shares to make delivery. They may, in regular course of business, have parted with the possession of as many shares as they received and yet have retained subject to their absolute control in the possession of another sufficient stock to meet the claimant's demand. If they did this there was no conversion."

Remedies Where Bankrupt Broker Has Converted Customer's Stock.—

Where a bankrupt broker has converted his customer's stock several remedies are open to the customer: (1) An action of tort for the conversion; (2) waiver of tort and suit for proceeds; (3) following of proceeds as trust fund; (4) breach of contract; (5) assumpsit on implied contract to refund the money paid, [partially, combining (2) and (3), as to which see ante, § 638], see In re A. O. Brown, 23 A. B. R. 423, 175 Fed. 769 (C. C. A. N. Y.).

and the proceeds are successfully traced.⁹⁷ Similarly, the converted proceeds of a collection of a note may be reclaimed if traceable, but may not be reclaimed if not traceable.⁹⁸

The right of reclamation is lost if the owner, or fraudulently induced seller, files his claim as a creditor.⁹⁹

In re Berry, 23 A. B. R. 27, 174 Fed. 409 (C. C. A.): "This is a petition to revise an order of the District Court affirming the report of a special master to the effect that the petitioner had elected to prove against the estate for the value of stock wrongfully hypothecated by the bankrupts, and therefore could not subsequently claim the stock or its profits specifically. It is to be inferred from the opinion of the Supreme Court in Thomas v. Taggart, 209 U. S. 385, 19 Am. B. R. 710, that a creditor, who does this without making any reservation has finally elected his remedy."

Unless the filing of the claim was made without knowledge of all the facts, or in ignorance of legal rights.¹ And the acceptance of a transfer of other property to make amends for the property converted is an election to treat the conversion as a debt and the transfer may constitute a preference.²

The firm had no right to pledge them for any of its own debts. When it did pledge them to the trust company, the day before its failure, the firm had no transaction pending and was itself indebted to Pippey. This was a larceny of his stock, *Tompkins v. On the contrary, the special master and the district judge both found that he acted with full knowledge of all the facts. The situation he is now in is not due to his laches or to any estoppel arising out of anything done to the prejudice of others, but to the fact that he has deliberately elected a remedy inconsistent with the claim he now makes."

§ 1883. "Tracing Trust Funds."—If trust property or other property belonging to another in the control of the bankrupt and passing into the custody of the receiver or trustee, or the proceeds of such trust property, or the proceeds of property not belonging to the bankrupt but sold or conveyed away by him or by the receiver or trustee, can be traced into the receiver's or trustee's hands, they may be recovered from the receiver or trustee, provided the rights of innocent third parties are not prejudiced.⁴

In re Acheson Co., 22 A. B. R. 338, 170 Fed. 427 (C. C. A. Ore.): "The doctrine of equity as sustained by the Supreme Court in National Bank v. Insurance Co., 104 U. S. 65, 26 L. Ed. 693, approving the rule in Hallett's Estate, 13 Ch. Div. 696, 36 Moak's Eng. Rep. 779, is that if property is intrusted to another to sell and pay over the proceeds, and sale is made, the beneficial owner is entitled to the proceeds, whatever be their form, provided only he can identify them. If the proceeds cannot be identified because the trust money is mingled with the money of the trustee, then the cestui que trust is entitled to a charge upon the new investment to the extent of the trust money traceable into it. Justice Matthews writes of the rule as going far enough to cover not alone express trustees and agents, but bailees, rent collectors, or 'anybody else in a fiduciary position,' and as making 'no difference between investments in the purchase of lands or chattels or bonds or loans or moneys deposited in a bank account,' and he shows very clearly that the foundation of the doctrine rests upon the 'very idea of trusts,' which can only be preserved by a strict enforcement of the principle that one who holds a relationship of trust is not allowed to make private use of trust property."

"The other creditors of the bankrupt have no claim upon any of the funds derived from plaintiff's trust which can be fully identified.

"To the extent that plaintiff is able to follow the trust funds into the purchase price of the real estate, or into the bankrupt's estate generally, she points out moneys that are no part of the estate held by the bankrupt's trustee for general distribution among the creditors, and is entitled to have them restored to the trust for her benefit which is to continue during her life."

This doctrine applies in every case of a trust relation, and as well to moneys deposited in bank, and to the debt thereby created, as to every other description of property."

Obiter. In re Wilkesbarre Furn. Mfg. Co., 12 A. B. R. 472, 130 Fed. 796 (D. C. Penn.): "It was undoubtedly a fraud on the creditors of Harrower Bros. for Frank B. Harrower to appropriate the money derived from the sale of the firm stock in order to make good his individual delinquencies as trustee; and upon proof of this, if the fund could be sufficiently identified and traced, an order might have been obtained restoring it to where it belonged. * * * The right that is sought to be enforced is the return of moneys wrongfully included in the fund previously distributed, which should therefore have been specifically claimed and traced."

In re McGehee, 21 A. B. R. 656, 166 Fed. 928 (D. C. Ga.): "The Troup Company and McGehee had the right to make any contract as between themselves they saw proper, so far as the matters in controversy here are concerned. There is nothing illegal or wrong about the agreement between them, and as to them it would seem that the Troup Company had the right to claim all notes, accounts, and proceeds of sale of fertilizers in the hands of McGehee as its property until the notes due the company for fertilizers were paid. Treated either as a reservation of title or as an equitable lien arising from a written agreement between the parties, it is certainly valid as between them. Of course, this claim of the Troup Company would be subject to any intervening liens or conveyances without notice, inasmuch as the agreement was never recorded. It would also be subject to the rights of parties who gave credit to McGehee on the strength of his supposed ownership of this property without notice of any kind. Where money had been received from the fertilizers, and had gone into the general funds of McGehee, of course, there would be no rights on the part of the Troup Company. How far the creditors may have obtained rights to which the Troup Company's claims of priority should be subordinated is not shown by this record."

Obiter, Block, Trustee v. Rice, Trustee, 21 A. B. R. 691, 167 Fed. 693 (D. C. Pa.): "It may be conceded that if Rice collected $750.00 of trust funds belonging to the Fine bankruptcy estate and held it intact in a separate fund, or if it be shown that he received the money and deposited it in his own bank account and that at all times after the receipt of the trust fund and its deposit that the net balance of his bank account exceeded the amount of the trust fund, that upon application, the Fine bankruptcy estate, by an order of court, could have secured possession of the fund so held by Rice, and under these conditions it may be that as against Rice's creditors a voluntary payment of this trust fund by Rice to the Fine bankruptcy estate within four months of the time of filing a petition in bankruptcy against him would be a lawful payment, although Rice knew at the time he was insolvent, and that such a payment would not be held to be preferential under the act." principle that there must be some identification of the property sought to be charged with the trust funds. But in the present case the proof fails to establish even the first step necessary to establish the petitioner's claim, viz., that the certified check embraced the trust funds. What proof there is would rather indicate that they were not included in it, and that the drawing and charging of such check was a special transaction, because the balance at the beginning and the end of the day when it was drawn and charged was the same. Moreover, we are unable to hold that the petitioner's failure in proof is helped out by any presumption of law. But if there was any inference that the check included trust funds, they certainly lost all possibility of identification when the check was collected and a certificate of deposit substituted in its place, and when the certificate of deposit was canceled and the amount thereof credited upon the note."

In re Larkin & Metcalf, 30 A. B. R. 903, 202 Fed. 572 (D. C. S. Dak.): "There is no recognized ground upon which equity can pursue this fund and impose upon it the character of a trust, except upon the theory that the money is still the property of the petitioners. If the petitioners herein are to be permitted to follow the fund received by the bankrupts or their agents upon the sale of this flour, and recover it, it is because the property belongs to the petitioners whether in the form in which they parted with its possession or in a substituted form. Under the earlier rule, petitioners would have been required to identify it as the very property which they had confided to another.

"The modern and more equitable doctrine permits the recovery of a trust fund from any one, not an innocent purchaser, and in any shape into which it may have been transmitted, provided he can establish the fact that it is his property or the proceeds of his property or that his property has gone into it and remains in a mass from which it cannot be distinguished.

"The earlier English doctrine was to the effect that the owner of property entrusted to another could follow and retake the same from the possession of the holder whether he was agent, bailee, or trustee, or from others who were in privity with him, so long as they were not bona fide purchasers for value, and this irrespective of whether such property remained in its original form or had been changed into some other form, so long as it could be ascertained to be the same property or the proceeds of the same property but that the right ceased when the means of ascertainment failed. It was further held that such means of ascertainment failed when the property was in the form of money, and had been mixed and confused in a general mass of money of the same description. The more recent doctrine, however, follows the rule announced in Re Hallett's Estate (Knatchbull v. Hallett), 13 Ch. Div. 696, which is to the effect that, if money held by one in a fiduciary character has been paid by him to his account at his banker's the person for whom he held the money can follow it and has a charge on the balance in the banker's hands, and that if the depositor has commingled it with his own funds in the bank, and has afterwards drawn out sums upon checks in the ordinary manner, he must be held to have drawn out his own money in preference to the trust money, and that, if he destroyed the trust fund by dissipating it altogether, there remains nothing to be the subject of the trust; that only so long as the trust property can be traced and followed into others into which it has been converted does it remain subject to the trust."

In re Stewart, 24 A. B. R. 474, 178 Fed. 463 (D. C. N. Y.): "True, because of the fraud Mitchell did not part with his title to the deposits; but, if we cannot follow and identify such deposits as being a part of the funds that came into the hands of the trustee, on what principle is he entitled to a lien on the other moneys or property of the bankrupt? Is it the law that identification of deposits in a bank, either the identical money, or the money deposited commingled with other money of the bank (in cases where the deposit was not a trust fund in the hands of the depositor), is unnecessary, and that in such cases the law impresses whatever is found in the bank with a trust for the benefit of the defrauded depositor? If the law establishes that the moneys deposited by Mitchell were held by Stewart in trust for him from the time of the deposits, and that a recognition of such trust by Stewart was unnecessary, and then presumes that the moneys drawn out in regular course of business by depositors and by Stewart came from the other funds in the bank, leaving Mitchell's untouched, then, of course, the money of Mitchell and the whole of it is considered as in the bank and now in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy. But it seems to me that this is further than the courts have gone."

And the trust fund must be clearly traced.⁶

Plow Co. v. McDavid, 14 A. B. R. 653, 137 Fed. 802 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The owner of a fund which has been misappropriated by one who held it in trust cannot follow it in the hands of the trustee unless he can trace the trust fund in kind or in specific property into which it has been converted, or, if the fund has been mingled with the trustee's other property, to establish a charge on the mass of such property for the amount of this fund. In other words, he can secure a preference out of the proceeds of the estate of the insolvent only where he can trace the trust property or fund, in its original or some substituted form, in the estate which comes into the hands of the trustee."

Eric R. R. v. Dial, 15 A. B. R. 559, 140 Fed. 689 (C. C. A. Ohio): "We recognize that the rule only permits the following of the converted property into assets which can be traced as proceeds, and that the lien does not attach to assets in which neither the thing nor its value can be found."

In re Acheson Co., 22 A. B. R. 338, 170 Fed. 427 (C. C. A. Ore.): "We do not mean to be understood as holding that equity will grant to a cestui que trust relief against any assets in the hands of a trustee, for it will not go farther than to give a lien when the facts are that there remain in the estate specific funds or property which have increased the assets of the estate, and which represent the proceeds of the specific property intrusted to the bankrupt. * * * Moreover, if there has been expenditure, and the funds are gone, and no specific property or money is found instead of the funds, it is inequitable that some other property found should be applied to pay one creditor in preference to another. So, funds that have been dissipated or that have been used to pay other creditors, or that have been spent to pay current business expenses, are not recoverable, because they are gone, and there is nothing remaining to be the subject of the trust."

In re Kearney, 21 A. B. R. 721, 167 Fed. 995 (D. C. Pa.): "Since, therefore, the money was not traced into a particular fund or deposit or earmarked in any other way, the inevitable inference is that the check of May 25th was drawn against the general funds of the bankrupt, and was intended to prefer the payee, * * * After the trustee had established a prima facie case of preference, it then became the duty of the claimant to prove that the loan was impressed with a trust, and that the money could be followed, either with precision, or at least into a mass from which it might be extracted with reasonable certainty."

In re Brunsing, Tolle & Postel, 22 A. B. R. 129, 169 Fed. 668 (D. C. Calif.): "The deposit, constituting the trust fund, is not, by the findings of the referee, sufficiently traced as part of the assets of the bankrupt estate. The rule applicable in cases like this is thus stated by Gilbert, J., in Spokane County v. National Bank, 68 Fed. 979, 16 C. C. A. 81: 'Both the settled principles of equity and the weight of authority sustain the view that the plaintiff's right to establish his trust and recover his fund must depend upon his ability to prove that his property is in its original or a substituted form in the hand of the defendant.' In other words, the depositor is not entitled to an equitable lien upon the entire mass of the estate of the bankrupt, but only upon that portion of it into which his deposit can be traced. In the well-considered case of Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 257, 11 N. E. 506, the court said: 'It is clear, we think, that upon an accounting in bankruptcy or insolvency a trust creditor is not entitled to a preference over general creditors of the insolvent merely on the ground of the nature of his claim; that is, that he is a trust creditor, as distinguished from a general creditor. We know of no authority for such a contention. The equitable doctrine that as between creditors equality is equity admits, so far as we know, of no exception founded on the greater supposed sacredness of one debt, or that it arose out of a violation of duty, or that its loss involves greater apparent hardship in one case than another, unless it appears in addition that there is some specific recognized equity founded on some agreement, or the relation of the debt to the assigned property, which entitled the claimant, according to equitable principles, to the preferential payment.'" Quoted further at § 1884.

And the tracing of a trust fund cannot be converted into a proceedings to recover a preference—the two positions are antagonistic.⁷

Where a certified check was drawn on the trust fund and deposited with another bank which eventually cashed the certified check and substituted its own certificate of deposit, it was held that the tracing was unsuccessful so far as it sought to hold the other bank which had substituted its own certificate of deposit, but was successful as to the balance remaining in the first bank, in which the claimants were entitled to share pro rata.⁸

Also the fund must continue to exist: the doctrine of tracing trust funds will not permit the affixing of a trust upon property of a different species,⁹ unless such property be proved to be the direct product of the fund.

The burden of proof in the tracing is upon the claimant.¹⁰

But a deposition for proof of debt is not prima facie evidence.

In re Jones, 18 A. B. R. 208, 151 Fed. 108 (D. C. Mich.): "The referee rightly refused to allow priority upon the ground that the estate in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy had been increased by the amount of the guardianship funds, through the mingling of the same by the guardian with his own assets. Had the allegations referred to been proven the priority claimed might have been established. * * * But no proofs were introduced in support of the allegations mentioned. The certificate of the referee is express that 'No proof was submitted aside from proof of claim originally filed,' and that the 'claim was submitted upon such proof and argument of counsel.'

"It is contended by the petitioner that, as the petition was sworn to, the truth of the allegation in question is prima facie established upon the principle that the sworn proof of claim against the bankrupt is prima facie evidence of its allegations, even if objected to. This is undoubtedly the rule, as applied to the proof of the claim itself as a general claim, considered apart from the question of priority."

But compare, obiter, wherein the court seems to fail to note that the deposition is, at best, merely prima facie proof of "debt," not proof of "conversion." In re McIntyre & Co., 24 A. B. R. 1, 176 Fed. 552 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "He contends, however, that the allegations of his proof of claim constituted prima facie evidence of conversion and that the burden was upon those objecting to his claim to show that the bankrupts at all times had their shares or their equivalent in their possession or under their control. Concededly this was not affirmatively shown, and, consequently, he urges that his claim must stand as established. It is undoubtedly true that a sworn proof of claim has probative force. It is prima facie evidence of its allegations even when objected to. There would, therefore, be much force in the claimant's contention if he had taken the same position before the referee. He might properly have stood upon his proof of claim and have insisted that the objections should go forward. But he did not do so. He offered to establish the allegations of his proof of claim by the entries in the stock record book and contended that the inference to be drawn therefrom supported the charge of conversion. Having thus attempted to establish the allegations in his proof of claim, he cannot be permitted to use those very allegations to supply the deficiencies in his testimony. A proof of claim may have some probative force but it certainly should not be regarded as self-proving unless relied upon."

The rule as to the tracing of trust funds is founded on equity and is not dependent on contract; and where a trust fund is mingled with the property of the trustee, the question whether the owner of the fund is entitled to a preference does not depend upon the construction of any contract between the parties, but upon a rule of preference in equity; and as to that the federal decisions must control and not those of the State where the contract was made.¹¹ in all such cases. And, therefore, whenever any interest arises the true question is, not whether money has been received by a party, of which he could not have compelled the payment, but whether he can now, with a safe conscience, ex æquo et bono, retain it. Illustrations of this doctrine are familiar in cases of money paid by accident or mistake or fraud. * * * Still, however, there are many cases of this sort, where it is indispensable to resort to courts of equity for adequate relief, and especially where the transactions are complicated, and a discovery from the defendants is requisite.’”

And the rules are not altered by the bankruptcy of the holder of the fund, for neither by the bankrupt’s “transfer by any means” nor by any levy “under judicial process” could the cestui que trust be deprived of the right, and it is only as to property that could be so transferred or levied on that title passes to the trustee.

In re Royea, 16 A. B. R. 143 (D. C. Wash.): “Section 70 (a) prescribes the rule to be applied in the determination of questions as to what property vests in the trustee of a bankrupt’s estate. The rule of the statute is that the trustee shall be vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt as of the date he was adjudged a bankrupt, to property, not exempt, which prior to the filing of the petition he could by any means have transferred or which might have been levied upon and sold under judicial process against him.

“Consideration of this rule leads to the inquiry whether the bankrupt, after he had become insolvent and immediately before the petition was filed, could have transferred the balance to his credit in the bank, so as to have defeated the petitioner in a suit in equity to reclaim his part of it, or whether an attaching or execution creditor, by levying upon the balance in the bank under judicial process against the bankrupt, could have divested the petitioner of his beneficial interest in the fund? To this inquiry equity gives a negative answer.”

And the rule does not differ, where the trust funds have been rightfully acquired, from what it is where they have been wrongfully acquired.

Smith v. Mottley, 17 A. B. R. 866, 150 Fed. 266 (C. C. A. Ohio): “But it makes no difference in the application of the principle of that decision that in one instance the wrongdoer was lawfully in the possession of the property and in the other not. The critical fact is in the wrongful appropriation by one party of the property of another by mingling it indistinguishably with his own, and it is not ordinarily important by what means he became possessed of the property.”

But a trust must exist, else tracing will not avail.¹² equitable or other—in the collections which it remitted for, or to operate as a substitution of funds. It did not constitute a declaration of trust.”

And in the absence of an express trust there must be some breach of good faith, or some fraud or unconscientious conduct to give rise to the equity.

In re Smith, Thorndyke & Brown, 20 A. B. R. 312, 159 Fed. 268 (D. C. Wis.): “It is sometimes profitable to lay aside elaborate briefs, burdened with a multitude of citations, and refer to an elementary principle, which is, after all, the pivot upon which the case must turn. Much has been said in the argument about trusts and trustees, trust moneys, etc. As applied to this case the word ‘trust’ is little more than a figure of speech. It is called by the law writers a constructive trust. Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equitable Jurisprudence (section 1044), uses the term ‘trust in invitum,’ and the learned author well describes how and why the court of equity has resorted to this fiction to facilitate its peculiar jurisdiction and to work out justice in peculiar cases. It is elementary that, in every instance where the court creates this quasi trust relation, it must find either actual fraud or some unconscientious conduct. In such case the court will fasten upon the property in the hands of the offending party and will convert him into a trustee of the legal title. It may be nothing more than a breach of good faith, as a mingling by an agent of the funds of his principle with his own moneys, or the receipt of a deposit by the officers of a bank when they know the bank to be hopelessly insolvent. There are innumerable variations of tortious conduct which will warrant this interposition of a court of equity; but in every such case there must be at the bottom some unfair dealing or wrongdoing. In the instant case the evidence shows without contradiction that Smith, as treasurer of the Grocers’ Association, was at liberty to deposit its funds with the Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company, that such company were to use such funds, and that disbursements therefrom were to be made by checks upon such company; in other words, nothing has been done either by Smith, or the Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company, which was not contemplated by the parties, and therefore there would appear to be no just occasion for the application of the trust doctrine.”

And a mere general deposit, giving rise to the relation of debtor and creditor rather than to that of bailee and bailor, or trustee and cestui qui trust, will not constitute a “trust fund.”¹³

But the doctrine is well established that the receiving of deposits by a bank on the eve of insolvency with knowledge of such insolvent condition, does not give rise to the relation of debtor and creditor but produces a trust fund reclaimable by the depositor.

In re Silver, 31 A. B. R. 106, 208 Fed. 797 (D. C. Ohio): “We hold then that the facts surrounding this transaction justified petitioners’ claim that the bankrupt legally knew of the insolvency of his business when he received the deposits in question. The implied contract, therefore, which ordinarily arises to create the relation of debtor and creditor when deposits are made in a banking institution never was created, and a trust impressed upon these funds in behalf of these several depositors is the equitable result of these transactions."

In re Smith, Thorndyke & Brown, 20 A. B. R. 312, 159 Fed. 268 (D. C. Wis.): "The Grocers' Association had practically consented to employ Smith, Thorndyke & Brown as a bank. * * * There is in the present case no semblance of bailment, because the deposit was general, not special. All that was required of Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company was to return on demand an equivalent sum. Can there be any doubt, therefore, that as between these original parties there subsisted the relation of debtor and creditor? And, if so, Mrs. Smith by virtue of her assignment became a creditor, and must share pari passu with other creditors under the terms of the Bankruptcy Act."

In re Nichols, 22 A. B. R. 216, 166 Fed. 603 (D. C. N. Y.): "Wheeler drew his checks against this from time to time, and it appears from the book that at times he made an overdraft, and that at other times there was a large amount to his credit. There was no agreement that Nichols should hold and keep these moneys separate and distinct from his other funds, or that he should not use them in the usual course of his banking business. The relation of the parties was that of debtor and creditor. Nichols, of course, knew that he was receiving the funds of the town, as he knew that Wheeler was the supervisor thereof, and that the funds deposited by Wheeler as supervisor were held by him in that capacity, and for the town and the school districts, etc. This, however, gave Wheeler no lien of claim upon the funds or moneys of Nichols. So far as capable of identification Wheeler could have held the funds as against the other creditors of the bankrupt, but no further."

The Amendment of 1910 to § 47a (2), endowing the trustee with the rights of a creditor "armed with process," does not, in general, affect the right to trace trust funds.

In re Dunn & Co., 28 A. B. R. 127, 193 Fed. 212 (D. C. Ark.): "The next question to be determined is: What is the effect of the amendatory act of 1910? * * * The trustee, therefore, is entitled to the same rights an execution creditor would have if the money in controversy had been seized by an officer under writ of attachment of execution, or if deposited in the bank, a writ of garnishment had been served on the depository. Would such proceedings defeat the claim of intervener? * * *

"An attaching or execution creditor is not a bona fide purchaser entitled to the protection the law affords such purchasers. He can only acquire by the seizure such titles or interest as the execution defendant has. The rule that, as money has no earmarks, every one is to be treated as an innocent purchaser, has been modified in cases of this nature."

§ 1884. Commingling of Trust Funds or Trust Property.—If the proceeds of the trust fund are deposited in bank to the bankrupt's general account, or otherwise commingled with the bankrupt's own funds, the amount may be ordered paid over in full, notwithstanding the commingling, for the trust funds will have priority over those not trust funds.¹⁴

In re Dunn & Co., 28 A. B. R. 127, 193 Fed. 212 (D. C. This case quoted further post, this section, and ante, § 1883.

In re Woods and Malone, 9 A. B. R. 615, 121 Fed. 599 (D. C. Ga.): "The doctrine of Lord Ellenborough that this principle does not apply, when the subject is turned into money and confounded in a general mass of the same description, is repudiated, for said the learned Master of the Rolls: 'Equity will follow the money even if put into a bag or undistinguishable mass, by taking out the same quantity. And the doctrine that money has no earmark must be taken as subject to the application of this rule.'"

In re Mulligan, 9 A. B. R. 8, 116 Fed. 715 (D. C. Mass.): "Still again, if the trust fund has been mingled with funds which belong to the defaulting trustee, and the mingled mass has been converted into property which exists in specie, the cestui has a claim upon this property by way of lien for the replacement of the trust fund advanced for the purchase, or by way of equitable ownership of an aliquot part of the property, either or both. For the purposes of this discussion, it matters not which. This principle is apparently questioned in Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 195; but the doubt must be limited to the particular case, as the principle has been abundantly recognized. The recognition has been most complete where the trustee has mingled in one bank deposit the trust fund and moneys of his own. Whatever may have been his actual intention, he will be presumed to have acted honestly, so far as the state of the account allows the presumption. His drafts against the deposit thus mingled are taken to be applied to his own share of the deposit until that share is exhausted, and what is left is taken to belong in equity to the cestui que trust. The rule thus stated is not undisputed (see Steamboat Co. v. Locke, 73 Me. 370), but it is supported by the weight of authority. Bank v. Peters, 123 N. Y. 272, 25 N. In some cases, indeed, this rule concerning bank deposits has been extended to cases in which the bank itself is the defaulting trustee. The cestui has sometimes been allowed a charge prior to that of the general creditors upon the general cash assets of the defaulting bank, or upon the minimum value of these cash assets since the date of the trust deposit. If since that date the cash assets have at any time fallen below the amount of the trust deposit, it has been held that the trust fund has been finally dissipated to that extent. *Merchants' Bank v. To same effect, Erie R. R. v. Dial, 15 A. B. R. 559, 140 Fed. 689 (C. C. A. Ohio): "Knowing that these goods could not be lawfully taken until they were paid for, and that the railroad company had no authority to deliver them without payment, the rubber company seized an opportunity for wrongfully obtaining possession of the goods and proceeded to commingle them with its own. The title of the shippers was not divested by this trespass. It did not convert the railroad company into a debtor to the shippers, whatever the liability of the railroad company for negligence might be, or the rubber company into a debtor of the railroad company.

"The trustees say that the rubber company converted the rubber into tires and commingled them with other tires which it had on hand, and that the property can be no longer identified. But the vendors of the rubber never consented to this. In a common-law court this might, as between the owners and the trespasser, have given title to the owners of the whole mass of tires, if they were indistinguishable. But a court of equity, for the purpose of saving to creditors that value which attached to the things before owned by the trespasser, will forbear to enforce a confiscation, and, instead, will accord a lien to the owner upon the mass for the value of the things converted. We had occasion to consider this subject in Holder v. Western German Bank, 136 Fed. 90, 68 C. C. A. 554, where we held, upon the authority of Knatchbull v. Hallett, 13 Ch. Div. 696, 36 Eng. Rep. 779, and National Bank v. Insurance Co., 104 U. S. 54, that, where the tort-feasor had mingled the property of the owner with his own, a lien would attach to the mass pro tanto. The assets came to the trustee in this condition. His interest therein is no other nor greater than that of the bankrupt, except where the bankrupt has conveyed his property with intent to defraud his creditors."

Smith v. Township, 17 A. B. R. 749, 150 Fed. 257 (C. C. A. Mich.): "When the commingled property is of more value than that wrongfully taken, it is equitable that the excess should go to the creditors of the wrongdoer, although by the strict rule of the common law the whole mass might become the property of the innocent owner of the portion misappropriated. Justice requires that the rights of innocent third parties having acquired the property, or some interest in it, for value, should be protected, and against such the rule is not enforced. But here the trustee stands in the shoes of the bankrupt and has only his rights. Of course, we are speaking of the general rule, and do not need to notice the instances of conveyances and preferences fraudulent as against creditors. And the question is what were the respective rights of the township and the bankrupt when the creditors filed their petition against him. The bankrupt's trustee says that it is impossible to find out what parts of the stock of goods contain the money of the township, and this was the difficulty which the referee found and which controlled his decision. But it was not for the township to make the distinction. As said by Chancellor Kent in Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns Ch. 62, at page 108, 'If a party having charge of the property of others, so confounds it with his own, that the line of distinction cannot be traced, all the inconveniences of the confusion is thrown upon the party who produces it, and it is for him to distinguish his own property, or lose it.' That case presented a state of facts which in this respect was quite similar to those which existed here. The fair inference is that the bankrupt took the money from time to time, purchased goods and mingled them with his stock, and out of his stock he sold parcels, which were not distinguishable in respect of the means with which they were bought. From the beginning of his fraudulent intermixture of his own money and that of the township, or of goods which may have been bought with his own money and others bought with the money of the township, if the latter did not become the owner of the commingled stock, it had, at least, a lien upon it for reimbursement; and the continuance of such transactions operated in the same way."

In re Royca, 16 A. B. R. 142, 143 Fed. 182 (D. C. Wash.): "The main argument in opposition to the petition is that trust money must be earmarked or separately kept in order to entitle the cestui que trust to reclaim it, in opposition to creditors of an insolvent debtor, and that where a bankrupt has mingled trust funds with his own, so that the identity of the trust company is lost, the beneficiaries of the trust must share pari passu with the creditors. * * *

"In many of the reported cases the cestui que trust failed to prove that the fund or property sought to be impressed with the trust, in fact, included trust money or acquisitions by reinvestment or exchange of trust money or property, and on that ground adverse decisions were rendered, without combating the doctrine of the Supreme Court, as expounded in the opinions by Mr. Justice Matthews above cited. In this case, although the money cannot be specifically identified, the fund is clearly proved to have been enlarged by mingling trust money with other money, and the equitable right of the petitioner to reclaim an amount equivalent to the amount intrusted is clear."

Block, trustee, v. Rice, trustee, 21 A. B. R. 691, 167 Fed. 693 (D. C. Pa.): "But the difficulty the defendant encounters in setting up that defense here is that his right to follow this trust fund in the possession of Rice depends upon it having been kept separate, or upon its having been received by him, deposited in bank, and the net balance of his bank account at all times exceeding the $750.00, and this must be made to appear by him to the satisfaction of the jury. The burden of showing this rests upon him. I recall no evidence whatever in the case to this effect." Quoted further ante, § 1883.

In re Brunsing, Tolle & Postel, 22 A. B. R. 129, 169 Fed. 668 (D. C. Calif.): "Of course, under this rule, it was not incumbent on the depositor, in the present case, to show that the identical merchandise purchased with his money passed into the hands of the trustee. If such merchandise was commingled with the bankrupt's general stock, and this general stock or the proceeds arising from the sale thereof, whether money, credits, or other property, can be shown to form a part of the assets of the bankrupt estate, the depositor would be entitled to an equitable preference in the distribution of such estate. In the case of Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256, 11 N. E. 504, above cited, the court, after stating that it is the general rule, as well in a court of equity as in a court of law, that in order to follow trust funds and subject them to the operation of the trust they must be identified, proceeded to say: 'A court of equity, in pursuing the inquiry and in administering relief, is less hampered by technical difficulties than a court of law, and it may be sufficient, to entitle a party to equitable preference in the distribution of a fund in insolvency, that it appears that the fund or property of the insolvent remaining for distribution includes the proceeds of the trust estate, although it may be impossible to point out the precise thing in which the trust fund has been invested, or the precise time when the conversion took place. The authorities require at least this degree of distinctness in the proof before preference can be awarded." Quoted further at § 1883.

Compare, Bills v. Schliep, 11 A. B. R. 607, 127 Fed. 103 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "It is immaterial that Turle & Skidmore may have mingled the funds in their hands received from the various shipments, because after such shipments and notice the law will presume and a court of equity would require either that Turle & Skidmore should satisfy their claims out of the other car loads in their hands before resorting to the car loads in question, or would be deemed to have held all proceeds not necessary to satisfy their claims for the use of the owners and consignors of the cargoes in question."

At any rate, such will be the case where at no time an adverse balance occurs.¹⁵

In re Berry & Co., 16 A. B. R. 567, 146 Fed. 623 (C. C. A. N. Y., S. C., 17 A. B. R. 591): "The account of Berry & Co. was never overdrawn during the day of November 25; there was as much as $5,000 to their credit during that day and at no time did the withdrawals reduce the balance below $1,500. It is true that large sums were checked out after the deposit of the $1,500, but the law presumes that the amounts withdrawn were not those impressed with the trust. In other words, so long as $1,500 remained in the bank the presumption is that it was the trust fund."

But an adverse balance or an entire drawing out of all funds occurring at any time will destroy the tracing of the fund.¹⁶

In re Mulligan, 9 A. B. R. 8, 116 Fed. 715 (D. C. Mass.): "This is not the case of a bank account, which, as has been said, is affected by a rather artificial rule. Moreover, there is no proof that the requirements of that artificial rule have here been met. At some time after the check was handed to Hornblower, the balance of the account may have been against the bankrupt, and an adverse balance at any time after the trust deposit is made destroys the claim of the cestui upon a bank account in which trust funds and private funds have been mingled. That the funds were mingled, not by the bankrupt himself, but by his broker, does not give Brown Bros. a better claim."

In re Smith, Thorndyke & Brown, 20 A. B. R. 312, 159 Fed. 268 (D. C. Wis., affirmed in re Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Co., 22 A. B. R. 350, 170 Fed. 900, C. C. A.): "There is another principle which would be equally fatal to the contention of the claimant. It appears that in February, 1907, the Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company, being temporarily embarrassed, but supposed on all hands to be solvent, called in an attorney to look over its books, who found this account with Smith as treasurer appearing only upon the cash book, and showing a debit balance against the Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company of about $4,000, which had not been paid because the company had not funds available to pay the same. The attorney advised that this account should be transferred to the general ledger of the company, and that Smith should at once open an account with the bank as treasurer of the Grocers' Association, and thereafter deposit all funds of the association with the bank, which course was pursued. Between that time and June 10, 1907, the date of filing of the petition in bankruptcy, this balance of $4,000 was reduced to $2,156. Not a dollar of the association money came to the Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company after February, 1907. The general bank balance of Smith, Thorndyke & Brown Company was appropriated by the bank under a banker's lien, which proceeding was sanctioned by the court, and no part of such money came to the hands of the trustee. Thus it appears that no part of the sum claimed ever found its way into the assets of the estate. It had been spent and dissipated four months before the bankruptcy proceedings. Under such circumstances no equitable doctrine could be invoked to appropriate general assets of the estate belonging to general creditors to make good this antecedent deficit; no portion of the fund having been traced into the estate."

So, also, the expenditure or dissipation of the trust fund will render the tracing of it ineffective.¹⁷ Thus, where the deposit was not special, but general. But where the trust funds are commingled, not only with private funds, but with other trust funds; and, after checking out, there remains at any time less than the trust fund in controversy, the claimants have failed pro tanto in tracing out their fund.¹⁸

In re Dunn & Co., 28 A. B. R. 127, 193 Fed. 212 (D. C. Ark.): "On the other hand, if, at any time after misappropriation of the funds and mingling them with those of the wrongdoer, all the money is withdrawn, including that unlawfully mingled, the equities are lost, although moneys from other sources are subsequently placed in the same place. Or if a part of the funds so mingled is withdrawn and the fund reduced to a smaller sum than the trust fund, the latter must be regarded as dissipated except as to this balance. Sums subsequently added to the fund from other sources cannot be subjected to the equitable claim of the cestui que trust."

In re T. A. McIntyre & Co., 25 A. B. R. 93, 181 Fed. 960 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Bankrupts bought 200 shares of a certain stock for a customer. They did not keep this stock, but used it as they would their own in the general transaction of their business. They did the same with other customers who had bought like stock. When they failed there were 95 shares of this kind of stock among the Bank of Commerce collateral, 10 shares were pledged on another loan, and there were 2 shares in their vault. They owed their customers 1,651 shares of this variety of stock. We cannot find from the record any satisfactory identification of the 95 shares (or any of them) as being those bought for this particular customer, rather than those bought for some one else. losses date from the checking out. In the event, however, that some of the trust funds were deposited after some of the checking out of the already insufficient fund had occurred, it might become necessary to classify the claimants.

But the doctrine of the persistence of the trust fund over the commingled individual funds of the insolvent does not permit the affixing of the trust to property of a different species nor to the general assets;²⁰ unless, of course, such property of a different species be proved to be the direct product of the fund.

It has apparently been held, though the reasoning is not entirely clear, that the trust will not attach where subsequent withdrawals exceed subsequent additions to the fund to such an extent as to more than equal the trust fund.

Impliedly, In re Stewart, 24 A. B. R. 474, 178 Fed. 463 (D. C. N. Y.): "I had supposed that the burden was on the claimant to prove his case and show by a fair preponderance of evidence that his money was commingled in the common mass of money on hand. If the evidence shows, as here, that in all probability the money has been paid out to other depositors, prior depositors, and that the money remaining is that put in the bank by subsequent depositors, how can it be said that the funds are traced and found commingled with other funds? To so hold is to impress all subsequent deposits with the trust relation and obligation created by law when Stewart obtained Mitchell's money by the fraudulent concealment, and hold that there has been a mere change of funds inasmuch as all subsequent deposits became the property of Stewart, and that it is immaterial that no substantial part of Mitchell's original deposits remained when the bank closed. The result of such a holding is to give a depositor of six months or a year ago, who was ignorant of the hopeless insolvency of a bank known to the bank, or to the banker in case of a private bank, a lien on the moneys subsequently deposited by others and remaining in the bank at the time of failure, regardless of whether or not any of the money of such old depositor remains. If showing the deposit obtained by fraudulent concealment and the mingling of the funds with other deposits, and that there was always a balance greater than such deposits, although thousands of dollars were being deposited daily and other thousands drawn out, makes a case and throws the burden of proof on the trustee in bankruptcy to show that the moneys so deposited by the one asserting the fraud had been drawn out, it will be impossible to defend in the great majority of cases. While it is easy to show the money in, and that all deposits go into, a common mass from which payments are constantly being made in due course of business, it is impossible, with rare exceptions, to show what money was paid out. * * *

"I think the opinion in this case shows the holding to be that, where a bank collects paper intrusted to it for collection and misappropriates the money collected or fails to account for and pay same over, it is sufficient to show, in order to justify collection from the funds in the hands of the receiver when appointed, that the money so collected went into and were commingled with the moneys of the bank; that the balance of money on hand was thereafter never less than the amount so collected and misapplied even in cases where there were large deposits and withdrawals by others; and that the balance of the moneys so commingled went into the hands of the receiver; but that it is not sufficient to show that the 'assets' of the bank were at all times greater than the amount misappropriated; and that such 'assets' came to the hands of the receiver. In short, the trust attaches to and follows the commingled fund so long as any of it remains, but never attaches to the general assets, or to funds deposited after the commingled fund has been drawn out. But if the commingled fund is being constantly augmented by new deposits and drawn upon, and the fund is not reduced below the deposits in question, then it is assumed as matter of law that identity is established."

But such holding, if it be the holding, does not seem entirely safe to follow in all cases. The further doctrine must not be lost sight of that such subsequent deposits or accretions as are not also trust funds become the individual property of the insolvent and will be presumed to have been used to replace the trust fund.

In accordance with the doctrine of the persistence of the trust fund, disbursements made by a bank with which a trust fund has been deposited, will be presumed to have been made from its own funds, and not from those of the trust account, unless the contrary has been established.²²

It has been held that where shares of stock belonging to a customer have been converted by a broker, other similar shares, subsequently purchased, will be presumed to have been bought to replace them, unless there were other customers of similar stock, in which event all would be entitled thereto as tenants in common.

In re Brown, 22 A. B. R. 659, 171 Fed. 281 (D. C. N. Y.): "The question is whether we should not assume that the broker, in taking from other funds enough to buy an equal number of shares of stock, did not intend pro tanto to attribute that much of his own funds to making good his default. By way of analogy, suppose that an agent depletes a bank deposit made in his name as agent. Subsequent deposits in that fund would go to make good the former conversion, and the general creditors could not complain. * * * He may make good his default out of his own property, and all that is necessary is some unequivocal appropriation of the property of that effect. Of course, in that case the appropriation was unambiguous, and here we must adopt a presumption; but the question is whether such a presumption is not usually borne out in fact. I think it is. I believe that brokers do usually mean their stocks on hand in the first instance to belong to their customers until they have enough to answer their obligations. If the bankrupts in this case in fact had no such intention, the receiver must show it. A manifest intention being enough, however, I shall adopt the presumption that the purchase of similar stock to that converted is the manifestation of such an intention. A more difficult question of fact arises in case the stock on hand turns out not to be enough to meet all the obligations to customers. Still in that case I think I must likewise assume in the absence of contradictory evidence, that the broker's intention was to contribute so much of the assets as he invested in this stock in general toward the fulfillment of such obligations. Each share being of equal value and unidentified, he cannot be said to have favored one customer rather than another; nor can I say that, because all the obligations are not fulfilled by the stock which is left, therefore I must assume that he had no intention whatever of fulfilling any part of them. Of course, he did not complete his intention; but so far as he went I think I must assume that he intended to replace the stock which he should have, but did not have, on hand. To adopt the analogy suggested by Mr. Justice Holmes in his opinion in Richardson v. Shaw, supra, suppose an elevator man has depleted the elevator below the amount due to all depositors; when he subsequently puts back into the elevator enough, or part of enough, wheat to answer his obligations to all, the claimants become co-owners of it. Could the elevator man's general creditors claim that they were entitled to the subsequent accretions? Or suppose it could be shown that he had entirely emptied the grain elevator; is there any doubt that his subsequent filling of it, or partial filling of it, must be assumed to be an appropriation by him of so much of his property to make good his conversion? The analogy in law seems to me to be complete in spite of the diversity of the subject matter."

The burden of proof that the property has been wrongfully mingled in a mass of the property of the wrongdoer is upon the owner, but when this is shown, the burden shifts to the wrongdoer. It is for him to distinguish between his own property and that of the innocent party.²³

Interest.—Interest may be allowed in some instances, as where the trust funds were tortiously converted, Hutchinson v. Otis, 8 A. B. R. 392, 115 Fed. 937 (C. C. A. Mass.): "In Hutchinson v. LeRoy (C. C. A.), 8 Am. B. R. 20, 113 Fed. 202, already referred to, we allowed interest against the petitioner; but there the fund which it was determined belonged to him, had been held adversely from the outset, as it grew out of a tort of the bankrupt which arose before proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced. In the present case, however, the fund came into the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, not through any tort, but through the oversight of Otis, Wilcox & Co. The trustee merely held it until the courts could determine to whom it belonged, and the record does not show that the trustee has received any increment thereof."

Costs and Expenses.—A proportionate part of the costs and expenses may be charged against the owner of the trust fund and deducted from the amount of the fund decreed to belong to him, In re Gaskill, 12 A. Compare, Smith v. Township, 17 A. B. R. 545, 150 Fed. 257 (C. C. A. Mich.).

In re Acheson Co., 22 A. B. R. 338, 170 Fed. 427 (C. C. A. Ore.): "In carrying out the rule when it comes to proof, the owner must assume the burden of ascertaining and tracing the trust funds, showing that the assets which have come into the hands of the trustee have been directly added to or benefited by an amount of money realized from the sales of the specific goods held in trust; and recovery is limited to the extent of this increase or benefit. * * * If, however, he succeeds in making requisite proof, it then devolves upon the bankrupt, or the trustee who takes the property of the bankrupt, in the same relation that it was held by the bankrupt, to distinguish between what is his and that of the cestui que trust. We do not mean to be understood as holding that equity will grant to a cestui que trust relief against any assets in the hands of a trustee, for it will not go farther than to give a lien when the facts are that there remain in the estate specific funds or property which have increased the assets of the estate, and which represent the proceeds of the specific property intrusted to the bankrupt. Lowe v. Jones, Adm'r, 192 Mass. 94, 78 N. E. 402, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487, 116 Am. St. Rep. 225. Moreover, if there has been expenditure, and the funds are gone, and no specific property or money is found instead of the funds, it is inequitable that some other property found should be applied to pay one creditor in preference to another. So, funds that have been dissipated or that have been used to pay other creditors, or that have been spent to pay current business expenses, are not recoverable, because they are gone, and there is nothing remaining to be the subject of the trust. This qualification of the general rule is to be applied to the facts pleaded in the present case, inasmuch as it is alleged that some of the trust moneys were used by the bankrupt in paying its employees, and in the expenses of running its business, and in paying other creditors. For them there can be no recovery."

And in bankruptcy, the trustee stands in such cases in the bankrupt's shoes, and the case is different from that of seizure by creditor's bills.

Smith v. Mottley, 17 A. B. R. 866, 150 Fed. 266 (C. C. A. Ohio): "Again, if the trustee takes the bankrupt's property in the same plight as the bankrupt held it, and while the bankrupt held the assets, they became subject to a lien upon the mass, which was not destroyed by its continual transformation in business from day to day, the paying out and receiving in, of parcels of the fund, and no creditor having levied upon it, or the right of an innocent party fastened upon it, it is difficult to see how by the succession of the trustee the lien could be lost. Whether it was a lien or not would continue to be the same question as it was between the bankrupt and the owner of the misappropriated fund.

"There would seem to be a valid distinction in the application of the rule that the misappropriated fund must be found in the assets, between the settlement of an estate in bankruptcy proceedings and proceedings upon a bill filed for the marshaling and appropriation of assets according to the principles of equity. In the latter case there is a seizure of the res for the direct purpose of fastening the inchoate rights of creditors."

However, if there be fraud, then, since the Bankruptcy Act, in § 70 (a), passes to the trustee title to all property fraudulently transferred, the trustee will get title,²⁸ even though the fraud be "fraud in law" without intentional bad faith.²⁹

Gillespie v. Piles, 24 A. B. R. 502, 178 Fed. 886 (C. C. A. Iowa): "The court ordered that out of the proceeds of the hogs there should be paid to the referee and trustee the percentages specified in these sections of the Bankruptcy Law. But these proceeds were no part of the estate of the bankrupt, and they could not be "administered" as such before the referee or by the trustee. They were the property of the interveners, which the trustee had obtained possession of through the fraud of the bankrupt, and which it was his duty to return to the interveners immediately upon their rescission of the sales and their demand for the property. The latter were not creditors of the estate. The proceeds here in question were not distributable to the creditors of the estate or to the creditors of Hough. They were the property of the interveners, and the direction that these percentages should be paid to the referee and the trustee out of these proceeds cannot be sustained. Property which comes to the possession of a trustee in bankruptcy through the fraud of the bankrupt, and is adjudged to be returned to the victim of the fraud, is not a part of the estate of the bankrupt, and the referee and trustee may not be allowed their statutory percentages out of it."

But, on principle, there is to be noted a radical difference between the allowance of compensation to the trustee or receiver for services in the care of the assets impounded pending the determination of the rights of the parties therein, as also of the referee in adjudicating the rights of the parties therein, and the allowance of compensation therefrom to an attorney for the receiver or trustee in endeavoring, in behalf of unsecured creditors, to defeat the owner's claim. Certainly it is to be conceded that one whom the court has determined to be the rightful owner of property should not be compelled to pay his opponent's attorneys' fees incurred in the ineffectual effort to keep him out of his property. But it has ever been the recognized rule that a court officer in charge of property in dispute in a court of equity may have his expenses and compensation therefrom for his care of it, as also that the court may have therefrom that portion of its own costs assignable to that particular controversy. The failure to distinguish the dual capacity of the trustee in bankruptcy, noted ante, at § 896, as being on the one hand a party litigant, as "owner" and agent of the general creditors, and as being on the other hand a court officer, holding and caring for the property of all to await the determination of the rights of the parties therein, strikes the line of demarkation and affords a reasonable basis of distinction. In bankruptcy administration there arise frequent instances of the tracing of funds alleged to be trust funds and of the reclamation of property claimed, not seldom under doubtful title, by others. Such adverse claimants would be under the necessity of resorting to some court to establish their rights in any event; and if they are compelled to use the forum of the bankruptcy court for such purpose it should not exonerate them from all charge nor compel trustees and referees to protect the property of such claimants and determine their rights gratuitously.

It was in recognition of this manifest injustice to the court officers in bankruptcy that Congress in the Amendment of 1910 permitted the courts, in their discretion, to allow commissions, not to exceed the certain limited rates specified, to trustees and receivers "on all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, by them," etc.³²

Of course the court, in its discretion, may refuse compensation, for § 48 as amended simply establishes an outside limit upon the discretion of the court in making allowances and does not attempt at all to control that discretion within those limits.

But it is still the rule, and must always be the rule, that reimbursement should not be allowed out of the rightful owners property for the attorneys'

Gillespie v. Piles, 24 A. B. R. 502, 178 Fed. 886 (C. C. A. The latter ought not to be required to pay for services which have been a positive detriment to him. arising on this petition to revise is whether a District Court of the United States, in which bankruptcy proceedings are pending, and which is in the actual possession of certain real estate conceded to belong to the bankrupt, has jurisdiction to determine the amount and the order of priority of liens thereon, and to liquidate such liens, to the end that the property may be sold free of incumbrances and in aid thereof to enjoin the lienholders from prosecuting the foreclosure of their liens in a suit brought in a State court before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings but within four months thereof; and this, though the lienholders object to such jurisdiction, and it is not contended that their liens are preferential or fraudulent or invalid for any other reason. Bearing in mind the property was the property of the bankrupt, the title to which had passed to the trustee in bankruptcy, and that it was in the actual possession of the District Court of the United States, we think an affirmative answer should be given, upon the authority of In re Schermerhorn, In re Epstein (quoted § 1797) and the cases therein cited. * * * Indeed, it appears

In re Kellogg, 10 A. B. R. 11, 121 Fed. 333 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The second assignment of error raises the question as to the power of the bankruptcy court to determine the question of the validity and amount of said bond and mortgage in the summary proceedings instituted before the referee in bankruptcy. Did the bankruptcy court, after having acquired actual possession and control of the property, have power to determine the validity of the liens thereon? * * * It must be held that the bankruptcy court, upon such acquisition by the receiver of possession and undisputed legal title, had jurisdiction to determine the validity of the mortgage."

Carter v. Hobbs, 1 A. B. R. 215, 92 Fed. 594 (D. C. Ind.): "From the foregoing considerations it would seem to be clear that the District Court when sitting in bankruptcy has lawful jurisdiction over liens and mortgages upon the property of the bankrupt, so that it may inquire into their validity and extent and grant the same relief which the courts of the State might or ought to grant, and that such court may do this without the consent of the secured creditor."

Impliedly, In re Pollman, 16 A. B. R. 146 (Ref. N. Y.): "The court of bankruptcy having possession of the property in question, must administer the same in accordance with the equitable principles of the Bankruptcy Act. * * * Thus the court will compel the creditor to resort first to the unsold portion of real estate before going to that which the debtor has alienated. * * * Incident to this system, which supersedes all other systems of administering insolvent estates, secured creditors will often be compelled to submit to delay, if delay is likely to benefit the creditors at large. In re Sabine, 1 Am. B. R. 315, 321. Stays of legal proceedings are constantly granted, and the bankruptcy court will so regulate the time and manner of enforcement of valid liens, as not to cause unnecessary loss to others. Inferentially, In re Moody, 12 A. B. R. 724, 131 Fed. 525 (D. C. Iowa): "It is a familiar principle of equity jurisprudence that property in the custody of a court of equity is always held by it in trust for those to whom it rightly belongs; and the jurisdiction to inquire into and determine to whom it so belongs, and to that end to require all claimants thereto to present their claims within a stated time, or be barred of any interest in or right to the property, is inherent in every court of equity."

Thus, the bankruptcy court may determine whether a transfer or conveyance by the bankrupt of property still remaining in the possession of the bankruptcy court, is fraudulent or preferential.³⁴

The bankruptcy court need not sell merely whatever title the trustee has and leave the purchaser to litigate, afterwards, the extent of it, but may determine its extent and validity in the first instance;³⁵ and may determine in advance of the sale of a leasehold the rights of the landlord under a forfeiture clause.³⁶

§ 1887. Incidental Power to Compel Execution of Papers by Third Parties.—As incident to the power, undoubtedly the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to order the surrender or cancellation of instruments affecting the property so in its custody; but not by service of process upon persons outside of the district.³⁸ And it has jurisdiction to order the execution of assignments;³⁹ but power to compel a pledgor to execute necessary papers to effect a sale of the pledged property, where the pledged property was in the bankrupt's possession, has been denied.⁴⁰

§ 1888. Referee Has Jurisdiction.—The referee has jurisdiction to marshal liens and to determine their extent, validity and order of priority.⁴³

In re Rochford, 10 A. B. R. 608, 124 Fed. 182 (C. C. A. S. Dak.): "A referee in bankruptcy has jurisdiction to draw to himself by summary process or notice, and in the first instance to determine the question of the validity of the claim of a third party to a lien upon it, or an interest in, property or the proceeds of property lawfully in the custody of a trustee in bankruptcy."

Mound Mines Co. v. Hawthorne, 23 A. B. R. 242, 173 Fed. 882 (C. C. A. Colo.): "Where, however, property which is in the possession of a bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy proceedings, and passes as part of his estate into the possession of the trustee in bankruptcy, and a third party claims an interest therein, the referee may, by a summary proceeding, require such third party to appear in the bankruptcy court, present his claim, and the referee adjudicate the rights of the parties in respect thereof."

In re Wilka, 12 A. B. R. 728 (D. C. Iowa): "The referee finds, however, that the trustee was in the actual possession of the property. If this is true, though the property may then have been situated in South Dakota, the court was in the actual custody and possession of the property through its trustee. * * * In this case the Granite City Bank was given the notice required by the Bankruptcy Act and by personal service of such notice upon it at Dell Rapids, S. D., as well. The conclusion is that the referee had jurisdiction to make the order of sale. This, of course, does not preclude the bank from establishing its claim, if it can do so, to the proceeds of the property covered by its mortgage. It may propound its claim thereto before the referee. In fact, the referee should require it to do so before making any order for the distribution of such proceeds. Upon the bank's presenting its claim to such proceeds, the trustee may take issue thereon, if he so elects, and the referee will then determine the matter upon evidence taken under his direction."

In re Miner's Brewing Co., 20 A. B. R. 717, 162 Fed. 327 (D. C. Pa.): "Under the facts reported by him, the referee had authority to order a sale of the bankrupt's real estate discharged of liens. Upon these facts, he had authority also to hear claims upon the fund produced by the sale, and to determine their validity, extent and relative priority."

B. R. 807, 172 Fed. 535 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Doubtless a court of equity would not intervene to enforce or perfect an imperfect mortgage as against the other creditors of the mortgagor."

Even where the transfer complained of occurred more than four months preceding the bankruptcy.

In re Elletson Co., 23 A. B. R. 530, 174 Fed. 859 (D. C. W. Va.): "This deed having been executed more than four months prior to the institution of bankruptcy proceedings, under older decisions some doubt might have arisen as to the right of the referee to pass upon and adjudicate the matter in this summary proceeding instead of requiring the institution of a plenary suit for the purpose. The bank, however, having voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction by presenting its claim for adjudication, and the estate of the bankrupt being wholly in the possession of the court, there can no longer be doubt of the jurisdiction as thus taken by the referee under the rulings. Indeed the question of 'four months' or not has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the referee, that jurisdiction being dependent rather on possession of the res."

Whilst it is true that the referee has such jurisdiction, and that generally such proceedings should be had before the referee, and perhaps, under rule of court would be sent there if filed in the District Court, yet this is not to deny that the District Court, before the judge itself, has jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings if it so desires. However, after reference to the referee all proceedings relative to property in the custody of the court should, for the sake of due order and consistent administration, be carried on before the referee; and such is the evident design of the Act.

§ 1889. Reasonable Notice to Lienors or Other Parties in Interest Requisite.—Notice must be given to lienholders;⁴⁴ and a sale does not divest the lien of a creditor unless he has been given such notice and unless the sale has been made free therefrom.⁴⁵

Reasonable notice to the various lienholders and claimants of interest, to come in and set up their rights, is all that is requisite.⁴⁶

In re Moody, 12 A. B. R. 724, 131 Fed. 525 (D. C. The motion of the Hawkeye Land Company for the release of the property will therefore be overruled, and it will be required to propound its claim to this property before the referee by September 1, 1904. The referee will so notify it at least 10 days before such date, and, if it fails to do so within such time, it will be barred of all right to or interest in said property. If it shall so propound its claim, the referee will then fix the time within which the trustee, as soon as appointed, shall plead thereto, and will make all requisite and necessary orders for speeding the matter to a final hearing, and determine the questions so presented."

In re Noel, 14 A. B. R. 720, 137 Fed. 694 (D. C. Md.): "That court, having possession of the property, had jurisdiction, upon notice to those claiming to have liens and incumbrances upon it, to order the property to be sold by the trustees free of all incumbrances, if the court, in its discretion, should determine that such a sale was for the benefit of the unsecured creditors; and after such a sale, having in its control the fund arising from the sale, it would have jurisdiction to determine the conflicting claims of the parties whose liens had been displaced as to the property sold, and transferred to the fund in the court. Ray v. Norseworthy, 23 Wall. 128, 23 L. Ed. 116."

Even when a lienor on property in the actual custody of the bankruptcy court is also a creditor, he must have due notice, other than the mere ten days notice by mail given to all creditors, of any attempt to affect his property rights as such lienor.⁴⁷ Even though the claim be considered frivo-

Not to Adjudicate Lien in Favor of Lienholder Not a Party When.—Nor should the order require payment of a lien to a lienholder not made a party nor appearing in the proceedings, unless the pleadings already filed therein expressly concede the validity and extent of the lien and the person entitled thereto. Gillespie v. Piles, 24 A. B. R. 502, 178 Fed. 886 (C. C. A. Iowa), quoted at § 562.

47. But see, apparently, contra, In re Wilka, 12 A. B. R. 727, 131 Fed. 1004 (D. C. Iowa). However, on review (sub nom. In re Granite City Bk., 14 A. B. R. 405 [C. C. A. Iowa]) it is evident that actual notice was given to lienors.

lous, the alleged lienor should be given notice.⁴⁸ However, the failure to give him notice would not make the sale invalid, but would simply make it subject to whatever rights the alleged lienor might be able to prove.

Likewise notice must be given to adverse claimants, where any disposition of the property in which they claim to be interested is concerned.⁴⁹ Thus, the court held a trustee in bankruptcy personally liable to an adverse claimant where the trustee turned the property back to the bankrupt upon confirmation of a composition, after having actual notice of the adverse claimant's rights.⁵⁰

§ 1890. "Ten Days Notice by Mail" Insufficient; "Order to Show Cause," Proper Method.—The usual ten days notice by mail prescribed in cases of sales, etc., will not suffice. Ordinarily, notice is given by means of the service of a certified copy of an "order to show cause" by a certain date why the prayer of the petition should not be granted.⁵¹ Of course, the parties may waive service of process and enter their appearance voluntarily.⁵²

There is no need to give notice, however, of the application for an order to show cause—the show-cause order is itself a notice to appear and it concludes no one.

In re Philip Brady, 21 A. B. R. 364, 169 Fed. 152 (D. C. Ky.): "While a notice might not have been improper, it was not at all necessary, because the show-cause order itself gives notice and affords an opportunity on a certain named future day to show cause why the special relief sought should not be granted. The order, per se, gives him his day in court."

Similarly, an "order to show cause" may be issued upon the trustee upon a claimant's petition or cross petition, where notice upon the trustee is proper.⁵³

§ 1891. Notice on Nonresidents, if Court Has Actual Possession.—Where the bankruptcy court has actual possession of the property involved, notice may be served upon parties out of the district to set up their rights.⁵⁴ Service may be had on nonresidents under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 738.⁵⁵

§ 1892. But Mere Possession of Res and Service of Notice Insufficient to Render Judgment in Personam.—While possession of the property involved entitles the bankruptcy court in such summary proceedings to determine the rights of the parties thereto and to adjudicate those rights upon proper notice, yet, if there be no waiver of jurisdiction and no entry of appearance, the mere possession of the rem and service of notice on the party will not authorize the bankruptcy court to render personal judgment for costs against such third party.⁵⁶

§ 1893. Third Parties May Intervene.—On the other hand third parties claiming interests in the property may intervene and apply to be made parties, set up their rights and have them determined in the bankruptcy court.

§ 1894. Pleadings and Practice in Marshaling Liens and Interests.—Liens may be set up on the forms prescribed by the Supreme Court's General Orders in Bankruptcy for proof of secured debts.⁵⁷ But secured creditors are not obliged to prove their claims upon the form prescribed by the Supreme Court for proof of secured debts. A mere pleading in the nature of an intervening petition in equity will suffice, the regular form apparently being intended simply for secured creditors who retain the possession of their securities and desire their value credited thereon and the claim allowed for the deficit.⁵⁸

§ 1895. Whether Proceedings to Marshal Liens on Property in Custody, on Notice, Strictly "Summary" Proceedings.—Proceedings to marshal liens on property in the custody of the bankruptcy court, on notice and hearing, perhaps are not, strictly speaking, "summary" proceedings even though they do not follow the established forms.⁶¹

§ 1896. What Law Governs Validity.—In general the trustee takes title in the same plight and condition in which the bankrupt left it. In general the law of the State will control in the marshaling of liens; and the decisions of the highest tribunal of the State will be followed where the lien or interest is not affected by the peculiar provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. In short, the validity and priority of liens on the property so coming into the custody of the bankruptcy court, and the extent and validity of interests therein are, in general, to be determined by the law of the State.⁶²

§ 1899. "Surrender of Preference" on Distinct Transaction Not to Be Required as Prerequisite to Validity of Lien Which Itself Is Not a Preference.—Surrender of preferences received on other and distinct transactions is not to be required upon the marshaling of assets, as a condition prerequisite to the validity of a lien, where the lien itself is not a preference. Such surrender is a prerequisite only to the allowance of claims to share in dividends.⁷⁰

Bear v. Chase, 3 A. B. R. 746, 99 Fed. 920 (C. C. A. S. C.): "Counsel insist with great earnestness that a bill in equity should have been filed in this case instead of proceeding by rule to show cause, as was done, and while it is not said so in words, the inference is irresistible that it was necessary to institute such suit in the State Court instead of the District Court of the United States. * * * It may be conceded that in ordinary proceedings affecting the bankrupt's estate, in which third parties or adverse claimants are interested, the better practice would be either to file a bill in equity or a separate petition in the bankruptcy proceedings, setting up the cause of action in question, on which process should be regularly issued or full opportunity otherwise given to appear. But that has no application in this case, where the alleged ground of bankruptcy is the procuring of and levying the attachments enjoined. * * * Upon the adjudication of the bankrupt, all creditors became parties to the bankruptcy proceedings by operation of law, and particularly these creditors by whose acts the bankruptcy was caused. No good reason would seem to exist why a court, as to any creditor before it in a bankruptcy proceeding, should not, after the service of a rule, enjoin such creditor from taking any step or doing any act affecting the bankrupt's estate, or interrupting the court in the due administration thereof. These attaching creditors do not occupy the relation of third persons in possession of, or adverse claimants dealing with, the property of the bankrupt. In re Kennedy (D. C.), 97 Fed. (3 Am. B. New River Coal Land Co. v. Ruffner, 20 A. B. R. 100, 165 Fed. 881 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "We have given careful consideration to the arguments submitted and are of opinion that the order granting a stay of proceedings in the State court was clearly authorized by the Bankruptcy Act. In the administration of the affairs of insolvent persons and corporations the jurisdiction of the federal courts in bankruptcy is essentially exclusive. 'The intent of the bankruptcy law,' says the Supreme Court in re Watts and Sachs, 190 U. S. 27, 10 Am. B. R. 113, 'is to place the administration of affairs of insolvents exclusively under the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts.'"

In re Russell & Birkett, 3 A. B. R. 658, 101 Fed. 248 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "A Federal court will neither interfere with property in the lawful custody of a State court, nor tolerate interference by a State court with property in its custody. * * * Authority to Courts of Bankruptcy to protect the property in their custody from such interference would seem to be specifically conferred by that provision of § 2 of the act permitting them to make such orders and issue such processes as may be necessary for enforcing their jurisdiction. The prohibition of § 720 of the Revised Statutes against enjoining the proceedings of a State court does not apply when any law relating to bankruptcy authorizes an injunction, nor does it where the proceedings sought to be enjoined have been commenced after the jurisdiction of the Federal court has attached."

In re Emslie, 4 A. B. R. 126, 102 Fed. 292 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The order staying the action in the State court was a proper exercise of power, and should not be disturbed. That action was an interference with assets of the bankrupts in the custody of the bankruptcy court over which that court had previously acquired jurisdiction, and as it was brought without the leave of the court, the order staying its prosecution was properly granted."

In re Kimball, 3 A. B. R. 161, 97 Fed. 29 (D. C. Penn.): "Where the personal property of the bankrupt at the date of the adjudication is subject to the levy of a pending execution, the right of this court to enjoin the execution creditor, if the execution is an unlawful preference and contrary to the provisions of the Bankrupt Act, is clear."

In re Pittelkow, 1 A. B. R. 475, 92 Fed. 901 (D. C. Wis.): "* * * jurisdiction exists to restrain mortgagees, for a reasonable time, from commencing foreclosure proceedings, and to order sales free from incumbrances, in special instances, after due hearing, where the rights are clear."

In re Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co., 25 A. B. R. 282, 180 Fed. 549 (D. C. Mo.): "In this case the estate of the bankrupt was and is undergoing administration in this court. The visible assets were manifestly insufficient to pay more than a comparatively small dividend upon the claims allowed. A proposition was made by the petitioner Swofford to buy the remaining assets, which included claims against himself, upon the payment to the trustee of a sum of money sufficient to enable all creditors having provable claims to receive 37½ cents of the face thereof. The court had full power to entertain such a proposition and in its discretion to accept it. This the court did, and the contract raised by that judicial determination has been in large part executed; not wholly executed, however, for the reason that further claims may still be filed and further payments by Swofford may and will become necessary. The matter is, therefore, still in process of administration by this court, and cannot be disturbed or changed without seriously impeding the enforcement of the Act and interfering with the administration of the estate. In such case there can be little doubt of the power of this court to restrain by injunction any proceeding which will have this damaging effect."

§ 1902. Restraining Sale or Distribution under Levy Made within Four Months.—Thus, the sale or distribution of property or its proceeds under levy or seizure made within four months of the bankruptcy, while still in the hands of the officer of the court making the levy or seizure, may be restrained before the adjudication, and pending the determination as to the bankruptcy of the debtor.⁷³ And, of course, also after adjudication.

So, also, a creditor may be restrained from enforcing a nullified judgment on the ground that it constitutes a cloud on the property of the bankrupt estate, and interferes with its sale by the trustee.⁷⁴

New River Coal Land Co. v. Ruffner Bros., 21 A. B. R. 474, 165 Fed. 881 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "In the act forbidding courts of the United States to stay proceedings in a State court the courts of bankruptcy are specifically excepted and the bankruptcy law of 1898 expressly confers upon these courts the power to issue injunctions to stay proceedings within this exception. * * * The prime purpose of the Bankruptcy Act is to secure an equal distribution of an insolvent's estate among the creditors, and it is not only a power conferred upon the court in a bankruptcy proceeding to take jurisdiction of the unencumbered property of a bankrupt, but also of property to which liens attach, provided the judge of the court in bankruptcy shall determine that such property should be administered by that court. It has not unfrequently been the case that the bankrupt courts have issued injunctions to stay proceedings in a State court, to foreclose mortgages, to enforce other liens, and even to forbid State officers from proceeding with executions upon judgments, where § 1909. Injunction Refused Where Legal Proceedings Not Nullified by Bankruptcy, and State Court Prior in Custody.—Injunction will be refused, where it is not asked for merely to give time for a trustee to be elected and to intervene to protect creditors' rights, but is asked on the ground of paramount jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, where the state court has prior custody of the res and the legal proceedings themselves are not void.⁸⁵

§ 1910½. Attempts to Control Trustee's Administration by Proceedings in Other Courts.—The trustee's administration of the estate and the exercise of his discretion are not to be interfered with by proceedings brought in other courts.⁹¹

Thus, the bankrupt will not be permitted to maintain an injunction suit in the state court to prevent the trustee from carrying out a compromise of a controversy with the bankrupt's wife.⁹²

Thus, also, the plaintiff in a suit for infringement of a patent may not have injunction against the receiver or trustee in bankruptcy of the defendant (who has been adjudged bankrupt in the meantime) to prevent the paying out of the funds in the course of the administration of the bankrupt's assets, such application being properly addressed, rather, to the bankruptcy court in charge of the administration.⁹³

American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds & Catlin Co., 23 A. B. R. 337, 174 Fed. 138 (C. C. N. Y.): "It is not for this court to say what moneys the receiver shall or shall not pay out. All questions as to priority of claims and as to payment of moneys in the custody of the District Court should be submitted to that court for determination. If the claim be one not provable in bankruptcy, presumably that court will make no provision for its payment. If it be a provable claim, it is equally presumable that whatever funds there may be in the hands of receiver, over and above the expenses of administering the estate, will be retained, until all provable claims are liquidated and all questions of priority (if any arise) are determined. The whole matter is exclusively in the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court."

In such event the bankruptcy court will direct the bankruptcy receiver or trustee not to pay out any dividends without notice to the defendant in the pending patent case.⁹⁴

Section 57, subdivision h, prescribes several modes of valuation, and the one referred to is exclusive of the others and is superfluous and useless unless it is intended to authorize the creditor without interference by the trustee or the court to value his own security, provided he turns it into money, 'according to the terms of the agreement pursuant to which' it was delivered to him."

And where the possession of the pledgee or other lienholder is not exclusive of the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court may enjoin.³

In re Jersey Island Packing Co., 14 A. B. R. 689, 142 Fed. 445 (C. C. A. Calif.), wherein the court held, that under § 2, a court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to restrain a sale, where all the property of an alleged bankrupt corporation is about to be sold, at the instance of its treasurer, to obtain satisfaction of debts owing to him and his wife, secured by trust deeds covering all the property; and a restraining order should be granted where such sale would extinguish the bankrupt's equity of redemption, since by selling the property under the direction of the bankruptcy court the interests of all parties would be protected. The court in this case held that the rules protecting liens do not extend to a protection of the contract remedies for enforcing such liens; and said:

"It is true that the Bankruptcy Act provides that liens such * * * shall not be affected by bankruptcy but that is far from saying that such lienholders may, after the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy against the debtor, proceed to enforce their liens or contracts in the manner prescribed in the instruments which create them; and this is true whether such lien is an ordinary mortgage, or a deed of trust with provision for a strict foreclosure by a notice and sale. The provision of the Bankruptcy Act that such a lien shall not be affected by the bankruptcy proceedings has reference only to the validity of the lienholder's contract. It does not have reference to his remedy to enforce his right. The remedy may be altered without impairing the obligation of his contract, so long as an equally efficient and adequate remedy is substituted. Every one who takes a mortgage, or deed of trust intended as a mortgage, takes it subject to the contingency that proceedings in bankruptcy against his mortgagor may deprive him of the specific remedy which is provided for in his contract."

§ 1914. Injunction Where Legal Action Requisite to Fix Liability of Sureties.—Injunction may be refused to restrain third parties from taking legal action requisite to fix the liability of persons secondarily liable for the bankrupt.⁴

Thus it has been refused to the trustee where judgment is necessary to fix the liability of a surety on an attachment bond.⁵

In re Mercedes Import Co., 21 A. B. R. 590, 166 Fed. 427 (C. C. A. N. Y.), reversing S. C., 20 A. B. R. 648, 166 Fed. 427): "The district judge was not obliged to grant the stay under § 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, but did so because he thought that the creditor had no better equity against the surety than he had against the bankrupt. As the trustee in bankruptcy has no interest whatever in the claim against the surety, we think the creditor's rights and equities are questions to be disposed of by the State court. * * * We think the court in which the action is pending should be left free to take whatever steps it thinks equitable in the premises in accordance with its own practice, and the order granting the stay is therefore reversed."

Thus, it has been refused where judgment and return of execution unsatisfied against a corporation was necessary to fix the secondary liability of the stockholders.

In re Remington Auto. & Motor Co., 9 A. B. R. 533, 119 Fed. 441 (D. C. N. Y.): "Some of the creditors of this alleged bankrupt corporation are now seeking to put their respective claims in judgment, issue execution, and thus place themselves in a position to bring an action in equity of the nature and for the purpose mentioned. If this preliminary action be necessary when bankruptcy has intervened, the injunction should not be made permanent or continued, for if such a liability exists, and it can be enforced only by a creditor with judgment and execution returned unsatisfied, or by the trustee, when appointed, after a creditor or creditors have put themselves in this position, then to grant or make permanent this injunction will be to deprive the creditors of their rights."

But it is likewise true that injunction may be granted. And proceedings subsequent to judgment may be enjoined where the suit itself has been allowed to proceed to judgment to fix the liability of sureties.

A suit will not be allowed to proceed to judgment in order to fix the liability of a surety on an attachment bond where the attachment was levied within the four months if the surety holds indemnity from the bankrupt,

§ 1916. Bankruptcy Petition "Caveat to All the World" and "Attachment and Injunction."—It is said that the filing of the bankruptcy petition is a caveat to all the world and operates as an attachment and an injunction.⁷

However, the maxim quoted is not to be literally relied on as furnishing a working rule for actual practice. It is misleading to say in all instances that the mere "filing" of a petition is "in effect an attachment." Such "filing" would operate as an attachment only where the property involved is in the custody of the bankruptcy court or is brought therein either through being in the possession of the bankrupt or of a receiver or marshal of the court, but the mere "filing" certainly would not operate as an "attachment" under any doctrine, if the bankruptcy court had no such custody.⁸

In re Rathman, 25 A. B. R. 246, 183 Fed. 913 (C. C. A.): "But counsel insist here that the filing of the petition in bankruptcy 'is a caveat to all the world and in effect an attachment and injunction,' and they cite Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 14, 7 Am. B. R. 224, and the numerous opinions of the courts that repeat this statement. But the later decisions of the Supreme Court adjudge that this statement applies only to parties who have no substantial claim of a lien upon or a title to the property of the bankrupt, and that against those who have such claims of existing liens or titles when the petition in bankruptcy is filed, that filing is neither a caveat nor an attachment, that it creates no lien and that until the bankruptcy court by some act of one of its officers takes actual possession of the property, or makes such claimants parties to the proceeding by some order or process, or notice of the proceeding comes to them, their liens, titles and remedies are unaffected thereby and they are strangers to the proceedings.

"These propositions, the authorities above, and many others cited by counsel for the trustee and examined, fail to convince that the filing of the petition in bankruptcy and the adjudication, without any acquisition or demand of possession of the property by any officer of the bankruptcy court, or any notice of the proceeding therein to the mortgagee, the State court, its receiver, or the purchaser at its foreclosure sale, conferred upon it jurisdiction to determine by a summary proceeding the merits of Booth's adverse claim to the mortgage liens upon the property at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed, or his adverse claim at the time the petition for the order to show cause was filed to the moneys which the trustee thereby seeks to recover from him for the conversion of the personal property, and to the real estate subject to the possible right of the trustee to redeem from the foreclosure sale thereof by paying the amount Booth paid therefor at that sale.

"If the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings without more, without any act of the bankruptcy court, or any of its officers, to give notice to adverse claimants, or to reduce the property claimed to belong to the bankrupt to the possession of the officers of that court as his property gives it constructive possession, and hence a legal custody that enables it to determine by summary proceedings the merits of adverse claims to liens and titles to such property in the actual possession of others, then no case could ever arise in which any other court could have jurisdiction by plenary suit to determine the merits of such claims, for in every case a bankruptcy proceeding is commenced and the only ground on which the jurisdiction to determine summarily the merits of such claims is sustained, is that the bankruptcy court's legal custody of the property excludes the jurisdiction of every other court and gives it the power to determine summarily all claims to liens upon, or interests in, the property in such custody. But this theory flies in the face of the settled rule repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court that the actual possession by the bankruptcy court is the indispensable condition of its exclusive and of its summary jurisdiction here."

§ 1917. No Injunction before Filing of Bankruptcy Petition to Preserve Status Quo.—But restraining orders will not be issued before the filing of a bankruptcy petition, either in the state or the bankruptcy courts, expressly to preserve the status quo until a bankruptcy petition can be filed: such ground is not in itself ground for a restraining order, although a restraining order may be granted in a creditor's suit brought before the filing of any bankruptcy petition which may have that effect as an incident.⁹

Clothing Co. v. Hazle, 6 A. B. sound theory. The rights and remedies in such cases under the State law were settled. They existed and were open at this time. But counsel say that they might be superseded or supplemented for the four months following July 1st by another remedy, so that they might, if they chose, avail themselves of a prospective remedy afforded by the Bankruptcy Act. We see no better reason why this should be than that an injunction should heretofore have been issued, in any case of fraud and danger, to impound the estate until creditors' claims should mature, judgment be obtained, execution issued and returned, to the end that a creditors' bill might be effectively filed. The exigency is as great in such a case as this, yet no one has heard of such a proceeding being permitted."

§ 1917½. Injunction after Sale by Trustee.—It has not been authoritatively decided whether injunction may issue after a trustee's or receiver's sale, to protect the purchaser in his rights.¹⁰

§ 1923. Restraining Order Not Prerequisite.—Contempt proceedings will lie for interference with assets already in the control of the bankruptcy court, without the issuance of a restraining order.²²

Clay v. Waters, 24 A. B. R. 293, 178 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Mo.): "Attention is sharply challenged to the fact that there was no restraining order or specific injunction against the taking and conversion of the property of the bankrupt by this defendant. But the filing of the petition in bankruptcy and the adjudication which followed it embodied in themselves a commanding injunction of the court against the interference of the defendant with and his concealment and removal from the trustee and the court of any of the property of the bankrupt. Against the defendant and against all others who had no valid lien upon or interest in that property at the time of the adjudication, the injunction and command of the court against such interference and removal and notice thereof to all the world were embodied in the injunction and issued therewith by the settled law of the land. The decisions of the Supreme Court in York Manufacturing Co. v. Cassell, 15 Am. B. R. 633, 201 U. S. 344, 353, and Hiscock v. Varick Bank of New York, 18 Am. B. R. 1, 206 U. S. 28, 41, cited for the defendant, merely hold that this caveat and injunction do not deprive those who have valid titles to or liens upon the property claimed by the bankrupt at the time the petition is filed of those liens or titles. They do not in any way modify this general rule or diminish its controlling force in all cases like that in hand, wherein the intermeddler had no claim upon or interest in the bankrupt's property at the time of the adjudication. The seizure of the money of the bankrupt after the adjudication and its concealment by the defendant in his name in real estate and promissory notes and his transfer of this real and personal property to innocent third parties to withdraw it from the jurisdiction of the court below and to defeat its coming decree after he was notified by the commencement of the suit to turn it over to the trustee were repeated disobediences and resistances of the injunction and command of the court, and constituted contempts of that court well within the terms of § 725, Rev. Stat."

in which case the sheriff and deputies did not levy nor interfere with the property of the bankrupt after adjudication, but merely threatened to do so. The court held that this did not constitute contempt. See post, § 2331½.

§ 1924. All Property of Estate to Be Appraised.—All property of the estate must be appraised, by three disinterested appraisers, who are appointed by and report to the court.¹

The purpose of this provision is to secure for the benefit and protection of all parties concerned a designation and estimation of the property which passes into the hands of the trustee, and for which, in the first instance, he is accountable.²

A sale made without appraisement is not, however, a nullity; it is a mere irregularity to be corrected by review.³

Robertson v. Howard, 229 U. S. 254, 30 A. B. R. 611: "As regards the alleged lack of an appraisement and error in the description of the property covered by the certificate, contained in the published notice, we think they must in this collateral proceeding be deemed as mere irregularities, and that the order of confirmation, made by the referee, was sufficient to validate the sale under the discretionary power given to the referee by § 70b of the Bankruptcy Act. Thompson v. Tolmie, 2 Pet. 157, 7 L. Ed. 381."

§ 1925. Only Property of Estate Need Be Appraised.—All the property belonging to the estate is to be appraised. This is a requirement, however, only as to property belonging to the estate. It is not requisite that property in the custody of the court but not belonging to the estate, such as exempt property, be appraised; though frequently it is desirable to appraise exempt property, whenever the exemption right is limited by value and the articles claimed as exempt approximate the limit in value.⁵

In re Zehner, 27 A. B. R. 536, 193 Fed. 787 (D. C. La.): "Any appraisement of the property made in the usual course of the bankruptcy proceedings may be disregarded in selling it and the sale approved by the court, if the price is considered adequate."

5. See ante, § 1080.

But the objection that a sale was made without appraisement cannot be raised for the first time on review. In re Gutterson, 14 A. B. R. 495, 136 Fed. 698 (D. C. Mass.).

§ 1926. Appraisers to Be Disinterested.—The appraisers must be disinterested.⁶ Thus, prospective purchasers would be disqualified.⁷ Also personal friends of the bankrupt would be disqualified, for they might be inclined to favor a low valuation for the bankrupt's sake, so that he might be able to buy in the assets. Creditors themselves would be disqualified.

Whether employees of creditors are disqualified is a question of fact in each particular case, resting much upon the discretion of the court. Remote affiliations with creditors may be disregarded.⁸

§ 1927. And to Be Appointed by and Report to the Court.—The appraisers are to be appointed by and report to the court; and it has been held to be the better practice for the court to act upon his own unfettered judgment and not to permit creditors to nominate them;⁹ although there really would seldom be any ground for objecting to nominations by the creditors, since creditors usually are simply desirous of getting the best values out of the assets, and are likely to be in a position to select the best qualified persons from among the members of the particular trades interested in the failure.

Appraisers are not to be considered as appointees nor agents of the trustee; nor is their compensation to be figured as part of the trustee's expenses. They are independent of the trustee and act as advisers of the creditors upon the matter of values, so that creditors and the court may know when the trustee has realized a fair price for the assets in his hands.

The referee has power, after adjudication and reference, to appoint appraisers;¹⁰ but before adjudication, if appraisers are to be appointed, they must be appointed by the judge;¹¹ except that, as in other matters, in the judge's absence or disability, on certificate to that effect, the referee may make the appointment.

§ 1928. Three Appraisers.—There must be three appraisers to appraise each piece of property. This does not mean that the same three must appraise all the property, nor that each piece must be appraised by a pointment.—The order appointing them is prescribed by the Supreme Court and is as follows: "It is ordered that — of —, — of —, and — of —, three disinterested persons, be, and they are hereby, appointed appraisers to appraise the real and personal property belonging to the estate of said bankrupt set out in the schedules now on file in this court, and report their appraisal to the court, said appraisal to be made as soon as may be, and the appraisers to be duly sworn." However, the appraisers are not confined to the property that is "set out in the schedules." They are to appraise all the property belonging to the estate.

different set of appraisers. Sometimes property belonging to a bankrupt estate is scattered about different states, and sometimes it consists of widely differing classes of property, such that men qualified to appraise in one branch would not be qualified in another; as, for instance, real estate, hardware, a stock of groceries, patents, boots and shoes. It would be difficult to procure three appraisers who would be able to find even one in their midst for each class of assets. In some cases different sets of appraisers may be appointed for each different locality or class of goods, but always there must be three of them passing upon each piece although all three need not necessarily be expert in each line.

§ 1929. To Be Sworn.—They are presumed to be sworn well and faithfully to appraise the property before they go out to make the appraisal; but, since an appraisal probably is not complete until signed by the appraisers, it frequently happens that the appraisers go out and view the property and make their estimates first, and are sworn afterwards, the appraisal not being complete until after they have been sworn.

§ 1930. Methods of Arriving at Appraisal Values.—It is difficult to lay down hard and fast rules as to how the appraisers shall arrive at their estimates. A few propositions, however, may be safely relied on.

Appraisers must not try to guess at what the assets will bring at bankrupt sale or forced sale; the assets may be sold for three-fourths of their valuation and if the appraisers could be permitted to fix the valuation thus, the circle would be unending, for while they would be trying to guess at what the purchasers would pay, the purchasers would be giving only three-fourths of the guess, and so on. The cupidity of bargain hunters is not the proper test.

In re Prager, 8 A. B. R. 356 (Ref. Col.): "In appraising a stock of this character, the prevailing cost to the trade should be taken as the actual value. If the stock is shopworn or otherwise damaged or unseasonable, or otherwise out of date, these facts, and perhaps others of a like nature, may be considered and due allowances made for such deterioration or depreciation in value. But the appraisers have no business to anticipate or consider the cupidity of bidders who may be looking for bargains. The object of the appraisement is to inform the court and the creditors what the actual value of the property is. They are not expected to know or to guess what the property will bring at a sale. It may be sold in bulk. In that case it would no doubt have to be sold for less than cost. It may be sold in parcels. In that case it might bring more than the cost price. How it is to be sold and for how much less than its actual value are questions to be determined by the court and the creditors, not by the appraisers."

