As far as any new ideas we have in respect of rehabilitation, we are constantly trying to do what we can to get the inmate, the releasee, back into society, to get that first step back into society, which is a most difficult one, because that is when they face some of their worst problems. You will find many of them while they are in the institution are well behaved, well motivated. They have the best of intentions, but when they get out many of them get back into the same milieu and get into difficulties again. Our latest attempt at bringing in something new is community involvement, which I think bears some relationship to what the hon. member mentioned. We feel that community involvement and community support is most important in any correctional programme.

We do have presently a great deal of such involvement. However, in order to strengthen the impact of the work we are doing now, I have recently appointed a committee to look into the matter of citizen participation and to explore ways in which correctional volunteers may complement the work of our department. As a matter of fact, I am pleased to advise the hon. members of this House that the following have agreed to serve on this committee:

Miss Phyllis Haslam, executive-director of the Elizabeth Fry Society of Ontario;

Lt. Col. W. C. Poulton, Salvation Army;

Mr. A. M. Kirkpatrick, executive-director of the John Howard Society of Ontario;

Mr. Harold King, of the Harold King Farm;

Father Sidney G. West, director of the Anglican correctional chaplaincy, diocese of Toronto.

The terms of reference—I do not have them here—but generally speaking the committee are going to look into the whole matter of community involvement as we have it today; look into the matter of the people, some well-intentioned, some not so well-intentioned, who want to get into this work; see that they are properly directed, that their desires to help are channelled into the proper sources; and see if we can expand the community involvement so, in fact, the releasee's opportunity to become readjusted into the community has a greater chance of success.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I would pursue this a little bit further, just to clarify. I am thinking of members of A.A. for example. Most of them do not hide the fact that they are members of Alcoholics Anonymous, or that they have led a sort of wayward life, that they have been the victims of a certain disease and that they have been picked up out of the gutters. Many of them go around telling their story in all humility. It is the one thing, this honesty, this truth, with themselves and with society that helps them to walk the straight and narrow.

Today the policy, I believe, is to tell adopted children just as soon as they are old enough that they have been adopted and to be proud of that fact. If a person has been an offender against society and he has served his time, he comes out of there to greet the world. If he thinks he is greeting a world that is not going to give him a fair break, you know his chances are pretty slim. There are a lot who have been able to rehabilitate themselves.

But those are great people; they are very great people. I think in many cases it has been a lot harder on them than it should have been because the truth of the matter is that notoriety is a far greater punishment than anything any court in this country is going to deal out to a man. I think that something has got to be done to start changing this attitude in society. I think we live in an age of truth and of straightforwardness. I think this would help the prisoner to know that it is not being done in a secretive way but in a wide open way. He has done a good thing—he has served his time, he is coming back into society, and he is going to get the fair benefit of the doubt. Anybody who does not give it to him, in my books, becomes a criminal.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 402—the hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, earlier this evening I was discussing persons convicted of crimes where they were obviously mentally incapacitated. I was trying to get down to the point of whether or not some were sex offenders at the time. I made the mistake of mentioning parole and the Chairman cut me off.

What I would like to know is this. First of all the length of term that he serves—for most of this term there is really no rehabilitation work done at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you talking about sex deviates?

Mr. Deans: Yes, in fact just try to clear this up for my own benefit, for most of the term there is generally no rehabilitation effort undertaken on his behalf, psychiatric-wise.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Except for the pedophile.

Mr. Deans: Yes, but for the last 5 or 6 months there is some psychiatric effort made.

Since it is admitted, I believe, that he is suffering from some mental impairment of some kind—it is maybe not sufficient to have him put in a mental institution but certainly sufficient to keep him out of society and require some medical assistance—the period he spends in jail is for the purpose not so much of punishing him, because you cannot punish someone for something that they are doing without any real will of their own, you are actually holding him there in order to determine what kind of assistance you might give him.