The rules for appraisal naturally must vary with each class of property. The appraisers must take into account probable customers and the extent of their demand. The general rule for the appraisal of stocks of merchandise is that the fair market value should be taken, having in view the season, the quality, the kinds and styles, the brokenness of lots and the quantities. The rules for appraising the assets of a going concern must, in the nature of things, differ from those applicable to the valuation of its component parts; and so, frequently, it is advisable to have the appraisal returned alternatively, as a going concern and as dead assets. There is no rule against this manner of appraisal and it certainly is natural and rational, and is of much assistance to creditors and purchasers alike.

Likewise, in most cases of stocks of merchandise, the appraisal should be returned both at what the articles would bring if sold at retail and what the stock would bring if sold in bulk as an entirety. The values should be different, for by selling in bulk the expense of sale is cut down, though the gross price realized is likely to be lower.

The particularity with which an appraisement of the bankrupt's property is to be made must depend somewhat upon circumstances, but it must be general rather than special, only such particularity being given as will be sufficient to reasonably identify the property in character and quantity and give a fair idea of its value.¹²

§ 1930½. Reappraisal.—Reappraisal may be ordered. Although there are no special rules laid down in the bankruptcy decisions as to what circumstances will warrant reappraisal, yet, in view of the fact that the judgment of the appraisers is sought precisely in order that creditors may be informed as to what price the trustee ought to obtain for the assets, it would seem that the mere fact that the trustee reports his inability to sell at the appraised value would be, alone, insufficient to warrant a setting aside of the appraisal and an ordering of a reappraisal. Showing certainly should also be made of mistake or incorrect methods in arriving at the values, to warrant reappraisal; and the better practice, undoubtedly, is to call in the appraisers themselves. Otherwise where the trustee is indolent, or inefficient, appraisals are likely to be disregarded, and creditors to lose the benefit of the independent judgment of experienced men as to the value of the assets of the estate.

§ 1931. Sale to Be on Petition and Order.—No sale should be made without first filing a petition and procuring an order to sell from the court.¹ The receiver or trustee should obtain an order of sale as a matter of protection.²

But confirmation may cure the failure to get a previous order.

In re Harvey, 10 A. B. R. 568, 122 Fed. 745 (D. C. Pa.): "The sale was without previous authority from the court, but it was duly confirmed, and the confirmation was equivalent to a prior order."

Various forms have been prescribed by the Supreme Court for leave to sell, and since the forms and orders virtually amount to advance interpretations of the statute itself, the inference is proper that sales are to be made only on petition.

But compare, In re Fulton, 18 A. B. R. 591, 153 Fed. 664 (D. C. N. Y.): "* * * But nevertheless it is apparently certain that a sale of a chattel real by a receiver without the express direction of the court conveys no title. The defect in the sale cannot be cured by a motion to confirm the sale and to quiet adverse claims to the property sold."

§ 1932. Equity Rules Followed Where Act, Forms and Orders Silent.—The procedure, where not otherwise prescribed by the Bankruptcy Act, Forms or Orders, will follow the usual procedure in equity in the United States Courts wherever the same is applicable.³

In re Britannia Min. Co., 29 A. B. R. 472, 203 Fed. 451 (C. C. A. Wis.): "Undoubtedly the Act of March 3, 1893, applies not only to federal courts then in existence, but also to those subsequently created, unless something in the organic act exempts them; and governs as well any possible new forms of judicial sales under decrees as foreclosure, execution, and partition sales then known. But, in our judgment, the Act of 1893 has no application to trustees' sales of the assets of bankrupt estates * * *." Quoted further at § 1939.

But where the Bankruptcy Act itself gives the right to sell, or the method of selling, its provisions will prevail over those of the Act of Congress of 1893, 27 U. S. Stats. 751.^{3a} limit the sales of property under the Bankrupt Law to the provisions of the Act of 1893, it would have said so in clear terms. The only limitation imposed by the bankruptcy statute is that such sales must be 'subject to the approval of the court.' * * * The Bankruptcy Law is the last expression of the legislative will upon the subject. It clearly does not intend to limit the method of sales of property by the provisions of the Act of 1893. If it did, referees and trustees would be very much limited and harassed in their disposition of property—particularly in the disposition of perishable property—and the purpose of the law would be in a large degree defeated. A new statute which affirmatively grants a larger jurisdiction or power or right is held to prevail over any prior statute by which a limited power or jurisdiction or right less ample has been granted. Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 254, and cases cited. It must be held that the Bankrupt Law, in ordering sales, is not limited by the Act of March, 1893."

§ 1933. Special Orders as to Manner of Sale.—The bankruptcy court may make special orders with regard to the manner of conducting sales, provided, of course, they do not contravene the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, or of the orders in bankruptcy.⁴

Thus, the court may order the trustee to solicit bids and may provide for the making and hearing of objections thereto preliminary to sale.

§ 1934. As to Auctioneers Conducting Sale.—Thus, undoubtedly, in a proper case an experienced auctioneer may be employed.⁵ And the employment of special commissioners has been approved, in one case.⁶

But the manifest spirit of economy of the Bankrupt Act discourages the employment of auctioneers and others, except when absolutely necessary. It is usually one of the business duties of the trustee, for which he is presumably elected, to conduct the sales of the bankrupt's assets.⁷

At any rate, a local rule prescribing that sales shall be made by an official auctioneer may be dispensed with by the court.⁸

§ 1935. Whether Sale to Be for Cash.—The courts have not decided whether the sale must, in all instances, be for cash.

Compare, In re Shoe & Leather Reporter, 12 A. B. R. 284, 129 Fed. 588 (C. C. A.): "The District Court provided that the minimum bid should be $60,000, and that the purchaser might pay five-sixths of the purchase money in bonds secured by the mortgage referred to. The other sixth, being not less than $10,000, it ordered to be paid in cash. The petitioners claim that the District Court had no power to order any portion of the purchase price to

7. See post, "Costs of Administration," § 2037.

8. Employment of Brokers and Agents to Procure Purchasers.—It is also within the discretion of the court to permit the trustee to employ a broker or other agent to procure purchasers and to pay commissions to them for their services. See post, § 2037¼. But such employment is likely to lead to serious abuses. Gold v. South Side Trust Co., 24 A. B. R. 578, 179 Fed. 210 (C. C. A. Pa.), quoted at § 3011½.

be paid in bonds, but it is plain that they cannot be prejudiced by its order in that particular, so that we need not investigate its powers in reference thereto."

It would seem there would be no objection to a sale on deferred payments, if the deferred payments are properly secured and the effect is not to unduly prolong the administration.⁹

§ 1936. Bids Both in Bulk and Parcels with Acceptance of Greater Aggregate.—The bids may be taken both in bulk and in parcels, and the greater aggregate be accepted.

§ 1937. Trustee's Judgment Ordinarily of Controlling Weight in Fixing Details, but Creditors, and Even Bankrupt, Heard.—As to whether the sale shall be public or private, in bulk or in parcels, and, in short, as to the details of time, manner and place of sale, etc., the trustee's judgment should ordinarily control;¹⁰ although undoubtedly, creditors are entitled to be heard as to the advisability of the different provisions of the proposed order of sale, and likewise the bankrupt, where his interests are measurably affected. But, in any event, the final determination rests with the court.¹¹

In re Columbia Iron Wks., 14 A. B. R. 526, 142 Fed. 234 (D. C. Mich.): "This controversy and that relative to the question whether the property should be sold in bulk or in parcels, are matters for determination by the court and not by vote of creditors."

§ 1938. Ten Days Notice by Mail Requisite.—Ten days notice by mail must be given to all creditors who are scheduled and to all who have filed claims whether scheduled or not, of all proposed sales, whether at public auction or private sale;¹² except that the court may omit notice where the property is of a perishable nature.

As heretofore noted, one of the abuses in the administration of insolvent estates before the advent of the Bankruptcy Act was the slipping through of sales made in the interest of the debtor himself or of some favored

9. In one case the court refused to order a sale to a reorganized corporation which it was proposed to form but which would have given only its unsecured notes, of long time, therefor, especially since the current obligations of the new corporation were to have precedence and the future plans of the new corporation were indefinite and it was not fully clear that more could be realized by cash sale. In re Cornell Co., 26 A. B. R. 252, 186 Fed. 859 (D. C. N. Y.). It might further be said, relative to the Cornell case, that the matter involved was, in any event, rather a composition than a sale.

Allgair v. Fisher, 16 A. B. R. 281, 143 Fed. 962 (C. C. A. N. J.); In re Monsarrat (No. 2), 25 A. B. R. 820 (D. C. Hawaii); In re Nevada-Utah Corp., 28 A. B. R. 409, 198 Fed. 497 (D. C. N. Y.).

creditor. An application usually could be filed and granted immediately without notice and the sale made forthwith; and the only remedy then left to the creditors was a fruitless effort to have the sale set aside for fraud or collusion—always difficult matters to prove. If creditors have notice of such sales, they can protect themselves; and the very fact that notice is given them operates to deter parties from attempting to rob the estate by secret and summary sales. Thus it is, that this requirement of notices to creditors of all proposed sales is one of the safeguards of the purity of bankruptcy administration.¹³

Compare, as to importance of notice to creditors in bankruptcy administration, In re Kyte, 26 A. B. R. 507, 189 Fed. 531 (D. C. Pa.): "All acts necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose of converting the assets of the estate and distributing the same to and amongst the creditors legally entitled thereto, as well as any act tending to increase the value of the estate, or in some material manner benefit the estate of the bankrupt, whereby the general interests of all creditors may be advanced, constitute the administration of the estate. The intent of the law is to administer the estate for the general interests of all the creditors with the least possible expense, and to this end when any proposition of interest, as well as detrimental to the creditors is made, the law provides that all the creditors shall have notice of a time and place to meet and either assent to or disapprove of such proposition. This undoubtedly is a provision of the law which has been created to throw a safeguard around the interests of the creditors so that the opportunity for abuse or mismanagement of their interests may be reduced to a minimum."

And a sale made after the time set in the notice has expired, will be set aside.

Allgair v. Fisher, 16 A. B. R. 281, 143 Fed. 962 (C. C. A. N. J.): "The orders of the referee of December 24, 1904, and March 11, 1905, had practically expired by the failure of the trustees to make sale of the property, pursuant to the terms thereof, either at private or public sale, and their inability to make sale thereunder was disclosed, and the public sale had been adjourned without day; I think the referee's power in the matter was for the time ex-

¹³. But see In re Hawkins, 11 A. B. R. 48 (D. C. N. Y.), where the court seems to assume that the referee has discretion as to whether notice to creditors need be given at all. This can not be correct law. Perhaps that was a case of perishable property after all and the statement of facts merely fails to show it.

Also see In re Knox Automobile Co., 32 A. B. R. 67, 210 Fed. 569 (D. C. Mass.), where the court following In re Hawkins dispensed with notice to creditors because the court felt that the trustee intended to use every reasonable effort to get the highest possible price for the property and that he would be in a better position if not hampered by formal orders as to what to do. Surely the court in the face of the express provision in the statute for notice to creditors should not be allowed to substitute its opinion as to the best manner of conducting sales, especially on such slim grounds. This is but another instance of the growing tendency in the bankruptcy courts to disregard the statutory provisions for notices to creditors which form such an important safeguard against collusive sales and improper dispositions of the assets. The tendency in state legislation,—notably the recently enacted assignment law of New York—is to lay stress on notices to creditors; so, also, in the Bankruptcy Act itself, whose provisions all point to such notices; and the tendency of the bankruptcy court to annul these provisions by judicial construction or simply by ignoring them is to be deplored. Compare, § 1944.

hausted, and that he should then have given a new notice to the creditors and lienors. I deem such notice not only proper, but essential, under the circumstances, and hence that the orders dated May 24, 1905, June 1, 1905, and June 15, 1905, were unwarranted, and should be set aside."

Needless to say, the regulation only applies to sales by officers of the bankruptcy court, and does not apply to sales by pledgees and others in possession of securities given by the bankrupt. Such securities may be sold in accordance with the terms of the agreement of pledge; thus, as to securities where the pledgee is given the right to sell without notice,¹⁴ and this is so even though the receiver or trustee acts for the pledgees in making the sale and proceeds under an order of the bankruptcy court in so doing.¹⁵

§ 1939. Public Auction of Real Estate.—Where real estate is to be sold at public auction, the U. S. equity rules provide that in equity cases there must be at least four weeks advertisement, once a week, and that the sale be made either at the county courthouse or on the premises.¹⁶

So far as sales by the trustee are concerned, they are not to be considered as controlled by the Act of March, 1893, whether the sale be of real estate or personal property, or be by public auction or private sale, for the trustee, by operation of law, has the title of the property as owner.¹⁷

Robertson v. Howard, 229 U. S. 254, 30 A. B. R. 611: "We come then to consider whether the court of bankruptcy in Illinois, in the proceedings to sell the certificates and the interest in the land evidenced by them, was required to conform to the provisions of the act of Congress of March 3, 1893, chap. 225, heretofore referred to. * * * We think this question must be answered in the negative. It is not to be doubted that the subject of bankruptcy was special in its nature, and that in enacting the Bankruptcy Act it was proposed

That all real estate or any interest in land sold under any order or decree of any United States court shall be sold at public sale at the court house door of the county, parish, or city in which the property, or the greater part thereof, is located, or upon the premises, as the court rendering such order or decree of sale may direct.

"Sec. 2. That all personal property sold under any order or decree of any court of the United States shall be sold as provided in the first section of this act, unless, in the opinion of the court rendering such order or decree, it would be best to sell it in some other manner.

"Sec. 3. That hereafter no sale of real estate under any order, judgment, or decree of any United States court shall be had without previous publication of notices of such proposed sale being ordered and had once a week for at least four weeks prior to such sale in at least one newspaper printed, regularly issued and having a general circulation in the county and state where the real estate proposed to be sold is situated, if such there be. If said property shall be situated in more than one county or state, such notice shall be published in such of the counties where said property is situated as the court may direct. Said notice shall, among other things, describe the real estate to be sold. The court may, in its discretion, direct the publication of the notice of sale herein provided for to be made in such other papers as may seem proper."

comprehensively to deal with the subjects coming within the scope of bankruptcy legislation, which included, of course, the authority of courts of bankruptcy to deal with the sale of the real and personal estate of a bankrupt. * * * This provision makes it manifest that it was the purpose of Congress to give bankruptcy courts full and complete equitable power in matters of the administration and sale of the bankrupt estate, wholly irrespective of the mere situs of the property, the controlling factor being, not where the property is situated, but did it pass to the trustee, and is it a part of the estate subject to administration under the direction of the court. In view of the fact that the bankruptcy law was enacted long after the passage of the statute of 1893, and of the complete right of administration which the Bankruptcy Act confers over the property, real and personal, of the bankrupt estate, we think it follows that the authority to realize, by way of sale, on the property of the bankrupt estate, cannot be held to be limited by the provisions of the act of 1893. Indeed, this conclusion is additionally demonstrated by the fact that, as recognized by No. 18 of the general orders in bankruptcy, in disposing by sale of the property of the bankrupt, a bankruptcy court, as to both real and personal property, may, if reason for so doing exists, direct a private sale to be made. We do not stop to refer to the many cases in the lower Federal courts which have applied and enforced the view which we here maintain, as we think it unnecessary to do so."

In re La France Copper Co., 30 A. B. R. 381, 205 Fed. 207 (D. C. Mont.): "The main contention is based on noncompliance with Act March 3, 1893, ch. 225, 27 Stat. 751 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 710). It will be observed said act antedates the Bankruptcy Act, and is one of restriction upon jurisdiction. The Bankruptcy Act confers full and exclusive jurisdiction, both legal and equitable, to administer bankrupt estates. In so far as it is not express, it authorizes the Supreme Court to prescribe procedure. It would seem to provide a complete system and the only rule for such administration. Act March 3, 1893, seems to relate to judicial sales pursuant to some order or decree creating or declaring a right to sell, and which right could not be exercised, but for the order or decree; sales necessarily authorized and ordered by the court; sales void, but for such order or decree; sales divesting the title of the former owner. Sales in bankruptcy are not like these in character. The Bankruptcy Act operates as a transfer from the bankrupt to the trustee of the title to the bankrupt's property. The trustee's duty is to collect and reduce to money the property of the estate. To that end he has the usual powers and discretion of trustees for like purposes, save to the extent restricted by the Bankruptcy Act. The latter act places no restrictions on the trustee's sale of realty at public auction and requires no order of the court therefor. The Supreme Court, however, by general orders, prescribes authorization by the court before any private sale shall be made. Even this is but a restriction on power otherwise possessed by the trustee. Though the trustee reduces the estate to money, 'under the direction of the court,' this no more necessitates an order of the court to sell realty at public auction than to collect a chose in action. Therein the court may, but need not, give special directions, in the nature of orders. The creditors are entitled to notice of proposed sales, but this may be given by the trustee by order of the judge. * * * It would seem clear that a trustee in bankruptcy has power to sell outright realty of the estate without any order of court, and after such notice and at such place as in his judgment seems best for the estate. The fact that in the instant case an order of sale was made by the court (referee) does not affect the legal aspect. To procure the order is discreet, and it might in some contingencies protect the trustee; but it is not necessary, and it neither adds to nor detracts from his otherwise power and discretion. No doubt the court can control the trustee and any abuse of his discretion, order sales, and dictate the procedure; but here, as in equity, the trustee may without special order do that which the court might order. For the reasons given, I am persuaded Act March 3, 1893, has no application to sales in bankruptcy."

In re Britannia Mining Co., 29 A. B. R. 472, 203 Fed. 45 (C. C. A. Wis.): "Undoubtedly the Act of March 3, 1893, applies not only to federal courts then in existence, but also to those subsequently created, unless something in the organic act exempts them; and governs as well any possible new forms of judicial sales under decrees as foreclosure, execution, and partition sales then known. But, in our judgment, the Act of 1893 has no application to trustees' sales of the assets of bankrupt estates for this prime reason; in a judicial sale under order or decree, the order or decree fixes the relative rights of the parties in the property according to the status or conduct or contract between them, and the sale itself is the thing that divests all the parties of their title and confers it upon another; while in a trustee's sale the sale itself is not the thing that divests the parties in interest of their title; there is no order or decree of the bankruptcy court that gives the creditors any adjudicated rights in specific property—the statute gives them the right to a distribution after the assets, not already in money, have been reduced to money; there is no order or decree that divests the bankrupt of his title—the only decree against him is the adjudication of bankruptcy, and after that he still has the legal title (in trust for the trustee thereafter to be elected); when the trustee is elected, eo instanti he is vested, not by virtue of any order or decree of court, but 'by operation of law' (§ 70a), with the title of the bankrupt as of the date of adjudication. In short, the statute operates as a self-executing conveyance from the bankrupt to the trustee. His quality of title is the same as if the statute, instead of operating directly, had required that the courts should either cause the bankrupt to convey to the trustee or should appoint a commissioner to execute a conveyance in the bankrupt's name. So when the trustee, as grantor, conveys what he acquired as grantee, he is not making a sale within the purview of the Act of March 3, 1893. If he needs to resort to the ancillary jurisdiction of bankruptcy courts in other districts (which jurisdiction, independently of the amendment in 1910 of sec. 2, subd. 20, was held to exist, Babbit v. Dutcher, 216 U. S. 102, 23 A. B. R. 519, 30 Sup. Ct. 372, 54 L. Ed. 402, 17 Am. Cas. 969), it is not for the purpose of becoming vested with title and the right and power to sell and convey, but only to aid him in acquiring or holding or delivering possession.

"Other sections of the Bankruptcy Act and of the General Orders, hereinabove quoted, only restrict, in the interest of the beneficiaries of the trust, the manner in which the trustee shall exercise his otherwise unlimited power of disposition; and they confirm us in the conclusion we have derived from a consideration of the nature of the trustee's title, namely, that Congress in the Bankruptcy Act has provided a comprehensive and exclusive method of administering estates of bankrupts."

§ 1940. Private Sales, Real Estate or Personal Property, Advertised and Conducted as Court Directs.—Private sales, both of real estate and personal property, may be made in such manner as the court may direct.

An unauthorized private sale vests no title in the purchaser.¹⁸

18. In re Monsarrat (No. 1), 25 A. B. R. 815 (D. C. Hawaii).

Although there is no law requiring the fixing of an upset price, the better practice is, before granting an order to sell at private sale, to require the showing of an offer, actually tendered, sufficient to warrant the court in granting an order of private sale, and then to set in the order of sale a corresponding minimum price which should, of course, not be less than such offer.¹⁹

§ 1941. Who May File Petition to Sell: Trustee, Receiver, Marshal, Bankrupt.—It is absolutely necessary after the trustee's election that the petition to sell be filed by him, for he is the one vested with title, and all proceedings in behalf of the estate are to be taken in his name. Before the election of a trustee, it may be filed by the receiver or marshal, if the marshal be in charge, and perhaps by a creditor, or even by the bankrupt himself.²⁰

Instance, by receiver. In re Becker, 3 A. B. R. 412, 98 Fed. 407 (D. C. Pa.): "In the case now before the court the sale was made, not by a trustee, but by a receiver; and objection is raised to a receiver's power to sell the property of the bankrupt. The objection is based upon the language of clause 3 of § 2, which authorizes courts of bankruptcy to appoint receivers, 'for the preservation of estates, to take charge of the property of bankrupts after the filing of the petition, and until it is dismissed or the trustee qualified.' It is argued that this limits the power of receivers, and forbids them to do more than hold possession of the bankrupt's property during a certain interval. I do not think the argument is sound. The clause restricts the power of the court to appoint, confining it to cases of absolute necessity, and then goes on to state the purpose for which the appointment may be originally made. But, after a receiver has once gone into possession, it may become necessary to sell the property for the very purpose of preserving it, or its value—which is, of course, the essential matter—either in whole or in part. In such event, I think the court has ample power to order or confirm a sale, either under the power to preserve, implied by clause 3 itself, or under clause 7 of the same section, which empowers the court to 'cause the assets of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed.'"

As long as creditors have ten days notice by mail, especially if the final deed or bill of sale is made by the trustee, it would seem enough.²¹

§ 1942. Perishable Property May Be Sold without Notice.—But perishable property may be sold without notice to creditors, if the court so orders.²³

Obiter, In re Edes, 14 A. B. R. 382, 135 Fed. 595 (D. C. It cannot be held to be in derogation of such statute. Under its provisions a perishable estate may be sold, even without notice to the creditors, and the courts have been very liberal in their construction of what is 'perishable.' The Federal courts have in fact liberally interpreted the whole statute, as giving full equitable powers to the court. For instance, although § 58 provides that creditors shall have notice of all proposed sales of property, still, under the general powers and discretion given by the court in § 70b, it is the custom to order sales of perishable personal property even without notice."

§ 1943. Sales before Adjudication.—As a rule, no order of sale should be made until after adjudication, unless the property be of such nature that a sale is necessary to preserve its value.²⁴ undoubtedly jurisdiction to sell is suspended. In re Fisher & Co., 14 A. B. R. 366, 135 Fed. 223 (D. C. N. It is true that an effort to effect a composition with the creditors of the bankrupt has been made, but the money necessary to pay taxes and other debts or demands having priority required to be deposited by § 12b of Bankruptcy Act, has not been deposited, though several months have intervened since the court declared that such deposit must be made before any composition could be confirmed."

Sale Where Trustee's Election Set Aside and New Election Ordered.—Probably it would not affect the validity of an intervening sale that the election of the trustee is set aside and a new election ordered. Compare, In re Evening Standard Pub. Co., 21 A. B. R. 156, 164 Fed. 517 (D. C. N. Y.).

Orders in Bankruptcy: "Upon petition by a bankrupt, creditor, receiver, or trustee, setting forth that a part or the whole of the bankrupt's estate is perishable, the nature and location of such perishable estate, and that there will be loss if the same is not sold immediately, the court, if satisfied of the facts stated and that the sale is required in the interest of the estate, may order the same to be sold, with or without notice to the creditors, and the proceeds to be deposited in court."

Form of Petition to Sell Perishable Assets.—The Supreme Court's form No. 46 is the prescribed form for a petition to sell perishable assets. The petition should show the following facts; it should describe the property; state its nature and location; allege that it is perishable and that there will be loss if the same is not sold immediately.

Impliedly (though the court speaks of "private" sale as if it were synonymous with sale without notice to creditors. Manifestly there may be a private sale, i. e. a sale without notice to bidders, and yet notice to creditors, who are the beneficiaries, be given). In re Pedlow, 31 A. B. R. 761, 209 Fed. 841 (C. C. The reason is obvious; before adjudication it cannot be certainly known that the property belongs to the creditors. Moreover, until the appointment and qualification of a trustee there is no officer having title to the property in behalf of creditors.²⁵ These reasons are particularly cogent in attempted sales of real estate before adjudication. Only by the bankrupt's consent, and doubtfully then, will good title pass to the purchaser. And even in such instances the ten days notice should go to all creditors unless the property also be perishable.²⁶

§ 1944. Meaning of "Perishability."—"Perishability," under the Act of 1898, would seem to refer to physical deterioration, more than to financial depreciation through the goods becoming unseasonable, although the decisions are not uniform in this regard.²⁷

In re Beutel's Sons Co., 7 A. B. R. 768 (Ref. Ohio): "The question is thus presented: May a stock of goods not physically nor intrinsically perishable, be sold without notice to creditors as perishable property under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. The old law of 1867 provided in § 5065 as follows: 'When it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the estate of the debtor or a part thereof is of a perishable nature, or liable to deteriorate in value, the court may order the same to be sold in such manner as may be deemed most expedient under the direction of the messenger or assignee, as the case may be, who shall hold the funds received in place of the estate disposed of.'

"No provision existed under the old law requiring notices to creditors of sales except in cases of public sales, and then only by advertisement in the newspapers.

"On the other hand, no provision is found in the present act permitting the sale of any assets as perishable, but the statute does specifically provide in § 58 (4) that 'Creditors shall have at least ten days' notice by mail to their respective addresses as they appear in the list of creditors of the bankrupt, or as afterwards filed with the papers in the case by the creditors, unless they waive notice in writing of—(4) all proposed sales of property.'

"The Supreme Court, however, has in rule XVIII (3) attempted to make an exception to this requirement of notice in all cases of sales and has laid down the following order: 'Upon petition by a bankrupt, creditor, receiver or trustee, setting forth that a part of the whole of the bankrupt's estate is perishable, the nature and location of such perishable estate, and that there will be loss if the same is not sold immediately, the court, if satisfied of the facts stated and that the sale is required in the interest of the estate may order the same to be sold, with or without notice to the creditors, and the proceeds to be deposited in court.'

"Congress, in passing the present act, had constantly before it the provisions of the old act, and also the experience of litigants under it; and it must be assumed, as indeed the rules of statutory construction oblige us to assume, that where we find changes in the present act in regard to the same subject matter such changes are to be considered as indicating a distinct change in the minds of the lawmakers. Where, therefore, we find the present act providing for ten days' notice to creditors of all proposed sales without exception, we would naturally assume that Congress was unwilling to have any sales made without notice. Whatever force and effect the Supreme Court's general order No. 18 has we must be careful at any rate to extend it no further than its strict wording permits, and at any rate not to give it such an effect as to practically restore the practice of the old law of 1867, which Congress has thus strongly disapproved.

"Now note the working of the old law of 1867. It provides where the property 'is of a perishable nature or liable to deteriorate in value.' Evidently a distinction exists between property that is of a perishable nature and that which is simply liable to deteriorate in value. The first refers to that which has intrinsic, physical perishability—something that will decay or die or shrink or shrivel, change in its physical nature, whilst the latter is much broader, covering that which depreciates in value from whatever cause, unseasonableness, poor market, expense, etc.

"The Supreme Court's order XVIII under the present law, however, speaks only of 'perishable property' and does not attempt to engraft an exception upon the clear cut words of the statute in favor of property which is liable merely to deteriorate in value.

"No doubt the careful framers of the present act bore in mind the scandals possible where entire estates could be disposed of without notice, to interested parties under the easy term that it is property liable to deteriorate in value."

But the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit has expressly held to the contrary of the author's view, and has held a stock of handkerchiefs a month before Christmas to be perishable, although the purchaser, himself a private auctioneer, later on held a public auction thereof on notice and advertisement, disposing of the stock at a profit.

In re Pedlow, 31 A. B. R. 761, 209 Fed. 841 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "General Order No. 18 permits the court, in its discretion, to sell perishable property at private sale and it seems to us that this provision must include property which is liable to deteriorate in value and price, as well as property which deteriorates physically. Unquestionably a cargo of bananas would be perishable, but assume that we are dealing with a cargo of rifles for which belligerents will pay an increased price if immediate delivery can be made, but which will be practically valueless if delivery be delayed. It seems to us that 'perishable' fairly construed, means property which, for any reason, will deteriorate in value and that what is and what is not perishable may be safely left to the discretion of the court."

Compare, In re Harris, 19 A. B. R. 635, 156 Fed. 875 (D. C. Ala.): "But I further stated in that case that this was confined only to such cases in which it was clear to the court that the property was, in fact, perishable in part or in its entirety, or would greatly deteriorate if held without a sale, and only that portion which was of such nature could be ordered sold."

In re Milne Mfg. Co., 21 A. B. R. 468 (Ref. N. Y.): "Real estate may be considered perishable within the meaning and intent of General Order 18, when it consists of buildings, rapidly deteriorating and in a dilapidating condition and requiring immediate expenditure of a large sum of money by the trustee to prevent absolute loss. An order to sell perishable property, even real estate, rests in the sound discretion of the court, and where it is not affirmatively shown that gross injustice has been done to the creditors, a sale of such property at private sale, by the trustee, will not be disturbed for lack of notice to a creditor of the application for an order to sell or for confirmation of the sale. Where a building, used as a manufacturing plant by an involuntary bankrupt, was rapidly deteriorating in value and was unsalable, and an offer was made therefor of a sum representing its fair value, which offer was conditioned upon conveyance being made within a shorter period of time than would allow notice to be given in accordance with the usual practice in sales of bankrupt properties, and where great loss would be occasioned by failure to make the sale, the court is justified in making an order, allowing the trustee to consummate the sale without notice, and a sale so made will not be set aside."

The author submits that the case In re Pedlow announces dangerous doctrine. The Bankruptcy Act is largely a mere statutory regulation of the procedure in the administration of insolvent estates, prescribing the method found by years of experience best suited to secure honesty and efficiency in this most important field. Where creditors, the real owners of the assets and beneficiaries of the trust, are notified of sales there is to a certain extent an additional check and guaranty against collusive and improper disposition of the assets. The tendency in the more recent legislation on insolvency matters, both state and national, is unquestionably towards an insistence upon notices to creditors. Indeed, it is manifest that Congress, the law-making body, by providing in § 58 of the Act for notices to creditors as to not less than nine or ten of the most important steps in the practical administration of the assets, the "business" part of the administration, so to speak, intended creditors to be kept in close touch with the practical side of insolvency administration and above all with the manner, time and place of the disposition of the assets. It is significant that Congress in the present act specifically requires these notices, particularly of "all sales," unequivocally and unambiguously, whilst the old law was silent on the subject, and left such matters of notice to the absolute discretion of the court without even indicating the desirability of any notice. The present Act was framed largely from our experience under the old Act, and such change indicates a distinct and positive intention that creditors, under the present act, should have notices without fail and without evasion. To be sure, the Supreme Court has provided by its Rule XVIII for sales of "perishable property," but such rule should be construed to aid the legislative intent, not to thwart it, particularly not to directly contradict its plain and salutary provisions. It should be confined to as narrow boundaries as possible, rather than be stretched to its utmost limits. "Perishability" by common acceptance, as also in all attachment and execution law, refers solely to physical decay. No one would think of a stock of handkerchiefs as "perishable," nor could they be sold by an attaching officer as "perishable."^{27a}

27a. There was no finding indeed, by the lower court in the case criticised, that the goods were "perishable," but merely that they would become "unseasonable."

The logical result of the ruling is a reversion to the practice under the old law of 1867, whose evils the framers of the present law strove earnestly to obviate. However that may be, the decision practically means that, in the Second Circuit at any rate, no notices need be given to creditors in any case where the court deems at the time a better price may be obtained by sale without notice.

§ 1945. Referee to Order Sale after Reference.—After reference to the referee, the referee is the court for the purpose of granting the order to sell.²⁸

§ 1946. Before Adjudication Judge Alone to Order Sale, unless Unable to Act.—Before adjudication orders to sell may be made only by the judge;²⁹ except, of course, that in the absence or disability of the judge, the referee may act, upon receipt of a certificate from the district clerk of the judge's absence or disability.³⁰

§ 1947. To Be at Public Auction, unless Expressly Authorized at Private Sale.—Sales must be at public auction, unless expressly authorized at private sale.³¹ And, as noted ante, § 1936, the bids may be taken in bulk and in parcels, and the greatest aggregate offer be accepted.

§ 1948. For Good Cause Shown May Be at Private Sale.—Upon application to the court, and for good cause shown, the trustee may be authorized to sell any specified portion of the bankrupt's estate at private sale.³²

In re Edes, 14 A. B. R. 382, 135 Fed. 595 (D. C. Me.): "There can be no question but that a bankruptcy court, under the broad powers given by the Bankruptcy Law, may order a sale of either real or personal property at private sale."

Journal Entry of Order to Sell Perishable Assets.—His order should read somewhat as follows: "Upon this — day of —, 19—, the trustee's (or receiver's or bankrupt's) petition for leave to sell perishable property came on for hearing without notice to creditors at which hearing no adverse interest was represented (see Gen. Order No. XXIII) (or, if the case be so, after hearing adverse interests) and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court (for the court must be 'satisfied') that the allegations of said petition are true and that the property therein described is perishable in its nature and the loss will result if it be not sold immediately and that the sale thereof is required in the interest of the estate and that notice thereof should be omitted, now it is ordered that said petition be and it hereby is granted and said trustee is directed to sell said property at public sale forthwith for not less than three-fourths its appraised value and without notice to creditors and to deposit the proceeds thereof in the court to await the further orders of the court."

And the discretion of the referee in ordering a private sale will not be interfered with, except for plain abuse.³³ Real estate may be so sold as well as personal property.³⁴ Notices should be sent to the creditors of a proposed private sale equally as in cases of proposed public sales, "private sales" meaning merely that a public offering of the property to bidders, come who may, is dispensed with.^{34a}

In cases of private sale, the trustee must keep an accurate account of each article sold, and the price received therefor and to whom sold; which account he shall file at once with the referee.³⁵

Jurisdiction to compel the purchaser to complete his contract of sale exists the same in private sales as in public auctions.³⁶

§ 1949. Sale Subject to Approval and to Be for Seventy-Five Per Cent.—Both the real and the personal property shall, when practicable, be sold subject to the approval of the court; it shall not be sold otherwise than subject to the approval of the court for less than seventy-five per centum of its appraised value.³⁷

But the appraisal is not so binding that a sale for less than seventy-five per cent will not pass good title, if, in the sound discretion of the court, the price is adequate.^{37a}

And an upset price need not be fixed in the order of sale, since the statute itself expressly provides that the property shall not be sold, unless subject to the approval of the court, for less than seventy-five per cent.³⁸

However, in practice, before granting an order to sell at private sale, it should be shown to the court that an actual offer at a certain price has been made, sufficient to warrant the court in granting an order of private sale; in which event, the order granted should, in proper practice, set a minimum price.

It is not necessary that the creditors should have notice of an application for the confirmation of the sale, if they have previously been given notice of the proposed sale itself.³⁹

33. In re Hawkins, 11 A. B. R. 49, 125 Fed. 633 (D. C. N. Y.): The court in this case seems to labor under the misapprehension that notice can be dispensed with at the referee's discretion. § 1950. Trustee's Sale, a Judicial Sale.—A trustee's sale in bankruptcy is a judicial sale in distinction from an execution sale.

A judicial sale is a sale of particular property in the custody of the court, specifically pointed out by the court and ordered during the pendency of proceedings concerning it; while an execution sale is a sale of whatever property belonging to the execution debtor the sheriff can seize. In judicial sales, such as are sales by trustees in bankruptcy, the court is the real seller and the trustee is its agent to obtain the highest bid—the sale is not consummated nor does title pass until confirmation. By the act of confirmation, the sale becomes complete and the title passes. In execution sales, on the other hand, the court simply has rendered a judgment for money and is then done with the matter. The sheriff is the real seller and title passes at once to the highest bidder. A result of this distinction is that, in execution sales, the purchaser immediately becomes invested with rights which can only be divested by showing that he himself, or his agent, has been guilty of fraud; while in judicial sales, such as trustee's sales in bankruptcy, until confirmation, the so-called purchaser has no such rights, has no title at all—he is simply a preferred bidder waiting for the court to accept his offer,⁴⁰ and is subject to the general rules and principles of procedure relating to other judicial sales, excepting in so far as the bankruptcy act is in conflict therewith;⁴¹ and the court may refuse to accept his offer on much weaker grounds than would be required to set aside a sale on execution, where title has already passed.

In re Harvey, -10 A. B. R. 567, 568, 122 Fed. 745 (D. C. Pa.): "In the case under consideration, the trustee sold at public sale certain real estate of the bankrupt, upon which the city held several liens for municipal taxes. The sale was without previous authority from the court, but it was duly confirmed and the confirmation was equivalent to a prior order. I do not doubt that this was a judicial sale. 17 Am. & Eng. Encycl. Law, 954, 955."

In re Maloney, 21 A. B. R. 502 (Sup. Ct. D. of C.): "Another objection is, that the sale was made by the receivers, when the title was in the trustee, relating back to the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy; and that therefore the receiver could convey no title. This argument is fallacious in this, that the sale is not made by the receivers, but is a sale made by the court; and whether the sale is brought about by the efforts of the receivers and their petition to the court, or by the direction of a trustee, or other officer, the title is under the control of the court; and if it should be necessary in order to perfect the title, the court could at any time require the trustee to join the sales, or in a conveyance to the purchaser."

And it is just as much a judicial sale where the court simply approves an offer made as where it first orders a sale and thereafter approves an offer.⁴²

§ 1951. And Court Has Greater Discretion than in Other Sales.

—Being a judicial sale, the court may refuse to accept bids and may set aside sales on lesser grounds than in other sales.⁴³

§ 1952. "Gross Inadequacy" Sufficient to Refuse Confirmation.

—Therefore, mere gross inadequacy of price, in bankruptcy, without more, is sufficient to prevent confirmation of a trustee's sale.⁴⁴

quacy, is not sufficient ground for setting aside a sale, unless there be additional circumstances.⁴⁵

Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 191: "In this country, Lord Eldon's views were adopted at an early day by the courts, and the rule has become almost universal that a sale will not be set aside for inadequacy of price, unless the inadequacy be so great as to shock the conscience or unless there be additional circumstances against its fairness; being very much the rule that has always prevailed in England as to setting aside sales after the master's report has been confirmed."

Sturgis v. Corbin, 15 A. B. R. 546 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "A sale made under a judicial decree will not, when no misunderstanding existed among the bidders, and when no fraud is shown, be set aside for mere inadequacy of price, unless such inadequacy is so gross as fairly to raise a presumption of fraud. The practice of opening biddings and of setting aside sales made during the progress of judicial proceedings should not be encouraged, as it is not conducive to the interests of litigants, and it tends to shake public confidence in the validity and finality of judicial sales, and to unduly prolong litigation. A purchaser at a judicial sale, who has complied with the terms thereof, or who shows his willingness and ability so to do, is not only entitled to the protection of the court, but as a party to the proceeding, made such by his purchase, is so situated as to be entitled to the court's decree of confirmation, in the absence of the inadequacy, fraud, or mistake before alluded to."

In re Shapiro, 19 A. B. R. 125, 154 Fed. 673 (D. C. Pa.): "The stock of the bankrupt was appraised at $5,000, and was sold at a public sale by the trustee for $2,800. It is now asked that a resale be ordered, the creditors who make the request having agreed to bid at least $3,200. That a sale of this kind may be set aside upon the sole ground of inadequacy is sustained by Ballentyne v. Smith, 205 U. S. 285; but in order that this should be so the difference between what the property has brought and its real value must be such as to be unconscionable. * * * The advance which is offered, however, is inconsiderable—only $400—and is not enough to warrant the court in overturning what has been done after this interval. There is also a condition attached that the stock shall be the same as when it was inspected by the representative of creditors, which further detracts from it. It is suggested that notice of the sale was not received by some of the creditors and that the party who had been sent to attend it missed his train. But however this might help to induce the court to order a resale if properly substantiated, the controlling thing as the case stands is that the amount guaranteed is too small to bother with. This may favor the bankrupt, who is said to be the real purchaser—his brother having the name of it—at the expense of his creditors, who also, as it seems, have other and older grievances against him, two previous failures and a fire standing to his credit. But however this may be, they will have to get satisfaction some other way, the matter here not warranting further controversy."

And merely a better offer, however beneficial to creditors, will not suffice to set aside the sale, unless misconduct existed in the sale amounting to imposition and fraud.⁴⁶

In re Ethier, 9 A. B. R. 161, 118 Fed. 108 (D. C. Wis.): "The fact of a better offer subsequent to the sale, however beneficial to the creditors, will not furnish ground to disturb the transaction, after confirmation, without misconduct in the sale amounting to imposition and fraud."

Sturgis v. Corbin, 15 A. B. R. 547 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "The advance offer of $7800 [4 per cent. increase] was, of itself, under the circumstances attending the purchase by Sturgis, not sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the sale."

And merely a prospective better bidder, although himself a creditor, where neither the other creditors nor the bankrupt are asking for it, but, on the contrary, are objecting, cannot have a sale set aside, even though offering a better bid.⁴⁷ Confirmation will not be refused for inadequacy of price where the sale was regularly and fairly made, where the objecting party is a creditor who was present and was a bidder at the sale, even though at the time of objecting he offers to bid slightly more.⁴⁸

§ 1954. Stifling of Competition; Misconduct of Trustee or Unfairness to Bidders.—Much more is the stifling of competition or misconduct of the trustee sufficient ground for refusing confirmation.⁴⁹

In re Shea, 11 A. B. R. 210, 126 Fed. 153 (C. C. A. Mass., affirming 10 A. B. R. 481): "In passing, we may add that the exercise of discretion to set aside a sale would be justly called for so long as parties intending to bid had seasonably advised the officer conducting the sale that they so intended, and were prevented from bidding without fault on their part. Under such circumstances, whether the loss of the opportunity to bid happened through inadvertence on the part of the officer conducting the sale, or through his intention, or by any accident for which the intending bidders were not responsible, would be immaterial."

Thus, where a trustee sold the bankrupt's equity at private sale, without giving notice thereof to an intending bidder according to promise, the equity being worth three times the sum the trustee expected to receive, the court set aside the sale upon the intending bidder filing an agreement to

Reimbursement and Attorney's Fees to Creditor Succeeding in Getting Sale Set Aside for Collusion.—A creditor who has succeeded in getting a collusive sale by the trustee set aside and thereby eventually a greater fund has been brought into the court may be allowed reimbursement of expenses including attorney's fees incurred, such allowance not being by virtue of § 64 (b) (2) but under the general equity powers of the court. In re Groves, 2 N. B. N. & R. 466 (Ref. Ohio); also, compare (merely suggestively and analogously, however), obiter, In re Road-armour, 24 A. B. R. 49, 177 Fed. 379 (C. C. A. Ohio).

Participation of the purchaser in the misconduct need not be proved.⁵¹ And unfairness towards bidders may warrant refusal of confirmation.⁵²

Sturgis v. Corbin, 15 A. B. R. 547, 141 Fed. 1 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "The advance in the bid, it thus appears, was less than 4 per cent. on the sum at which it had been sold to Sturgis. The acceptance of this belated bid, was, we think, under the circumstances attending said sale, a mistake. This offer was made by a party interested in the proceeds of the sale, one who was thoroughly familiar with all the incidents connected with it, who was well advised as to the value of the property, and who had himself been an unsuccessful bidder during one of the times at which the property had been offered for sale. There is an entire absence of fraud; in fact no intimation of its existence is made. It is not shown that any mistake or misunderstanding existed among the bidders concerning the property itself, or the terms under which the sale was made. The additional offer was not of such a character as would demonstrate inadequacy of price, or justify a refusal to confirm. If a judicial sale has been fairly conducted, as was the sale we now consider, the rights of the purchaser should be protected, not only because it is his due, but also for the purpose of protecting such sales from the evil and chilling influences of instability and doubt."

But the fact that the highest bidder is acting for another whose identity he refuses to disclose, does not warrant the trustee in refusing to accept the bid, especially where, on being informed that his offer would be refused, the bidder agrees to become personally responsible.⁵³

And that the attorney of the ultimate purchaser at an auction sale of a bankrupt's property by the trustee had a private arrangement with the auctioneer that the bid of any other person should be raised $50 each time

Where a sale of the bankrupt's equity for its appraised value is set aside upon the petitioner filing an agreement to bid three times as much, the omission from the record upon a revisory petition, praying an affirmance of the sale, of any specific finding that the value of the equity exceeded the amount which it brought at the sale, is not material, it being assumed that the court acted rightly and found that the value of the equity was triple the price the trustee was to receive therefor. But compare facts in In re Mitchell, 15 A. B. R. 739 (Ref. Mass.), where the court confirmed a private sale to the bankrupt who waited until all bids were in and then offered a slightly higher bid; the court, however, refusing still higher offers from creditors afterwards. Such a sale was manifestly unfair to the bona fide bidders.

But, where intending bidders had access to the inspection of a will in which the bankrupt had a certain interest, the fact that they did not appreciate the legal effect of certain ambiguous provisions therein which might render the estate more valuable than was supposed, and which the other bidders had had explained on the bankrupt's examination does not constitute misrepresentation warranting the refusal of the confirmation of the sale. until a sign was given by the attorney to stop, does not render the sale invalid or prevent its confirmation.

In re Ketterer Mfg. Co., 19 A. B. R. 638, 156 Fed. 719 (D. C. Pa.): "The complaint, with regard to this, is that it was a discouragement to other bidders to have their bids immediately overtopped by this amount by the auctioneer, without there being any apparent bid by anyone present, conveying the impression that the auctioneer was simply puffing the sale. But I see no occasion for setting the sale aside upon that ground. There was nothing underhanded or unfair in the arrangement referred to, nor was it indeed out of the ordinary, according to the way in which auction sales are conducted. A bid may be, and often is, conveyed by a mere nod, which no one but the auctioneer sees or understands, this course being taken for the very purpose of keeping it from being known who the bidder is, who, without this, might have the property run up upon him by puffers, beyond what he otherwise would be compelled to give. It is not required, as argued, that there should be an open and obvious bidder, whom other competitors can see and know, at the time. It is sufficient, if all parties desiring to bid have a fair chance, the announcement by the auctioneer, from time to time, of the amount bid disclosing to each just how the sale is going, and bids in good faith, from responsible parties, alone being entertained."

And that the purchaser is allowed to apply upon the purchase price securities held upon the bankrupt's property, is not an unfairness invalidating the sale.⁵⁴

Schuler v. Hassinger, 24 A. B. R. 184, 177 Fed. 119 (C. C. A. Ala.): "The fourth proposition, that the terms of sale were unequal and unfair, and competition was thereby stifled, is based upon the fact that the purchaser was permitted by the terms of the order of sale to turn in, in payment of the price, admitted securities; the argument being that the holders of securities could buy without paying cash while an outsider would be compelled to pay cash. * * * The contention in this case seems to disregard the general rule which prevails in all foreclosure and execution sales wherein it is not deemed proper and necessary to require purchasers to put up cash with one hand to take it down with the other."

§ 1954½. Injury to Innocent Parties, Avoidance of Confusion, etc.—The court will not refuse to confirm a sale where such refusal would create confusion and, perhaps, injury to innocent persons; and this is especially true where those attacking the sale may just as effectively have their grievances litigated in other courts.

In re Pittsburg, etc., Co., 28 A. B. R. 613, 197 Fed. 106 (D. C. N. on the ground and knew that the company was in a bad way. (Letters of October 1, 1910; October 14, 1910; October 30, 1910; December 24, 1910; March 29, 1911.) How much would he have bid at the sale? He insists that Nessler and the rest were in a conspiracy to defraud him, and he points to Nessler's telegram of April 16, 1911. In that telegram Nessler distinctly stated that the receiver was without funds, that great efforts would be made to reorganize, and that, in such event, Nessler would make 'every effort to protect' his interest. Nessler, in the same telegram, urged Revelas not to leave under any circumstances, and to be patient. Revelas construes this as evidence of a scheme to keep him away from New York, the scene of the bankruptcy proceedings, but I regard this as a natural course under the circumstances. Obviously Nessler and his associates wanted the one man familiar with conditions to stay at the property, while efforts were being made to save something from the wreck. The receiver communicated with Revelas, asking how much money would be required to retain his services. He was advised by Revelas that he required practically immediately a sum which the receiver could not possibly pay, and thereupon Revelas left Nome, went to Dick Creek, but had no further dealings with the receiver or the officers of the bankrupt. In the fall of 1911 Revelas came to New York, and it is claimed that Nessler, who now was secretary and treasurer of the Inspiration Gold Mining Company, offered Revelas an opportunity to invest $500, the same as the principal stockholders had done, that being the largest sum accepted from anybody, and extended this opening to come in with the rest, but Revelas refused so to do. If this is so, then Nessler carried out the promise of his telegram of April 16, 1911, to look out for Revelas in the reorganization. Revelas, however, was not satisfied and later began this proceeding. Meanwhile new rights have sprung up, new money has been ventured, and the project looks more hopeful. To order a resale now will create endless confusion, and may deprive those who have engaged in the enterprise of the legitimate fruits of their investment.

"On the other hand, if Revelas has been injured, he has been damaged only to the extent of his claim of some $8,600. If he is the victim of a conspiracy, the courts are open to him, and, in an action at law or in equity (as he may be advised, he may unmask the scheme of which he complains, if such existed, and obtain his just due. In such an action all the parties in interest will have their day in court, which, in this proceeding, they have not. Many details of the testimony, and referred to by the special master, though considered, are not here discussed, but in the final analysis the true test is not what the situation is now, but what it was on June 25, 1911, when the order of sale was made. With the property embarrassed by vexatious complications, heavily in debt and requiring new capital, where was the creditor or outside investor willing to risk much on a bankrupt mining venture in far-off Alaska?

"The motion is denied, and the report of the special master is confirmed. Submit order on two day's notice."

It has been held in one case that a bankrupt repurchasing from the purchaser at the trustee's sale his own claim against a person, can not thereafter enforce his claim against an undisclosed principal not named as debtor. Shesler v. Patton, 17 A. B. R. 372, 114 App. Div. 846.

§ 1955¼. But Referee, Receiver Nor Trustee, etc., Not.—But neither the referee,⁵⁶ receiver nor trustee may be a purchaser.⁵⁷ The prohibition is not confined to those officers, however, nor does it depend upon a contract of employment, nor upon some formal relation of trust or confidence—the disability grows out of a duty, and embraces all persons who have a duty to perform with respect to the property of others and with the proper performance of whose duty the character of purchaser of such property may be in any degree inconsistent.⁵⁸

Thus, an agent of a receiver or trustee (or, in one case it has been held even one obtaining confidential information from a receiver or trustee) may not be a purchaser;⁵⁹ nor may an appraiser be a purchaser.⁶⁰

In re Frazin & Oppenheim, 24 A. B. R. 598, 181 Fed. 307 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "It is a long established principle of equity jurisprudence that a trustee cannot become a purchaser of the trust estate. And not only trustees, strictly speaking, but agents, attorneys and all persons acting in behalf of other persons and obtaining confidential information concerning their affairs cannot purchase their property except under certain restraints not necessary to be considered here. Lord St. Leonards thus stated these elementary principles in his treatise on Vendors and Purchasers (Sugden on Vend. and Purch., 2d Am. Ed., from 5th London Ed., p. 422) and his statement has many times been quoted with approval by judges and text writers: 'It may be laid down as a general proposition that trustees, unless they are nominally so, as trustees to preserve contingent remainders, agents, commissioners of bankrupts, assignees of bankrupts, solicitors to the commission, auctioneers, creditors who have been consulted as to the mode of sale or any person who, by their connection with any other person or by being employed or concerned in his affairs, have acquired a knowledge of his property, are incapable of purchasing such property themselves, except under the restrictions which will shortly be mentioned. For if persons having a confidential character were permitted to avail themselves of any knowledge acquired in that capacity they might be induced to conceal their information and not to exercise it for the benefit of the persons relying upon their integrity. The characters are inconsistent. Emptor emit quam minimo potest, venditor vendit quam maximo potest.'

"The application of these principles is not dependent upon the engagement of one person by another in a confidential capacity. There need be no contract of employment at all. There need be no formal relation of trust. The disability grows out of the duty. In our opinion the rule of equity should be so broadly applied as to embrace all persons who have a duty to perform with respect to the property of others and with the proper performance of whose duty the character of purchaser of such property may be in any degree inconsistent.

"In King v. Remington, 36 Minn. 15, 26, the Supreme Court of Minnesota said: 'Nor is the application of the rule confined to a particular class of persons, as guardians, solicitors, attorneys, etc. It applies universally to all who come within its principle, which principle is that no party can be permitted to purchase an interest in property and hold it for his own benefit where he has a duty to perform in relation to such property which is inconsistent with the character of a purchaser on his own account and for his individual use.'

"But there are other considerations underlying these equitable principles where the question is presented whether an officer of a court who has duties to perform with respect to property in the custody of the court can buy it for his own benefit. These are considerations of public policy. And no consideration of public policy is deeper grounded upon fundamental principles—upon principles which reach the very foundations of judicial authority—than that courts and court officers must be disinterested in the management of estates committed to their charge. It cannot be permitted that officers appointed by courts to perform duties regarding property in custody of the law should speculate therein. It cannot be permitted that court officials should use their official positions for personal profit. The question is not one of fraud or good faith, of gain or loss to the estate, in a particular instance. The rule goes far deeper than that. It is applicable in every case in order to secure and maintain the impartial administration of justice.

"Upon no courts is the obligation to enforce these principles of public policy greater than upon the courts of bankruptcy of the United States. The object of Congress in enacting the bankruptcy laws was to secure the efficient and fair administration of estates. The one thing, more than all others, which creditors and bankrupt alike have the right to expect from those having official duties to perform relating to the property of the estate."

That the price paid was adequate is immaterial.

In re Frazin & Oppenheim, 24 A. B. R. 598, 181 Fed. 307 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Nor is it of importance whether the price paid at the sale was adequate. As already indicated, the application of the rules of equity and consideration of public policy which we have examined is not dependent upon the question of fairness or unfairness in price."

It may be improper for an appraiser, even after appraisal filed, to be a purchaser.

Obiter, In re Frazin & Oppenheim, 24 A. B. R. 598, 181 Fed. 307 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "Whether an appraiser after filing his report might be regarded as so far functus officio that he could become the purchaser of the property of the estate, need not be determined here. For manifest reasons there would be less objection to such a purchase than to one made while the duties of the appraiser were uncompleted. On the other hand, it may be that the underlying principles of public policy go so far as to disable an official appraiser from purchasing from the estate at any time property which he has valued."

However, it was held in one case that the sale was not invalidated because the bid had been made by attorneys who had been employed also by the trustee from time to time, no retainer nor permanent employment by either the trustee or the purchaser having been shown and the attorneys having no connection with the trustee in the sale.⁶¹ And the prohibition ought not to be distorted into a refusal to give information asked for in good faith by prospective purchasers provided others are not denied equal opportunity.

§ 1955¹/₂. Reorganization Committees, etc., as Purchasers.—

The mere fact that the purchaser is a reorganization committee or a reorganized corporation, is not, in and of itself, proof of an improper sale; in fact, such method may become the only adequate method of taking care of a large plant with diversified interests.⁶²

Schuler v. Hassinger, 24 A. B. R. 184, 177 Fed. 119 (C. C. A. Ala.): "The second proposition, that the sale was collusive, is based upon the fact that prior to the sale there was a reorganization committee for the purpose of purchasing the property in bulk; that the trustees favored such reorganization; and that the order of sale permitted the trustees to receive, as part of the purchase price, admitted securities constituting liens upon the property. That there should be a reorganization agreement for the purpose of buying in the property of the bankrupt corporation cannot be objected to. In fact, it furnishes the only way that a large diversified property and plant like that of the Southern Steel Company can be sold and purchased without disastrous results to creditors and stockholders, and the creditors have every right to organize themselves for the purpose of protecting their interests. These are propositions that need neither argument nor authority to support. That the trustees should in good faith encourage and approve a plan which looked to the successful settlement and winding up of the bankruptcy estate, and which met the approval of creditors and had the consent of all classes interested, was perfectly proper. See Cook on Corporations, Vol. 3, p. 3189; Platt v. Philadelphia R. R. (C. C.), 65 Fed. 872. The reorganization agreement set forth in the record as approved by the trustees provided for the mortgage and lien holders and the unsecured creditors and all stockholders, both common and preferred; and it was assented to by all of the first mortgage bondholders, 99³/₄ per cent. of the collateral trust note holders, 86 per cent. of the proved claims, 87 per cent. of the preferred stockholders, and 90 per cent. of the common stockholders. Such a reorganization agreement seems so fair on its face that the court itself could well have approved it if brought before it in proper way; in fact, it seems to have all of the elements of a composition which is favorably provided for in the bankruptcy law."

However, the bankruptcy court will not order a sale of all the assets, against the objection of minority creditors, to a reorganized corporation which it is proposed to form and which, it is proposed, will give only its own unsecured obligations therefor, especially when it does not appear how the reorganized corporation is to raise the funds nor in what manner it will carry on business, nor, for that matter, whether more could not be derived from a cash sale.⁶³ property and with it the right to set aside a fraudulent transfer thereof:

In re Downing, 27 A. B. R. 309, 192 Fed. 683 (D. C. N. Y.): "It seems to me that inasmuch as the trustee in bankruptcy is vested with all the right, remedies and powers of a judgment creditor of the bankrupt with execution returned unsatisfied, and one of those rights is (assuming the transfer was in fraud of creditors) to set aside the transfer, have the specific real property sold, or sell same, and the proceeds applied to the payment of all proved and allowed claims against the bankrupt, the trustee has an interest in such property. His rights and interest are something more than a mere possibility or expectancy, not coupled with an interest in or growing out of property. And it is something more than a litigious right. If the action is prosecuted successfully the judgment reaches and operates on the specific property sold or transferred by the bankrupt—the title of the fraudulent vendee is divested—and the true title transferred to a purchaser as to the trustee in bankruptcy and the proceeds so far as necessary go to the trustee for creditors or to the purchaser of such rights from such trustee. It is true that the transferee (assignee) of the trustee in bankruptcy would not be prosecuting the action for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt but in his own interest and for his own benefit. The answer to this is that such assignee of the trustee has paid a consideration for the transfer of the rights to the trustee, who holds the same for the creditors. The creditors do not object to this mode of realizing on the claim or right of action, but in fact make a resort thereto necessary."

§ 1956. May Accept Bid of Less than Seventy-Five Per Cent.—The court may accept a bid of less than seventy-five per cent of the appraised value, without ordering a reappraisal.⁶⁴ Nevertheless, the appraisal should not be disregarded. In some jurisdictions by local rule, the court will not approve a sale at less than two-thirds, although it will, of course, order reappraisal if good ground therefor exists.

It is not necessary that the order fix an upset price, since the statute provides that the assets shall not be sold otherwise than subject to the approval of the court for less than seventy-five per centum of the appraised value.⁶⁵

§ 1957. Inherent Power to Refuse Confirmation or to Set Aside, Even Where Not Expressly Ordered "Subject to Approval."—The inherent power of the court to disapprove and set aside an improper sale made under its order is not taken away by this provision of § 70 (b) of the act, even where the sale is not made subject to its approval.

In re Shea, 10 A. B. R. 481, 122 Fed. 742 (D. C. Mass.): "Section 70 (b) * * * provides that, when practicable, property shall be sold subject to the approval of the court. this sale must depend upon that general authority to deal with sales made under its orders which is inherent in a court of bankruptcy. This authority is not, I think, taken away by the provision just cited."

In re Shea, 11 A. B. R. 210, 126 Fed. 153 (C. C. A. Mass., affirming 10 A. B. R. 481): "But on a true construction of § 70b the case before us is not one of setting aside a sale, but of affirming it. As we have already said, this provision has no such interpretation as that given it by the petitioner. So far from that, it clearly provides that in every case the sale shall be subject to the approval of the court when practicable, and even the limitation 'when practicable' does not apply when the sale is less than 75 per centum of the appraised value. In other words, under all circumstances the sale is subject to approval by the court 'when practicable;' and there is no question in this case that it was practicable to obtain such approval. Therefore the question is one of confirming and not of setting aside; so that, strictly speaking, we are within the rule of Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 495, 546, 12 L. Ed. 1170, to the effect that, when a sale is made subject to confirmation, no title vests until it is confirmed."

But if a lesser bid is presented for approval, the burden of proof rests on the trustee recommending the confirmation, to show that it is proper to accept a bid of less than seventy-five per cent.⁶⁶

And a sale for less than seventy-five per cent conveys no title, unless confirmed by the court.⁶⁷

In re Shea, 11 A. B. R. 207, 126 Fed. 153 (C. C. A.): "If a judicial tribunal authorized to make a judicial sale expressly reserves the right to approve or disapprove, it certainly would require a very extreme case to justify some other tribunal in injecting its own discretion. The condition seems to be the same where the right to approve or disapprove is expressly reserved by statute."

Proceedings to set aside an improper sale by the trustee properly may be brought before the referee, but they may also be brought directly before the judge, General Order No. XII being directory only.

In re Monsarrat (No. 1), 25 A. B. R. 815 (D. C. Hawaii): "It therefore appears that this court is free to construe that part of General Order XII referred to and particularly the word 'shall' in the last sentence quoted, 'Shall be had before the referee.' There would not seem to be any reason to apprehend that the Supreme Court of the United States, in adopting this rule, had any intention of construing the Bankruptcy Act with the strict meaning contended for. Is it not more likely that the word 'shall' and the sentence in which it is found was used in a directory sense and that it was merely intended to mean that after reference the referee should have general charge of the subsequent proceedings, mainly having in view the administration of the ordinary progress of the settlement of the estate and the conduct of hearings therefor, according to the powers given him by the Bankruptcy Act, General Orders and rules of court? While he has these powers and duties, it does not appear that they are not also held by the judge. A District Court of a Territory is a court of bankruptcy and 'may include the referee.' Bankruptcy Act, § 1, divisions 7 and 8. Such court has original jurisdiction, among other powers, to allow and disallow claims, to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto, except as otherwise provided in the Act Id. Sec. 2. The referee may perform 'such part of the duties * * * as are by this Act conferred on courts of bankruptcy and as shall be prescribed by rules or orders of the court of bankruptcy of their respective districts;' with some exceptions stated in the Act. Id. § 38, div. 4.

"While the referee is given these powers there are no words taking them away from the judge, who, as the court of bankruptcy is invested with original jurisdiction to do these things.

"This continuing jurisdiction of the judge appears to be recognized in practice, there being numerous cases of petitions to the District Courts, both in the nature of summary and plenary actions, and the trial of such actions by such courts, when it must be supposed that orders of reference has been made. Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 A. B. R. 45, is one case in point. * * *

"The second ground of demurrer, i. e., that the petition presents an issue that can only be tried in a court of equity, must also be overruled; inasmuch as the court had possession of the shares of stock in the Palolo Land & Improvement Company, Limited, and the sale of them by the trustee being made without their appraisal, as required by law (Bankruptcy Act, § 70b), and at private sale without the order of the court (Gen. Order 18 div. 1), and not having been approved by the court, no title has vested in the grantee."

§ 1957 $\frac{1}{2}$. Purchaser Entitled to Hearing.—On an application to set aside the sale the purchaser is entitled to be heard to the extent of showing his rights in the premises, and to point out why the application should be denied.

In re Kronrot, 25 A. B. R. 738, 183 Fed. 653 (D. C. N. Y.): "A third party (who had the right to rely upon an absolute compliance with the terms of sale, and upon the absolute fairness of an auction conducted under the order of court) bid the property in, and while the sale was subject in all things to the confirmation of this court, that confirmation must depend upon the sufficiency of the notice, the compliance with all necessary or proper requirements in holding the sale, honesty and fair dealing in the action itself, and a proper treatment of the bidder in considering his rights after the property was knocked down to him, which would generally involve merely the possibility of his completing the purchase and of the adequacy of his bid; this last being particularly involved because of the provision of the statute that a bid of less than 75 per cent. cannot be completed, except upon confirmation thereof by the court."

§ 1958. Formal Approval Not Always Essential to Confirmation.—Formal approval is, perhaps, not always necessary to effect a confirmation.

In re Shea, 11 A. B. R. 211, 126 Fed. 153 (C. C. A. Mass.): "We do not undertake to say that § 70 (b) requires always a formal approval."

Thus, silent acquiescence in a sale for a considerable length of time may effect a confirmation;⁶⁸ or a crediting of the proceeds in the trustee's report or account, and a subsequent approval of the report or account by the court, may suffice to effect a confirmation.⁶⁹

§ 1959. "Caveat Emptor."—The rule of "caveat emptor" prevails in bankruptcy sales, as in all judicial sales, unless special direction otherwise is made in the order of sale.⁷⁰

And, a fortiori, is this true where the trustee states, at the sale, that he assumes no personal responsibility and does not warrant the property sold or its saleability.

In re Frazin & Oppenheim, 29 A. B. R. 212, 201 Fed. 86 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "To permit a purchaser, who thus speculates upon the value of the property bid in by him, to recover the price paid because subsequent events show that the interest purchased was less valuable than he supposed it to be, seems to us most inequitable. It would be difficult to imagine a clearer case for the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor. This buyer knew exactly what he was purchasing. From his point of view it was a wise purchase, it enabled his principals to make an advantageous arrangement whereby the old lease was cancelled and a new one made. In securing these advantages he put it out of his power to restore the trustee's interest in the old lease."

The sale, in the absence of special warranty by the trustee, conveys simply whatever interest the trustee possesses;⁷¹ but by special warranty, or representation, the trustee may be bound by a different rule. Whether he may, however, bind the estate thereby unless so authorized by the order of sale, is doubtful.

The referee may refuse to order the sale of a speculative claim, where

The rule of caveat emptor will not interfere with the court in its discretion setting aside a sale or granting a rebate of the purchase price where the defect is not a defect of the title or quality but merely a failure to get the quality of articles advertised as being sold. Searchy v. McCourt, 1 Fed. Rep. 261; 1 Md. 147; 3 La. Ann. 326. This rule would seem to be restricted to cases where the trustee could be put in statu quo and where the proportionate rebate is certain and ascertainable.

In re Bluestone Bros., 23 A. B. R. 264, 174 Fed. 53 (D. C. W. Va.): "But some doubt arises as to whether such jurisdiction could extend to the protection of the property after it has been sold and delivered to the purchaser. This question it becomes wholly unnecessary to decide in this case. It is only necessary to say that, in any event, the defendant, Devault, could only be stayed in his right to assert claim in a State court to the property under two conditions of things: First, in case there was conflicting claim to the property between himself and the bankrupt, which claim he had asserted in the bankruptcy court, and it had been there determined, or, being made a party to the proceeding, he had refused or failed there to assert his right, being called upon so to do; second, had by his fraudulent conduct at the time of sale, either by direct representation or by silent acquiescence, secured or allowed plaintiff to buy his goods, mingled with those of the bankrupts, as goods of the bankrupt properly to be sold."

§ 1960. Discretion in Approving or Setting Aside Sale Not to Be Revised, Except for Abuse.—The discretion of the court in approving or in setting aside the trustee's sale will not be revised, unless there has been an abuse of power, or the case is, in other respects, extreme.⁷⁴

In re Shea, 11 A. B. R. 207, 126 Fed. 153 (C. C. A. There is nothing which this record properly brings to us, or even suggests, which justified the probability of the existence of an exception of that character."

§ 1962. Summary Power to Compel Purchaser to Complete Sale.

—The bankruptcy court has summary power to compel a purchaser to complete his contract of sale.⁷⁷

In re Jungmann, 26 A. B. R. 401, 186 Fed. 302 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "By voluntarily becoming a purchaser of property sold under order of the court he submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and when such purchaser refuses without cause to carry out his contract he may be compelled to do so by rule or attachment issuing out of the court under whose decree the sale is had."

Mason v. Wolkowich, 17 A. B. R. 714, 150 Fed. 699 (C. C. A. Mass.): "Wherever a receiver, by direction of the court appointing him, makes a sale of assets in his possession, the parties concerned in the sale are bound to recognize him as an officer of the court; and consequently the court appointing the receiver, not only has power to enforce in a summary manner the completion of the contract of sale, but the parties involved are deemed to have consented to such a proceeding."

But the court, in accordance with the ordinary principles of equity, will relieve the purchaser where the contract was entered into through mistake.⁷⁸

And there is no sound distinction between a sale at auction and a private sale approved by the court so far as the purchaser's obligation to comply with his bid or offer is concerned.⁷⁹

§ 1963. May Be Sold Subject to Liens.—The property may be sold subject to liens.¹ Even subject to the liens of taxes.²

§ 1964. If Not Mentioned to Be Otherwise, Sale Is Subject to Liens.—If the sale is not expressly ordered to be free and clear of liens, it will be a sale subject to liens.³

The sale of property "free from liens" must be taken to mean a sale free from such liens as were mentioned in the petition for sale.

In re Crowell, 29 A. B. R. 308, 199 Fed. 659 (D. C. Mass.): "The petitioner rests its claim upon the contention that its purchase of the lot under the order of sale has entitled it to have the land free of any lien or incumbrance at the time it paid the balance of the agreed purchase money and took the trustee's deed. The referee's order to sell, made on February 28, 1911, neither had nor could have had any application to the lien afterward created by the assessment of these taxes. Not only had no such lien then come into being, but what the lien or incumbrances were to which the referee's order referred appears from the petition for the order. This set forth that there were certain mortgages on the land; that one of the mortgages was to the petitioner for review and its validity disputed; that the land had been conveyed subject to conditions; and that it had been attached. To the validity, as against him, of any order to sell free from incumbrances, it is essential that a lienholder whose rights may be affected should have had due opportunity to defend his interest, and due notice to appear for that purpose. Ray v. Norseworthy, 22 Wall. 128, 135, 23 L. Ed. 116; In re Platteville Foundry & Machine Co. (D. C., Wis.), 17 Am. B. R. 291, 147 Fed. 828. The lienholders named as above in the petition for sale are the only lienholders who could have had such notice, or who could have been affected by the order. No other lienholders can be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the court in making the order for sale, or of the trustee in advertising the sale, or of the purchaser or other bidders at the sale. Since no lien for these taxes existed when the order was made, or the sale advertised, or when the sale thus ordered and advertised took place, no such lien was or could have been removed from the property or transferred to the proceeds by virtue of the order and the sale made in pursuance thereof. What the trustee received from the purchaser at the sale, and now holds, he must be considered to hold as representing the property freed from those liens which the petition described, if any, but freed from no others."

§ 1965. May Be Sold Free from Liens and Liens Transferred to Proceeds.—The property may be sold free from liens and encumbrances, and the liens be transferred to the proceeds.

No form was prescribed for this purpose by the Supreme Court, and no special authorization of sales free from liens is to be found in the statute itself; but, so far as statutory authorization is concerned, nothing is found in the statute specially authorizing sales subject to liens, nor at private sale nor of perishable property, and yet those methods of sale are deemed proper in bankruptcy. And it would be a serious defect were it not permissible to sell property in bankruptcy free from liens, because such is ordinarily the best method of selling property. To sell property free and clear from all liens and to have all controversies relative to the validity and extent of liens thereon transferred to the fund, is likely to lead to better prices. Otherwise, the purchaser would have to buy all the controversies along with the purchase of the property itself. And the right to sell property in the bankruptcy court clear and free from all encumbrances, and to transfer the liens to the proceeds, is now beyond dispute.⁴

In re New England Piano Co., 9 A. B. R. 767, 122 Fed. 937 (C. C. A. Mass.): "The first proposition of the petition is that the District Court had no authority or jurisdiction to order a sale of the property in question free and clear of incumbrances. The petitioner concedes the force of the decisions of the Supreme Court in In re Christy, 3 How. 292, and Ray v. Norseworthy, 23 Wall. 128, already referred to; but it claims that the former was under the Bankruptcy Act of 1841, and the latter under that of 1867, and that both of those statutes expressly conferred powers on the District Court sitting in bankruptcy which are not given it by the act of 1898. Even if this were so, it would not follow that a decree should be entered in favor of the petitioner. By § 2 of the act of 1898 the District Courts as courts of bankruptcy are given 'such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings in vacation in chambers, and during their respective terms.' As we have shown in other opinions, the District Court sitting in bankruptcy proceeds in accordance with the principles of equity, and exercises equitable powers. An order like this appealed from is clearly within the ordinary jurisdiction of courts proceeding on those principles and exercising those powers. In re Christy fully recognizes this principle at pages 312 and 313. The case was reaffirmed in Nugent v. Boyd, 3 How. 426, and Houston v. City Bank, 6 How. 486. In this connection the petitioner claims that Ray v. Norseworthy was rested on § 20 of the act of 1867, which gave special powers with reference to creditors wholly or partially secured, offering proofs of debts against bankrupt estates; but an examination of the opinion shows that the case was merely supported by the reference to that section, and that the first section of the act was regarded as wholly sufficient. Nothing cited from the act of 1841 in In re Christy vested in the District courts sitting in bankruptcy any greater powers than are found in the provisions of § 2 of the present statute, giving them jurisdiction 'at law and in equity,' as we have already said, and authorizing them to 'cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed,' and to 'make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments, in addition to those specifically provided for, as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions' of the act."

Sturgis v. Corbin, 15 A. B. R. 545, 141 Fed. 1 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "The order of the court below directing a sale of the property clear of all liens, claims and incumbrances was, under the circumstances, a wise exercise of judicial discretion, being such action as the Bankrupt Act contemplates and provides for in those instances where the nature and location of the property make it desirable in the interest of creditors that the same be sold as soon as practicable."

In re Roger Brown & Co., 28 A. B. R. 336, 196 Fed. 758 (C. C. A. Iowa): "The present bankruptcy law makes no express provision for sale by the trustee free of incumbrance, but it is uniformly held that he may be authorized to so sell if there are reasonable grounds for believing that more could be realized than the amount of the encumbrance."

In re Kest, 11 A. B. R. 117, 128 Fed. 651 (D. C. Pa.): "There can be no question as to the authority of the District Court * * * . This is essential to a complete administration of the bankrupt's estate, and will be implied from the general provisions of the present act, even though not expressly given, as in the preceding Act of 1867."

In re Pittelkow, 1 A. B. R. 472, 92 Fed. 901 (D. C. Wis.): "Upon the general question of jurisdiction, I am of the opinion that the District Court is vested with exclusive jurisdiction over the property of the bankrupt, and with sufficient equity powers to have all claims by mortgagees brought in and administered; that sales may be authorized, under proper circumstances, free and clear from the mortgages, or other liens, by preserving and transferring the claims to the fund thus provided; and that the commencement of foreclosure proceedings can be restrained to that end."

In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 678, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Pa.): "But, notwithstanding what has been said above about liens unaffected by bankruptcy proceedings, it is in the power of the court to order a sale clear and free of them, regardless of how they would ordinarily stand."

And it may be sold free, even, from the lien of taxes;⁵ though not to the prejudice of the state or municipality.

And the power of the bankruptcy court to sell free and clear from liens is discretionary and not subject to collateral attack.⁶

The provisions of the Bankruptcy Act that valid liens shall not be affected by bankruptcy proceedings has reference only to the validity of the contract, and not to the remedy nor forum for enforcing the lienholder's rights, which may be changed without impairing the contractual obligation, providing an equally adequate and efficient remedy is substituted.⁷

§ 1966. Lienholder's Consent Not Necessary.—And it does not require the lienholder's consent.⁸

It is clear that, by agreement, property also may be sold clear and free and the liens transferred to the fund;⁹ and the agreement may be implied.¹⁰

§ 1967. Sale Clear and Free Ordered before Validity or Priority of Liens Determined.—A sale free and clear from liens may be ordered before the validity and priority of the liens have been determined, the controversies being transferred to the funds.¹¹

In re Littlefield, 19 A. B. R. 18, 155 Fed. 838 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "A court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to order a sale of a bankrupt's property upon which a lien is asserted without first determining either the validity or amount of the lien."

§ 1968. But Not Where Lienholder Who Desires to Bid, Objects.—But a sale free and clear, before the priority, validity and extent of liens have been determined, should not be ordered over the objection of a lienholder who might desire to bid and use the ascertained value of his lien in part payment of the purchase price.¹²

§ 1969. Sale Subject to Some Liens, Free from Others.—The sale may be ordered subject to some liens and free from others;¹³ and failure to mention a lien makes the sale subject thereto.¹⁴

Obiter, In re New England Piano Co., 9 A. B. R. 770, 122 Fed. 937 (C. C. A. Mass.): "It is true that, ordinarily, the court in bankruptcy ought not to interfere in this way where it is apparent that the estate has no equity of redemption of value, but this cannot be held to be universally true for reason which we have no occasion to state."

In re Chambersburg Mfg. Co., 26 A. B. R. 107, 190 Fed. 411 (D. C. While the bankruptcy court had the authority to discharge the lien without their consent, and order certain costs incident to the same paid out of the fund, notwithstanding, this is a power which is exercised with great care and caution, and any defalcation for costs and fees is jealously guarded."

In re Pittelkow, 1 A. B. R. 472, 92 Fed. 901 (D. C. Wis.): "It is, however, the duty of the court to consider the interests of mortgagees and other secured creditors as well as those of the general creditors; and unless it is apparent (1) that the mortgaged premises in the given case will probably realize upon a sale an amount substantially in excess of the mortgage, and (2) that there are no complications, by dower rights, conveyances, or other conditions, which require foreclosure under the mortgage, the power to proceed summarily by sale, including the interest of the mortgagee, should not be exercised."

In re Styer, 3 A. B. R. 424, 98 Fed. 290 (D. C. Pa.): "Assuming * * * that such power exists, it is clear that the sale should not be ordered unless the court is satisfied that the interest of general creditors would be thus advanced, and that the interest of the lien creditors would not be injuriously affected."

In re Goldsmith, 9 A. B. R. 426, 118 Fed. 763 (D. C. Tex.): "In the administration of bankruptcy estates it has been the rule to carefully consider whether there is a probable interest in incumbered property for the general creditors; if it be decided there is, then to sell same, after notice, either subject to or free from incumbrance, as conditions may indicate. If sold free from incumbrance, it ought to be provided that such incumbrances, and liens as may be found to exist should attach to the proceeds of the sale. If it be decided there is no interest for the general creditors, then the bankruptcy court should not undertake to administer the property for an absent lienor. To undertake its administration is an abuse of discretion justly condemned by the authorities."

But where the validity of liens, or the extent of liens upon after-acquired property, is in dispute, in such way that the question of a possible surplus is in doubt, sale, free and clear, will be ordered.¹⁷

And the court may, in its discretion, order a sale free and clear of liens, although the encumbrances thereon equal the value of the property.¹⁸

In re Keet, 11 A. B. R. 117, 128 Fed. 651 (D. C. Pa.): "It is not therefore a matter of power, but of discretion, and while, ordinarily, the latter will not be exercised in favor of a sale where the encumbrances equal the value of the property * * * yet there are considerations in the present instance which seem to make it desirable."

A sale clear and free of liens will be ordered, if a reasonable prospect of surplus for general creditors appears, other things being equal.

In re Zehner, 27 A. B. R. 537, 193 Fed. 787 (D. C. La.): "However, the application is for leave to foreclose in the state court and the trustee has not seen fit to abandon the mortgaged property. On the contrary, he strenuously asserts there is a considerable equity in it that will benefit the general fund, and he does not admit the validity of the petitioner's mortgage. * * * The jurisdiction of the state court to sell the property of the bankrupt even after adjudication is concurrent with that of the federal court, and the latter jurisdiction is only exclusive by reason of its custody of the res. * * * But it seems to me, however, that in all cases where it is probable that a surplus will be realized over and above the liens and mortgages, or even in doubtful cases, it would be better for all parties concerned that the property be sold through the bankruptcy court."

But the costs of such sale must be taken from the fund realized from the encumbered property, and must not be taken from general creditors.¹⁹

The time to object to a sale free and clear is before the sale, and parties are not entitled to wait until afterwards.

It was held in one case, to be sure, that the Amendment of 1910 to Bankruptcy Act, § 48, providing for commissions on amounts paid to lienholders, as well as to others, is not applicable to cases where the property brings "largely less" than the concededly valid encumbrances, the court arguing that such deficiency is itself prima facie proof that the bankruptcy court had not "rightfully exercised its jurisdiction to sell free from liens;" but it would seem that the objection to such sale should have been by the lienholder at the start, when first summoned into court, according to the ordinary rules, or at any rate before the sale had been made; and that his failure so to object was itself, rather, prima facie proof, and at least an admission by the lienholder, that the sufficiency or insufficiency of the price likely to be obtained was so entirely unknown and unascertainable that it would be a proper exercise of the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction to order a sale.

than four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, should be carefully inquired into before an order of sale is made, and it should appear that such liens will not be affected by the sale and the bankrupt estate will be benefited thereby provided, as in this case, the mortgagee makes no claim against the bankrupt estate."

§ 1972. Parties Relegated to State Court Where Foreclosure Necessary to Bar Rights Not within Jurisdiction of Bankruptcy Court.—But where foreclosure is necessary to bar rights which cannot be brought before the bankruptcy court, the bankruptcy court will relegate the parties to the state courts.²⁰

Obiter, In re Pittelkow, 1 A. B. R. 472, 92 Fed. 901 (D. C. Wis.): "Certainly, if foreclosure is necessary to bar rights which cannot be brought before the court of bankruptcy proceedings, the mortgagee should have leave to that end, on proper showing of cause; otherwise, he would be compelled to bid for the protection of his mortgage interest, without the benefits of complete foreclosure."

Or, at any rate, will permit the parties to resort to the State courts to effect the foreclosure.

In re Victor Color & Varnish Co., 23 A. B. R. 177, 175 Fed. 1023 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "We are clearly of the opinion that the holder of the chattel mortgage was entitled to have his day in court, in a suit to foreclose it, and that so much of the order as refused him leave to begin such a suit, on the ground that the property was in the hands of a receiver in bankruptcy, must be reversed. It was entirely proper, however, for the bankruptcy court to refuse to give petitioner immediate possession of the property; it should remain in the custody of the receiver till the suit is determined, although, of course, if all parties agree, it may be sold and the proceeds held by the receiver. Order modified."

The bankruptcy court has power to sell free from liens, but not to "foreclose."²¹

Thus, it is possible for the bankruptcy court to sell assets free from liens, transferring the liens to the proceeds of sale, and at the same time allow the lienholder to maintain a suit to foreclose his lien in the State court.²²

§ 1974. But, if Wife Consents, Sale May Be Made Free from Dower.—But, if the wife consents, a sale may be ordered in the bankruptcy court free from her inchoate dower rights, and she may be compensated therefor out of the proceeds.²⁴ And this practice is approved.

Savage v. Savage, 15 A. B. R. 599, 141 Fed. 346 (C. C. A. Va.): “With regard to the objection urged against the order to sell bankrupt’s remaining real estate free from the wife’s contingent right of dower, it is sufficient to say that it is nearly always desirable, in making sale of a bankrupt’s real estate, if the wife will consent, to sell free from her inchoate right of dower, and to compensate her by a fair allowance out of the proceeds for her release of that right. It is common practice to do so when it is possible, and we think the practice is to be approved, as it gives the purchaser an unincumbered title, and ordinarily results in advantage to creditors by obtaining a better price for a clear title than can be obtained for property the title to which is clouded by such a possible incumbrance.”

And where she does consent, then the value of her dower right is to be computed in accordance with state law.²⁵ Where the wife gives consent to such sale, she may, on sale being made, be compelled to execute a formal release of the dower.²⁶

Quoted further at § 1979.

Even though the claim of lien be considered "frivolous" the claimant should be given notice.³⁷

Secured Creditor Filing Proof of Claim Disclosing Security but Claim Allowed in Full without Deduction.—Where the secured creditor duly filed proof of debt in the prescribed form, setting up his security, and the claim was allowed in full without deduction of the value of the securities, it will be presumed the referee had found the securities to be of no value, but it will not work a forfeiture of the lien where the property is subsequently sold. *Bassett v. In cases of amendment, the better practice undoubtedly is to present the proposed amendment at the time of the application for leave to amend.⁴⁴

Interest is computable to the date of payment of the lien, not to the date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition, although when the lienholder comes to prove his claim for the deficit for participation in dividends, his interest will be restricted to accruals at the date of the filing of the petition.⁴⁵

§ 1985½. Statutory Regulations of Party's Right to Maintain Suit, Not Binding.—Statutory regulations of a party's right to maintain suit, as, for example, that partnerships doing business under fictitious names or names not showing who are the members, shall not maintain suit until compliance with certain regulations, are not binding upon the bankruptcy court, for the federal courts will prescribe their own regulations of the right of a party, otherwise competent, to institute or maintain proceedings.⁴⁶

§ 1986. Separate Accounts of Each Fund to Be Kept.—Separate accounts should be kept of the proceeds of sale where liens are involved, all of which are not liens upon the entire property, so that the lienholders may have the means of determining what their respective rights are in the proceeds.⁴⁷

Keyser v. Wessel, 12 A. B. R. 127, 128 Fed. 281 (C. C. A. Pa., affirming In re Smith, 10 A. B. R. 586): "This case is plainly distinguishable from that of Carroll & Bro. Co. v. Young, 9 Am. B. R. 643, 119 Fed. 577, which was decided by this court about a year ago. In that case, the lien creditors had been prompt and persistent in asserting their rights. They had made timely objection to the property being sold divested of their liens, and had pointed out the very difficulty which was subsequently brought forward as a bar to their rights. In that case, as in this, it was too late to question the propriety of the order of sale which had been made; but it was not impossible, as it is in the present case, to determine the proportional value of the particular part bound by the liens to the gross purchase price, and hence the order which was there made, by which the distribution was opened to permit the lien creditors to prosecute their claims as such, was both just and practicable. We adhere to our decision in Carroll & Bro. Co. v. Young, but to the very different circumstances and situation disclosed by the record now before us it has no application."

of the sale, which was made by the receiver under an order of court and was afterwards duly confirmed without objection, and he should have asked the court to direct this clothing to be sold separately, in order that the fund thus produced might be earmarked and the validity of his claim upon it be considered. The court had no knowledge that he was asserting a lien for the manufacture of these goods, and, as they had passed out of his possession into the custody of the receiver, it was his duty to make seasonable claim to priority of payment. Otherwise, he must be held to have taken the risk that the goods might be sold in such a manner that the proceeds might be indistinguishably mingled with the proceeds of the other property of the bankrupt."

Obiter, In re Shoe & Leather Reporter, 12 A. B. R. 248, 129 Fed. 588 (C. C. A. Mass.): "While, of course, we would ordinarily expect the District Court, before selling property in lump as to which there are conflicting claims, to establish by proper inventory and appraisal the basis for a distribution of the proceeds when the title to the portions of the property in dispute is settled, yet his record presents nothing definite with regard to this proposition of the petitioners."

§ 1987. Failure to Object to Sale without Separation Waives Rights.—And the lienholder waives his rights by failure to object to a sale, where such separation of accounts is not kept.⁴⁸

Thus, where a landlord, entitled to priority under the state law for one year's rent out of the sale of a tenant's stock and fixtures, makes no objection to a sale or confirmation of a sale of the stock, fixtures and liquor license in bulk for a lump sum, the landlord's claim for priority of rent should be disallowed, because of the impossibility of determining how much were the proceeds of the stock and fixtures on which only the landlord has his lien.⁴⁹

Again, the owner of a municipality's claim for taxes upon two parcels of land, where the two were part of twelve parcels sold for a lump sum, he having notice thereof and not objecting thereto, has waived whatever rights he might have had had he required separation of the funds and payment from the proceeds of the parcels covered by his lien.⁵⁰ Likewise, where there was a lien upon a clothing stock and the clothing was sold together with the property, but no separate account was kept nor ordered kept, although the lienholder was notified, and nothing was known as to the separate price for which the clothing sold; the lienholder was held to have waived all right to payment.⁵¹

Similarly, a conditional vendor of chattels or other owner of interests therein who has consented to a sale of the property involved waives his right to the value of his specific property by failure to have separate account kept.

In re Great Western Mfg. Co., 18 A. B. R. 259, 152 Fed. 123 (C. C. A. Neb.): "One who acquiesces in a sale under an order of the court of his property and the estate of the bankrupt in one lot, and thereafter prays for a preference in payment out of the sale, is estopped from receiving a larger proportion of the proceeds than the value of his property bore to the value of the lot sold at the time of the sale."

But failure to file exceptions to a return of sale that did not separately state the several amounts realized for each fund out of the entire proceeds, does not waive objections to the original order to sell as an entirety and to the transfer of the liens to the fund, where the objections were made on the ground of the difficulty of separating the funds, the order of sale also providing that the sale was to be "without prejudice to the right of lien creditors to claim from the fund derived from said sale the amount of their respective liens."⁵²

If the lienholder actually is present at a sale made without separation, he waives any lack of notice to him by mail.⁵³

§ 1988. Taking Additional Evidence, after Sale, to Fix Proportions of Fund.—It would be proper for the referee, sua sponte, to take additional evidence as to the proportion of the funds respectively assignable to each lienholder, after the sale, if the sale were made as an entirety without arrangement for separation of the proceeds.⁵⁴

In re Utt, 5 A. B. R. 383, 105 Fed. 758 (C. C. A. Ills.): "The mortgaged property having been sold by the trustee in bankruptcy under the order of the District Court, it is equitable and right that the expenses of the sale, including advertisement, appraisal, if appraisal was required by law, revenue stamps, and compensation to the trustee not exceeding that of the master in chancery if the sale had been made by him under the decree of the state court, should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale; but, in so far as it was directed that attorneys, the clerk and the marshal should be paid for services in the bankruptcy proceedings not directly connected with the sale, or in the suit for an injunction, the order made was without justification in law or equity. This includes the $100 directed to be paid to the attorney for the trustee, for whose assistance, in connection with the sale, there could have been no necessity."

And this is so notwithstanding there be not enough left to pay the liens in full.⁵⁶

In re Williams Estate (Anheuser-Busch Brew. Ass'n v. Harrison) 19 A. B. R. 389, 156 Fed. 934 (C. C. A. Wash.): "It thus appears that all of the property of the bankrupt was covered by the brewing association's liens, and that the total amount realized from the sale of the property upon which the petitioner had valid liens was less than the amount of those liens. The real question for decision, therefore, is to what extent, if at all, funds realized by the sale of property upon which a creditor of a bankrupt has valid liens, proof of which secured claims is filed in the bankruptcy court after the making of such sale, and when the proceeds of the sale are insufficient to pay the liens in full, may be used to pay the general costs of administration of the bankrupt's estate. It is true that the record in the case shows that the lienholder voluntarily came into the bankruptcy court and asked that the property covered by its liens be sold by that court. The Bankruptcy Act * * * in terms declares that none of its provisions shall effect a valid lien. But the estate of a bankrupt is interested in any excess that may exist over and above the amount of such liens. So it was held by this court in the case entitled In re Jersey Island Packing Co., 14 Am. B. R. 689, 138 Fed. 625, 627, 71 C. C. A. 75, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560, that 'property on which there is a mortgage or other lien passes to the trustee in bankruptcy and is therefore in the custody of the court of bankruptcy,' and further, in the same case, that 'the provision of the Bankruptcy Act that such a lien shall not be affected by the bankruptcy proceedings has reference only to the validity of the lienholder's contract. It does not have reference to his remedy to enforce his rights. The remedy may be altered without impairing the obligation of his contract, so long as an equally efficient and adequate remedy is substituted.' By coming into the bankruptcy court, therefore, the holder of a valid lien upon the estate of a bankrupt comes into an appropriate place and into a court amply able to enforce and protect his rights. By doing so the lienholder waives none of his rights. The enforcement of his lien in another court would entail upon the proceeds of the property upon which the lien exists the payment of the appropriate court costs; and so, in the enforcement of such lien in a court of bankruptcy, the proceeds of the property of the bankrupt upon which such lien exists is properly chargeable with the costs of such court appropriate to such enforcement, but with no other or further costs."

⁵⁶ In re Baughman, 20 A. B. R. 811, 163 Fed. 669 (D. C. S. Car.), although the qualification is added that the lienholder did not object.

§ 1990. Each Fund to Bear Its Own Expenses and Costs.—And each fund is to bear its own expenses and costs.⁵⁷

In re Cogley, 5 A. B. R. 731, 107 Fed. 73 (D. C. Iowa): "It sometimes happens that lienholders desire to obtain a title from the trustee, either through a public sale made by him, or by a direct conveyance; and in such cases the trustee can generally obtain some small sum for conveying the title, which will enure to the benefit of the general creditors. * * * In the case at bar * * * the trustee carried through a sale for the benefit of the mortgagees saving them the costs of a foreclosure suit, and then paid the costs of this sale out of the money in his hands realized from the sale of assets on which the mortgagees had no lien whatever. If the creditors had excepted * * * the action * * * would be set aside as a clear error."

In re Torchia, 26 A. B. R. 188, 185 Fed. 576 (D. C. Pa.): "The referee was of the opinion that because the Bankruptcy Act provided that valid liens should not be affected and because as he found, there was no money in the hands of the trustee for distribution except the proceeds of the real estate, and because the liens thereon exceeded in amount the proceeds available thereto, therefore nothing could be applied to such commissions and counsel fees. Under the circumstances of this case I think the referee was in error."

"It is undoubted now that a court of bankruptcy has power to sell real estate discharged of liens after notice to lien creditors. From the earliest times a court of equity has assumed jurisdiction of the ascertainment of liens and of their enforcement by sale or otherwise, and of the distribution of the proceeds of sale among the lienors. It is proper in a case like the present, that the rights of those claiming to have a lien should be ascertained by the bankruptcy court. If referee's and trustee's fees are not to be paid out of the fund realized by the sale of real estate discharged of liens, there will be no incentive to the small creditor of himself to institute proceedings to determine the validity of liens. In this case, had the mechanics' liens, which are purely statutory, been determined to have been void, a large fund would have been applicable to the claims of the general creditors. They raised no question about the sale discharged of liens. They were benefited thereby. They were at no expense, as they would have been had they been permitted to enforce their liens themselves, and they ought in equity and good conscience be willing that the referee's and trustee's commissions and expenses should be allowed and paid out of the fund."

"Apart from that, however, it is the undoubted rule that the expenses of creating a fund should be paid out of it. The expenses in such case should include also reasonable compensation to the parties who have been instrumental in creating the fund."

"While liens cannot be affected by the Bankruptcy Act, they are not thereby given a higher status than they had before the act was passed. In Pennsylvania, under the laws regulating assignments for the benefit of creditors, by Act of February 17, 1876 (P. L. 4), a public sale, and by Act May 24, 1893 (P. L. 128), a private sale, of real estate might be ordered free and discharged of all other liens except the liens of mortgages. Also a public sale with like effect might be ordered by virtue of section 19 of Insolvency Act of 1901 (P. L. 415). In that State also the orphan's court may order a sale of a decedent's real estate, unless for payment of debts, with the same result, but with the same limitation. When such a sale under either of the statutory powers thus mentioned has been had, it has never been doubted that the commissions of the assignee, or administrator, as the case may be, and his counsel fees are payable out of the fund before distribution to judgment or mechanics' liens."

And the Amendment of 1910 did not alter the law in this respect but was simply declaratory of it.

Obiter, In re Torchia, 26 A. B. R. 1888, 185 Fed. 576 (D. C. Pa.): "If the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 be not in its provisions with respect to the compensation to trustees where the assets to be administered have been derived from the sale of property subject to liens, it has been made specially so by the amendment of June 25, 1910 (chapter 412, 36 Stat. 840), which provides, in section 9, that trustees shall receive 'commissions on all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person including lienholders.' I cannot escape the conclusion that the provision last quoted is declaratory of the law as it was."

Of course, where the expenses of preservation cover several funds, they may be apportioned among the various funds.⁵⁸

§ 1991. Proportionate Part Not to Be Charged against Each Lien.—A proportionate part of the expenses, etc., are not to be charged against each lien in accordance with its share of the proceeds;⁵⁹ although where the lien is only on part, the expenses assignable to that part, of course, may be arrived at proportionately.⁶⁰

But, of course, where the expenses are jointly incurred in the protection of several different funds, they may be apportioned among the various funds.⁶¹

§ 1992. Costs and Expenses First Deducted and Liens Paid Out of Remainder.—The costs and expenses are first in the order of priority in such sales; and are to be first deducted, and the liens are to be paid out of the remainder, in the order of their priority.⁶² Thus, costs, expenses and taxes have precedence over dower.⁶³ Likewise costs and expenses of

§ 1993. General Costs of Administration Not Chargeable.—Only the costs and expenses of the sale of the particular property may be taxed against the fund: general costs of administration may not be so charged.⁶⁸

In re Williams (Anheuser Busch Brew. Asso. v. Harrison), 19 A. B. R. 389, 156 Fed. 934 (C. C. A. Wash.): "They are not chargeable with the general costs of the administration of the bankrupt's estate, such as the services of a receiver in carrying on the business of the bankrupt, the expenses and losses of such business, the fees of the attorney for such receiver, the general fees of the trustee or those of his attorney. If so, the valid lien upon the estate of the bankrupt, which the Bankruptcy Act expressly declares shall be unaffected by any of its provisions, might very readily be destroyed, as it would unquestionably be, should such costs equal or exceed the proceeds in cases like the present, where the aggregate amount of the valid liens exceeds the proceeds of the entire estate of the bankrupt." Quoted further at § 1989.

Mills v. Virginia-Carolina Lumber Co., 20 A. B. R. 750, 164 Fed. 168 (C. C. A. N. Car.): "Whilst we think, therefore, that the judgment of the District Court, allowing the proof of the $750.00 debt, should be affirmed, we feel constrained to modify the judgment with respect to cost. In the order which was filed by the District Court from the report of the referee, we find the following: 'It is further ordered and adjudged that as the creditor (meaning the Virginia-Carolina Lumber Company) voluntarily came into court and filed its claim for allowance, that said claim must bear its pro rata part of the costs of the administration under the proceedings in bankruptcy.' Aside from the mere costs incident to the proof of the claim, we do not see how this creditor should be required to pay any part of the costs of the administration of this bankrupt's estate. The lumber company had its claim secured by deed in trust on the property of the bankrupt and it was entitled to have its claim paid in full, provided the property so conveyed would bring enough. The trustee in bankruptcy elected to sell this property and has the proceeds of the sale in hand. The lumber company, in our opinion, is entitled to have of the proceeds of the sale sufficient to pay its debt and interest, provided there is enough.

In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 681, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Pa.): "A sale of the property free of liens may undoubtedly be ordered, but, if this is done, the proceeds must be applied to their satisfaction, undiminished by anything except the costs of sale, or the expenses, if any, which have been undertaken for, and result to, their benefit. They are not concerned with the bankruptcy proceedings outside of this, and cannot, therefore, be charged with the cost of instituting them or carrying them on."

In re Clark Coal & Coke Co., 23 A. B. R. 273, 173 Fed. 658, 176 Fed. 955 (D. C. Pa.): "But that with this slight power [Bankr. Act, § 2 (5)], and in the face of § 67d, 'that liens given or accepted in good faith should not be affected by the act,' a court of bankruptcy, without notice, can take the money of a lien creditor to pay the expenses of the general estate, or provide a fund for distribution among the general creditors, does not appear to us to be sound." [Quoted further at § 1996. Also, see opinion of referee in 22 A. B. R. 843, 57 Pitts. L. J. 205.]

But even the expenses of a receiver in the state court may be charged against the fund of the secured creditor, if such fund benefited thereby.⁶⁹

In re Vulcan F'dy & Mach. Co., 24 A. B. R. 825, 180 Fed. 671 (C. C. A. Pa.): "Lienholders are, therefore, the virtual owners of the property pro tanto, and (as a general proposition) this substantial ownership is not to be disturbed without their consent. The Pennsylvania cases also regard the holders of liens as owners of a real, although an equitable, interest in the property, and their rights in that character are carefully guarded. Bowman's Appeal, 90 Penn. 178; Burkholder's Appeal, 94 Penn. 522; Wolf's Appeal, 106 Penn. 545 (where lien creditors of an assignor are spoken of as 'substantial owners of his real estate'). It is no doubt true that the Federal tribunals support the power of the District Court to sell a bankrupt's real estate discharged of liens—and to that extent the position of a lien is undoubtedly affected—but care is always taken to protect the liens by transferring them to the fund produced by the sale, and their virtual ownership of the property is thus effectively admitted. It is also true that in some cases certain expenses have been charged against lienholders, for example, the expense of selling the encumbered property, and such a charge may no doubt be warranted under some conditions. It would certainly be warranted if the lienholders came into the District Court (as they did in several reported cases) and asked that the sale might be made by that tribunal, for otherwise they would themselves be put to a similar expense in proceeding upon their liens in another forum. But where it is sought to charge a lienholder with the cost of preserving and administering the encumbered property, as distinguished from the cost of its sale, it becomes necessary to consider the particular situation with great care, paying due regard to the rights of those who are in equity part owners of the property, for they cannot be deprived of their valuable except in strict accordance with legal or equitable rules. Especially is this true when a lienholder stands upon his lawful rights, and does not assent, expressly or by necessary implication, to the acts for which he is afterwards asked to pay. To make such charges a prior lien upon the fund produced by a sale, in effect compels an owner to pay for what he has 'never ordered—may indeed have strenuously opposed—and, under the guise of protecting his interests, may perhaps impair them seriously. Bankruptcy proceedings take place in a court of equity, and it should always be remembered that holders of valid liens have a statutory right to preferred treatment. If the receiver or trustee has a reasonable belief that the property is worth substantially more than the liens, it may no doubt be his duty to preserve this equity for the general creditors. But—speaking generally—since such steps as may be taken for this purpose are in the interest of these creditors, the cost should be paid by them and not by the lienholders—whose debts, indeed, are often perfectly secure, and receive no benefit from such effort as may be made to turn the equity into cash. We do not attempt to lay down a general rule to cover all cases. This would obviously be impracticable, but we think it is safe to say that the holders of liens are ordinarily entitled to judge for themselves what their interests may require, and that these interests cannot be affected without their consent in the effort to benefit persons whose rights are inferior to their own. We agree with the appellants' counsel that there is a plain analogy between a situation like this and the case in which it has been held that mortgage creditors of a private corporation should not have their security displaced by receiver's certificates, unless, perhaps, under extraordinary circumstances."

Liddon & Bro. v. Smith, 14 A. B. R. 204, 135 Fed. 43 (C. C. A. Fla.): "It seems manifest to us that the services rendered by the attorney J. M. Calhoun, nominally for the bankrupt, had no legitimate connection with the preservation of the estate, and that under the conditions existing it would be most inequitable to allow his account for fees therefor, to take rank of the mortgagee's claim as a charge against the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property."

Nor for services performed by the trustee's attorney in behalf of general creditors in endeavoring to defeat liens, etc.;⁸¹ except that, where the fund actually is insufficient even to pay the lienholders, it is perhaps permissible to charge against the fund the services of the trustee's attorney in defeating improper claims for liens thereon.

Perhaps, In re Waterloo Organ Co., 18 A. B. R. 752, 154 Fed. 657 (C. C. A. N. Also compare, In re Claussen, 21 A. B. R. 34, 164 Fed. 300 (D. C. S. Car.), wherein mortgagee's attorney refused compensation for services rendered exclusively for mortgagee's benefit, but apparently would have been allowed for services for general benefit. Compare, In re Blanchard Shingle Co., 21 A. B. R. 142, 164 Fed. 311 (C. C. A. Wash.), where a mortgagee was refused his attorney's lien for instituting foreclosure before bankruptcy, though the fee was allowed as a general claim.

But compare perhaps a different rule where the mortgagee had applied for and been refused leave to start foreclosure suit. In re Holmes Lumber Co., 26 A. B. R. 119, 189 Fed. 178 (D. C. Ala.); although this distinction probably should not prevail, since it would be a question, rather, as to the actual services performed and the validity under state law of such a provision as against the usury laws.

In re Roche, 4 A. B. R. 369, 101 Fed. 956 (C. C. A. Tex.): "The fees, to become a charge against the debtor or his property, must mature according to the contract of the parties. It follows that if the attorney's fees in this case became payable only upon the foreclosure of the trust deed by suit in the usual form, as by bill in equity, or, according to the practice in Texas, by petition praying for a foreclosure, with all parties claiming adversely before the court, they would not be collectible in a proceeding where the trustee in bankruptcy had sold the property and distributed the proceeds, although the same end might have been attained in securing the payment of the debt of the mortgagee. In other words, although the one proceeding might have been the equivalent of the other, and accomplished the same purpose, still the attorney's fees could only be recoverable upon the happening of the very contingency as to which the parties had contracted."

But attorney's fees have been allowed to mortgagees in sales in bankruptcy where proper by state law as part of the lien contracted for and not merely for "foreclosure."⁸³

Thus, even for services in opposing the adjudication in bankruptcy of the debtor, in a case where there was a trustee in a mortgage given to secure bondholders, who contested the adjudication in the interest of the bondholders.⁸⁴

And the statutory lien of the plaintiff's attorney for fees on foreclosure of a mechanics' lien is to be recognized in bankruptcy, and the trustee may not make a settlement in disregard thereof.⁸⁵

It has been held that in general the expenses and costs chargeable against a particular fund should not exceed what would have been chargeable had foreclosure in the state court been had,⁸⁶ but certainly there can be no hard and fast rule to such effect, though economy of administration should continually be borne in mind in this particular as in every other particular in bankruptcy.

Receiver's certificates for expenses in the preservation of the property involved are also chargeable.⁸⁷

of the trustee,⁸⁹ which may be allowed in such sums as the court may deem right, but not to exceed the statutory rate of six per cent. on the first five hundred dollars, four per cent. on the next thousand, two per cent. on all over fifteen hundred dollars and less than ten thousand dollars and one per cent. on all above ten thousand dollars. And the trustee's commissions, according to the better practice, should not be allowed in excess of the compensation that would have been allowed a master in chancery had the sale been made by him under decree of the state court.⁹⁰ But the six per cent., etc., must not twice be computed, once on the first $500 of the special fund and again on the first $500 of the general fund.

Receiver's compensation for the care and preservation of the property sold is also entitled to priority as costs.⁹¹ By the Amendment of 1910 such compensation is to be by way of commissions.⁹² But the Amendment of 1910 is only declaratory of the law as it stood before with regard to the right to charge commissions of the referee, receiver and trustee out of the proceeds of sale.⁹³

Before the Amendment of 1910 there was a line of cases which denied commissions to the referee and trustee out of the fund until after the lien had been satisfied in full except where the lien was disputed or the lienholder himself had invoked the aid of the bankruptcy court;⁹⁴ but such ruling was to be criticised on the ground that it threw the peril of realizing upon encumbered property in bankruptcy (and most property in bankruptcy is encumbered) upon the trustee, virtually paralyzing his efforts and compelling him to perform services and to incur expenses at his own risk, even though he acted in the best faith. Such rule cannot be right in principle and necessarily must be unsound on analysis. The enunciation of the rule occurred usually in cases where there had been an abuse of discretion in ordering a sale clear and free of liens when there should have been ordered an abandonment or a sale subject to liens; but it is submitted that since that abuse of discretion was the real wrong perpetrated the correction should have been applied to such abuse—properly the order of sale should have been reviewed, or, perhaps, in extreme cases, the commissions of the referee or trustee, if in collusion, might be withheld for abuse of discretion and of the process of the court.

It was held in one case that the Amendment, however, is not applicable to cases where the property brings "largely less" than the concededly valid encumbrances, on the doctrine that such deficiency was itself prima facie proof that the bankruptcy court had not "rightfully exercised its jurisdiction to sell free from liens;"⁹⁵ but it would seem that the objection to such sale should have been made by the lienholder at the outset, when first summoned into court, and that his failure to object before the sale was itself rather prima facie proof, or at any rate an admission by the lienholder, that the sufficiency or insufficiency of the price likely to be obtained was so entirely unknown and unascertainable that it would be a proper exercise of the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction to order a sale. Manifestly the proper time to object to the exercise of the jurisdiction to sell free of liens is the time such a sale is ordered; and the fact that the underlying motive of the trustee was not to protect the property for lienholders but rather to enable creditors to get any possible surplus, is not the test of the propriety of the charge.⁹⁶

But he had no authority from the lienholders to spend any money on their behalf, and it is abundantly evident that he was solely considering the contingent interest of the general creditors, and was hoping to realize something from them. The experiment was to be for their benefit, and it is only just that they should pay for it. No doubt much of the money paid out by the trustee was of advantage to both mortgagees, but we do not see upon what ground these virtual owners can properly be asked to pay for what they did not authorize, expressly or by necessary implication. No doubt they would have been obliged to protect the property at their own expense if it had been abandoned by the trustee, but this situation did not arise and need not be considered."

But lienholders purchasing in the mortgaged property at foreclosure sale can not require that the rents collected therefrom by the trustee in the meantime be used in reimbursing him for taxes paid by him that are a lien at the time of purchase; In re Hollenfeltz, 2 A. Lienholder Bidder Charged More Expenses than Stipulated for in Order of Sale.—In one case a lienholder, second in priority who had bid in the property under an order of sale stipuis to be computed to date, and not merely to the time of the filing of the bankruptcy petition.⁹⁸

Coder v. Arts, 213 U. S. 223, 22 A. B. R. 1: "Nor do we think the circuit court of appeals erred in holding that, inasmuch as the estate was ample for that purpose, Arts was entitled to interest on his mortgage debt."

In re Torchia, 26 A. B. R. 188, 185 Fed. 576 (D. C. Pa.): "Ninth Question: 'Whether or not interest should be allowed on the various liens to the respective dates of sales, confirmations of sales, or to October 1, 1910.' The referee has assumed that October 1, 1910, would be the date when the payments would be made; but such date appears to have been arbitrarily selected and is not material to the ninth question. Interest is payable on the Kaufman mortgage to the date of payment of principal because the mortgage could not have been discharged by virtue of any of the Pennsylvania statutes above referred to. Interest is not payable upon the mechanics' liens or judgments to the date of payment of their principal sums, because they may be discharged by a judicial sale."

Nor merely to the time of the approval of the sale.⁹⁹

However, such rule only applies as to payments out of the fund covered by the lien. When the deficit is presented for allowance against the general estate for sharing in dividends, the amount of such deficit is to be arrived at by computing interest only to the date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition; otherwise, the mere existence of some security, however small, would produce inequality in the allowance of claims for sharing in dividends.

§ 1998. Trustee's Deed or Bill of Sale.—No form for a deed or bill of sale by the trustee has been prescribed. In general the deed should follow the analogy of assignee's, receiver's or administrator's deeds as prescribed by local statute or custom.¹

§ 1999. Remedies against Purchaser.—Where the purchaser defaults in payment there are several different remedies available, dependent on the facts of the case.

Among other remedies, the trustee may resell and charge the purchaser with the difference.²

The purchaser is chargeable with interest from the date of the confirmation of the sale until he makes payment.³

COSTS OF ADMINISTRATION, DISTRIBUTION AND CLOSING OF ESTATES.¹

1. For costs other than those of administration, see various subjects. In the orderly arrangement of the treatise, the subjects of the collection and sale of the assets belonging to general creditors and their separation from the property of third persons and from that of the bankrupt, having been discussed, naturally is reached, next in order, the subject of costs and expenses of administration and the distribution of the remainder in dividends to creditors.

§ 2001. Jurisdiction to Tax Costs.—Costs may be taxed by the bankruptcy court against parties and against estates.¹

1. Bankr. Act, § 2 (18): "Tax costs, render judgments therefor against the whenever they are allowed by law, and unsuccessful party, or the successful

But, unless there be some provision of the Bankruptcy Act, expressly or impliedly authorizing the charging of expenses against the estate, only those costs may be taxed against estates, under the authority of § 2 (18) of the Bankruptcy Act, which arise in proceedings in the administration of the estate.²

§ 2002. May Be Taxed by Referee.—They may be ordered paid by the referee, as to matters before him.³

§ 2003. May Be Taxed against Successful Party, "for Cause."—They may, for cause, be taxed against the successful party.⁴

Thus, they may be taxed against the bankrupt where the creditors have unsuccessfully prosecuted appeal from an order dismissing their specifications of objections to discharge.⁵

§ 2004. No Showing of "Cause" Requisite Where Taxed against Unsuccessful Party.—It is not necessary to show cause therefor where the costs are taxed against the unsuccessful party; as, for instance, where taxed against the unsuccessful claimant to property in the custody of the bankruptcy court.⁶ But there seems to be some question whether attorney's fees of the trustee may be taxed against an unsuccessful creditor.⁷

It would seem on principle, however, that an equitable portion of the trustee's attorney's fees might under some circumstances be taxed against the unsuccessful party; indeed, there are seldom any other "costs" that can be taxed except the expenses of the trustee, among which expenses may occur attorney's fees.^{7a}

party, for cause, or in part against each of the parties, and against estates, in proceedings in bankruptcy."

2. Compare (successful opposition by creditors to discharge, not charged against estate). In re Kyte, 26 A. B. R. 507, 189 Fed. 531 (D. C. Pa.). But it does not appear whether this case was decided before or after the amendment of 1910 and, in any event, the opposition was not made by the trustee, nor in his name nor was it authorized at a meeting of creditors. § 2006. Employment of Stenographer at Expense of Estate.—A stenographer may be employed when authorized by the court, on application of the trustee, and his compensation may be taxed against the estate, on general examinations of bankrupts and witnesses and on other proceedings, where not already included in costs adjudged in favor of a successful party against the trustee. Where taxed against the estate on general examinations of witnesses and in cases where the estate is not the unsuccessful party, the employment of the stenographer must have been authorized by the court on application of the trustee.⁹

In re Todd, 6 A. B. R. 88, 109 Fed. 265 (D. C. N. Y.): "The rule established by the late Mr. Justice Blatchford in this court, and ever since followed in regard to stenographer's fees, was that when not provided for by law, they could not be taxed in any cause, except upon a written stipulation between the attorneys. * * *

"The Bankruptcy Act of 1898 contains but a single provision authorizing the employment or payment of stenographers, namely; § 38a (5), which provides that upon the application of the trustee, the referee may authorize the employment of stenographers at the expense of the estate, at a compensation not to exceed ten cents per folio for reporting and transcribing the proceeding.

"The authority thus given to the referee, it will be noticed, can only be exercised upon the application of the trustee; the expense is in the first instance a charge against the estate, and it is not to exceed ten cents per folio.

"The above express provision and the absence of any other, prevent imposing any further charge for stenographer's fees, or the taxation of any other, except in pursuance of some stipulation made by the parties to the cause.

"In the present case there was no such stipulation; but as the stenographer's notes were rendered desirable and the application therefor was in consequence of the claimant's contesting demands, and the controversy has been adjudged against the latter, it is proper that this necessary expense to the estate should be taxed against the claimant, and it is therefore allowed to the extent of ten cents per folio, which is one-half of the bill rendered."

§ 2007. Compensation Not to Exceed Ten Cents per Folio for Taking and Transcribing.—Stenographer's fees, when taxable against the estate, are taxable at not to exceed ten cents per folio for taking and transcribing.¹⁰ Where the stenographer is not required to transcribe his notes, doubtless he may be allowed per diem compensation for taking the testimony.

It is said a different rule prevails where the examination occurs before adjudication, before a special commissioner or master in chancery.

In re Stark, 18 A. B. R. 467, 155 Fed. 694 (D. C. N. Y.): "It does not seem to the court that the provisions of § 38, subdivision 5, apply to hearings before

9. Bankr. Act, § 38 (a) (5): "Upon the application of the trustee during the examination of the bankrupts, or other proceedings, authorize the employment of stenographers at the expense of the estates at a compensation not to exceed ten cents per folio for reporting and transcribing the proceedings."

10. Bankr. Act, § 38 (a) (5); compare ante, § 1579; also see In re Todd, 6 A. B. R. 88, 109 Fed. 265 (D. C. N. Y.); In re Ellett Elec. Co., 28 A. B. R. 453, 196 Fed. 400 (D. C. N. Y.), quoted at § 1579.

a special commissioner. The meaning of this section would seem to be that a referee in bankruptcy may make use of the services of a stenographer, when the trustee considers that the testimony should be taken, and that in such case the rate is fixed, but this rate has nothing to do with the employment of a stenographer on isolated and unusual occasions, where at the request of the creditors or of the receiver, a special hearing is had before a special commissioner. The bankruptcy law gives the court power to appoint special masters or commissioners, to hold hearings in certain special cases enumerated in section 21a. If the hearing is not a statutory hearing before a referee in bankruptcy, the provisions of § 38, as to the employment of a stenographer by the referee in bankruptcy, would not apply."

§ 2008. Costs in Contesting Claims before Election of Trustee Not Taxable against Estate.—Costs in contesting claims before the election of a trustee, incurred in the effort to control the election, are not chargeable against the estate.¹¹

§ 2009. No Costs in Personam against Parties in Summary Proceedings, Not Personally Appearing.—While it is true that in plenary actions in the bankruptcy court under favor of the Amendment of 1903, or where a party has voluntarily entered appearance, costs may be taxed by judgment in personam against the party; yet, where such is not the case and the only jurisdiction of the court arises from its possession of the res and notice upon parties claiming interests therein—such parties not appearing in response thereto—costs may not be taxed, personally, against such parties;¹² although, of course, the proportionate compensation for care, preservation and administration may be taken out of any fund thus protected.

§ 2010. No Part of General Costs of Administration to Be Taken Out of Property Not Forming Part of Assets for Administration.—No part of the general costs of administration are to be taken out of property not forming part of the assets for administration, as, for instance, in general, none out of exempt property properly scheduled and claimed;¹³ although such costs may, if otherwise proper, be taxed against the bankrupt himself in personam, although all his property be exempt.¹⁴ Nor, in general, may they be taken out of property, no title to which nor right of possession of which is in the trustee, although cases may arise in which it would be equitable to tax the expenses of preservation and a proportionate part of the compensation of the officers of the court against the successful claimant.¹⁵

15. Compare, In re Gaskill, 12 A. B. R. 251, 130 Fed. 235 (D. C. Wash.), where the court permitted the deduction of a proportionate part of the expenses of the bankruptcy proceedings

Nor, in general, may the general costs of administration be charged against lienholders, though expenses of preservation of the particular property on which they hold their liens may, in proper cases, be so charged.¹⁶

§ 2011. Policy of Act, Strictest Economy.—The policy of the act is that of strictest economy in expenses and cost of administration.¹⁷

The greatest foe to the permanency of national bankruptcy laws in this country in the past seems to have been the opportunity they have apparently afforded for extravagance in administration. The framers of the present act repeatedly manifest in the words they have used, the utmost solicitude to guard against extravagance. The chief cause of the downfall of the act of 1867 was its extravagance. Estates were swallowed up in fees and expenses until finally the very name of bankruptcy law became a synonym for licensed plundering of creditors' estates, and its administration became odious in the eyes of the people.

In re Mercantile Co., 2 A. B. R. 420, 95 Fed. 123 (D. C. Mo.): "The history leading up to the adoption of the present Bankrupt Law shows that the great abuses under the preceding National Bankrupt Act, in the way of exorbitant fees, which largely consumed the assets of the bankrupt, whereby the ministerial officers grew rich upon the administration of the act, while the creditors starved, impelled Congress, in the adoption of the present Bankrupt Act, to reverse this practice, so that the Bankrupt Law should be so administered that the creditors should be the favorites of the courts, rather than the agents assisting the court in the preservation and distribution of bankrupt estates. The obvious policy of the present act, manifest throughout all its provisions respecting fees and commissions, is to reduce to the lowest minimum the expenses of administration. This is especially made manifest in the meagre fees allowed to clerks, referees, and trustees. Indeed, so inadequate is the compensation allowed to these officers that it is a matter of happy surprise to the courts that they have been able to secure the services of such competent persons to fill the places of referees and trustees. And, because of the meagre compensation allowed by the act to these officers, courts are exposed to the constant temptation to either read into the act some provision not found in its letter, or by the most liberal construction of doubtful or ambiguous terms to augment fees and commissions. This is a tendency, however, in my judgment, which it is the bounden duty of the court to resist. It is the duty of the court, from which it cannot honestly escape, in applying this statute, to give it such construction and such application as will carry out and effectuate the legislative upon the surrendering of a trust fund.

Compare, In re Cambridge, 14 A. B. R. 168, 136 Fed. 983 (D. C. Mass.), where the court construed the word "disbursements" used with reference to the compensation of receivers as comprehending the value of property returned in specie to claimants.

will. Any other action by the court is but an attempt to set up and substitute the notions and inclinations of the individual judge as to which would be a reasonable compensation for services under this law for that of the Legislature, whereas, as already suggested, the court can have no policy in conflict with that of the legislative scheme."

In re Nat'l Mercantile Agency, 11 A. B. R. 451 (Ref. N. Y.): "The dominant keynote of the Bankruptcy Law as enacted by Congress, is economical administration, so that the creditors may realize the largest possible dividends from estates administered in bankruptcy. * * *

"Complaint is being made in many directions that the expenses of preliminary administration of bankrupt estates are becoming unduly large and, in many cases, entirely disproportionate to the size of the estates called upon to bear such heavy burdens."

In re Daniels, 12 A. B. R. 450, 130 Fed. 597 (D. C. Iowa): "Much criticism was made of prior Bankruptcy Acts because of the large amount of fees and expenses incurred in the administration of the bankrupt estates. It was the manifest purpose of Congress that such criticism could not rightly be made of the present law, and it fixed the compensation of referees and other officers very low. They may be inadequate in some cases, but the court is powerless to increase them. By the amendment of February 5, 1903, it is expressly provided that the court shall not allow, under any form or guise whatever, any other or further compensation for services than that expressly authorized by the act."

In re Woodard, 2 A. B. R. 339, 691, 95 Fed. 956 (D. C. N. Car.): "One of the purposes of the Act of 1898 in establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy was to avoid what was the principal cause of the repeal of the Bankruptcy Act of 1867—excessive fees and great expenses."

In re Oppenheimer, 17 A. B. R. 60 (D. C. Pa.): "Economy is strictly enjoined by the well known policy of the Bankruptcy Act in the administration of bankrupt estates."

In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 10 A. B. R. 556, 123 Fed. 579 (D. C. S. C.): "It is a part of the history of the country that one of the causes which led to the repeal of the Bankruptcy Act of 1867 was the great abuse, under the former law, whereby the estates of bankrupts were consumed by the ministerial officers of the court in enormous costs and charges; and it was the clear intent of the present Bankrupt Law that they should be administered for the benefit of the creditors. This is manifest through all the provisions respecting fees and commissions. The compensation allowed to clerks, referees, and trustee is so meager that it is a matter of some surprise that the courts have been able to secure persons of any competency to administer the law."

In re Ketterer Mfg. Co., 19 A. B. R. 646, 156 Fed. 719 (D. C. Pa.): "Economy in the administration of estates is the policy of the present law, and is to be strictly enforced."

In re Allert, 23 A. B. R. 101, 173 Fed. 691 (D. C. N. Y.): "It should remain uppermost in the minds of litigants and attorneys practicing in the bankruptcy courts, that it is the policy of the Bankruptcy Act to administer estates with the strictest economy, to the end that fees, costs and charges should be reduced to the lowest minimum;" although in this case itself "extra" compensation was allowed the referee.

An example of the tendency towards extravagance of administration is afforded in the practice that has grown up in a few districts of appointing special masters at an increased expense to estates to perform various parts of the duties that the referee is presumed to perform as part of the duties for which he receives his fixed compensation;¹⁸ thus, for passing upon trustee's reports and for "advising" the trustee, etc., etc.;¹⁹ for auditing receivers' accounts and determining "reasonable" compensation;²⁰ for hearing a petition for an order upon the bankrupt to surrender assets in his possession;²¹ for considering liens, which, if the bankruptcy court had any right to consider at all, would have been because such consideration was part of the referee's duties;²² to a "special commissioner" for passing on priority of expense of administration where the assets were too small to pay them in full;²³ for determining the reasonableness of a prepayment of a bankrupt's attorney's fee under § 60 (d) and § 64 (b) (3);²⁴ for taking an accounting in order to determine the proper amount for which a proof of claim should be allowed;²⁵ for determining the validity of an unfiled chattel mortgage upon property in the possession of the receiver in bankruptcy and sold by him evidently after the adjudication of bankruptcy.²⁶

The referee must not receive extra allowance, even with the consent of counsel.²⁷ He may not have extra allowance for "investigating specific liens," questions relating to which come up in the usual and ordinary course of the administration of the estate.²⁸ No per diem may be allowed to referees for sitting in the examination of the bankrupt, nor for presiding at the first meeting of creditors.²⁹

But the referee may be allowed additional compensation while acting as special master in matters expressly restricted to the judge.³⁰

Before the amendment of 1903, trustees were sometimes allowed what was termed "extra compensation" where, by consent, property covered with liens was sold free and clear.³¹ This is now regulated by the Amendment of 1910 to Bankr. Act, § 48. Likewise, similar extra compensation was allowed, in some instances, to the referee where an application was made outside the ordinary scope of the referee's duties.³²

§ 2012. Preliminary Deposits for Referee, Clerk and Trustee.—Consideration of the original $15.00 for the referee's fee, $10.00 for the clerk's fee and $5.00 for the trustee's fee, required to be deposited by litigants at the time of instituting the bankruptcy proceedings, has been previously had.³³

These preliminary deposits do not come up for "allowance" at all. They are fixed by statute and must be paid at the beginning—unless a poverty affidavit is filed, and even in that event the prospective bankrupt, as previously noted, usually is obliged to pass a rigid examination as to his absolute inability to make the deposit before being permitted to file his bankruptcy petition without the deposit.

We are not concerned at this time with these preliminary deposits of filing fees for the referee, clerk and trustee, nor with the expenses and commissions of the referee and trustee incurred in the marshaling of liens and selling of property free from liens, which, as previously noted, are to be taxed in each instance against the particular fund itself that has been derived from the sale of the special property involved. The making of the preliminary deposit, and the paying of the expenses of the selling of the property free from liens, are supposed already to have taken place and in the orderly development of the subject we are concerned now only with the distribution of the general estate remaining in the hands of the trustee and the costs and expenses chargeable against it.

The statute, in § 64, seeks to lay down the order of priority in the distribution of bankrupt estates; but its provisions are not altogether well defined nor free from ambiguity.

DIVISION 1.

COST OF PRESERVATION OF ESTATE SUBSEQUENT TO FILING OF PETITION.

§ 2013. First "Priority"—"Actual and Necessary Cost of Preserving Estate Subsequent to Filing Petition."—The first class in the statutory order of priority is the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate after the petition is filed.³⁴

³¹. In re Mammoth Pine Lumber Co., 8 A. B. R. 651, 116 Fed. 731 (D. C. Ark.). This would not have been "extra" compensation under the ruling in In re Mulhauser, 9 A. B. R. 80 (D. C. Ohio).

§ 2014. What Included in Term.—Nowhere is it clearly expressed what is included within this class. Probably it does not refer to the expenses of the receiver or trustee in administering the estate, for such expense would more properly be denominated costs of administration and so come under class three.³⁵

More likely it refers rather to cases where some person, as a clerk of the bankrupt or a creditor, has been taking care of the property before any trustee or receiver has been appointed and when the estate was totally helpless and unprotected; or to cases where the bankrupt himself has been taking care of the property meanwhile;³⁶ or to cases where some officer of a state court, as a receiver, assignee or trustee, has been permitted to retain custody of the property after the filing of the petition;³⁷ or where a receiver, before adjudication in involuntary bankruptcy, has incurred or paid extraordinary obligations in preserving the values of the property in his charge, not to be termed strictly, expenses. Thus, where the receiver has paid for the renewal of a hotel license about to expire, which was the most valuable asset of the estate and which the bankrupt himself was unable to pay.³⁸ Perhaps it refers to cases where a receiver or trustee has refused to take certain steps deemed necessary for the best interests of the estate and some creditor has, on that refusal, himself gone ahead and taken the needful steps.³⁹

35. See post, § 2033; also see In re Pickhardt, 29 A. B. R. 524, 198 Fed. 879 (D. C. Wis.). But see In re Gerson, 1 A. B. R. 251 (Ref. Obiter, Sellers v. Bell, 2 A. B. R. 543, 94 Fed. 801 (C. C. A. Ala.): "It is to be observed that in ordinary cases, whether in involuntary or in voluntary bankruptcy, the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to the filing of the petition and up to the qualification of the trustee will usually, and always should where he is exercising good faith, devolve upon the bankrupt himself, not at his charge and expense, but as a charge of the first rank against the estate which he is required or has volunteered to surrender."

Instance where expenses and compensation of clerk refused as being unnecessary. In re Nat'l Mercantile Agency, 11 A. B. R. 451 (Ref. N. Y.). In this case it was held, that the officers and employees of a bankrupt company against which a petition in bankruptcy is filed have no right to halt the proceedings in a vain attempt to save the company and then impose the expenses of such an attempt upon the estate as a necessary cost of preserving it subsequent to the filing of the petition.

Being away from the state, and his counsel declining to act without remuneration, the counsel

Compare, In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 10 A. B. R. 557, 123 Fed. 579 (D. C. S. C.): "Certain creditors, of their own volition, have chosen to contest the mortgage, and their attorney, like any other who takes a desperate case with the expectation of a fee contingent upon the result, to be large if successful, must abide the result; or the service may be likened to that in salvage cases in the admiralty, where salvors receive no remuneration if nothing is salvaged, however arduous their efforts and however great be their expenditures of money and time. The common reward of those who fight for lost causes is the consciousness of duty done. The Supreme Court of the United States in Hobbs v. McLean, 117 U. S. 582, 29 L. Ed. 940, has stated the principle which governs: 'When many persons have a common interest in a trust property or fund, and one of them for the benefit of all, and at his own cost and expense, brings a suit for its preservation or administration, the court of equity in which the suit is brought will order that the plaintiff be reimbursed his outlay from the property of the trust, or by proportional contribution from those who accept the benefits of his efforts. * * * But where one brings adversary proceedings to take possession of trust property from those entitled to it, in order that he may distribute it to those who claim adversely, and fails in his purpose, it has never been held in any case brought to our notice that such person had any right to demand reimbursement of his expenses out of the trust fund, or contribution from those whose property he sought to misappropriate.'"

It may include the compensation and expenses (including attorney's fees) of a mortgagee of a chattel mortgage, executed two days before the filing of the bankruptcy petition and made for the benefit of all creditors who would assent thereto within a stated period, where the mortgagee remains in possession.⁴⁰

The bankruptcy court is itself to determine what the reasonable and necessary expense of the preservation will amount to;⁴¹ and it is not to in this case, using the name of one of their clients. A. DeMarce, resisted the claim of O'Dwyer & Ahern and successfully defeated it, thus increasing the assets of the estate for the benefit of all the creditors to the extent of about $1,000. The court is somewhat familiar with the services rendered in this case, and thinks the allowance made by the referee is not exorbitant. This allowance is made and goes as a part of the expenses of the administration of the estate, and is allowed under the general equity powers of the Bankrupt Court. It seems to me that, on well-recognized equitable principles an attorney who, under the circumstances of this case, intervened and successfully resisted an unjust claim, ought to be paid by the estate which was benefited by his services. The injustice of requiring the intervening creditor to pay the attorney's fee is manifest. His distributive share of the funds preserved to the estate would not pay one-third of the attorney's fee if he were required to pay for the services.

"It is inequitable and unjust to permit the other creditors to avail themselves of his services, accompanied by the necessary risk, involving costs, etc., and then share in the estate without contributing to the payment of the attorney who did the work."

Obiter, In re Burke, 6 A. B. R. 502 (Ref. Ohio). Also, see In re Groves, 2 N. B. N. & R. 466 (Ref. Ohio), where the trustee refused to make application to have a sale set aside for stifling of competition, and certain creditors then made the application themselves, the result of which was that the sale which was for $9,000 was set aside and on resale the property brought $22,000!!! In that case the creditors who brought the additional fund into court were held entitled to reimbursement for their expenses in so doing, as the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to the filing of the petition.

be controlled by what has been actually expended, but may re-examine the actual expenditure and allow less.

The bankruptcy court should not, where a sheriff has remained in possession, after adjudication, under an attachment the lien of which has been dissolved by the adjudication, allow more for the necessary expense of the preservation than would have been the expense had the property been turned back to the bankrupt.⁴² But a different rule would probably prevail in cases where he had remained in possession after the filing of an involuntary petition and before adjudication, for in such a case it might be improper to turn the property back.⁴³

Even expenses of a receiver in the state court, preserving the property before bankruptcy, may be assessed against secured creditors, where the secured creditors' fund was benefited.⁴⁴

Petitioning creditors doubtless may also be allowed expenses for the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate.⁴⁵

Of course attachment costs incurred before the filing of the bankruptcy petition are not included within this priority, though incurred in the preservation of the assets; but they may be allowed priority under § 64 (b) (5) if the state law assigns them priority in the administration of insolvent estates in general.⁴⁶

DIVISION 2.

REIMBURSING PETITIONING CREDITORS FOR THEIR FILING FEES AND EXPENSE OF RECOVERING PROPERTY CONCEALED OR FRAUDULENTLY TRANSFERRED BY BANKRUPT.

§ 2015. Second "Priority"—Reimbursement of Petitioning Creditors, and of Creditors Recovering Concealed Assets.—The second class in the statutory order of priority is the reimbursement of the petitioning creditors of their deposit of filing fees,⁴⁷ and the reimbursement of creditors of their reasonable expenses in recovering, for the benefit of all creditors, property concealed or transferred by the bankrupt.⁴⁸

Obiter, Sellers v. Bell, 2 A. B. R. 543, 94 Fed. 801 (C. C. A. Ala.): "The charge of the second rank is the filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases. The reason for restricting this to fees paid by creditors in involuntary ⁴⁷. Bankr. Act, § 64 (b) (2).

Gen. Ord. XXXIV: "In cases of involuntary bankruptcy, when the debtor resists an adjudication, and the court, after hearing, adjudges the debtor a bankrupt, the petitioning creditor shall recover, and be paid out of the estate, the same costs that are allowed to a party recovering in a suit in equity; and if the petition is dismissed, the debtor shall recover like costs against the petitioner."

⁴⁸. Bankr. Act, § 64 (b) (2).

cases is obvious, because where such fees are paid in voluntary cases they may be paid by the bankrupt himself out of the estate which he has to surrender, and therefore no account need be taken of them."

Of course, creditors who are petitioning creditors may be allowed, also, for their actual and necessary expenses incurred in the preservation of the estate.⁴⁹

§ 2016. Reimbursement of Creditors Recovering Concealed Assets, etc.—Where property of the bankrupt, transferred or concealed by the bankrupt either before or after the filing of the petition, has been recovered for the benefit of the estate of the bankrupt, by the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors, such creditors are entitled to reimbursement of the reasonable expenses of such recovery.⁵⁰

In re Felson, 15 A. B. R. 188, 139 Fed. 275 (D. C. N. Y.): "But if the trustee should not prosecute such an inquiry and employ necessary counsel, one or more creditors, may; and if property transferred or concealed by the bankrupt is, under such circumstances, 'recovered for the benefit of the estate of the bankrupt by the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors,' 'the reasonable expenses of such recovery' are to be allowed and paid, and such reasonable expenses are to be regarded as a debt having priority."

And, doubtless, in such cases the court of bankruptcy would probably have authority to make such reimbursement by virtue of its general equity powers, regardless of the express permission of the statute.^{50a}

The allowance for expenses in employing counsel should be made to the creditors, and not to the attorney himself, since the attorney not having an independent standing must work out his rights through the creditors.⁵¹

§ 2017. Trustee to Be Given First Opportunity.—Probably this amendment would not permit the reimbursement of creditors of their expenses incurred after the adjudication and the appointment of a trustee, in thus recovering property transferred or concealed by the bankrupt, unless they had first applied to the trustee to take the steps required and had been met by a refusal. Certainly, if there be a trustee in charge of the estate, he should be given the first opportunity to take the necessary steps, especially so when we bear in mind that, after the election of a trustee, all action

Impliedly, In re Felson, 15 A. B. R. 189, 139 Fed. 275 (D. C. N. Y.): "It will not do, even under the provisions of subdivision 'b' of § 64, as amended, to permit creditors generally to come with their attorneys to the aid of the trustee seeking to recover property belonging to the estate in bankruptcy of the bankrupt, and concealed by him in violation of § 29 of the Act * * * and have an allowance for their expenses or attorney's charges out of the estate. The amendment gives no such license as this, and clearly such a course was not permissible prior to the amendment. * * *

"As already stated, allowances to general creditors, one or more, who employ and pay counsel and incur and pay other expenses in doing things to benefit and increase the estate, and which have that effect, cannot be made unless the trustee has not been appointed at the time it is done, or, having been appointed, he has neglected or refused to act in the matter. Even in such case, unless there be an emergency demanding immediate action, the order and direction of the court should be first sought."

§ 2018. Disallowance of Unjust Claims before Election of Trustee.—This amendment probably would not fairly apply to a resistance of the allowance of an unjust claim to share in dividends or to vote, even where the trustee has refused to act, unless in some way such claim be connected with a "recovery" of property "transferred" or "concealed" by the bankrupt.⁵³ It is somewhat sophistical to say that the defeating of an unjust claim is a "recovery" of property because of its effect in increasing the dividends of other creditors—much less that it is a recovery of property "transferred" or "concealed" by the bankrupt.^{53a}

In re Medina Quarry Co., 27 A. B. R. 466, 191 Fed. 815 (C. C. A. N. Y., reversing S. C., 25 A. B. R. 405, 182 Fed. 815, D. C. N. But it cannot be said that these were services which resulted in the recovery of any property, within the meaning of the statute, or which created any fund which would justify allowances under general equity powers."

In re Worth, 12 A. B. R. 572, 130 Fed. 927 (D. C. Iowa): "In the matter of costs, the contest was wholly between creditors of the estate, and, while it is claimed in behalf of the objecting creditors that they were waging it in the interest of the estate, it clearly appears that it was in fact waged for the purpose of controlling the election of the trustee. No reason appears why the estate should bear the cost of such a contest."

Nevertheless, a creditor opposing the allowance of an unjust claim might be allowed to use the trustee's name if the trustee refuses to act, and thus, if successful, might have his attorneys' fees charged against the estate as part of the trustee's expenses.⁵⁴

Even before the amendment of 1903 allowing reimbursement to creditors, in certain instances creditors were allowed their expenses in recovering assets for the benefit of the estate where there was no receiver, marshal nor trustee yet in charge, or where such officers had refused to act, the allowance being based upon the principle that such expenses were an equitable lien on the fund.⁵⁵

Even before the amendment of 1903, and in cases where creditors had been simply acting for themselves, they have been held entitled to have their expenses declared a lien upon the fund thus seized by them.⁵⁶

In re Lesser Bros., 5 A. B. R. 320, 180 Fed. 201 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "In this case, the appellants have, by a litigation which lasted about three and one-fourth years and went through two appellate courts, obtained, without aid from any other creditor, a fund of $27,000 for the benefit of all the creditors from fraudulent insolvents, who, at the last moment went into bankruptcy, apparently to prevent the appellants from obtaining a substantial benefit from the protracted and expensive litigation. The outcome, so far as the appellants are concerned, seems inequitable. We think that the order should be so modified as to permit them to become parties in the proceedings by the trustee in bankruptcy in the State court, and present to that court such consideration and facts as may bear upon an application for an allowance to them from the fund, in the nature of a reasonable compensation for their costs, expenses and disbursements in the litigation which resulted in the defeat of the fraudulent attempts of the bankrupts, in wrestling the fund from the hands of receivers applied for in fraud of creditors and in its preservation for their actual benefit." This case was reversed by the Supreme Court sub nom. Metcalf v. Barker, 9 A. B. R. 36, 187 U. S. 165, but upon the ground that the lien was not obtained within the four months, so its authority upon the point in question is not affected.

Also, undoubtedly, where under § 67 (f) a lien obtained by legal proceedings, dissolved by the adjudication, is preserved for the benefit of all creditors, the costs of court would also be entitled to payment in full as part of the lien upon the fund;⁵⁷ also, perhaps, under § 64 (b) (5), where such costs have been granted priority under state law in cases of subsequent equitable sequestrations of property.⁵⁸

The clause added by the amendment of 1903 to § 64 (b) (2) undoubtedly suggests a proper course to be pursued by creditors after the filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, and before adjudication, where no receiver is appointed and necessity exists for steps to be taken to recover property transferred or concealed either before or after the filing of the petition. In such cases no provisional seizure of the property could be had by the marshal or a receiver, under § 69 and § 3 (e), for such seizure is not permissible except as to property in the hands of the bankrupt or his agent and is forbidden where the property is in the hands of an adverse claimant such as an alleged fraudulent transferee; it being further questionable whether a receiver has the power to institute suits for such recovery prior to adjudication. In such a situation, if creditors are to be protected before adjudication, it is proper for them to institute proceedings in the state courts to set aside the alleged fraudulent transfer and to recover the property, whereupon, if subsequently the debtor be adjudged bankrupt, their costs and expenses would be entitled to priority, for it would be through their "efforts" that the property would finally have been recovered for the benefit of all.

But it has been held proper, probably under this section, to reimburse attaching creditors for their attorney's fees and other expenses incurred in levying attachments on the debtor's property within four months of bankruptcy for their own benefit, the lien of the attachments being void as to the creditors in bankruptcy, but being preserved for the benefit of the estate, since thereby an unfiled or unrecorded instrument was rendered void.⁵⁹ But there would seem to be no more reason for reimbursing such levying creditors than for reimbursing any other creditors who had sought to gain an advantage by levying but had failed.

DIVISION 3.

"COSTS OF ADMINISTRATION;" REFEREE'S, TRUSTEE'S AND RECEIVER'S EXPENSES AND COMPENSATION; ATTORNEYS' FEES; APPRAISERS' AND WITNESS' FEES, ETC.

§ 2019. Third Priority—"Costs of Administration."—The classification of priorities given in § 64 of the act is somewhat misleading, since that section perhaps would imply that the costs of the preservation of the estate subsequent to the filing of the petition and the filing fees of the petitioning creditors already provided for in classes one and two are not also part of the "costs of administration."⁶⁰

In this third class undoubtedly come the receiver's and trustee's expenses, including attorneys' fees; also, of course, the allowance of compensation to appraisers; the attorney's fees for the bankrupt and for the petitioning creditors; and the fees and mileage of witnesses and of the bankrupt. Also in this class undoubtedly comes the referee's reimbursement of his expenses in sending and publishing notices and for office rent, clerk hire, etc.

In fact this third class comprehends almost all the costs and expenses, and there is nothing prior to it except the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate, and the filing fees of petitioning creditors, and also the reimbursement of creditors who have brought funds into the estate, whose reimbursement of course always is more than counterbalanced by the fund recovered, so the nominal precedence is never likely to occasion conflict, the rights of such creditors being in the nature of a lien upon the fund brought into the court, rather than a claim for priority of payment.

§ 2020. Equity Rules to Govern Order of Precedence in Class Three.—As to the priority of the different items of costs and expenses of this class three among themselves, no rule is laid down by the statute itself, so the ordinary equity rules are to be appealed to for guidance.⁶¹

§ 2021. Indemnifying Court Officers and Advancing Moneys for Expenses.—The referee, clerk and marshal are authorized to require indemnity for expenses from the person in whose behalf the duty is to be performed.⁶²

§ 2022. Reimbursement of Expenses Advanced.—The person so indemnifying is entitled to reimbursement of the amounts so advanced, as part of the cost of administration.⁶³

Even as to discharge expenses, the bankrupt is entitled to reimbursement for amounts advanced by him to pay the expense of issuing, mailing and publishing notices to creditors of his application for discharge.⁶⁴

§ 2023. No Reimbursement of Original Deposit Except to Petitioning Creditors.—Such right to reimbursement, however, does not apply to the thirty dollars preliminary deposit of fees for the referee, clerk and trustee, except to those deposited by petitioning creditors, but applies only to moneys advanced to pay expenses. Such preliminary deposits, where they are made by the bankrupt himself, would belong to the estate as part of the bankrupt's property.

In re Matthews, 3 A. B. R. 265, 97 Fed. 772 (D. C. Iowa): "The provisions of General Order No. 10 do not apply to the deposit of $25, which the clerk, under § 51 of the Bankrupt Act, [before the Amendment of 1903 increased it to $30.] is required to collect from the bankrupt when he files his petition. The money thus collected by the clerk is intended to cover the statutory fees to be paid to the clerk, referee, and trustee as compensation for their services; and being paid to the clerk when the petition is filed, the amount of the estate passing to the trustee is lessened by that sum, and, if this amount should be now returned to the bankrupt, he would be receiving part of his estate as it belonged to him before he filed his petition, which estate by the adjudication became in fact the property of the creditors. The provisions of General Order No. 10 are intended to cover money which the bankrupt or some third party may be called upon to furnish after the initiation of the proceedings in order to meet expenses incurred by the officer for the purposes specially recited in the order, which purposes do not include the money deposited with the clerk to meet the fees (not expenses) of the clerk, referee and trustee. Money thus advanced, if the bankrupt has met the requirements of the law with respect to turning over his estate to his creditors, is deemed to have been obtained from sources other than the estate belonging to the creditors, and therefore provision is made for its repayment out of the estate. The purpose of the order is to protect the officers from personal loss in the performance of their duties under the Bankrupt Act, but it is not the intent of the order that the bankrupt shall be repaid the money which presumably he took out of his estate to pay the fees of officers before he filed his petition in bankruptcy."

§ 2024. Nor of Attorney's Fees Paid by Bankrupt in Advance.—A bankrupt, of course, is not entitled to reimbursement of attorney's fees paid by him in advance of filing the petition.

In re Matthews, 3 A. B. R. 265, 97 Fed. 772 (D. C. Iowa): "These services have been paid for, however, and the payment was made out of the estate of the bankrupt; so that, in effect, the creditors have already made good the amount. If the bankrupt had not paid this sum to his attorney, it would have formed part of his estate, which he would have been in duty bound to transfer to his trustee."

§ 2025. No Reimbursement of Bankrupt for Care of Exempt Property.—A bankrupt is not entitled to reimbursement of his expenses in taking care of exempt property pending its being set off to him.⁶⁵ On the contrary the rent and storage charges for the care of exempt property, pending its being set apart to the bankrupt, are properly chargeable against the bankrupt.⁶⁶

§ 2026. Reimbursement to Follow Order of Priority of Expenses Themselves.—In reimbursing the bankrupt or a creditor, under rule ten of the Supreme Court's General Orders, for money advanced to defray the expenses of the referee, marshal or clerk, such reimbursement has the same priority that the expenses themselves would have had, the one making the advancement being subrogated to the rights of the officer whose expenses are advanced.⁶⁷

§ 2027. Probable Order of Priority.—Undoubtedly, the expenses of the referee, receiver and trustee would in equity have precedence over all other costs of administration; ^{67a} and probably the order of priority in this class three—Costs of Administration—would be somewhat as follows:

First, referee's expenses for mailing and publishing notices and for office rent and clerk hire, and for traveling, etc.

Second, receiver's and trustee's expenses, including attorneys' fees and rent, insurance, watchman, stenographers' fees,⁶⁸ and other expenses, as various as the different cases themselves are variant.

Third, bankrupt's attorney's fees and the attorney's fees and other expenses of the petitioning creditors.

Fourth, appraisers' fees.

Sixth, commissions and compensation, other than the deposit of filing fees already considered, for the referee, receiver and trustee.

SUBDIVISION "A."

REFEREE'S EXPENSES.

§ 2028. Referee's Expenses.—The referee is entitled to reimbursement of his expenses, and may require indemnity therefor.⁶⁹

He is entitled to require indemnity for his expenses, by the Supreme Court's General Order No. X. Were he not entitled to indemnity, it would yet doubtless be the law, from the necessities of the case, that his expenses would come first, even though not mentioned first in the statutory order of priority; for his expenses are the expenses of the maintenance of the court itself, and the expenses of the government in thus protecting the rights of parties in a particular fund or property is to be considered a first lien upon the fund or property, ahead of all liens thereon created by the parties themselves, as well as ahead of the lien of the government thereon for taxes for general purposes.

§ 2029. "Expenses" Not Covered by Statutory Compensation of Referee, Receiver and Trustee.—The limitation of the referee's, receiver's and trustee's compensation so carefully guarded in § 72 of the act in the following words: "That neither the referee, receiver, marshal, nor trustee shall in any form or guise receive, nor shall the court allow him, any other or further compensation for his services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in this act," does not prevent the referee, receiver nor trustee from being reimbursed for expenses.⁷⁰

70. Bankr. Act, § 62 (a): "The actual and necessary expenses incurred by officers in the administration of estates shall, except where other provisions are made for their payment, be reported in detail under oath, and examined and approved or disapproved by the court. If approved they shall be paid or allowed out of the estates in which they were incurred."

Rule XXXV of the Supreme Court's General Orders: "2. The compensation of referees, prescribed by the act, shall be in full compensation for all services § 2030. What Are Proper Expenses of Referee.—The referee's expenses proper for reimbursement as part of the costs of administration are, in general, those for mailing notices to creditors and publishing notices in the newspaper of the bankrupt's adjudication and of his application for discharge; for necessary stationery, printing, office rent and supplies and clerk hire; and traveling expenses and other similar expenses that are necessary.

Thus, the referee's expenses for the publication of notice of the application for discharge, for stationery, etc., are properly chargeable against the estate.⁷¹ And the referee may be allowed, by special order of the judge, his traveling and hotel expenses and amounts paid stenographers, when a detailed account thereof, verified by his oath that they were necessarily and actually incurred, is returned to the bankruptcy court with the proper vouchers, when procurable, as provided by the general orders in bankruptcy.⁷²

But he is not to be given an extra allowance as compensation for his services merely because they were performed away from home:⁷³ he is limited to his statutory compensation. Nor should he be allowed the expenses of a clerk away from home unless the necessity therefor is shown by special circumstances.⁷⁴

The referee may be allowed clerk hire, where reasonably necessary in the discharge of his duties.⁷⁵

In re Tebo, 4 A. B. R. 235, 101 Fed. 419 (D. C. W. Va.): "In regard to the allowance of clerk hire, the court is of the opinion that no referee can, without performed by them under the act, or under these general orders; but shall not include expenses necessarily incurred by them in publishing or mailing notices, in traveling, or in perpetuating testimony, or other expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of their duties under the act and allowed by special order of the judge.

"3. The compensation allowed to trustee under this Act, etc., etc."

Rule X of the Supreme Court's General Orders: "Before incurring any expense in publishing or mailing notices, or in traveling, or in procuring attendance of witnesses, or in perpetuating testimony, the clerk, marshal or referee may require, from the bankrupt or other person in whose behalf the duty is to be performed, indemnity for such expense. Money advanced for this purpose by the bankrupt or other person shall be repaid him out of the estate as part of the cost of administering the same."

75. Contra, In re Carolina Cooperage Co., 3 A. B. R. 154, 96 Fed. 604 (D. C. N. Car.): This case lays down too broad a rule. Instead of limiting the reimbursement for clerical assistance to cases where it is necessary, the court broadly prohibits it altogether. Evidently the court had not in mind the cases of estates where hundreds of notices are to be sent and where hundreds of claims come pouring in at the first meeting, etc. In such cases to compel the referee to do all the work himself would be an absurdity. The opinion does not lay down safe law.

the aid of the clerk or such other officer as he may require, discharge his public duties. This is a matter largely within the discretion of the referee, which discretion, if abused, would justify the court in removing him. While Bankrupt Act, § 64b, par. 3, does not mention clerk hire as being embraced in the costs of administration, yet the paragraph does not forbid it, and this court is of the opinion that it is a necessary incident to the referee in the due administration of his office, as he is, in fact, the judge of the bankrupt court."

§ 2031. No Reimbursement Where Expenses Not Required by Act or Rules.—The referee is not entitled to reimbursement from the estate of his expenses incurred in mailing notices to creditors that are not required by law to be mailed. Thus, he is not entitled to reimbursement for mailing notices to all creditors of the re-examination of a creditor's claim, although properly entitled to reimbursement for the sending of the notice to the creditor himself. Nor is he entitled to reimbursement for notices of protests against the confirmation of a sale;⁷⁶ nor for making copies of the petition for discharge;⁷⁷ nor for stenographer's fees, unless by stipulation of parties, or where employed upon application of the trustee.⁷⁸

§ 2032. Method of Apportioning Expenses.—In order to meet the difficulty of estimating for each case the proportion of expenses for such case, the district courts have laid down certain rules which roughly apportion these expenses. Thus, in several districts, ten cents for each notice sent to creditors is the rule, this charge being estimated to about cover the actual expenses of the referee for office rent, clerk hire, publishing notices in the newspapers, etc., etc.

This ten cents per notice is not chargeable as a fee, but as a means of covering estimated expenses.⁷⁹

RECEIVER'S AND TRUSTEE'S EXPENSES.

§ 2033. Expenses of Receivers and Trustees.—Of course the expenses of receivers and trustees are bound to be various.⁸⁰

They are as varied as are the natures of the different businesses that happen to get into bankruptcy. Thus, there is likely to be rent,⁸¹ expenses of conducting the business, insurance,⁸² watchman's hire, clerk hire, appraisers' fees,⁸³ expense of litigation; attorneys' fees; etc.

^{83.} See ante, § 1930½, note.

It has been said that it primarily rests upon the receiver or trustee to perform the duties personally and that only in instances where he cannot reasonably do so may he get assistance from others.⁸⁴

In re Pickhardt, 29 A. B. R. 524, 198 Fed. 879 (D. C. Wis.): "A receiver or trustee in bankruptcy, whatever other duties may be cast upon him, is certainly the legal and actual custodian of the property which is the subject of the proceeding; and, under the rule of this court (bankruptcy rule No. 3), a receiver, unless otherwise ordered, can 'act only as custodian to care for the property (and have the same insured) for delivery to the trustee.' It is rightly presumed that the duty to so act, as every other duty, must, in the first instance, be performed by the receiver or the trustee personally, as an incident to or burden of the office, and in consideration of whatever compensation may be allowed. The right to assistance, at the cost of the property in custody, in addition to such compensation, must arise out of circumstances or conditions disclosing a burden beyond the reasonable possibility of performance by the single individual charged therewith. Such situations are found when the property is of great bulk, situated in different localities, or where, in its care and preservation, service of a special or unusual character is required."

A receiver whose negligence causes unnecessary expense to the estate may not only be denied his commissions, but he may also be charged with such expense.⁸⁵

In re Tisch, 29 A. B. R. 339, 202 Fed. 1018 (D. C. N. Y.): "I concur with the referee in his finding that the receiver's attorneys were guilty of gross neglect of duty. In my opinion the receiver was guilty of similar neglect, and should be allowed no commissions. I think also that the receiver should be charged with the custodian's fees. There was no need of custodians. The bankrupt's assets consisted of a small lot of jewelry worth about $1,200, a large safe and some show cases. The assets might have been put in the safe and the safe locked; or if, for any reason, it was deemed objectionable to leave them in the safe, they could have been stored at slight expense. Apparently the custodian's services consisted in watching the safe and the show cases, but there could not have been much danger of burglars stealing them. If the custodians have rendered the service they should be paid by the trustee, but the amounts paid should be charged to the receiver. Some receivers seem to suppose that custodians are to be employed in every case. They are not required in most cases. If a receiver takes the same care of the assets that a prudent man takes of his own property, that is ordinarily enough. I have felt considerable doubt whether the receiver should not be charged with a part of the rent. Receivers should allow bankrupts only a reasonable time in which to try to effect a settlement or a composition. Usually a month is enough."

§ 2034. Rent for Use and Occupation.—Receivers and trustees in bankruptcy are entitled to occupy the premises occupied by the bankrupt at the time of bankruptcy for a reasonable time, sufficient not only for the safe and proper removal of the assets therefrom, but also for the prevention of loss of value or deterioration where sale on the premises is desirable.⁸⁶ And this is so even though the lease be broken and forfeited, and right of re-entry has become fixed at law, provided adequate compensation for use and occupation can be made.

In re Chambers, Calder & Co., 3 A. B. R. 537, 98 Fed. 865 (D. C. R. I.): "Execution in ejection would, in the present case, interfere with the possession of this court, and on that ground alone might be enjoined. It is furthermore apparent that it would most seriously embarrass this court, in the administration of the bankrupt's estate, and result in unnecessary loss to the creditors. There is trustworthy and undisputed evidence that the stock of goods on the leased premises is such that their proper packing and safe removal from the premises cannot be accomplished in much, if any, less than four weeks. A tenant, even though the conditions of his lease is broken by nonpayment, has such legal right of ingress and egress as is necessary for the removal of personal property. There could be little practical value to the landlord in the possession of the premises during this time, and there is no suggestion of any facts indicating that pecuniary compensation will not be entirely adequate for a reasonable delay in the surrender of the premises."

But the landlord is entitled to pay for the use and occupation of the premises,⁸⁷ such being by way of an expense of the administration and not by way of a "priority."⁸⁸

§ 2035. Whether Computed at Lease Rate.—Receivers and trustees occupying premises held by the bankrupt under lease are, in general, bound to pay for the use and occupation at the rate prescribed by the lease for rent;⁸⁹ until adjudication in bankruptcy, at any rate;⁹⁰ although it is

Restraining Action in Personam by Landlord against Trustee.—A landlord has been restrained from prosecuting an independent suit in personam for trespass against the trustee where, as the bankruptcy court found, he was endeavoring in this manner to recover rent for use and occupation, having delayed presenting his bill therefor as a part of the expenses of administration until almost all the funds of the estate had been disbursed, In re Empire Construction Co., 19 A. It might be added, moreover, that this was one of the expenses of the receivership in any event, and the trustee properly might have been held personally liable therefor in an action on contract, under the doctrine of § 1780½, "Debts Contracted as Receiver."

not by virtue of being bound by the terms of the lease, but rather because its terms must be taken to be the best measure of the value of the use and occupation. Nevertheless, the lease is not, in all cases, to be considered as fixing the actual value.⁹¹

In re Yodleman-Walsh Foundry Co., 21 A. B. R. 509, 166 Fed. 381 (D. C. N. Y.): "This court has held in a number of instances that if the receiver is actually in possession, for the purpose of preserving the estate, during a certain number of days, he should pay, as part of the expenses of maintaining the estate, the pro rata rent, at a reasonable value, for that time, and in the same way this court has held in a number of instances that the receiver is entitled to the benefit of being compelled to pay only a reasonable value for the property, if the rental value happens to be greater because of some contract liability which will result in a claim against the estate in the hands of the trustee, or against the bankrupt himself, if he should subsequently continue with the lease."

It is doubtful, also, whether the landlord's loss of a prospective tenant by reason of the occupancy can be taken into account in arriving at a quantum valebat.⁹²

§ 2035½. Trustee's or Receiver's Use of Property Sold on Conditional Sale.—A conditional vendor must take some positive step, probably by way of order of the court, if he wishes to charge the receiver or trustee for the use of the property conditionally sold, pending litigation over its title.

In re Daterson Pub. Co., 26 A. B. R. 582, 188 Fed. 64 (C. C. A. Pa.): "The trustee never elected to take these articles as belonging to the estate, nor were the vendors willing he should. On the contrary, the vendors claimed, retained, and were decreed, to have the title of the property in themselves. They contend, however, that while the question of their title was being determined by the court, the machines remained in the possession of the trustee, and for such period the estate should pay at the rental rate fixed by the contract. But this is a non sequitur. If during such period the trustee used the machines, he could have been prevented from doing so on complaint to the court; for its general order permitting him to continue business for a limited period did not authorize him in doing so to use other peoples property without their consent. Or, if he used it without formal permission of the owner, the court would no doubt, on a proper showing have directed him to pay a proper sum for such use and occupation. But, whatever might have been the rights of the petitioners, no such relief was sought, nor have we before us proof of facts which would enable us to take any such action."

§ 2036. Expense of Conducting Business.—When the receiver or trustee has been authorized to conduct the business, the expense of conducting it is a proper charge against the estate.⁹³ And this is so even

In re Cornice & Roofing Co., 13 A. B. R. 585 (D. C. Ky.): "It should not be forgotten that any effort by the general creditors or by the trustee in their behalf to make profits by continuing to execute the outstanding contracts of the bankrupt was exerted solely in the interest of the general creditors. The secured creditors, to whom this was immaterial, relying upon their liens, had no interest in the venture of the trustee undertaken for the benefit of the general creditors, and without their express consent the lienors should be regarded as having put to hazard their interests in the bankrupt's assets—a hazard for incurring which they receive no consideration. True, § 2, cl. 5, Bankruptcy Act, as it was in force in June, 1902, gave the court power to authorize a trustee to conduct, for a limited period, the business of the bankrupt; but I am much inclined to think that a referee should never permit a procedure for the carrying into effect of the unexecuted contracts of a bankrupt, to be commenced upon the initiative of the trustee. Much abuse of the power might be avoided and temptation for the trustee removed by putting that burden on the creditors. Such authorization should generally be made upon the application of some or all of the general creditors. It should never be made, if carrying it into full effect would be at the expense of secured creditors who have no interest in the question and who make no request for such authority. Indeed, the claims of secured creditors should, if possible, be fully paid or provided for before the trustee or the general creditors are permitted, except in a very small way, to embark in any venture of that sort. Of course, after the secured creditors are paid, the general creditors are in practical control of the estate, and if willing to take risks, may be indulged by the referee in proper instances, for they alone are concerned. But whether these general views are sound or not as to the proper course to be pursued by the referee in such cases, another course was in fact pursued here, though with unfortunate results. I think it was the duty of the trustee, under the circumstances disclosed in this case, to have clearly brought before the referee the fact that his expenditures were trenching upon the fund upon which others claimed liens, and to have sought specific instructions in that contingency, even to the extent of bringing the question before the judge if necessary. I think his not doing this, but going on at a loss after expending everything on hand, was, to say the least, improvident and greatly to his disadvantage in the present contingency. * * * It does not at all seem to me that expenditures made at the instance either of the general creditors or of the trustee in their behalf to do what was done for their sole benefit in this instance are such 'costs of administration' as were in the contemplation of Congress when it used that phrase in the Act. Such expenditures occur in a special and abnormal case, which could hardly have been within such contemplation. The phrase has a much more restricted signification. See §§ 40, 48, 51, 52. I go further, and doubt whether the expenses of continuing the business of the bankrupt for a limited period, under § 2, cl. 5, would take priority over valid liens already existing and fixed, such as were Ronald's and Root's. Section 67, cl. 3. In my judgment valid liens, properly acquired and fixed could not be displaced by the trustee or the general creditors in any such subsequent proceeding for the sole benefit of the latter."

§ 2037. Auctioneer.—Where special necessity exists for the employment of an auctioneer, his compensation may be allowed.⁹⁷

But the employment of an "official" auctioneer to act in all cases would seem to be improper. The selling of the property is one of the ordinary duties of the trustee; and to compel all sales to be made through one channel is clearly contrary to the spirit of the Bankruptcy Act. The trustee's individual skill is set at naught, and the creditors' selection to that extent defeated.⁹⁸

But the practice in some districts tends to have official receivers and "official" auctioneers as the general rule. The Bankruptcy Act seems in its spirit opposed to such "official" personages.⁹⁹

pany for becoming surety on the receiver's and trustee's bonds, is a doubtful item of expense to tax as part of the costs, unless permitted by rule of court.

Obiter, In re Hoyt, 9 A. B. R. 574, 119 Fed. 987 (D. C. N. Car.): "Prior to the act of congress giving the privilege of giving bonds in surety companies (a modern convenience), such a thing as a fee for bondsmen was unheard of as costs. There is no act making it taxable as costs, and, while courts may have allowed such costs to prevailing parties litigant, it is a new departure, and has not yet become the rule of court."

However, it has been held to be a proper charge against the estate; and such would appear to be the rule now fairly established.⁴

§ 2039. Not Necessary to Pay Expenses Out of Pocket First, Then to Be Allowed Reimbursement.—Neither the receiver nor trustee in bankruptcy is required first to pay his expenses out of his own pocket, and then be allowed reimbursement therefor out of the estate.

In re McKenna, 15 A. B. R. 9, 137 Fed. 611 (D. C. N. Y.): "This court is aware of the rule which has been adopted in some of the State courts that no allowance will be made for legal services until the executor or administrator or other trustee has first paid therefor; that then he may present the bill in his account, and ask reimbursement. This rule always leaves the trustee, executor or administrator open to have the propriety of his allowance and payment questioned by those interested in the fund. If the court decides that he has paid too much, he must stand the loss, for he has undertaken to decide that matter for himself, and, having conceded the justice of the claim of the attorney—their claim being a personal one against him—he is without remedy. Without questioning the wisdom or propriety or justice of such a rule in the cases where it has been applied by the State courts, this court is decidedly of the opinion that it ought not to prevail in the bankruptcy court. Here there are meetings of the creditors, where all parties in interest may come before the court. The attorneys who have rendered services for the trustee or for the receiver in bankruptcy may come before the court or referee, as the case may be, and present their claim. If no objection is made by any party, and the court or referee in bankruptcy deems the bill reasonable for the services rendered, it may be allowed, and payment directed from the estate. It is entirely immaterial to those in interest whether the compensation going to attorneys for the trustee be first paid by the trustee personally, from his own funds, or by the trustee, under an order of the court, direct to the parties entitled thereto, from the estate, provided it is allowed by the court after a fair hearing. The practice adopted in this case relieved the trustee from the imputation of having undertaken to decide as to the compensation his attorneys ought to receive from the estate. The course pursued left it entirely to the court or referee in bankruptcy to determine the necessity and the value of the services rendered. This practice has been many times approved in the bankruptcy court, and is approved by this court. In the opinion of this court, neither a trustee nor a receiver in bankruptcy ought to be permitted to pay money of the estate to his attorneys or counsel without the order or authority of the court, and certainly such officers ought not to be required to pay for such services from their own funds. It is always, however, within the power of a receiver or trustee to pay the attorney from his own funds, and then ask reimbursement from the estate by order of the court."

§ 2039 $\frac{1}{2}$. Receivership Expenses on Dismissal of Petition.—Where there is no adjudication it would appear that there is not such an "administration" of the estate, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court in Cameron v. United States,⁵ as will permit the expenses of the receivership being charged out of the assets, unless in exceptional circumstances.

In re Wentworth Lunch Company, 27 A. B. R. 515, 191 Fed. 821 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "And as a corollary to the conclusion that the District Court had jurisdiction of the controversy, it follows that it had power to appoint the receiver. But it does not follow that the expenses of the bankruptcy receivership should be paid out of the property of the corporation, which was not subject to the Bankruptcy Act, rather than by the defeated parties who instituted the proceedings and obtained the appointment of the receiver. There is nothing in the record to show that it was 'absolutely necessary' for the preservation of the estate that a receiver should be appointed. The property was already in the custody of an assignee under State laws and presumably he would do his duty. Nothing is shown to justify the appointment of a receiver within the principles recently laid down by this court in Matter of Oakland Lumber Company (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 181, 174 Fed. 634, 98 C. C. A. 388. Moreover, the question whether this corporation was subject to the bankruptcy law was obviously a doubtful one when the petition was filed and it was immediately raised. It was peculiarly a case in which a receiver should not have been appointed unless imperatively required. We find no such imperative necessity and think that the creditors who rushed in and insisted upon an unnecessary receivership should pay the expenses rather than that they should be charged upon the corporation which, as the event proved and as it always insisted, should not have been haled into the bankruptcy court at all."

However, where the receivership was absolutely necessary for the preservation of the estate and was a benefit even had there been no bankruptcy petition filed, then, in the discretion of the court, such expenses perhaps might be charged against the estate; as, for instance where the petition was defeated solely upon the ground that the debtor was insane, there being necessity for some custodian to take charge, in any event.⁶

ATTORNEYS' FEES IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.

§ 2042. Allowable Attorneys' Fees.—Reasonable attorneys' fees may be allowed out of the estate, to the petitioning creditors and the bankrupt by express statutory provision, and to the trustee and receiver as part of their expenses.

One of the most vexatious problems in the practical administration of bankrupt estates is the determination of the propriety and amount of attorneys' fees allowable out of the estate.