I am curious to know whether you have made any representation to the Attorney General, for example, to alter the sentencing structure so that they might spend only that period in confinement that is necessary to determine what kind of treatment they can get and to get the treatment underway for, say, the 6-month or 9-month period. Then from there the remainder of the sentence might be served as a probationary, or as I mentioned before, on a parole basis. It may be a much longer sentence over-all than the one that they presently are serving in numbers of years, but the last 60 per cent of the sentence may well be served out of prison on parole or on probation, if you want to call it that, and under psychiatric observation so that they have to report and take proper training and treatment. Have you made any representations along that line at all?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are doing that with the parole board now in many cases. It is a question of how far this can be extended. Actually we would like, as I mentioned earlier, to have pedophiles brought out immediately instead of waiting for the last six months—there just is not room for them, that is all. The same as there is no room for the homosexual. That is why they are kept at Millbrook.

I think this will resolve itself as we move into the clinics and the clinics are enlarged. The hon. member's idea is quite sound and it is something that, while we are doing it to some extent now, I think, is very worthy of extension.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402—the hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, we are still on the subject of parole. To obtain the release of a prisoner on parole is one aspect but perhaps not necessarily the most important aspect. I think what is important is creating an environment on the outside or modifying the environment on the outside to make it as easy as possible for the inmate to fit back or adjust himself to that environment. I think that too many former inmates go wrong again because society is not quite as ready to accept them as we would and as the hon. member for Port Arthur would.

Too many of them find that, regardless of how well they have reformed and rehabilitated themselves, they reach a certain point beyond which they can go no further in advancing their careers on the outside. And that point is when they reach such a position in their trade that they have to be bonded. That is when they can either go no further or they lose their job because their employer finds out for the first time that they have a record. I think this is a disgraceful situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will permit me at this stage, because we discussed this earlier today. If the man, if the releasee, is working with our after-care officer, there would be no need for him to withhold this information from his prospective employer. Because our after-care officer will explain this, will interview the prospective employer and if the prospective employer requires a bond, we will help him get a bond; we have done this in many cases. So this is not quite the problem some people say it is, although it is still a problem. The problem is—and I should have explained this earlier—because there was a confusion here—as a matter of fact the hon. member for High Park at the time he was referring to the bond was referring to a man who had received a fidelity bond. Our people got him a fidelity bond, even though he had been out of the care of our department, I think it was for two years. In the particular case the hon. member mentioned our after-care officer got him a fidelity bond, but he then applied to a firm which had a blanket bond and that firm refused to take him in because they would not cover him under the blanket bond. And it was at that stage that he went—

Mr. Shulman: The bonding company refused?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, the bonding company, presumably because the man having a bond already—I wonder whether in fact the bonding company which had a blanket bond with that employer really did refuse the man, because I did not see that they would run any risk. The man had a fidelity bond anyway.

Mr. Shulman: The fidelity bond was only for $3,000, the company required $100,000.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Required $100,000? That is a little different. The point I was making with the hon. member was that it is not necessary for him to tell a lie if he is working with our after-care people. They will go with him, they will attempt to discuss the matter with the employer. And many employers are very considerate when it is handled in this fashion. And many bonds are able to be obtained in this fashion if the man goes to our after-care people.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to what the hon. Minister had to say but there are some—maybe in the opinion of the Minister few—but there are some at least who when they get outside those doors say, “Thank you very much,” they will blow you a kiss, fall five times to Mecca, and hope they never see you or your people again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are lots of them.

Mr. Ben: All right. There are a lot of them that strike out on their own. Now, we are still getting back to this business of bonds. It is fine if they are working with the after-care officers, but there are a great number who have been out on the street, if I may use the vernacular, for four or five years before the light flashed on and The Department of Reform Institutions, now called The Department of Correctional Services, set up even what I still today deem not totally adequate after-care, at least an improvement in after-care services over what there was years ago.