In re Connell & Sons, 9 A. B. R. 475, 120 Fed. 846 (D. C. Pa.): "But it is not so much what was done by the attorney, as what was really required. The bankrupts are responsible individually to the extent that they employed him, regardless of the character of what he was called upon to do, but not so the estate. This is a preferred claim, and is to be kept down to what it was intended by the act to represent, and that is simply the necessary professional assistance required by the bankrupts to meet the demands of the act upon them. In the present instance, the time spent seems to have been mainly taken up in going over the books of the firm and straightening them out by posting and otherwise. A part of this may be regarded as necessary, but part certainly was not. It was the work of a bookkeeper or an accountant rather than a lawyer to post the books and reduce them to the condition where the information they contained would be available and for this no claim can be made. Neither can there for the writing up of the extra copies of the schedules after the first one had been made out. This was mere clerical work, which any one could do who wrote a fair hand, and is not to be charged against the estate at professional rates."

A considerable portion of the work in bankruptcy administration commonly charged for at professional rates is really clerical work. Thus, a goodly part of the preparation of the bankrupt's schedules is purely clerical work that should not be estimated at professional rates;¹⁰ although, to be sure, genuine professional advice in the preparation may also be requisite, in the classification of assets, liabilities, etc., and in pointing out the proper forms.¹¹

The funds in hand necessary to pay preferred claims should not be thus depleted, but such services should be regarded as virtually in behalf of the creditors who are the clients of the attorney, and upon the credit of what they may succeed in realizing."

And charge must not be made out of the estate for services really performed for particular creditors represented by the attorney.¹³

And the order of allowance of attorneys' fees is subject to review.¹⁶

Their fees must be reasonable fees, but there is great diversity of mind among lawyers as to the method of arriving at the reasonableness of attorney's fees. It is sometimes said that the customary, and hence reasonable, attorney's fee is a certain fixed amount per day; but certainly such cannot be a correct rule, else it is continually disregarded in practice. Neither attorneys nor litigants take a fixed amount per day as the criterion of the reasonableness of any certain charge for attorney's fees; and what common consent acquiesces in is likely to be reasonable. Thus, it would hardly be right to charge $25 per day for instance, for services in a suit involving only a few dollars, else poor people never could get their rights; nor, on the other hand, would it be reasonable for lawyers in a great case to be restricted to $25 per day. Other elements are to be taken into account besides merely the time involved.

§ 2047. Various Elements to Be Considered, Each Having Modifying Effect.—The time alone used by the attorney is not the only standard whereby to measure the reasonableness of the fees. There are at least five elements in all: The time properly to be spent on the particular controversy involved;¹⁷ the intricacy of the questions involved therein; the amount involved in that controversy;¹⁸ the strenuousness of the opposition encountered; and the results achieved therein.¹⁹

In re McKenna, 15 A. B. R. 10, 137 Fed. 611 (D. C. N. Y.): "In fixing the value of legal services, courts have many things to consider—the nature and importance of the business transacted; the ability of the parties to pay; the amount of the estate involved; the magnitude of the interests in question; the standing and ability of the attorneys employed; the location of the parties and of the attorneys. These and many other things are proper subjects of consideration."

Ward v. Kohn (C. C. A.), 58 Fed. 462: "In the absence of a contract price, attorneys are entitled to receive what they deserve for their services. The amount of their compensation must vary with the place in which their services are rendered, for the same services are of more value in a large and prosperous commercial city than in a small country town; with the character and standing of the lawyer who renders them, for the services of an attorney of ripe experience, great learning, eminent ability, and high reputation deserve and command better compensation than those of the tyro in the profession; with the importance of the matters involved in the litigation, for the same service deserve more compensation where life, liberty, character, or large amounts of property are at stake than where but a few dollars are in dispute; and with the results attained, for success earns a better reward than failure.

"The wealth of a defendant cannot be considered in any case to enhance the fee for professional services above a reasonable compensation for the service actually rendered. It cannot be considered to make a fee extortionate or a compensation unreasonably large. But every judge and every gentleman of the bar knows that much severe professional labor is rendered by practicing attorneys without any compensation, and much more for compensation so small as to be entirely inadequate. It is as difficult to defend the poor as the rich from a groundless charge of murder. It requires as much learning, labor, and professional skill to recover or save from attack property of little value, that may be the entire estate of the poor man, as it does to recover thousands of dollars for the wealthy. The duty of the lawyer to defend the former and maintain his rights is as great as it is to the latter, and to the honor of the profession it may be said that it is performed with equal zeal and fidelity. But it is the general practice of the gentlemen of the bar to fix the fees for such services far below a fair compensation or to charge no fee at all—to measure their fees more by the inability of such a client to pay a fair compensation, or to pay at all, than by the value of the services they render. When, on the other hand, a client, who has the means to pay what professional services are fairly worth, employs an attorney, it is right and just that he should pay a fair and reasonable compensation for the service he obtains. In other words, the fees the attorney deserves from such a client should not be measured by the inadequate compensation and small fees the gentlemen of the bar usually receive from those who are unable to pay at all or to pay a fair compensation, but they should be measured by the fees usually obtained by attorneys for like services from those who are able to pay just compensation for the service rendered.”

Maximum Fixed by Local Rule in Southern District of New York.—In the Southern District of New York by local rule referees may not allow to attorneys for the trustee and receiver respectively more than twice the amount received in that particular case by the receiver or trustee. The judge by special order may allow more. In re Keller, 31 A. B. R. 51, 207 Fed. 118 (D. C. N. Y.).

Compare, to similar effect, In re Lang, 11 A. B. R. 794, 127 Fed. 755 (D. C. Tex.): “It may not always be an easy matter to determine the exact value of the services of an attorney. Such value varies, as the value of the surgeon’s work varies with the importance of the operation and the skill and delicacy required in performing it. Where the operation is simple and relatively unimportant, the fee exacted would be small in comparison with that demanded for more serious work. So it is with the services of the attorney, and no fixed, absolute fee can be provided for all cases. The amount of compensation should be based, in ordinary cases, upon the nature of the case, the extent and character of the work actually performed, and the amount involved in the controversy.”

Compare, to similar effect, In re Curtis, 4 A. B. R. 19, 100 Fed. 784 (C. C. A. Ills.): “The elements which enter into and should control judgment upon the value of professional services we think to be these: The nature of the service, the time necessarily employed therein, the amount involved, the responsibility assumed, and the result obtained.”

In re Burns, 3 A. B. R. 296 (D. C. Va.): “* * * the character of the estate, its condition at the time of the adjudication, the injunctions or restraining orders necessary to be secured for its protection, and the corresponding amount of time and care required of the petitioner’s attorney, are all matters to be considered by the court in arriving at the amount ‘reasonable’ under the circumstances. Necessarily, therefore, there can be no fixed and determinate fee for all cases, nor will the amount allowed in this case establish a rule for subsequent cases in this court, but from a careful consideration of the evidence certified by the referee herein the court deems $200, in addition to the $45.45 already allowed and paid for expenses incurred, a reasonable fee, and the order of the referee will be modified accordingly.”

There is sometimes another element added, namely, the “dignity” and “standing” of the attorney himself.²⁰ This element, however, seems at least undignified: justice and fairness, it would seem, would resolve the value of the "dignity" and "standing" of the attorney in any particular case into one or the other of these five elements above laid down. "Dignity" should not be paid for, but the work accomplished in view of all the circumstances and questions involved rather should control.

But it is undoubtedly proper to consider, as an element, the vigor of the opposition; for a controversy in itself involving propositions of small merit may be rendered vexatious by the strenuousness of one's adversaries.²¹

The results achieved through the efforts of the attorney also have an important bearing upon the reasonableness of the allowance.²²

In re [Francis Levy] Outfitting Co., 29 A. B. R. 8 (D. C. Hawaii): "With the testimony that, considering purely the care and time involved, the services are worth $250, I do not agree—at least in any practical view; for such fees must depend upon the condition of the estate, as one of the main considerations, i. e. upon the results effected, the assets saved."

Again, the intricacy of the legal questions involved should be taken into account.

Inferentially, In re Curtis, 4 A. B. R. 20, 100 Fed. 784 (C. C. A. Ills.): "This was the nature of the service that was rendered, and involved the investigation and discussion of the questions whether a voluntary assignment, after the passage of the bankrupt law was void, or voidable merely, of the doctrine of estoppel in pais, and of the election of remedies. These questions were important, requiring careful study and legal ability for their proper presentation to the court."

Inferentially, In re Oppenheimer, 17 A. B. R. 60, 146 Fed. 140 (D. C. Pa.): "* * * so there was no great responsibility involved in its management, nor any intricacy in advising with regard to it, both of which bear on the value of the services rendered and the amount to be allowed."

Each of these elements has a modifying effect upon all the others, to increase or decrease the fees to be allowed, as the case may be. Thus, where the issues raised are uncontested or are practically incontestible, there would be a corresponding tendency toward reduction of the fees. Again, petitioning creditors would not be entitled to as great an allowance for attorneys' fees where an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or a written admission of inability, etc., is the act of bankruptcy alleged, as they would where an act of bankruptcy more difficult of proof and more likely to be contested and to require preparation for trial, is set up.²³

22. Instance, In re Niman, 14 A. B. R. 515 (Ref. Mich.): In this case the court allowed $2,500 where, in an estate of apparently only $1,400 the vigorous action of the attorney resulted in the recovery of $16,000.

Instance, In re Berkowitz, 22 A. B. R. 236 (Ref. N. J.): $5,000 allowed attorneys in an estate of $17,000, where the bankrupt's schedules originally showed no assets and entire estate result of attorney's vigorous work in uncovering the fraud of an alleged corporation formed to aid bankrupt to conceal assets; instance, In re Fidler & Son, 23 A. B. R. 16, 172 Fed. 635 (D. C. Pa.) where, though fine work was done, the pecuniary benefit to the estate was not very great.

It is also perhaps proper to take into account the locality; since, after all, compensation is to a certain degree regulated by the comparative standard or cost of living. Thus, the same services in the same litigation might merit different compensation to the attorney in a city where the cost of living is high from what the same attorney should expect were he a resident of a place where the cost of living is comparatively low.

The fact that more than one attorney was employed is not to be considered as an element in arriving at the amount of attorney's fee allowable out of bankrupt estates but the allowance should be made as though only one attorney were employed.²⁴

§ 2048. Sixth Element, in Bankruptcy Cases, "Economy."—And in bankruptcy the policy of the act towards strict economy should be kept in view.²⁵

In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 10 A. B. R. 556, 123 Fed. 579 (D. C. S. C.): "It is a part of the history of the country that one of the causes which led to the repeal of the Bankrupt Act of 1867 * * * was the great abuse, under the former law, whereby the estates of bankrupts were consumed by the ministerial officers of the court in enormous costs and charges; and it was the clear intent of the present Bankrupt Law that they should be administered for the benefit of the creditors. This is manifest through all the provisions respecting fees and commissions. The compensation allowed to clerks, referees, and trustees is so meagre that it is a matter of some surprise that the courts have been able to secure persons of any competency to administer the law. Under the former act legal services rendered to the bankrupt were not allowed as a claim entitled to priority, but under the present law such claims are allowed priority in the discretion of the court; but that discretion should be exercised to carry out and effectuate the legislative will, and the courts cannot honestly disregard the manifest policy of the law, which looks to great economy of administration. If they enforce strict compliance with the statute on the part of ministerial officers with respect to such fees and allowances as are prescribed by law, they cannot refuse to be bound by its limitations in matters that are left to their discretion. That discretion must be in accordance with, and not in conflict with, the policy of the law."

In re Lang, 11 A. B. R. 794, 127 Fed. 755 (D. C. Tex.): "In bankruptcy cases, while these elements should properly be considered in fixing the compensation of the attorney, the policy of the act should be steadily kept in view, that is, that it should be administered with severe economy (In re Goldville Manufacturing Co., supra), so as to reduce to the lowest minimum the cost of administration."

In re Byerly, 12 A. B. R. 186, 128 Fed. 637 (D. C. Penn.): "It is the policy of the Bankrupt Act to administer the estates, which are brought into court, as economically as possible, and no large fees are to be expected. Those directly allowed by the act are purposely kept down to the lowest possible limits and the courts have no right in fixing the compensation of counsel to be differently influenced. The attorney in the present instance has received $125 in fees and an additional $21.76 for serving notices and mileage, the occasion for which is not altogether manifest. I agree with the referee that this is all under the circumstances that he can ask."

In re Little River Lumber Co., 3 A. B. R. 685, 101 Fed. 560 (D. C. Ark.): "In view of the whole spirit of the Bankrupt Law, counsel who are required to represent the trustee must expect only such remuneration as will actually compensate them for services rendered."

Inferentially, In re Daniels, 12 A. B. R. 450, 130 Fed. 597 (D. C. Iowa): "Much criticism was made of prior Bankruptcy Acts because of the large amount of fees and expenses incurred in the administration of the bankrupt estates. It was the manifest purpose of Congress that such criticism could not rightly be made of the present law, and it fixed the compensation of referees and other officers very low. They may be inadequate in some cases, but the court is powerless to increase them. By the amendment of February 5, 1903, it is expressly provided that the court shall not allow, under any form or guise whatever, any other or further compensation for services than that expressly authorized by the act."

In re Covington, 13 A. B. R. 150, 132 Fed. 1884 (D. C. N. Car.): "Attorneys shall be allowed reasonable compensation for services rendered which were beneficial to the estate. Beyond that point this court has never gone, and will not go in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion."

In re Oppenheimer, 17 A. B. R. 60, 146 Fed. 140 (D. C. Pa.): "Economy is strictly enjoined by the well known policy of the Bankruptcy Act, in the administration of bankrupt estates, and there is no exception with regard to the compensation of counsel."

§ 2049. Items Properly to Be Grouped According to Separate Controversies Involved and Estimate Made as to Each Group.—In determining the reasonableness of an attorney's fee bill covering services in several distinct controversies, it is convenient to group the items relating to each controversy separately and to consider the five or six elements above mentioned with relation to each group separately, rather than with relation to the entire estate. Thus, as to the elements of the "amount involved:" in a bankruptcy case where the entire estate is, for example, $10,000, there might exist a little controversy over a claim of merely $100. The element of "amount involved" would be comparatively small, merely $100, and the fees be correspondingly diminished, notwithstanding the "amount involved" in the estate as an entirety, is $10,000.

If the bankrupt estate is free from difficult litigation or litigation involving large amounts, the creditors should receive the benefit; and the fees for services in small controversies arising in large estates should not be increased because of the size of the estate.

Again, in making allowances to petitioning creditors' and bankrupts' attorneys out of the estate, the "amount involved" is not the entire estate, where there are good and valid liens existing; but only the surplus. The adjudication is not undertaken for the benefit of the valid lienholders and does not affect them. It is for the benefit of general creditors; and the measure of the estate realized for unsecured creditors is, therefore, the measure of the "amount involved" for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of the fees for petitioning creditors' and bankrupts' attorneys.²⁶

Compare, inferentially, In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 10 A. B. R. 554, 123 Fed. 579 (D. C. S. Car.): "I am of the opinion that the attorney for the petitioning creditors and the attorney for the bankrupt corporation cannot, in the circumstances, demand or receive an allowance out of the fund derived from the sale of the mortgaged property. Nothing that has been done by the petitioning creditors in the proceedings in bankruptcy was intended for or has inured to the benefit of the lien creditors. They were foreclosing their mortgage in the state court, where they had a right to be and to remain. In discontinuing their proceedings in the state court, and in filing their petition for foreclosure in this court, they have been represented by their own attorneys, and the bankruptcy proceedings have been of no benefit to them. They make no claim upon the fund in the hands of the trustee for distribution among the unsecured creditors, and it seems to the court that the unsecured creditors and their attorneys have no claim upon their fund. Section 67d of the Bankrupt Act * * * declares that: 'Liens given and accepted in good faith, etc., shall not be affected by this act.'

"Of course, all the costs of the court, and all expenses incurred in the care, preservation, and sale of the mortgaged property, are proper claims against the sum realized from the sale of it; but the fees here asked for cannot be considered as in the nature of costs of court and expenses necessarily incident to the preservation of their fund. * * *

"The claim of the attorney for the petitioning creditors rests upon what the court deems an erroneous view, that the service rendered is like that of filing a creditors' bill in chancery to marshal the assets of an insolvent estate, where assets which would otherwise have been lost are recovered, and the estate is administered for the benefit of all creditors who come in and share in the results accomplished. In such cases courts of chancery properly considered the exacting nature of the work done, responsibility assumed and results accomplished, and may deal out compensation with a liberal hand; but in this case the mere fact of the adjudication in bankruptcy has not enabled the secured creditors to reach a fund which might otherwise have been lost. It has not added to the value of the security that they had under their mortgage, or provided them with any additional remedy. The most that can be said is that it has opened the door of this forum, where, by proceedings in rem, instituted by their own attorneys, they have secured a foreclosure of the lien which the Bankrupt Act declares 'shall not be affected by it.' They were already proceeding to foreclose their lien in another forum, where it is presumed they would have obtained equal results; and it would not seem consonant with any principle of justice, after opening the door to them, and inviting them to come in, so that the whole estate might be administered, to tax them for the payment of services not rendered at their request or for their benefit, and to deplete the fund to which they are entitled under their lien, for the compensation of an attorney who has pertinaciously, but unsuccessfully, endeavored to deprive them of it. The only fund brought into the court for administration by the bankruptcy proceedings, which otherwise would not be here, is the fund of about $2,800 for distribution among the unsecured creditors, and this fund must be administered in accordance with the spirit of the Bankrupt Law.

"It is a part of the history of the country that one of the causes which led to the repeal of the Bankrupt Act of 1867 * * * was the great abuse, under the former law, whereby the estates of bankrupts were consumed by the ministerial officers of the court in enormous costs and charges; and it was the clear intent of the present Bankrupt Law that they should be administered for the benefit of the creditors. This is manifest through all the provisions respecting fees and commissions. The compensation allowed to clerks, referees, and trustees is so meager that it is a matter of some surprise that the courts have been able to secure persons of any competency to administer the law. Under the former act legal services rendered to the bankrupt were not allowed as a claim entitled to priority, but under the present law such claims are allowed priority in the discretion of the court; but that discretion should be exercised to carry out and effectuate the legislative will, and the courts cannot honestly disregard the manifest policy of law, which looks to great economy of administration. If they enforce strict compliance with the statute on the part of ministerial officers with respect to such fees and allowances as are prescribed by law, they cannot refuse to be bound by its limitations in matters that are left to their discretion. That discretion must be in accordance with, and not in conflict with, the policy of the law."

§ 2052. Showing to Be Made of Propriety and Reasonableness.—Showing should be made affirmatively of the propriety and reasonableness of the allowance asked for.²⁹

In re Lane Lumber Co., 30 A. B. R. 749, 206 Fed. 780 (D. C. Idaho): "Was a service performed? Was such service reasonably necessary to enable the bankrupt to discharge its duties under the law? And what was it reasonably worth? The burden is upon the claimants to make a prima facie showing upon each of these three heads."

And it is the duty of the court to scrutinize the fee bills carefully, whether any party is appearing to object thereto or not.

§ 2052½. Mere Employment and Service Not Sufficient.—Merely that an attorney has been employed and services been rendered by him is not sufficient to warrant a charge therefor out of the estate. Showing of necessity or propriety and reasonableness is requisite.

In re (T. E.) Hill Co., 20 A. B. R. 73, 159 Fed. 73 (C. C. A. Ills.): "Ordinarily, the duties of this statutory receiver neither require nor justify employment of an attorney, and it is plain that no claim for such services is chargeable per se against the estate, predicated alone upon the fact of employment and service rendered. the referee. The section of the statutes (§ 64, par. b) as to the debts having priority of payment does not expressly require notice to the creditors before costs of administration can be determined and allowed. In the section (§ 58, par. a) which states in what matters notice to creditors must be given, no requirement appears for such notice when costs of administration are to be settled and allowed; and my attention has not been directed to any other provision of the statute, nor of the general rules, making such notices obligatory to the setting of such costs. Is there any good reason otherwise requiring such notice? It is assumed that creditors whose claims are filed with the referee will inform themselves of the general proceedings in the estate sufficiently, at least, to advise them of its general status, and file their objections, and, if necessary, take the proper steps for review of whatever orders and proceedings they may wish reviewed. They are thus given abundant opportunity for guarding against improper allowances. If the referee shall deem it proper, whether because of the peculiarity of the claim for costs or expenses, or for any other reason by him deemed sufficient, I see no objection to his fixing a time for the hearing and notifying the creditors that at that time he will pass on the claim. But there occurs to me no good reason why the costs and expenses of administration must be passed upon by a creditors' meeting, before he shall pass on the same. If at any time before the closing of the estate this court shall find that excessive attorney's fees have been allowed and paid, this court doubtless has the power to take whatever steps are found necessary to correct this improper allowance and payment. These attorneys are on the roll of this court and subject to any proper order this court may make.

"I am of the opinion that notice to creditors is not required before the referee can settle proper attorney's fees."

However, it is a wise check upon extravagant applications and allowances to require such notices to be given, and such is the local rule of court in some districts.³¹

§ 2053½. Application for Allowance Not Properly in Attorney's Own Name.—The application for allowance of attorney's fees properly should be made in the name of the petitioning creditors, receiver, trustee or bankrupt, respectively, and not in the attorney's own name, for the attorney has no independent standing—his rights are derived through the parties or officers who employ him.³²

ing creditors and bankrupts, yet attorney's fees are allowable in proper cases as part of the trustee's expenses.³³

In re Byerly, 12 A. B. R. 186, 128 Fed. 637 (D. C. Penn.): "There is no direct provision in the Bankrupt Act for the payment of the fees of attorneys employed by the trustee, but they come in as part of the administration of the estate like other necessary expenses."

Page v. Rogers, 17 A. B. R. 854, 149 Fed. 194 (C. C. A. Tenn.): "The reasonable fees of counsel employed by the trustee to recover a voidable or fraudulent preference made by the bankrupt constitutes a part of the trustee's expenses, and as such a part of the costs and expenses of administration entitled to preferential payment. * * * These counsel fees were therefore a part of the trustee's expenses and allowable under our mandate."

Indeed, part of the usual and ordinary expenses of the receiver and trustee are attorney's fees. There are almost always legal questions arising in the course of the administration that require the advice and action of an attorney; and attorney's fees are frequently quite as necessary a part of the expenses as are the wages of the watchman, guarding the property from robbery and fire.³⁴

In re McKenna, 15 A. B. R. 6, 137 Fed. 611 (D. C. N. Y.): "It was his duty to look out for and protect the interests of the creditors, and in view of the fact that the bankrupt, with upwards of $20,000, which came to and vested in him the same day he filed his petition in bankruptcy, and before he was adjudicated a bankrupt, took the position that the creditors were entitled to no part of it, and that under the Bankrupt Act he was entitled to a discharge from all his debts, while retaining the whole legacy, the trustee would have been culpably remiss in the discharge of his duty, had he not employed counsel, and good counsel, in the matter, and it was his duty to have such counsel present at all the hearings before the surrogate and in both proceedings."

The trustee must exercise a reasonable judgment in that matter; that is, he must exercise a reasonable judgment as to the necessity for securing the assistance of counsel—such judgment as a man of ordinary prudence would use in the transaction of his own business. When professional services have been rendered by an attorney to the trustee in his official capacity, the court will, in a proper proceeding, determine whether the employment of such an attorney was necessary, and, if found necessary, the reasonable value of his services.”

Likewise the receiver is entitled in proper cases to employ counsel.³⁵

In re Oppenheimer, 17 A. B. R. 59 (D. C. Pa.): “A receiver in bankruptcy is undoubtedly entitled to the assistance of counsel, the same as an executor or administrator, and upon the same grounds; and a reasonable allowance therefor will be made him in the settlement of his accounts. They come in, however as part, of the expenses of administering the estate and not otherwise; and there is no place for anything outside of this.”

Ordinarily, however, the duties of the receiver, as a mere custodian, neither require nor justify the employment of an attorney; and certainly an attorney is not to be employed as a mere matter of course nor his services compensated for out of the estate merely because rendered.

In re (T. E.) Hill & Co., 20 A. B. R. 73, 159 Fed. 73 (C. C. A. Ills.): “Ordinarily, the duties of the statutory receiver neither require nor justify employment of an attorney, and it is plain no claim for such services is chargeable per se against the estate predicated alone upon the fact of employment and service rendered.”

The receiver’s attorney will not be allowed compensation where his services were unnecessary and where the receivership itself was clearly unjustified.³⁶

And attorneys who have entered into an illegal and unprofessional agreement with the receiver, respecting their compensation, will not be allowed counsel fees from the estate, though their actual disbursements may be provided for.³⁷

The attorney for the trustee, but not an attorney for an assignee, seeking allowance, it has been held in one case, is entitled to be heard in behalf of his fees.³⁸

But the better rule undoubtedly is that he has no independent standing and must work out his rights through the trustee, like the other persons employed by the trustee. Undoubtedly, in cases where the trustee is insolvent and not responsible in damages, any employee who has been rendering assistance to the trustee may be heard in his own behalf, but this is because of the trustee’s individual lack of responsibility.³⁹

Where, however, the rules require the court to make a preliminary order authorizing the employment of the attorney, the attorney would seem to occupy a quasi-official position sufficient to warrant him to present his application for compensation in his own name; and such is the practice in some districts.⁴⁰ But in any event the attorney could hardly be permitted to prosecute appeal or error proceedings in his own name.⁴¹ The receiver is responsible for his attorney's acts.⁴²

No necessity exists for the trustee to pay his attorney first and then to seek reimbursement. He should get an order first, however, before paying his attorney from the estate's funds.⁴³

The receiver, it has been said, should engage only counsel that stand independent of the parties of the litigation.⁴⁴

In re Smith, 29 A. B. R. 628, 203 Fed. 369 (C. C. A. Mich.): "The general rule is that a receiver may not employ the solicitor of either of the parties to the suit in which he is appointed (Beach on Receivers, § 262); and this rule applies to trustees. But it is only when the receiver is acting adversely to one of the parties that there is any impropriety in his employing the counsel of the other (Beach on Receivers, § 263; High on Receivers, § 217; Alderson on Receivers, § 233). The general rule doubtless is that a trustee or a receiver should not ordinarily employ the attorney who represents the bankrupt or an attorney who represents interests in the litigation which are adverse to the general estate, or in conflict with other interests represented by the trustee; and where there are matters in controversy between different classes of creditors, the court will usually decline to authorize the employment by the trustee of an attorney representing one of such classes."

However, a rule prohibiting the employment of the petitioning creditors' attorney by the receiver or trustee is likely to weaken the vigor of bankruptcy proceedings, substituting, as such rule naturally would tend to do, any indifferent attorney for one who, though a partisan, yet in all likelihood has been first on the scene, at a time when the bankrupt's plans of defense had not yet been formulated and when the evidence was still fresh, and who for those reasons occupies an especially advantageous position for thwarting conspiracies and tracing and recovering concealed assets. If there be danger of collusion between the petitioning creditors and the bankrupt, as frequently there is, it would seem unfortunate that such danger could not be directly provided against rather than by such a rule, at best an indirect preventive, and so likely to weaken the efficiency of the law.

The trustee must exercise reasonable judgment in employing counsel. It has been held that the court will not undertake to give any direction, but will pass upon the propriety of the employment and the reasonableness of the fee therefor, after the services have been rendered;⁴⁵ but, this cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule, and, on the contrary, the rule in many districts requires a preliminary application on showing made to the court for leave to employ counsel.⁴⁶ Though the trustee should not, as a rule, employ the bankrupt's attorney as his own attorney, yet after services have been rendered by the bankrupt's attorney for him the attorney should not be refused compensation on that ground.⁴⁷

§ 2055. Not to Employ Attorney to Do Ordinary Business Duties of Trustee.—Trustees should not be allowed reimbursement of attorney's fees for doing those things which an ordinary business man is supposed to know how to do. Sometimes, indeed, attorney's bills are presented that provoke the query: What is it that the trustee himself did in this case—was he a mere figurehead?

Obiter, Ohio Valley Bank Co. v. Mack, 20 A. B. R. 919, 163 Fed. 155 (D. C. Ohio): "The trustee is a lawyer and an able one, and should not employ lawyers to do any work which the law requires him to do."

Thus, no allowance of attorney's fees should usually be made for selling property—that is one of the very duties of a business man which the trustee, presumably, is elected by creditors to perform.

In re Mercantile Co., 2 A. B. R. 419, 95 Fed. 123 (D. C. Mo.): "It is further claimed by these attorneys, as a basis of their compensation, that they induced several bidders to attend the sale of the property of the bankrupt, 'and the property yielded in cash the sum of $4,207.' Presumptively and naturally enough, interested creditors in the estate would either attend in person, or be represented at such sale, to see that the property be not sacrificed, as they are the especial beneficiaries in the product of the sale. No provision of the Bankrupt Act even squints at an allowance against the estate for such service.

"While the court personally would be pleased to exercise a spirit of large liberality both towards the attorneys and its officers assisting in the administration of bankrupt estates, it must be understood that the court is impressed with a sense of the obligation imposed upon it by the Bankrupt Act to so administer it as to preserve both the letter and the spirit of the statute, and produce the best results in behalf of creditors. Any other course taken by the courts in administering this statute will inevitably, as it has done in the past,

Mason v. Wolkowich, 17 A. B. R. 712, 150 Fed. 699 (D. C. Mass.): "No necessity whatever appears for the employment of counsel. Upon the facts shown the court would not have sanctioned any such employment, at least so far as the management of the sale was concerned. Employment of counsel to perform that part of the receiver's duties would certainly not have been approved by the court, and to perform them was no part of the proper duties of counsel, however employed. A sale made as this was, by persons never authorized to make it, could not have been upheld if its validity had been disputed at the time."

Frequently attorney's fees for procuring insurance are asked for. Of course, sometimes legal advice and legal opinions to the insurance companies may be necessary, but usually this is merely a business man's duty.⁴⁸

Compare, In re Byerly, 12 A. B. R. 186, 128 Fed. 637 (D. C. Penn.): "The estate was not a large one, the whole amount passing through the hands of the accountant in both his capacities not exceeding $550, exclusive of the bankrupt's exemption; neither does it seem to have been seriously involved. It presented simply the ordinary case of a small commercial failure in which the services of counsel were only needed to a limited extent."

It is not proper in this relation to apply the same rule applicable to executors and administrators, nor even that applicable to assignees for the benefit of creditors. In the case of executors and administrators, and even of assignees, there is no presumption of any special fitness on the part of the incumbent nor of his experience in business affairs; the will of the decedent or assignor, or the statutes of the state, throw the administration in many cases into the hands of inexperienced persons, frequently women totally unacquainted with business affairs, who must of necessity employ some one more experienced to perform even the ordinary business duties of the office. Therefore, it may not be improper to allow attorney's fees for such services in the state courts. It is not so, however, in bankruptcy. The trustee is the choice of creditors and is presumed to have been elected because of his peculiar fitness to perform the duties of his office, and he certainly should be qualified to perform the ordinary business duties of the office.

Inferentially, In re Mercantile Co., 2 A. B. R. 419, 95 Fed. 123 (D. C. Mo.): "The court finds no warrant in any provision of the Act for compensating attorneys of petitioning creditors for their service in attending meetings of the creditors, and resisting the allowance thereof of other claims against the estate. They are supposed in such action to be subserving the interests of their client, whose dividend in the estate would be augmented in the proportion of the disallowance of other claims. Each creditor of the estate is interested in seeing meritless claims defeated and preferential claims rejected. And one of the objects of creditors' meetings is to afford each creditor an opportunity to object before the referee to the allowance of questionable claims, and each creditor has the right to object and make contest. Is the court to allow a fee to the attorney of each objecting and contesting creditor, when the statute expressly provides that 'one reasonable attorney's fee for professional services actually rendered, irrespective of the number of attorneys employed,' may be allowed by the court."

§ 2058. No Fees for Preparation of Papers Where Supreme Court's Forms Adequate.—Trustees should not be allowed for attorney's fees in doing these things for which the Supreme Court has already provided forms, unless the circumstances are exceptional and the forms inadequate. Thus, a trustee sometimes asks allowance for attorneys' fees for legal services in applying for the appointment of appraisers and drawing the journal entry for the same. All the trustee ought to do is to call upon the referee and mention his desires and get the blank that is supplied on demand. So with trustee's reports, although, of course, sometimes trustee's reports require legal assistance in their preparation. Perhaps it is permissible to allow for legal advice as to whether such forms exist and are applicable.

§ 2059. Whether Trustee Allowed Attorney's Fees for Own Professional Services.—It has been held that a trustee who is also an attorney at law may not be allowed attorney's fees for his own legal services to the estate, even where such services are necessary.⁵¹

case, the assignee shall be entitled to an allowance for his services in such case on all moneys received and paid out by him thus: [Giving various percentages].’ It must be assumed that Congress was advised of the fact that, under the language above cited, there had been occasions when trustees in bankruptcy who happened to be lawyers were allowed compensation for legal services in addition to their commissions, contrary to the almost universal practice, which refuses such allowances in the case of executors or of trustees generally. Presumably, it was to provide against such allowances being made under the Bankrupt Act of July 1, 1898, that Congress, in section 48 of such Act, provided as follows: ‘Trustees shall receive in full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered [the various percentages therein state].’ This language is so precise, so unambiguous, and so explicit as to preclude the allowance of additional compensation upon any theory of a dual personality.

“The order of the District Court is reversed, and the claim for extra services is disallowed.”

While this rule seems unnecessarily strict yet it is established by the overwhelming weight of authority relative to the subject of trustees and attorney fees in other branches of law, as well as here; the rule arising from the difficulty of dissevering the interests of the employer and the employed where the trustee employs himself as attorney. However, on principle there would seem no good reason for prohibiting such allowance altogether. Certainly, the trustee’s intimate acquaintance with the affairs of the estate would especially fit him to approach the legal questions involved with better appreciation than a stranger. Undoubtedly the services he has charged for should be scrutinized with particular care to the end that he may not be obtaining extra compensation for the performance of the trustee’s duties, under the guise of allowances for professional services, contrary to the prohibition of § 72 of the act. Yet on principle it would seem that careful scrutiny should not be converted into an absolute prohibition altogether under any and all circumstances.⁵²

52. No charge (it is held in one case) should be made against the estate for services rendered to the receiver by an attorney who represents any of the parties to the litigation, so long as he continues to occupy that relation; the receiver’s attorney should stand independent.

In re Kelly Dry Goods Co., 4 A. B. R. 530, 102 Fed. 747 (D. C. Wis.): “It is the well-recognized rule in equity that the receiver shall engage counsel who stands independent of the parties to the litigation (Beach, Rec., § 262), and the estate is not chargeable for services which may be given to the receiver by the attorney for either party during the continuance of such relation. So, in the case at bar, unless the service for which the charge was allowed was both necessary and independent in the sense of the rule referred to, it is not allowable as an expense of the receivership. The purpose of the appointment of a receiver in bankruptcy is one of mere temporary custody, and the duties are generally of the utmost simplicity. If complications arise in which the parties before the court have opposing interests, he should not take counsel of either; and, if under any circumstances the attorney of either party is engaged by him, there must at least be complete severance of all service and duty to the litigant party. Otherwise, any service rendered must be deemed either gratuitous or in the interest of the original client. Here the attorneys for whom the charge is made appear both of record and in fact for the petitioning creditors before and after the receivership, are on the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, on the application for a receiver, and subsequently appear for the creditors at the meetings held during the continuance and after the close of the receivership. Under such conditions, any

§ 2060. Attorneys for Creditors Co-Operating with Trustee's or Receiver's Attorney Not Entitled.—Where the trustee or receiver has an attorney, no compensation is allowable out of the estate to attorneys for creditors assisting him or co-operating with him, even though the services be valuable.⁵³

In re Roadarmour, 24 A. B. R. 49, 177 Fed. 379 (C. C. A. Ohio): "No authorities are cited in support of a proposition that an attorney employed by creditors to oppose claims, after the appointment of a trustee, may be allowed compensation for such services, unless in a case where the trustee has improperly refused to make defense. Such a rule would open the door to a confused and disorderly practice, entirely out of harmony with the theory of the Bankrupt Act. We do not wish to be understood as holding that creditors may not be permitted, under proper safeguards, to defend against the allowance of claims where the trustee refuses to make defense, or that the bankruptcy court has no authority in such case, under its general equity powers, to allow compensation to attorneys employed by creditors for the purpose of such defense—as was permitted In re Little River Lumber Co., 3 Am. B. R. 682, 101 Fed. 558. It is enough to say that such a case is not before us."

In re Felson, 15 A. B. R. 185, 139 Fed. 275 (D. C. N. Y.): "Let the dividends go to the creditors, and let the creditors pay their attorneys. It is not for the court or referee to undertake, by 'allowances,' to see that the attorneys for creditors are taken care of. It is the duty of the court to take care of the creditors, and the duty of the creditors to take care of their attorneys, except in cases where allowances are directly authorized and permitted. The Bankruptcy Act of 1898 was framed and must be administered in the interest of creditors. This is a case where the transactions and conduct of the bankrupt justly aroused the indignation of the whole jewelry trade. The association took up the matter, and have pressed it honestly and sincerely in aid of the trustee; but this court cannot find, and indeed there has been no suggestion, that the trustee failed in his duty, so as to warrant allowances from the estate to creditors and associations who generously came to his aid because of the general desire and determination to vindicate the law."

Compare, In re Fidler & Son, 23 A. B. R. 16, 172 Fed. 635 (D. C. Pa.), wherein it was held that where a trustee had been derelict to his duty to such an extent that he had subsequently resigned to escape removal, an attorney for creditors who had stepped in and recovered assets and had become attorney for the new trustee was entitled to compensation from the estate from the time he took steps to have the former trustee removed. So far as this point is concerned, creditors might have been entitled to reimbursement for their attorney's fees and expenses from even an earlier period, under the provision of Bankr. Act, § 64 (b) (2). See ante, § 2016.

Similarly, the bankrupt's attorney should not be allowed for services properly performable by the receiver's or trustee's attorney, where a re-service rendered must be referable to their engagement for their clients, and, if chargeable to the estate for any amount, are in that relation only and upon special order of the court. The objection to the allowance must therefore be sustained. So ordered."

ceiver or trustee has been appointed.⁵⁴

§ 2060½. Costs Out of Estate for Trustee's Successful Opposition to Bankrupt's Discharge.—The intent of the Amendment of 1910 to Bankruptcy Act § 14b, permitting the trustee to oppose the discharge of the bankrupt when authorized so to do at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose undoubtedly was to give opportunity for a discharge to be opposed at the expense of all creditors rather than that the expense thereof should be saddled upon one or more creditors.

See report No. 691 of the Senate Judiciary Committee, 61st Congress, 2nd Commission: "Thereby the expenses of the proceedings in opposition to discharge will be spread over all the creditors and not be borne by a single creditor who might file objections."

However, it is essential in order that the opposition to the bankrupt's discharge, even though successful, be at the expense of the estate, that it be made by the trustee himself and that the trustee shall have been duly authorized to make the opposition, at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose. So the successful opposition to the bankrupt's discharge by certain creditors cannot be charged against the estate so long as it was neither made by the trustee nor in his name nor authorized at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose.

(Though it does not appear whether this case was decided before or after the amendment of 1910) In re Kyte, 26 A. B. R. 507, 189 Fed. 531 (D. C. Pa.): "The matter in dispute in this case was certified to the court, on petition of certain creditors of the bankrupt, for review of the order of the referee, refusing to allow a bill of costs incurred by the petitioners and others, creditors of the bankrupt, in opposing the bankrupt's discharge, in which they were successful.
* * *

"The costs for which payment is herein authorized are such as are allowed by this act arising from the bankruptcy proceedings in the administration of the estate. The costs claimed are not directed to be paid by the act and they did not grow out of the administration of the bankrupt's estates. * * * All acts necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose of converting the assets of the estate and distributing the same to and amongst the creditors legally entitled thereto, as well as any act tending to increase the value of the estate, or in some material manner benefit the estate of the bankrupt, whereby the general interests of all the creditors may be advanced, constitute the administration of the estate. The intent of the law is to administer the estate for the general interests of all the creditors with the least possible expense, and to this end when any proposition of interest, as well as detrimental to the creditors is made, the law provides that all the creditors shall have notice of a time and place to meet and either assent to or disapprove of such proposition. This undoubtedly is a provision of the law which has been created to throw a safeguard around the interests of the creditors so that the opportunity for abuse or mismanagement of their interests may be reduced to a minimum.

"The payment of costs and expenses incurred in a collateral proceeding by a creditor or creditors, without the formal approval of the general creditors, especially when it is not intended by such proceeding to increase the proceeds of the estate, should not be looked upon with favor. Such proceeding is administrative only when it tends to increase the income of the estate or prevent the waste of the estate in hand. In the present case it is not pretended that either of these ends were obtained, but on the contrary, it was a collateral proceeding instituted by certain of the bankrupt's creditors without the formal assent of the other creditors and without any apparent resultant benefit, either present or future, to any one; a personal action upon the initiative of those undertaking it, not administrative in character, and a personal triumph. The discharge of the bankrupt is a personal right and affects only personal rights and obligations, and the bankrupt is entitled to such discharge provided he has done nothing forbidden nor left undone anything required, whereby he may have forfeited such right to a discharge, but it does not affect the administration of his estate. The estate will be administered in the same manner whether or not the bankrupt is discharged, and the administration will be ended when all the dividends are disbursed and the estate is closed. This may occur before or after the question of the bankrupt's discharge has been finally determined; the administration of the estate will neither be retarded nor hastened on account of the discharge; they both proceed in regular course and in different channels. The costs in question not being costs fairly arising from the proceedings in the administration of the estate, it follows that the court is without warrant or justification to order the same to be paid out of the estate.

54. In re Lane Lumber Co., 30 A. B. R. 749, 206 Fed. 780 (D. C. Idaho).

"It also seems that a contrary interpretation of the law would be a dangerous doctrine to establish, as instead of the true intent of the law being carried out, the bankrupt might be submitted to the danger of vexatious opposition, contents multiplied, and estates diminished for no higher reason than to satisfy the whims or prejudices of some individual creditor, or to create fees for ambitious counsel. It would certainly not tend to the economical administration of the estate."

§ 2061. Exhausting Entire Estate in Attorney's Fees in Efforts to Discover Assets.—The expense of general administration, including reasonable attorney's and stenographer's fees for conducting an examination, are chargeable against the estate even if they absorb funds that would have been sufficient, at any rate, to pay priority claimants. The priority claimants are not like secured creditors, the owners of specific property holding defeasible title, but are simply entitled to be paid first after the expenses necessary to a due administration of the estate have been taken care of, including such expenses as are proper in the discovery of assets.⁵⁵

§ 2064. Is Matter of Right.—Petitioning creditors are entitled to their reasonable attorney's fee as of right.⁵⁸

In re Curtis, 4 A. B. R. 17, 100 Fed. 784 (C. C. A. Ills.): "The attorney for the petitioning creditors is entitled to this reasonable fee as of right. Its allowance or disallowance is not a matter of discretion."

And the right is that of the petitioning creditors themselves and the attorneys have no independent standing but must seek their compensation through the petitioning creditors.⁵⁹

§ 2065. Only One Fee, Irrespective of Number of Attorneys.—Only one fee may be allowed, irrespective of the number of attorneys employed.⁶⁰

In re Coney Island Lumber Co., 29 A. B. R. 91, 199 Fed. 197 (D. C. N. Y.): "If more than one attorney or set of attorneys render these services, there shall be a division of the fee, rather than duplication or multiplication. Hence, if one set of attorneys act for the petitioning creditors and are succeeded by others, or if the court sees fit or deems it necessary to allow some of the services on behalf of the petitioning creditors to be rendered by other attorneys, this will result in a division of the allowance, and not increase its amount. The provisions of the law must be complied with and the estate protected, and the statute is clearly broad enough to justify the court in protecting the estate, and in not allowing maladministration, through willful neglect, or through unintentional failure on the part of one set of attorneys to do what is necessary.

"The services to petitioning creditors are prior in time to the election of a trustee. They are for the benefit of the estate, in the same way in which the services of the trustee and his attorneys are for the benefit of the creditors generally; and no attorney should be allowed to receive compensation for work not done by him, but by some one else in his place, under a too strict interpretation of the statute; nor should the amount of the allowance be increased to satisfy all the parties at the expense of the estate."

Thus, where an involuntary partnership petition was filed, and afterwards the individual petition of one of the partners was also filed, and the two proceedings were consolidated, and allowances was made to the attorneys of the other partner for filing schedules, a later application by the voluntary bankrupt for attorney's services in procuring consolidation of the two proceedings will be refused.⁶¹

The term "one reasonable attorney's fee irrespective of the number of attorneys employed" is meant obviously to exclude compensation to different attorneys for traversing the same ground in preparation for trial and for more than what would be reasonable if one attorney alone conducted the trial. In so far as the compensation does not involve duplication of services, it would seem not improper for more than one attorney to be employed. The statute is not directed against the employment of more than one attorney, but against the allowance of more than one reasonable attorney fee. Thus, the investigation of facts and law and other preparation necessary to place the other attorney in the same position, should not be allowed for; and, in case more than one attorney participate in the trial on behalf of the petitioning creditors, no more should be allowed for all than if there had been but one.⁶²

§ 2066. Apportionment Where Intervening Creditors Assist.—

Allowance to intervening creditors, joining in the petition, may be made by apportioning the one fee allowable, where the services rendered were valuable to the estate.⁶³

Indeed, in one case,^{63a} the intervening creditors' attorneys alone were granted the fee, since the original petition was insufficient to warrant adjudication and other facts in the case made it equitable to so order.

§ 2067. Apportionment in Cases of Consolidation.—Upon the consolidation of two proceedings, the one attorney's fee should be equitably divided among the attorneys for the respective petitions.⁶⁴

It would seem the better practice for the court to ascertain first whether the partnership had employed counsel and to allow the fee solely to the partnership counsel; or, in case of disension between the members, to settle first who shall be entitled to the fee on notice to all partners.

were ordered by the court, there being no contest by the bankrupt, to assist in the preparation of the schedules of the said estate.

"I find that they are entitled to fees for professional services in preparing petition for adjudication, attendance at court, return day and the day set for hearing, at which time adjudication was granted; also for advising in the matter of continuance of business pending adjudication, interview with creditors after proceedings begun, and attending first meeting of creditors for appointment of trustee and examination of bankrupt. They are also entitled to fees for assisting the bankrupt in the preparation of the schedules."

Thus, attorney's fees should not be allowed for filing a second petition in bankruptcy, which was ignored and never acted upon;⁶⁶ even though the second attorney, by demurring to the first petition, causes an amendment of the first petition in a vital point;⁶⁷ nor for arguing in opposition to a motion to quash growing out of an error of the clerk of court in fixing the return day, which error might by due diligence have been mitigated by the attorney's early effort;⁶⁸ nor for amendments to the petition necessitated by their own oversight;⁶⁹ nor for arguing a motion due to their neglect to file a replication.⁷⁰ Nor should attorney's fees be allowed to petitioning creditors for consultation and investigations before it was finally determined to institute bankruptcy proceedings. Such services are for the clients themselves to take care of and are not chargeable against the estate.⁷¹

And it has been held that, save as to the filing fee, an allowance to the attorney for petitioning creditors will be refused where they were in sympathy with the bankrupt, and rendered services in opposition to the interests of the estate.⁷²

The impression among lawyers in this particular seems to be that the proceedings in involuntary cases should be likened to the practice in chancery, and that, where a creditor files a bill in equity to reach the assets of an insolvent debtor for the benefit of creditors generally, an allowance for the attorney of the petitioning creditors should not only be made a charge upon the general fund, but its extent should be the largest liberality of the chancellor."

§ 2070. "Amount Involved," Not Entire Estate but Only Surplus over Valid Liens.—And in considering the element of "amount involved," the allowance to petitioning creditors should be based on the amount realized for creditors over and above good and valid liens; for the adjudication is of no interest nor benefit to the lienholders—their liens are unaffected. It is only of benefit to general creditors, to create a fund for them; and the limits of that fund measure the "amount involved."⁷⁴

Nevertheless, if the petitioning creditors' attorney's fees were partly incurred in preserving the mortgaged property, such part might properly be assessed against the mortgaged property, in accordance with the usual rules relative to the priority of the expense of preserving a fund over the rights of lienholders therein.⁷⁵

§ 2075. No Allowance in General Out of Mortgaged Property Sold.—In general, no allowance should be made to petitioning creditors out of a fund derived from the sale of mortgaged property. They are concerned with the adjudication and in the surplus of the assets that will be rendered available to them by virtue of the adjudication⁸⁰ and that surplus should be the fund for their reimbursement and the limitation of their rights thereto.

In In re Gillaspie, 27 A. B. R. 59, 190 Fed. 88 (D. C. W. Va.): "The whole theory upon which the bankruptcy law authorizes the allowance of fees to the attorneys for petitioning creditors is that such creditors are acting for the joint benefit of themselves and all other unsecured creditors who will, by reason of their efforts, share equally with them in the unincumbered assets of the bankrupt. It is right and just that for this reason the fund secured to common creditors should, as against such creditors equally participating in it, share the expense incurred in securing it. But it is to be borne in mind that involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy can only be brought by unsecured creditors, and the fund that they can reach is only that which may arise after either the payment of the existing liens or from the sale of the property subject to liens. It must, therefore, always be a subject of careful consideration on the part of unsecured creditors whether it will be worth their while to proceed against one whose property is heavily incumbered, for they must do so taking the risk that no surplus fund will arise from which they may realize anything with which to pay their debts or the compensation due their attorneys.

"They can have no interest ordinarily in the funds necessary to pay off the valid subsisting liens, and certainly they cannot ask a court to pay their attorneys out of the funds due such lienholders for instituting and prosecuting a suit not calculated to benefit them, but only to diminish and lessen such lienor's vested right. It is true that it may be presumed that, if a man is bankrupt with his property incumbered with liens, a suit will have to be brought by some lienholder to marshal the liens and have sale decreed to satisfy the same. Therefore courts of bankruptcy, upon broad, equitable grounds, where there is reason to believe that the property may sell for an excess over the existing liens thereon, but it turns out that it does not, may well charge the actual costs of the suit and expenses of sale against the fund realized by the lienholders, for such costs of suit and expenses of sale would have had ordinarily to be incurred on some proceeding by them in order to sell and dispose of the property. But such allowance cannot extend further than this, and certainly not to the extent of compensating attorneys who have instituted the suit for unsecured creditors who have realized nothing. This is apparent for the very simple reasons, first, that lienholders cannot in any proceeding in equity to enforce liens be allowed compensation, as against other lienholders, for their attorneys in the suit instituted by them to enforce such liens; second, because, if such attorney's fees be allowed, then the junior lienholder's lien may be utterly and wholly consumed at the instance of unsecured creditors instituting the bankruptcy proceeding; and, third, because attorney's liens for fees attach only to such funds as may be secured by their effort to their clients, and those others who are in the same class with them as regards interest."

But, as said, ante, § 2070, whatever part, if any, of the petitioning creditors' attorneys' fees was incurred in preserving the mortgaged property may be properly charged against the mortgage fund.

§ 2076. Review of Allowance of Petitioning Creditor's Fees by Appeal.—The allowance of the petitioning creditor's attorney's fees by the district court is reviewable by appeal to the circuit court of appeals under § 25 (a) (3), as being the allowing or rejecting of a claim or demand against the estate in excess of $500.⁸¹ It is also reviewable by petition to revise.⁸²

In re Rosenthal & Lehman, 9 A. B. R. 627, 120 Fed. 848 (D. C. Mo.): "This is an involuntary case, and therefore one reasonable attorney's fee, such as the court may allow for professional services actually rendered to the bankrupt while performing the duties prescribed by the act, should be included in and paid out of the estate as a part of the costs of administration.

"By the provisions of § 7 of the act (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3425) it is made the duty of the bankrupt in all cases to attend the first meeting of creditors, if directed by the court so to do; and when there, and at such other times as the court may order, 'to submit to an examination concerning the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind and whereabouts of his property, and in addition all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate.' The same section imposes other duties upon the bankrupt, some of which (like preparing schedules of property and list of creditors) from their nature justify and require the aid of professional counsel; while others (like complying with specific orders of court, or informing the trustee of any attempt known to him of creditors or other persons to evade the provisions of the act), from their essential nature, do not require, and would not justify, the employment of professional counsel to aid the bankrupt in their performance. And there are still other duties of the bankrupt (like attending the hearing upon his application for discharge from his debts) which may or may not require the aid of professional counsel in their performance.

"From these observations, as well as from the language employed in § 64b

(U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447), it seems clear that Congress did not intend by the provisions of the last-mentioned section to lay down a fixed rule authorizing a bankrupt to employ, at the expense of the estate, counsel to defend him in the performance of every duty prescribed by the act. Only such a reasonable attorney's fee as the court may allow in each individual case, and only such professional aid as the nature, exigency, and difficulty of the duty to be performed in each individual case reasonably require, seem to have been within the contemplation of Congress, as shown by a consideration of all the provisions of both sections in question.

"The test laid down in some cases, and which was applied by the referee in this case, is that legal services in aid of the administration of the estate should be paid for out of the funds of the estate, while those for the personal benefit or protection of the bankrupt should not be so paid. This may or may not be a correct test, but the difficulty arises in determining what services are purely personal, as distinguished from those which are incidental to the administration of the estate under the Bankruptcy Act. The act of 1898, like its predecessors, has, broadly speaking, two fundamental purposes—one to relieve an honest debtor from the incubus of overwhelming debt, and restore him to the activities of business life; another is to make a just and equitable distribution of the bankrupt's estate among his creditors. The true administration of an estate in bankruptcy is concerned as much with securing a discharge to the debtor as with the distribution of his assets, and to that end it is frequently essential for the bankrupt to make a full showing with relation to his property and business methods. He is ordered to appear before the referee for an examination touching 'the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind and whereabouts of his property, and in addition all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate.' The scope of this examination may, and frequently does, involve inquiries relative to matters about which the bankrupt has made oath, and other matters which, by § 14b, preclude discharge. Obviously the personal benefit and protection of the bankrupt at such an examination is involved, and so, also, the accomplishment of one of the main purposes of the act—to secure the discharge of an honest debtor—is involved. Thus it appears that what is for the personal benefit and protection of the bankrupt may also be of commanding importance in the just and impartial administration of the bankruptcy law."

It is proper for the referee of his own motion to reduce the amount allowed to the attorney by the trustee in his report, if it appears to be too large.

In re Ferreri, 26 A. B. R. 658, 188 Fed. 675 (D. C. La.): "In this matter appeal has been taken from the ruling of the Referee, first, as to his action in reducing on his own motion the fee of the attorney of the bankrupt. * * *

"There can be no doubt that the referee has the right, and it is his duty, to reduce the amount allowed by the trustee as fees of the attorney for the bankrupt, if too much. The law provides for one reasonable attorney's fee, and the Referee is by long odds in the best position to determine what is reasonable in the premises."

fined to professional services in assisting the bankrupt to perform the duties imposed upon him in § 7 of the act⁸⁴ and elsewhere in the law.⁸⁵

In re Payne, 18 A. B. R. 193 (D. C. N. Y.): "Under this it would seem that the basis of compensation is not payment for all services which the bankrupt may request of his attorney, but for the services to the bankrupt, in involuntary cases, while performing the duties prescribed upon the bankrupt by the bankruptcy law. Most of the work covered by the application for this allowance was apparently work done at the request of the bankrupt, and not work required from the bankrupt's attorney by the provisions of the statute."

In re Mayor, 4 A. B. R. 241, 101 Fed. 695 (D. C. Wis.): "The test for compensation out of the estate is whether the service is rendered in the performance of the bankrupt's duty in aid of the estate and its administration, and not whether the bankrupt stands in need of the service of counsel for his personal benefit and protection in any of the proceedings."

§ 2079. Actual Benefit to Estate Not Test, However.—Actual benefit to the estate is not, however, essential. The attorney for the bankrupt is not hired by the estate. His fees are for services rendered primarily to the bankrupt but which are, in many instances, equally beneficial to creditors by putting the estate in the course of an equal distribution in bankruptcy.⁸⁶

In re Christianson, 23 A. B. R. 710, 175 Fed. 867 (D. C. N. C.): "The services are not confined to those which are beneficial to the estate, but embrace those which are reasonably necessary to enable the bankrupt to perform his duties under the act and secure the benefit of its provisions. It should not be forgotten that the Bankruptcy Act is for the benefit of the bankrupt as well as his creditors. It is no less concerned that he shall be discharged from the burden of his debts than that he shall turn over all his property except his exemptions for the benefit of his creditors."

§ 2080. Services Must Be Reasonably Necessary and Actually Rendered.—In the absence of proof that the employment of counsel in a given case is reasonably necessary and that the services were secured and actually rendered in good faith to promote the purposes of the Bankrupt

Act, a claim therefor must be disallowed.⁸⁷

§ 2081. Must Be Professional Legal Services, and Not Merely Clerical or Business.—Neither clerical work, such as that of posting the bankrupt's books, so that the information therein contained would be available in making up the schedules; nor the making of extra copies of the schedules, after the first one was made, may be charged for at professional rates.⁸⁸ Nor may purely business assistance be so charged for.

And the attorney must disclose his financial dealings with his client that the court may act intelligently.⁸⁹

§ 2082. Legal Assistance in Preparing Schedules, Examining Claims at First Meeting, etc., Proper.—Thus the bankrupt may have fees allowed to his attorney for helping him prepare his schedules, for helping him examine claims so as to be able to report to the creditors whether the claims are correct or not, etc., etc.; for these are necessary services rendered him while he is engaged in the performance of his statutory duties.⁹⁰

In re Lane Lumber Co., 30 A. B. R. 749, 206 Fed. 780 (D. C. Idaho): "The next is an item of $750 for the preparation of the schedules. This being a duty clearly imposed upon the bankrupt, we have but to consider the nature and extent of the legal services necessarily involved therein and the reasonable value thereof. Unquestionably a measure of professional knowledge and skill is required for the proper discharge of such a duty, and perhaps in almost every case some allowance upon this account may properly be made, but I had supposed that rarely, if ever, could the amount exceed $100, and commonly a much smaller sum would be adequate.

"It, is, however, contended that the case is an unusual one, and assuming it to be such we shall consider it upon its own merits. It is to be borne in mind that the duty of preparing the schedules is primarily imposed upon the bankrupt. He may secure such clerical and legal assistance as are reasonably necessary, but he cannot at the expense of the estate employ attorneys and shift to them the entire burden and responsibility. The statute provides that the bankrupt shall 'prepare, make oath to, and file in court' the schedule, setting forth certain facts; and it was contemplated that he should at least furnish the requisite information, and that the assistance provided for him at the expense of the estate would extend only to the matter of putting the information into the prescribed legal form.

"It is not thought to be necessary to attempt a fine distinction between the duties which are strictly professional and those which are merely clerical, in the preparation of a schedule, but in estimating the compensation which should be allowed respect must be had to the nature of the work, for the compensation should be measured with regard to the character and quality of the service rather than the calling or profession of him by whom the service is rendered. Now it is not to be questioned that ordinarily the work of preparing a schedule is in the main that of an intelligent accountant. In re Goldville Mfg. Co. (D. C. S. Car.), 10 A. B. R. 552, 559, 123 Fed. 579, 586. With a few simple instructions touching the required contents of the schedule, the various headings under which assets and liabilities should be classified, and the formalities of execution, no competent accountant should experience serious difficulty in substantially complying with the law."

But it has been held that the bankrupt's attorney is not entitled to compensation for a mere attendance at the first meeting of creditors where his services were of no beneficial effect.⁹¹

In re [Francis Levy] Outfitting Co., Lt., 29 A. B. R. 8 (D. C. Hawaii): "Of these items the only one which could possibly be considered is that of 'attendance before referee at first meeting of creditors.' As to that item, there is no showing that the bankrupt's attorney rendered any services of value to the estate by his presence at the meeting; particularly, it does not appear that he there aided the bankrupt in any way in 'performing the duties * * * prescribed' by the statute. And it does appear from the referee's minutes in this matter that nothing was done at this meeting but the election of the trustee and the fixing of his bond, and that the meeting adjourned to a day certain for the important unfinished business of examining the president of the bankrupt corporation; at this meeting the bankrupt's attorney did not appear, nor on the day to which a further adjournment was had, when this examination finally took place. Had the attorney secured the preparation of the bankrupt's schedules of assets and liabilities, which have not yet been filed, and which the statute requires to be filed by an involuntary bankrupt 'within ten days, unless further time is granted, after the adjudication' (Bankruptcy Act, § 7), that would have been a work of some value to the estate, and assistance of this kind is noted as a good example of what the statute intended in allowing a fee to the bankrupt in 'performing the duties * * * prescribed' by law. All that could be allowed for attending the first meeting of creditors in a short session, such as here, and where the attorney was, so far as appears, of no assistance thereat, would be a nominal fee. But under the circumstances, where the attorney did not stay out the meeting through its adjourned session, at which important business was had, and has not, so far as appears, done anything to facilitate or encourage the performance of the bankrupt's first and most important duty (next to the physical discovery and delivery of assets) of filing his schedules, I do not feel justified in allowing any fee whatever. His diligence clearly entitles him to a fee, but he was serving his clients, the bankrupt and its officers, and to them alone must he look for his reward."

the allowance of fees for the bankrupt's attorney.⁹² In estimating the element of "amount involved" in arriving at the reasonableness of the bankrupt's attorney fee, the amount of the entire estate is not to be taken but only the amount left outside of the valid liens,⁹³ as in cases of allowance to petitioning creditors for attorney's fees.

§ 2085. And None for Services in Opposing Bankruptcy Proceedings.—Bankrupt's attorney fees should not be allowed where they are incurred in opposing the progress of the bankruptcy proceedings rather than in assisting it.⁹⁵

Pratt v. Bothe, 12 A. B. R. 533, 130 Fed. 670 (C. C. A. Mich.): "By § 64b, the law provides for compensation to an attorney who assists the bankrupt in performing the duties imposed upon him. But this is done for the purpose of facilitating the proceedings, and for the benefit of the estate. It is not done in recognition of any contract obligation of the bankrupt. Many cases have been cited to us—mostly cases arising upon the last preceding act—in which the bankruptcy courts have given some countenance to the appellant's contention that the debtor may employ counsel to resist the petition of his creditors for an order adjudicating him a bankrupt, and charge his assets, with the payment thereof, and in one case that doctrine seems to have been quite pointedly held. In re Comstock, 6 Fed. Cas. 239, No. 3,074. The idea which pervades the allowance of such a charge seems to have been grounded upon a disposition to be merciful to the debtor, who, it is said, has given up all his property, and is without other means of repelling an unjust prosecution. But it is by no means a new thing—indeed, it is a situation constantly recurring—where a man, whether by his fault or his misfortune, is without means to make full defense of his property rights. It is unfortunate often, but it has never been thought that property belonging to others, or which might be adjudged to them, should be drawn upon to enable the man to make defense. Many cases are cited which more or less oppugn the doctrine of such decisions as In re Comstock, supra."

But compare, contra, where bankrupt's attorney was allowed attorney's fees for unsuccessful opposition to the adjudication of bankruptcy. In re Perlbeffer & Shatz, 25 A. B. R. 586 (Ref. N. Y.), one reason given therefor being that the same facts concerned the discharge. However, discharge also is not to be compensated for.

In re Woodard, 2 A. B. R. 692, 95 Fed. 955 (D. C. N. Car.): "There is no evidence before the court that the bankrupt has performed the duties prescribed. He made an assignment with preferences—the act of bankruptcy complained of—and has been actively engaged in trying to defeat or delay the proceedings at every stage, and making the proceedings as expensive as possible. To make the allowance for the services of an attorney in this behalf does not seem to be contemplated in the act. The court has seen and heard nothing to warrant the exercise of the discretion in this behalf."

Obiter, In re Rosenthal & Lehman, 9 A. B. R. 626, 120 Fed. 848 (D. C. Mo.): "It goes without saying that, if the services of counsel are secured, or, when secured, are employed for the purpose of screening the bankrupt from the consequences of his own wrongful conduct, or for the purpose of suppressing the truth, or otherwise thwarting the operation of the act, no compensation can reasonably be allowed by the court to be paid out of the assets of the estate. The test, in my opinion, is whether the employment is necessarily made, and the services necessarily rendered in good faith for the real purpose of so administering the act in a given case as to accomplish the purposes of its enactment. If the employment is reasonably necessary to aid either in the discovery of assets, or securing the bankrupt's discharge, or protecting the bankrupt from unjust charges or imputations or wrong, such as would subject him to the penalties of the act, a reasonable allowance should be made therefor. If, on the other hand, there is no reasonable necessity for the employment for either of the foregoing purposes, or if the employment is not in good faith to protect an innocent debtor in the assertion of his rights under the act, then no allowance should be made therefor."

Obiter, In re Kross, 3 A. B. R. 187, 96 Fed. 816 (D. C. N. Y.): "And the much more common 'service' in aiding the bankrupt to conceal, justify or extenuate questionable acts or transactions, must be equally excluded, since it is not 'reasonable' under § 60 or § 64 to charge the estate, to the detriment of creditors, for services in extricating or endeavoring to extricate or shield the bankrupt from difficulties caused by his own questionable conduct."

Whether, if the bankrupt is in contempt, his attorney's fees should be allowed him, the application therefor being in his own right, has not been decided, but it has been decided that if the application were made prior to the misconduct, the attorney's fees may be allowed, the attorney in no wise participating in the misconduct.

In re Mayer, 4 A. B. R. 239, 101 Fed. 695 (D. C. Wis.): "The bankrupt is in contempt, and clearly cannot move the court for any matter of indulgence until he has cleared his contempt. Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 436, 17 Sup. Ct. 841, 42 L. Ed. 215. Whether this general rule would exclude him from invoking subsequently the benefits secured by statute of an allowance for his attorney is a question not presented on this record, for the reason that the application was made and the attorney's services were rendered before the occurrence of the contempt; and it is undoubted, both from the circumstances of the case and the reputation of his attorneys at this bar, that they were in no manner privy to the disobedience of the final order of the court. To the extent that such services were rendered within the intent of the statute, the subsequent misconduct of the bankrupt, without fault on the part of the attorneys, cannot serve to preclude the allowance of a fee."

Obiter, In re Christianson, 23 A. B. R. 710, 175 Fed. 867 (D. C. N. C.): "It cannot include services performed in an attempt to aid the bankrupt in cheating his creditors, or evading any of the provisions of the act intended for their protection."

But where the attorney was not privy to the bankrupt's misconduct, he should not be denied a reasonable fee for services not aiding in the misconduct.⁹⁶

§ 2086. For Attendance at Bankrupt's Examination.—Bankrupt's attorney fees for attendance on the bankrupt's own examination are allowable. It has been contended that the bankrupt should not be entitled to reimbursement of his attorney's fees for the attorney's presence at the bankrupt's general examination, on the theory perhaps that all the bankrupt has to do on his general examination is to testify to the truth and that he needs no attorney to help him do that.⁹⁷ The practice, however, is the other way; and attorney's fees for attendance at the bankrupt's examination are customarily allowed.⁹⁸

In re Duran Mercantile Co., 29 A. B. R. 450, 199 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Mex.): "The next claim is for attending the bankrupt on several days before the referee. The court deems this attendance, if really for any great length of time, as largely unnecessary. There is nothing to show, either from the record or from the oral testimony, that there was any attack made upon the good faith of these bankrupts. Their presence before the referee was purely for the information of creditors. Presence of their counsel was hardly necessary, unless, perhaps, for the first day, because all they had to do was to tell what they knew about the business, and, if their failure was an honest one, no advice was necessary as to how to tell the truth. In this class of cases the court will consider, unless exceptional circumstances are shown, that an allowance of $25 for assistance by the attorney to the bankrupt rendered before the referee is reasonable, and that will be allowed in this case."

In re Lane Lumber Co., 30 A. B. R. 749, 206 Fed. 780 (D. C. Idaho): "The magnitude of the item, if not startling, at least challenges our attention, and gives sharp emphasis to the inquiry whether it is contemplated by the Bankruptcy Act that estates shall be burdened with the expense of furnishing a legal attendant for the bankrupt while he is present pursuant to an order of the court at the first meeting of creditors, and sessions of the court, either to give information or to submit to examination under oath. While contingencies doubtless may arise where the assistance of counsel may be reasonably required, it is thought that there is no presumption of such need, and that ordinarily attorney's fees for such services are not chargeable against the estate. * * * In the great majority of cases I can see no reason why the bankrupt should have the assistance of counsel in the performance of the simple duty required, or the burden of fees therefor imposed upon the estate. Quite obviously the purpose of requiring the attendance of the bankrupt is that he may give information, either voluntarily or under oath, touching any matter which may affect the administration and the settlement of the estate. He has no obligation except to disclose facts within his knowledge. He attends primarily as a witness, and there is ordinarily no more reason why he, as a witness, should have the protecting care of attendant counsel, than that any other witness under any other circumstances should have such protection. It is to be guarded against unwittingly or inadvertently doing or saying something which might be prejudicial to his right to a discharge in bankruptcy; if he is willing frankly to disclose the facts, he can, as a rule, suffer no prejudice. But here even that consideration is of little moment, for no one can be greatly concerned in the question whether or not a corporation shall be discharged, or in opposing such discharge. Nor could there here arise any question touching the matter of exemptions, for a corporation is not entitled to exemptions. Ordinarily, why should not the bankrupt put himself at the service of the trustee, who is presumably not antagonistic, and who should not, and presumably does not have any motive or incentive to injure him or prejudice him in any of his rights? Instead of laying the facts before counsel especially employed by him, why should he not disclose them directly to the trustee or the attorney for the trustee?

"If it were shown that the trustee and his attorney were disposed unjustly to attack him or to treat him unfairly, possibly he should have the assistance of counsel, but ordinarily it may be assumed that if any such disposition were shown the referee or judge would check it and see that his rights were protected while acting as a witness or informant, as the court will protect a witness against wrong or abuse in any other case or proceeding in which he appears in obedience to process."

Compare In re Kross, 3 A. B. R. 187, 96 Fed. 816 (D. C. N. Y.): "Ordinarily I cannot regard attendance by counsel for the bankrupt at all the various examinations as necessary. The restraints on discharge being confined to acts either criminal or most plainly fraudulent and wrong, the honest and straightforward debtor has rarely need of 'counsel,' unless falsely attacked, when professional aid may become proper and necessary, and should then be compensated. There is often, however, too much interference and objection by the bankrupt's attorney in the ordinary examination in behalf of creditors, which operates in every way injuriously. 'Services' of this kind should, of course, be ignored."

§ 2087. Whether Fees Allowable for Petition for Discharge, etc.

—It would seem, on reason, perhaps, that no attorney's fees should be allowed in involuntary cases for preparing the petition for discharge nor for defending the same, if it be attacked by creditors.⁹⁹

In re Duran Mercantile Co., 29 A. B. R. 450, 199 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Mex.): "Now, the discharge of a bankrupt is a collateral matter. If he does not care to be discharged, he need never be, and in that event the estate will nevertheless be closed. His discharge is of no relevancy to the creditors. It is a matter that concerns him and his future, not the estate. I think, therefore, that the cost for this is not to be allowed as part of the compensation of the attorney for the bankrupt, and it will be accordingly disallowed." [This case was even a voluntary case, apparently.]

Analogously (voluntary case), In re Brundin, 7 A. B. R. 298 (D. C. Minn.): "It will be observed from the language of the act above quoted that the only allowance of attorney's fees is as part of 'the cost of administration.' It follows that services of an attorney not connected with the administration of the estate are not to be paid out of the estate. The administration of the estate includes the proceedings from the petition until the estate is reduced to money, and the dividends paid and the estate closed. Then the administration ends. In involuntary cases it will be observed that no allowance is made to the bankrupt for attorney's services in resisting the petition, but only while performing the duties required by the act. * * *

"The discharge of the bankrupt, while it will affect his personal rights and obligations, and the rights of his creditors, does not in any way affect the administration of his estate in the court of bankruptcy. It can neither add nor take away a dollar from that estate. The trustee, who administers the estate, and the referee, under whose charge and direction this is done, have nothing to do with the discharge of the bankrupt. The bankrupt may apply for his discharge at the end of one month after the adjudication, and before the administration has passed its preliminary stage, or postpone that matter till the lapse of nearly a year—perhaps months after the administration is ended and the estate closed. The fact that the act requires him to attend the hearing upon his application for discharge is a regulation concerning the matter of discharge alone, which, although a proceeding in bankruptcy, is for the benefit of the bankrupt only, and has nothing to do with the administration of the estate.

"If, by reason of the opposition of some creditor, the services of any attorney may be necessary for the bankrupt, that is his individual concern, and neither reason nor anything in the act suggests that the estate be depleted to furnish him counsel, at the cost of his creditors. Should counsel fees be allowed for services in this case, it must be for the reason that they should be allowed in every case where employed, and would lead to the abuse of needless employment. They would also have to be paid from the estate as well where the bankrupt has committed acts which will prevent his discharge as in the cases where discharge is granted."

Inferentially, In re Mayers, 4 A. B. R. 238, 1101 Fed. 695 (D. C. Wis.): "The test for compensation out of the estate is whether the service is rendered in the performance of the bankrupt's duty in aid of the estate and its administration, and not whether the bankrupt stands in need of the service of counsel for his personal benefit and protection in any of the proceedings. No sanction appears in any of the provisions for an allowance in the last mentioned view, and its adoption would violate the general consistency of the act for securing economy in administration. Indeed, the policy of compensating counsel assigned by the courts to aid needy defendants in criminal prosecutions has never been adopted by Congress, and it would seem anomalous to impose the burden of such defense of a bankrupt on the creditors. The opinion recently handed down in the Circuit Court of Appeals for this circuit (In re Curtis [4 Am. B. R. 17], 100 Fed. 784), is well in point, both for a general rule of construction to be applied to the act in reference to expenses and for its interpretation of the analogous allowance in the same connection of an attorney's fee to the petitioning creditors in involuntary cases. It is held to be limited strictly 'to the service rendered in procuring the adjudication.' On the construction indicated, the services rendered in preparing the schedules, and in attendance on the examination of the bankrupt before the referee pursuant to the order, are entitled to an allowance. All other claims are rejected, including that for 'retainer.'"

But compare, contra, although the case is not closely reasoned upon this particular point, In re Kross, 3 A. B. R. 187, 96 Fed. 816 (D. C. N. Y.): "I am not prepared to say, however, that services as counsel in aid of the bankrupt in litigations over his discharge are to be wholly excluded, when such aid has become necessary without the fault or misconduct of the bankrupt himself. Considering that all attorneys in this country are counselors also, and that the latter term is used in § 60, I should not be inclined to construe the words 'attorney's fee' in § 64 in the narrowest and strictest sense, so as to exclude necessarily such services by counsel as were really required. But, for obvious reasons, claims on this ground should be admitted only most sparingly and with great caution and they should be confined to services during the bankruptcy proceedings itself, excluding previous consultations or advice, as well as all unnecessary attendance as 'counsel' in the course of the proceedings." [This case must have been a case of voluntary bankruptcy, bankrupt's attorney's fees in which are allowable "as the court may direct;" for certainly in involuntary bankruptcies the words of the statute are plain enough that the allowance must be confined to services necessary to assist the bankrupt to perform his statutory duties—it being no part of his statutory duties to file his petition for discharge.]

It would seem to be undoubtedly improper to allow attorney's fees for filing or defending the petition for discharge in involuntary cases; for it is not one of the bankrupt's duties to file such petition nor to defend it. The law simply grants him the privilege of a discharge—it is not a "duty."¹

But, perhaps the bankrupt should be allowed for necessary attorney's fees while in attendance at the hearing upon his application for discharge, such attendance being one of his statutory duties.² What services would be embraced within those rendered necessary by such required attendance does not seem to have been determined. It would be strange, indeed, if creditors should have to pay for the bankrupt's attorney's services in defending the petition for discharge.

allowed for services rendered the bankrupt in a contest over his exemptions,⁴ nor for services pertaining to the adjudication;⁵ nor for services pertaining to the trustee's suits to set aside conveyances made by the bankrupt, nor pertaining to negotiations for compromises thereof;⁶ nor for services pertaining to an order of sale of real estate; nor to questions of the bankrupt's ownership of personal property.⁷

In re Castleberry, 16 A. B. R. 430, 143 Fed. 1021 (D. C. Ga.): "Legal services to a bankrupt in having his exemptions allowed is a matter between the bankrupt and his attorneys."

In re O'Hara, 21 A. B. R. 508, 171 Fed. 290 (D. C. Pa.): "There was considerable controversy over the exemption, including a hearing before the referee and an appeal to the court; and although the claim in both instances was disallowed, it may well be, that, as between the bankrupt and his attorney, the amount now asked for was fully earned. But the Bankruptcy Act only provides, § 64b, 3, for payment out of the estate of 'one reasonable attorney's fee * * * for professional services actually rendered * * * to the bankrupt in involuntary cases while performing the duties herein prescribed;' evidently referring to those previously enumerated in § 7a. In re Woodard, 2 Am. B. R. 692, 95 Fed. 955; In re Payne, 18 Am. B. R. 192, 151 Fed. 1018. These are duties which aid in the settlement of the estate, which is no doubt the reason for the allowance to counsel, and among them the endeavor to secure for the bankrupt his exemption claim is not one. In re Castleberry, 16 Am. B. R. 430, 143 Fed. 1021. The same is true where the services have to do with obtaining a discharge; which shows the principle involved. In re Brundin, 7 Am. B. R. 296, 112 Fed. 306. The exceptions are overruled, and the action of the referee is affirmed."

But services in the preparation of his schedule of exempted property are to be allowed for, for such preparation is one of the bankrupt's duties.⁸

§ 2089. Bankrupt's Attorney's Fee More Discretionary in Voluntary than in Involuntary Cases.—The fee allowable to the bankrupt's attorney is more discretionary in voluntary cases than in involuntary cases.⁹

In purely voluntary cases it may be allowed as the court may see fit.¹⁰

In re Burrus, 3 A. B. R. 296, 97 Fed. 926 (D. C. Va.): "The only provision of the Bankruptcy Act regulating the amount to be allowed and paid out of the estate as an attorney's fee in cases of voluntary bankruptcy is found in § 64b, which provides for one 'reasonable fee,' irrespective of the number of attorneys employed. This section evidently intended to and does vest solely in the sound discretion of the court the amount to be allowed under the circumstances of each case."

§ 2090. Test in Voluntary Cases, in General.—The test, in voluntary cases, in general is that the services be rendered in assisting the bankrupt to perform his statutory duties and, in addition, such other services may be allowed for as are beneficial to creditors, rendered before any receiver, trustee or marshal is in charge.

Thus, in voluntary cases, the bankrupt should be allowed for legal services rendered to him while he is in the performance of his statutory duties, as in involuntary cases.¹¹

In re Duran Mercantile Co., 29 A. B. R. 450, 199 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Mex.): "The wording of the statute—Bankruptcy Act, § 64b (3)—is 'for cost of administration,' including an attorney's fee for one attorney for the bankrupt in voluntary cases. When, therefore, we look at the attorney's fee, we must look at it in the light of the question as to whether or not it is 'cost of administration;' that is, whether the services rendered went to the benefit of the estate or the progress of the administration of the estate."

In re Terrill, 4 A. B. R. 625, 103 Fed. 781 (D. C. Vt.): "This is a voluntary case, and the law refers to what services are actually rendered by an attorney for the bankrupt, in assisting him about what the law requires him to do, such as preparing the petition and schedules."

Attorney's fees are allowable for preparing the voluntary petition for adjudication and schedules and for attendance in procuring adjudication.¹²

And in addition thereto, as above stated, he should be allowed for such other services as are beneficial to the estate, rendered before any receiver or trustee or other officer is placed in charge of the estate.¹³

In re Kross, 3 A. B. R. 190, 96 Fed. 819 (D. C. N. Y.): "I have already stated the general nature of the services which I think are designed to be covered by the allowance. In voluntary cases they are such as are indispensable to enable the bankrupt properly to bring his case into bankruptcy, surrender his estate and perform his duties for the benefit of creditors on the one hand, and to receive his discharge if entitled to it, on the other. Section 64 speaks only of an attorney's fee; while § 60, subd. d, uses the word 'counselor' also. The services contemplated by both are doubtless for the most part those of an attorney only, as distinguished from the services of 'counsel.' They include the preparation of the necessary legal papers, procuring the adjudication and reference, bringing the debtor before the referee for such subsequent proceedings as may be required, making in due time the application for discharge, attendance before the judge and referee, as may be needful, and throughout the proceedings keeping himself informed of their progress and giving such attention to the essential steps in the bankrupt's behalf as will secure to him a regular and valid discharge. These are the ordinary attorney's duties."

In re Duran Mercantile Co., 29 A. B. R. 450, 199 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Mex.): "Now, as to the next item, the matter of the stay order secured against the attachment proceedings brought by one of the creditors in the District Court of Torrance county, the court's view is that this is compensated properly out of the estate. It goes to the administration of the estate that this suit should be arrested; otherwise, the assets of the estate will be diverted, and not applicable to this proceeding."

Also for procuring a reduction of taxes that would otherwise have been a preferred claim upon the assets and which could not have been as advantageously reduced by the trustee or receiver as by the bankrupt.¹⁴

Probably, though the cases are not in harmony on the point, the bankrupt estate ought not to pay the expense, in a voluntary case, of the bankrupt's getting his discharge, inasmuch as the estate is in no wise benefited thereby and as the bankrupt, at the time of applying for discharge, has presumably gathered enough of a new estate to enable him to defray the expense of procuring his discharge.¹⁵ Such is the undoubted rule in involuntary cases, as we have seen.^{15a}

And services really rendered in the interest of a preferred creditor, especially those rendered after the bankrupt's death, should not be charged against the estate as part of the bankrupt's allowance for attorney's fees.¹⁶

§ 2091. Preliminary Consultations May Be Charged for, in Voluntary Cases.—Consultations in reference to the filing of the bankruptcy petition and the preparation of the schedules may be charged for, in voluntary cases.¹⁷

In re Kross, 3 A. B. R. 187, 96 Fed. 819 (D. C. N. This clause of paragraph 3, therefore, indicates the general nature of the services for which a fee is designated to be allowed, viz., those professional services which presumably are necessary and indispensable to the bankrupt to enable him to perform the duties required of him by the act for the benefit of creditors on the one hand, or to secure his own correlative right to discharge on the other."

However, one case holds that the attorney's fees should not as a rule be allowed for mere consultations—that they are to be allowed for services as attorney rather than as counsel, although in some instances counsel fees might be allowed.¹⁹ And another case holds it discretionary with the court in voluntary cases to refuse to allow bankrupt's attorney's fees to be paid out of fraudulently conveyed property that has been recovered by the trustee.²⁰

Whether Different Principles Govern from Those Where Allowed Out of Estate.—Whether the prepayment, or security, of attorney's fees previous to bankruptcy is to be regulated by different principles from those governing the allowance of the bankrupt's attorney's fees out of the estate is not clear. Prepayment of attorneys' fees by bankrupts is not favored in bankruptcy, it is said in one case.²⁹

It has been held that § 60 (d) refers only to professional services rendered before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, and not to those rendered during their pendency, the section having been enacted in order to cover those cases which neither could be reached by plenary action, as for a preference, etc. (because, being a prepayment, it could not have been made on a pre-existing debt) nor would be subject to control by way of allowance by the court under § 64 (b) for services during the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings; the two sections, §§ 60 (d) and 64 (b), together constituting a complete remedy for attorney's fees in regard to the bankruptcy, whether for services rendered before or those rendered after the actual institution of the proceedings.³⁰

the character above described, which were to be and were in fact rendered prior to the bankruptcy. Under former Bankruptcy Acts the question arose repeatedly, whether counsel rendering services prior to bankruptcy, and who had not been paid, should be treated as a general or a preferred creditor; and the uncertainty of receiving adequate compensation as a general creditor would naturally stimulate the practice of paying in advance. Therefore, it being possible to deal with attorneys who are general creditors, or with such as had in fact been paid for past services, in the same manner as other creditors had to be dealt with, § 60d not only embodies a design and remedy to reach the cases where advance payments have been made, but, to be effective, there must be a limit of time within which the contemplated future services are to be rendered. Such limit, as indicated in Pratt v. Bothe, supra, is the date of filing the petition in bankruptcy. Judge Severens there said: 'The Bankruptcy Act makes a final and sharply defined line in respect of the power of the bankrupt over his estate and the distribution of it as of the date of the filing of the petition against him. From that time his assets are in gremio legis, and he cannot, unless he compounds with his creditors, bind his assets. He may, of course, make new contracts, and incur new obligations; but they are not chargeable to the funds which have become vested in the trustee until they have subverted the purpose of the bankruptcy proceedings, when, if anything remains, he reacquires it. It would be wholly inconsistent with the scheme of the act that a debtor in contemplation of bankruptcy should be permitted to make an arrangement whereby he should have power, after his assets shall have gone into the hands of the trustee, to alter their disposition by appropriating them to the payment for services thereafter rendered to him, or, indeed, to satisfy the obligations of any executory contract. With respect to services rendered to the bankrupt in the present case after the creditor's petition was filed, it is to be observed that the compensation therefor was not due and owing at the time of the filing of the creditor's petition, and so was not a provable claim. It would be anomalous that the debtor, by preconcert with his attorney, could defeat that provision by an agreement for a benefit to accrue to the bankrupt after the proceedings should be inaugurated, and make the compensation therefor a privileged claim. By section 64b the law provides for compensation to an attorney who assists the bankrupt in performing the duties imposed upon him. But this is done for the purpose of facilitating the proceedings, and for the benefit of the estate. It is not done in recognition of any contract obligation of the bankrupt.'