What I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, is a system where an ex-inmate who has rehabilitated himself, finds that he requires a bond, he can apply to a company and then the government of the province of Ontario, who released this man, can guarantee such a bond, and the guarantee company would be required by law to keep secret the fact that this particular individual does have a record. In other words, he should be judged on his immediate past history rather than his long gone by record, so that he does not have to fear exposure after a number of years.

I had an instance just recently, Mr. Chairman, where a fellow had worked for a firm for many years and was making fairly good money. His employer knew he had a record. He saw advertised a position for which he qualified and for which he would have been paid considerably more money. He applied for that position and he got it, but he lasted only, I think, about six months when his employer found out that he had a record and dismissed him. As it was, Mr. Chairman—I am not giving it exactly correctly—the firm for which he went to work was taken over by an American firm and the new employer, the American firm, discovered he had a record and dismissed him.

Now, the fellow could not go back to his old job because it had been filled. He was out of a job. The result is he went on a papering spree, papered half of Toronto with bad paper and he is back, he is one of your customers—no, he is not one of your customers because he got two years, so he is in another jurisdiction.

All employers are not as considerate as his first employer and too many of these ex-inmates—I am not saying whether they are right or wrong, I am not passing judgment—prefer to keep their past a secret of their own. They do not believe in broadcasting it. They feel they have done wrong, they repent, and they like to live their past down, not because it is a stigma on their escutcheon but because they feel that they did wrong and they do not want to remember it because they are trying to live it down.

And when does it come to the surface? When they require a bond. I think there should be a law passed which requires bonding companies to keep secret the fact that an applicant has had a record, that they can apply to the government and ask the government if they will guarantee the bond for an additional premium like they guarantee CMHC loans.

And if The Department of Correctional Services or the Attorney General's Department is satisfied the prisoner has been leading an exemplary life since his release, then they can back the bond and the person can continue to lead a normal and useful life. This is what I am suggesting to the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is recommending that the government do the bonding?

Mr. Ben: Guarantee the bond.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, guarantee the bond, the same thing. I do not know, this is a very complex problem. It is a question of whether you should force somebody else to take a risk and whether in fact you are going to be giving some privileges to an ex-inmate which you do not give to a citizen who has never gotten himself into trouble and may find difficulty in getting a bond, I do not know. This is something that we have been studying—we have read some material on this—and something which is going to be in our consideration.

I do not know whether it will be in the next year or so, but there are some jurisdictions which apparently have some sort of plan of this nature. I am not too sure just how deeply they go into this thing. We will be giving it some study to see whether it is practical.

Mr. Ben: May I, Mr. Chairman, just point this out to the Minister, because it is not as complicated as he may perhaps think. For example, let us say that a company—

Mr. Lawlor: The federal Liberals rejected it.

Mr. Ben: I cannot say that they have, I do not know, so I am not going to either deny or admit the hon. member's statement, but let us say that prisoner "A" approaches company "B" for a bond and divulges to company "B" that he has a record.

Now company "B" can then go to a department of this government, that department can check and can then say to company "B", we will pay an additional premium of "Y" dollars to you or we will pay a premium of "Y" dollars to you in addition to the premium that you are getting from "A" if you will bond with him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In every case?

Mr. Ben: In every case that you deem this is required.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It will not work.

Mr. Ben: Now just a second, let me finish. I would suggest that the small amount of that additional premium per annum would be infinitesimal compared to what it cost to keep a person in your institution per annum. And there is a good chance that this individual just may end up there when he is denied that bond and prevented from leading a useful life.

You have to weigh the costs of it. I do not believe that the costs would be that great. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that in his department they could probably save the amount of those premiums by not using their pencils to doodle with and just using them to calculate with. That is how small it would be.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just to point out some of the problems inherent in this. The hon. member's suggestion, of course, is that the department should recommend those cases which the government should guarantee the bonds on. Correct? In other words, not to take every releasee and say bond. So the department is in the position where it is, in fact, going to make recommendations to those who, in their view, are worthy of bonding.

Now, if the hon. member would just give this some thought, this presupposes that we are, in fact, going to say to a lot of releasees:

"We do not think you are worthy of bonding"; and in fact make them more hostile than ever. Because we have said to one man, we have said to "A", "We think you are good enough and we are going to recommend you for bonding." "B", who may in fact be a borderline case, but in our view we do not think we should recommend him, we will be destroying that man. I am not saying this is—

Mr. Ben: Is that not exactly what you are doing with the parole system?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not saying this is insurmountable. I am just pointing out that it is not quite as simple as the hon. member points out.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister, the procedure he described is exactly the procedure he, in essence, follows with parole. He says to certain prisoners: "We back you, we think that you merit something different. We are letting you out before your sentence is finished. We are not going to just give you the $20 which is the statutory limit, but in fact, if you require something extra to get rehabilitated we will help you with that. We have our after-care officers available. We will let you use them."

You do that with one group, but with the other group you say, "No, we do not trust you. We do not think that you should be—"

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, we do not do that.

Mr. Ben: When you deny them probation, in essence what you say is, "We have no confidence in you as yet. We may change our minds, or you may serve your sentence, or we may never get confidence in you." That is the very essence of your system.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. It is not the same.

Mr. Ben: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not quite the same because what we say to that 35 per cent to whom the parole board has not granted parole, we say, "We do not think you are ready at this moment." He knows he is going to be out in two or three months anyway. It is a considerably different thing.

Mr. Ben: I do not see the distinction at all. Well, all right, you want to say that this rose has 53 petals and this one has 54. All right.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402. The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Of the 1,200 or 1,195 parolees this year—or at least in your annual report—what percentage of the people placed on parole violated that parole?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On page 59.

Mr. Lawlor: I am looking at page 90.

Mr. Shulman: Fourteen, it says in the book.

Mr. Lawlor: I see the answer—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: 14.49 per cent.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it is improving somewhat.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Violated parole!

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, through you, I am looking here at a parole agreement. It is not yours, it belongs to the federal government. I take it that you do have a parole agreement signed by a prisoner being paroled, would that be so?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is correct.

Mr. Lawlor: I would assume—correct me, of course, if I am wrong—that it would probably contain terminology analogous to the one I am looking at; namely that he is not to move out of the jurisdiction—I would take it as being the province of Ontario—without prior permission.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is correct.

Mr. Lawlor: And permission from his parole officer and the federal one. It reads as follows:

That the prisoner to secure advance approval from the regional representative through my supervisor, if at any time I wish to (a) purchase motor vehicle, (b) incur debts by borrowing money or installment buying, (c) assume additional responsibility such as marrying, (d) own or carry firearms or other weapons.

Would the Minister's parole agreement go thus far?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am advised that the answer to (a) is no; the answer to (b) is no; the answer to (c) is no, and the answer to (d) depends upon the circumstances. If there is something about his job or something of that nature, driving a motor vehicle or something of that nature is put in a special condition.

Mr. Lawlor: First of all, might I see a copy of your parole agreement? Not tonight necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, we will be glad to provide the hon. member with it.

Mr. Lawlor: Very good. Are there any terms with respect to his deportment in his personal or financial life that you do require him to be beholden to the officer for in fear of or under penalty perhaps?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Some parts of it, yes.

Mr. Lawlor: What would it be?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He must assume and continue his family responsibilities.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At the moment, we cannot think of anything else.

Mr. Lawlor: Would that include common-law responsibilities, or is that considered a family responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is yes, I am advised.

Mr. Lawlor: Would that include responsibilities of being putative father of children?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is, it might.

Mr. Lawlor: Would it have to be so adjudged by the family court, or would it be of a more informal kind?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Depending on the circumstances, I am told.