"Thus, if § 60d is construed as referring to services rendered prior to, and § 64b to services rendered after, the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings, remedies are provided for meeting distinct situations. The cases herein cited, as well as others (see, for example, In re Kross [D. C., N. Y.], 3 Am. B. R. 187, 96 Fed. 816; In re Cummins [D. C., N. Y.], 28 Am. B. R. 385, 196 Fed. 224) disclose a diversity of opinion upon nearly every phase of these two sections, which, at least as to the character of services covered by § 60d, will probably exist until adjudication by the Supreme Court, or until amendment by Congress. However, if the construction herein will enable the accomplishment of a definite purpose through each section consistent with the general purpose of the Bankruptcy Act, it should prevail rather than a broader construction covering situations which rarely occur, or for meeting which other provisions of the act provide ample remedies.

"The general conclusions are that § 60d refers to the services to be rendered after the time of the payment or transfer; that such services must be germane to the general aims of the Bankruptcy Act; that they must be actually rendered, if at all, before the institution of bankruptcy proceedings, and that the payment or transfer specified in said section cannot apply to services rendered as specified in § 64b; that § 64b refers to services rendered after the bankruptcy proceedings are instituted, to aid the bankrupt in performing his duties under the act.

"In the matter now here for review, the note and mortgage having been given twelve days before bankruptcy ensued, but when the proceedings were contemplated, and it appearing that services were to be rendered and were in fact rendered by the attorney to carry out the contemplated purpose, the referee should have ascertained the reasonable value of the services so rendered, and adjudged the note and mortgage valid as security for the payment thereof; but the value of any service rendered after bankruptcy was not the subject of inquiry upon this proceeding, being determinable only under § 64b." This case is quoted further at § 2099.

Pratt v. Bothe, 12 A. B. R. 535, 130 Fed. 670 (C. C. A. Mich., criticised In re Habegger, post, § 2097): "We are of the opinion that § 60 (d): relates to services to be rendered while the debtor is 'in contemplation of bankruptcy,' and not to services to be rendered after bankruptcy proceedings are commenced. * * * The language of the paragraph * * * includes services rendered not only by an attorney, but also those rendered by a 'solicitor in equity or a proctor in admiralty.' This generalization seems to indicate that the services contemplated were such as might be required in general litigation or in the course of the debtor's business, and one cannot help greatly doubting whether Congress 'had in mind the purpose to include those special services which an attorney would render to the bankrupt while in the discharge of his duties, payment for which was provided by another section of the act. It would rather seem that Congress, engaged, as many signs indicate, in guarding the assets of those in contemplation of bankruptcy, to the end that they might be brought without unnecessary expenditure to the hands of the trustee for distribution to creditors, while it would not deny to the debtor the right to employ and pay for legal assistance in his affairs during that critical period, yet proposed a restraint upon that privilege by requiring that such payment should be reasonable in amount—in short, proposed to apply to the incipient stage of bankruptcy the provident economy which it sought to apply to the administration of the bankrupt estate. It may have been thought that there was the same reason for such restraint at that stage of affairs as subsequently. And it is to be observed that the transaction would not become the subject of revision unless bankruptcy ensued. It put attorneys' solicitors and proctors in no worse position than it did some classes of those having business with the debtor."

On the other hand, it has been held that § 60 (d) protects payments made to the bankrupt's attorney before bankruptcy, in contemplation of bankruptcy, whether the payments be made before or after the services were rendered.

In re Cummins, 28 A. B. R. 385, 196 Fed. 224 (D. C. N. Y.): "What is meant, by the statute, is that a debtor, under the circumstances therein described, may fully pay an attorney for services to be rendered and it is immaterial whether the payment is made at or after the professional engagement is entered into. Upon the re-examination provided for by the statute, it should not be difficult to determine either the bona fides or the reasonableness of the charge."

Obiter, In re Kross, 3 A. B. R. 187, 96 Fed. 816 (D. C. N. Y.): "The charges to be 'approved' are, I cannot doubt, for the same services which the 'fee' is designed to be allowed for under § 64, subd. b, par. 3. Both paragraphs are to be construed together, so that it becomes immaterial in the result whether the attorney obtains his compensation in the first instance from the bankrupt under § 60, refunding what, if anything, is disallowed by the court, or whether he waits for an allowance by the court under § 64. The latter is evidently the more convenient and desirable practice; and considering that prior payment for an attorney's services to the bankrupt is expressly allowed by § 60, I cannot agree to any such construction of the act as would deprive the attorney of a proper compensation for a necessary service, merely because he did not take it out of the estate at his own estimate in advance." Approved in In re Habegger, post, § 2097; disapproved in Pratt v. Bothe, supra.

§ 2097. Under § 60 (d) Must Be for Benefit of Estate or in Furtherance of Administration.—The kind of legal services to be performed "in contemplation of bankruptcy" for which an insolvent debtor may contract and make payment in money or by a transfer of property before bankruptcy that will be sustained under the provisions of § 60 (d) are such services as are rendered in aid of the purpose sought to be accomplished by the Act to conserve and benefit the estate of the bankrupt, and thus enure to the benefit of creditors, or are such legal services as are contemplated by the Act in bringing the bankrupt estate before the court, its subsequent administration and distribution to creditors, and the like.³¹

In re Habegger, 15 A. B. R. 199, 139 Fed. 623 (C. C. A. Minn.): "Such payments or transfers to an attorney by one contemplating bankruptcy as tend to conserve the estate and bring it before the bankruptcy court for settlement, or other services required by the bankruptcy act to be performed by the bankrupt, are made valid as a preference under that section, to the extent they are found upon examination to be reasonable and equitable; such claims being in principle entitled to equitable priority, as are claims for services performed or property furnished in the preservation and betterment of an estate controlled and administered by a court of equity. * * * If an insolvent contemplating bankruptcy transfers his property, in payment of future legal services to be performed, not beneficial to his estate and which do not inure to the benefit of his creditors, why is such a transfer not a voidable preference or a fraudulent transfer under other provisions of the Act, to the same extent as are other transfers of his property without present consideration?"

Thus, services rendered the bankrupt in opposition to the creditors' petition are not within § 60 (d).

Car.). To same effect, compare, In re Rosenthal & Lehman, 9 A. B. R. 626, 120 Fed. 848 (D. C. Mo.). To same effect, Pratt v. Bothe, 12 A. B. R. 535, 130 Fed. 670 (C. C. A. Mich.).

Compare, In re Corbett, 5 A. B. R. 224, 104 Fed. 872 (D. C. Wis.), where it is inferable that payment after the filing of the petition but before adjudication, or rather before the court has obtained actual custody of the property used in the payment, might have been held valid if actually made.

But compare arguments in In re Cummins, 28 A. B. R. 385, 196 Fed. 224 (D. C. N. Y.), and In re Stolp, 29 A. B. R. 32, 199 Fed. 488 (D. C. Wis.), quoted at §§ 2096 and 2099.

§ 2098. Prepaid Fee, to Be "Reasonable" and Subject to Re-Examination.—The fee thus prepaid to the bankrupt's attorney must be reasonable in amount, and the prepayment is subject to re-examination and disapproval by the court.³²

§ 2099. Summary Jurisdiction over Attorney to Require Repayment of Excess.—The court has jurisdiction over the attorney to determine any excessiveness and in proper cases to require repayment by him. Such jurisdiction may be exercised in the bankruptcy proceedings themselves; and its exercise is not violative of the rules regarding the forum for suits against adverse claimants.³³

Nor is it violative of the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution securing the right of trial by jury.

In re Wood & Henderson, 210 U. S. 246, 20 A. B. R. 1: "The construction which we have given § 60d does not deprive parties of rights secured under the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution to trials by jury in suits at common law where the value in controversy exceeds twenty dollars. This provision of the constitution extends to rights and remedies peculiarly legal in their nature and such as it was proper to extend in courts of law by the appropriate modes and proceedings of such courts."

Moreover, it is provided for by a special clause of the Bankrupt Act itself.³⁴ Indeed it is the bankruptcy court alone that has jurisdiction to "examine" in such cases, and the state court is without jurisdiction.

In re Wood & Henderson, 210 U. S. 246, 20 A. B. R. 1: "Jurisdiction to

Where the bankrupt and his attorney have scheduled the unpaid fee of the attorney as an unsecured claim and have failed to schedule it among priority claims, it will be denied priority. In re Morris, 11 A. B. R. 145, 125 Fed. 841 (D. C. N. Car.). But this decision is not to be regarded as sound. Either the fee was proper or it was not proper; and the mistake of the parties ought not to be irremediable.

Instance, In re Christianson, 23 A. B. R. 710, 175 Fed. 867 (D. C. N. C.): "It would be unwise both for creditors and bankrupts to make the compensation so parsimonious that attorneys of standing and experience would be reluctant to act on behalf of bankrupts. If, however, the sums mentioned in the opinion by Judge Brown are to be approved by a hard and fast rule to all cases, and counsel who accept from bankrupts a larger sum are to be exposed to a citation to return the money to the trustee, and the reflection arising from the fact of receiving as attorney's fees sums forbidden by law, the result can not fail to deter attorneys of reputation and standing from acting on behalf of bankrupts."

re-examine the transfer to counsel was certainly not conferred upon any State court. When the statute says that if the transfer in contemplation of filing a petition in bankruptcy shall be found to be excessive it may be reduced by 'the court,' is it possible that it was intended to give the State courts jurisdiction of that much of the administration of the estate, and oust the District Court of the United States, and perhaps delay the settlement of the estate until the State courts of original and appellate jurisdiction shall determine the reasonableness of the counsel fee provided for in contemplation of bankruptcy? The answer to this question is obvious, and clearly against a construction which has this effect upon the system of bankruptcy to be administered in the District Courts of the United States established by the act of Congress. It is true that the State courts under the Bankruptcy Act as it stood before the Amendment of February, 1903, were given jurisdiction to entertain suits to recover preferences to the exclusion of the Federal courts, unless the defendant consented to be sued in the Federal court. Bardes v. Hawarden Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 4 Am. B. R. 163. * * * If suit was begun in the State court of Arkansas, that court would have answered, as did the Supreme Court of Missouri in Swartz v. Frank, 183 Mo. 439, 82 S. W. 60, the Bankruptcy Act confers no jurisdiction upon a State court to entertain an application of the trustee, or of a creditor to reduce the provision made for counsel, that jurisdiction is given alone to the District Court of the United States administering the property. If the action had been brought in the United States court it would have made the same answer, and, in addition thereto, the jurisdiction of the Circuit or District Court of the United States could have been ousted, prior to the Amendment of 1903, by the defendants withholding their consent to the jurisdiction of the Federal court."

And a plenary suit is not necessary to jurisdiction to determine whether the fee is excessive.³⁵

In re Wood & Henderson, 210 U. S. 246, 20 A. B. R. 1: "This section does not undertake to provide for a plenary suit, but for an examination and order in the course of the administration of the estate with a view to permitting only a reasonable amount thereof to be deducted from it because of payments of money or transfers of property to attorneys or counsellors in contemplation of bankruptcy proceedings. There is no provision for the enforcement of this section in another court of bankruptcy, where the bankrupt may be personally served with process in a plenary suit; such court is not given authority to re-examine the transaction. No other court has authority to determine the reasonable amount for which the transaction can stand. Swartz v. Frank, 183 Mo. 439."

Such re-examination should be had, however, only on due notice to the attorney concerned.³⁶ Such notice may be by service of a rule or order to appear and show cause served either personally or by mail.

35. But, compare [wherein the court calls such a proceeding if upon petition and notice not a summary but a plenary proceeding], Haffenberg v. Title & Trust Co., 27 A. B. R. 708, 192 Fed. 874 (C. C. A. Ills.).

36. Impliedly, In re Lewin, 4 A. B. R. 624, 103 Fed. 852 (D. C. Vt.); In re Wood & Henderson, 20 A. B. R. 1, 210 U. S. 246; Haffenberg v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 27 A. B. R. 708, 192

Fed. 874 (C. C. A. Ills.); obiter, Staunton v. Wooden, 24 A. B. R. 736, 179 Fed. 61 (C. C. A. Calif.), quoted on other points at § 1705¼.

Procedure.—It is said in one case that the procedure should be by motion to fix the allowance and for an order directing the return of the excess, "unless an issue is raised." In re Shiebler & Co., 20 A. B. R. 777, 163 Fed. 545 (D. C. N. Y.).

In re Wood & Henderson, 210 U. S. 246, 20 A. B. R. 1: "The section makes no provision for the service of process, and in that view such reasonable notice to the parties affected should be required as is appropriate to the case, and an opportunity should be given them to be heard. We see no reason why notice of the proceedings under § 60d may not be by mail or otherwise, as the court shall direct, so that an opportunity is given to appear in the court where the estate is to be administered and contest the reasonableness of the charges in question."

Perhaps the order reducing the fees should not also command the return of the excess unless the attorney be shown to be able to respond to the demand.³⁷ In the event of his inability so to respond, or of his non-residence, it might be that the order determining the amount of the excess, though binding upon the parties, could not be made finally effectual until a judgment were rendered thereon in a jurisdiction where it could be executed.³⁸

In the subsequent plenary action to make the bankruptcy court's order effective, that order is binding, as res judicata, upon the sufficiency of the petition or application presented to the bankruptcy court as the basis of the order, also upon the nature of the transaction between the parties, the ownership of the money, and other questions.³⁹

And where the bankruptcy court decides that the advance payment of attorney's fees constitutes an ordinary preference, rather than an excessive payment under § 60 (d) for services to be rendered prior to the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding, the proper practice is to dismiss a petition for the re-examination of the payment without prejudice to the right of the trustee to proceed with the remedies provided for the recovery of voidable preferences and fraudulent conveyances, should the transaction be deemed to be one or the other.⁴⁰

The right summarily to re-examine prepaid attorney's fees, under § 60 (d) relates only to services in regard to the contemplated bankruptcy, and payment of fees for other services may not be summarily re-examined, but can be attacked only by plenary action, as for a preference, fraudulent transfer, etc., if susceptible to such attack.

In re Stolp, 29 A. B. R. 32, 199 Fed. 488 (D. C. Wis.): "The scope and meaning of these two sections can be determined by ascertaining, if possible, what situations they were designed to meet, what possible evil to remedy, or what right to recognize or protect. The language of 60d, on first reading, appears to place the legal advisers of failing debtors in a class by themselves, to be dealt with according to the prescribed provisions, no matter what the character of the service or when rendered; but, as indicated in Wood & Henderson, supra, the section was intended to treat with a situation which involved neither a preference nor a fraudulent conveyance. If a payment or transfer for services to be rendered means, as stated (see 210 U. S. 251, 259, 263, 20 Am. B. R. 1, 28 Sup. Ct. 624, 627, 629, 52 L. Ed. 1046), 'in consideration of future services,' 'in expectation of proceedings in bankruptcy,' or 'prepayment,' then the date of the transaction must ordinarily be taken as the commencement of the period during which the contemplated services were 'to be rendered;' and, having reference to the future, the transaction could not be treated as dealing with the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor, in which the latter received payment for a past or present consideration; nor, in view of the relation of attorney and client which has sanctioned compensating attorneys in advance, could it be deemed fraudulent or in fraud of creditors. The section is declared to be sui generis, and 'recognizes the temptation of a failing debtor to deal too liberally with his property in employing counsel to protect him in view of financial reverses and probable failure. It recognizes the right of a debtor to have the aid and advice of counsel, and in contemplation of bankruptcy proceedings, which shall strip him of his property, to make provision for reasonable compensation to his counsel, and in view of the circumstances the act makes provision that the court administering the estate may, if the trustee or any creditor question the transaction, re-examine it with a view to a determination of its reasonableness.' Wood & Henderson, supra, 210 U. S. 253, 20 Am. B. R. 1, 28 Sup. Ct. 624, 52 L. Ed. 1046.

"It is difficult to see why Congress should have intended by these sections to provide comprehensive remedies to meet all situations which might arise between a debtor and his attorneys, both before and during bankruptcy. There is no reason why an attorney, being a creditor with a matured claim, or a creditor having a claim for past services which the bankrupt has paid, should not at the moment of bankruptcy stand with other creditors; but, when the failing debtor secures counsel and favors him with prepayment for contemplated service, the transaction, being neither preferential nor fraudulent, should, in fairness to creditors, be subject to review by the court. It seems to me that the section is designed to reach the situation which arises out of the desire of both the debtor and his attorney to avoid the necessity of the latter's being charged with having received a preference, or of becoming a general creditor of the estate. It should not be construed to cover other transactions between a debtor and his attorney not fairly within this design, nor within the term of the statute. In other words, it refers to advance payments.

"In meeting the second question, the language of section 60d referring to an attorney, counselor, solicitor in equity, or a proctor in admiralty, presents considerable difficulty. Are the services to be rendered such as pertain to the contemplated bankruptcy, or may they be general professional services rendered by an adviser in any of the several capacities specified? On the one hand, it is argued that, being unrestricted, the language must be given a construction which will cover all situations fairly comprehended within its terms, and it therefore includes all instances where advance payments are made to professional legal advisers, no matter what the character or object of their service may be. On the other, the view is taken that Congress could not reasonably have intended to make a debtor's legal advisers the object of favorable or restrictive legislation, except to the extent that the contemplated service is germane to the general purpose of the bankruptcy law, namely, the subjection of the assets of the debtor to administration and distribution for his creditors.

"In Pratt v. Bothe (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 529, 130 Fed. 670, 65 C. C. A. 48, it is intimated that the general language referring to solicitors and proctors 'seems to indicate that the services contemplated were such as might be required in general litigation, or in the course of the debtor's business.' This was said in considering whether section 60d referred to services rendered before or after the bankruptcy. On the other hand, the question as to the character of the services contemplated was directly involved in In re Habegger (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 198, 139 Fed. 123, 71 C. C. A. 607, 3 Ann. Cas. 276, and it was determined that they were such as were to be rendered in aid of the purpose sought to be accomplished by the Bankruptcy Act, to conserve and benefit the estate of the bankrupt, and therefore inure to the benefit of the creditors; and accordingly a payment or transfer from a failing debtor for services to be rendered in endeavoring to get a composition with creditors, and in defending the failing debtor in a criminal prosecution, was not within the terms of this section. In my judgment the purpose of the section was to meet situations most frequently arising, or likely to arise, and such situations are those arising between a failing debtor and his attorney in respect of services relative to his failing condition or the contemplated bankruptcy. While a failing debtor may have employed, or may wish to employ attorneys for various purposes, it is not probable that the situations in which advance payments are made or are likely to be made, to attorneys for an account other than his involved business affairs or contemplated bankruptcy, occur with sufficient frequency to have been made the object of special legislation. And if this is true, then it is fair to construe the section in question as excluding such other situations. Such section in question provides a new remedy, and, as above indicated, was intended to reach situations which under former bankruptcy acts, and under the present act, could not be reached. It was desired to enable a debtor to pay his attorney in advance, to the end that he might procure the service, and not require such attorney to take the hazzard of payment with general creditors. But a review of the transaction is provided. This appears to be the sounder construction, and should be accepted rather than to presume an intention on the part of Congress to make provisions for all cases where a failing debtor may pay his counsel in advance. It is true that this greatly narrows the language of the act, and, it may be said, eliminates a portion of it. It is also true that it may enable payments to counsel whose services are not to be rendered in furthering the objects of the act, and these will thereafter be permitted to stand, unless possibly they can be attacked as fraudulent. But I think the act should have a construction which will effectuate an intention to deal with situations constantly arising, and which, under the former bankruptcy law, had to be met, either by making the debtor's counsel stand as a general creditor, or by yielding him a priority not awarded by the Bankruptcy Act, or by allowing possible excessive payments in advance to stand.

"I am aware that this restricted view will also affect the application of the remedy provided in section 60d strictly to such cases as appear to be payments for services to be rendered, when such services are admitted or adjudicated to be of the character specified, namely, services germane to the purposes of the Bankruptcy Act; and when it appears that the service to be rendered was not of such a character, the right to review cannot be exercised, but the transaction must either stand or be attacked under some other provision of the Bankruptcy Act." [This case is further quoted at § 2096.]

§ 2100. Prepayment before Filing Petition, or at Any Time before Adjudication.—The bankrupt may make such payment before the filing of the petition; or, perhaps, at any time before adjudication, unless the bankrupt's property be sequestrated by a receiver or marshal, or he be prohibited by an injunction from interfering with it.⁴¹

41. Inferentially, In re Corbett, 5 A. B. R. 224, 104 Fed. 872 (D. C. Wis.): In this case the transfer was held not to have passed the title to the attorney because there was no change of possession. The property was not taken into possession by the attorney until after adjudication. The court summarily ordered return.

However, it has been held that the "prepayment" refers to payment before the bankruptcy proceedings are instituted rather than merely before the services themselves are rendered, so that under this construction a payment to the bankrupt's attorney after services rendered, if before bankruptcy, would come under the control of § 60d and likewise be within the protection of that section so far as any claim of preference might be concerned.⁴²

In re Cummins, 28 A. B. R. 385, 196 Fed. 224 (D. C. N. Y.): "The contention of the trustee is in effect that, if a debtor in contemplation of the filing of a petition by or against him retains an attorney to advise and act for him, the attorney must then and there get his fee, else he will become a general creditor. In other words, a lawyer is to be deprived of the safeguard of the statute because he has the decency not to insist on an immediate retainer in money or property, and is willing to wait until he can decide what his fee ought to be in the light of service actually rendered. There is no reason why statutes, under familiar canons, cannot be construed sensibly.

"The Congress has given the court full power to re-examine such a transaction with a view of ascertaining its good faith, and then determining whether the fee is reasonable. What is meant, by the statute, is that a debtor, under the circumstances therein described may fully pay an attorney reasonable compensation for services to be rendered, and it is immaterial whether the payment is made at or after the professional engagement is entered into. Upon the re-examination provided for by the statute, it should not be difficult to determine either the bona fides or the reasonableness of the charge."

§ 2101. Prepayment Effected by Giving Security.—The bankrupt may give security upon his property in advance for his attorney's fees instead of making actual prepayment in cash.⁴³

COMPENSATION OF REFEREE, TRUSTEE AND RECEIVER.

§ 2102. Act, § 40 (a): "Referees shall receive as full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of fifteen dollars deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and twenty-five cents for every proof of claim filed for allowance, to be paid from the estate, if any, as a part of the cost of administration, and from estates which have been administered before them one per centum commissions on all moneys disbursed to creditors by the trustee, or one-half of one per centum on the amount to be paid to creditors upon the confirmation of a composition." § 2103. Referee's Commissions Computed on Disbursements to "Creditors."—The commissions of the referee are to be computed only on moneys disbursed to creditors.⁴⁵

In re Abbey Press, 13 A. B. R. 15, 134 Fed. 51 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "The referee's commission is upon the amount paid creditors, not necessarily upon the amount collected, which might be largely disbursed in making the collection."

In re Iowa Falls Mfg. Co., 15 A. B. R. 384, 140 Fed. 527 (D. C. Iowa): "The proceeds of the mortgaged property arising from the sale thereof by the sheriff should be excluded from the amount upon which the referee may compute his commissions, and the amount actually disbursed by the trustee to creditors will form the basis of such computation."

Thus, commissions are not to be computed on amounts paid out as expenses for the continuance of business.⁴⁶

Bray v. Johnson, 21 A. B. R. 383, 166 Fed. 57 (D. C. W. Va.): "The precise questions presented for consideration are what compensation, if any, the referee is entitled to receive upon funds handled through the bankrupt's trustees, in conducting the business ordered to be continued by the referee; and what effect should be given to a decree of the court entered making an allowance on account of such compensation to the appellee, and from which no appeal was taken. The first question is one that would seem to be determined by the plain letter of the Bankruptcy Act, and the rules prescribed by the Supreme Court in pursuance thereof. Section 40 of the Act of 1898 on this subject, provided for a commission of one per centum on the sums paid as dividends, or one-half of one per centum on the amount to be paid creditors upon the confirmation of a composition. The act as amended on the 5th of February, 1903, § 40-a, is as follows: [quoting § 40 (a) 166]. The amended section, it will be observed, modifies the language of the original act, which allowed a commission of one per centum on sums paid as dividends, and in addition to otherwise providing largely for the increase of the compensation of referees, authorizes a commission on one per cent. on 'all moneys disbursed to the creditors by the trustee.' This language is clear, and its meaning too plain to admit of controversy. It is as positive as its purpose is apparent, to fix definitely what this judicial officer shall receive from the funds coming under the administration of the court, as to which he might be called upon to take official action. The amendment of 5th of February, 1903, by § 72, emphasized the meaning of the previous provision, and is as follows: 'That neither the referee nor the trustee shall in any form or guise receive, nor shall the court allow them, any other or further compensation for their services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in this act.' Section 2 of the General Orders, No. 35, prescribed by the Supreme Court for the enforcement of the bankruptcy law, also expressly prohibits this charge by the referee, in that it provides that: 'The compensation of referees prescribed by this act shall be in full compensation for all services performed by them under the act, or under these general orders,' but this rule provides for certain expenses which may be allowed by the court. The claim here asserted is clearly not authorized by the original Bankrupt Act, nor under the amendment of February 5th, 1903, and § 72 of the amendments expressly prevents referees from receiving in any 'form or guise' anything other than his statutory compensation, and expressly inhibits the court from making such allowance. The reason why this allowance cannot and should not be made or thought of for a moment, is apparent. The courts are authorized to continue the business of bankrupts, and this referee exercised this authority, which in passing it may be said as to a transaction of this magnitude, without the express sanction of the court, was of exceedingly doubtful propriety, and the issuance of trustees' certificates for $75,000.00 or indeed for any amount, assuming it should be done in a bankruptcy case at all, ought manifestly not to be thought of by a referee. The temptation, if a referee could thus increase his compensation, to err, would be too great. Serious questions involving his personal interest, upon which he would have judicially to pass, would be continually presented, and the result of such a system would soon be disastrous, and bring the courts of bankruptcy into disrepute. The objections to such an allowance are fundamental, aside from the fact that the compensation is fixed by law. To have the pay of a referee, acting in a purely judicial capacity, respecting a particular transaction, in which he acts for and on behalf of the court, measured by the extent of the fund that might be handled under and in pursuance of decrees and orders entered by himself, would be as anomalous as it would be unfortunate, because of the delicate and embarrassing position in which he would be constantly placed, as manifestly his personal and financial interest in what he was doing would frequently arise, and result in having his best motives impugned. This case affords a striking illustration of why such a thing should not be done, and the consequences that could be expected to flow therefrom. The fund on which a commission can be allowed, as between two referees, is some $30,000.00 or $300.00, whereas the claim asserted by one referee is on some $480,000.00, or for $4,800.00, being on the amount expended in creating the $30,000.00, a difference to the referee of $4,500.00 in his compensation in a single case, as the result of the exercise of his own judicial discretion in deciding to complete partly executed contracts of the bankrupt company. Judicial officers should not be placed in a position where their private interests necessarily become involved in their official action; and should it ever be done to the extent that the view of the bankrupt law contended for by the referee, would bring about, the federal judicial system would sustain a serious blow, and quickly be deprived of its independence, its greatest source of strength with the people and bar. The Bankrupt Act, in our judgment, affords no ground for an interpretation that would be so far reaching in its results, or bring about such serious consequences. It is not intimated or suggested here that the referee was guilty of the slightest impropriety. On the contrary, he was supported in all that he did, by the creditors and trustees, and their counsel, and he expended much time, and performed great labor, showing the utmost fidelity to his trust throughout. But the hazard of such an undertaking as was embarked upon, was too great for a court or referee to enter on. The contracts themselves were of a kind extremely difficult to handle, subject to many vicissitudes; and while it may have been supposed that considerable money could be realized the result proved how far all such calculations were; $28,000.00 instead of from $150,000.00 to $200,000.00 was realized as the result of more than 18 months' work; and it may be said that this was rather providential."

According to the strict words of the statute, commissions of the referee are not to be computed on the gross amount received by the trustee, nor on all the money paid out by him, but only upon the amounts disbursed by him to creditors (whether lienholding creditors or not), although there seems no reason for making a different rule for the referee from that governing the trustee, whose commissions are computed on the gross disbursements, whether made to creditors or others. There is some force in the contention, moreover, that the word "creditors," as used in § 40, is the correlative of "debts," as used in § 64 (b), referring to costs of administration as "debts" of the estate.⁴⁷

Since the Amendment of 1903 to §§ 40 and 48, a referee is entitled to commissions on all sums, which, but for outside agreement, would be paid through the trustee.⁴⁸

§ 2104. Thus, Commissions on Disbursements to Priority and Secured Creditors.—Thus, commissions are to be computed on taxes, on the priority wages of workmen, clerks and servants, and in short upon all amounts paid to all kinds of creditors,⁴⁹ including secured creditors.⁵⁰

Before the Amendment of 1910 it had come to be held in several cases, though by what appears to have been a narrow construction, that, unless the lienholder invoked the aid of the bankruptcy court, no commissions, either for referee, receiver or trustee could be charged out of the fund

However, it must not be forgotten, in cases of sales of property free from encumbrances that each fund is to bear its own burden of the costs, its own burden of the commissions and expenses; and that the commissions on the amounts paid to secured creditors, as such, are to come out of the particular fund on which the security is held.

covered by the lien until the lien was paid in full,⁵¹ on the theory that the lienholder, unless so affirmatively asking aid, was entitled to be paid in full, and that the bankruptcy officials proceeded with a sale practically at their peril, one of the courts saying:⁵²

In re Harrison, 24 A. B. R. 715, 179 Fed. 490 (C. C. A. Mo.): "A court of bankruptcy should not assume charge of incumbered property and liquidate the liens on it, unless there are reasonable grounds for believing some advantage will accrue to the bankrupt's estate. If the validity of the liens is unquestioned, and their amount is such that there is probably no excess of value in the property, it should be surrendered to the lienholders or others entitled, unless some other reason appears for retaining control. A court of bankruptcy is not a court of general jurisdiction for the adjudication of controversies or the administration of assets in which the bankrupt's estate is in no wise interested. If, however, cognizance is taken, it should be assumed some benefit or advantage was expected to accrue to the general creditors, and if it results otherwise it is equitable to make the general estate bear the cost of the proceeding. Here the proceeds of sale did not equal the admitted incumbrance, and the deficiency should not be further increased by deducting the commissions of the officers, if there is a general estate against which they can be charged. This is in analogy to the general practice in equity in foreclosure cases, where, if possible, the judgment lien creditors are paid in full, and if a deficiency results from deducting the costs from the proceeds it goes as a judgment against the debtor."

But this line of reasoning was not well founded nor would it operate well in practice. Whilst it is undoubtedly true, as the court says,⁵³ that "if the validity of the liens is unquestioned, and their amount is such that there is probably no excess of value in the property, it should be surrendered to the lienholders or others entitled, unless some other reason appears for retaining control," yet, in actual practice, serious and real uncertainty occurs as to the actual value, arising from the peculiarities of the market or from other circumstances that can only be solved by actually going to sale. Also, frequently, the trustee has a prospective purchaser at the beginning who eventually "backs out." Likewise, frequently, unforeseen legal contingencies occur, causing the original "reasonable" prospect of an excess to disappear. To throw upon the general estate, or upon the court officers in the event there were no such estate, the burden of the costs, expenses and commissions for the care, custody and sale of the particular property so covered by the lien, would be unfair to such officers and unduly burdensome to creditors who usually derive less benefit from the sale of property covered by liens than do the lienholders themselves. To compel trustees in bankruptcy to act in such cases at their personal peril would in a great percentage of actual cases paralyze their efforts, besides having a serious effect on the attitude of the lienholders themselves and prospective purchasers. Doubtless the ruling criticized was in part induced by the abuse sometimes occurring of taking possession of encumbered property where there is clearly no equity. But it is submitted that the error here consisted in the court's original granting of the order of sale; the court should have ordered the property abandoned. Had the reviewing court put its ruling squarely upon the ground of the abuse of discretion in granting the order (as a careful reading of the case will indicate was the real ground) the case criticized would have been entirely in accord with right principles and would not have laid down a rule which would act as a two edged sword.

Amendment of 1910.—The Amendment of 1910 does not in its terms affect the referee's commissions, but by analogy will indicate the correct rule with regard thereto in the above particulars.

§ 2105. Property Sold Free of Liens When Lienholder Purchaser.—The referee is entitled to commissions upon the full amount of the purchase price disbursed to creditors, even when a lienholding creditor is the purchaser and applies his lien on the purchase price, such method being considered a "disbursement" to a "creditor" notwithstanding the actual money does not pass through the trustee's hands.⁵⁴

Where the mere equity is sold, without the marshalling of liens and the sale of the property free and clear therefrom, with the consequent responsibilities of such proceedings, the commissions of the receiver and trustee, as also of the referee, are only to be computed upon the amount received from such equity. This is entirely different from the case where the property is sold clear and free of liens but the purchaser happens to be a lienholder and applies his lien in part payment. In the latter case it is still a sale clear and free of liens and, equally as in cases of other purchasers, the receiver and trustee are entitled to commissions on the entire amount of the sale and, if the lienholder be also a creditor, the referee likewise is entitled thereto.

Varney v. Harlow, 31 A. B. R. 339, 210 Fed. 824 (C. C. A. Va.): "Subsequent to 1903 and prior to 1910, § 48 allowed trustees commissions on all sums disbursed by them. By the amendments of the later year the allowance was declared to be 'on all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, by them.' A similar change was made in the provisions of the section fixing the compensation of receivers or marshals. Section 40, dealing with the fees of referees, was left as it had been amended in 1903.

"Does the fact that § 48 was altered by the insertion of the words 'turned over to any person, including lienholders,' while § 40 was not, indicate that Congress wished to make a distinction in this respect between trustees, receivers and marshals on the one hand, and referees on the other? A very vital and important difference was established by the act of 1903. Before that time trustees' commissions, as well as those of referees, were calculated upon the amount paid as dividends and commissions. By the amendatory act of the last mentioned year trustees were allowed commissions on all sums disbursed by them.

"This court has pointed out why it would have been highly inexpedient that any similar provision should have been made as to referees. Bray v. Johnson (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 383, 166 Fed. 57.

"As we have already seen, the allowance to the latter was increased in another way. The amendment of section 48 made in 1910 was not so much for the purpose of changing the law as it was to settle a question upon which the courts had divided by declaring the agreement of Congress with those decisions which had held trustees entitled to commissions on sums turned over to lienholders. Report No. 691, Senate Judiciary Committee, 2d Session, 61st Congress. It does not seem probable that Congress intended in so indirect a manner to change the construction which had been previously put upon § 40. 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, § 2105.

"It follows that the referee was entitled to the allowance claimed."

The Amendment of 1910 to § 48a provides that trustees and receivers shall have commissions on "money disbursed or turned over to any person including lienholders," but § 40, granting commissions to referees only on "disbursements" to "creditors," was left unchanged, so it was evidently the intention of Congress to make a distinction between the receiver and trustee and the referee as to the allowance of commissions on sales free from liens. The commissions of referees have never been computed upon any other sums than "those disbursed to creditors." And, lienholders may or may not be creditors. If they happen to be creditors and money is disbursed to them, then the referee is entitled to commissions upon such money, the fact of being lienholders not detracting from the attribute of being also creditors. Trustees and receivers, however, by the Amendment of 1910 were given commissions not only on amounts disbursed to creditors, whether lienholders or not, but upon amounts disbursed to any other person, including lienholders who were not creditors. This was the meaning of the framers of this amendment and this is the clear meaning of the section itself. The only difference, however, between the referee's and trustee's rights to commissions relates simply to disbursements made to lienholders (and others) who are not creditors. The trustee and receiver may have, but the referee may not have, commissions on amounts disbursed to lienholders who are not also creditors.

agreed compensation therefor, the referee, receiver and trustee alike each receive merely one-half of one per cent. commission.⁵⁶

§ 2108. Trustee's Compensation.—The trustee receives out of the estate a commission of not to exceed six per cent. on the first five hundred dollars disbursed by him; of four per cent. on the next thousand dollars; two per cent. on the amounts thereafter up to ten thousand dollars, and one per cent. on the balance above ten thousand dollars; but if a composition be made and confirmed, he receives merely one-half of one per cent. on amounts paid to creditors. In re Cramond, 17 A. B. R. 29, 145 Fed. 966 (D. C. N. Y.): "The language covers, and evidently was intended to include, all moneys lawfully disbursed by the trustee, and held by him as such, whether to creditors, secured or unsecured or having priority, or to other persons. If to creditors it is immaterial whether the amounts lawfully paid them from the funds in court are paid as dividends or in satisfaction of a lien or liens on the fund. By section 1 of the Act 'creditor shall include anyone who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy.' Secured claims are provable in bankruptcy, although allowable only to a certain amount."

But when the trustee sells securities which are in the possession of a pledgee thereof, he will only be entitled to commissions on the sum realized in excess of the secured indebtedness.

In re Meadows, 29 A. B. R. 165, 199 Fed. 304 (D. C. N. Y.): "What is intended by the term 'disbursed to creditors,' as applied to the compensation of referees, and by the term 'on all sums disbursed,' as applied to the compensation of trustees?"

"The provisions are comprehensive enough to entitle referees to commissions on moneys paid to secured and unsecured creditors (In re Sanford Furniture Mfg. Co. [D. C. N. C.], 11 Am. B. R. 414, 126 Fed. 888), and to allow to trustees commissions on all sums disbursed by them out of the assets of the bankrupt estate, which obviously includes moneys paid for fees and expenses in the administration thereof. When, however, a secured creditor has recourse to a State court to foreclose his lien, or when personal property or securities, without coming into the custody of the bankruptcy court, are sold by pledges under a specific contract of sale, and there is no participation by the pledgees in the proceedings and commissions between them according to the services actually rendered, so that there shall not be paid to trustees for the administering of any estate a greater amount than one trustee would be entitled to."

Bankr. Act, § 47 (c): "The trustee shall, within thirty days after the adjudication, file a certified copy of the decree of adjudication in the office where conveyances of real estate are recorded in every county where the bankrupt owns real estate not exempt from execution, and pay the fee for such filing, and he shall receive a compensation of fifty cents for each copy of the bankruptcy court, then clearly no commissions are computable on the amounts realized by secured creditors on their securities.

so filed, which, together with the filing fee, shall be paid out of the estate of the bankrupt as a part of the cost and disbursements of the proceedings."

"In the present case, as already pointed out, the pledgees had the right to sell the collateral at public or private sale without notice to the pledgors, and to apply the proceeds to the payment of liabilities. Indeed, the Fidelity Trust Company reserved to itself the right to buy the securities free from any right or equity of redemption in the pledgors. The arrangement with the banks created, not a mere lien, as the referee seemed to think, but a pledge, which carried with it complete control, and the right of sale upon default in the payment of notes for which collateral was given. A lien ordinarily confers no such power, and there is a clear distinction between selling property free from liens, where the title and possession are in the trustee, and selling stocks and bonds pledged to a third party under a written contract.

"In this case it cannot be held that the securities were even constructively in the possession of the trustee. The rights of the pledgees were not affected by the bankruptcy proceedings. As they did not avail themselves of the services of the referee and trustee to sell the securities held by them, they manifestly could not have been compelled to bear any portion of the expenses of the sale, and it is difficult to perceive the validity of the sale by the trustee of personal property which was not in his custody, or in the control of the bankruptcy court, save as to any existing equities of redemption. How could the trustee have immediately delivered the securities to the purchaser, if the pledgees had not voluntarily released them? The pledgees were adverse claimants, and could not have been summarily compelled to surrender their securities, or to submit their rights to the bankruptcy court. Certainly by the mere sale they were not compelled to deliver the collateral to the trustee. If the proceeds of the sale had been insufficient to pay the pledgees, not only would the trustee have been unable to make delivery of the securities to the buyer, but the pledgees would doubtless themselves have sold under their contract.

"The authorities in support of the contention of the trustee, and upon which the referee placed reliance, are clearly distinguishable."

The rule laid down in this paragraph, § 2109, is not changed by the Amendment of 1910. On the contrary, that amendment enunciates the rule expressly, allowing commissions on all amounts disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders.⁶³

In re Howard, 31 A. B. R. 251, 207 Fed. 402 (D. C. N. Y.): "There was a division of opinion whether or not this gave commissions to trustees on moneys received by them and disbursed by them which were derived from the sales of mortgaged property and which moneys were covered by and properly applicable to the payment of the lien. Since the amendatory act of 1910 section 48-a provides that trustees shall receive 'such commissions on all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, by them, as may be allowed,' etc. This amendment settled the disputed questions as to the effect of the amendment of 1903, so far as trustees are concerned."

§ 2110. Except That in Composition Cases Computed Only on Disbursements to Creditors.—But in composition cases, the trustee is entitled to commissions only on disbursements to creditors, and then only at the rate of one-half of one per cent. and only in case he shall have

63. See Bankr. Act, § 48 (a), as amended in 1910.

qualified as trustee before confirmation of the composition.⁶⁴

The Amendment of 1910 to Bankruptcy Act, § 48, has not changed this rule, save and except that the trustee may also be allowed additional compensation where he has conducted the business of the bankrupt,⁶⁵ such additional compensation being allowable up to a further one-half of one per cent. upon the amounts disbursed to creditors.

The same manner of computation and rate of commissions in composition cases, prevails in allowances to receivers, by the Amendment of 1910.

§ 2111. Whether "Disbursement" Includes Proceeds of Property and Trust Funds Surrendered to Adverse Claimants, and Exempt Property Sold by Trustee.—Perhaps, even before the Amendment of 1910, "disbursed" included the proceeds of the sale of property surrendered to adverse claimants in lieu of the specific property itself and trust funds traced into the trustee's hands and surrendered.⁶⁶

Compare instance and reasoning before the Amendment of 1910, wherein expense and compensation for care and custody in preserving specific property were taxed against an unsuccessful claimant; In re Schocket, 24 A. B. R. 47, 177 Fed. 583 (D. C. R. I.): "Blankenstein's petition prayed for a return to him of specific personal property which was in the hands of a receiver when he filed his petition, and which subsequently came into the hands of the trustee upon his appointment. The relief sought—i. e., a return of specific property—was inconsistent with a sale by the trustee. Neither Blankenstein nor the trustee made application for a sale of the property and to hold the proceeds in lieu thereof. The trustee contends that the reclamation proceedings prevented a sale and gave rise to expenses in preserving the property; that these expenses were the result of a fraudulent claim, and should not be cast upon the estate, but should be borne by the petitioner for reclamation and taxed against him. While it is doubtful if this expense falls strictly within the usual meaning of the term 'costs of suit,' and while no statutory provision in terms covers a charge of this character, yet in a proceeding in equity the taxation of similar charges seems to have been allowed. In Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449, 10 Sup. Ct. 817, 34 L. Ed. 193, which related to proceedings in equity, the court said: 'The allegations of the original bill justified the issuing of the attachment. It was right that the property taken under it should be cared for, and, as the court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree against the defendants, a judgment for costs properly followed; and we perceive no reason why the plaintiffs should not have been allowed, as part of their costs, a reasonable amount for the expenses incurred in preserving the attached party, and for which they became primarily liable to the officer keeping it. We cannot say, upon the record before us, that the court below exceeded its discretion in apportioning the expenses thus incurred.' A court of equity, in extending an order for the taxation of costs so that it may include charges and expenses properly incurred, seems to proceed rather upon considerations of the substantial equities of the parties than upon ordinary statutory provisions concerning costs. 3 Daniell's Chancery (1st Am. Ed.), p. 1586. The petitioner in reclamation having made application to a court exercising chancery powers in the administration of the bankrupt's assets, seeking a determination of his right to have returned to him specific property held by the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, is justly chargeable for such necessary expenses in the custody of the goods as were occasioned by the proceedings instituted by him, and which would not have been incurred but for his intervention. To cast upon the property belonging to the creditors the costs of preservation pending the fraudulent claim of an intervener is contrary to equity. I am of the opinion that the court has authority to so extend an order for the taxation of costs against the intervener as to include a direction to tax charges and expenses of custody, as well as ordinary costs. Such charges and expenses should cover only the custody and expense which were the direct result of the intervention proceedings. Charges for expense of keeping, that would have been necessary irrespective of the filing of the reclamation proceedings, should be disallowed."

The Amendment of 1910 places beyond doubt the right of the trustee to commissions upon the proceeds of property and trust funds surrendered to adverse claimants, such amendment providing for "commissions on all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, by them, etc."

Notwithstanding the breadth of the term used, it is still doubtful whether commissions to "any person" should be held to include commissions on exempt property where it has been sold by consent, since § 48 should be read in connection with other sections in pari materia, such as § 6, wherein it is provided that "this act shall not affect the allowance to bankrupts of the exemptions which are prescribed by the state laws in force, etc." Furthermore, § 48, in this regard is to be read in the light of the well-known policy of the law, as expressed in the decisions, of great liberality towards debtors in the allowance of exemptions.⁶⁷

However, where exempt property is sold by the trustee, there is considerable justification for charging commissions therefrom against the bankrupt, since he has received the benefit of the trustee's work in this regard,⁶⁸ and it may be that the courts will charge commissions upon exempt property where it has been sold by the trustee either for the sole benefit of the bankrupt, or for the conjoint benefit of the bankrupt and creditors. In no event, however, can commissions be charged upon exempt property set over to the bankrupt "in kind."

§ 2112. Entitled Even Where Outside Agreement to "Credit" Exists and Actual Money Does Not Pass.—And the trustee, similarly to the referee [ante, § 2105], is entitled to commissions upon all amounts that would be disbursed by him but for outside agreement between the parties, as, for instance, where a lienholder buys in the property and applies his debt on the purchase price, etc.,⁷⁰ or where a creditor buys it in and credits

This does not apply where merely the equity of redemption is sold. It only applies where the property is sold clear and free of encumbrances and the liens are transferred to the proceeds of sale. In the latter cases, of course, if one of the lienholders is a purchaser he may apply his interest in the proceeds as lienholder in payment of the purchase price, for it would be a vain thing to have him pay in the money and then have the trustee pay it out to him directly; in such cases, commissions should be computed upon the lien thus applied precisely as if some other person were the purchaser. However, this doctrine only would apply to sales made clear and free of encumbrances. It would not apply to the sale of an equity of redemption, for in the latter instance the estate is not sold but only the reversion in the estate; moreover, there would be no basis for allowance to the receiver or trustee where merely the equity were sold, for the compensation allowable to the receiver and trustee is for their care and responsibility in regard to the entire estate and for the marshalling of liens and determination of priorities therein and for the getting of a purchaser for the entire value. In other words, it is absolutely essential to the right of commissions in such instances that the sale be in fact a sale clear and free of encumbrances with transfer of the rights of the lienholder to the proceeds of sale.

The Amendment of 1910 would not affect the doctrine of this paragraph. So far as the doctrine relates to referees it is rather restricted by the amendment. Before the amendment the trustee was entitled to commissions on sums disbursed to lienholders only in the event the lienholders were also creditors of the bankrupt. To cover this manifest injustice, the amendment of 1910 provides that where the lienholder is not a creditor and yet receives that he is not entitled to commissions unless it actually does pass through his hands. This case, however, was decided before the Amendment of 1903. In this instance a great hardship was suffered by the trustee. He had at the instance of creditors instituted suit against third parties for the recovery of certain assets. The creditors then sold out their claims to a third party and the case was dismissed. The purchase price was probably the result of the trustee's suit and it seems highly unfair that the trustee should be deprived of his commissions through this outside settlement.

Apparently contra, and that he is not entitled to require a secured creditor whose lien was created more than four months prior to bankruptcy and has been satisfied in full, to pay such commissions on the amount received by him, In re Anders Push Button Telephone Co., 13 A. B. R. 643, 136 Fed. 995 (D. C. N. Y.). With regard to this case of In re Anders, two things are to be observed, first, that the secured creditor had already been paid his claim in full and this was an effort to make him pay commissions afterwards. While this fact would not alter the principles involved yet it would nevertheless tend to confuse the issue, and, second, that it appears there was enough in the fund thus covered by the lien to pay the costs, without touching the lien. Manifestly, the costs should first be paid, then the liens in full, in the order of priority.

[Before Amendment of 1910] Apparently contra, In re Harrison, 24 A. B. R. 719, 179 Fed. 490 (C. C. A. Mo.), but in reality holding that commissions are not to be charged out of the fund until lienholders are paid in full unless they invoke the aid of the court or the lien is disputed—a ruling, by the way, to be seriously questioned on principle, compare § 2104.

71. In re Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 18 A. B. R. 846, 154 Fed. 214 (D. C. N. Y.).

the proceeds of his lien through the efforts of the trustee and receiver, then the trustee and receiver shall be entitled to commissions thereon. The referee's commissions, however, were not affected by the Amendment of 1910 and therefore would not be computed upon disbursements to lienholders unless such lienholders were also "creditors."

§ 2113. No Absolute Right to Full Commissions: Less May Be Allowed or All Allowance Withheld.—The trustee has not the absolute right to the full commission: The court may allow him less. The only limitation prescribed by the statute is a maximum limit: the court shall not allow him more than six per cent. on the first five hundred dollars, nor more than four per cent. on the next thousand, etc.

The court may, in its discretion, withhold all compensation from any trustee who has been removed for cause.⁷²

By this provision of clause (c) it should not be inferred that the court may not withhold all compensation to the trustee for other causes than his removal. It is not a place for the application of the rule "Inclusio unius, exclusio alterius." Circumstances may be such as to warrant refusal of compensation altogether, even though the trustee be not removed. The discretion not to grant the maximum compensation is the discretion to refuse compensation altogether, for cause.⁷³

In re Schoenfeld, 25 A. B. R. 748, 183 Fed. 219 (C. C. A. Pa.): "Where a receiver or trustee has been negligent in the performance of his duty, the court may, in a proper case, without the filing of exceptions deny him any commissions."

The doctrine of this paragraph is not affected by the Amendment of 1910.

See Report No. 691 of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, 61st Congress, Second Session: "Of course, the rates of commissions prescribed are maximum limitations. Less, but not more, may be allowed; and it is hoped the courts will exercise their discretion still in allowing less amounts where proper."

§ 2114. Apportionment, Where Three Trustees or Successive Trustees.—In the event of any estate being administered by three trustees instead of one trustee, or by successive trustees, the court will apportion the fees and commissions between them according to the services actually rendered, so that there shall not be paid to trustees for the administering of any estate a greater amount than one trustee would be entitled to.⁷⁴

§ 2115. Extra Compensation for Conducting Business.—Trustees and receivers are entitled to extra compensation for continuing the business of the bankrupt.⁷⁵

Before the amendment of 1903 a great injustice was done to trustees who were required to continue the business. It was repeatedly held, and entirely in accordance with the law, that no extra compensation could be allowed for such additional services.⁷⁶

The framers of the Amendatory Act of 1903, although in a somewhat ineffective way, endeavored to remedy this defect. They provided by amendment to clause 5 of § 2 that courts of bankruptcy should have power to “authorize the business of bankrupts to be conducted for limited periods by receivers, the marshal or trustees, if necessary in the best interests of the estate, and allow such officers additional compensation for such services, but not at a greater rate than in this Act is allowed trustees for similar services.”⁷⁷

The Amendment of 1910 permits additional compensation to trustees and receivers (and marshals) for continuing the business of the bankrupt and specifies the extent and the manner of the fixing thereof.^{77a}

See Report No. 691 of the Senate Judiciary Committee of the 61st Congress, 2nd Session: “As the law originally stood there was no provision whatever regulating the compensation of receivers, although the compensation of trustees (at any rate for the performance of their ordinary duties) was most carefully and economically prescribed and limited. The idea of the framers of the law of 1898 undoubtedly was that the administration of bankrupt estates would be placed in the hands of trustees who were to be elected by creditors and whose moneys turned over by them or afterwards realized by the trustees from property turned over in kind by them to the trustees; such commissions not to exceed six per centum on the first five hundred dollars or less, four per centum on moneys in excess of five hundred dollars and less than one thousand five hundred dollars, two per centum on moneys in excess of one thousand five hundred dollars, and one per centum on moneys in excess of ten thousand dollars: Provided, That in case of the confirmation of a composition such commissions shall not exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid creditors on such composition: Provided further, That before the allowance of compensation notice of application therefor, specifying the amount asked, shall be given to creditors in the manner indicated in section fifty-eight of this act.”

As to what does not amount to “carrying on the business,” see In re Knosher & Co., 28 A. B. R. 747, 197 Fed. 136 (C. C. A. Wash.), quoted at § 2119½.

compensation was carefully limited. However, it was necessary to provide for the contingency, frequently occurring, of a period of time elapsing after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy and before the election of the trustee, during which interval assets might be in danger of destruction or depreciation, and for this purpose it was provided that receivers might be appointed 'when absolutely necessary for the preservation of the estate,' and that these receivers (as well as the trustees afterwards) might carry on the business whenever the best interests of the parties required it, though only for 'limited periods.' While the compensation of trustees (at least their 'ordinary' compensation) was carefully limited, yet the compensation of receivers was left wholly to the discretion of the court, a defect which the Amendment of 1903 did not correct. Such unlimited discretion in the allowance of compensation has offered opportunity for certain serious abuses to creep in. Indeed, in some sections of the country, the appointment of receivers and the conducting of the business by them have become the rule rather than the intended exception, a custom which has resulted in estates being kept for prolonged periods, sometimes, indeed, for almost their entire administration, in the hands of receivers appointed by the courts, with compensation allowable in the unlimited discretion of the courts, rather than in the hands of trustees elected by creditors, with compensation carefully and economically limited. As to the matter of additional compensation for the conducting of the business by the receiver or trustee, the Act of 1898, as originally passed, gave no such additional compensation. This was an injustice, because the conducting of the business of the insolvent is frequently necessary, particularly when adjudications are contested or when the assets consist of an active business which can be best sold as a going concern. The Amendment of 1903 sought to correct this injustice by an amendment of § 2, clause 5, of the act—a part of the statute, however, which is not germane to the subject of compensation, for which reason the whole subject is now referred to § 48 of the act. Through the unfortunate wording of the Amendment of 1903, especially through the use of the word 'similar,' this clause regarding compensation was at least ambiguous. It was the actual intention of the framers of the Amendment of 1903 that where the trustee or receiver conducted the business he might be allowed additional compensation, but that such additional compensation should not exceed once again the compensation prescribed in § 48. § 48 carefully limiting the compensation of the trustee to certain fixed percentages upon moneys disbursed. The courts have construed the Amendment of 1903 as allowing additional compensation for conducting the business, to be sure, but have held that there is no limit upon the amount allowable, save and except in the 'discretion of the court.' (In re Shiebler & Co., 23 A. B. R. 162; 174 Fed. 336.) A careful reading of the proposed amendments forming new clauses (d) and (e) of § 48, in conjunction with § 48 (a) of the law as the latter clause continues to stand [§ 48 (a) is itself recommended for amendment, as hereinafter noted], will exhibit fully the method proposed to be adopted by the present amendment for compensating receivers for their ordinary duties and for giving additional compensation to trustees or receivers for the conducting of business. As a basis from which to start, the established rate of compensation already prescribed in § 48 (a) of the act for trustees for the performance of their ordinary duties is adopted. Trustees or their ordinary services already are compensated in § 48 (a) of the act by way of commissions on moneys actually disbursed by them, the rate being 6 per cent on the first $500, 4 per cent on the next $1,000, 2 per cent on the next $8,500, and 1 per cent above $10,000, averaging, in an estate of $5,000, less than 3 per cent on the whole; in an estate of $10,000, less than 2½ per cent on the whole; and in an estate of $20,000, less than 2 per cent—a very low rate of commission. The present amendment fixes the maximum compensation that can be allowed receivers for the performance of their ordinary duties at precisely this same rate, instead of leaving it to the unlimited discretion of the court. It also fixes the extra compensation, whether it be to the receiver or trustee, for the conducting of the business, to once again this same rate; so that, at best, the ordinary and extraordinary compensation taken together, in the event that both a receiver and trustee have successively had charge of the estate and even have both conducted the business, cannot exceed four times the amount allowable to trustees by § 48 (a) of the act for the performance of his ordinary duties. The practical difficulty in the way of allowing commissions to receivers, where the receivers turn over to the trustee in specie the property which they have been taking care of, is obviated by the provision that the commissions are to be figured upon the amounts thereafter actually realized upon sale of such property so turned over in specie. Thus the bill seeks to reduce to the one rational basis of commissions, on moneys actually realized, the compensation, both ordinary and extraordinary, of both trustee and receiver; and by this is done away with, also, the unlimited discretion of the courts in the allowance of compensation to such officers. Of course, the rates of commission prescribed are maximum limitations. Less, but not more, may be allowed, and it is hoped the courts will exercise their discretion still in allowing less amounts where proper. It is further to be observed that creditors are to be given notice of all applications for allowance, and thus there is afforded an additional safeguard. The changes proposed by §§ 1, 9, of the amendatory bill will then, it is thought, tend to prevent extravagance in the administration of insolvent estates and to remove the temptation which now exists toward the creation of prolonged receiverships, and will also tend to put the administration of bankrupt estates promptly into the hands of trustees elected by the creditors, in accordance with the actual design of the framers of the bankruptcy act, rather than in the hands of receivers appointed by the courts."

§ 2117. No Additional Compensation Allowable "in Any Form or Guise."—The statute, in § 72, provides that "neither the referee, receiver, marshal nor trustee shall, in any form or guise, receive, nor shall the court allow him, any other or further compensation for his services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in the act."⁷⁸

And a contract to give extra compensation is void on the ground of public policy.

DeVries v. Orem, 17 A. B. R. 879, 65 Atl. 430 (Md. Ct. App.): "So it appears from a review of the acts of Congress on this subject, and from the authorities construing them, that it would manifestly be in violation of the spirit and intent, as well as the plain language of the acts, to allow extra compensation to a trustee for his services in bankruptcy cases. But, independent of the acts of Congress relating to bankrupt estates, we are of the opinion that contracts of this character should not be enforced, and are void as against public policy.

"In this case the appellee was an unsecured creditor of the estate to an extent of $200,000, and owning more than over 90 per cent. of the unsecured claims. The unsecured indebtedness amounted to about the sum of $217,000. The dividend she was to receive on account of her claims was pledged to the appellant for the payment of a commission of five per cent. on the entire proceeds of the sales of the assets of the estate. In other words, she agreed to pay him for his services as trustee an additional sum to the compensation he would receive under the Bankrupt Acts that would equal a commission of five per cent. on the entire sales. And this commission was to be paid on the entire proceeds of sales including the mortgaged property, and also the amount to be allowed the secured creditors. A trustee is an officer of the court and is appointed for the purpose of acting for the interests of all the creditors, without favor or partiality. And no contract between him and a creditor should be upheld which is calculated to improperly influence his action, or which would tend to make it to his interest to favor one creditor over another. The principle is well settled that no man should be allowed to have an interest in conflict with or against his duty. He certainly should not be allowed by his own act voluntarily to create such an interest. * * * The authorities sustain the proposition in cases similar to the one at bar, that contracts of this character are illegal and against sound public policy. In Cowing v. Altman, 1 Thomp. & Cook (N. Y.) 494, where the consideration for a check was an allowance or promise agreed to be paid the payee thereof for his services as an assignee in bankruptcy over and above the fees and commissions allowed by law, and in express violation of the United States Bankrupt Act, it was held that the consideration was illegal and the check void."

The Amendment of 1910, to § 72, it will be observed, includes the receiver and marshal among those thus prohibited.

Of course this prohibition refers only to allowance of compensation out of assets and would not refer to costs taxed against unsuccessful petitioning creditors, in favor of receivers or marshals where no adjudication occurs and no moneys are realized in the estate. The Amendment of 1910 in this regard, should, of course, be construed in the light of the evils it sought to correct, which were extravagance and uncertainty in the allowance of compensation out of assets in process of administration—not to the taxing of costs against unsuccessful parties litigant.

Likewise, the ordinary fees of the marshal for the service of papers, etc., are governed by § 52 (b) of the Act and are not within the contemplation of § 48.⁷⁹

In cases where there is no adjudication and no composition under § 12a, but where there is a dismissal of the petition without adjudication, and without judgment against the petitioning creditors, as, for example, in cases of "friendly settlements" where the entire bankruptcy proceedings are "lifted" by consent of all creditors, of course, the compensation of the receiver and trustee may be agreed upon and paid by consent of all parties.

Act, § 52b: "Marshals shall respectively receive from the estate where an adjudication in bankruptcy is made, except as herein otherwise provided, for the performance of their services in the proceedings in bankruptcy, the same fees, and account for them in the same way, as they are entitled to receive for the performance of the same or similar services in other cases in accordance with laws now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted, fixing the compensation of marshals."

Rulings before Amendment of 1910.—Some courts held, though there was no express provision governing the amount of the receiver's compensation, that the maximum allowance, at any rate for conducting the business, was not to exceed that of the trustee. In re Richards, 11 A. B. R. 581, 127 Fed. 772 (D. C. Mass.); apparently Dunlop Hdw. Co. v. Huddleston, 21 A. B. R.

The receiver's compensation is not to be deducted from that of the trustee, but is in addition thereto.

[Before Amendment of 1910] In re Richards, 11 A. B. R. 581, 127 Fed. 772 (D. C. Mass.): "I think therefore, that the court is permitted to allow as maximum compensation to receivers who have carried on the business, the maximum compensation allowed to trustees by § 48; this receivers' allowance not necessarily to be deducted from the trustees' maximum, but in some cases reckoned in addition to the latter. Referees will understand that this is the maximum, not the minimum or the normal, compensation of receivers. Sometimes the receiver's duties are merely formal and so his compensation should be small. Sometimes he has so far settled the bankrupt's estate that the trustee's duties are little more than formal, and so the trustee's compensation should be small. In many cases the rule hitherto adopted by the referee may well be proper, but I do not think it is absolutely binding in all cases. Its universal adoption would so limit the compensation of receivers as to make a suitable appointment difficult in some cases. An efficient administration of the Bankrupt Act calls for a reasonable liberality in this matter. The opinion just expressed applies only to receivers who have carried on the business. The compensation allowable to other receivers is not here in question."

§ 2119¼. Compensation in Composition Cases.—By the Amendment of 1903 the trustee's compensation in composition cases was reduced to one-half of one per cent. upon the amounts disbursed to creditors. This provision was not changed by the Amendment of 1910, but was re-incorporated therein as the rule for compensation for both the trustee and receiver in composition cases, with an additional one-half of one per centum where he conducted the business.⁸³

721, 167 Fed. 433 (C. C. A. Ga.); In re Leonard, 24 A. B. R. 97, 177 Fed. 503; In re Cambridge, 14 A. B. R. 168, 136 Fed. 983 (D. C. Mass.). "The amendment [that of 1903] is intended to provide that receivers shall not be more highly paid than trustees. The receiver's maximum allowance, therefore, is that stated percentage upon disbursements which is fixed as the maximum compensation of the trustee." However, it was held in other cases that the receiver's compensation was to be simply whatever was found in the court's discretion to be reasonable. In re Scott, 3 A. B. R. 365, 99 Fed. 404 (D. C. N. Car.); inferentially, In re Sully, 13 A. B. R. 22, 142 Fed. 895 (D. C. N. Y., affirming 13 A. B. R. 783); instance, In re Kyte, 19 A. B. R. 768, 158 Fed. 121 (D. C. Y.): "From an examination of the bankruptcy law the question of compensation to receivers and their attorneys seems to be entirely with the discretion of the court." It was held before the Amendment of 1910 that it was left at any rate to the discretion of the court for services other than those in conducting the business. In re Kirkpatrick, 17 A. B. R. 595, 148 Fed. 811. But even for conducting the business it was held to be discretionary in some cases. In re Shiebler & Co., 23 A. B. R. 162, 174 Fed. 336 (C. C. A. N. Y.); In re Falkenberg, 30 A. B. R. 718, 206 Fed. 835 (D. C. N. Mex.).

83. Bankr. Act as amended 1910, § 48a: "And in case of the confirmation of a composition after the trustee has qualified, the court may allow him, as compensation, not to exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid the creditors on such composition. * * * (d) Receivers or marshals appointed pursuant to § 2, subd. 3, of this act shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, compensation by way of commissions, etc. * * * Provided, That in case of the confirmation of a composition such commissions shall not exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid creditors on such compositions: * * * (e) Where the business is conducted by trustees, marshals, or receivers, as pro-

It was unfortunate that the Amendment of 1903 regulating compensation in composition cases was brought forward into the Amendment of 1910. Whilst, no doubt, the amount of work for a receiver or trustee in composition cases is probably not as great as where the estate is administered throughout in bankruptcy, yet the compensation of one-half of one per cent. in composition cases is altogether too small. The hardship is somewhat alleviated by the practice in some districts of appointing the receiver or trustee in composition cases as the distributing agent to distribute the "consideration" to be paid to creditors for the ransoming of the bankrupt estate. The maximum rates of compensation limited by § 48 were meant for the protection of the bankrupt estate and not for that of an outside redemption fund and the statute only relates to the compensation of the officers for administering the bankrupt estate. The "consideration" deposited by or for the bankrupt in composition cases is for the purpose of redeeming the estate (rather than for administering it) and manifestly is an entirely different fund, in theory at least, from the bankrupt estate itself, and creditors are not interested in what allowance may be made out of that fund to the distributing agent for his care in making the distribution of the consideration to creditors. The "consideration" is to be "distributed as the court may direct" and the distributing agent who performs the distribution may be compensated as the court deems suitable. It is only upon the supposition that the court will appoint the receiver or trustee in composition cases distributing agent that the allowance of one-half of one per cent, respectively, for the receiver's and trustee's services before the composition is endurable.

§ 2119½. Receiver as "Mere Custodian."—The amendment of 1910 provides that where the receiver or marshal acts as a "mere custodian" and "does not carry on the business" he is not to receive more than two per cent on the first $1,000 or less and one-half of one per cent on all above $1,000. The insertion of this proviso has produced some ambiguity, especially from its unfortunate wording—"And does not carry on the business." This latter clause might seem to imply that all cases where the receiver does not carry on the business would be cases where he would be merely a custodian. But this is not the meaning of the proviso. The proviso is meant to cover cases where the receiver has acted as a temporary guard, locking up the establishment and performing no administrative duties whatever in relation thereto,⁸⁴ a mere "key turner," so to speak. Wherever the receiver does more than act as a mere key turner or guard the court may allow him the compensation allowed in the earlier clauses

vided in clause five of section two of this act, the court may allow such officers additional compensation for such services by way of commissions upon the moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, etc. * * * Provided, That in case of the confirmation of a composition such commissions shall not exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid creditors on such composition."

of § 48-d. Such must be the necessary construction, otherwise the provision with regard to his compensation would be rendered meaningless.⁸⁵

Compare, In re Knosher & Co., 28 A. B. R. 747, 197 Fed. 136 (C. C. A. Wash.): "We do not think that the continuing of the business of the bankrupt by his employees for the remainder of one day constituted the carrying on of the business by the receiver within the meaning of the statute. On the other hand, we think the receiver was something more than a custodian, and that he was entitled to compensation as receiver under § 48d."

§ 2119³/₄. Notice of Application for Compensation.—By the Amendment of 1910 to § 48 (d) and (e), it is prescribed that, except as to the allowance of the trustee's ordinary compensation, notice of the application for compensation of the receiver and trustee must be given to all creditors, stating the amount applied for.^{85a}

SUBDIVISION "E."

FEES OF APPRAISERS, WITNESSES AND MARSHAL.

§ 2121. Appraisers' Fees.—Appraisers may be allowed compensation out of the estate. Their compensation must be reasonable, and, in its allowance, the manifest spirit of economy in which the Bankrupt Act was framed must be observed. Minute calculations as to the value of each article in detail is not required⁸⁷ and time thus spent by appraisers may not be liberally compensated for.⁸⁸

In re Kyte, 19 A. B. R. 768, 158 Fed. 121 (D. C. Pa.): "The main purpose of an appraisement is simply to get a general idea of the extent of the estate, See Report No. 691 of the Senate Judiciary Committee of the 61st Congress, Second Session: "Of course, the rates of commission prescribed are maximum limitations. Less, but not more, may be allowed; and it is hoped the courts will exercise their discretion still in allowing less amounts where proper. It is further to be observed that creditors are to be given notice of all applications for allowance, and thus there is afforded an additional safeguard. The changes proposed by sections 1 and 9 of the amendatory bill will then, it is thought, tend to prevent extravagance in the administration of insolvent estates and to remove the temptation which now exists toward the creation of prolonged receiverships, and will also tend to put the administration of bankrupt estates promptly into the hands of trustees elected by the creditors, in accordance with the actual design of the framers of the Bankruptcy Act, rather than in the hands of receivers appointed by the courts."

so as to charge the party in whose custody it is with its value, and at the same time enable all concerned the better to keep track of it. Incidentally it may serve as a guide also to prospective buyers, but it is not to be independently undertaken with that in view, and except for this purpose it is difficult to see what object was gained in going over the same goods a second time."

In re Fidler & Son, 23 A. B. R. 16, 172 Fed. 635 (D. C. Pa.): "The expense of taking the inventory is outrageous, each appraiser receiving $40. This is an extravagance which cannot be countenanced. The cost of appraisements is getting to be an abuse, which if not taken in hand by the courts, will lead to radical action by Congress. A per diem fee of $5 is all that is allowed in this district, and it must be an extraordinary case where over two or three days are necessary. If there is occasion for anything more than that, the trustee must justify it."

Appraisers will not be allowed compensation for worthless and unnecessary services, although rendered at the request of a receiver.⁸⁹

§ 2122. Witness Fees and Mileage.—Witness fees and mileage are allowable out of the estate as part of the costs of administration.⁹⁰

§ 2123. Bankrupt Not Entitled to Witness Fees.—The bankrupt is not entitled to witness fees. His rights in this regard being provided for by § 7 (a) giving him reimbursement for certain expenses, it will be presumed that this provision is exclusive of compensation or other reimbursement.⁹¹

§ 2124. But to Reimbursement of Actual Expenses Where Attending.—The bankrupt, however, is entitled to reimbursement out of the estate for his actual expenses in attending the sittings of the bankruptcy court, when ordered to do so, at a place other than the city, town or village of his residence.⁹²

§ 2125. But None Where Voluntarily Removing Residence after Bankruptcy Instituted.—The bankrupt may not be allowed his expenses where he voluntarily removes his residence to another place or into another district after he has commenced proceedings.⁹³ Otherwise a bankrupt could remove his home to distant parts and then elude examination unless his necessary expenses were paid to him; and thus could so annoy and overburden his creditors as to frustrate them entirely in making a proper discovery of the assets they are entitled to.

§ 2126. Whether Officers and Directors of Bankrupt Corporation Entitled to Witness Fees.—It is a query whether officers and directors of a bankrupt corporation are entitled to witness fees when examined. There is considerable force in the contention that they are not so entitled; for they are to be considered “the bankrupt” in similar relations of duty, such as that of preparing schedules, etc.⁹⁴

§ 2128. Amount of Witness Fees.—Witnesses in bankruptcy are entitled to the usual fees and mileage allowed in federal courts, namely, $1.50 per diem and five cents per mile each way.

No mileage may be charged for the travel of witnesses, in the absence of an affidavit showing their residence or place of business, or the distance necessarily traveled.

§ 2129. Marshal's Fees.—The marshal is entitled to his customary fees.⁹⁶

Section 829, Rev. Stat., U. S., prescribes the marshal's fees. The marshal's fees, as distinguished from his compensation as custodian of the property, and in the conducting of the business, are not affected by the Amendment of 1910, that amendment referring simply to allowances out of the assets for caring for them, § 48d referring to the marshal's compensation when appointed under § 2 (3), and § 48e referring to his compensation for conducting the business under § 2 (5). His fees for service of papers are prescribed by § 52b, taken in connection with § 829 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

§ 2130. Marshal May Demand Indemnity.—The marshal is entitled to demand indemnity.⁹⁷

Act, § 1 (a) (19): “‘Persons’ shall include corporations, except where otherwise specified, and officers, partnerships and women, and when used with reference to the commission of acts which are herein forbidden shall include persons who are participants in the forbidden acts, and the agents, officers, and members of the board of directors or trustees, or other similar controlling bodies of corporations.”

Act, § 52 (b): “Marshals shall respectively receive from the estate where an adjudication in bankruptcy is made, except as herein otherwise provided, for the performance of their service in proceedings in bankruptcy, the same fees, and account for them in the same way, as they are entitled to receive for the performance of the same or similar services in other cases in accordance with laws now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted, fixing the compensation of marshal.”

In re Adams Sartorial Co., 4 A. B. R. 107, 101 Fed. 215 (D. C. Colo.): "The question arises under the third clause of § 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, by which the court has authority to appoint a receiver, or the marshal, upon application of parties in interest, in cases where it shall appear to be necessary for the preservation of the estate, to take charge of the property of the bankrupt, and after the filing of the petition, and until it is dismissed or the trustee is qualified. If a receiver should be appointed under this clause of the act, there would be no question as to his right to compensation for his services, and I do not perceive that it can make any difference if the marshal shall act in that capacity. The circumstances that he receives a salary for all services performed by him is not controlling. The referee seems to have assumed that, because he did not personally get the compensation allowed, therefore it was not intended that he should have it. That is not the fact. The marshal does get personal compensation for all services rendered by him, in the way of salary; and fees which were allowed him as compensation before the act fixing a salary are still collected in suits of all kinds, as a fund out of which salaries shall be paid. So that the fact that there is a salary is a matter of no weight. I think the marshal is as much entitled to pay for his services in keeping the property as a receiver would be if a receiver had been appointed. The pay ought to be in amount such as the act requires in respect to other services which may be rendered by officers, and the fees allowed to all officers under this act are small—so small that there is a good deal of grumbling about them—but still the officers go on and accept what they can get."

Amendment of 1910.—The compensation of the marshal, receiver and trustee, as distinguished from their expenses, allowable out of the assets administered, for making seizures under Bankr. Act, § 2 (3), is established by the Amendment of 1910 upon a commission basis, upon moneys disbursed by them or afterwards realized by the trustee from

Act, § 48 (d): "(d) Receivers or marshals appointed pursuant to section two, subdivision three, of this act shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, compensation by way of commissions upon the moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lien holders, by them, and also upon the moneys turned over by them or afterwards realized by the trustees from property turned over in kind by them to the trustees, as the court may allow, not to exceed six per centum on the first five hundred dollars or less, four per centum on moneys in excess of five hundred dollars and less than one thousand five hundred dollars, two per centum on moneys in excess of one thousand five hundred dollars and less than ten thousand dollars, and one per centum on moneys in excess of ten thousand dollars: Provided, That in case of the confirmation of a composition such commissions shall not exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid creditors on such compositions: Provided further, That when the receiver or marshal acts as a mere custodian and does not carry on the business of the bankrupt as provided in clause five of section two of this act, he shall not receive nor be allowed in any form or guise more than two per centum on the first thousand dollars or less, and one-half of one per centum on all above one thousand dollars on moneys disbursed by him or turned over by him to the trustee and on moneys subsequently realized from property turned over by him in kind to the trustee: Provided further, That before the allowance of compensation notice of application therefor, specifying the amount asked, shall be given to creditors in the manner indicated in section fifty-eight of this act."

See also, ante, § 2115, et seq. Where no adjudication results, the compensation, so far as allowable out of the assets administered, cannot exceed the maximum commissions established by the statute in § 48; although as to any compensation taxed as part of the costs to be paid by petitioning creditors by way of a money judgment against them, neither the rate of § 48 nor the prohibitions of § 72 are applicable.

§ 2133. Distribution.—In the orderly development of the treatise, after consideration of the subjects of the separation of the assets belonging to the creditors from those belonging to others, and the collecting and converting of the same into money, and the payment of the costs and expenses of administration, naturally the subject is reached of the distribution of the remaining proceeds among the creditors. This end, indeed, is precisely the goal towards which the bankruptcy proceedings have been directed in behalf of creditors.

A distinct purpose of the bankruptcy act is to subject the administration of the estates of bankrupts to the control of tribunals clothed with authority, and charged with the duty of proceeding to final settlement and distribution in a summary way, as are the courts of bankruptcy; and creditors are not only entitled to have this jurisdiction exercised, but they may justly complain where the administration of bankrupt estates, or any part thereof, is attempted by any other tribunal, even though it be with leave from the bankruptcy court.¹

secured creditors² and the bankrupt, and after the payment of the costs and expenses of administration.³

The word "preference" is frequently used when "priority" is meant. "Preference," in bankruptcy law, has a distinct meaning and the meaning is invidious.⁴

The order of priority is, in general, first, taxes; second, certain wages of workmen, clerks and servants; third, priorities given by state and federal laws; and lastly, dividends to general creditors.

§ 2134½. Law in Force at Date of Adjudication Controls.—The statute in force at the date of adjudication controls the right of priority throughout the case.⁵

§ 2135. Priority Not Lost by Taking Judgment or Note; nor by Assignment of Claim.—Priority is not, in general, lost by taking judgment, by acceptance of a note, or by assignment of the claim. Thus, it is not lost by taking judgment, whether the priority be one created by the bankruptcy act,⁶ or be a state priority adopted in bankruptcy under § 64 (b) (5), if not thereby forfeited by state law.⁷ It is not lost by the acceptance of a note.

In re Worcester County, 4 A. B. R. 496, 102 Fed. 808 (C. C. A. Mass.): "Taking a note does not discharge an original debt which has any privileges, and either might be proved."

Nor by the assignment of the claim,⁸ at any rate not where the priority has become fixed before the assignment; nor even where the assignment occurred before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings.⁹

§ 2136. Not Lost Where Claim Also a Secured Debt.—The priority is not lost where the claim is also a secured debt.¹⁰ The creditor simply has two sources of payment, his security and his priority. It is even doubtful whether there exists any right to require the exhaustion of the security first.¹¹

§ 2137. Mere Judgments Not Entitled to Priority as Such.—A merely personal judgment, the claim on which it is founded not being entitled to priority, is not entitled as such to priority of payment out of the general funds, nor is it entitled to payment from the proceeds of any particular part of the property, unless it is a lien thereon under the state law.¹²

In re Worcester Co., 4 A. B. R. 502, 102 Fed. 808 (C. C. A. Mass.): “Nothing is found in the orders giving any special direction with reference to the manner of proving claims in connection with which a priority is asserted. Neither do the prescribed forms for proofs of debts contain anything of that character, although the form of the proof of a secured debt requires that it shall enumerate the securities held by the creditor. Neither is there anything in the statute giving any direction as to the method of proving a debt in reference to a priority. The topic is covered by § 57 (30 Stat. 560). The first paragraph of that section (“a”) gives detailed directions for the proof, but it omits any reference to the matter of priority, although it is express about proofs by creditors holding securities. Paragraph “e” provides that the claims of secured creditors and of those who have priorities may be allowed, in order to enable such creditors to participate at meetings held prior to the determination of the value of their securities or priorities, but they are thus to be allowed for such sums only as to the court seems to be owing over and above the value of their securities or priority. This, however, concerns only the preliminary determination in a preliminary way of the franchise rights of creditors. * * * There is nothing in this section (64) to indicate that the question of priority is essentially involved in the mere matter of proving a debt, or even that a claim to priority should appear in the formal proof.”

However, the affidavit for proof of debt should, in practice, contain allegations sufficient to show the debt is one of those enumerated in § 64 as entitled to priority and such affidavit should be sufficient where no objection is made to establish the priority.

It is not necessary that the right of priority be asserted before the expiration of the year limited for proving claims, if the debt itself be proved in time.

In re Ashland Steel Co., 21 A. B. R. 834, 168 Fed. 679 (D. C. Ky.): "The privilege was not a detached right, which could only be fastened by special proceedings taken to enforce it, as by an attachment or an execution or the enforcement of a mechanic's lien. It needed only to be proved, when the time should arrive for distributing the assets. * * * We think that, the substantive claims having been proven within the time allowed by the act, it was within the power of the court to allow the claims priority, and give them the preference to which by law they were entitled, notwithstanding no definite claim of the kind had been made during the year. It was not the allowance of a new claim, as counsel for petitioners insist, but the giving full scope to one already proved. It was essentially the ascertainment of its rank to be regarded in the distribution of the assets. The word 'claim,' in § 57n we should suppose, refers to the substance of the obligation, rather than to any mere attribute of it."

And the fact that the priority claimant inadvertently participated in the election of the trustee, as if his claim were not entitled to priority, will not constitute an estoppel nor a waiver of the priority.¹⁴

§ 2140. "Dividends" on Priority Claims Where Funds Insufficient.—Of course, if there is not enough to pay any particular class of the priority claimants in full, a dividend of a per cent. should be declared to such priority claimants. There can be a dividend to priority creditors precisely as well as to general creditors.¹⁵

DIVISION I.

TAXES.

§ 2141. Taxes.—The first creditor to be taken care of, is, of course, the state.

In re Yoke Vitrified Brick Co., 25 A. B. R. 18, 180 Fed. 235 (D. C. Kan.): "* * * anything inhering in the general principles of equity or the law, such, for example, as the duty of the property to contribute its just proportion of the expense of government, or to pay its pro rata share of the expenses incurred in the preservation of the estate, and such like matters, remain still enforceable against the estate, although covered by fixed liens and against the consent of the holder of such liens, for such expenses are incurred for the protection of the lienholder and are enforceable for that reason and not because embodied in the act."

¹⁴ In re Ashland Steel Co., 21 A. B. R. 834, 168 Fed. 679 (D. C. Ky.).
¹⁵ In re Muhlhauser, 9 A. B. R. 81 (Ref. Ohio).
 See also, ante, § 576.

The act prescribes that the court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, state, county, district or municipality, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors.¹⁶

In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 678, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Pa.): "Taxes, as a class, are thus put at the head of everything—even above the expense of preserving the estate, or the cost of administering it."

It is incorrect to say, as was said in In re Veitch, 4 A. B. R. 112 (D. C. Conn.), that taxes come under § 64 (b) (5) in the order of priority as being "debts owing to any person who by the laws of the State or United States is entitled to priority."¹⁷

On the contrary, § 64 (a) specifies a distinct order of priority. That section of the statute would be deprived of all significance if taxes were comprehended within § 64 (b) (5). Moreover, the other paragraph of § 64, paragraph (b), refers to the order of priority "except as herein otherwise provided," clearly indicating that the only remaining paragraph "herein" was meant to prescribe a priority.¹⁸

Again, taxes from their nature ought to come next to costs in the order of priority, for without taxes the general government would fail; as, also without costs the particular protection of the state in the immediate property concerned could not be afforded. The state must not be delayed nor hindered in its collection of taxes and it is this urgency that lies at the basis of the priority given to taxes.¹⁹

City of Waco v. Bryan, 11 A. B. R. 481, 127 Fed. 79 (C. C. A. Tex.): "The sovereign cannot be hindered or embarrassed or postponed in the collection of his revenues. of preference to prior satisfaction of debts due the United States.' Section 5 of the Act of August 19, 1841, ch. 9, 5 Stat. 444, gives priority to the United States (for all debts due by such bankrupt to the United States). Section 28 of the Act of March 3, 1867, ch. 176, 14 Stat. 530, gives priority, first, 'for the fees, costs and expenses of suit,' etc.; second, 'for all debts due the United States and all taxes and assessments under the laws thereof;' third, 'for all debts due to the State in which the proceedings in bankruptcy are pending, and all taxes and assessments made under the laws of such State.' The present Bankruptcy Law gives priority for all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, the State, county, district or municipality, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors. In short, it puts taxes due the State, counties and municipalities upon the same footing as taxes due the United States. On the plain construction of § 64a of the present law, and particularly in the light of past legislation on the subject, there is no room to hold that it makes any difference whatever, as to the right of priority, whether property on which taxes were assessed ever came into the hands of the trustee. The test is given in the statute: Are the taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district or municipality claiming the same? If yea, they are entitled to be paid in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, for thus saith the law."