Mr. Lawlor: I see. Fine. Now there is just one other area that I am interested in exploring. The business of after-care touching a number of areas, the provision of employment for instance and board and lodging has been arranged in some cases and meals, etc. I am interested, how is this done? Who provides the meals, and where are they provided?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Depending on the circumstances, it would be done by outright handing over of funds to look after this provision or sometimes, depending upon the circumstances, with some restaurant, depending upon whether you feel this money better not handed over for fear it might be used for alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, let us take a case where the man is completely down and out. He has been out for a couple of weeks and the money that he came out with has been exhausted. He is at loose ends, leaving aside the Sally Ann and the Harbour Light and maybe any number of other places with soup kitchen type of things.

Is there any service provided by your department? He has served out his time, he is perhaps not actually on parole, but he is in derelict circumstances. Where would this man turn to and what would the department do to alleviate his condition?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He would turn to our after-care service and our after-care service would help him so long as it appears to them he is properly motivated and anxious to be helped. They will help him in any way possible—financially, with lodging, food and clothing, tools for a job, anything of that nature, arrange interviews with employers and so on.

They stay with him just so long as it appears that the man is anxious to go straight, is anxious to do a good job and is prepared to work with our after-care officers.

Mr. Lawlor: Let me quite understand this now. If he were in this plight he would be supplied with meals, the department would pay his rent if necessary and provide him with tools in order to get a job. You would do all these things just as long as it were necessary for him in order to establish himself?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So long as he appeared to be properly motivated and his record was such that it was indicated that this should be forthcoming. In other words, if he had been helped on numerous occasions and he just proved he did not care, that whatever money you gave him he went out and got drunk and came back the next day or something of that nature. If he did this often enough, then of course there is not much point in continuing to give this man long term help, or money for tools or anything of that nature.

Generally, the statement I make applies. If he is well motivated, we will do everything possible for him as long as it is indicated.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 402?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could start a new subject now under vote 402; the revocation of paroles. May I ask the Minister: when you revoke a man's parole, is a hearing granted?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Is the prisoner granted the right to counsel at this hearing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Shulman: Who is present at such a hearing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The parole board.

Mr. Shulman: Do I understand then, that before a parole is revoked, the prisoner appears before the parole board?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The parole board is the only body which can cancel his parole. This is done at a hearing. The after-care officer brings the man in to the parole board, brings him back into custody and he appears before the parole board. Is that the answer to the member's question?

Mr. Shulman: But he does appear before the parole board before the parole is revoked? Is that right? I want to make sure there is no misunderstanding.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It must have been revoked for a period or he would not have been back.

Mr. Shulman: But he has a hearing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He has a hearing.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Vote 402 agreed to.

On vote 403:

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not again, not tonight. Let us go to the showers.

Mr. Shulman: Whenever you are ready.

We are now coming to juveniles, Mr. Chairman, and there are a number of matters I have here. Perhaps I should start off with an individual problem which has to do with Guelph.

Mr. Chairman: Might I ask the hon. Minister if it is his desire and that of the committee to deal with this particular vote under activities, or will we take it as one total vote?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will take it as a total vote.

Mr. Chairman: Yes. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: There is a Mr. Joseph Reingruber of 579 Stone Road East in Guelph. Is the Minister familiar with his problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suggest the hon. member forgets about it.

Mr. Shulman: It is all very well to say forget about it, but I have a big sheaf of correspondence here and apparently the Minister has not been able to solve this problem. If the Minister can inform me that a solution is at hand, it will save us going into this problem in some detail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have to advise the hon. member that this is a situation which we have attempted to resolve in a variety of ways, none of which apparently has proven satisfactory to the complainant. The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Haggerty)—I am sorry he is not here—has taken a personal interest in this case and he is aware we have gone to considerable lengths in the matter. He has raised the question on numerous occasions.