In re Stalker, 10 A. B. R. 713, 123 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Y.): "The significance of § 64 (a) * * * is that a claim for taxes is paramount to all other claims because of the pecuniary needs and requirements of the municipality."

In re Halsey Electric Generator Co., 23 A. B. R. 401, 175 Fed. 825 (D. C. N. J.): "Keeping the legislative purpose of the Bankruptcy Act in mind, and viewing the language employed in the act in dealing with priorities, in the light of the foregoing suggestions, I am of the opinion that in the distribution of the assets of the bankrupt, the actual and necessary costs of preserving and administering the estate have priority over taxes."

The statute, in § 64 (b), provides, as the item entitled to the next place in the order of distribution after costs of administration, "wages due to workmen, clerks and servants;" nevertheless § 64 (a) provides that taxes are to be paid before creditors. So, the proper order of priority is for taxes next after costs of administration.²⁰

(State of) New Jersey v. Lovell, 24 A. B. R. 562, 179 Fed. 321 (C. C. A. N. J., affirming In re Halsey Elect. Co., 23 A. B. R. 401, 175 Fed. 825): "Now, while the relative order in which subdivisions 'a' and 'b' are placed is not happy, and indeed tends to mislead, yet the general intent of the section is clear. In subdivision 'b' we find the general scheme of awarding priority in advance of dividend creditors. That subdivision makes provision for paying such costs, fees, and liens as are therein provided, and if there are no outstanding taxes the fund is then paid to creditors. But before paying creditors, subdivision 'a' intervenes and makes provision for what, if omitted, has often proved a hardship, if not indeed an abuse in the settlement of decedent and insolvent estates, viz., delay in payment of taxes. Tax collectors whose power to distrain

Two cases, indeed [disapproved in In re Halsey Electric Generator Co., 23 A. B. R. 401, 175 Fed. 825 (D. C. N. J.)], hold that taxes are to be paid before even costs of administration:

Obiter, In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 678, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Pa.); In re Weiss, 20 A. B. R. 247, 159 Fed. 295 (D. C. N. Y.). But see quære, Chattanooga v. Hill, 15 A. B. R. 195, 139 Fed. 600 (C. C. A. Tenn.).

lapsed when the estate passed into the custody of the law, or who were left to come in as general creditors, were subjected to trying delays. Obviously subdivision 'a' meant that this delay should not occur, and therefore provided that, 'in advance of payment of dividends to creditors,' 'the court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district or municipality,' and, to prevent delay from questions concerning such taxes, it provided, 'in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax, the same shall be heard and determined by the court.' And yet in case the court had to take testimony, or order a referee to determine the legality of such tax, the adjudged tax would, under the construction here contended for, absorb the whole fund and leave unpaid the agency by which its payment was effected. Now, whether the 'creditors' referred to in the phrase, 'in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors,' places the payment of taxes ahead of dividend creditors alone, or places it also ahead of those creditors who, under subdivisions 4 and 5 of clause 'b,' are paid in full, is a question not before us. It suffices to say that on the question that is before us, namely, whether the taxes of a State are, under clause 'a,' given priority over 'the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to the filing of the petition,' we are clear they are not."

In re Halsey Electric Generator Co., 23 A. B. R. 401, 175 Fed. 825 (D. C. N. J.): "To my mind Congress has by apt words signified its intention to make taxes subordinate to the payment of the cost of preserving and administering a bankrupt's estate."

And it seems improper in theory and unnecessary from the point of view of statutory construction to place taxes in advance of costs of administration. Were they so placed, the administration of the estate might be completely blocked. The state is no more interested in the collection of taxes for the support of the government in its general functions than in the collection of the costs of its support in administering justice in the particular case immediately at hand—both taxes and costs are for the support of the government in the performance of its functions, and the particular support should have precedence over the general support, else the general support itself will fail.

Impliedly, (State of New Jersey v. Lovell, 24 A. B. R. 562, 179 Fed. 321 (C. C. A. N. J., affirming In re Halsey Elec. Gen. Co., 23 A. B. R. 401, 175 Fed. 825): "The question is of grave import, for it is clear that, if the administration of law is to be respected, a court, without power or means to pay for carrying out its orders, must refuse to make such orders; otherwise its helpless jurisdiction will incur merited contempt."

§ 2143. Back Taxes, Omitted, to Be Paid.—Back taxes, omitted from the tax lists of previous years, are to be paid.²²

In re Conhaim, 4 A. B. R. 58, 100 Fed. 268 (D. C. Wash.): "The bankruptcy law very justly requires the trustee of a bankrupt estate to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt, and the court will not favor any evasion of this law by giving a too liberal construction to its words * * * the omission of the property from the tax list for any year does not exempt it from taxation. On the contrary, it is the duty of the taxpayer to have the property listed by the tax collector and to pay the tax."

§ 2144. Delinquent Penalties and Interest.—The taxes are to be paid in full, including any penalties or interest for delinquency to the date of payment, the same as if the property were not in the hands of the court.²³

In re Kallak, 17 A. B. R. 414, 147 Fed. 276 (D. C. N. Dak.): "As other claims are not permitted to draw interest after the adjudication, it is therefore contended that the amount of the public demand for taxes is subject to the same restriction. The fact is, however, that under the Bankruptcy Law, § 64a, and other provisions dealing with the same subject, public taxes do not constitute a 'claim' in bankruptcy. It is not necessary for the public authorities to appear in a court of bankruptcy as ordinary claimants. They have no right in the administration as creditors and no voice in the selection of trustee, and the liability for taxes is in no way affected by the discharge of the bankrupt. On the other hand, the duty of the affirmative action rests upon the court of bankruptcy. It is the duty of the trustee to ascertain from the public records the amount due for taxes and bring the matter to the attention of the court, and thereupon it is the duty of the court to order their payment if there are sufficient funds in the estate for that purpose. There are two reasons why ordinary claims of creditors are not permitted to draw the interest subsequent to the adjudication; first, it is important that the proportionate interest of the several creditors in the estate be ascertained and fixed. If interest were to accrue, however, after the adjudication, the amount of the several claims would vary from time to time, according to their respective rates of interest and the proportionate share of the several creditors would be subject to constant re-adjustment. The second reason is the convenience of administration. If, at the declaration of every dividend, a new basis of apportionment were required, depending upon varying rates of interest, the administration of the estate would be seriously complicated. Chemical National Bank v. Armstrong, 59 Fed. 372, 379; White v. Knox, 111 U. S. 784. In the case of public taxes, neither of these reasons has any application because they do not share the estate with the claims of private creditors. On the contrary, § 64a expressly provides that before anything shall be paid to the creditors by way of dividends, all taxes owing by the bankrupt shall be fully discharged. The reason for claims becoming fixed at the date of the adjudication so that interest shall not subsequently accrue having no application to public taxes, the rule itself should not be applied in such cases."

In re Scheidt Bros., 23 A. B. R. 778, 177 Fed. 599 (D. C. Ohio): "No question as to taxes accruing and penalties imposed subsequent to the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings is involved. Whatever may be the rule elsewhere, in Ohio the penalty takes the place of interest. Bridge Co. v. Mayer, 31 Ohio St. 317, 328. Its allowance is intended to cover interest until the delinquent taxes are put into judgment (Wheeling & Lake Erie Ry. Co. v. Wolfe, 13 Ohio C. C. 374), or are paid voluntarily, or by special effort of the treasurer in person or by his agent—in some manner other than by process of law. The penalty, being treated as interest, is collectible as a part of the tax itself. 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 777, 778, 779. Under § 64 of the Bankruptcy Act the referee should have directed payment of both taxes and penalty."

Back taxes are to be paid, even though they absorb all, or a great part, of the assets; and even though the tax collectors have been negligent in making collection.

In re Weissman, 24 A. B. R. 150, 178 Fed. 115 (D. C. Conn.): "By this legislation Congress seems to have placed valid and subsisting taxes in a class by themselves and of the highest rank. The only possible question to be decided is whether the taxes, which the trustee has not been ordered to pay, were collectible from the bankrupt prior to adjudication. If they were legally due and owing at that time, they must be paid now. The referee seems to think that they were not, because the collectors had been guilty of laches in failing to collect sooner. Without explanation of the reasons for non-collection, it strikes one that the collectors have been disgracefully slack, but I cannot believe that in a suit against Weissman before bankruptcy such a defense would have been made, or, if it had been made, would have been seriously listened to by any court."

And taxes are not to lose their priority in favor of creditors whose assets have recently gone to swell the insolvent fund.²⁴

§ 2145. Taxes to Be Paid Whether Property Comes into Trustee's Hands or Not.—Taxes must be paid in advance of payments to other creditors, whether or not the property on which the taxes were assessed ever came into the hands of the trustee.²⁵

City of Waco v. Bryan, 11 A. B. R. 481, 127 Fed. 79 (C. C. A. Tex.): "This section is perfectly plain and seems to admit of very little, if any, construction. It is contended that it is inequitable for the bankrupt's estate to be compelled to pay, by priority, taxes originally levied on property which does not come into the hands of the trustee. To this it is sufficient answer to say that the priority to be given payment of claims against the bankrupt is within the control of the lawmaker, and is absolutely fixed by the statute, and the rule therein declared cannot be varied to meet ideas of what equity and good conscience may require. From the foundation of the government, it has been the policy

²⁴ In re Weissman, 24 A. B. R. 150, 178 Fed. 115 (D. C. Conn.), quoted, on another point, supra.

²⁵ In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 678, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Pa.): This case goes even too far, holding, obiter, that taxes come ahead of costs of administration—a holding not required by the wording of the statute nor by reason.

But a city is not entitled to a lien upon the assets for the amount of taxes assessed upon property that never came into its hands as trustee. Waco v. Bryan, 11 A. B. R. 481, 127 Fed. 79 (C. C. A. Tex.).

of the United States to exact priority in favor of the United States in all cases of insolvency. This policy is declared in § 3466 of the revised statutes, as follows:

“Priority Established. Whenever any person indebted to the United States is insolvent, or whenever the estate of any deceased debtor, in the hands of the executors or administrators, is insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debts due to the United States shall be first satisfied; and the priority hereby established shall extend as well to cases in which a debtor, not having sufficient property to pay all his debts, makes a voluntary assignment thereof, or in which the estate and effects of an absconding, concealed or absent debtor are attached by process of law, as to cases in which an act of bankruptcy is committed.”

And must be likewise paid though the property was abandoned by the trustee.²⁶

§ 2146. Taxes on Exempt Property to Be Paid.—Taxes on exempt property must be paid out of the estate.²⁷

In re Tilden, 1 A. B. R. 300, 91 Fed. 501 (D. C. Iowa): “There is no express exclusion of taxes against exempt property. The trustee is to pay ‘all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt.’ The creditors, however, plead what they term the ‘injustice’ of such a construction. The exempt property may have a large amount of taxes standing against it. The estate receives no benefit whatever from the exempt property. Where, as here, there is no question as to the property being exempt, the trustee, if he can in any wise be properly said to take such property under the adjudication of bankruptcy, takes it only for the purpose of at once passing it out as exempt property. So that, if received by him affected by the lien of the taxes, why should the trustee pass it back in a better condition than he received it? Wherein is his duty to lessen the general estate in his hands, by applying a part of the same to the removal of said tax liens, and thus lessening the amount otherwise distributable to the general creditors? If a mechanic’s lien, or other like lien, existed against said exempt property the general assets of the estate would not ordinarily be thus lessened to effect the removal of such lien. And the creditors call attention to this case as plainly showing the unjust result, as they term it, of the opposite construction of the statute. The amount in the hands of the trustee, if applied to pay these taxes on this exempt homestead, will be substantially exhausted, leaving barely sufficient to pay expenses of administration of the estate; and there seems much force in the argument. On the other hand, the bankrupt calls attention to the letter of the law—‘all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt,’—without any qualifying terms. And he properly insists that the burden is on the creditors to show why the statute does not intend what its terms plainly state. He also insists that this paragraph is a manifest recognition by Congress of the proposition that, whether any other creditor be paid or not, the government—national, State or municipal—is to have its taxes out of the estate. Again, the bankrupt might have paid these taxes at any time before filing his petition in bankruptcy. If, while on his way to the clerk’s office to file such petition, he had stopped at the taxpaying office, and there paid these taxes, and thereby reduced the general assets (actually turned into the estate by the amount of those taxes), no one could have justly complained. He very effectively inquires why is the general creditor now injured by payment of these taxes out of the estate, if their payment, as above suggested, could not have been complained of by him?"

§ 2147. Taxes to Be Paid Out of General Fund Though Only One Benefited Is Mortgagee, Purchaser, etc.—Taxes upon property belonging to the estate will be ordered paid out of the general fund to the state or municipality or federal government as the case may be, although the only one benefited will be a mortgagee, or some particular creditor, or a purchaser of the assets. The taxes must be paid and paid out of the general fund, and be paid first before all other claims of creditors, regardless of benefit or lack of benefit, lien or lack of lien.²⁸

Chattanooga v. Hill, 15 A. B. R. 195, 139 Fed. 600 (C. C. A. Tenn.): "But, irrespective of the question of a lien, the taxes constituted a personal debt against the taxpayer which can be enforced by proceedings in personam. The Bankrupt Act says that 'all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt' shall be paid by the trustee 'in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors.' This does not say or mean that such payment shall be dependent upon the question as to whether they are a secured debt. * * * Congress evidently meant that the sovereign should neither be postponed nor delayed in the collection of taxes, and therefore provided that the trustee should pay all taxes due and owing by the bankrupt in advance of dividends. The bankrupt might have paid all taxes immediately prior to the filing of a petition by or against him. This would not have been a preference. The law means that the trustee shall do what the bankrupt might have done and what good citizenship required him to do. The opinions of the courts are not agreed about this matter, and there are holdings which limit this direction to pay 'all taxes due and owing by the bankrupt' to such taxes as constitute a lien upon the bankrupt's estate in the hands of the trustee and remit the sovereign to the enforcement of any lien which it may have against property which the trustee relinquished to the lien creditors."

But compare, In re Stalker, 10 A. B. R. 709, 123 Fed. 961 (D. C. N. Y.): "Some seemingly unjust features may be presented by the application of the stringent provisions of the Bankrupt Act referred to, but as the law is plain and singularly free from ambiguity, it is obvious that Congress intended that the statute should be strictly construed and applied, unless the facts disclose unjust or prejudicial results." In this case that portion of the taxes which was upon the real estate sold "subject to taxes" was excepted.

certificates are parties to this proceeding. Evidently they do not rely upon the redemption of the property by the trustee in bankruptcy, or the payment of the taxes as a preferred claim. The taxes were paid by them in full, and they hold the property taxed as security. What further interest has the county and city in the real estate in question? No other or different taxes are due and owing them from the estate of the bankrupt. The remedy which the county and city have elected for the collection of the tax has resulted in absolutely wiping out the unpaid liens for taxes, and in securing, if not absolutely paying, their claim. There is no sound reason why the county and city should longer be regarded as creditors entitled to a priority of payment."

But in the case In re Brinker, it will be observed, it was a purchaser, not the state or municipality itself, that was praying priority of payment.²⁹

It would seem that the true rule in cases of mortgaged property would be that the trustee should pay to the state, municipality or federal government as a priority claim, the taxes due it from the bankrupt out of the general fund, for he is ordered to do so by the express words of the statute, and as between the state and the bankrupt estate, the bankrupt estate is bound to pay the bankrupt's taxes as a priority claim, no matter if the state also has a lien therefor on the property itself; but, having done so, that the trustee then should be subrogated to the lien of the taxes thus paid by him, if there be any lien therefor, as between him and other parties. By such subrogation, the state would get its taxes without delay; the statute be obeyed; and yet the creditors not be prejudiced nor mortgagees unduly favored. The distinction must be constantly borne in mind between the tax as a priority claim and as a lien on property. As a priority claim it is absolutely to be paid first, regardless of liens or benefits; but it is to be paid solely to the state or municipality and is a priority claim only in so far as it is owing by the bankrupt himself to the state or municipality. As a lien, on the other hand, it takes its place (although the first place) among other liens; and the same rules and doctrines of subrogation, etc., apply as with other liens.

The court's reasoning in In re Brinker, 12 A. B. R. 122, 128 Fed. 634 (D. C. N. Y.), refusing to grant subrogation to the purchaser, does not militate against, but rather strengthens, the above position, for general creditors are forced to pay the taxes to save their assets and hence come within the rules as to subrogation.

Nor does the ruling in In re Hollenfeltz, 2 A. B. R. 499, 94 Fed. 629 (D. C. Iowa), refusing reimbursement out of rents collected by the trustee to a purchaser at foreclosure sale for taxes paid by him, that were a lien at the time of the purchase, militate against the rule, for in that case, it was not the state nor municipality that was claiming priority, but the purchaser was claiming subrogation.³⁰

29. To same effect as In re Brinker, see In re Hollenfeltz, 2 A. B. R. 499, 94 Fed. 629 (D. C. Iowa).

30. But In re Force, 4 A. B. R. 114 (Ref. Mass.), a remainderman furnishing money for the paying of taxes properly payable by the bank life tenant, and doing so to save the estate, was held entitled to subrogation to the lien of the taxes thus paid off.

Nor can the trustee destroy the priority right of a tax-claimant by surrendering the property to a lienholder or abandoning it in a proceedings to which the tax-claimant is not a party.³¹

§ 2148. But Such Absolute Priority Belongs Solely to State, Municipality, etc., Not to One Who Has Paid or Holds Tax Title.—But the right to such priority of payment belongs solely to the state or municipality and does not inure to the benefit of one who has paid the taxes to the state or municipality and is now seeking reimbursement therefor, except, perhaps, where equity would declare the right of subrogation to exist.³²

In re Brinker, 12 A. B. R. 122, 128 Fed. 634 (D. C. N. Y.): "Such sales were made in conformity with statutory requirements providing for the collection of taxes. The city and county therefore have no real interest in the controversy. They are secure. * * *

"Such being the law, it is clear that third parties, bidders at a tax sale, holding tax certificates for their security, are not entitled to relief out of the assets of the bankrupt, much less is the purchaser at a foreclosure sale, having full knowledge of the tax liens, entitled to demand relief by the payment of taxes ostensibly to municipalities, but which in reality inure solely to his benefit, and when it may fairly be assumed that he bid in the incumbered property subject to existing liens for unpaid taxes and assessments."

In re Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 16 A. B. R. 597 (D. C. Pa.): "But to justify this, the tax in plain terms must be one which is due from the bankrupt, and not, as here, a mere liability for the collection of it from another."

"The treasurer of every corporation doing business in the State is thus bound to collect, in the manner prescribed, from resident bondholders, the tax which is so imposed, and, upon his failure to do so, the corporation is, no doubt, liable. But the cases, one and all, make it clear that the obligation of the corporation is one of collection only and does not make the tax its own."

Such person must rely on his lien if he have any. He is not entitled to priority of payment out of the general funds, except, perhaps, where equity would subrogate him thereto. And the mortgagee, himself bidding in the property, cannot require reimbursement for taxes paid by him that were a lien at the time he bid it in even out of the rent of the mortgaged property collected meanwhile by the trustee.³³ Similarly, a purchaser at a foreclosure sale in the state court, where the court has omitted to order taxes paid from the proceeds, will be refused subrogation, although he relied on the theory that the bankrupt estate must pay them.³⁴

Again, it has been held that a person paying taxes on real estate, bought by him of the bankrupt before bankruptcy under covenant against encum-

brances, is not subrogated to the right of the state to priority of payment of taxes that the bankrupt thus should have paid.³⁵ Likewise, where the taxes are assessed against the lessor of the bankrupt but the bankrupt is under covenant to pay the same, the tax is not entitled to priority out of the bankrupt estate—the debt of the estate is to the landlord upon the covenant, not to the municipality or state upon the tax.³⁶

And a sale "subject to encumbrances" includes a lien for taxes; and the purchaser has no standing to apply for an order to pay the taxes out of the general estate.³⁷ Much less would such a purchaser have standing to apply for reimbursement, where he has already paid the taxes, even though the court might have ordered payment of taxes out of the proceeds of sale but did not do so.³⁸

But, where a sale of a stock of goods by the trustee in bulk is made "free and clear," there being no provision in the order for payment of taxes from the proceeds, the state law fixing a lien therefor on the goods sold, the purchaser is entitled to have the tax lien paid out of the proceeds.³⁹ Of course, such payment would be by way of payment of the tax lien, not by way of payment of the tax as a priority claim.

It is constantly to be borne in mind that a tax may be not only a "priority" claim; but, if a lien, also a "secured" claim, and that the present propositions are concerned with it simply as a "priority" claim.

§ 2149. But "Subrogation" to Tax Lien Sometimes Proper.—But a remainderman or other party in interest, paying or furnishing money for the paying of taxes that ought to have been paid by the bankrupt in order to save the estate, may be entitled to subrogation to the amount of the tax lien so paid.

In re Force, 4 A. B. R. 114 (Ref. B. R. 300; Re Baker, 1 Am. B. R. 526. the incumbrance upon it. This, I think, may be taken to be so far a payment on their part of these taxes as to give them an equitable claim upon the funds in the trustee's hands, according to the doctrine of subrogation, which is, as stated in Sheldon on the Law of Subrogation, § 11, that 'one who has been compelled to pay a debt which ought to have been paid by another, is entitled to indemnity from the funds out of which should have been made the payment which he has made.' It is true that these petitioners did not actually pay the money, but they are left in the same position financially as if they had. The life tenant should have paid these taxes out of the rents, and this duty devolved upon the trustee, if not as a burden attached to the life estate, yet it nevertheless became such under the specific terms of the Bankrupt Act, and if they were not paid, the property could and would have been sold by the city at the expense of the remaindermen. Such a sale was not, in fact, made, but in accounting for the proceeds of the foreclosure sale, the mortgagee deducted the amount of the taxes, thus giving these petitioners, as I believe, an equitable standing."

Or a mortgagee, judgment creditor or even general creditor, may likewise be entitled to subrogation if he makes the payment to save the estate, or otherwise makes it under circumstances entitling him to subrogation in equity.

Obiter, inferentially, In re Brinker, 12 A. B. R. 122, 128 Fed. 634 (D. C. N. Y.): "Nor does the principle of the right of equitable subrogation have application here. Acer v. Hotchkiss, 97 N. Y. 396. The purchasers of the tax certificates were not obliged to bid in the property at the tax sale in order to protect themselves. They were not mortgagees or judgment creditors, or even creditors, of the bankrupt. They are third parties to the transaction, pure and simple, and accordingly cannot invoke the aid of the doctrine of subrogation. Furthermore, none of the purchasers of the tax certificates are parties to this proceeding. Evidently they do not rely upon the redemption of the property by the trustee in bankruptcy, or the payment of the taxes as a preferred claim. The taxes were paid by them in full, and they hold the property taxed as security."

But such right of subrogation would not exist, of course, in favor of a mere purchaser, though he bought in reliance upon the estate being obliged to pay the taxes.⁴⁰

In re Hibbler, 27 A. B. R. 612, 192 Fed. 741 (D. C. N. Y.): "While ordinarily the taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt must be paid by his trustee before the assets of the bankrupt are apportioned among the creditors, still, when the property is sold under an order of the court, and the purchaser subsequently pays the taxes, he is not subrogated to the rights of the municipality to priority payment.

"By analogy it may safely be held, I think, that when the trustee in bankruptcy transfers property subject to the payment of taxes, there is a legal obligation on the part of the grantee to make such payment; and, if the property is by him sold, the purchaser, having knowledge of outstanding taxes cannot be subrogated to the rights of the municipality for preferential payment."

nicipal, state or federal government,⁴¹ and a mere obligation on the bankrupt's part, as tenant for instance, to pay the tax levied upon the property in the landlord's name, does not entitle the tax to priority of payment out of the tenant's estate, the debt of the estate being upon the covenant, not upon the tax.

In re Broom, 10 A. B. R. 428, 123 Fed. 639 (D. C. N. Y.): "The only liability of the bankrupt for the taxes specified, and which is sought to be allowed as a preferred claim, is a contractual one between the bankrupt and the Flour City National Bank, and therefore cannot be regarded as a tax owing from the bankrupt to any municipality, within the provisions of § 64 (a).

But while such tax may not be entitled to priority of payment as a "priority" claim under § 64 (a), yet, if it be also a lien on the property, its security will, of course, remain unimpaired.

Nor does a mere obligation on a bankrupt corporation to collect taxes from bondholders entitle them to priority out of the bankrupt's estate.⁴²

Obiter, In re Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 21 A. B. R. 1, 165 Fed. 789 (D. C. Pa.): "But * * * as to the taxes on corporate loans, it was held [in In re Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 16 A. B. R. 594, 145 Fed. 267] that being due in realty from bondholders, the company [bankrupt] being merely a collector, they are not a tax as to it, but merely a liability arising out of the duty to collect imposed by the statute, and were not therefore entitled to the priority of payment contended for."

And where the corporation has failed to collect such a tax or to pay it over to the state, a claim by the state will be allowable only as a general claim.

Pennsylvania v. York Silk Mfg. Co., 27 A. B. R. 525, 192 Fed. 81 (C. C. A. Pa.): "It appears also, that the bankrupt on September 1, 1908, issued its bonds for the sum of $750,000, and secured them by a mortgage upon its real estate. By a statute of the State of Pennsylvania it is made the duty of the treasurer of a corporation, if the holder be a resident of Pennsylvania, to deduct from the interest the tax imposed by the State upon such bond and pay the same into the State treasury. This is a tax against the holder of the bond, and not against the corporation. The corporation, acting through its treasurer, is charged with the duty of collecting the tax and paying it over to the State. If it fails so to do, it becomes liable to the State for the amount of the tax and the penalty prescribed. Such is the purport of the decisions. In re Wyoming Valley Ice Co. (D. C. Pa.), 16 Am. B. R. 594, 145 Fed. 267; Commonwealth v. Railroad Co., 186 Pa. 247, 40 Atl. 1132. But there is nothing in the law giving to the State a preferred claim against the corporation whose treasurer has failed to collect the tax or to pay it over to the State. Consequently the item of $2,640 in the claim now under consideration for 'tax on corporate loans in the amount of $750,000 for 1909, and 10 per cent. penalty,' is not allowable as a preferred claim, but as the court below held, is allowable as a general one. There is one other item in the claim. It is for $500 for 'penalty for failure to file capital stock reports, 1903 to 1909, inclusive.' This item, like the one for $5,000 above mentioned, the court below disallowed without prejudice to the filing of a new claim under § 57j. This is all the commonwealth can properly ask for."

An individual partner's personal tax is not to be paid out of firm assets, in a partnership bankruptcy, until firm creditors are paid.⁴⁴

Swarts v. Hammer, 9 A. B. R. 691, 120 Fed. 256 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The money was clearly liable to be taxed under the State law and the tax is valid and collectible, unless the Bankrupt Act exempts it from taxation. Exemption from taxation is never presumed. The legislative intent to exempt property from taxation must be clearly and explicitly expressed. Whether Congress could rightfully exempt from State taxation the property of a bankrupt in the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy, and otherwise subject to taxation, we need not inquire. It has not attempted to do so, and it is highly probable it never will. The power of taxation, as well as the power to exempt from taxation, is a legislative, and not a judicial, function; and a bankrupt court, no more than any other court, can exempt from taxation property in the hands of one of its officers which is liable to taxation under the State Law. It has never been questioned, but what property in the custody and control of receivers and trustees of the Federal courts was subject to taxation under the State law, the same as other like property. Judson on Taxation, § 407, and cases cited. And this applies to trustees in bankruptcy as well as receivers and trustees in other cases and proceedings in the Federal courts. It is a grave mistake to suppose that property in the possession and custody of an officer of the Federal court by that single fact enjoys immunity from taxation."

Swarts v. Hammer, 11 A. B. R. 708, 194 U. S. 441, affirming 9 A. B. R. 691: "By the transfer to the trustee, no mysterious or peculiar ownership or qualities are given to the property. It is dedicated, it is true, to the payment of the creditors of the bankrupt, but there is nothing in that to withdraw it from the necessity of protection by the State and municipality or which should exempt it from its obligations to either."

In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 679, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Pa.): "But the Bankruptcy Act does not withdraw the estates of bankrupts from the reach of the taxing power, and they are subject in consequence, to the payment of taxes imposed while they are in the hands of trustees, the same as if they were not. * * * Even though accruing after bankruptcy, they must be re-

In re Sims, 9 A. B. R. 162, 118 Fed. 356 (D. C. Pa.), where the court says: "It does not follow, of course, that all moneys deposited in the registry of the court or designated depository of the courts are subject to taxation. Much of it belongs to nonresidents, and would not be subject to state taxes merely because impounded in litigation. But when a fund is held by a trustee in bankruptcy or other fiduciary agent of the court, which, but for the litigation, would have been liable for taxation in a particular taxing district, we see no reason why the court should not, on proper application, direct the payment of current assessments of valid taxes."

In re Conhaim, 4 A. B. R. 59, 100 Fed. 268 (D. C. Wash.): "The manifest intent of the law is that, while the estate is in the hands of the trustee, his custody shall not constitute a barrier to prevent the collection of taxes which would be collectible under the law if the property had remained in the possession and control of the bankrupt himself."

§ 2152½. Broad Use of Term "Tax" in Bankruptcy.—It is obvious that the word "tax" as used in the Bankruptcy Act is not used in any restricted or narrow sense.

In re Lange Co., 20 A. B. R. 478, 159 Fed. 586 (D. C. Iowa): "It is obvious that the word 'tax,' as used in the Bankruptcy Act, is not used in any restricted or narrow sense, but is used broadly to include all obligations imposed by the State and general governments under their respective taxing or police powers for governmental or public purposes. That a tax so imposed may not be a general property tax does not deprive it of the character of a tax. Many taxes are imposed under the name of license fees, franchise taxes, or taxes for special purposes under some other name, and are therefore special taxes; but they are nevertheless taxes imposed for a public purpose, no matter what the name under which they are levied or imposed, and are clearly within the meaning of the term 'tax' as used in the Bankruptcy Act."

It includes personal taxes.⁴⁶

§ 2154. Nature of Tax, Whether License, Penalty or Tax, Generally Determined by State Law.—The nature of a "tax," whether a mere license, or actually a tax, is, in general, to be determined by the law of the state imposing it.⁴⁸

In re Ott, 2 A. B. R. 637, 95 Fed. 274 (D. C. Iowa): "We now turn to the consideration of the construction of this statute by the Supreme Court, the highest judicial tribunal of the State. Such construction, if directly and positively given, and upon the sections above cited with respect to the question herein involved ['mulct tax'] is at least to be given careful and weighty consideration, and may control the decision reached herein. Indeed, the opposing creditors contend it must control such decision."

In re Stalker, 10 A. B. R. 709, 123 Fed. 96 (D. C. N. Y.): "This question is broad [whether 'assessment' a 'tax'] and might be of much difficulty, were it not that the interpretation adopted by the highest tribunal of the State, must govern here. It is an established rule in the courts of the United States that the decisions of the State courts with regard to the law of real estate, construction of State constitutions and statutes, are authoritative rules of what the law is."

Thus, water rates have been held to be "taxes" in Pennsylvania⁴⁹ and in New York,⁵⁰ but in New York to be taxes against the landlord and not entitled to priority of payment out of the bankrupt tenant's estate.⁵¹ And the "Mulct tax" of Iowa has been held not to be a "tax" entitled to priority of payment, but a mere license fee to conduct a saloon,⁵² although this holding is perhaps incorrect even in accordance with Iowa law;⁵³ while the "cigarette tax" of the same state has been held to be a "tax."⁵⁴

A statutory duty imposed on corporations to collect a tax from the holders of its obligations, is not itself a tax.⁵⁵

§ 2155. But Not Always.—But if the legislature of a state gives the name of "tax" to an exaction which is not a tax, and the courts of the state join in the misnomer, the bankruptcy courts, nevertheless, are not required to disregard the substance of the thing to the detriment of other claimants.⁵⁶

State of N. J. v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 17 A. B. R. 68: "It is doubtless true, as was said in the opinion of the learned judge speaking for the Circuit Court of Appeals, in this case, that if the highest court of the State should decide that a given statute imposed no tax within the meaning of the law as interpreted by it, a Federal court, in passing upon the Bankruptcy Act, would not compel the State to accept a preference from the bankrupt's estate upon a different view of the law. Conceding the doctrine that the meaning of a statute is a State question, except where rights, the subject of adjudication by the Federal courts, have accrued before its construction by the State court, or the question of contract within the protection of the Federal Constitution is involved, still a State court, while entitled to great consideration, cannot conclusively decide that to be a tax within the meaning of a Federal law, providing for the payment of taxes, which is not so in fact."

A bonus required by the state on an increase of the capital stock of a corporation is not a tax, and, therefore, is not entitled to priority; but it may be allowed as a general claim.⁵⁷

So, a penalty due, under the local law, for the failure of a corporation to deduct a tax from the interest due its bondholders, and pay to the state, is not a tax imposed on the bonds.⁵⁸

§ 2156. Thus, Franchise Tax.—Thus, it has finally been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, although with a strong dissenting opinion, that the so-called “franchise tax” of New Jersey, a type of many similar impositions, is a “tax” within the meaning of § 64 (a).⁵⁹

State of New Jersey v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 17 A. B. R. 68 (reversing In re Cosmopolitan Co., 14 A. B. R. 604, 137 Fed. 858, C. C. A. Ills.): “We are of opinion that this claim was for a tax. The language of the Act, as we have said, is very broad and includes all taxes. It is not necessary to enter upon a discussion of the different forms which taxes may take. Generally speaking, a tax is a pecuniary burden laid upon individuals or property for the purpose of supporting the government. We think this exaction is of that character. It is required to be paid by the corporation after organization, in invitum. The amount is fixed by the statute, to be paid on the outstanding capital stock of the corporation each year, and capable of being enforced by action against the will of the taxpayer. * * *

“It is urged by the appellee, and upon this ground the case was decided in the Circuit Court of Appeals, that this is in no just sense a tax levied by the State, but is the result of a contract by which the corporation was brought into existence, the consideration being the payment of annual sums for the privileges given by the State, for which no lien is given upon the property, but only a right of action for their recovery. But this imposition is in no just sense a contract. The amount to be paid, fixed by the statute, is subject to control and change at the will of the State. It is imposed upon all corporations, whether organized before or after the passage of the Act. The corporation is not consulted in fixing the amount of the tax, and under the laws of New Jersey the charter of such corporations as this may be amended or repealed.”

Although the strong dissenting opinion expressed by Justice Harlan is to be noted:

“The Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Peckham and myself dissent from the opinion of the court. In our judgment the ‘taxes’ owing by a bankrupt to a State—which § 64a of the Bankruptcy Act provides shall be paid in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors—do not embrace an ‘annual license fee or franchise tax’ (the words of the New Jersey statute), which, strictly, is not a property tax, but only an exaction by the State for the privilege given to a corporation to do certain business under its charter. We think the Bankruptcy Act should be so construed. It cannot be otherwise construed without doing gross injustice to those creditors of the bankrupt corporation who have business transactions with it at its place of business. Here the bankrupt corporation did no business in New Jersey. So far as appears, it did not have, nor expect to have, any connection with that State except to become incorporated under its laws. It had its seat of operations and all its tangible property in the State of Illinois. It had no property in New Jersey. Its scheme was to get a charter from New Jersey and then go to another State for purposes of its business. We do not think that Congress intended that in the distribution of the assets of a bankrupt preference should be given to the claims of a State which have their origin in and are wholly based upon a bargain with the State whereby certain privileges are granted in exchange for certain payments—privileges which the State may grant or withhold at pleasure. In our opinion the word ‘taxes’ in the Bankruptcy Act was intended to embrace only burdens or charges imposed in invitum and which were in their nature and in reality ‘taxes,’ as distinguished from governmental exactions for privileges granted. The claim of New Jersey, whatever its true amounts, should not be given priority, but should be placed upon the same footing with claims of other creditors. This view is consistent with the Act of Congress.”

And it has been held entitled to priority as a tax, even though it is not assessed until after the adjudication, if for a period anterior thereto.⁶⁰

A sum exacted by the state for the privilege of increasing corporate stock is not a tax.⁶¹

scribed statutory method for obtaining review or abatement of the tax, fatal to the re-examination in bankruptcy.⁶⁴

And a tax which, because of failure to take action for review within the statutory time, could not be reviewed in the state courts, may nevertheless be reviewed in the bankruptcy court, under the special provisions of Bankruptcy Act, § 64 (a).⁶⁵

§ 2160. Whether Taxes "Provable" Debts.—Taxes are not debts in the ordinary sense of that word. They are demands levied for the support of government or for some special purpose authorized by it.⁶⁶ There is considerable strength in the contention, however, that they are provable "debts" or "demands" within the meaning of the bankruptcy term, although the form of proof thereof and the limitations as to time, etc., be not the same as in cases of other debts. To be sure, § 63, defining "provable" debts, does not mention taxes, and they are thus not within the letter of §§ 1 (9) and (11), defining "debt" as being "any debt, claim or demand provable" in bankruptcy and "creditor" as being the "owner" of such provable debt. yet § 17, in enumerating the obligations excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy, says "all provable debts except (1) taxes, etc.," thus furnishing the implication that taxes are provable debts.⁶⁷

Obiter, In re United Button Co., 15 A. B. R. 400, 140 Fed. 495 (D. C. Del.): "A tax is not strictly a debt. It lacks the nature of a debt in that, though for a sum certain, it is not founded upon any agreement or assent of the person or persons against whom it is assessed, but is a burden for public purposes imposed in invitum. As an obligation or duty created by statute to pay money, however, it is quasi contractual, although there may be difficulty as to the remedy for its enforcement in a given case. Keener, in his work on Quasi-Contracts, p. 16, states that 'a statutory obligation which does not rest upon the consent of the parties, is clearly quasi contractual in its nature.' This proposition is illustrated by the case of a statutory demand for half pilotage for refusal to accept the services of a pilot. Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 450, 457. There has been much conflict in the decisions with respect to procedure for the collection of taxes, where no statutory mode has been prescribed, and also upon the point whether and under what circumstances, notwithstanding the existence of a statutory mode, the general principles of law will furnish an alternative or cumulative remedy by action. These matters of dispute, however interesting in themselves, are unimportant here. The procedure is supplied by the Bankruptcy Act. Section 64, which deals, among other things, with the priority of debts and demands against the estate of a bankrupt, provides, in paragraph a, for the payment by the trustee under the order of the court of 'all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, state, county, district or municipality, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors,' and that 'in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax the same shall be heard and determined by the court.' Thus, the taxes enumerated in § 17, 'legally due and owing by the bankrupt,' by § 64 are directed to be paid out of the estate, by § 17 are recognized as 'provable debts,' and are demands of a quasi contractual nature. While strict or technical 'proof' of them is not required, although often presented, there can be no doubt that they are to be treated as provable debts or demands embraced in the class 'founded upon an open account, or upon a contract express or implied.'"

Compare, in other connection, however, Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472: "Taxes are not debts. It was so held by this court in the case of Oregon v. Lane County, reported in 7 Wallace. Debts are obligations for the payment of money founded upon contract, express or implied. Taxes are imposts levied for the support of the government, or for some special purpose authorized by it. The consent of the tax payer is not necessary to their enforcement. They operate in invitum. Nor is their nature affected by the fact that in some States—and we believe in Tennessee—an action of debt may be instituted for their recovery. The form of procedure cannot change their character."

In re Fisher & Co., 17 A. B. R. 411, 148 Fed. 907 (D. C. N. J.): "While taxes are not in a strict sense, debts, they are so denominated in the Bankruptcy Act. Section 17 * * * Section 64 * * * and § 1 declare that the word "debt" shall include any debt, demand or claim provable in bankruptcy. Of course a tax is provable in bankruptcy."

§ 2161. No Formal "Proof" Required: Trustee Must Search for Taxes.—Taxes need not be sworn to and no formal proof of claim is required. It is the trustee's duty to search for taxes and his only necessary voucher is the ordinary receipt for taxes.⁶⁸

In re Prince & Walter, 12 A. B. R. 679, 131 Fed. 546 (D. C. Penn.): "And the Bankruptcy Act evidently does not contemplate that they shall be proved like an ordinary debt; providing, as it does, that they shall be paid by the trustee on the order of the court, and that he shall have credit in his accounts upon filing the receipts of the proper officers therefor."

In re Harvey, 10 A. B. R. 567, 122 Fed. 745 (D. C. Pa.): "An adjudication in bankruptcy does not affect such a lien, nor impose upon the city the duty of proving its claim as an ordinary creditor must do."

In re Cleanfast Hosiery Co., 4 A. B. R. 702 (Ref. N. Y.): "Section 64 of the Act relates specifically to taxes, and provides a special method for their payment, to wit, that the court shall order the trustee to pay them, and that the receipt of the proper officer shall entitle the trustee to a credit for the amount paid. A formal proof of claim, as in case of provable debts generally, is not specifically required; in fact, the latter provision as to a receipt by the proper officer would seem to imply that none is necessary, and no time limit is imposed. I think this section should in these respects control, rather than § 57, subdivision 'n,' above mentioned, prescribing the rule as to provable debts as a class, under the familiar rule of construction, that a statutory provision as to a general class must give way to a special provision relating to one of the class."

§ 2162. Year's Limitation for "Proof" Not Applicable to Taxes.—The limitation of one year for the proof of claims does not apply to taxes.⁶⁹

§ 2165. Must Be "Wages," and Be "Due" and "Earned."—It is for "wages" that the priority is given,⁷² and for such wages as are "due" and "earned."⁷³ But "wages" may include payments for piece work or by commissions⁷⁴ in the employ of the bankrupt.⁷⁵ damages for breach of contract of employment are not entitled as such to priority.⁷⁶

In re Lewis Co., 12 A. B. R. 279 (Ref. R. I.): "When a salesman employed under a yearly contract is wrongly discharged after seven weeks of work, sues at once and recovers judgment for breach of such contract, the amount recovered is not wages; hence upon the bankruptcy of the employer within a year, the salesman is not entitled to payment in full for the proportionate part of his judgment, which three months bears to the unexpired period of his term of service. * * *

"In the first place, it seems to the referee that the present claim is not for wages as defined above. It is a sum fixed upon by the court as the amount to be paid by E. B. Lewis Company because it wrongfully refused to allow Crooker to earn wages. The net results may be the same, but the referee is unwilling to read into the law, 'Damages for breach of wage contract,' as seems necessary in order to support claimant's contention. By way of illustration, would it be contended that this claim was for wages if claimant had secured a place elsewhere at a salary of $10 per week and claimed the other $10 for loss of wages as a measure of damages against the E. B. Lewis Co.? Does not this show that the real nature of the claimant's demands is because he lost the opportunity to earn the additional $10 wages, not because he earned wages? Re Pervear, Fed. Cas. No. 11,053."

§ 2167. Only "Workmen," "Clerks," "Salesmen" or "Servants" Entitled.—The priority is given only to those who were "workmen," "clerks," "salesmen" or "servants" of the bankrupt.⁷⁷

§ 2168. Relationship between Parties Governs and Not Solely Kind of Work.—It is the relationship the claimant bears to the bankrupt, not solely the kind of work, that determines the priority. In other words, the query is not merely: Was the claimant engaged in manual labor? But it is: Did the claimant, when earning the wages, sustain the relation of "workman," "clerk," or "salesman" or "servant" to the bankrupt? If he did, then he is entitled to priority for his services, no matter whether his work were manual work or mental work.⁷⁸ On the other hand, if he did not sustain such relation—if the relationship of master and serving man, master and clerk, or master and workman did not exist—then the claimant is not entitled to priority, no matter if his work were manual work and labor.⁷⁹

Frequently the mistake is made, in preparing proofs of claim for priority claimants, of saying a good deal about "manual work and labor" and nothing at all as to whether or not the claimant was a "workman," "clerk," "salesman" or "servant" of the bankrupt.

Thus, a "workman," "clerk," "salesman" or "servant" on vacation "with pay" is nevertheless entitled to priority for the time thus spent on vacation: they are his "wages" and are "earned" already.⁸⁰

In re B. H. Gladding Co., 9 A. B. R. 700, 120 Fed. 709 (D. C. R. I.): "Wages are 'earned' in the sense in which that term is used in the Bankruptcy Act, so long as a bona fide contract of hiring exists, and the clerk or servant continues in the master's employment and does all he is required to do."

And it was held in one case, that the claims of the wife and daughter of a bankrupt should be allowed for services rendered in his store under an express contract.⁸¹

§ 2169. "Workman," "Clerk," "Salesman" and "Servant" to Be Given Ordinary, Popular Meaning.—The words workman, clerk, salesman and servant are to be given their common, everyday, popular meaning.⁸²

In re Smith, 11 A. B. R. 646 (Ref. R. I.): "As used in this section (64) of the Bankruptcy Act it has its popular meaning, namely, 'payment for services rendered, especially the pay of manual laborers receiving a fixed sum per day, week or month,' Standard Dict. 2026, definition 'wage.'"

"See, also, Cyc. Law Dict., definition 'wages.' 'Compensation given to a hired person for manual or other inferior services.'"

In re Grubbs-Wiley Grocery Co., 2 A. B. R. 444, 96 Fed. 183 (D. C. Mo.): "The term 'workmen or servants' is to be presumed to have been employed in its ordinary acceptance. Ordinarily a workman is understood to be 'One who labors; one who is employed to do business for another; a worker; one who is employed in labor.' Doubtless the statute has reference to a workman employed on some character of work—laboring for some person who sustains to him the relation of an employer or master, for whom he works. So, also, the term 'servant' ordinarily means a person employed by another to render personal services to the employer, between whom the relation of master and servant exists, as understood in law."

In re Carolina Cooperage Co., 3 A. B. R. 157, 96 Fed. 950 (D. C. N. Car.): "The class to whom it was evidently the intention of Congress to give priority is that class who labor and serve; parties who, under the laws of some State would have a lien, or at least be preferred to other creditors in the settlement of an estate."

The technical meaning of "servant," as being any one employed by another (as used in the law of personal injury or of master and servant), is broader than its meaning under § 64 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act.⁸³

In re Smith, 11 A. B. R. 646 (Ref. R. I.): "All the decided cases under this subsection of the law give to the words 'workman, clerk or servant' a somewhat restricted meaning."

Thus, while, in the eyes of the law, even a high-salaried officer of a corporation may be its "servant," yet, in bankruptcy distribution, he is not entitled to priority, because that kind of "servant" is not what is meant.⁸⁴

But the mere fact that the claimant is a nominal officer of a bankrupt corporation will not of itself, preclude him from priority rights if, in truth, he was employed, and earned wages, as a servant of such corporation.⁸⁵

[Eng.] Gordon v. Jennings, 9 Q. B. Div. 45: "The term 'wages' is not applied to the remuneration of a high or important officer of the State or of a county, for instance, but to that of domestic servants, laborers and persons of similar description."

The statute means by servant, a serving man or woman, as the word is used in everyday life. So, also, with "workman," and with "salesman," and with "clerk."

Under the law of 1867 the priority was given to "house-servants." Obviously, the present law means simply to enlarge the class of servants from "house" servants to all kinds of servants about the premises or person of the bankrupt and his family.⁸⁶ So, also, the law of 1867 gave the priority to "operatives." The present law obviously means to confine the priority to that class of operatives known, commonly, as "workmen."

In re A. O. Brown & Co., 22 A. B. R. 496, 171 Fed. 254 (D. C. N. Y.): "Act 1867, * * * provided that priority should not be given, 'except that wages due from him [the bankrupt] to any operative or clerk or house servant' shall be preferred. Under the present act * * * the words are 'workman, clerk, or servant.' 'Workman' is possibly a wider phrase than 'operative,' and 'servant' is undoubtedly wider than 'house servant;' but the section is obviously copied after the law of 1867."

Similarly, persons selling goods in a store are "clerks" within the meaning of the act, as they also are by popular acceptance.⁸⁷

Obiter, In re Greenwald, 3 A. B. R. 696, 99 Fed. 705 (D. C. Pa.): "The scope of these words is to be determined, I think, not exclusively by the lexicographers, but in part, at least, by modern usage, which is continually modifying the content of words and phrases. 'Clerk,' for example, has come to include, not only a subordinate who writes letters or keeps books, but also a salesman in a retail store."

But those selling but not in the store are "salesmen."^{87a}

Musicians, employed at regular wages, to play on the bankrupt's roof garden, have been held entitled to priority as "servants."

ant' in any sense of the word, is still one who labors for the benefit of an employer. He is not in pursuit of an independent calling and is subject to his master's commands and must do as directed. The fact that his work is that of an artist does not deprive him of the benefit which the law intended to give to those working for wages for their living. An artist of the highest class might be employed to do some fresco painting at daily wages. Should the fact that he is an artist deprive him of any rights under that provision of the Bankruptcy Act, although his work is performed as a hired employee? I do not think the intent of Congress was so narrow, but rather that it took the broad view that every laborer, clerk, servant or employee working for wages for the benefit of a master or employer, when such wages furnish the means of his livelihood, and where the relationship of master and servant exists within the well known meaning of the law, shall have priority over ordinary creditors for the sum due him for such services, not to exceed three months' wages. Any other construction would do a great injustice to a large class of wage earners to whom their daily earnings are absolutely necessary for their support and that of their families, an injustice which I am not inclined to assume Congress intended to inflict on them. The priorities provided for by the Bankruptcy Act are remedial and should be liberal rather than strictly construed."

They were entitled to such priority, at any rate, as either workmen or servants.

A bookkeeper is a "clerk" within the meaning of the statute, even though only temporarily employed in adjusting the books and accounts.⁸⁸

§ 2170. "Traveling or City Salesman" Also Entitled to Priority.—Traveling or city salesmen before the Amendment of 1906 were not entitled to priority under § 64 (b) (4);⁸⁹ but were entitled to priority under § 64 (b) (5), if the State law recognized the priority.⁹⁰ But traveling and city salesmen are now entitled to priority, by the Amendment of 1906,⁹¹ but only in bankruptcies wherein the adjudication has occurred since 1906.⁹²

thorized to fix prices. He cannot pass upon the credit or standing of customers. He does not collect accounts. He is not responsible for the quality, condition, or delivery of the goods. He makes no personal contracts, and he has no other interest in the sales than his compensation for those which are approved by his employer. But, while the field of service and responsibility of traveling salesmen is limited the agreements which they make with their employers vary greatly in such details as the form of compensation, the extent of territory, and in many other particulars. A traveling salesman may be paid a fixed sum per day, week or month, or a yearly salary, or a commission on the amount of goods sold, or both a fixed sum in the form of wages or salary, and, in addition thereto, a commission on the amount of goods sold when the sales exceed a certain amount. The territory assigned to him may be confined to a single city or State, or it may cover many cities or States. Commonly, the employer pays the salesman's expenses, but sometimes, especially if he works for a commission, he pays his own expenses. Sometimes the employer has a list of customers, and the salesman receives a commission upon all orders sent in by those customers. Sometimes he is allotted a certain territory, and he receives a commission upon all sales which are sent in from that territory. In some cases the employer may direct the routes he is to travel, and in other cases the salesman chooses his own routes. Sometimes the salesman sends the orders directly to his employer, and sometimes the customers themselves send in the orders to the employer. We do not think any of these details takes a man out of the category of traveling salesman, because, under all these different arrangements, the service and responsibility of the salesman are substantially limited to the obtaining of orders in a certain territory, and having them sent to his employer. * * * The remaining question is whether the word 'wages' in any way limits the class of traveling salesmen who are included within this provision of the Bankruptcy Act. If this provision had been restricted to 'workmen' and 'servants,' it might perhaps be urged that 'wages' should be construed in its narrow and popular sense as meaning the payment of a fixed sum per day, week, or month for manual labor, or other labor of a menial or mechanical kind. But since this provision also includes 'clerks' and 'traveling or city salesmen,' if we construe 'wages' in this narrow sense we necessarily limit the operation of the statute to those clerks and traveling salesmen who happen to be paid for their services in a particular way; in other words, the question of preference is made to turn upon the mode of payment rather than upon the kind of service rendered. The result would be that a clerk who was paid a fixed sum per day, week, or month, which during the year amounted to $1,000, would be entitled to a preference, while a clerk who was paid this sum in the form of a yearly salary would be excluded; and, further, a traveling salesman who was paid a fixed sum of $100 or $500 a month would be entitled to a preference, while a traveling salesman who only earned from $30 to $40 per month in the form of commissions would be excluded. It is plain therefore, that 'wages' must be construed in its broader and more general sense as meaning compensation for services rendered, since to hold otherwise would lead to glaring inconsistencies and manifest injustice."

Even where it is the manufacturer who receives the stated percentage and the solicitor who gets all the profit above that percentage, the manufacturer merely paying the workmen's wages and furnishing the material (the solicitor also selecting workmen to put articles in position subject to the manufacturer's approval and also superintending such workmen), the solicitor has been entitled to priority,⁹⁴ though such ruling pushes the doctrine to its extreme limit.

And it has been held so, even where he was paid by a percentage of the gross sales of his employer and where he was required to pay the incidental expenses of an office and stenographer, besides.

In re New England Thread Co., 18 A. B. R. 840, 154 Fed. 742 (D. C. R. I.): "There is no apparent reason why a salesman may not be paid for his services as salesman by a per centage of the employer's gross sales, as well as by a per centage of those sales procured by his immediate solicitation. Practically, it is a somewhat difficult matter to determine what orders received by an employer are due to the efforts of an experienced and important salesman like the petitioner. Many of the orders received by the employer might have been a consequence more or less direct of previous efforts of the salesman. If practical men deem it proper that the arrangement for compensation should be based on the entire sales in the salesman's territory, whether they are directly traceable to him or not, we cannot say that compensation of this character is not as strictly compensation for services of the salesman as a fixed salary or a fixed per centage of sales actually traceable to the salesman. It is also suggested that, as the petitioner was under expense for an office and stenographer, it is impossible to apportion his wages from his expenses. The fact that by an arrangement between employer and salesman the salesman is to pay his own expenses cannot lessen the salesman's right to the agreed compensation, where the expenses are fairly incidental to the service to be performed."

§ 2171. Definition of "Wage Earner" in §§ 1 and 4 Not Criterion Here.—The definition of "wage earner," given in § 1 of the act, as being one who "works for wages, salary or hire at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 a year," has reference to those who may be proceeded against in involuntary bankruptcy, and is not controlling upon the question as to who is entitled to priority of payment of wages out of the estate, as being a workman, clerk, salesman or servant.⁹⁵

In re Gurewitz, 10 A. B. R. 350, 121 Fed. 982 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "An element of perplexity has been imported into the discussion by the assumption that the language quoted must be interpreted in the light of the definition of the word 'wage-earner' found in § 1 of the act. Subdivision 27 provides that:

"'Wage-earner' shall mean an individual who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding one thousand five hundred dollars per year." 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3420].

"It will be observed that the word 'wage-earner' is not used in the subdivision now under consideration. The word used is 'wages,' and no technical definition of this word is found elsewhere in the act, probably because the lawmakers concluded that when a word so plain and simple was used, and no further explanation was necessary.

"The reason for a concise definition of 'wage-earner' is made apparent by an examination of § 4b, 30 Stat. 547 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423), which provides that 'any natural person, except a wage-earner or person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil * * * may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. When a wage-earner was thus excepted from the operation of the involuntary features of the act it became necessary to define with precision the meaning of the term. We are, however, of the opinion, that the definition has no application to the present controversy for the reason that the defined word is not found in § 64b (4) 30 Stat. 563 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447)."

§ 2172. Thus, Independent Contractors Not Entitled.—Independent contract workers are not entitled to priority. Thus, one using his own workshop, machinery and tools, himself working as well as employing helpers, to manufacture cheese and butter, at certain rates, for another, out of milk furnished by that other, is an independent contractor and not entitled to priority.⁹⁶

Likewise, a blacksmith who maintains his own shop and shoes horses for whomsoever may apply, is not entitled to priority, although he himself does work.

Weaver v. Stone & Supply Co., 16 A. B. R. 518 (Ref. Ohio): "The three claimants in this case maintained shops where blacksmithing was done for whomsoever might apply to them for work of that character and for whom they were willing to do the work. The relation of employer and employee does not exist between the person taking tools or horses to a blacksmith shop for the purpose of having blacksmithing done for them and the person doing the work. They are no more employer and employee than are the person taking a watch to a watchmaker and the watchmaker who repairs the watch."

Again, one who buys, at wholesale, from jobbers, as the agent of any one who employs him, and receives a commission from each one for purchases made in that person's behalf, is not entitled to priority.⁹⁷ And, similarly, incidental commissions for getting customers, where the regular employment by the bankrupt is for other services, there being no obligation to serve in getting the customers, does not entitle one to priority for the commissions.⁹⁸

For the same reason factors are not entitled to priority.¹ And a general expressman doing draying for the general public and at the same time doing all of the bankrupt's draying, as ordered, is not entitled to priority.²

Again, one who employs workmen on the premises of the bankrupt to manufacture goods for the bankrupt, under the bankrupt's supervision, even where his workmen are paid by the bankrupt (on his account) is nevertheless an independent contractor and not entitled to priority, where the risk of profit or loss rests upon him by the contract: he is an employer of labor and not a workman, notwithstanding his close relation to the bankrupt.

In re [Thomas] Deutsche & Co. (No. 1), 25 A. B. R. 343, 182 Fed. 430 (D. C. Pa.): "He had charge, no doubt, of the blind department of the bankrupts' factory, but he was not a foreman or head workman so as to bring him within the statute. The relation was peculiar. The men under him were his own, hired and discharged by him, and he was paid for the work which they turned out at so much a piece, and was answerable for it, as for instance, if it was spoiled or not properly finished. This work was done at the factory of the bankrupts with the aid of materials and machinery which the bankrupts furnished, but was none the less that of the claimant, the men working for him and under his direction in making blinds, which he had contracted for. When they went outside of this, to do work for the bankrupts, the claimant was entitled to a cent an hour advance on the wages that he paid them; and he was charged the same amount when any of the bankrupts' men were called upon to assist him. The bankrupts, it may be, supervised it all and at times gave directions. And the hours of the men were regulated by the shop whistle, just as their wages were taken care of by the bankrupts for the claimant on pay-day. The blind department, also as so organized, was a part of the general establishment. But the fact remains, that the claim presented here, for which priority is asked, arises out of a contract with the bankrupts by which the claimant agreed to put out certain work for a certain price, furnishing his own men, and getting the benefit of their labor. The labor done was not his, but that of his men, however he may have, in a general way participated in it; and he profited according as he managed to get good work out of them. In this he was not a workman or laborer, but an employer of labor, and the remuneration to which he was entitled was not wages, but an agreed price for articles produced, which the law does not undertake to preferentially provide for."

But an ordinary day laborer, who does work with his hands, lifting logs, plowing, etc., has been held to be a "wage earner" exempt from bankruptcy although he works for different people, and at irregular intervals and owns the team that is used by him in the work.

Analogously, In re Yoder, 11 A. B. R. 445, 127 Fed. 894 (D. C. Pa.): "Upon these facts I think it is clear that the bankrupt was a wage earner and not an independent contractor. He was a servant hired by successive masters, and was always paid by the day, never by the job. The fact that he used his horses and wagons in performing the services for which he was paid by the day does not seem to me of any special importance. A carpenter, or any other skilled mechanic, employs tools—often his own tools—to assist him in earning his daily wages, and the bankrupt's horses and wagons stand, I think, in precisely the same category. * * * He was not an independent contractor, looking for his income to the profits that he might make by carrying out a contract for a lump sum, but was an ordinary day laborer, who did work with his hands, lifting logs, holding a plow, driving his team and similar services for which he was paid at a fixed rate by the day."

And it has been held that the reasonable value of a teamster's own services may be separated from that of the use of his team and wagon, and priority be given for the services and denied for the use of the team and wagon, although the contract be for both together without separation.³ Such rule is of doubtful authority. With quite as good reason could the value of the individual services of the various independent contractors in the above instance be separated by estimate from that of their employees.

§ 2173. Exclusive Employment by One Person Not Requisite.—Exclusive employment by one person may not be taken as a requisite.⁴

§ 2175. “Piece Workers” May Be Entitled.—Piece workers may be entitled to priority as “workmen.” There is nothing in the mere manner of payment by the piece to prevent such workers coming within the meaning of the term workmen.⁶

§ 2176. Idea of Subordination Implied.—The idea of subordination is implied.⁷

In re Gurewitz, 10 A. B. R. 351, 121 Fed. 982 (C. C. A. N. Y.): “The legislative intent * * * is manifest. It is to give a preference, limited in time and amount, to those employees of the bankrupt who work for wages. It surely could not have been the purpose of Congress to make the method of computation a criterion of priority. There is absolutely nothing in the language quoted, upon which to base such an assumption. In order to secure priority under this subdivision, the creditor must establish the following facts: First, that he was a workman, clerk or servant of the bankrupt. Second, that he earned wages within three months prior to the commencement of the proceedings.

“There is nothing ambiguous about the use of the word ‘wages’ in this connection. It means the agreed compensation for services rendered by the workmen, clerks or servants of the bankrupt—those who have served him in a subordinate or menial capacity and who are supposed to be dependent upon their earnings for their present support. Whether their employer has agreed to pay them by the hour, the day, the week the month or by the 'job' or piece, is wholly immaterial.

3. In re Lumber Co., 17 A. B. R. 117 (D. C. Ky.): But this case comes close to the border line of independent contract. To be sure the mere furnishing of the tools by the workmen will not prevent his claim being that of a “workman,” within § 64 (b) (4); but on the other hand the furnishing of a horse and wagon under an entire contract including his own services comes very close to being an independent contract relation rather than that of a subordinate “workman.”

"It is incredible to suppose that Congress intended to discriminate against the vast army of laborers who, in the coal mines, the foundries, the clothing manufactories and in almost every branch of industry, are paid, not according to the time consumed, but according to the work accomplished."

In re Smith, 11 A. B. R. 646 (D. C. R. I.): "The purpose of the law seems to have been to protect subordinate helpers or assistants and to pay in full those dependent on their wages as means of a livelihood. The meaning of 'wages' * * * carries with it the idea of subordination."

In re Greenwald, 3 A. B. R. 697, 99 Fed. 705 (D. C. Pa.): "The essential idea conveyed by this word, as commonly used, is the idea of a subordinate, whose occupation has nothing to do with correspondence or books of account, but requires him to use his hands to a considerable degree in manufacturing or building, or in similar pursuits. He may be skilled or unskilled; he may or may not, be aided by tools or machinery; but he does not belong to the same class as the man that is neither making goods nor erecting buildings, nor accomplishing similar results, but is exclusively engaged in the sale of a finished product."

In re Greenberger, 30 A. B. R. 117, 203 Fed. 583 (D. C. N. Y.): "It can make no material difference that Greenberger was carrying on this business as an individual. The fact that, as incident to the performance of his duties as general manager of this store, he kept it clean and did some clerical duty does not change the character of his employment. He was not employed to do that work, but to manage the business, and he was paid for managing it, and not for performing such menial service as he did perform as incident to the management. The claim is for salary and for salary as manager, not for services as a clerk or general workman and compensation as such. The referee was right in holding that the claim of Cohen could not be allowed as one entitled to priority. It would hardly do to hold that the general manager of the business of a corporation or individual, employed and paid as such, becomes entitled to priority, for the reason he incidentally sweeps the floor, dusts the counters, and assists in selling goods."

In re Crown Point Brush Co., 29 A. B. R. 638, 200 Fed. 882 (D. C. N. Y.): "There can be no pretense that these debts, or either of them, was entitled to priority of payment under any law or statute of the State of New York if not so entitled under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. Clearly the president and general manager of a corporation is not a clerk or a traveling or city salesman, even though he may incidentally and occasionally do some clerical work, or perform some clerical duties, or make some sales. The same may be said of the treasurer and assistant general manager of a corporation, even though the treasurer keeps his own books and makes his own entries. The duties of a 'general manager' and of an 'assistant general manager' are to manage, control, direct, guide the business; see that it is carried on pursuant to the policy or directions of the board of directors. If it should appear that a corporation employs a clerk to do or perform clerical duties at a fixed compensation or salary, and also empowers him to exercise certain powers of direction, supervision, and control or management, without added or extra compensation, he would be a clerk, within the meaning of the law, and his claim for salary would be entitled to priority; but should it employ him as clerk to perform clerical duties and set him to perform the duties of general or assistant general manager, and have the clerical duties performed by others he would not be a clerk, and his wages would not be due to a clerk, but to a general manager, or to an assistant general manager, as the case should be. The law would not tolerate an evasion of that kind. Wages due the general manager of a business or corporation are not entitled to priority of payment. On the other hand, should a corporation employ a person to act as and perform the duties of general manager or assistant general manager at a fixed salary and, finding such services unnecessary, set him to perform the duties of clerk, floor sweeper, and furnace tender, he would be, in fact, either a workman or a servant, within the meaning of the law, and his claim for salary so earned would be entitled to priority. He would have the right to accept the inferior employment and perform its duties. But should he voluntarily, while holding the position of assistant general manager, perform manual labor assigned as part of his duty, he would not become a workman or servant, and entitled to priority. His character would be determined by what he was employed to do. Here, as assistant general manager, John Morrison, Jr., was to perform such duties as the general manager shall prescribe. In a sense all employees of a corporation, from president down, are 'workmen' or 'servants.' They work, and they serve."

Thus, managing officers are not entitled to priority.⁸

In re Grubbs-Wiley Grocery Co., 2 A. B. R. 444, 96 Fed. 183 (D. C. Mo.): "This claimant was himself a stockholder in this corporation, and was one of the board of directors, and was its general manager. As such general manager he stood in the relation of vice-principal of the corporation. * * * Could it be maintained that he was a workman or servant of the company on a salary, entitling him, on the declaration of bankruptcy of the concern, to have his salary paid as a preferred claim? Indeed, it would present a remarkable feature of the Bankrupt Act, if the managing officers of a business corporation could vote themselves salaries ad libitum, and after, by their mismanagement, wrecking the company, and inviting an adjudication of bankruptcy, they could, to the exclusion of other creditors of the concern, whose money and property they had obtained on credit, come in as preferred creditors, to the exclusion of such general creditors. The act, in my judgment, admits of no such construction."

In re A. O. Brown & Co., 22 A. B. R. 496, 171 Fed. 254 (D. C. N. Y.): "It is quite clear that Olmsted is not a 'workman' for the bankrupt. Nor is he a 'servant,' because the term does not include all instances of the formal relation of master and servant. * * * The only thing left that he could be, therefore, is a 'clerk.' No one would think of calling the manager in charge of the Chicago branch of a broker's office a 'clerk'—he himself least of all. Whether or not he is employed for 'wages,' he is much distinguished from a clerk."

But compare, In re New Eng. Thread Co., 20 A. B. R. 47, 158 Fed. 788 (C. C. A. Mass.): "There is a general argument of some force which has been brought to our attention against any construction of this provision which would include the present claimant. This argument is that Congress intended by this provision to carry out the policy of the law of giving a preference to those who serve in a subordinate or menial capacity, and who are therefore presumed to be dependent upon their earnings for their present support; and, such being the intention of Congress, this provision should not be held to cover the case of a man who earns $4,000 a year as commissions for selling goods. While this argument is plausible, it will not bear analysis. Had Congress intended to give a preference only to a subordinate class of clerks and traveling salesmen, it should have so framed the statute as to limit the preference to clerks and traveling salesmen who received a comparatively small compensation for their services, and should not have used language which applies equally to all classes of clerks and traveling salesmen, without regard to the amount of their remuneration."

Thus, similarly, the editor of a bankrupt newspaper is not entitled to priority.⁹

But where claimant was merely a "dummy" director and secretary of the bankrupt corporation, serving as a matter of accommodation to the real owner, his claim for wages earned as steward in the restaurant of the bankrupt is entitled to priority.¹⁰

§ 2177. Correlative Obligation to Serve Implied.—The mere obligation to pay one for whatever service he might do, with no obligation upon him to perform any services, will not entitle such one to priority.¹¹

Thus, where the priority claimant has suffered his employer, the bankrupt, to retain a portion of his wages as they have been earned, to accumulate a fund with which to go to college, the priority claim could not cover this amount;¹³ although, presumably, if the precise money so retained could be traced into any particular fund, it might be reclaimed as a trust fund.

§ 2179. No principle of statutory construction is better settled than that which displaces the application of general provisions to a particular subject when there are specific provisions applicable to it in the same act. The subject of claims for wages is specifically regulated by clause 4, and its provisions express the particular intent of Congress regarding priority of such claims. As these confine the priority to wages earned within the three months before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, debts like the present are not included. We agree upon this question with the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, In re Rouse, Hazard & Co., 1 A. B. R. 234, 91 Fed. Of course § 64 (b) (5) would apply and might, if the state statute so provided, cover services rendered before the three months, if the claimants were not "workmen," "clerks" nor "servants."

§ 2179 $\frac{1}{2}$. § 2182. Reducing Claim to Judgment, Not Such Merger as to Lose Priority.—The claim of a workman, clerk, traveling or city salesman, or servant reduced to judgment is not so far merged in the judgment as to lose the priority originally attached thereto.¹⁸

§ 2183. Nor Is Priority Lost by Assignment of Claim.—Workmen's, clerks' and servants' claims, assigned to a third party after the filing of the bankruptcy petition, do not lose their priority, and the assignee has the same priority the workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen, and servants themselves would have had.¹⁹

A fortiori (even where assigned before the filing), In re Harman, 11 A. B. R. 64, 128 Fed. 170 (D. C. W. Nor is priority lost even if the wages claims be assigned before the filing of the petition.²⁰

Shropshire, Woodliff & Co. v. Bush, 17 A. R. R. 79, 204 U. S. 186: "The precise inquiry is whether the right of prior payment thus conferred is attached to the person or to the claim of the wage earner; if to the person, it is available only to him, if to the claim it passes with the transfer to the assignee. In support of the proposition that the right is personal to the wage earner, and enforceable only by him, it is argued that it is not wages earned within the prescribed time which are given priority, but wages 'due to workmen, clerks or servants;' that where the claim is assigned to another it is no longer 'due to workmen, clerks or servants,' but to the assignee, and therefore when presented by him lacks one of the characteristics which the law makes essential to priority. In this argument it is assumed that the wages must be 'due' to the earner at the time of the presentment of the claim for proof, or at least at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Without that assumption the argument fails to support the conclusion. But the statute lends no countenance to this assumption. It nowhere expressly or by fair implication says that the wages must be due to the earner at the time of the presentment of the claim, or of the beginning of the proceedings, and we find no warrant for supplying such a restriction. Regarding, then, the plain words of the statute, and no more, they seem to be merely descriptive of the nature of the debt to which priority is given. When one has incurred a debt for wages due to workmen, clerks or servants that debt, within the limits of time and amount prescribed by the Act, is entitled to priority of payment. The priority is attached to the debt and not to the person of the creditor; to the claim and not to the claimant. The Act does not enumerate classes of creditors and confer upon them the privilege of priority in payment, but, on the other hand, enumerates classes of debts as 'the debts to have priority.'

Obiter, In re Fuller & Bennett, 18 A. B. R. 443, 152 Fed. 538 (D. C. W. Va.): "That § 64b of the Bankrupt Act was designed to protect the wage-earner, dependent for his living upon his daily wage, cannot be questioned. That it gave a preferential lien for the wages earned three months prior to the bankruptcy proceeding, without requiring notice by recordation or otherwise, of such lien, is also true. Common experience tells us that laboring men, owing to their financial exigencies, constantly find it necessary in some way to forestall the securing the benefit of their wages prior to the time fixed for them to become due and payable by their employers. Thus, nothing is more common than for them to secure a certificate of some kind or form, showing that they have earned or are entitled to a sum for such wages, which they can assign to another and thereby secure money or supplies necessary for their immediate needs. To say that a person cannot take an assignment of such wages without losing the lien which the laborer by law clearly has, would in very many cases militate against the interests of the laborer and not in his favor. It would in many cases cause him to sell such demands at ruinous discounts. Certainly this was exactly the opposite of the humane purpose of the statute. To say that he may, after proving his claim for wages in the bankruptcy proceeding, which necessarily causes delay, assign it and preserve the lien to the assignor, but cannot do so before such proof in bankruptcy or before bankruptcy proceeding commenced against his employer, seems to me to be a narrow and technical construction, not warranted. Suppose his claim be wholly undisputed and admitted; what possible reason is there why he should be required to either starve or suffer, awaiting the law's delays, before realizing, by assignment, upon it? Both before and after proof in bankruptcy, it is the claim for the same labor performed, and supported by the same equities, and in either case he has derived the same relief from the assignment. It therefore seems to me that one who takes by assignment from a wage-earner such claim, who has in this way aided and relieved the wage-earner in realizing without delay the means required by his necessities, ought not to be in a sense discriminated against and punished for so doing. Therefore it seems to me that the assignee of such labor claim who presents it as such, in its original form and subject to its original equities, should be held to take by such assignment all the rights of the assignor, including the right to preference given by this § 64b."

Contra, In re Westlund, 3 A. B. R. 646, 99 Fed. 399 (D. C. Minn.): "This language requires that a debt for wages, to have priority, must be due to the wage earner. If the claimant entitled to priority might be an assignee, there would be no reason why such claimant should be restricted to $300, as he might be the owner of many small claims, each less than that amount, but aggregating more. The clause referred to is intended to favor the class whose reliance for the maintenance of themselves and families is generally upon their wages, as earned. There is nothing in the nature of security or lien for the payment of the wages which could pass to an assignee. No right to priority arises or exists until the proceeding in bankruptcy is instituted, and then the wages assigned are not 'due to workmen, clerks or servants,' but to their assignees, and are outside the language of this clause. If debts for wages so assigned can be allowed priority, they may come in conflict, or at least in competition, with other claims for wages due and owing to the same workmen, clerks and servants, earned within the same three months, and lessen the payments, if the assets will not pay in full all debts having priority. It must be held, therefore, that debts of a bankrupt for labor and services which at the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy are not due to the workmen, clerks or servants, but to assignees, have no priority."

§ 2183½. Whether Priority Lost by Assignee's Acceptance of Note.—It has been held, however, that such priority is lost by the assignee's acceptance of new obligations payable to the assignee himself, or where the assignee otherwise novates the debt or merges it with other debts; thus, as to the acceptance of a new promissory note.

In re Fuller & Bennett, 18 A. B. R. 443, 152 Fed. 538 (D. C. W. Va.): "But this [the principle of § 2183, ante], it seems to me, should always be subject to this important condition and limitation: That, after having so acquired by assignment he must not novate the debt nor merge it with other debts, or take from the debtor new obligations and securities therefor wholly due and payable to himself. It is not to be forgotten that the liens of this kind are not recorded, and the outside creditors can obtain no notice of them in that way. When presented in their original form, either by the wage-earner or by his assignee, it is easy enough for other creditors to ascertain whether the claim is just and comes within the limits of the statute; but on the other hand, suppose one takes by assignment from say 50 or 100 different laborers their several claims and merges them together and secures from the employer a new obligation for the total amounts, made to himself, does he not novate the debt?"

Yet, referring to the court's opinion in Re Fuller & Bennett, the question of the waiver of the priority is largely a question of intent, as shown by the facts; whilst difficulties in the way of verifying the propriety of the various claims should not be erected into a rule of law that an assignment to one by several or many deprives the claims assigned of the priority which they would have retained had they been assigned each to a different assignee.

And the salutary rules enunciated in the next paragraph, § 2184, regarding equitable subrogation of parties advancing moneys to meet pay rolls, should not be lightly thrown aside.

§ 2184. Subrogation of Persons Advancing Money to Meet Pay Rolls.—Persons advancing money to bankrupts to meet pay rolls, under agreement that such pay rolls should be assigned, probably may be subrogated to the rights of the workmen thus paid. This would be nothing more than the application of the rule of equitable subrogation.²¹

²¹. But contra, if the pay rolls were not in fact assigned, In re North Carolina Car Co., 11 A. B. R. 488, 127 Fed. 178 (D. C. N. Car.); but this is not correct, for the advancement under the agreement creates the equity whether carried out or not unless the assignment was actually waived. See post, Likewise, probably, if such advancement be made to preserve the business by one interested therein.

Yet there is considerable doubt as to the applicability of the doctrine of subrogation—whether it be subrogation by agreement or by force of equity—to wages claims before the bankruptcy.

And it would seem at any rate that such assigned claims should not compete for priority with the claims still owned by workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen or servants.²²

§ 2186. Wages Claims "of Workmen, Clerks, Traveling or City Salesmen and Servants" No Precedence over Valid Prior Liens.—Priority claims for wages of workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen or servants under the bankruptcy classification do not have precedence over valid liens in the distribution of assets covered partly or wholly by liens.²⁴ However, of course where by state law certain wages claims have such precedence, they will preserve their precedence in bankruptcy; ²⁵ although such precedence will result not from § 64 (b) (4) but rather from § 64 (b) (5).

But it has been held that even if by state law such priorities would have precedence over prior valid liens yet, in bankruptcy, such prior liens are protected by § 67 (d).

In re Yoke Vitrified Brick Co., 25 A. B. R. 18, 180 Fed. 235 (D. C. freed from liens thereon, in preference to the demands of those having fixed and valid liens on the property at the date of the adjudication?

"In so far as the statute of the State above quoted is concerned, it may be said: Conceding for the purpose of argument, as contended by petitioners, the broad and comprehensive language of the statute should be held to grant to the laborers and employees therein enumerated a prior right of payment to those having fixed liens on the property of an insolvent in the hands of a receiver or assignee for the benefit of creditors, if that question were presented in other than a bankruptcy proceeding, and further conceding this proceeding in bankruptcy is the legal equivalent for the receivership or assignment for the benefit of creditors employed in the statutes, as I think must be done (see In re Laird (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 6 Am. B. R. 1, 109 Fed. 550, 48 C. C. A. 538), yet the question remains: Does it follow therefrom petitioners are entitled to be paid out of the fund now in the hands of the trustee in this case, in preference to the rights of the mortgagee and mechanics' lien claimants here opposing such payment?

"I think not, and for the following reasons: The liens here asserted are admittedly valid and within the protection afforded by § 67d of the Bankruptcy Act. Therefore the mandate of the act is: Such liens shall not be affected by the provisions of the act; that is to say, neither the priority nor the validity nor any other subsisting right in the property acquired and held by virtue of such liens shall be affected by any provision of the Act."

DIVISION 3.

PRIORITIES UNDER FEDERAL AND STATE LAW.

§ 2187. Priorities Granted by State and Federal Laws.—The last class of claims entitled to payment before general creditors are debts owing to any person who, by the laws of the States, or of the United States, is entitled to priority.²⁶

Such claims must not only be entitled to priority under state law but also, of course, be provable under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, in order to be entitled to priority.²⁷

The State priorities, of course, are not priorities over all other claims whatsoever but only over those that are not specified in § 64 of the Bankruptcy Act as being higher in right.²⁸

In re Cramond, 17 A. B. R. 38, 145 Fed. 966 (D. C. N. Y.): "It may be well to remark that in my opinion subdivision 5 of § 64 of the Bankruptcy Act has no reference to liens actually existing at the time of the adjudication. obtained and created by express contract or by virtue of compliance with the lien law of a State, since the amendment to the Act, are first to be paid, excepting taxes subject to abatement for commissions expressly allowed to referees and trustees on all sums disbursed to creditors in the one case and to any one in the other. While all liens are, in a sense, priorities, and certain priorities may be liens, in a sense, still all priorities are not liens, and, in my opinion, clause 5 of subdivision b of § 64 does not refer, and was not intended to refer to liens on the estate of the bankrupt. It was assumed that valid liens would be paid, and that the debts and expenses, etc., designated to have priority would have priority of payment out of the estate after liens were satisfied, or out of the proceeds of the property if sold subject to liens. Since the striking out of the words 'sums to be paid as dividends and commissions,' in § 48, and the substitution of the words 'on all moneys disbursed by them,' and similar change in § 40 by the amendment of 1902, these commissions when necessary to be paid from funds subject to the liens, and which payment causes an abatement of the lien to that extent, gain the priority over liens by virtue of the reading of §§ 40 and 48 as amended, which sections now limit or modify subdivision b of § 64, and not by virtue of the reading of § 64. No corresponding amendment was made in § 64 of the Act as it was not regarded necessary. The directions of §§ 40 and 48 are plain and explicit, and must be read in connection with § 64. Only in exceptional cases does the necessity for applying the modification arise. I think it also clear that, should a case arise where a laborer has acquired a lien by virtue of the State lien law for wages earned within the three months before the commencement of proceedings, even should such lien largely exceed $300, he would hold his lien and be entitled to full payment thereof notwithstanding clause 4 of subdivision b of § 64."

In re Yoke Vitriified Brick Co., 25 A. B. R. 18, 180 Fed. 235 (D. C. Kans.): "In my judgment clauses 4 and 5 of § 64b of the Bankruptcy Act relate exclusively and alone to the subject of the right to priority of payment arising among those whose claims would, in absence of such clauses stand on terms of equality before the law as general unsecured claims, and that said clauses have no reference whatever to the subject of liens. * * * It was in contemplation of the law-making power that estates passing, as of the date of the adjudication, to the trustees in bankruptcy, would be covered and affected by fixed and valid liens resting thereon. Hence, for the protection of those holding such valid liens, and lest the rights of such lienholders should become confounded with the rights of those holding general unsecured demands against the estate which had been accorded priority in payment by the provisions of section 64b of the Act, it was provided in section 67d of the Act, in effect, that nothing appearing elsewhere in the act itself, no matter how general and comprehensive the language employed might be, should affect the validity, extent, or operation of such liens."

Also, priority is to be distinguished from expenses of administration. Thus, the rent for the receiver's or trustee's use and occupation of the premises, is not a "priority" but an "expense" of administration.³⁰

§ 2189. Federal and State Government and Municipality, as Priority Claimants.—The federal and state governments, municipal corporations, counties and quasi public corporations, in general, may be entitled to priority under § 64 (b) (5).³¹

³⁰ In re Hersey, 22 A. B. R. 860, 171 Fed. 1001 (D. C. Iowa). affirmed sub nom. In re Mercer, 22 A. B. R. 413, 171 Fed. 81); In re Mercer, 22 A. B. R. 413, 171 Fed. 81 (C. C. A. Minn.).

³¹ In re Western Implement Co., 22 A. B. R. 167, 166 Fed. 576 (D. C. Minn., Minn.).

Thus, the federal government may be a priority claimant, it has been held, under § 64 (b) (5); for instance, for damages for breach of contract by contractors;³² and it is not entitled to an earlier priority, ahead of workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen and servants, under United States Rev. Stats., § 3466.³³

Likewise, a county may be a priority claimant.³⁴

Likewise, a State government may be entitled to priority, it has been held, under § 64 (b) (5); for instance, for goods manufactured at the penitentiary and sold to a bankrupt.³⁵

§ 2190. Priority Given to "Any Person" by United States Law Preserved.—Priorities given to any person, by any of the laws of the United States, are preserved in bankruptcy.

Taxes do not come within § 64 (b) (5), but it is not necessarily because the government and State are not to be considered as being "any person" within the meaning of clause "5,"³⁶ nor is it because taxes are not to be considered "provable debts," as seems to be implied from the holding in Chattanooga v. Hill;³⁷ but it is rather because paragraph "(a)" of the same section of the statute specially provides the priority for taxes and therefore takes precedence over the general provisions of clause "5" of paragraph "(b)."

have priority of payment in bankruptcy,³⁹ and the surety paying the damages is subrogated to the same priority.⁴⁰

This priority of the government is governed by Bankr. Act, § 64 (b) (5), by which it is placed subsequent in order to the wages of workmen, clerks, salesmen and servants and it is not governed by United States Revised Statutes, § 3466.

Guaranty Title Co. v. Title Co., 224 U. S. 152, 27 A. B. R. 873, reversing S. C., 23 A. B. R. 340, 174 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Pa.), which itself reversed 22 A. B. R. 851: "The Bankruptcy Act of 1867, as we have seen, provided for priority, first, for the payment of expenses, and, second, of 'all debts due to the United States, and all taxes and assessments under the laws thereof.'

"The priority, therefore, given by the Bankruptcy Act was co-extensive with the priority given by the statute of 1797. But there is not such affirmation by the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 of that statute, which still exists, as we have said, as section 3466 of the Revised Statutes, supra. There is a change in provisions, and we come to the question if there is a change of purpose. * * *

"It will be seen, therefore, that by the statute of 1797 (now section 3466) and section 5101 of the Revised Statutes, all debts due to the United States were expressly given priority to the wages due any operative, clerk, or house servant. A different order is prescribed by the Act of 1898, and something more. Labor claims are given priority, and it is provided that debts having priority shall be paid in full. The only exception is 'taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district or municipality.'

"These were civil obligations, not personal conventions, and preference was given to them; but as to debts, we must assume a change of order. And we cannot say that it was inadvertent. The act takes into consideration, we think, the whole range of indebtedness of the bankrupt—national, State, and individual—and assigns the order of payment. The policy which dictated it was beneficent and well might induce a postponement of the claims, even of the sovereign, in favor of those who necessarily depended upon their daily labor. And to give such claims priority could in no case seriously affect the sovereign. To deny them priority would in all cases seriously affect the claimants."

39. In re Stoeber, 11 A. B. R. 345, 127 Fed. 394 (D. C. Penn.); Guaranty Co. v. Title Co., 224 U. S. 152, 27 A. B. R. 873, reversing on other points S. C., 23 A. B. R. 340, 174 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Pa.).

40. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 3468: "Whenever the principal in any bond given to the United States is insolvent, or whenever such principal, being deceased, his estate and effects which came to the hands of his executor, administrator or assigns, are insufficient for the payment of his debts, and in either of such cases any surety on the bond, or the executor, administrator or assigns of such surety pays to the United States the money due on such bond, such surety, his executor, administrator or assignees shall have the like priority for the recovery and receipt of the moneys out of the estate and effects of such insolvent or deceased principal as is secured to the United States; and may bring and maintain a suit upon the bond in law or in equity, in his own name, for the recovery of all moneys paid thereon." See also, Guaranty Co. v. Guarantee Co., 23 A. B. R. 340, 174 Fed. 385 (C. C. A. Pa.), quoted at § 2191.

But compare doubtful ruling in United Surety Co. v. Iowa Mfg. Co., 24 A. B. R. 726, 179 Fed. 55 (C. C. A. Mo.), where the court held to be a preference the levy upon assets of a government contractor by a surety on the contract who had that same day advanced money to meet the current payroll, taking a judgment note therefor at the time.

§ 2192. No Proof of Claims Requisite by Government to Secure Priority.—Claims of the United States entitled to priority must be paid even without the filing of a proof of claim. It has even been held that the trustee takes his own risk in paying out the funds without taking care of such claims.⁴¹

§ 2193. Year's Limitation for Proving Claims Not Applicable to Government.—The limitation of one year for the proving of claims in bankruptcy does not apply to claims of the United States government.⁴²

§ 2194. State Law Priorities Adopted Where Claimants Not in Classes Already Covered by Express Bankruptcy Priorities.—Priorities given by state laws are adopted by § 64 (b) (5) of the Act, at any rate where the claimants are not in any of the classes already covered by express bankruptcy priorities. Thus, the claim of a county for the labor of its convicts is entitled to priority.⁴³

Thus, the priorities given by a State statute, granting priority to the claims of resident creditors over the claims of foreign corporations which have not complied with the State law regulating the doing of business by foreign corporations, have been recognized in bankruptcy.⁴⁴

However, as noted ante, § 2179, and post, § 2203, where the State priority covers the same class of claimants covered by § 64 (b) (4) of the Bankruptcy Act, the better rule is that the bankruptcy priority displaces the State priority.⁴⁵

§ 2195. State Priorities to Laborers, Where Different from Bankruptcy Priorities.—In some states other claimants than simply "workmen," "clerks," "salesmen" and "servants," as the latter terms are used in bankruptcy, are entitled to priority of payment out of the funds of an insolvent in the hands of a court, and the amount allowed and time of service for which priority is given also differ.⁴⁶

In re Jones, 18 A. B. R. 212, 151 Fed. 108 (D. C. R. 636, 122 Fed. 630 (C. C. A. N. Y.), where the rule is laid down that the priority being given only because of the assignments, and the assignment itself being nullified by the bankruptcy, the priorities fall along with the assignment—a logical argument at any rate.

the Bankruptcy Act preserves such statute in effect as a law of the State touching the subject of priorities, it would remain entirely inoperative and of no force in the settlement of estates of bankrupts under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act."

Thus, where the costs of an attachment, which itself is dissolved by subsequent state insolvency or assignment proceedings, are nevertheless given priority by state law in such subsequent insolvency or assignment proceedings, they will be accorded the same priority in bankruptcy distribution.⁴⁸

Probably the question would turn in each case upon the point whether the statute in the particular instance is attempting to create general rights of priority in cases where insolvent estates are being administered, or simply to create certain rights of priority in case certain methods of distribution of insolvent estates are being pursued.

In re Jones, 18 A. B. R. 214, 151 Fed. 108 (D. C. Mich.): "Previous to the passage of the present Bankrupt Act, estates of insolvent debtors were usually, if not universally, administered in Michigan under either common-law assignments (later regulated by the general assignment statute of 1879), mortgage foreclosure, or receivership in some form. They have seldom, if ever, been administered under chapter 262, which relates to the 'Relief of Insolvent Debtors,' although the provisions of chapter 263, relating to the 'Relief of Insolvent Debtors from Imprisonment,' have been occasionally invoked, although rarely, as under the Michigan Constitution imprisonment, for debt generally is forbidden. Const. Mich. art. 6, § 53. The reports of the Supreme Court of Michigan fail to show that any case arising under chapter 262, or any case involving the application of § 9675 in question, have ever been brought before that court. As indicating what is meant by a general insolvency statute, it is significant that the labor preference statute referred to has been applied to the distribution of the estates of insolvents, not only under mortgage foreclosure by way of intervention * * *, under statutory assignments for the benefit of creditors, in which preferences are forbidden * * *, but also under original bill filed against mortgage and attaching creditors in possession of the debtors' assets. * * * This labor preference statute would probably be similarly extended to receiverships, as was done in Massachusetts; the Michigan statute making express provisions for granting receiverships for the protection of labor claimants. 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 9552. It would also, no doubt, apply to bankrupt estates, but for the fact that the Bankrupt Act contains express provisions on the subject of preference for labor debts which override the provision of the statute law. * * *

"On the other hand, and in sharp contrast to the general application of the labor insolvency statute, to none of these methods of administration and distribution of the estates of insolvent debtors under the State law has any attempt ever been made to apply the provisions of § 9675, here invoked, and doubtless for the reason that that section is by its terms limited to proceedings under the chapters included within the title in the 1846 revision, 'Of the Punishment of Fraudulent debtors and the Relief of Insolvent debtors.' In the absence of a bankruptcy statute, had the estate of this bankrupt been administered as an insolvent estate under Michigan laws, under either assignment for benefit of creditors, mortgage foreclosure, or receivership, or by any method except that provided by chapter 262 and 263 of the Michigan Compilation, the priority invoked would not have been recognized. The possibility of such estate being administered under chapters 262 or 263 would be very slight. As before stated, such administration could occur only by way of relief from actual imprisonment or, otherwise, only with concurrence of the debtor and creditors representing at least two-thirds of all debts owing to creditors within the United States. To my mind, § 9675 is, therefore, not 'of that general character which can be supposed to be within the purview of the provision of the Bankrupt Act which is concerned here,' and not such a 'law of the State' as to give priority under § 64b (5) of the Bankrupt Act. It follows that the referee rightly refused priority to petitioners' claims."

Thus, it has been held that the bankruptcy court will recognize in the distribution of the assets of a bankrupt foreign corporation the priority of the claims of resident creditors over the claims of foreign corporations which have not complied with the statute regulating the doing of business within the state by foreign corporations, such statute (whether constitutional or not being beside the question here involved) conferring substantive rights of priority rather than rights dependent upon resort to particular state remedies.

In re Standard Oak Veneer Co., 22 A. B. R. 883, 173 Fed. 103 (D. C. Tenn.): "It is also urged in behalf of petitioners that, although § 64b (5) of the Bankruptcy Act provides that in the administration of the bankrupt's estate priority shall be given to 'debts owing to any person who by the laws of the State or the United States is entitled to priority,' the provision of the Act of 1877 should be regarded as an insolvency law in reference to foreign corporations, which was superseded by the Federal Bankruptcy Act, and that hence the priorities which it gives should not be recognized. While, however, it is true that the enactment of the Federal Bankruptcy Act superseded all State insolvency or bankruptcy laws relative to persons or acts declared by the Congress to be subjects of bankruptcy, so that no further proceedings could be had under such State laws (1 Remington on Bankruptcy, p. 993, § 1628), yet this rule relates merely to the administration of the State laws in proceedings in the State courts, and does not prevent the enforcement in the Federal bankruptcy proceedings of any general priorities recognized by the State laws, where such priorities are conferred by the State statutes as substantive rights of priority not dependent upon the resort to particular remedies accessible only in proceedings in the State courts, and where such priorities are not in conflict with the express priorities declared by the Federal Bankruptcy Act itself or otherwise in conflict with its provisions. 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, p. 1346, et seq., §§ 2194, 2198. Furthermore, the rule relied on by petitioners can have no application to the statutes in question, which are not, strictly speaking, State insolvency laws within the general rule of suspension, but merely statutes prescribing the conditions upon which foreign corporations may enter the State for purposes of business."

§ 2197. Whether State Priorities Dependent on Resort to Particular Remedies, Such as Insolvency or State Bankruptcy Proceedings, to Be Recognized.—Whether or not priorities will be recognized in the distribution of an estate in bankruptcy that are given by a state statute in the event that assets are sequestrated by state insolvency or state bankruptcy proceedings, or by assignments, receiverships or other state proceedings involving the administration of an insolvent's assets, as an additional priority under § 64 (b) (5), when such state proceedings have not actually been instituted, is also to be determined by the ascertainment of the true intent of the state statute. If the state statute means to confer the priorities as substantive rights of priority in cases of the distribution of insolvent estates in general, then of course the priority is to be recognized in bankruptcy distribution; but if, on the contrary, the right is wholly special and dependent upon resort to a particular remedy, then, obviously, if that remedy is inaccessible, the priorities must likewise fail of recognition in bankruptcy.⁴⁹ Even the priorities of suspended insolvency statutes are adopted where not covering the same cases covered by the express provisions of the Bankrupt Act and where the priorities are intended to be given as substantive rights, not dependent on resort to a particular remedy.⁵⁰

Some of the decisions, however, have carried the adoption of State priorities to an unwarranted extreme; in effect, nullifying thereby the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act dissolving legal liens, and leaving to creditors no advantage in dissolving liens, their priorities being nevertheless perpetuated!!

Thus, it has been held, that where attachment costs could have had priority had State insolvency or assignment proceedings actually been instituted, they will have priority in bankruptcy, under § 64 (b), (5), even though such proceedings have not been instituted.⁵¹

In re Goldberg, 16 A. B. R. 523, 144 Fed. 566 (D. C. Me.): “* * * the clear intention of the Maine statute is that such costs shall be paid out of the estate, if it appears to the court that the suit was commenced in good faith for the benefit of all the creditors. The intention of the Maine legislature was to pay such costs in full out of the estate, providing the estate had received an actual benefit by incurring such costs, just as it is the intention of Congress to pay the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to filing a petition in bankruptcy. Courts in other circuits have disallowed such claims; but these disallowances have been based generally; so far as I can find, upon the fact that the statutes of the States where the questions arose did not provide for their allowance in terms so specific as the statutes of Massachusetts provided.”

In re Iroquois Mach. Co., 22 A. B. R. 183, 166 Fed. 629 (D. C. R. I.): “It seems to be very clear that it has been for many years the clearly defined policy of the State of Rhode Island, as expressed in its former and present general insolvency laws, as well as in the act regulating general assignments, that, whenever for the benefit of the general creditors an attachment is dissolved, the costs justly accruing prior to the moment of dissolution should be regarded as a charge upon the funds. * * * It is true that in the present case there

But compare (as to laborers' liens, not their priorities), In re Monroe Lumber Co., 24 A. B. R. 371 (D. C. Miss.), quoted at § 1155, note. It is difficult to gather from this decision whether the laborers' rights were considered to be in the nature of liens—in which event the principles of §§ 1437, 1444, 1586, would apply—or in the nature of priorities. The wording of the state statute would seem to classify them as liens.

had been no assignment for the benefit of creditors, but the recognition by the United States court of priorities under the laws of the State is not dependent upon acts of the parties under State laws, but rather upon the existence of statutes clearly defining the policy of the State under circumstances similar to those arising under the bankruptcy administration. * * * It seems to be the policy of the Bankruptcy Act to recognize both exemptions and priorities created by the State law, though this leads to some diversity in the administration of the Bankruptcy Act in various administrations."

Even though the attachment were prompted by the desire to get a preference the priority of its costs under State law might not be impaired.

In re Amoratis, 24 A. B. R. 565, 178 Fed. 919 (C. C. A. Calif.): "In like circumstances they would have been provable and entitled to priority in insolvency proceedings under the California statute cited. The fact that under that statute a claim for such costs is entitled to priority, even though the proceedings by the attaching creditor were prompted by the desire to secure a preference, does not, in our opinion, deprive the attaching creditor, whose good faith brings him within the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, as well as of the State Insolvency Act, of priority for such costs necessarily expended."

But there would be difficulty in determining which order of priority should thus be adopted by analogy, where the state law prescribes different priorities for different methods of sequestration.⁵³

Compare, In re Rouse, Hazard & Co., 1 A. B. R. 239, 91 Fed. 96 (C. C. A. Ills.): "Coming then to the merits, it may be remarked by the way of preface that the several provisions of the law of the State of Illinois with respect to the priority of payment to be allowed labor claims, are not altogether consistent. In the case of voluntary assignments, the claim of the laborer which is preferred must have accrued within three months next preceding the making of the assignment. In the case of a suspension of business by action of creditors there is neither limit as to time nor as to amount. The reason of the distinction is not easy to understand."

The claim of the state or county for the hire of its convicts, has been given priority in bankruptcy, though such priority would not exist under the state statute except in cases of state insolvency or state bankruptcy proceedings, which had not in fact been instituted and which indeed were not maintainable because of the existence of the Federal Bankrupt Act.⁵⁴

In re Wright, 2 A. B. R. 594, 95 Fed. 807 (D. C. Mass., affirmed sub nom. In re Worcester Co., 4 A. B. R. 496, 102 Fed. 808, C. C. A. Mass.): "Even if by the passage of the Bankrupt Act the insolvent law of Massachusetts were so avoided that it has ceased to be a law of Massachusetts, yet nothing would prevent the legislature of Massachusetts, during the existence of the Bankrupt Law, from passing a statute establishing priorities. Such a statute would have almost its sole effect in establishing priorities under the Bankrupt Law of the United States. It would be simply a re-enactment of the rule regarding the distribution of insolvent estates which had prevailed by statute up to the passage of the Bankrupt Law. To suppose that Congress meant to require such legislation by the States is unreasonable."

Thus, it has been held that even costs of a suit might be entitled to priority in bankruptcy, if entitled to priority under the state insolvency laws.⁵⁵

Obiter, In re Daniels, 6 A. B. R. 700, 110 Fed. 745 (D. C. R. I.): "It must, therefore, be accepted as the law of this circuit that, in determining what laws of a State are in force for the purpose of fixing priorities, we may look to the insolvency laws * * * the insolvency law of a State still remains a law for the purpose of fixing priorities. * * *

"The decision of the referee, then, cannot be supported upon the broad ground that in no case can the costs which are preferred under the insolvency law of Rhode Island be entitled to priority, under § 64b (5) of the Bankruptcy Act."

Although, of course, any lien therefor, if acquired within the four months, would be avoided by § 67 "f."⁵⁶

In re Burton Bros. Mfg. Co., 14 A. B. R. 218, 134 Fed. 157 (D. C. Iowa): "These sections, as construed by the Supreme Court of Iowa, when complied with, give priority of payment to the wage-earning employee, to the amount stated, from the property of the employer which has been so seized upon execution, or placed in the hands of a receiver, trustee, or assignee over all other liens upon such property (except certain mechanics' liens) and other creditors of the employer. * * * Neither of the petitioners ever presented to the officer making such seizure, or to the court from which the execution issued, the sworn statement required by section 4020 of the Code, nor in any other manner complied with the provisions of the above named sections. They apparently relied solely upon the levy of their executions upon the property to secure payment of their judgments, and nothing further seems to have been done after such levy and prior to August 20, 1904, when the petition in bankruptcy was filed against the judgment debtors. The adjudication of bankruptcy upon that petition dissolved the liens of the petitioners acquired by the levy of their executions upon the property of the bankrupt. * * *

"To have secured and preserved the right or liens given them by the State statute the petitioners should have complied with the provisions of that statute, and had they done so such right or lien might have been recognized and enforced by the court of bankruptcy. Section 64b (5), Bankruptcy Act. Not having done so, the only lien they had was that acquired by the seizure of the property under their executions. When such liens were dissolved by the adjudication of bankruptcy, they were left upon a level with the other unsecured creditors of the bankrupt.”

The priority is not given because of the legal proceedings being superseded, but because it is usually in connection with those legal proceedings which are nullified by bankruptcy that the state statute mentions its priorities.

And, in cases where the priority is held only to exist in case a particular method of administering the insolvent's estate is adopted, then the priority may not be adopted in bankruptcy, where the requisite administration cannot be had because of § 67 “f.”

Compare, In re Slomka, 9 A. B. R. 636, 122 Fed. 630 (C. C. A. N. Y.): “The State statute does not purport to give employees a lien upon the property of the employer for wages, nor to give them priority over other creditors of the debtor except when the debtor's estate is distributed by an assignee under a general assignment. In that event it impresses the funds in the hands of the assignee with a trust. Richardson v. Thurber, 104 N. Y. 606. If the estate is not distributed under the assignment, as for instance if the assignment should be set aside for fraud or for invalidity otherwise, the provision is nugatory. There was no priority here, because the conditions essential to its recognition did not exist. The assets were not in course of administration under a general assignment. * * * The assignment being void, it is as though it had never been made, and the property of the debtor passed to the trustee in bankruptcy free from all liens or trusts created by or resulting from it.”

And as to costs, likewise, the better opinion is that wherever the lien of the attachment or other process would be dissolved by § 67 “f” then the priority of the costs likewise would not exist, and that the effect of § 67 “f” could not be evaded as to the costs by claiming they are entitled to priority under § 64 (b) (5).⁵⁷

Yet, the Circuit Court of Appeals construing the same insolvency statute has held that the priority does exist for the costs.⁵⁸

In re The Copper King, 16 A. B. R. 148, 143 Fed. 649 (D. C. Calif.): “In some of the States certain classes of debts arising upon contract are entitled to priority of payment in the distribution of estates. * * * It was the purpose of subdivision 5, § 64, of the Bankruptcy Act, to preserve the rights of creditors under such contracts; and it may extend to an indebtedness upon an implied contract which is given priority by a law of the State. But, in view of the fact that attachment liens obtained within four months prior to the filing of the petition, including the lien for costs in the attachment proceedings, are dissolved by subdivision ‘c’ and ‘f’ of § 67, of the Bankruptcy Act, it is not reasonable to conclude that Congress intended by subdivision 5, of § 64, to make the claim for costs, the lien of which is thus destroyed, a preferred debt.”

⁵⁸ In re Amoratis, 24 A. B. R. 565, 178 Fed. 919 (C. C. A. Calif.), quoted at § 2197.

And perhaps the true principle is that the bankruptcy courts have nothing at all to do with superseded or suspended state insolvency acts in determining priorities in the distribution of bankrupt estates.

Smith v. Mottley, 17 A. B. R. 865, 150 Fed. 266 (C. C. A. Ohio): “* * * he referred to its insolvency laws, which specify what liabilities shall be preferred in insolvency proceedings. * * * But we think there was error in holding that the Kentucky Insolvency Statute was relevant to the inquiry. That statute was superseded by the Bankruptcy Act, which itself prescribes what debts and obligations shall be given preference.”

§ 2199. But Claimant Must Comply with All Regulations and Prerequisites of State Priority.—But the claimant must comply with all the statutory prerequisites and conditions required by the state law where he is making his claim in the bankruptcy court. Thus, where an employee forfeits his priority if he fails to comply with the provisions of the state law requiring a sworn statement of the employee's claim to be presented to the officer making the seizure or to the court from which the execution issued, he forfeits it in the bankruptcy court under the same circumstances.⁵⁹ And where a priority given by a state statute is to be perfected in a particular manner (not rendered impossible by the bankruptcy), such manner must be pursued.⁶⁰

Grainger & Co. v. Riley, 29 A. B. R. 114, 201 Fed. 901 (C. C. A. Ky.): “The statute authorizes a lien in favor of mechanics, laborers and materialmen, and provides that no person shall acquire this lien, unless he shall notify in writing the owner of the property to be held liable or his authorized agent, immediately after the last item of material or labor is furnished, of his intention to hold the property liable, and the amount for which he claims a lien. Nothing is left to inference or conjecture. A compliance with this provision is, as we think, conditio sine qua non.”

§ 2200. Whether, Where Bankruptcy Prevents, Compliance Dispensed with, or Levy Permitted and Discharge Stayed to Enable Perfecting of Priority.—Where a priority or lien given by a State statute is declared to be lost unless followed by legal proceedings within a specified time, either such condition subsequent is avoided by the bankruptcy, since the property involved is already in the custody of a court and further legal proceedings are impossible,⁶¹ as, for instance, where a landlord is prevented from perfecting his lien by distraint.

Car.): "The court, however, holds that inasmuch as by this action in taking possession of the property the landlord is prevented from making an actual levy and distress, that the court will permit him to present his claim as a preferred claim, and claim in priority what is due to him as landlord."

Or perhaps the bankruptcy court would permit the legal proceedings to be taken, at least to the extent necessary to perfect or maintain the lien.⁶²

§ 2201. Whether Trustee Can Perfect Priority Claims.—The trustee cannot perfect the claims of the priority creditors where the State statutes require further proceedings. He does not represent secured or priority creditors except as mere custodian;⁶³ although his seizure may incidentally affect their rights.

§ 2202. Relative Precedence among State Priorities Preserved.—The relative priorities among the different classes of claimants entitled to priorities under the state law will be preserved; and § 64 (b) (5) of the Bankruptcy Act does not level them to equality among themselves.⁶⁴

Thus, the relative priorities of the landlord over persons who have furnished material or supplies for a manufacturing concern, under the Kentucky statute, are preserved in bankruptcy.⁶⁵

In re Falls City Shirt Mfg. Co., 3 A. B. R. 437, 98 Fed. 592 (D. C. Ky.): "The effect of the contention of the material men here would be that though all the creditors had liens created under the laws of the State, and though by those laws some of these liens had priority over others, still a proper interpretation of the Bankrupt Act would require a general leveling of these liens to a common plane, elevating some and depressing others, so as to destroy all advantage and all distinction given by the State laws. It cannot be admitted that such contention is sound. It seems to the court that it was obviously the intention of Congress to recognize all liens created under the laws of the State, and to leave them precisely as it found them."

And, in Arkansas, Georgia and Iowa, and in several other States labor claims take precedence over valid prior contract liens or landlord's statutory liens, and are entitled to like precedence in bankruptcy.⁶⁶

§ 2203. Where Both State Law and Bankrupt Act Give Priority to Same Class, Bankrupt Act Excludes State Law.—Where both a State law and the Bankruptcy Act give priority to the same class of debts, the Bankrupt Act not only controls the State law in the case of absolute conflict between the two, but by its express regulation of these priorities, excludes the state law altogether.⁶⁷

In re Crown Point Brush Co., 29 A. B. R. 647, 200 Fed. 882 (D. C. N. Y.): "Hence, the fact that in dealing with workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen and servants the State law may be broader and more liberal than the Bankruptcy Act is no warrant for enlarging the priority given those classes by the Bankruptcy Act. The claimants here allege they belong to one of the classes—workmen, clerks, or servants. The Bankruptcy Act gives priority to each of those classes; and hence the Bankruptcy Act itself controls the decision of this case, whatever the State court may have held as to the breadth and scope of the statutes of the State giving priority to the same classes."

Thus, where the priority claimants under the state statute would also fall within the class of "Workmen, clerks, salesmen or servants" as the terms are used in the Bankruptcy Act, the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act will prevail over those of the State statute, the specific words of the Bankruptcy Act taking out of its general words the subjects specified and confining them within the limits mentioned.⁶⁸

some States, as notably Illinois, the laws upon that subject not to be consistent with each other. It found limitation as to time different in the different States. It found that in some of the States priority of payment was unlimited as to amount, and in some of the States limited to so small a sum as $50. With this divergence within its knowledge, the Congress spoke to the subject specially and particularly, and limited the amount to $300, and, as to time, to wages earned within three months before the commencement of proceedings. Can, then, the subsequent provision of the law following immediately thereafter allowing priority of payment for all debts owing to any person who by the laws of the State or the United States, is entitled to priority, be held to enlarge the prior provisions so that the statute should be read that in any event the laborer should be entitled to priority of payment in respect of wages earned within three months prior to proceedings and in amount not exceeding $300, and that wherever the laws of the State of the residence of the bankrupt grant the laborer priority of payment without limit as to time or amount, or imposes a limit in excess of that imposed by the Bankrupt Act, he shall be entitled to a further priority in payment according to the law of the particular State. We think not. It is not to be supposed—unless the language of the act clearly so speaks—that Congress intended that in the administration of the act there should be a marked contrariety in the priority of payment of labor claims dependent upon locality. It is an elementary principle of construction that where there are in one act, or in several acts contemporaneously passed, specific provisions relating to a particular subject, they will govern in respect to that subject as against general provisions contained in the same act. Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 158.”

In re Slomka, 9 A. B. R. 635, 122 Fed. 630 (C. C. A. N. Y.): “If by the State law the debts were within the general description of clause 5, we are of opinion that the clause would not apply and that the terms of clause 4 supply the exclusive rule for determining what debts for wages are entitled to priority. No principle of statutory construction is better settled than that which displaces the application of general provisions to a particular subject when there are specific provisions applicable to it in the same act. The subject of claims for wages is specifically regulated by clause 4, and its provisions express the particular intent of Congress regarding priority of such claims. As these confine the priority to wages earned within the three months before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, debts like the present are not included. We agree upon this question with the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, In re Rouse, Hazard & Co., 1 Am. B. R. 234, 91 Fed. Rep. 96, and for the reasons which are so satisfactorily stated in the opinion in that case. We have given due consideration to the decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, In re Laird, 6 Am. B. R. 1, 109 Fed. 550, but we are unable to regard it as correct.”

In re Shaw, 6 A. B. R. 501, 109 Fed. 782 (D. C. Penn.): “I agree with the correctness of this ruling (In re Rouse, Hazard & Co.) which, indeed, seems to me to be scarcely susceptible of doubt. Paragraph 4 deals specifically with the allowance of claims for wages; and, while it is true that wages might be included under the general word ‘debts,’ used in paragraph 5, thus to include them would violate a well known rule of statutory construction. Having been specifically dealt with in the paragraph immediately preceding, it is almost incredible that Congress should straightway proceed to deal with them again in a different fashion. To declare that they are included under the words ‘debts’ would be either to strike paragraph 4 out of the act entirely, or to furnish two conflicting rules for deciding how much should be allowed to a claim for wages in priority. The result, of course, would be that a claimant could select whichever paragraph gave him the larger sum. I need scarcely say that such a result does not furnish a rule of decision, and could only be accepted in case the language used by Congress forbade any other construction. The ordinary and natural construction is, I think, that paragraph 4 has to do with wages, and paragraph 5 has to do with other debts entitled to priority."

Impliedly, In re Wright, 2 A. B. R. 592, 600, 95 Fed. 807 (D. C. Mass., affirmed sub nom. In re Worcester Co., 4 A. B. R. 496, 102 Fed. 808): "In re Rouse, Hazard & Co., 33 C. C. A. 356, 91 Fed. 96 (1 Am. B. R. 234), it was held that a claim for labor performed more than three months before the bankruptcy proceedings, and entitled to priority under the insolvent laws of the State, was not entitled to priority under the Bankrupt Law; but the decision was rested solely upon the ground that the specific provisions of the Bankrupt Act concerning labor claims were intended to override the provisions relating to wages made by the State statute. That the exemption accorded by the State statute would have been valid in the absence of the express provisions of the Bankrupt Act concerning wages was conceded. The Bankrupt Act makes no such specific provision for debts due to States, Counties, and municipalities, and hence, by reference, adopts the statute of Massachusetts as part of its own provisions."

In re Lewis, 4 A. B. R. 51, 99 Fed. 935 (D. C. Mass.): "It has been held that State Laws, giving priority to wages, though included in the terms of § 64b, cl. 5, are yet ineffectual, because the whole matter of wages is dealt with and regulated by § 64b, cl. 4. * * * In other words, although the laws of a State giving priority to certain debts are by § 64b, cl. 5, introduced into the scheme of the present Bankrupt Act, yet such State laws are so introduced only so far as the debts to which they give priority are not expressly dealt with as to priority in the Bankrupt Act itself. Where both a State law and the Bankrupt Act give priority to the same class of debts, the Bankrupt Act not only controls the State law in the case of absolute conflict between the two, but, by its express regulation of these priorities, excludes the State law altogether."

Obiter, In re Jones, 18 A. B. R. 214, 151 Fed. 108 (D. C. Mich.): "It would also no doubt apply to bankrupt estates, but for the fact that the Bankrupt Act contains express provisions on the subject of preferences for labor debts which override the provision of the statute law."

§ 2204. Landlord's Priorities.—In the event of the impounding of an insolvent debtor's assets, in several states the landlord is entitled to priority of payment therefrom, to a certain extent, varying in the different states. The question arises, however, whether, in most instances, it is not a specific lien on the tenant's goods that the landlord possesses, rather than a mere claim for priority.⁶⁹

Thus, the landlord in Delaware is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of property seized from the tenant's premises by legal proceedings and is so entitled to priority under § 64 (b) (5);⁷⁰ likewise, in

In Alabama the landlord has a lien for all future accruing rent under a lease, extending even to personal property sold at retail, and he will be entitled to an equitable lien on the proceeds where the selling at retail is without his knowledge;⁷⁹ but the lien on the proceeds is an equitable lien and where the trustee in bankruptcy sells the lease and the purchaser gives a sufficient bond, the landlord may be relegated to the purchaser.⁸⁰

Likewise, in South Carolina, the landlord has the old common-law right of distraint, but since the bankruptcy prevents levy thereof, such levy is considered as dispensed with.⁸¹

Similarly, the landlord has priority in Texas for rent due and becoming due for the current contract year, and this priority will be respected in bankruptcy.⁸²

The landlord is entitled to priority by way of lien in Georgia.⁸³

The costs and expenses of sale and only such may first be deducted from the proceeds of sale before payment of the lien.^{83a}

but not so in Michigan, because it is not conferred as a general right of priority there.⁸⁸

Again, the bankruptcy law preserves the priority of community creditors upon community property of husband and wife, where that species of property right exists.⁸⁹

It has been held that because the peculiar laws of Louisiana permit an insolvent husband to pay back the "dation en paiement" to his wife, such payment not being considered fraudulent, therefore such payment is good in bankruptcy though made within the four months, as being a "priority" under § 64 (b) (5).⁹⁰ But such use of the term "priority" is unwarranted. "Priority" doubtless means simply a right to payment before others out of an insolvent's estate upon its seizure and distribution. This case seems to have been either a clear case of "preference" under § 60 although not a "fraudulent" transfer; or, perchance, it should be considered rather as the recognition of a species of "dower" right.

DIVIDENDS TO GENERAL CREDITORS.

§ 2206. Dividends to General Creditors.—Whatever is left after costs, expenses and priority claims have been paid in full, is to be paid in dividends of equal percentum to general creditors.⁹¹

§ 2207. To Be Paid in Two Dividends.—The fund thus left for general creditors is to be divided into not less than two dividends:

The first dividend must not exceed half of what would be left for general creditors, after payment of costs and priority claims and after making allowance for costs, expenses and priority claims that probably will thereafter be allowed.

The final dividend is not to be declared until three months after the first dividend shall have been declared.⁹²

And the final dividend may be declared, if the facts warrant it, four months after adjudication.⁹³

§ 2208. Purpose of Two Dividends Protection of Dilatory Creditors.—This provision and the preceding provision were introduced by the amendment of 1903. It had been found that the efforts of Congress to have bankruptcy proceedings expeditious had resulted in some instances in the estate being paid out too rapidly, so that frequently creditors who happened for some cause or other to be delayed in filing their claims, were left out. For this reason Congress prescribed that where there was a fund for distribution to general creditors there should always be at least two dividends made of it and that there should be at least three months between the first and last one. However, owing to the peculiar wording of the amended act, there is no hindrance to the declaration of a second dividend, provided it be not a “final” dividend, within a few days after the first dividend; nor is there anything to prevent such second dividend absorbing almost all the remaining fund. All that is requisite is that the final dividend be not declared until three months after the first dividend.

Not only claims already allowed but those to be allowed are to be taken into account in arriving at the proper dividend to be declared for the first dividend.

§ 2209. First Dividend.—The first dividend must be declared within thirty days after the adjudication if there is money in the estate and if the money is enough to pay five per cent. on claims already allowed after deducting costs and other priority claims.⁹⁴

§ 2210. Dividends within Thirty Days after Adjudication Required Only Where Money in Estate.—Of course, if the assets have not been converted into money, the rule that the first dividend must be paid within thirty days after the adjudication does not apply. It only applies where the assets have been converted into money, in whole or in part, in time for such dividend to be declared within thirty days after the adjudicaamount necessary to pay the debts which have priority and such claims as probably will be allowed: And provided further: That the final dividend shall not be declared within three months after the first dividend shall be declared.”

Dividends subsequent to the first shall be declared upon like terms as the first and as often as the amount shall equal ten per centum or more and upon closing the estate. Dividends may be declared oftener and in smaller proportion if the judge shall so order.”

§ 2211. Subsequent Dividends.—Dividends subsequent to the first are to be declared upon like terms as the first and as often as the amount equals ten per cent. or more and upon closing the estate.

Dividends may be declared oftener and in smaller proportions if the judge shall so order.

It has been held that a meeting of creditors to declare a final dividend may be combined with a final meeting.⁹⁵

§ 2214. Need Not Retain Funds until Expiration of Year's Limitation for Proving Claims.—Because creditors are not prohibited from proving claims until the expiration of a year after the adjudication, does not require the trustee to hold the funds until the expiration of the year, nor does it prevent the closing of the estate beforehand.⁹⁸

visions of the act have made it necessary to declare a first dividend within thirty days after adjudication, if there are funds sufficient to do so, and as the statute has provided that creditors who are not diligent, are permitted only to share in the estate that remains, and not to interfere with the funds already divided, it would appear that the court has the power to make a final dividend and to approve of a final report at any time after four months have elapsed subsequent to adjudication, if the other conditions are present showing the estate to be apparently ready for the final accounting."

§ 2215. "Ten Days Notice" of "Dividends."—Ten days notice by mail must be given to all creditors of the declaration and of the time of payment of the dividend, unless the notice is waived in writing.⁹⁹

§ 2216. "Dividend Sheets."—Dividend sheets, in the form prescribed by the Supreme Court as No. 40, are to be made out by the referee, stating the names of creditors and the dividend payable to each, and delivered by the referee to the trustee for the latter to use as a guide in paying out dividends.

§ 2217. Unclaimed Dividends.—Dividends which remain unclaimed for six months after the final dividend has been declared are to be paid by the trustee into court.¹

Dividends remaining unclaimed for one year are, under the direction of the court, distributed to the creditors whose claims have been allowed but not paid in full, and after such claims have been paid in full, the balance will be paid to the bankrupt: Provided, that in case unclaimed dividends belong to minors, such minors have one year after arriving at majority to claim such dividends.²

§ 2217½. Surplus Returned to Bankrupt.—There is no special provision of the act requiring the return to the bankrupt of any surplus after payment of all claims in full, but such surplus is to be returned to him on general equity principles.³ Before any surplus, after payment in full of all claims, is returned to the bankrupt, however, it must be applied in payment of interest accruing on the claims after the filing of the bankruptcy petition.⁴

§ 2218. Contracting to Postpone One's Dividend to That of Other Creditors.—Creditors undoubtedly may, by contract or estoppel, postpone their own dividends to those of others;^{4a} as, for instance, where, on reorganization of a corporation, the old creditors agree that, in case of failure of the new organization, they will postpone their dividends to those of subsequent creditors.

§ 2218½. Interest.—Interest on claims drawing interest is to be computed to the date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition; and on claims not drawing interest but falling due after the filing of the petition, a rebate shall be deducted to the date of such filing.⁵

Where a mortgagee or other lienholder is seeking to share in dividends after application of his security on his claim, the interest on his claim is to be restricted to that due at the date of the filing of the bankruptcy petition, though it is computable to the date of the payment where it is paid from the proceeds, notwithstanding the bankruptcy.⁶

Before any surplus is returned to the bankrupt it has been held that it must be applied in payment of interest on the claims accruing after the filing of the bankruptcy petition.⁷

ADJUSTING EQUITIES IN DIVIDENDS AMONG CREDITORS.

§ 2219. Adjusting Equities in Dividends among Creditors.—The various equities existing among general creditors, and between creditors and others in the dividends, may be determined and adjusted, in the order of distribution.⁸

§ 2220. Postponing Dividends of Some Creditors to Others, Because of Equities.—Under the power of the court to adjust the equities existing among general creditors, it has been held that the claims of creditors who, though not guilty of preferences voidable under the peculiar provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, have yet been guilty of conduct which, under the ordinary rules of equity, would make it inequitable for them to share in the dividends on an equality with other creditors, may be postponed to the claims of other creditors in the distribution of dividends.⁹

Mo.), wherein the court rightly held that where upon adjudication of the bankrupt a bank voluntarily relinquished all claims under a chattel mortgage which had been withheld from record, there was no foundation whatever for the position that the bank's claim should be postponed until all creditors who had become such between the date of the mortgage and the date of its filing had been paid in full.

In re Rude, 4 A. B. R. 319, 101 Fed. 805 (D. C. Ky.): "In order to settle and distribute a bankrupt's estate, all questions necessary to the ascertainment of the amount to be paid to each party to the proceedings must be adjudicated and determined by the court."

Compare, as to limitations of rule, In re Girard Glazed Kid Co., 14 A. B. R. 485, 136 Fed. 511 (D. C. Pa.): "This is a dispute that has nothing to do with the bankruptcy proceedings, nor with the ascertainment of the true amount of the claim. It is a controversy growing out of a transaction that took place between these two persons, before the petition was filed, and concerns a sum of money that came into Barbara Swartz's possession at that time, and has remained in her possession ever since. It is an independent controversy about the ownership of money that is not a part of the fund for distribution, and this court cannot take jurisdiction of the dispute and decide it in the roundabout manner that has been suggested. If Barbara Swartz has money in her possession that belongs to Clara Illingsworth ex æquo et bono, the proper tribunal is open for an appropriate suit. To take other money from the former and decree it to the latter in this proceeding, would be to confuse two distinct and separate suits, having nothing to do with each other. Of the action in bankruptcy, the District Court has jurisdiction; but it has no jurisdiction of a suit to recover from Barbara Swartz any excess of payments that she may have received under the agreement of January 20, 1903."

Thus, again, where certain of the private creditors of a husband who had become such before his failure and the selling out of his business under a composition arrangement to his wife, are subsequently paid in full by him, but without her knowledge, while acting as her manager, it was held that such creditors might not share on an equality with other creditors in the dividends.¹⁰ Thus, also, where a chattel mortgage was withheld from record by agreement, but no claim was made thereunder, the debt itself was held to be provable but subordinate to the claim of one from whom a loan was secured on representations made at the mortgagee's instance that the property was clear and free, the money being used to pay the mortgagee.¹¹ Again, where the holder of the bankrupt's note had received a preferential payment on account from the bankrupt, and the endorser had paid after the bankruptcy the balance due thereon, it was held that the bankruptcy court would adjust the equities by requiring the endorser to surrender the preference in the first instance rather than have the creditor surrender and then come upon the endorser to make up the deficiency.¹²

And the court, it has been held, may postpone the dividends of a creditor who has entered into a combination to hinder, delay and defraud the other creditors.

In re Headley, 3 A. B. R. 272, 97 Fed. 765 (D. C. between contending creditors, the bankrupt court, in the interest of fair dealing and good conscience, has the unquestioned power to postpone the claim of such a creditor in favor of the other creditors."

Undoubtedly, also, certain creditors could by contract or estoppel cause their claims to be subordinated to other creditors, even to other unsecured creditors.¹³

But the court has refused to give creditors whose debts had been assumed by the bankrupt a preference out of the proceeds of the property transferred by the original debtor to the bankrupt as consideration for the transfer.¹⁴

So, dividends may be withheld from one against whom the estate has an equitable set-off for unpaid stock subscriptions.

Kiskadden v. Steinle, 29 A. B. R. 346, 203 Fed. 375 (C. C. A. Ohio): "What, then should be done with the claim of Steinle? We have felt bound under the present record to assume that Bauman is solvent. If the claim be allowed and permitted now to share in the assets, according to the undisputed statement of counsel for appellee, Steinle would receive a sum nearly equal to the amount found by the referee to be due from Bauman upon his subscription. Still, if Bauman could meet his unpaid balance, not to speak of the liability of any of his co-stockholders, no ultimate loss to the other creditors would ensue. If, on the other hand, Bauman should not be able to pay anything remaining due on his subscription, Steinle (who stands no better than Bauman) would profit at the expense of the other creditors. In the latter event, however, the reasons for denying the set-off (or at least its equivalent in the nature of an equitable defense) against the Steinle claim would cease; for nothing would be gained by suit upon the subscription, and so nothing could be lost by the general creditors by applying whatever sum is really due from Bauman toward payment of the Steinle claim. Rolling Mill Co. v. Ore & Steel Co., 152 U. S. 615, 616. Since it would be obviously inequitable to permit the Steinle claim to share ratably in the assets before properly disposing of the question of Bauman's obligation and his ability to pay it (In re Goodman Shoe Co. (D. C., Pa.), 3 Am. B. R. 200, 96 Fed. 949, 950, and In re Duryea Power Co. (D. C., Pa.), 20 Am. B. R. 219, 159 Fed. 783, 784, the underlying principles of which we regard as applicable), we are constrained to hold that the order of the court below allowing the claim should be reversed with costs; that all proceedings upon the Steinle claim be stayed, and all dividends that would accrue on such claim if allowed be withheld and preserved, until the Bauman debt and its availability be finally settled. If such debt be collected by the trustee, Steinle's claim shall be allowed in full; if by reason of his insolvency Bauman's debt is not collectible in whole or in part, Steinle's claim shall be accordingly reduced and the remainder allowed."

§ 2221. Thus, Dividing Fund, on Setting Aside Void Transfer, Solely among "Subsequent" Creditors.—Likewise, it has been held that the court may divide the fund among subsequent creditors to the exclusion of antecedent creditors, where an unrecorded chattel mortgage is void by the state law only as to subsequent creditors.¹⁵

But this is dependent on state law; and in one state where a transfer has been set aside the setting aside has been held to redound to the benefit of all creditors, not simply to the benefit of those as to whom it was void.¹⁶

And it has been held under the Amendment of 1910, that inasmuch as the trustee's rights and remedies as a "creditor armed with process," are derived directly from the statute and not from the creditors of the estate, upon the setting aside of an unrecorded instrument by the trustee under § 47a (2), the division of the proceeds should be alike to all creditors whether prior or subsequent.¹⁷

§ 2222. Requiring Surrender of Illegal Advantage before Allowing to Share in Dividends.—The court, it has been held, may require the surrender of an illegal advantage obtained by one creditor over others before allowing his claim to share in the dividends.¹⁸

And in the same case it was held that this is so, although the debt sought to be allowed is a different one from that upon which the illegal advantage accrued.

§ 2223. Requirement of Surrender of Preferences before Allowing to Share in Dividends.—The court also has power expressly conferred by § 57 of the act not to allow a creditor who has received a preference voidable under § 60 to share in dividends until the preference is surrendered. This subject however, has been treated in extenso in previous parts of this treatise.¹⁹

18. In re Chaplin, 8 A. B. R. 121, 115 Fed. 162 (D. C. Mass.): In this case a debtor, entering into a composition before bankruptcy with his creditors, secretly paid one of them more than the amount stated in the composition; the court held the preference so given to be fraudulent and voidable for two reasons; (1) because the transaction was an oppression of the debtor by the creditor; (2) because it was a fraud committed by both the debtor and the preferred creditor upon the other creditors ignorant of the preference; and the court further held that, on subsequent bankruptcy, such preference should not be treated as a set-off either to reduce the preferred creditor's claim or against the dividend to be received thereon, but must be surrendered before the creditor could prove an independent debt.

Instance, but case reversed on facts, In re Kessler & Co., 23 A. B. R. 391, 174 Fed. 906 (D. C. N. Y.), involving retention of stock paid for by a non-bankrupt who had gone into a separate joint stock enterprise with bankrupt.

SUBDIVISION "B."

SUBJECTION OF DIVIDENDS BY GARNISHMENT AND EQUITABLE ACTION.

§ 2224. Dividends Not to Be Subjected by Garnishment.—The trustee may not be garnisheed for dividends in his hands.²⁰

Cowart v. Caldwell Co., 24 A. B. R. 546, 134 Ga. 544: "The general rule is that while property or money is in custodia legis, the officer holding it is the mere hand of the court; his possession is the possession of the court; to interfere with his possession is to invade the jurisdiction of the court itself; and an officer so situated is bound by the orders and judgments of the court whose mere agent he is, and he can make no disposition of such money or property without the consent of his own court, express or implied. Among the legal custodians to whom these principles have been applied are trustees or assignees in bankruptcy. * * * It has been held that even after the bill has been dismissed the receiver is still the officer of the court and not subject to garnishment."

Indeed, even after the court has declared the dividend or ordered the particular sum paid over, the trustee may not be garnisheed.

Cowart v. Caldwell Co., 24 A. B. R. 546, 134 Ga. 544: "It is contended, however, in the present case, that, inasmuch as the order of the referee directed the trustee to pay over the net proceeds of the sale to the W. E. Caldwell Company, it was thereby segregated and became a direct indebtedness or amount due to that company, and hence was subject to garnishment by its creditor. If a garnishment is served, a judgment rendered upon it against the garnishee must be upon it either against him in his individual capacity or in his official capacity, either against his personal funds or against the funds in his hands as trustee. This was not a transaction between James individually and the Caldwell Company, nor an individual indebtedness by him to that company, even though the company might have a right to proceed against him if he failed to pay it in accordance with the order of the court; for such right would arise out of the fact that he had not carried out such order. The garnishment recognizes the action of the court ordering the sale and the payment of the net proceeds as a valid order and is founded upon it. Without that order there would have been no sale and consequently no proceeds to pay. The garnishment proceeding, therefore, is necessarily against the trustee in his representative capacity, and is an effort to subject funds which he holds in that capacity under an order of the referee or bankruptcy court. That court has exclusive jurisdiction in matters of bankruptcy; the State court has none. In the regular order of proceedings, after distribution has been made, the bankrupt will seek a discharge, and the trustee, upon filing his report and account and vouchers, will also apply for a discharge. The court of bankruptcy will hardly grant him a discharge from his trust so long as he had money in his hands arising under an order of the court, not finally paid out or disposed of as the court had directed. If a State court could garnishee a trustee in bankruptcy, to catch funds in his hands which had been ordered paid by the court to which he was directly amenable, but which he had not actually paid out, and could compel him to withhold the payment, regardless of the order of the court of bankruptcy, it will be readily perceived that confusion and conflicts of jurisdiction would at once arise, and that a State court, by means of a garnishment, could indefinitely delay the final winding up of the matter in bankruptcy and the final discharge of the trustee. It has accordingly been held that a garnishment will not lie from a State court to a trustee or assignee in bankruptcy, to catch dividends which have been declared in favor of certain creditors or the amount which will be going to them under a composition. In re Cunningham (Dist. Court of Iowa), 9 Cent. Law J. 208; Loveland on Bankruptcy, § 268, p. 782; 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, §§ 2224, 2225, p. 1363. As the garnishment, in so far as it was directed to and served upon James as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Bailey, was without authority of law and void, and in so far as it was directed to and served upon him in his individual capacity it failed to reach and fasten upon any property or asset belonging to the defendant, no lawful levy of the attachment was made; and consequently the court was without jurisdiction of the attachment proceeding, and therefore properly dismissed it."

The dividend does not belong to the creditor until it is paid to him.²¹

Savings Bank v. Alden, 19 A. B. R. 886, 68 Atl. (Me.) 863: "But inasmuch as it is uniformly held by all courts that, in the absence of special statutory provisions to the contrary, money which is properly said to be in custodia legis cannot be reached by the process of foreign attachment, the question more specifically stated is whether a fund in the situation existing at the time of the service of the process in this case is still in the custody of the law, or whether, after distribution is ordered, and the checks are drawn and countersigned, but not delivered, the money has ceased to be in the possession of the court, or in the custody of the law. The plaintiff contends that the final order for distribution had been given by the United States court, that the purpose of the legal custody had been accomplished, that nothing further remained to be done by that court, and that the money cannot now be properly considered as in the custody of the law. The decisions in the Federal courts have uniformly recognized the doctrine that funds thus situated belonging to a bankrupt estate are in the custody of the law, and not amendable to process of foreign attachment against the trustee in bankruptcy. * * * Numerous decisions may be found in the State courts holding that funds in the hands of executors and administrators are subject to the trustee process; but it will be found that they are controlled by special statutory provisions, or influenced by considerations not applicable to the case at bar."

Nor is the garnishment bettered by garnisheeing the trustee individually; for he does not hold the funds individually, even after ordered to pay them over.²²

ATTORNEY'S LIEN ON CLIENT'S DIVIDEND.

§ 2228. Bankruptcy Court Has Jurisdiction over Attorneys' Lien Claims.—Liens claimed by attorneys for services rendered in the bankruptcy proceedings, upon dividends coming to clients, may be adjudicated in the bankruptcy court.²⁹

§ 2229. Attorney's Right to Lien.—Probably an attorney in bankruptcy proceedings may assert a lien on his client's dividends, for services performed in relation thereto.³⁰

Presumably the right to such lien would not be determined by local law, as would be the case had the lien originated before bankruptcy, but would be regulated wholly by general bankruptcy practice.

But compare, In re Baxter, 18 A. B. R. 450, 154 Fed. 22 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "We should entertain no doubt that no lien existed, if it were not for the effect to be given to the statute of New York respecting attorney's liens. An attorney has a lien upon the papers of his client in his possession, and a lien upon the fund or judgment which he has recovered for those whose interests he has represented in the suit. But, in the absence of some statutory provision, he has no lien upon the naked cause of action of his client. Indeed, the whole law of an attorney's lien rests upon the principle that he has secured the fruits of a litigation of which he ought not to be deprived by the unfair conduct of his client. But the courts have always recognized the right of the client to settle the controversy with the opposite party against the consent of his attorney, and, where this has been done after an action has been commenced, have repeatedly declared as in Emma Silver Mining Co. v. Emma Silver Mining Co. (C. C.), 12 Fed. 815, that the attorney's lien cannot stand in the way, unless the settlement was made for the purpose of depriving the attorney of his costs. The proposition has never been more plainly and concisely stated than by Judge Brewer, now Mr. Justice Brewer, in Swanson v. Chicago Ry. Co. (C. C.), 35 Fed. 638, where he said: 'It is unquestioned that parties to a lawsuit may settle and compromise their litigation without consulting their counsel; and that, in the absence of a statute giving the attorney a lien for his fees, courts will not intervene unless there has been collusion between the parties, and an attempt to defraud the attorney out of his fees.' Upon the argument of the case, we were disposed to regard the New York statute as one merely regulating practice in the courts of the State, but a more careful reading of the statute satisfies us that it was intended to have a wider application, and should be treated as one establishing a substantive right. As merely a practice act, it would not affect the present proceeding, which is essentially an application to the equity powers of the court, as the courts of the United States, when exercising equity jurisdiction, are not controlled by the procedure established by the statutes of the States. But there are many instances when an enlargement of equitable rights or remedies by a State statute may be administered by the federal courts sitting within the State. * * * The federal courts have treated the question of an attorney's lien as depending upon the effect of local laws. In re Paschal, 10 Wall. 483, 495, * * * Central R. Co. v. Pettus, 113 U. S. 116, etc." * * * The result of these decisions [of New York] is that the statute does not preclude a settlement between the parties made in good faith and not intended to deprive the attorney of his compensation; and, if the client prefers to abandon the action, or release his cause of action for a nominal consideration, he is at liberty to do so, and the lien becomes practically of no value to the attorney; but whatever is received as a consideration becomes a fund impressed with the lien in the hands of the opposite party."

Of course an attorney's lien upon his client's papers is valid in bankruptcy to the same extent that it is void elsewhere.^{30a}

DIVISION 5.

ADMINISTRATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF PARTNERSHIP AND INDIVIDUAL ASSETS AND DEBTS IN PARTNERSHIP AND IN INDIVIDUAL BANKRUPTCIES RESPECTIVELY.

SUBDIVISION "A."

ADMINISTRATION AND DISTRIBUTION IN PARTNERSHIP BANKRUPTCIES IN GENERAL.

§ 2230. In General.—In cases where partnerships are in bankruptcy the administration of the estate and the distribution of the assets follow rules of their own. Owing to the dual capacity of a member of a partnership, an anomalous condition exists. A partnership is an association of individuals, and yet in many of its relations is to be considered an entity. The members are in the bankruptcy court in two capacities, as partners and also as individuals. There are several distinct yet connected estates thrown together in one administration, and the creditors of each have their separate rights and at the same time have their rights to share in the surplus of the other's estate. It will be well, even at the risk of repetition, to lay down, separately, some of the rules relative to the administration of partnership bankruptcies.

§ 2231. Where Partnership Bankrupt, Whether Individual Estates Brought in Though Individuals Not Adjudged Bankrupt.—Whether or not the partners are adjudged bankrupt individually as well as partners, the individual estate of each member is nevertheless brought into the bankruptcy court for administration.³¹

Francis v. McNeal, 228 U. S. 695, 30 A. B. R. 244, affirming S. C., 26 A. B. R. 555, 186 Fed. 481 (C. C. A. Pa.): "Since Dory on Accounts was made more famous by Lindley on Partnership, the notion that the firm is an entity distinct from its members has grown in popularity, and the notion has been confirmed by recent speculations as to the nature of corporations and the oneness of any somewhat permanently combined group without the aid of law. But the fact remains as true as ever that partnership debts are debts of the members of the firm, and that the individual liability of the members is not collateral like that of a surety, but primary and direct, whatever priorities there may be in the marshaling of assets. The nature of the liability is determined by the common law, not by the possible intervention of the Bankruptcy Act. Therefore ordinarily it would be impossible that a firm should be insolvent while the members of it remained able to pay its debts with money available for that end. A judgment could be got and the partnership debt satisfied on execution out of the individual estates.

"The question is whether the Bankruptcy Act has established principles inconsistent with these fundamental rules, although the business of such an act is, so far as may be, to preserve, not to upset, existing relations. It is true that by § 1, the word 'person,' as used in the act, includes partnerships; that by the same section, a person shall be deemed insolvent when his property, exclusive, etc., shall not be sufficient to pay his debts; that by § 5a a partnership may be adjudged a bankrupt, and that by § 14a any persons may file an application for discharge. No doubt these clauses, taken together, recognize the firm as an entity for certain purposes, the most important of which, after all, is the old rule as to the prior claim of partnership debts on partnership assets, and that of individual debts upon the individual estate. Section 5g. But we see no reason for supposing that it was intended to erect a commercial device for expressing special relations into an absolute and universal formula,—a guillotine for cutting off all the consequences admitted to attach to partnerships elsewhere than in the bankruptcy courts. On the contrary, we should infer from § 5, clause c through g, that the assumption of the Bankruptcy Act was that the partnership and individual estates both were to be administered, and that the only exception was that in h, 'in the event of one or more, but not all, of the members of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt.'

"In that case, naturally, the partnership property may be administered by the partners not adjudged bankrupt, and does not come into bankruptcy at all except by consent. But we do not perceive that the clause imports that the partnership could be in bankruptcy, and the partners not. The hypothesis is that some of the partners are in, but that the firm has remained out, and provision is made for its continuing out. The necessary and natural meaning goes no further than that.

"On the other hand, it would be an anomaly to allow proceedings in bankruptcy against joint debtors from some of whom, at any time before, pending, or after the proceeding, the debt could be collected in full. If such proceedings were allowed, it would be a further anomaly not to distribute all the partnership assets. Yet the individual estate, after paying private debts, is part of those assets, so far as needed. Section 5f. Finally, it would be a third incongruity to grant a discharge in such a case from the debt considered as joint, but to leave the same persons liable for it considered as several. We say the same persons, for however much the difference between firm and member under the statute be dwelt upon, the firm remains at common law a group of men, and will be dealt with as such in the ordinary courts for use in which the discharge is granted. If, as in the present case, the partnership and individual estates together are not enough to pay the partnership debts, the rational thing to do, and one certainly not forbidden by the act, is to administer both in bankruptcy."

Dickas v. Barnes Tr., 15 A. B. R. 567, 140 Fed. 849 (C. C. A. Ohio): "For the appellants it is contended that the court, having refused to declare them bankrupts, had no authority to treat them and their property as if they were bankrupts. Although there are several assignments of error on each appeal, they all rest on this contention. The argument is that not being bankrupts they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court; that the refusal to declare them bankrupts put an end to the authority of the court to retain control of their property for the purpose of the bankruptcy proceeding; and it is complained that the court by its order in effect denied to them the immunity to which they were entitled by reason of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. By § 4b wage earners and tillers of the soil are excepted from those who may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts. And for our present purpose we think the other appellants, who committed no act of bankruptcy, might be regarded as standing on the same footing as those who by reason of their occupation were exempt from an adjudication of bankruptcy. It may be conceded that but for the relation of these parties to the partnership, the contention they make, would be supported by perfectly adequate reasons. But on account of that relation other conditions exist. One who combines with others in a partnership enterprise becomes bound for the payment of the partnership debts. As partner he shares the fortunes of the partnership. In certain circumstances it may become subject to the exercise of the powers of a court of bankruptcy where its resources will be gathered in to satisfy the claims of creditors. One of those resources is the liability of the partner, for which his individual property stands charged. It is true that by virtue of the rule in equity, as well as in bankruptcy, for the marshaling and distribution of assets, his individual property is first applicable to the payment of his private debts, if there be any; the surplus then becomes assets for the payment of the partnership creditors. These consequences of partnership are not derived from the Bankrupt Act, but from the general law; and a partner is not relieved from them by his exemption from an adjudication of bankruptcy. If bankruptcy does not supervene, they would be worked out by a court of general jurisdiction, and the partner would be a party, a necessary party, to the record so that its liability for the firm debts could be enforced. In the bankruptcy court the partner may be brought before the court for the same purposes. In order to reach his property for the payment of the firm debts, it must be ascertained what surplus there will be after paying his private debts. It is said, however, that this must be done in a State court. But however this might be if he were a stranger, the partner is not to be regarded as a stranger, but as a party to the bankruptcy proceedings; and the court had authority to take such proceedings as were necessary to ascertain what assets were available and to subject them to the requirements of the case before it."

In re Wing Yick Co., 13 A. B. R. 757 (D. C. Hawaii): "Although a partnership may be adjudged bankrupt without adjudging the partners bankrupt, yet in such case both the partnership assets and the individual assets of the partners are administered by the trustee and marshaled to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates."

Obiter, In re Meyer, 3 A. B. R. 559, 98 Fed. 976 (C. C. A. N. Y.): "We are of the opinion that it is the scheme of these provisions to treat the partnership as an entity which may be adjudged a bankrupt by voluntary or involuntary proceeding, irrespective of any adjudication of the individual partners as bankrupt, and upon an adjudication to draw to the administration the individual estates of the partners as well as the partnership estate, and marshal and distribute them according to equity. The assets of the individual estates and the debts provable against them can be ascertained without adjudicating the individual partners bankrupt. The language does not require such an adjudication."

And it is especially true that the individual estates are brought in where the adjudication of the firm involved the question of its solvency.³²

Contra, In re Bertenshaw, 19 A. B. R. 577, 157 Fed. 363 (C. C. A.): "But, as we have seen, the Act of 1867 expressly provided that 'where two or more persons who are partners in trade shall be adjudged bankrupt'—the only way in which it provided for the adjudication of a partnership—'all the joint stock and property of the copartnership and also all the separate estate of each of the partners shall be taken' and administered (14 Stat. 534, § 36), while the Act of 1898 has no such provision for the taking of the separate estates upon the adjudication of the partnership. On the other hand, the Act of 1898 provides for the adjudication of a partnership bankrupt without an adjudication of any of its partners bankrupt, while the Act of 1867 has no such provision. Again, the Act of 1898 expressly prohibits the administration of the partnership property, and by so much the more the administration of the individual property of unadjudicated partners without their consent, while the Act of 1867 contained no such provision. Thus, while the Act of 1867 expressly required the court which adjudged a partnership insolvent to take and administer the separate estates of the partners and thereby sustained the rule in Amsinck v. Bean, the Act of 1898 contains no such requirement, but forbids not only the administration of his individual estate, but the administration of the estate of the partnership without the consent of the unadjudicated partner (section 5h); so that the rule in Amsinck v. Bean is not only without support, but it is inhabited by the provisions of the Act of 1898, and cannot prevail under it. This conclusion is supported by the actual decision rendered in Amsinck v. Bean, and by the reason which the court gave for it. The decision was that the assignees in bankruptcy of the estate of a partner could not take and administer the property of the partnership, and the reason given for it was that, while there was a provision in the Act of 1867 for the administration of the individual estate of a partner upon the bankruptcy of the partnership, there was no provision for the administration of the partnership's estate upon the bankruptcy of an individual partner, and hence it could not be made. By the same mark, the court of bankruptcy cannot take and administer the individual estate of an unadjudicated partner upon an adjudication of the bankruptcy of the partnership under the Act of 1898, because, while there is a provision for the administration of the partnership estate upon the adjudication of a partner bankrupt in certain circumstances (§ 5c), there is no provision in that act for the administration of the individual property of an unadjudicated partner upon an adjudication of a partnership bankrupt, and there is an express prohibition of the administration of the partnership estate in such a case without the consent of the solvent partner (§ 5h), and by so much the more an inhibition of the administration of his individual estate without his consent, * * * and the conclusion is that a court of bankruptcy upon an adjudication of a partnership bankrupt may not draw to itself and administer without his consent the individual estate of a solvent partner who has not been adjudicated a bankrupt."

And an individual partner, not himself adjudicated bankrupt, may be required to transfer his individual interest in the firm property to the firm trustee.³³

But it has been held that a receiver or trustee of a partnership adjudged a bankrupt is not the receiver or trustee of the property of another unadjudicated partnership in which the members of the bankrupt partnership were also members, and that he has no more right to seize or to administer such property than he has to take and distribute the property of any other stranger.³⁴

§ 2232. And "Consent" Not Necessary.—It has been held, to be sure, that where an individual member is not also adjudged bankrupt or does not "consent," the adjudication of the partnership will not draw into the administration the individual estate;³⁵ nor even permit administration of the firm assets;³⁶ but these rulings arise from a misconception of the scope of § 5 (h): "Consent" is requisite only when it is sought to administer firm assets in an individual bankruptcy; certainly not when it comes to the administration of a bankrupt partnership itself. Clearly § 5 (h) so reads. Without the statutory provision the rule would necessarily be the same; for the firm would not be insolvent unless each and every member were also insolvent. No "consent" of the individual member is requisite in cases of partnership bankruptcies for administration either of firm assets or of individual assets.³⁷

Francis v. McNeal, 228 U. S. 695, 30 A. B. R. 244, affirming S. C., 26 A. B. R. 555, 186 Fed. 491 (C. C. A. Pa.): "On the contrary, we should infer from § 5, clause c through g that the assumption of the Bankruptcy Act was that the partnership and individual estates both were to be administered, and that the only exception was that in h, 'in the event of one or more, but not all, of the members of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt.'

But we do not perceive that the clause imports that the partnership could be in bankruptcy, and the partners not. The hypothesis is that some of the partners are in, but that the firm has remained out, and provision is made for its continuing out. The necessary and natural meaning goes no further than that."

See dissenting opinion in In re Bertenshaw, 19 A. B. R. 577, 157 Fed. 363 (C. C. A.): "It is said this paragraph means that, when a partnership has been declared bankrupt and also one or more but not all of its members, the court has no power to administer the partnership estate without the consent of the non-bankrupt members. And the argument is that, as the court has no such power, much less has it the power when actually administering the partnership estate, to compel a non-bankrupt partner to bring in his individual property. But it is manifest that § 5h does not bear the construction given it. It deals with the bankruptcy of individual partners, not with the bankruptcy of the firm. If an individual partner becomes bankrupt, it becomes important to know the effect upon the firm of which he is a member. It not infrequently happens that a firm remains solvent and prosperous, though a member becomes insolvent and commits an act of bankruptcy not chargeable to or connected with the business of the partnership. The provision for such cases is found in the paragraph quoted, and it has nothing to do with the bankruptcy of the partnership. It recognizes, however, that before the bankrupt partner receives a discharge his beneficial interest in the firm property, after the payment of firm debts, should be applied to the payment of his individual obligations. But, since his associates have an interest in the partnership property to which his individual creditors cannot look, they are justly given the preference in liquidating their joint affairs. Eventually, however, the net share of the bankrupt partner is brought into the individual proceedings. That a partnership may be an entity for certain purposes and its property its own does not prevent the bankruptcy of a single partner from resulting in a liquidation of the joint business, and the application of his net share therein to the payment of his individual debts. Rightly regarded the paragraph quoted suggests the true rule for the converse situation—the bankruptcy of the partnership and the nonbankruptcy of a member. There is, however, this distinction. In a case covered by § 5h, the nonbankrupt partner has no contractual connection with the debts of his bankrupt copartner. He is not liable for them, and should, therefore, suffer no loss or inconvenience, save what comes from a necessary winding up of the partnership as in other cases of dissolution. Therefore he is given the preference in the settlement of the firm business of which he is part owner. But these reasons do not apply in a case like the one before us. The nonbankrupt partner is liable for all the debts of his bankrupt firm, and the firm creditors may look to his property for satisfaction subject to equitable limitations in favor of his individual creditors. A court of equity, with all parties before it, partnership and members, grants full relief, and the law has not required it to intrust the administration of estates to resisting debtors.”

—As previously noted,³⁸ the creditors of the partnership elect the trustee in partnership bankruptcies.

The trustee elected by the partnership creditors becomes, by virtue of his office, trustee of each of the individual estates of the several partners.³⁹ And this is so, even where the individual member is not himself, individually, a bankrupt.

Thus, even where an individual member is not himself a bankrupt, it has been held that his assignee may be ordered summarily to turn over the individual assets for administration in the partnership bankruptcy,⁴⁰ although this decision carries the rule too far, the nullification of the assignment being dependent upon the assignor's adjudication as bankrupt, and the state court retaining jurisdiction where he is not adjudged bankrupt.⁴¹

At any rate the individual member may himself be ordered summarily to transfer his individual interest in property to the trustee for administration.⁴²

The court may, in its discretion, cause the election of separate trustees for the firm and its members, but this power will only be exercised in cases of special or peculiar necessity.⁴³

§ 2234. Separate Accounts to Be Kept and Joint Expenses Apportioned.—The administrations of the partnership estate, and of the several individual estates of the different partners, are to be kept distinct. Separate accounts are to be kept and joint expenses are to be apportioned.⁴⁴

§ 2235. Property Originally Individual, Becoming Partnership, to Be Administered as Such.—Property originally owned by one or more of the partners, and used in the partnership business, may be joint or separate estate, as may be agreed upon between the partners either in writing or by parol agreement.⁴⁵

Thus, real estate standing in one partner's name may be shown to be partnership property.⁴⁷

§ 2237. Partnership Debts "Provable" against Individual Both in Partnership and in Individual Bankruptcy, Likewise Individual Debts against Partnership.—Partnership debts are "provable" against the individual estates of the several members, either in partnership cases or in individual cases; and likewise individual debts are "provable" against the partnership share of the individual members either in partnership or individual cases: the priority of right to share in the particular fund does not affect the provability.

Hee as a bankrupt, whether they were creditors of a partnership of which he was a member or whether they were creditors of L. Hee in his individual capacity, a partner of the partnership being liable for all the partnership debts."

Thus, partnership debts are provable in the individual bankruptcy of a member.⁴⁸

Vt.): "* * * the individual assets may have been applied to individual debts to the exclusion of partnership debts till after the individual debts are all paid, and there may never be anything whatever to go to the partnership creditor; but his debt is none the less provable. Whether a debt is provable depends upon the nature of the liability, and not upon whether there are assets, or there is any prospect of assets, applicable to it. This partnership debt is a simple contract debt of the partnership, and a simple contract liability of the bankrupt, and the individual debt is a similar liability, and both are of the provable class."

In re Mercur, 2 A. B. R. 627, 95 Fed. 634 (D. C. This has been several times decided, and is supported by principle no less than by authority. How far the partnership creditors may be entitled to share in the distribution of the separate property of each member is a distinct question, which can only be determined hereafter when the assets come to be marshaled."

§ 2238. Partnership Creditors to Exhaust Partnership, Assets, Individual Creditors to Exhaust Individual Assets; Each to Share in Other Only in Surplus.—Partnership creditors have the right to be first paid in full out of the partnership assets before any other creditors; and individual creditors have the right to be first paid in full out of the respective individual estates before any other creditors; but the creditors of the partnership estate may, after exhausting the assets of the partnership estate share in any surplus of the individual estates left after paying the creditors of the individual: and vice versa.⁴⁹

within which claims may be filed, a creditor who holds a firm note with individual members' endorsements thereon, and who has proved the same solely against the partnership estate, will not be permitted to amend so as to prove them against the individual estates as well. In re McCallum, 11 A. B. R. 447, 127 Fed. 768 (D. C. Penn.).

This rule is said to be simply declaratory of the common rule of equity so far as concerns the right of partnership creditors to priority of payment out of firm assets, but to state a new rule as to individual creditors; for in equity partnership creditors have a lien on partnership assets for the payment of firm debts, but individual creditors have no such lien on individual assets.

In re Mosier, 7 A. B. R. 268, 112 Fed. 138 (D. C. Vt.): "Partnership creditors have a lien, in equity, upon partnership property for the payment of partnership debts. * * * But individual creditors have no lien at common law or in equity, upon individual property against partnership creditors for individual debts. That right is provided for by, and rests wholly upon, the Bankrupt Law." Inferentially, In re Janes, 13 A. B. R. 341, 133 Fed. 912 (C. C. A. N. Y.).

have a lien in equity, upon partnership property for the payment of the partnership debts. Washburn v. Bank, 19 Vt. 278. This right is expressly provided for in the Bankrupt Law. Section 5f. But individual creditors have no lien, at common law or in equity, upon individual property, against partnership creditors for individual debts. * * * That right is provided by, and rests wholly upon, the Bankrupt Law."

The rule obtains though the debt be a "priority" debt; thus the personal tax of a member of a partnership is not to be paid out of firm assets until firm creditors are satisfied in full.⁵⁰ And this rule applies even though the bankrupt firm is composed of individuals and another firm.⁵¹

But a creditor who, after his debt was incurred, became a partner of his debtor in a separate and distinct transaction, may prove his claim against the individual estate of the debtor, even to the diminution of the fund available for partnership creditors.⁵²

No "exceptions" are to be allowed to the rule; even where a partnership and all its members are adjudicated bankrupt in the same proceedings and there are no partnership assets but only individual assets—the individual creditors must nevertheless be first satisfied out of the individual estates and partnership creditors may only share in any surplus.⁵³

§ 2239. Section 5 Refers Only to Actual Partnerships, Not Those by "Holding Out."—The provisions of § 5 of the Bankruptcy Act refer only to cases of actual partnerships between the parties, not to partnerships that are merely such as to certain creditors by "holding out" or otherwise.⁵⁴

§ 2240. Obligations Signed by Firm Name, Prima Facie Allowable as Firm Debts.—Obligations signed by the firm in the firm name are prima facie allowable against the partnership estate.⁵⁵

Thus, an accommodation indorsement in the firm name made by one partner will bind the partnership in the hands of a bona fide holder.⁵⁶ Of course, however, where the holder had notice, actual or constructive, as for example where the note showed on its face that it was an accommodation indorsement, the holder would take subject to the possible defense of lack of power.

§ 2241. Individual Debt Assumed by Firm Provable against Partnership if Sufficient Consideration.—The individual debt of a partner may be assumed by the firm, if sufficient consideration exists; and the debt in that instance will be a provable debt against the firm estate in bankruptcy.⁵⁸

Thus, notes of a new firm are given on sufficient consideration when given to pay the debts of individual partners equal to the value of the respective shares contributed by each.⁵⁹ Likewise, where a firm assumes all of one partner's assets and liabilities, the partner's individual liabilities become firm liabilities and are supported by sufficient consideration, and the transaction is not within the statute of frauds.⁶⁰ Again, a firm note given by both partners is a valid partnership debt where it is given for an existing business debt of the original partner, who had sold a half interest in his business on condition that the incoming partner assume half of such debt.⁶¹

Notes given by the firm to settle up a partner's embezzlement of government money are valid against the firm, where the embezzled money went to pay firm debts.⁶²

On the other hand, notes signed in the firm name by one partner and given by him to a bank in renewal of an individual indebtedness, the bank having knowledge, are not provable against the partnership estate in bankruptcy, where there is not sufficient evidence that the partnership had assumed the indebtedness.⁶³

§ 2242. But Assumption Must Be Acquiesced in by Creditor.—But the assumption by the firm must be with the knowledge and consent or acquiescence of the creditor, else the obligation remains individual.⁶⁴

Thus, the entry of an individual partner's debt on the firm books, unknown to the creditor, and payments thereon from time to time with firm checks, do not change the character of the debt to that of a firm obligation.⁶⁵

Again, a mortgage of partnership property, given by one partner to secure his individual indebtedness, even with the consent of the other partner, has been held not enforceable in bankruptcy against firm creditors.⁶⁶

But a sealed note in South Carolina does not bind the firm unless the act of both partners. Pollock v. Jones, 10 A. B. R. 616, 124 Fed. 163 (C. C. A. S. Car.).

Thus, loans by two fathers to set up their sons as partners in the same business, evidenced by notes signed by both sons in their respective individual names, were held not to be firm obligations, although the money went into the firm business.⁶⁷ And claims for advancements to further the firm enterprise of a partner in an illegal or ultra vires partnership, composed of a corporation and another partnership, may not be proved against the other partnership; and the corporation which was a de facto partner may not prove its advancements to the partnership enterprise as a debt against the partnership, on the theory that it was not a partner because of the ultra vires.⁶⁸ But its advances made prior to its entry into the ultra vires partnership to the other partners (the present bankrupts) may be proved against the other partners.⁶⁹

R. 225, 105 Fed. 490, it was held that notes signed by both members of a partnership for money borrowed and put into the firm as capital were not provable against the estate of the partnership in bankruptcy. The facts in this case show that the money borrowed was obtained by the individuals for the purpose of contributing each his share to the capital of the partnership. These debts were of the character of the claims of George Stoddard in the present case, based upon the notes of A. K. Stoddard given to George Stoddard for his share in the partnership. It was correctly held by the court, that this was an individual debt, and not provable against the partnership. But there is a distinction between debts incurred by individuals for the benefit of the individuals in contributing capital to a partnership and debts incurred by a partnership in the business of and for the benefit of the partnership."

SUBDIVISION "B."

PARTNERSHIP DEBTS AND ASSETS IN INDIVIDUAL BANKRUPTCIES IN GENERAL.

§ 2248. Trustee in Individual Bankruptcy of Partner Not to Interfere with Firm Assets, without Consent.—A trustee in bankruptcy of an individual partner has no right to interfere with the firm assets [without the consent of the partner not bankrupt].⁷⁶

Moses v. Pond, 4 A. B. R. 655 (N. Y. Sup. Ct.): "There is no view of the scope of the Bankrupt Act which requires the trustee to assume possession of the property of others, or of a partnership, because merely the individual he represents has the ultimate remainder in whatever is left after paying the debts of the partnership, and, possibly, the superior interest of the deceased partner."

In re Pierce, 4 A. B. R. 489, 102 Fed. 977 (D. C. Wash.): "If the administrator (of the deceased partner's estate) will voluntarily surrender possession of the estate, the trustee may take it; but the trustee cannot take possession of any property of which the administrator has custody without his consent."

It has been held, that a trustee in bankruptcy of a partnership may by summary order in the bankruptcy proceedings obtain surrender of assets in the hands of an assignee or administrator of one of the individual members of the partnership although such member is not himself a bankrupt. In re Stokes, 6 A. B. R. 262, 106 Fed. 312 (D. C. Penna.). This decision does not seem to be correct.

Sub-Partnerships.—Where a bankrupt partnership has itself been a partner in another and quite separate partnership enterprise, the same rules would apply—the sub-partnership's affairs are not to be administered in the partnership bankruptcy without the consent of the solvent sub-partner. Instance, but point not raised, In re Kessler & Co., 23 A. B. R. 391, 174 Fed. 906 (D. C. N. Y.), wherein the court held the foreign solvent sub-partner might retain certain shares of sub-partnership stock which had been wholly paid for by the foreign solvent sub-partner.

Lien of Solvent Sub-Partner on Sub-Partnership Assets.—See In re Kessler & Co., 23 A. B. R. 391, 174 Fed. 906 (D. C. N. Y.).

is, in general, to be treated like any other joint interest a bankrupt might have. The only right of the creditor's trustee is to require the persons who hold the remaining interests and have possession of the partnership property, to account for the bankrupt's interest.⁷⁷

§ 2250. In What Court Trustee to Seek Accounting.—The trustee must seek such accounting in the court which would have had jurisdiction had there been no bankruptcy.⁷⁸ And a state court already in possession need not turn over the assets;⁷⁹ save that in case questions of preference or transfers voidable as to creditors are involved, the bankruptcy court, of course, might have jurisdiction in conformity with the usual rules.

But the bankruptcy court will not necessarily attempt to determine the equities of the two partners inter sese, but will remit the solvent partner to a court of equity for a settlement of his claim against the bankrupt co-partner, where the bankrupt co-partner was indebted neither to the firm nor to the solvent partner at the date of adjudication and the solvent partner's claim arose during the process of liquidation, after the adjudication of bankruptcy.⁸⁰

See Strause v. Hooper, 5 A. B. R. 228, 105 Fed. 590 (D. C. N. Car.), for another evident misunderstanding of this section, the court therein considering that it means that in partnership cases the individual estates are not necessarily drawn into the administration of the firm assets.

bankruptcy proceedings of one of the partners, if the other partner or partners consent.⁸²

§ 2253. “Consent,” a Question of Fact.—When it is that the remaining partners shall be deemed to have given “consent” to the administration of their partnership affairs in the individual bankruptcy proceedings of a bankrupt partner, is a question of fact to be arrived at from a consideration of all the circumstances.

For the remaining partner to stand idly by without protest, when the trustee of his bankrupt partner has assumed administration of the partnership assets, has been held to be such an acquiescence as will amount to a consent to have the partnership affairs administered in the individual bankruptcy.⁸³

The joining by the non-bankrupt partner with a firm creditor in a petition asking that the former firm assets be applied first on firm debts, of course is such consent.⁸⁴

§ 2254. Partnership Property Comes into Individual Bankruptcy Burdened with Lien in Favor of Firm Creditors.—Where partnership property comes into the custody of the trustee of the individual estate of one of the partners who is bankrupt, it comes into the custody with a lien upon it in favor of partnership creditors, and the trustee must satisfy them therefrom before individual creditors.⁸⁵

And the trustee of the individual partner may be summarily ordered to surrender the partnership assets to the trustee of the partnership where the partnership is subsequently adjudged bankrupt.⁸⁶

§ 2255. Individual Creditors Exhaust Individual Property, Firm Creditors, Firm Property—Each Sharing Only in Any Surplus of Other.—Individual debts should first be paid out of the individual bankrupt's individual estate; partnership debts out of the partnership property, precisely as in cases where a partnership itself is in bankruptcy.⁸⁷

R. 91, 142 Fed. 588): "The language of subsection 'f' would seem to be too clear to admit of serious doubt as to its meaning, namely, that the estate of the individual bankrupt should be first applied to individual debts, and those of the firm to the firm debts, and that only the surplus of the estate over and above what was necessary to pay the individual debts on the one hand, or the social creditors on the other, could be used and applied alike to the payment and adjustment of the individual and partnership debts, as the case may be. Indeed, the Act plainly limits this latter application of the assets to the surplus thereof, as distinguished from the estate generally."

In re Mills, 2 A. B. R. 667, 95 Fed. 269 (D. C. Ind.): "The general rule in this kind of cases is thus stated by Chancellor Kent: 'The joint creditors have the primary claim upon the joint fund, in the distribution of the assets of bankrupt or insolvent partners, and the partnership debts are to be settled before any division of the funds takes place. So far as the partnership property has been acquired by means of partnership debts, those debts have, in equity, a priority of claim to be discharged; and the separate creditors are only entitled, in equity, to seek payment from the surplus of the joint fund after satisfaction of the joint debts. The equity of the rule, on the other hand, equally requires that the joint creditors should only look to the surplus of the separate estates of the partners after payment of the separate debts.' 3 Kent. Comm. (10th Ed.) p. 78."

Euclid Nat. Bk. v. Union Trust Co., 17 A. B. R. 834 (C. C. A. W. Va., affirming In re Henderson, 16 A. B. R. 91): "The contention, however, is earnestly made that notwithstanding the clear and unambiguous provisions of the Act, and the apparent justice thereof, a different rule should be adopted, and an exception made in cases where there is no partnership estate, and that in such a contingency the social creditors have a right to share along pari passu with the individual creditors, in the distribution of the latter estate. The question thus raised is not a new one, either under this or the former Bankruptcy Acts, and has given rise to much discussion in this country and England, resulting in many conflicting decisions, and an apparently hopeless confusion of the subject. We are disinclined to enter into a general discussion of the various and irreconcilable opinions found in the reported cases. The decision of Judge Lowell in In re Wilcox (D. C.), 2 Am. B. R. 177, 94 Fed. 84, contains an extended review of the entire subject, and especially a history of the law, to which we take the liberty of referring. The Circuit Court of Appeals of two of the circuits have taken antagonistic views of the present Bankruptcy Act. In Conrader v. Cohen, 9 A. B. R. 619, 121 Fed. 801 a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, the petitioners' right to share as partnership creditors in the individual assets of the bankrupt is fully recognized; and In re Janes, 13 A. B. R. 341, 133 Fed. 912, a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, the contrary view is taken. A careful consideration of the entire subject and review of the authorities convinces this court that, whatever may have been the correct rule under former Bankruptcy Acts, the latter case, a decision of Judge Lacombe, of the Second Circuit, concurred in by Judges Wallace and Townsend, presents the correct construction of the law under the present Act; and, however much force there may have been in the contention made by petitioners under the former bankruptcy acts, or what may be the correct general doctrine applicable to the settlement and distribution of partnership estates, that it was clearly within the power of Congress to adopt a method for marshaling such assets, to be applied to the respective classes of creditors, which it has done, and in terms too clear and comprehensive to admit of the necessity for interpretation further than to adopt and follow its plain mandates."

Nor does it make any difference that the partnership funds have been previously exhausted and applied on the same debt outside of bankruptcy.⁸⁹

The leading case upon this point under the present act, containing the history and development of the entire subject is In re Wilcox, 2 A. B. R. 117, 94 Fed. 84 (D. C. Mass., cited with approval in In re Daniels, 6 A. B. R. 700, 110 Fed. 745, D. C. N. Y., and in Buckingham v. First Nat'l Bk., 12 A. B. R. 469, 131 Fed. 192, C. C. A. Iowa): "To this history of the rule of distribution there should be added some short consideration of the principles upon which the rule is supposed to rest, and these can neither be found nor applied without difficulty. In several cases, and in the writings of many persons learned in the law, elaborate arguments have been made to show that the rule which gives the separate creditor a prior claim on the separate estate is unsound in principle, and works unfairly in not a few instances. Eden, Bankr. Law (2d ed.), 169; 2 Christ. Bankr. (2d ed.), 35; Evans' Letter to Sir S. Romilly (1810), p. 81; Story, Partn., § 376. Indeed, some of the arguments used in support of the rule rather make against it. Thus it has been said that the rule is based upon the theory that the joint creditor gives credit to the joint estate, and the separate creditor to the separate estate. The facts are often quite otherwise. A man lending money to a firm lends it upon the credit of the individual estates of the separate partners as well as upon that part of their property which is engaged in the firm business; and, on the other hand, the separate creditor of a partner—his butcher or tailor, for example—gives him credit quite as much upon the successful firm business in which he is supposed to be engaged as upon any property in his separate ownership. It has been said that, inasmuch as the law has laid down the rule of distribution as above stated, creditors know the rule, and give credit accordingly; but this argument, if made in support of the reasonableness of the rule, is vicious by proceeding in a circle. It makes the creditor give credit to a fund because such is the law, and makes the fact that he has given credit to the fund a reason for the law. The rule has been defended upon the ground that it is, in substance, a marshaling of assets; but it goes much further than the marshaling of assets in equity, and the confusion into which this treatment of the rule—as merely a marshaling of assets—brings a court is shown by the opinions in Lodge v. Pritchard and other cases. The rule does not carry out the mercantile theory of the partnership relation. Cory, Accts. (2d ed.) 124.

"The historical origin of the rules lies not improbably in an ancient practice of distributing the joint estate under a joint commission and the separate estate under a separate commission, each commission dealing with its corresponding creditors. The best theoretic defence of the rule is probably this: The operation of the law of partnership which gives to any separate partner or his assignee only his net share of the partnership assets—a rule manifestly founded in justice and convenience—usually insures to the joint creditors a priority in the application of the joint estate, and therefore this half of the rule has seldom been questioned. The priority given to the separate creditor in the application of the separate estate is a rough, but practical, offset to the inequality caused by the rule governing the application of the joint estate. See the dissenting opinion of Judge Gibson in Bell v. Newman, 5 Serg. & R. 78. Entirely apart from statute, however, two things are quite clear: First, that the general rule, with some variations, is established in the courts of this country and of England; and, second, that these variations and particularly the exception in the absence of joint estate, have tended to discredit the rule, and to confuse its operations, rather than to obviate its difficulties. * * * The Bankrupt Act of 1800 (2 Stat. 19) contained no reference to the distribution of the assets of a partnership and its component partners, and, except Tucker v. Oxley, no decision made under that act has been found which bears upon the question. * * *

"Act 1867, § 36 (Rev. St., § 5121), is, in all essentials, the same as § 14 of the Act of 1841."

In re Henderson, 16 A. B. R. 91, 128 Fed. 527 (D. C. W. Va., affirmed sub nom. Euclid Nat'l Bk. v. Union Trust Co., 17 A. B. R. 837 (C. C. A. W. Va.): "* * * after long and careful consideration, that judgment is that the exception is not warranted. I reach this conclusion for these, among other, reasons. First. It is admitted to be an exception to a general rule, which rule is plain, clear, apt, and in unambiguous language is written in the law itself, while the exception is not; on the contrary, it must depend solely upon judicial construction, which because it in effect provides a different method of distribution from that provided by the law itself, can not be considered short of mere judicial legislation. It is to be recalled how easily the Congress, had it designed such exception to be made, could have incorporated it as such in the law itself. It can not for a moment be presumed that the matter was overlooked. On the contrary, it is to be remembered that this Bankruptcy Act was as carefully considered a piece of legislation as any given us for years by that body. The Senate first passed what was known as the 'Nelson' bill on the subject. The House of Representatives, after long discussion, passed, as a substitute, the 'Henderson' bill carrying out substantially the provisions of the Torrey measure, which had been for several years prior discussed in legal associations and journals. The matter was finally referred to a conference committee composed of Senators Hoar, Lindsay, and Nelson on behalf of the Senate, and Representatives Henderson, Ray (now judge of the Northern district of New York) and Terry on behalf of the House, lawyers as able as the country could afford, who, after several months' deliberation, reported a compromise which was passed without amendment and became the existing Act. The fact that the courts had established such exception in the construction of the Act of 1867, but with conflict of opinion, is one of the strongest reasons in convincing me that Congress never intended to recognize such exception, for knowing of the former conflict of opinion, and of the action of the courts under the former act in establishing it, instead of recognizing it, which could have been done in a few lines, it does not do so, but, in plainer, more simple, positive, and direct language, reiterates the rule, without exception or qualification, that partnership assets shall pay partnership debts, individual assets individual debts, and only surpluses shall be applied, the one to the other. The argument made that such exception is in accord, generally, with the law and practice in the States, only strengthens my view as to the purpose and intention of the Congress. Its members, coming from all the States and having full knowledge of such practice and law, would seem to have deliberately purposed that this uniform bankrupt act, which was to be the supreme law of the land, should not recognize such exception but, in effect, exclude it.

"Second. Nor can I read paragraph 'g' as giving any excuse for the establishment of such exception by judicial construction. Clause 'f' states the precepts of the law; clause 'g' relates to the procedure under it. The law in 'f' demands that 'the net proceeds shall be appropriated' as directed by it, while 'g' provides simply that in carrying out these precepts, and as an aid in doing so, the court may do certain things, to wit, permit proof of claims of partnership estates against individual estates, and vice versa, and marshal the assets of such estates so as to prevent preferences and secure equitable distribution of such estates. Note the use in this paragraph of the word 'estate' instead of the word 'debt' as used elsewhere. It is properly used and was designed to meet such cases as, for example, where the partnership estate might have a just claim against one of its individual members who had not paid into the partnership his full share of any part of the capital which he was legally bound to do, while the other members of the partnership perhaps had done so; or, vice versa, where the individual member, a bankrupt, had paid into the partnership fund all of his pledged capital, while the other members had not. To meet such and other similar cases that might arise, I am convinced, was the sole cause and scope of this permissive clause in procedure, only mandatory in cases where the circumstances, in equity and good conscience, required its application. The necessity for this permissive provision in procedure is the more apparent when we read in clause 'h' that where all members of a partnership are not adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property is not to be administered in bankruptcy without consent of the solvent partners, a provision not in our former bankrupt laws. In such case, without this clause 'g', would the bankrupt court have jurisdiction to determine any such questions as referred to above between two estates that might arise in the adjustment of their respective rights; the one being administered by the court, the other by the solvent partners?

"Finally, I do not believe any just criticism can be made of the legislative body for establishing this rule and refusing to incorporate the exception contended for to it, into the law. Judge Lowell In re Wilcox, supra, has shown how much difficulty, perplexity, and conflict have arisen during more than three centuries, in the settlement of these joint and separate estates. Under such circumstances, Congress could well say that it was time, in this law which was to be supreme and uniform throughout the States, to settle the vexed controversy by a direct and positive, if arbitrary, rule. It is true in regard to all such rules that, under exceptional circumstances, they work hardships, but the ultimate good they accomplish largely counterbalances the evil. Who doubts longer the benefits of statutes of limitation?

"The rule established here has the merit of simplicity and directness. It gives full and complete repose, and I submit it is as nearly equitable as any such rules can be. Under modern business conditions, a man can become partner in an unlimited number of partnerships of which, and of his connection therewith, his neighbor, who is trusting him upon faith of his individual merit and financial worth, can know nothing, and these partnerships with or without his knowledge may be, by bad or extravagant management, accumulating debt against him many times over the total value of his estate. These partnerships may be located in different localities far separate. For instance, he may be a partner in a 'Eureka Gold Mining Company,' in Alaska, an 'Excelsior Construction Company' in New York, a 'Superlative Fruit Company' in Florida—no one of which in name may disclose his connection therewith. Why is it not reasonable to protect, under such conditions, his neighbors at home who have trusted him, as against the creditors of these distant partnerships, who have in most cases credited such partnerships upon faith of the business they were doing and without knowledge of him or of his connection therewith, until their bankruptcy occurs? Is there not a plain dividing line based on reason and sound equity? His neighbors trusted him with his personal property before them; the others trusted the partnership with its property in view. Why should not each class resort to the property that was the basis of their respective extensions of credit, without the one having any advantage over the other, and what matters it if the creditors of the partnership have been so foolish as to extend credit to it when it has no property, any more than where a man's neighbor has been just as foolish in extending credit to him personally when he had none? Has it ever been contended, in a case where a man has taken his personal property and invested it in a partnership so that he has nothing, that an exception should be judiciously created which would permit his individual creditors, in a bankruptcy proceedings against the partnership, to come in and share pari passu with the partnership creditors, as against his interest therein? Why is not one proposition as fair as the other in good conscience, and why does not the simple rule established by Congress settle the question as fairly as it can be settled? Whether it does or not, of the one thing I am entirely satisfied; and that is, that the rule itself can not justly be more severely criticised than can be the 'exception' contended for. This exception certainly is none the less arbitrary, and leads to no less absurd results. This was recognized by the courts creating it in construing the law of 1867. For example, In re Blumer (D. C.), 12 Fed. 489, from the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, it was held:

"If, after deducting the portion of costs chargeable to the partnership estate, there is any balance of partnership assets, however small, the partnership creditor will not be entitled to share pari passu with the separate creditors in the distribution of the separate estate."

"In other words, the application of this exception might well turn on the partnership possession of, say, 30 cents. Again, In re Marwick, Fed. Cas. No. 9,181, it is held:

"If there be any joint fund, however small, such proof cannot be allowed, although such fund may have been created by the separate creditors purchasing some of the partnership assets, actually worthless, for the purpose only of creating it; for if there be a joint fund, the court cannot, under the statute, look behind the fact, to inquire how it has been produced."

"In other words, under the operation of this exception, a contribution of a few cents, no matter by whom, to the partnership assets, would wholly prevent its application."

Obiter, In re Daniels, 6 A. B. R. 700, 110 Fed. 745 (D. C. R. I.): "Where a member of a copartnership is adjudged a bankrupt in his individual capacity, creditors of the firm are not entitled to receive dividends out of his individual estate until his individual creditors have been paid in full; and this rule prevails notwithstanding the fact that there are no firm assets."

Contra, Conrader v. Cohen, 9 A. B. R. 619, 121 Fed. 801 (C. C. A. Penna., affirming In re Conrader, 9 A. B. R. 85, 118 Fed. 676): "It will be perceived that a single fund only—derived from the separate estate of the bankrupt, Conrader—was before the court for distribution; that all the property of the firm of Jenkins & Conrader had been sold upon execution in the year 1895 and passed to the sheriff's vendee, that the partnership is not in bankruptcy; that there are no firm assets and that there is no solvent partner. The insolvency of Jenkins in 1895, having been shown, that condition will be presumed to have continued in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. If his financial condition changed it was for the contesting individual to show it. Upon the facts here appearing why should not the firm creditors participate in the fund before the court? It is the only fund available to any of the creditors. Now it is well settled that each partner is a debtor to the creditors of the firm. In equity, as at law, partnership debts are treated as several as well as joint. Upon principle, we think the District Court was right in admitting the partnership creditors to participate pro rata with the individual creditors in this fund.

"We find abundant authority to sustain the decision of the court below. In United States v. Lewis, 13 Nat. Bank Reg. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 8429, held by Mr. Justice Strong and Circuit Judge McKennan, that the rule that the joint estate must be applied to pay joint debts and the separate estate to pay the separate debts, is only applicable where the joint estate, as well as the separate estate to pay the separate debts, is before the court for distribution; and in the same case upon appeal, 92 U. S. 618, 623, the Supreme Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Swayne, said: 'A court of equity will not entertain the question of marshaling assets unless both funds are within the jurisdiction and control of the court.' In the case in hand two funds do not exist. The established English doctrine is thus stated in Lind. Partners. (3d Amer. Ed.), p. 731; (6th Ed.), § 749: 'If in the case of a bankrupt firm there is no joint estate, the joint creditors are entitled to rank as separate creditors against the separate estates of the individual partners. So, if one partner only is bankrupt, the creditors of the firm are entitled to rank as separate creditors against the separate estate of the bankrupt, if there is no joint estate and if there is no solvent ostensible partner, at all events none in this country.' The like doctrine is set forth in Story on Partnership, § 380, that where there is no partnership assets and no solvent partner, the firm creditors share in the separate estate of the bankrupt partner pari passu with the individual creditors was the recognized rule under the Bankrupt Act of 1867."

Also, contra, In re Green, 8 A. B. R. 553, 116 Fed. 118 (D. C. Iowa): "In support of the ruling made, the referee cites the case of In re Wilcox, 2 Am. B. R. 117, 94 Fed. 84, wherein will be found a learned discussion of the general proposition by Judge Lowell, who reaches the conclusion that the partnership creditors cannot be allowed to share with the individual creditors in the assets of one member of the firm, even though there are no firm assets and no proceedings against the firm. If I correctly understand the ruling in this case, it is, in effect, that § 5 of the Bankrupt Act is not to be limited to cases wherein the proceedings are against the firm as well as the individual members, but that it is to be construed to establish the broad principle that the individual creditors of the bankrupt are to be paid in full out of his assets before the claims owing by him as a member of the firm can be allowed to share in his assets, even though the firm had long since been dissolved, and there are no firm assets to be applied to the payment of the firm debts. This question was involved in the case of In re Keller (D. C.), 6 Am. B. R. 337, 109 Fed. 118, wherein this court held that as there had been a valid transfer of the partnership property to one of the partners, Almon D. Keller, who subsequently went into bankruptcy as an individual, and transferred to his trustee all of his property, including that which had formerly belonged to the partnership, the firm creditors would be permitted to share equally with the individual creditors in the assets of the estate. This conclusion was based largely upon the fact that the Supreme Court in Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 648, 1 Sup. Ct. 369, 27 L. Ed. 211, had declared the equitable rule to be as follows:

"The legal right of a partnership creditor to subject the partnership property to the payment of his debts consists simply in the right to reduce his claim to judgment and to sell the goods of his debtor on execution. His right to appropriate the partnership property specifically to the payment of his debt in equity, in preference to creditors of an individual partner, is derived through the other partner, whose original right it is to have the partnership assets applied to the payment of partnership obligations. And this equity of the creditor subsists so long as that of the partner, through which it is derived, remains; that is, so long as the partner himself "retains an interest in the firm assets, as a partner, a court of equity will allow the creditors of the firm to avail themselves of his equity, and enforce through it the application of those assets primarily to payment of the debts due them, whenever the property comes under its administration." Such was the language of this court in Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. Ed. 370, in which Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion, continued as follows: "It is indispensable, however, in such relief, when the creditors are, as in the present case, simply contract creditors, that the partnership property should be within the control of the court, and in the course of administration, brought there by the bankruptcy of the firm, or by an assignment, or by the creation of a trust in some mode. This is because neither the partners nor the joint creditors have any specific lien, nor is there any trust that can be enforced, until the property has passed in custodia legis." Hence it follows that "if, before the interposition of the court is asked, the property has ceased to belong to the partnership, if by a bona fide transfer it has become the several property of one partner or of a third person, the equities of the partners are extinguished, and consequently the derivative equities of the creditors are at an end."

"In view of this authoritative declaration that the equities of the partnership creditors are derived from the equity of the partners, and that it is within the power of the partners to put an end to the equities of the firm creditors, by a bona fide transfer of the firm assets to one partner or to a third party, wherein the equity in the ruling that, in cases wherein the equity of the firm creditors has been terminated, not through their act nor with their consent, but by the act of the partners in selling the firm assets to one of their number or to a third party, and subsequently members of the firm are put into bankruptcy as individuals, the individual creditors are entitled to exclude the firm creditors from sharing in the assets until the individual debts are paid in full? In such cases there is no other fund to which the firm creditors can resort for payment, and the practical result of the rule laid down in the Wilcox case is that, in all cases wherein the equity of the firm creditors have been destroyed by the action of the partners, in converting the firm property into individual assets by a sale thereof to one of the parties, the individual creditors are entitled to be preferred, and are entitled to exclude the firm creditors from sharing in these assets, even though they were originally the property of the firm. A very large proportion of the cases brought in bankruptcy under the provisions of the present act are cases wherein the bankrupts have been members of one or more partnerships which have been dissolved long since, and in which the only assets are those belonging to the individual bankrupt; and, if it be the rule that the individual creditor is always entitled to be first paid from the individual assets, it follows that in all these cases the debts due the firm creditors are discharged, yet these creditors are barred from any share in the assets of the bankrupt.

"The variant views set forth in the numerous decisions cited in the Wilcox case serve to show that it is practically impossible to formulate a single general rule that will meet the equities of every case, but the adoption of the rule that in every instance wherein there are firm and individual creditors, but the assets are individual only, the latter class of creditors are to be paid in full to the exclusion of the firm creditors, will certainly work injustice in so many cases that I should hesitate long before accepting it in the absence of a controlling decision by an appellate court. The Supreme Court having decided that the firm assets may be converted into individual assets by the action of the partners, I cannot see the equity in the view that holds, in effect, that it is within the power of the partners to determine the equity of the firm creditors in the firm assets, and that the same act which terminates the equity of the firm creditors creates a preference in favor of the individual creditors, enabling them to secure payment in full of their claims out of funds which in many cases are wholly or largely the proceeds of the property which was originally firm assets."

§ 2258. Joint and Several Obligations for Partnership Debt, Share in Individual Estate.—Creditors holding joint and several obligations of the partners for a partnership debt may share in the individual estates of the several partners on an equality with exclusively individual creditors.⁹¹

Buckingham Trustee v. First Nat'l Bk., 12 A. B. R. 465, 131 Fed. 192 (C. C. A. Tenn.): "The next question is whether the claimants * * * as individual creditors of Estes, should be paid out of his individual estate, in preference to the claims of the firm creditors. Doubtless the notes executed by the firm and endorsed by Estes, were firm debts, as well as individual debts of Estes. But the holders had a right, if they preferred, to present them as claims against Estes individually. * * * Gartenlaub was advised of the fact that Estes individually owned a large amount of real estate and for that reason required his individual endorsement."

Inferentially, analogously, In re McCallum & McCallum, 11 A. B. R. 448, 127 Fed. 768 (D. C. Pa.): "The facts are these: The bankrupt firm made a promissory note payable to the order of William H. McCallum, one of the partners, by whom it was duly indorsed. The claim against the firm, based upon their contract as makers, was proved by the creditor, but the claim against William's individual estate, based upon the separate and distinct contract of indorsement, has not been proved. The year has gone by, and to permit the proof of claim that is now upon file with the referee to be so amended as to include the second contract would not, in my opinion, be the allowance of an amendment at all, but the allowance of a wholly new claim, in the face of the statutory prohibition. The contract entered into by the maker of a promissory note, and the contract entered into by the indorser are entirely distinct and separate undertakings. It does not affect this conclusion that the contract of indorsement is made by a member of the firm that has previously made the other contract. The same man has made two contracts in different characters, one as a partner and the other as an individual."

[1867] In re Thomas, 8 Biss. 139, Fed. Cas. No. 13,886: "There is a class of cases in which it has been held that where a creditor holds notes signed by a firm, and signed or indorsed also by an individual member of the firm, he may prove against both estates, and receive dividends from both. In re Farnum, Fed. principle thus settled seems to reach out to the question involved in the case at bar. The scope of these decisions is, that when an individual member of a firm, as such, becomes surety upon or indorses an obligation of the firm, he thereby gives what is in the nature of security upon his separate estate to the firm creditors, and, by reason of the individual liability superadded to the joint obligation, he places the firm creditor in a position where he can go against the individual as well as the joint estate. Thus it results, that without the indorsement or individual signature of one of the firm, the firm creditor would have no right to claim against the individual assets until individual creditors had been first satisfied. But holding the individual indorsement or signature, the firm creditor may, in the first instance, prove against the separate as well as the joint estate. Now, such separate liability would seem to be, at least, in the nature of security though differing radically, it is true, in character and form from that of a mortgage, and yet double proof, by the firm creditor in such case, may be made without any abatement of advantage which his diligence has secured."

Contra, In re Mosier, 7 A. B. R. 268 (D. C. Vt.): "The joint and several notes given by the partners for partnership liabilities are none the less partnership debts because the partners are also individually liable. By the terms of the same section of the Bankrupt Act, no part of the separate property is to go for partnership debts till the separate debts are fully paid. Therefore there can be no individual assets of Mosier in which these partnership creditors can be entitled to participate.

"Participation of joint and several partnership creditors in individual assets, before individual creditors are paid in full, denied."

Apparently contra, Bank v. Stevens Estate, 6 A. B. R. 164, 107 Fed. 245 (D. C. Vt.): "As to the first note the claim is sought to be made individual through the separate indorsement of C. P. Stevens. But it was primarily a partnership note, and, so far as is in any wise made to appear, a partnership debt; and, if Stevens' liability as indorser had been fixed, it would still be apparently a partnership debt. There is no suggestion in the claim that his liability in this respect in any way became fixed, and a fortiori the debt remained a partnership debt without becoming an individual debt."

Thus, misappropriations by a partnership may result in provable claims both against the firm and also against the guilty partners individually.⁹²

In re Coe, 26 A. B. R. 353, 183 Fed. 745 (C. C. A. N. Y., affirming 22 A. B. R. 384, 169 Fed. 1002): "It makes no difference that the partners acted without evil intent, nor that the firm got the benefit of what they did. It remains a wrongful conversion for which all the partners are liable, not jointly as partners, but jointly and severally as tort-feasors, whether they each actively participated in it or not; the acts of every one being imputed to every other. * * * The bank could prove two claims, one against the firm—i. e., the partners jointly on the acceptances—and the other against the partners jointly and severally upon an implied contract (the tort being waived) to repay moneys of the bank wrongfully converted by them. The doctrine of election between inconsistent remedies on the same claim has no application."

And a composition effected by the partnership alone will not affect the claims against the individual estate;⁹³ except, of course, to the extent of the amount applied upon the claim by the composition.

Except, of course, to the extent of the amount applied upon the claim by the composition.

A contrary doctrine to that enunciated at the beginning of this section would destroy the advantage to which the creditor is entitled by virtue of the individual signatures.

But a modification of the doctrine has been made in one case where it has been held that such individual proof should be only for the balance left after deduction of the dividends received from the partnership assets.⁹⁴ But such modification seems unwarranted. The least that can be said of the individual obligations is that they are those of sureties. If they are those of sureties then, assuredly, the creditor may prove for the full amount against both the principal and surety's respective estates, so long as the aggregate dividends do not exceed the amount of the claim, applying the dividends first from the principal's estate. Exhausting the principal's dividends first, however, is different from making proof only for the balance after such application.⁹⁵

On the same theory, where the partners and the firm have misappropriated property left with them as bailees, the owner may prove against both the partnership estate and the estate of each partner who participated in the wrong.⁹⁶

However, it has been held that the claim of a solvent partner who is liquidating the partnership affairs instead of having them administered in bankruptcy, is not a provable debt against the bankrupt partner where the bankrupt partner was not indebted to the firm nor to the solvent partner at the time of adjudication, the solvent partner's claim arising from subsequent events.⁹⁸

In re Walker, 23 A. B. R. 805, 176 Fed. 455 (D. C. Ala.): "The certificate shows an admission by the parties that at the time of the filing of the petition there was no indebtedness existing upon a partnership settlement, as between the partners, and that the partnership assets, without resort to the individual property of either partner, were amply sufficient to fully pay all the partnership debts. At the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the bankrupt partner owed the solvent partner nothing, either because of greater contribution to the firm assets by the solvent partner or larger withdrawals therefrom by the bankrupt partner, or because, in order to pay the firm indebtedness, recourse would be necessary upon the solvent partner or his property, after exhaustion of the firm assets. * * * The case is, therefore, not one of an unascertained or unliquidated indebtedness due the solvent partner, Peter Pappas, but one in which there was no indebtedness at all due him at that time from his bankrupt partner. The indebtedness claimed by him arose subsequent to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, by reason of the solvent partner having elected to take the administration of the partnership assets, which, when the petition was filed, were admittedly ample to pay all partnership debts, but which, owing to subsequently arising causes, failed to realize enough to do so, and by reason of his having undertaken with them to satisfy all the firm debts. If any claim arose in favor of the solvent partner against his copartner because of the insufficiency of the partnership assets to liquidate partnership debts and the consequent necessary resort to the property of the solvent partner for that purpose, it was of subsequent origin to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and is not a provable claim against the bankrupt partner, nor one from which a discharge in bankruptcy would release him."

§ 2260. On Marshaling Partnership and Individual Estates, Solvent Partner's Excess Contribution Provable against Individual Estate.—Thus, also, in the marshaling of partnership and individual estates in bankruptcy, a solvent partner's excess of contribution to pay firm debts constitutes a provable debt against the individual estates of the other partners, and may share pari passu with individual debts.⁹⁹

But it may not share in partnership assets until partnership creditors are paid.

In re Rice, 21 A. B. R. 205, 164 Fed. 514 (D. C. Pa.): "The referee's decision is attacked on the ground that the claim of Joseph A. Rice against the firm is an asset of his individual estate, which belongs to his individual creditors and should not be withheld from them and thus applied in effect to the claims of other partnership creditors than himself. But this argument fails to state the situation precisely. No doubt the claim of Joseph A. Rice against the firm of which he was a member is an asset of his individual estate, but it is an asset with a particular disability, and in this respect it differs from the claims of other partnership creditors. Its disability consists in the fact that, according to the well-settled rule governing the marshaling of partnership and of individual assets, it cannot participate in the distribution of the partnership assets until other partnership creditors have been satisfied in full. For this reason the individual creditors of the claimant cannot profit by it as completely as if he were an ordinary creditor of the firm and not a member also.

99. In re Stevens, 5 A. B. R. 9, 105 Fed. 323 (D. C. Vt.).

But nothing is taken away from the individual creditors to which they are equitably entitled, because the claimant himself could not share in the distribution of the partnership assets pari passu with other partnership creditors. To sustain the claimant's position would give to his individual creditors a more extensive right against the bankrupt firm than he himself possesses and would thus do violence to the rule that the individual creditors succeed only to such equity in the firm assets as belongs to their debtor himself."

§ 2261. Likewise, Partner's Right of Indemnity (Where Surety) for Paying Copartner's Individual Debt Provable against Copartner's Individual Estate, Entitling to Subrogation to Creditor's Claim.—Thus, where one partner has paid the individual debt of another partner for whom he was surety, his claim for indemnity from his principal is a provable claim against the co-partner's individual estate, and entitles his trustee in bankruptcy to be subrogated to the original creditor's claim, and to prove it against the other partner's individual estate.¹

[1867] In re May, Fed. Cas. 9,327: "Partners and their estates come under the rule, for the reason that, in bankruptcy, estates are settled separately; the joint creditors are to have the joint estates, and vice versa, and although there is no contribution between joint and separate estates, unless there should be a surplus of one over the other, yet when the property of one is pledged for the debt of the other, a court of equity will apply the right of subrogation precisely as it would if the contracting parties were not partners, and thus do justice to the different creditors."

§ 2262. But Claim of Retiring Partner for Unpaid Purchase Price of Partnership Share, Not to Share with Partnership Creditors in Surplus of Remaining Partner's Individual Estate.—But the claim of the retiring partner for the purchase price of the latter's share is not to participate pari passu with partnership creditors in the individual estate of the remaining partner.² This is so, for the reason that the sale itself, being simply a sale of an undivided interest in the surplus, contemplates satisfaction, first, of all firm obligations in the ascertainment of such surplus.

§ 2262¹/₄. Claim of Bankrupt Partnership against Its Bankrupt Member—Not to Share Pari Passu with Individual Creditors.—The doctrine that a partnership is a distinct entity will not be construed to change the established rule fixing the substantive rights of creditors respectively, of the partnership and of its individual members, in order to allow a partnership claim against one of the members to share pari passu with the claims of the individual creditors. Whilst the trustee of a bankrupt partnership is entitled to prove its claim against the individual estate of a bankrupt member, he is only entitled to share out of the surplus after the other individual creditors are paid in full.

Thus, where both the partnership and the partners individually are bankrupt, the trustee may prove against the separate estate of a partner a debt due the partnership for money loaned by the firm to him, and for which he gave his individual note, but will not be allowed to share pari passu with the individual creditors of the bankrupt.

In re Union Bank, Whitney, et al., 25 A. B. R. 148, 158, 184 Fed. 224 (C. A. Mich.): "No objection is made to the proof of the partnership claim nor to a transfer to the partnership assets of any surplus that may remain of Gilkey's individual estate after the claims of his separate creditors are satisfied. The objection is to the alleged right of the partnership through its trustee to share pro rata in that estate. Proof but not sharing is mentioned in 5g. To permit sharing upon proof allowed under that paragraph is to ignore most important relations attending a partnership, where, as here, the partnership and its members are alike insolvent and adjudged bankrupts. Neither the bankrupt partnership nor its trustee can have any possible interest in the separate estate of any of the bankrupt partners, except only for the benefit of the partnership creditors. Whatever disability then that can be predicated of the partnership creditors respecting the separate estate and creditors of one of the partners, ought to attach to the bankrupt partnership estate and its trustee. Can it be that in a case like this there is anything in the bankruptcy provisions we have been considering, which requires a court to decline to see or to consider these plain facts? It was long ago settled that the partnership creditors would not either directly or through the assignee be allowed so to deplete the separate estate of one of the partners to the prejudice of his separate creditors (Story on Part., § 391; Gow on Part., Marg. pp. 317, 318; also decisions first cited in this opinion). It is not claimed that this rule of protecting separate creditors should be ignored upon any theory of fraud; for admittedly the claim in question is founded on consent on simple contract. Hence, unless the trustee of the bankrupt partnership is to be accorded greater rights than would be given to those in whose interest alone the claim is pressed, there is nothing to warrant the removal of the separate estate in question from the ordinary category and liabilities of such estates (Story on Part., § 391, note); in short, the partnership estate should not be now any more than it would have been prior to the enactment of the present Bankruptcy Act, allowed to claim against "the separate estate in competition with the separate creditors." Amsinck v. Bean, 22 Wall. 395, 402.

§ 2262½. Vice Versa—Claim of Individual Bankrupt Estate against Firm Estate.—By § 5 (g) of the Bankrupt Act, "the court may permit the proof of the claim of the partnership estate against the individual estates, and vice versa," hence the trustee of a bankrupt member may prove a debt due the member by the partnership against the estate of the bankrupt partnership, but the claim will only be "formally" allowed, with the qualification that it should not be permitted to share in the distribution of the assets until such partnership creditors as are not members of the firm have been paid in full.³

3. In re Rice, 21 A. B. R. 205, 164 Fed. 509 (D. C. Pa.).

In re Effinger, 25 A. B. R. 930, 932: "The claim of a partner for money lent to the partnership in excess of the amount he was bound to contribute as his share of the capital is unquestionably provable against the partnership estate, but it cannot share in the distribution of that estate until all the firm creditors are paid. In the third or supplementary volume of Remington, at page 669, § 2247¼, the learned author says: 'Nor is a partner's contribution to the capital of the firm a provable debt against the partnership assets. * * * But his excess contribution may be proved against the other partner's individual estate.'

"We shall see that the cases hold that § 5g authorizing the proof of such claims does not intend to change the previously existing law as to the priority of right to share in the distribution of assets. It is not true, as is contended by the counsel for the individual creditor in this case, that such a construction deprives clause 5g of all significance. In point of fact its enactment abolished a technical rule of bankruptcy procedure which in the past had at times worked real injustice. * * *

"Under our present law claims cannot be proved subsequent to one year after adjudication. Except for § 5g, it would be impossible to prove claims of the partnership estate against the individual estates, or vice versa, until the individual or the firm debts, as the case may be, had been paid in full. Before this could take place, the time in which the claims could be filed would usually have expired."

§ 2262¾. Exception to the Rule That Claim of Bankrupt Partnership against Its Bankrupt Member Not to Share Pari Passu with Individual Creditors and Vice Versa.—However, it would appear from some cases that the rule set out in the preceding sections perhaps should be qualified by an exception where the debt due the firm from the individual member is based on fraud,⁴ conversion, etc.; and perhaps, also, where the firm and the individual partner had carried on distinct trades, and the debt is a trade debt resulting from the trade dealings between the partner as a separate trader and his firm. In such cases, it would appear from such rulings that the court in administering the estates would not only permit the "proof" of such claims, but would also allow them to share equally with the individual creditors, or the firm creditors, as the case may be, in order to "secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates."

§ 2263. Obligation Signed in Individual Names of Partners, Prima Facie Individual Debt.—An obligation signed in the individual names of the partners is prima facie their respective individual obligation,⁵ but may be shown by parol evidence to be a firm debt.⁶

re Stoddard Bros. Lumber Co., 22 A. B. The preliminary objection that parol evidence was inadmissible to show that these notes were given for and on behalf of the partnership, on the ground that such evidence tended to contradict and vary the terms of written contracts, is not tenable. The evidence was not introduced for that purpose. There is no controversy as to the terms of written contracts. The question is: Whose contracts were they? Here are two individuals, whose names are signed to these notes. They were partners in business, and had been for many years. The holder of the notes introduced testimony tending to show that they were partnership notes, given for partnership obligations. This evidence was admissible under the well-known rule that evidence is always admissible to show that the signature to a written instrument, although that of an individual and prima facie for the purpose of acknowledging an individual liability, is in fact that of an agent for an undisclosed principal. * * * In other words, he thought that the notes signed by the individual partners for lumber furnished the business of the partnership constituted a partnership as well as an individual liability. Thus, "Preferences" and "Legal Liens" on Individual Property, Whether Affected by Partnership Bankruptcy.—Thus, it would appear that transfers of the individual property of a partner or liens by legal proceedings thereon for individual debts are not voidable as preferences nor nullified as legal liens by the bankruptcy of the partnership.⁹ However, by § 5 of the Act, not only is the partnership trustee the trustee also for the individual estate, even where there is no individual adjudication, yet § 5 in clause "g" provides that the assets are to be so marshalled as to prevent "preferences" and to "secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates," from which it might be implied that the individual estates of nonbankrupt partners would be treated in this respect as if there had been an individual bankruptcy along with the partnership adjudication.¹⁰ individual act and not the joint act of the firm, and, therefore, not an act for which the firm could be adjudged bankrupt."

But a transfer of individual assets by one member to pay a firm creditor a greater percentage than another firm creditor would get from the same individual estate may be a preference, since the individual estates constitute sub modo funds to which partnership creditors are entitled to resort, in proper order of priority after individual creditors are satisfied in full, so that a transfer to one firm creditor without a like transfer to other firm creditors would be the giving of a greater percentage to one creditor than to another of the "same class" in the order of priority.¹⁵

And by state law such an individual transfer may be a voidable preference in a partnership bankruptcy of which the trustee in bankruptcy may avail himself by subrogation to the rights of any creditor who has already instituted proceedings.¹⁶ ministration of the partnership property; nor even then unless some partner has at that time such right, the preferential equity of the partners being the mere right to enforce the right of the partners to compel such a preference; in short, that, before the partnership property is placed in custodia legis it is not held in trust for the partnership creditors and they have no lien upon it; and that the covenant of the remaining partner to pay the firm debts, though both he and the firm are insolvent is a sufficient consideration; and that the assumption of payment of partnership debts by one partner in consideration of an absolute transfer to him of the partnership property by the other creates no trust in and fastens no lien upon the property thus transferred in favor of the partnership creditors prior to any application to a court to interpose and assume administration of the property.

Sargent v. Blake, 20 A. B. R. 115, 160 Fed. 57 (C. C. A. Mo.): "There are two rules of law which at different times apply to the management and disposition of the property of a partnership, first, partners own, and, with the consent of each, have the right and power to sell and dispose of the partnership property, to transform it into the individual property of one or more of the partners, to apply it or its proceeds to the payment of their individual debts in preference to those of the partnership, and to make such other honest disposition of it as they deem fit; second, in the administration of the property of a partnership in the courts the creditors of the partnership have the right to the application of the partnership property to the payment of the partnership debts in preference to the individual debts of the respective partners. The first is a rule of operation, the second a rule of administration. The first governs during the operation of the partnership business and the disposition of the partnership property by the partners, the second operates during the administration of the partnership property after it is brought into the custody of a court. The first rule prevails until by some suit or act the interposition of some court is invoked to administer the partnership property, and until that time the second rule is ineffective. Before the partnership property is placed in custodia legis for administration, it is not held in trust for the payment of the partnership creditors in preference to the creditors of the individual partners. The partnership creditors have no lien upon it, and no independent right to its application to the payment of their claims in preference to the claims of the creditors of the individual partners. Each partner, however, has the right to require the partnership property to be applied to the payment of the partnership debts in preference to the debts of the individual partners, to the end that he may not be required to pay the former out of his individual estate. The right of the creditors of the partnership to payment out of the partnership property in preference to the individual creditors is the mere right by subrogation or derivation to enforce this right of one of the partners after the partnership property has been placed in the custody of the law. Until it has been so placed each partner has plenary power at any time to release or waive this right, and if each partner has done so and at the time the property comes within the jurisdiction of a court no partner has this right, then no creditor of the partnership has it, for a stream can not rise higher than its source."

Nor do the provisions of § 5 of the Bankruptcy Act cause a different rule to prevail in bankruptcy.

Sargent v. Blake, 20 A. B. R. 115, 160 Fed. 57 (C. C. A. Mo.): "The clause of § 5f upon which counsel rely is nothing but the familiar rule of administration of partnership and individual estates which has been imported into the bankruptcy law from the courts of equity. 'The net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts, and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of the individual debts.' The partnership property and the individual estate at what time, four months, or at some indefinite time within four months before the petition is filed, or at the time it is filed? This section treats of administration in the bankruptcy court and hence of the partnership and individual property, the title to which is in the bankrupt at the time the petition against him is presented to the court and that which he had transferred in fraud of his creditors. Section 70. Any other interpretation would produce intolerable vexation and confusion, for in the daily conduct of business, partners are necessarily and constantly applying partnership property to the payment, not only of large individual obligations, but to the payment of their petty individual debts, for living expenses, and are often devoting their individual property to the promotion of the partnership business and the discharge of the partnership debts. It never could have been, it never was, the intention of Congress that these transactions—these transformations of partnership into individual and of individual into partnership property within four months, or within any other time preceding the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings—should either be rescinded or avoided by subsequent adjudications in bankruptcy unless they were actually fraudulent or voidably preferential. It did not make them fraudulent in themselves. The terms of § 5f and the natural and rational interpretation of them in the light of the general rules of law and of the entire act in which they appear, limit their application to partnership and individual property at the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, and to property the transfer of which is fraudulent for other reasons than that partnership property was applied to the payment of individual debts, or individual property to the payment of partnership debts. This conclusion is in accord with the general principles applicable to the management and disposition of partnership property."

Such right of the firm creditor to pursue firm assets into the hands of the remaining partner after dissolution and sale of the outgoing partner's interest, is purely derivative, the creditor deriving his rights through the right of the outgoing partner to have the assets first applied to partnership debts; so that if the outgoing partner has relinquished this right the creditor has no right to which he may be subrogated.¹⁸

Fitzpatrick v. Flanagan, 106 U. S. 648: "The legal right of a partnership creditor to subject the partnership property to the payment of his debt consists simply in the right to reduce his claim to judgment, and to sell the goods of his debtors on execution. His right to appropriate the partnership property specifically to the payment of his debt, in equity, in preference to creditors of an individual partner, is derived through the other partner, whose original right it is to have the partnership assets applied to the payment of partnership obligations. And this equity of the creditor subsists so long as that of the partner through which it is derived remains; that is, so long as the partner himself retains an interest in the firm assets, as a partner, a court of equity will allow the creditors of the firm to avail themselves of this equity, and enforce through it the application of those assets primarily to payment of the debts due them, whenever the property comes under its administration.' Such was the language of this court in Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. Ed. 370, in which Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion, continued as follows: 'It is indispensable, however, to such relief, when the creditors are, as in the present case, simply contract creditors, that the partnership property should be within the control of the court, and in the course of administration, brought there by the bankruptcy of the firm, or by an assignment, or by the creation of a trust in some mode. This is because neither the partners nor the joint creditors have any specific lien, nor is there any trust that can be enforced until the property has passed in custodiam legis.' Hence it follows that 'if, before the interposition of the court is asked, the property had ceased to belong to the partnership, if by a bona fide transfer it has become the several property of one partner or of a third person, the equities of the partners are extinguished, and consequently the derivative equities of the creditors are at an end.'"

Such outgoing partner, for instance, will be held to have waived his right to insist upon application of the former firm assets to firm debts where both the partners unite in selling to a third person.¹⁹

Again, the outgoing partner may relinquish his right to have the firm assets applied to the firm debts by expressly applying the firm property to individual debts, in which event the firm creditor again has no right to which he may be subrogated.²⁰

The same rule, namely, that the creditors' right is a derivative right, applies where the partnership was solvent when the sale was made.

In re Filmar (Lippincott v. Klosterman), 24 A. B. R. 194, 177 Fed. 170 (C. C. A. Ill.): "Swigert, a merchant tailor, in October, 1905, sold a third interest in his business to Filmar. The firm of Swigert & Filmar continued the business till January 8, 1906, when Swigert sold his interest to Filmar in consideration of a small money payment and Filmar's agreement to pay the partnership debts and save Swigert harmless therefrom. Partnership assets were then in excess of partnership debts. By payment and novation Filmar very shortly settled all partnership debts except one to appellant Lippincott. Lippincott refused to accept Filmar as debtor in place of the partnership, and proceeded to press Filmar for payment. Filmar, by various promises and representations, warded off Lippincott until February 20, 1906, when he filed his voluntary petition in bankruptcy. The property scheduled by Filmar and turned over to the trustee had all been property of the partnership. The scheduled debts were all separate individual debts of Filmar's except the debt to Lippincott. Thereupon Lippincott filed his petition, asking that his debt be paid from the assets ahead of the claims of Filmar's individual creditors; and Swigert filed a like petition, asking the same relief, without offering to repay the consideration he received on selling his interest to Filmar. The final decree dismissed these petitions for want of equity; and the petitioners have severally appealed. With the property in custody and all the parties present, and no rights of innocent purchasers or transferees having intervened, a court of general equity powers would concededly award priority to Lippincott, because there had been no application of the property with the consent of the partners, to the payment of individual debts (Sargent v. Blake (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 115, 160 Fed. 57, * * *) because Lippincott in his own right as a partnership creditor would be entitled to equity's rule of distribution, and because Swigert for his own protection would have the right to ask that Lippincott be first paid. Was there less power in the bankruptcy court? Section 5a * * * declares that: 'A partnership, during the continuation of the partnership business, or after its dissolution and before the final settlement thereof, may be adjudged a bankrupt.' Section 5f explicitly adopts the equity rule of administration. Section 5g authorizes the bankruptcy court to 'marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates so as to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates.' These provisions, we think, indicate very clearly that Congress intended that the bankruptcy courts should have full equity powers in dealing with partnership matters."

Of course, where the outgoing partner has not relinquished his equity but joins with the firm creditors in asking precedence for firm debts, the firm debts will have precedence.²¹

On the contrary, it has also been held that the partnership creditors' lien upon, or rights in, partnership assets follow the assets into the hands of a remaining partner who has bought out his copartners, and that such creditors are entitled to priority of payment therefrom over individual creditors of the remaining partner, upon his bankruptcy.²² This is presumably on the doctrine that the transfer by one partner of his partnership interest to another is not the transfer of title to any specific assets but a transfer of an individual interest in any surplus left after satisfaction of firm obligations; and that thus, although the rights of creditors must be worked out through the partners and rise no higher than those of the partners, yet, in effect, precisely by virtue of the sale itself a lien exists in favor of firm creditors. When partnership property is thus converted into individual property by the sale to one partner of all the other partners' interest, it is not a sale of specific articles but a sale of a share in the surplus after all firm debts are paid. In effect, a lien in favor of firm creditors is thereby created or maintained, and is so created precisely through the acts of the partners themselves.

In re Terens, 23 A. B. R. 680, 175 Fed. 495 (D. C. Wis.): "On the other hand, it is contended, and the referee ruled, that by virtue of the dissolution agreement of December 15th Terens became the sole owner, and that there is now no partnership fund to be administered. * * * Under these circumstances, what was the legal effect of the dissolution agreement? What did Oswald sell? It was not specific articles of personal property. It was not a transfer of the corpus of the estate, but of only such interest in the surplus after the firm debts had been provided for. At the outset the distinction must be sharply drawn between such a transfer by one insolvent partner to another, and a sale by both partners of certain specific property to a third party. In the latter case the entire title passes by the transfer, and it has been repeatedly held that the legal right of either or both partners to sell the firm assets and transfer good title thereto is not impaired by the fact of insolvency. In my judgment the dissolution agreement, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, did not work a liberation of the firm assets and convert the same into the individual assets of Terens, but that, when the property came to the custody of the court, Oswald still retained the right to insist upon the payment of the firm debts out of the firm assets, as he does by his consent to the administration by the court, and that by subrogation or derivation the firm creditors are justified in insisting upon such a marshaling of assets as is provided for in the Bankruptcy Act."

In re Mosier, 7 A. B. R. 268, 112 Fed. 138 (D. C. Vt.): "Partners in an insolvent partnership have no interests of their own in the partnership property, but the whole is subject to the lien of the partnership creditors.

In re Gillette, 5 A. B. R. 123, 104 Fed. 769 (D. C. N. Compare analogously, obiter, Deaf and Dumb Institute v. Crockett, 17 A. B. R. 241, 117 App. Div. N. Y. 269: "It is well settled that the interest of an individual member of a firm may be assigned by him, but the assignee only acquires the proportionate share of the member in the surplus remaining after the payment of the copartnership debts and the adjustment of the equities between the members of the firm, and does not acquire any title to the corpus of the firm assets, which remain a primary fund for the payment of firm debts with the right in the assignor as well as in the creditors to compel their appropriation thereto." [Of course, if the above is limited to an assignment to a stranger, it is not contrary to the doctrine set out in the beginning of this section, since in that event the partner still retains his right to have the firm assets first applied to the firm debts, and upon bankruptcy intervening the firm creditors would be subrogated to this right.]

§ 2270. But if Partnership Creditors Assent to Assumption They Become Individual Creditors.—But, of course, in any event, if the partnership creditors assent to the assumption of the partnership debts by the remaining partner, they become thereby his individual creditors and lose their lien.²³

And the assent is sufficient if not made until bankruptcy has intervened.²⁴

In re Keller, 6 A. B. R. 336, 109 Fed. 118 (D. C. Iowa): "Counsel for the claimant take the position that the payment of the $171.70 on October 2, 1900, was made by the firm of Keller & Stake; that the partnership has not been adjudged a bankrupt; and that, as the court in bankruptcy has before it only the individual estate of Almon D. Keller, it cannot deal with payments made by the pre-existing firm of Keller & Stake, nor can it undertake to marshal the firm and individual assets in this proceeding. The fact, however, that the partnership has not been adjudged a bankrupt, prevents the question of the marshaling of assets from arising in this case. The claimant, as shown by the proof of debt filed by it, assumes the position of a creditor of Almon D. Keller. There is no case before the court in which it can undertake to separate the debts and property of a firm from that of the individual partners, as is provided for in § 5 of the Bankrupt Act. When J. P. Stake sold his interest in the partnership to Keller, the property became the individual property of the latter, and it passed, as such, to his trustee in the bankruptcy proceedings. Neither Stake nor the firm creditors have initiated any proceedings for the enforcement of any supposed equities or rights in the property formerly belonging to the firm, and therefore the referee rightly ruled that the claims filed by the company could only be viewed as a claim against Keller. * * * In the case now under consideration there was a valid transfer of the partnership property to Almon D. Keller. This transfer has not been questioned by any one. When Keller went into Bankruptcy, he did so as an individual, and he transferred to the trustee all his property, including that which had formerly belonged to the firm of Keller & Stake. Under these circumstances, the court in bankruptcy cannot deal with the estate in any other light than as the individual estate of Almon D. Keller. The claims of the creditors of the late firm of Keller & Stake can be proved only as claims against the bankrupt, and this is what was done by the claimants in this case; for, as already stated, in the proof of claim filed before the referee the averment is that 'Almon D. Keller, the person by whom a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy has been filed, was at and before the filing of said petition, and still is, justly indebted to said corporation in the sum of $563.94;' and it is thus made clear that the claimant bases its right to share in the estate on the ground that it occupies the position of a creditor of the individual, Almon D. Keller, and its rights are just what they would be if the business had always been carried on by Keller as an individual."

§ 2270½. Where Outgoing Partner's Relinquishment of Right to Apply on Firm Debts Is in Bad Faith or Would Work Preference.—

There is to be recognized a modification, in bankruptcy and insolvency law, to the general rule that the firm creditors' right to pursue former partnership assets into the hands of an individual purchasing partner, is merely derivative and such that it may be relinquished by the acts of the outgoing partners. This modification is that such relinquishment will not be valid to deprive the firm creditor of the right to pursue them where the relinquishment was made in bad faith or to effect a "preference" of individual creditors over firm creditors, "preference" in this connection referring not to the technical preference defined in § 60 of the bankruptcy law, but referring, rather, to the broader meaning of preference.

24. [1867] In re Johnson, Fed. Cas. 7,369.

Thus, the Bankruptcy Act itself, in § 5 (g) says that the court "may marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates so as to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates," the use of the word "preferences" in connection with "equitable distribution" seeming to indicate that the preferences here referred to are not the technical preferences defined in § 60 of the Bankruptcy Act.²⁵

In re Denning, 8 A. B. R. 133, 114 Fed. 219 (D. C. Mass.): "Moreover, § 5g of the Bankruptcy Act was intended to clear up the whole matter, and to permit the court to deal with conversions of this kind so as not only to prevent preferences in the technical meaning of that word, but also so as to secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates."

In re Terens, 23 A. B. R. 680, 175 Fed. 495 (D. C. Wis.): "It remains to consider and construe § 5g, which is in pari materiae, which throws much light on the amplitude of the equitable jurisdiction conferred upon the court. It allows proof of the partnership estate against the individual estate, and vice versa. It expressly suggests the doctrine of marshaling assets to prevent preferences and to secure the equitable distribution among the several estates. The preferences supposed to interfere with a just and equitable distribution may result from the action of partners calculated to convert partnership property into individual assets, thus giving undue advantage to individual creditors. Properly construed, this subdivision meets the very case we have in hand."

Thus, the question sifts down largely to one of good faith. If the transfer be in bad faith towards the firm creditors, it would not be effective to deprive them of their derivative right.

What will amount to bad faith toward firm creditors in this regard is not very clearly outlined. It has been held that a dissolution by insolvent partners, within the four months preceding bankruptcy, where such partners know they are insolvent and which is made to enable the individual creditors of one or both partners to get an advantage over the firm creditors, will be such bad faith as will bring the case under the rule.²⁶

Indeed, in many cases, under varying circumstances, transfers by one partner to another have been held to be mala fide, without proof of actual fraudulent intent.²⁷

However, where the outgoing partner has not relinquished his equity, no proof of bad faith is requisite on the part of the firm creditor, especially where the outgoing partner joins with the creditor in asking that firm assets be applied first to firm debts.²⁸

§ 2271. Where Sale Made to Enable Remaining Partner to Claim Exemptions.—Where the sale is made to enable the remaining partner to claim exemptions from the property, the sale has been held by some courts to be void and the fund formerly belonging to the partnership to be subject to the pursuit of the partnership creditors.²⁹

But the better rule would seem to be that, if the sale otherwise be bona fide, it would not be invalidated by the mere fact that it was made to enable the remaining partner to claim his exemptions.

Such, at any rate, would appear to be the logical result of an adherence to the rule enunciated ante, in § 2270½ and is the rule in similar situations, adopted in state court decisions.³⁰

29. In re Head & Smith, 7 A. B. R. 556, 114 Fed. 489 (D. C. Ark.): In this case the court said the transfer amounted to a "preference" to individual creditors. This is clearly wrong. A preference to be such must be to a creditor of the bankrupt, but such transfer as was made in this case does not operate to give any creditor of the bankrupt partnership a preference; its effect is to take away all property from all partnership creditors until the individual creditors of the remaining partner are satisfied.

It has been held, in one case, that any scheme or device resorted to by persons in contemplation of bankruptcy for the purpose of charging partnership assets with the individual liabilities of the partners, is violative of the provisions of the bankruptcy act, § 5 (g). Compare, In re Worth, 12 A. B. R. 566, 130 Fed. 927 (D. C. Ia.): In this case shortly before the adjudication of a partnership and its individual members, the firm was dissolved by mutual consent, one partner retaining its assets and assuming its liabilities. The court held that the assets were first liable in bankruptcy under § 5f, for his individual debts, and while this would be inequitable as to nonassenting firm creditors, they could not, at the same time, affirm the dissolution agreement in so far as it made the remaining partner an individual debtor of a firm creditor at dissolution, and disaffirm or repudiate it so far as it was a transfer of the firm assets, in consideration of the assumption of firm debts; that the nonassenting creditor must either affirm or disaffirm the transaction as a whole; the court further holding that in such case, where the receiver of the creditor bank surrendered all preferences he had under a chattel mortgage upon the stock of merchandise formerly belonging to the firm, and an assignment of account due it, given by the purchasing partner within the four months period, the proceeds of the assets of the firm and its individual members should be distributed as though no dissolution had taken place. The court finally says:

"It will be more equitable to hold that the relation of the creditors of the copartnership and of the individual members thereof to the partnership assets are not changed by this transaction of Oct. 16 and that the proceeds of the assets of the firm and its individual members should be distributed as though such transaction had not taken place."

Compare, In re Gillette, 5 A. B. R. 123, 104 Fed. 769 (D. C. N. Y.).

30. On the other hand there is strength to the reasoning that the transfer is not voidable, but that the former partnership property should be applied to the payment of partnership debts and be treated precisely as if still partnership property, so far as partnership creditors who have not assented to the assumption of the old firm debts by the continuing partner are concerned (precisely as in cases of the assignment of a partner's interest to a stranger), but as to all others it should be treated as the bankrupt's individual property. Compare, suggestively, obiter, Deaf & Dumb Institute v. Crockett, 17 A. B. R. 233, 117 App. Div. N. Y. 269.

And that such remaining partner of § 2272. Retiring Partner, Surety for Remaining Partner, Entitled to Subrogation to Debts He Pays.—Such retiring partner becomes surety for the remaining partner and is entitled to subrogation to such debts as he is compelled to pay.

In re Dillon, 4 A. B. R. 63, 100 Fed. 627 (D. C. Mass.): "In equity, the relation of McGuire to Dillon concerning the debts of the old firm was that of surety. By this contract with McGuire, Dillon made himself primarily responsible for the payment of the firm debts. As regards Claflin, McGuire remained primarily liable, together with Dillon; but, as regards Dillon, McGuire was only a surety. That the relation between the two former partners is that of principal and surety is recognized in bankruptcy. * * * As to the bankrupt's estate, therefore, McGuire stands as a surety who has paid the debt of his bankrupt principal subsequently to the adjudication."

Compare, to same effect, In re Carmichael, 2 A. B. R. 815, 96 Fed. 594 (D. C. Iowa): "By the purchases made by him of the judgments entered against the firm of which he was a member, he discharged the liability of the firm to the judgment creditors, but became a creditor of his copartners for their respective shares of the money by him advanced in the purchase and discharge of these judgments, and the mere fact that he procured assignments in writing to himself of the judgments in question does not change his position with respect to his copartners."

But the claim of a solvent partner arising from his liquidation of the firm business, is not a valid debt against the estate of the bankrupt partner, who, at the time of adjudication, was not indebted either to the firm nor to the liquidating partner.³²

§ 2273. But Retiring Partner's Claim for Purchase Price of Share, Not to Compete with Firm Creditors in Individual Estate of Remaining Partner.—But the retiring partner's claim for the purchase price of his partnership interest should not share in the old firm assets;³³ nor in the individual assets of the remaining partner, until after the firm creditors have been satisfied; for he should not be permitted to compete with his own creditors.³⁴

Retiring Partner's Mortgage on Insolvent Firm Assets Given within Four Months for Unpaid Purchase Price of Share, Preference in Firm Bankruptcy.—A mortgage given on partnership assets within the four months of the partnership bankruptcy to secure a retiring partner for the unpaid purchase price of his share is a partnership preference, see ante, § 2268½.

bankrupt partner has assumed the liabilities and taken the assets of the partnership, it is a question whether a transfer that would have been a preference were the firm in bankruptcy will be a preference in the individual bankruptcy of the partner. It has been held that the effect of a preference by a firm cannot thus be avoided by the conversion of the firm assets into individual assets and the bankruptcy of the remaining partner.³⁵

But the better rule would seem to be that creditors of the firm, in order to preserve their rights against a firm preference, should file a petition in bankruptcy against the firm, and assert the lien of partnership debts on the old firm assets.

A secret agreement whereby, on the dissolution of a partnership, one of the partners, who continued the partnership business, was to dedicate certain book accounts to the payment of specific firm obligations, will not be enforced in bankruptcy where there was no actual transfer or appropriation of the accounts.³⁶

§ 2275. Second, Where One Partner of Insolvent Partnership Sells Out to Other and Himself Becomes Bankrupt.—Where one partner of an insolvent partnership sells out to the other and later himself becomes bankrupt, such sale is valid, and the former partnership assets cannot be administered in bankruptcy, without the other partner's consent.³⁷

And the sale is valid, even though the sum realized is used in paying off some of the bankrupt's own creditors; and the remaining partner is entitled to the partnership assets, although the bankrupt was still in their actual custody as manager for the purchaser.³⁸

§ 2276. Third, Where Partnership Interest Transferred to Third Person, Partner Becoming Bankrupt.—Third, where partnership interests are transferred to third persons, and either or both partners become bankrupt, the transfer is to be treated as a transfer by an individual of his individual assets.

The rights of firm creditors are not impaired. The transfer is of a share in merely the surplus after payment of firm debts;³⁹ and follows the rules laid down in the preceding paragraphs.

DIVISION 6.

SUBROGATION TO RIGHTS OF VARIOUS PARTIES IN THE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS.

SUBDIVISION "A."

SUBROGATION BY ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS AFTER BANKRUPTCY.

§ 2277. Subrogation by Assignment of Claims after Bankruptcy.—The subject of the assignment of claims in accordance with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act and the General Orders in Bankruptcy, has been previously discussed.⁴⁰

SUBDIVISION "B."

EQUITABLE SUBROGATION UNDER ORDINARY RULES.

§ 2278. Subrogation by Agreement with Bankrupt or Creditor.—Where one pays a debt of the bankrupt with an understanding, made either with the bankrupt or the creditor, that he shall be subrogated to the creditor's claim, he will be so subrogated in bankruptcy.⁴¹

Thus, one furnishing the bankrupt money to pay a secured note, at the bankrupt's request, and under promise to turn over the notes paid thereby, is entitled to subrogation.⁴² Also, an arrangement with a corporation which is taking over the bankrupt's assets and business, and which is anxious to retain a certain agent's favor, to forward to the agent the remainder of certain goods contracted for with the bankrupt, with the understanding that the agent's claim should be presented against the bankrupt and the dividend be turned over to the purchasing company, amounts to a purchase or agreement for subrogation and not to a payment, although the words used in the forwarding were "in liquidation" of the agent's claim.⁴³ But the furnishing of money to a bankrupt corporation to pay its pay roll, under an agreement with the corporation that the pay roll should be assigned, but where the pay roll was not actually assigned, has been held, but improperly, not to entitle the person so advancing to an equitable subrogation to the pay roll.⁴⁴ It would seem that the advancement under the agreement created the equity of subrogation, whether the assignment was actually carried out or not, so long as there was no waiver. The taking of workmen's pay checks in part payment of provisions furnished to them, no agreement for assignment existing but a mere supposition being indulged in between the storekeeper and the bankrupt that as matter of law the storekeeper would stand in the shoes of the workmen, was held to be no assignment and not to entitle the storekeeper to subrogation.⁴⁵

Although a pledge, given to secure money used by the bankrupt to pay the purchase price of manufactured goods and relieve the goods from the lien of the artisan upon them, may have been itself made without authority, yet the person advancing the money by agreement with the bankrupt is entitled to subrogation to the artisan's lien, and the trustee takes the property subject to such right of subrogation.⁴⁷

Where the bankrupts were loggers and failed to pay their workmen, and the owners of the logs paid off the workmen's liens to prevent threatened foreclosure and sale, and the time checks representing each man's claim were turned over to the owners of the logs upon such payment, the transaction entitled the owners of the logs to subrogation to the workmen's liens, even if the transaction did not constitute an out and out assignment.⁴⁸

§ 2279. Whether Subrogation to Workmen's Priority Claims to Compete with Workmen's Own Later Claims.—But it has been held that subrogation to workmen's priority claims will not be permitted to take precedence over workmen's own later priority claims, where the understanding was not with the workmen but solely with the bankrupt.

Browder & Co. v. Hill, 14 A. B. R. 619, 136 Fed. 821 (C. C. A. Tenn.): "Appellants do not claim in their petition or assignment of error or briefs that there has been any assignment of the labor claims pro tanto by consent or knowledge of the laborers themselves.

"In the absence of evidence that the owners of such lien claims intended to sell and agreed that the lien should be kept alive for the benefit of the purchaser, payment and not an assignment will be presumed. Fenner v. F. L. & T. Co., 90 Fed. 349.

"There is therefore no foundation for any claim that appellants are assignees of the claims or lien in behalf of labor claims under any agreement, express or implied, with the creditors themselves.

"What they do claim is, that there existed an express agreement with the debtor, the Furnace Company, that such claims when paid off by them 'should stand against the Furnace Company in the same attitude as if held by the original wage earners.'

"The mere fact that one pays off a debt at the instance of the debtor or lends money to pay off such debt does not entitle him to subrogation to the liens of the creditors so paid off. McDonald, Shea & Co. v. Railroad, 93 Tenn. 281; Wood v. Guarantee Trust Co., 128 U. S. 416; Morgan, etc., v. Texas Cent. R. Co., 137 U. is paid off. But nothing short of an express agreement to that effect will move a court of equity in behalf of such a creditor.

"A mere understanding upon the part of such a third person, under no obligations to pay the debt, that he, by such payment, will be subrogated to the liens of the creditor is not enough. Sheldon on Subrogation, §§ 243, 248, 250; 27 Amer. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 257; Receivers of N. J. Ry. Co. v. Wortendyke, 27 N. J. Eq. 658, overruling Coe v. N. J. Ry. Co., 27 N. J. "Subrogation by agreement with the debtor alone to the equities and liens of a creditor whose debt is paid off by one under no obligation, is an equitable doctrine which comes from the civil law and is enforced only when the agreement creates equitable rights against the debtor which will not impair or overthrow equitable rights of the creditor or of innocent third persons.

"When therefore subrogation depends wholly upon an agreement with the debtor the rights of the creditor to the remainder of his debt must not be prejudiced. Sheldon on Subrogation, § 248 and §§ 70 and 127; 27 Am. & Ency. (2nd ed.), 257; Bissett v. Gathone, 67 Mo. App. 23, 26; Stuckman v. Roose, 147 Ind. 402; Smith v. Morrison, 29 S. W. 1116; Fievel v. Zuber, 67 Tex. 279.

"The evidence of a direct agreement between Browder & Co. and the Furnace Company that the lien in behalf of laborers should be kept alive, and appellant substituted thereto is not so clear and satisfactory as to justify a reversal of the finding against such an agreement by the referee and district judge.

"That both parties supposed that Browder & Co. would stand precisely in the shoes of the laborers who received orders on them for goods simply because the orders were given as credits upon current wages is not enough. It may have been of some convenience to the workmen to receive such orders in advance of one of the regular pay days, but it was a convenience for which they doubtless more than paid, for it appears that if they insisted upon money instead of goods a discount of from 15 to 25 per cent. was exacted. Neither was the scheme without profit to the debtor for the arrangement was that the Furnace Company should give credit for these orders on Browder & Co. only to the extent of 95 per cent. of their face value.

"So, too, if it did not suit the convenience of the Furnace Company to pay these orders when the wages of the men became due an ordinary promissory note was given in settlement or a mere credit was given upon the books for the aggregate of the orders presented. All of these circumstances tend to indicate that the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor existed and that the parties acted upon the erroneous idea that because the orders given were in partial payment of wages that the debt thus created would stand in the shoes of the debt paid off.

"Neither would be justified in reversing the order denying subrogation when it is evident that subrogation will prejudice the rights of the very laborers whose claims were only partially paid off by the goods supplied them upon the employer's order.

"The distinct stipulation is that the assets of the bankrupt, after paying expenses, will not pay labor claims proper in full if this substitution is allowed.

"Being a pure equity, subrogation by agreement with the debtor alone will not be accorded if it impair the security of the creditor for the remainder of his debt or prejudice innocent third parties having equities of equal rank."

§ 2280. Subrogation of Sureties for Bankrupt to Creditors' Rights and of Creditors to Indemnity Given Sureties.—Likewise, sureties for the bankrupt are entitled to subrogation, pro tanto, to the creditors' rights and indemnities; and creditors, on their part, are entitled to subrogation to indemnity given sureties for the debt.

Thus, a retiring partner is subrogated to the claim of a creditor which he has been compelled to pay;⁴⁹ and the trustee of one bankrupt partner may prove against the individual estate of the other partner the claim of an individual creditor of the other partner for which he was surety and which he has paid.⁵⁰ Creditors have right of subrogation to the indemnity given by the debtor to the surety.⁵¹

And of course a surety paying the bankrupt's debt is entitled to subrogation, pro tanto, to the creditor's claim and rights.⁵²

Thus a surety, upon payment, after bankruptcy, of the bankrupt's debt, may be subrogated to a valid attachment lien held by the creditor.

Morgan v. Huntley, 17 A. B. R. 901, 149 Fed. 797 (D. C. Vt.): "In this country, the whole current of authorities is that payment of a debt by a surety or endorser is considered to operate as an assignment of it, and the equity of subrogation has received a liberal and broad construction, dependent, however, upon the preliminary question of fact whether the payment was intended as a purchase or an extinguishment of the debt. If the former, the surety signer, as the purchaser, may be subrogated to all the rights of the original creditor."

Likewise, a surety paying a claim after the bankruptcy may be subrogated to the claimant's right to rescind the sale and reclaim the property.

Sessler v. Paducah Distilleries Co., 21 A. B. R. 723, 168 Fed. 44 (C. C. A. La.): "* * * it is also contended that, as Menard Bros. took no express subrogation at the time of payment, they acquired no rights of the original creditor to rescind the sale. There may be some doubt as to whether any subrogation took place by contract; but as Menard Bros. were sureties of David Brunner [the bankrupt], and paid the debt, we think they are legally subrogated under the Louisiana Code. * * * We have no doubt about the right of a surety to prosecute his claim in bankruptcy in the name of the principal creditor, when subrogation takes place after proof of debt."

And a wife, who has mortgaged her separate property for her husband's debt, will be subrogated to the creditor's claim on payment thereof.⁵³ Likewise, sureties paying their principals' debts in whole or in part are subrogated pro tanto, to the creditors' claims and right in the dividends.⁵⁴

Again, children who have surrendered to their father insurance policies for specific purposes, have been held subrogated, as sureties, where the proceeds of the policies have been misapplied to the extinguishment of liens.⁵⁵

§ 2281. Subrogation of Interested Party, Paying to Preserve Assets.—Where one, not a volunteer but interested in the bankrupt's business or in the property involved, pays a claim in order to preserve or protect the business or property, the claim is not necessarily extinguished, but he may be subrogated to the rights of the claimant.

Thus, a remainderman furnishing money to pay taxes to a bankrupt life tenant, who has been collecting rents after the bankruptcy, the trustees in bankruptcy having successively resigned, is entitled to reimbursement out of the bankrupt estate.⁵⁶

And the doctrine of subrogation will be applied whenever a person, not a mere volunteer, pays a debt or demand, which, in equity and good conscience, should have been satisfied by another.⁵⁷

This doctrine has been applied in favor of a partner who had sold out but had failed to notify creditors of the dissolution of the firm, and who was subsequently jointly sued on a debt contracted by the remaining partner after the dissolution, and who had left security with the sheriff to pay the execution in case the remaining partner could not be made to pay it; the court holding the judgment was not "paid," though originally marked so by the sheriff, but was still alive as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the remaining partner.⁵⁸

Thus, again, where the owners of logs paid off workmen's liens, in order to prevent foreclosure, the employers of the workmen having become bankrupt, the log owners were held entitled to subrogation to the workmen's liens.⁵⁹

So, an assignee for the benefit of creditors, who has redeemed a pledge, will be entitled to a claim against the estate for the amount advanced by him.⁶⁰

§ 2282. Mere Volunteers Not Entitled to Subrogation.—But a mere volunteer, not interested in the property involved nor acting in pursuance of an agreement for subrogation, is not entitled to subrogation.

Thus, as to the purchaser of a tax title, where a city, after filing a claim for unpaid taxes upon the real estate of a bankrupt, sold under mortgage foreclosure in the state court free of all taxes (the state court refusing to order the taxes paid from the proceeds because the Bankruptcy Act was thought to require priority of payment thereof from the personal estate of the bankrupt) sells the property for the unpaid taxes as provided by statute, the purchaser at the tax sale was held not to be entitled to subrogation to the city's right of priority of payment from the bankrupt estate.

In re Brinker, 12 A. B. R. 125, 128 Fed. 634 (D. C. N. Y.): "Nor does the principal of the right of equitable subrogation have application here. * * * The purchasers of the tax certificates were not obliged to bid in the property at the tax sale in order to protect themselves. They were not mortgagees or judgment creditors, or even creditors, of the bankrupt. They are third parties to the transaction, pure and simple, and accordingly cannot invoke the aid of the doctrine of subrogation."

Thus, also, the paying of a bankrupt corporation's pay roll, but with no understanding for subrogation, either with the corporation or the workmen, and without present pecuniary interest, does not entitle to subrogation.⁶¹

§ 2283. No Subrogation of Trustee to Liens on Exempt Property Paid Off on Eve of Bankruptcy.—No right of subrogation to liens on exempt property paid off by the bankrupt on the eve of bankruptcy exists in favor of the trustee.⁶²

DIVISION 7.

PROCEDURE ON DISTRIBUTION.

§ 2284. Distribution to Be Based on Order of Court.—The trustee should make no distribution without first obtaining an order of the court. Where there are partnership and individual assets and liabilities for administration, the marshaling of the estates is to be based upon an order of the court. Likewise, priority claims are not to be paid until allowed and ordered paid by the court. Dividends are not to be paid until declared and ordered paid by the court.

There seems to be no set form of procedure for bringing about these orders of distribution. Undoubtedly, a formal motion would be proper, although in practice it is not customary. Usually the order marshaling the estates, where partnership and individual estates are being administered in one bankruptcy, and the order declaring a dividend, are made upon oral motion, generally at the coming on of the hearing upon the trustee's report.

SUBDIVISION "A."

TRUSTEE'S REPORTS AND MEETINGS OF CREDITORS TO CONSIDER THEM.

§ 2285. Trustees' Reports.—The first step in practice towards the distribution of the assets is the filing by the trustee of one of the reports required by the statute and Supreme Court's General Orders to be filed by him from time to time as part of his duties.

It is one of the statutory duties of the trustee to report to the court, in writing, the condition of the estate and the amount of money on hand, and such other details as may be required by the court, within the first month after his appointment and every two months thereafter, unless otherwise ordered by the court.⁶³

§ 2286. Form of Trustee's Reports.—The form of trustee's report prescribed by the Supreme Court, known as Official Form No. 49, should be followed with such alterations as may be necessary to suit the particular case.⁶⁴

This form, like the other prescribed forms, is merely directory and need not be followed where the facts of the case require variation from them.⁶⁵

And here it might properly be remarked that these official forms, while indicative of the supreme court's interpretations of the statutory provisions and thus valuable in aiding in the interpreting of the statute, are not to be absolutely followed, in all events, but may be altered to suit the circumstances of each case. Indeed, the last order of the Supreme Court's General Orders in Bankruptcy, Order No. 38 itself, expressly states that:

"The several forms annexed to the General Orders shall be observed and used, with such alterations as may be necessary to suit the circumstances of any particular case."

In practice the trustee does not attempt to follow the prescribed form, No. 49, in making his reports and particularly in making the report that is preliminary to a distribution of the assets.⁶⁶

The report made at this stage of the proceedings usually states the amount of money on hand; the amount still likely to come in; the expenses incurred thus far in the administration of the estate and those that are likely to be incurred therein in the future; the costs of the court's officers, their fees, expenses and commissions; the disbursements already ordered by the court; the several amounts claimed by creditors who claim to have priority of payment out of the fund, and the several amounts claimed by general creditors who are without priority; the report usually ending or being accompanied with a request that the court allow the trustee his expenses, tax the fees and costs and commissions, determine the validity and priority of claims and order them paid in the order of their priority, and finally declare a dividend to creditors.

§ 2287. Review of Order Approving Trustee's Report and Allowing Expenses and Commissions.—The order approving the trustee's report, allowing expenses and commissions and declaring a dividend may be reviewed.⁶⁷

§ 2288. If Meeting Called to Consider Report, Ten Days Notice Requisite.—If a meeting of creditors is called to consider the report, ten days notice by mail must be given to all creditors, unless they have waived the notice in writing.⁶⁸

§ 2289. Also, if Dividend to Be Declared.—If a dividend is to be declared, ten days notice thereof likewise must be given.⁶⁹

§ 2290. Contents of Notice.—The notice need not state the items of expenses or the particular amounts of the various applications for allowance of attorneys' fees, etc., to be considered, but it is good practice to state in the notice as much of this kind of information as is feasible, for in this way creditors are kept informed of the progress of the estate, and oftentimes a wholesome corrective influence is exercised against exorbitant charges and extravagant allowances for attorneys' fees and other expenses.

§ 2291. Auditing of Accounts.—It is the duty of the referee in charge to audit the accounts of the trustee,⁷⁰ also that of the receiver.⁷¹ And it is the referee's duty to closely scrutinize the accounts, whether exceptions are filed or not.⁷²

§ 2292. At Time and Place Set, Report to Be Passed on, Expenses Allowed, Dividends Declared and Distribution Ordered.—At the time and place set in the notice, it is usual to approve or disapprove the report, in whole or in part, allow the expenses of the officers

DIVISION 1.

CLOSING OF ESTATES—FINAL MEETING.

§ 2295. Final Report and Final Meeting.—If no appeal or error proceedings are pending, the final dividend is declared, the trustee's final report filed, the final meeting of creditors held and the estate closed and the trustee discharged of his trust.¹

1. A final settlement of the bankrupt's estate will not be ordered until a full and complete record of the proceedings is made, showing that they have been conducted in accordance with the requirements of the statute and the General Orders of the Supreme Court and the district court rules, and a balance sheet is presented which can be understood and from which the bankrupt and his creditors can see what has been done with their money. In re Carr, 8 A. B. R. 635, 116 Fed. 556 (D. C. N. Car.).

It has been held, that a final dividend may be declared at a final meeting. See ante, § 2211.

§ 2296. Ten Days Notice of Final Report and Final Meeting.—Ten days notice by mail must be given of the final meeting of creditors, to all creditors except those who have waived notice in writing.²

§ 2297. Trustee's Duty to File Final Report.—It is the trustee's duty to lay before the final meeting of the creditors a detailed statement of the administration of the estate, and to make the final report and file the final account with the referee fifteen days before the day fixed for the final meeting of the creditors.³

And the trustee may be in contempt for failure to obey an order requiring him to file a final account.⁴

§ 2298. Estate Closed by Order Approving Trustee's Report and Discharging Trustee from His Trust.—Upon approval of the final account and report the trustee is discharged of his trust and the estate is closed, an order to this effect being entered.⁵

It is by the holding of such final meeting and the entry of such order of approval that the closing of the estate is technically effected.⁶

Clark v. Pidcock, 12 A. B. R. 315, 129 Fed. 745 (C. C. A. N. J.): "The estate, however, was not technically closed because there was no final meeting of creditors or discharge of a trustee upon the settlement of his accounts."

§ 2299. Certifying to Referee's Record and Transmitting to District Clerk.—The referee thereupon certifies to his record and transmits it to the district clerk, along with all the files; which thereafter are filed and remain the record and files of the bankruptcy court in that case.⁷

DIVISION 2.

REOPENING OF ESTATES ONCE CLOSED.

§ 2300. Jurisdiction to Reopen Estates.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to reopen estates once closed, whenever it appears they tered after ten days notice by mail to all creditors and in default of objections from any of them, nevertheless the district court has power to vacate the order. Brown v. Persons, 10 A. B. R. 416 (C. C. A. N. J.).

have not been fully administered.⁸

§ 2301. Only One Ground for Reopening—Lack of Full Administration.—And there is only the one ground for reopening an estate, namely, that it has not been fully administered.

In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 354, 127 Fed. 248 (D. C. Ky.): "The power to reopen a case is given in one contingency only, namely, when it appears that the case was closed before being fully administered."

§ 2302. Duty of Court to Reopen on Proper Showing.—And it is the duty of the court to reopen estates once closed, whenever sufficient proof is made that they have not been fully administered.⁹

§ 2303. But Reopening, Matter of Sound Discretion.—It rests within the sound discretion of the court, in view of all the circumstances, to reopen a case because of the estate not being fully administered.¹⁰

Simply that the bankrupt has been denied a discharge, and creditors may pursue him on old debts, will not cause the refusal of an application to reopen the estate. The creditors may pursue the assets through the machinery of the bankruptcy court if they so desire.¹¹ And no reopening will be granted on application of the bankrupt eighteen months after his discharge, where no assets exist and the only object is to make a creditor a party to attempt to bar him by the discharge.¹²

§ 2304. What Is Lack of "Full" Administration.—It has been held that the existence of assets unadministered must be shown;¹³ but probably there may be other lack of "full administration" that might authorize a reopening.¹⁴

§ 2305. No Time Limited for Application to Reopen.—No time is fixed by statute within which the reopening must be applied for or made.¹⁵

15. In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 354, 127 Fed. 248 (D. C. Ky.). Not directly in point but inferentially, Clarke v. Pidcock, 12 A. B. R. 309 (C. C. A. N. J.): "We do not see that any lapse of time, § 2306. But Must Be within Reasonable Time: Laches Will Bar.—The application for the reopening must be made within a reasonable time; ¹⁶ and laches will bar the right.

In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 248 (D. C. Ky.): “Something is doubtless left to the sound discretion of the court upon a consideration of all the circumstances surrounding each case. It would not be supposed that the court would as readily reopen a case where the creditors knew all the facts and slept on their rights as where the concealment of assets was not only artful but was unknown to the creditors, and not discovered by them for a long period. I take the proper rule to be that a fairly reasonable time, under all the circumstances of a case, should be allowed, and that if the parties who had full knowledge delayed an unreasonable time to seek to reopen a case, their laches would authorize the court to refuse to do so. But neither the statute nor judicial discretion dictates any hard and fast rule in the premises.”

Each case must be decided on its own facts.¹⁷ Thus, a case will not be reopened on the application of a creditor in order to let him come in and contest the bankrupt's claim to exemptions, where such creditor has been duly scheduled and has had due notice of the proceedings.¹⁸

Likewise, seven years after a bankrupt has been granted a discharge the proceedings in bankruptcy will not be re-opened for alleged fraudulent concealment of assets, upon the petition of an assignee of a judgment, verified only on information and belief, which fails to show what property was surrendered by the bankrupt or what representations were made in his schedules as to property surrendered by him or that any creditor was deceived as to the facts or when the alleged fraud was discovered.¹⁹

But, in a case where the referee had never even called a meeting of creditors in the original bankruptcy, and no trustee had ever been appointed, reopening was permitted after the lapse of nearly ten years.²⁰

§ 2307. Application Not a “Suit” within § 11 (d) Limiting “Suits” to Two Years.—The application to reopen a case, upon the ground that the proceedings were closed before the estate was fully administered, is not a “suit” within the meaning of § 11 (d), providing that suits shall not be brought by or against a trustee subsequent to two years after the estate is closed.²¹ or at all events, the time elapsed in the present case, can have the effect of taking away this discretion to appoint a trustee, conferred by the section quoted upon a court of bankruptcy.”

Impliedly (where ten years had elapsed), In re Pierson, 23 A. B. R. 58, 174 Fed. 160 (D. C. N. Y.). But in this case the facts show that the referee had never called a meeting of creditors in the original bankruptcy.

§ 2308. Procedure: Application to Be to Judge.—Reopening is accomplished by an application to the district judge, who, if he approves the application, enters an order reopening the case and re-referring the case to a referee; who thereupon calls a new meeting of creditors for the election of a new trustee, and closes the estate again in the regular manner, when it has been finally fully administered.²²

§ 2309. No Formality Requisite in Application.—No particular formality is necessary in the application.²³

§ 2310. But Not to Be Indefinite: Should Be Verified and Show Assets Unadministered or Other Lack.—But the application should not be indefinite, and it should be supported by affidavit, and it should show assets unadministered.

In re Newton, 6 A. B. R. 52, 107 Fed. 429 (C. C. A. Mo.): "We do not wish to be understood as holding that the petition to reopen an estate once closed must be of any formal or technical character. Such is not necessary, and in the practical administration of the Bankruptcy Act is not advisable, but such petition must be either in itself, or in connection with supporting affidavits, of such persuasive character as to reasonably satisfy the court of the requisite jurisdictional fact, namely, that there are some assets belonging to the bankrupt which have not been administered. We are of opinion that the petition in this case, if treated as a proceeding to reopen the estate, was vitally defective, in that it failed to state any substantial or definite facts from which the court could reasonably find that there were assets to be administered."

Or, if not assets unadministered, then some other lack of due administration.²⁴

§ 2311. Who May Apply: Only Creditors Who Have Proved or May Prove Claims, Competent.—Only creditors who have proved, or are still entitled to prove, their claims may have the estate reopened. Thus, a former trustee is not a competent party;²⁵ nor is a creditor who did not prove his claim within the year after the adjudication;²⁶ but a creditor who filed his proof of claim within the year, although the estate was closed, is a competent party.²⁷ And the assignee of a claim that was duly proved

26. In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 246 (D. C. Ky.); In re Meyer, 25 A. B. R. 44, 181 Fed. 904 (D. C. Ore.).

Contra, where no claims were originally filed, In re Pierson, 23 A. B. R. 58, 174 Fed. 160 (D. C. N. Y.). But this contra doctrine is not to be approved. The facts in the case, however, seem to disclose great laxity, if not irregularity, on the part of the referee in the original bankruptcy—he did not even call a meeting of creditors!

27. In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 246 (D. C. Ky.), where the creditor filed his claim in the clerk's office within the year, the estate before the referee having been already closed.

within the year is a competent party, although the claim was not assigned to him until more than a year after the estate had been closed.²⁸

§ 2312. Who May Oppose Reopening.—It is questionable whether a bankrupt is competent to oppose the reopening of a case.

In re Paine, 11 A. B. R. 354, 127 Fed. 246 (D. C. Ky.): "Indeed, if a bankrupt has honestly surrendered all his assets to the trustee, he seems to have no interest in the question of reopening the case."

§ 2213. Whether Third Party Who Has Interests in Property Competent.—It does not appear to have been decided whether a third party who has an interest in the property is competent, either to apply for reopening or to oppose the reopening of an estate.

§ 2314. Trustee Elected Anew and Administration to Proceed in Usual Manner.—Upon the reopening of the estate a trustee must be elected, the old trusteeship not being revived by the reopening. And the court may not appoint a trustee unless the creditors have first been given an opportunity to do so and have failed to make choice.²⁹

In re Newton, 6 A. B. R. 54, 107 Fed. 429 (C. C. A. Mo.): "This section, in our opinion, confers upon the creditors of the estate the same authority and power with respect to the appointment of a trustee, after an estate once closed has been, by order of court, reopened, as is conferred upon them at the first meeting held after the adjudication."

The reopening of the estate effects no more than the putting of the estate back into process of administration. Steps must be taken, just as if the estate had never been closed; thus, the reopening of the estate on the ground of an alleged fraudulent conveyance is not in and of itself an authority to bring suit to set the conveyance aside.³⁰

Amendment of the schedules may be permitted to claim exemptions out of newly-discovered assets, provided the bankrupt has not been acting in bad faith.³¹

quent proceedings, so far as unsecured creditors are concerned, can only rebound to the benefit of those who have filed their proofs of claim within the year after the adjudication.³²

32. In re Shaffer, 4 A. B. R. 728, 104 Fed. 431 (D. C. N. Car.).

Contra, where no claims were originally filed and no trustee originally appointed, In re Pierson, 23 A. B. R. 58, 174 Fed. 160 (D. C. N. Y.); but this doctrine is doubtful. The recounting, however, of the omission of the ordinary steps of the calling of a meeting of creditors, of the appointment of a trustee, etc., displays such a laxity of duty on the part of the bankruptcy referee as to imply an abandonment of the original bankruptcy.

Bankrupt's Former Attorney, Employed by Trustee to Collect Old Judgment Obtained before Bankruptcy, No Lien for Fees Earned before Bankruptcy.—Where the bankrupt's attorney was employed by the trustee, on reopening the estate, to collect a claim on a judgment which the attorney had obtained previous to the bankruptcy, the attorney having presented no claim for attorney's fees for getting the judgment, there will be no lien on the amount recovered for the services rendered previous to the bankruptcy, the claim therefore having been discharged. In re Blum, 28 A.