At the request of this family, arrangements were made for a newspaper reporter to meet with me, my Deputy Minister and the administrator of training schools, in my office to discuss this whole situation and the action taken by the department to solve the problem. The two main complaints of this family are: The boys at the school have, on occasion, shouted obscenities at members of the family; and that their privacy has been infringed upon because the boys in residence on the south side of the building can see into the living room when the drapes of the home are not drawn.

The following corrective measures have been taken at the school: 1. The recreation area has been moved to another section of the school. 2. Supervision on the side of the school adjacent to the home has been increased. 3. Drapes have been installed on all windows. These drapes have been drawn during the winter months at 5:30 p.m.

I strongly disagree with the contention of this family that the superintendent of this school has displayed a lack of interest in these complaints, referred to in the letter.

I quote from a letter to the administrator of training schools from the superintendent of March 14, 1968, in which he stated:

I have every sympathy with this family if they feel so strongly that their privacy is being invaded.

Later in this letter, the superintendent stated:

I explained to Mr. and Mrs. Reingruber—

I was not going to mention the name, I had a blank in here, but the hon. member mentioned the name:

—that only once previously during my time had she complained and that I had taken every possible precaution to eliminate a recurrence and I would again take appropriate action. Mrs. Reingruber was not satisfied and took my reply to be a lack of interest.

In one of her letters—I have gone through this correspondence until I am blue in the face—she took it to be a lack of interest on his part. He was not too happy about the suggestion that he was not interested. He further states:

This I regret because—as I stated earlier—I feel for Mrs. Reingruber but I think everything possible has been done by the school. I render my apologies to Mr. and Mrs. Reingruber if they feel I was not interested in their complaints.

In a subsequent letter to the hon. member for Wellington South, the Deputy Minister asked the member to convey the superintendent's apology, and I presume he did.

There is an allegation in there that I had promised the reporter that I would go to Mrs. Reingruber's home to view the situation and discuss it with her. As to this allegation, I made no such commitment. My Deputy Minister and the administrator of training schools recall no remarks that could even have been construed this way. I did invite the reporter to visit the training school when she went to visit this family.

We contacted the reporter—I think it was yesterday or the day before—as we could not understand the statement that I had promised to visit. The reporter has denied that any such commitment was given. The reporter also stated that she felt that the department and the officials at this school had made every effort to deal with the complaint of this family.

We could go into all the complaints, but it is really one of those things where you just cannot give satisfaction.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we can save a lot of time because there is only one complaint that really worries me here. I am not interested in whether or not someone was civil to them, it is really not important enough to bring up here. But, this is a family in the very unfortunate position of having their home within a very, very short distance of this Hillcrest training school.

I am not quite sure how this peculiar geographical proximity developed, but, in any case, it is so close that the boys from their house side windows apparently are able to overlook the yard of this family. There are two females in the family who have apparently received considerable abuse of a verbal sexual nature from the boys.

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): What a sadistic mind.

Mr. Shulman: And this problem apparently all arose—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is there anything in any of the letters from the Reingrubers that said they received verbal abuse of a sexual nature?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which letter was it? Quite frankly, I am firmly convinced, after going into all of this, that if the family was not looking for trouble, they would not have any.

Mr. Shulman: This may be the Minister's opinion but—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps he has gone into it more deeply than I, but it seems that all the trouble developed when the school changed windows. The windows before were glazed, and quite properly I think on that side—so that the boys could not look into this family's windows and into their yard.

For some reason the windows were unglazed and all the trouble began at that point. Putting drapes across has not solved the problem because they are moveable drapes. The Minister could solve this whole problem—and it is a public relations problem in addition to everything else—if he would just be willing to glaze the windows on that side. Is this an impossible request?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman—with all due respect to the hon. member—this is another one of those areas where you can do a lot of nit picking from now until the cows come home. The hon. member is suggesting that we glaze the other side of the windows. It just means that our training school children would not have an opportunity to see out of the windows. They are entitled to have some consideration, too.

I am convinced that everything has been done for this family. I am convinced this family will not be satisfied so long as the training school is in that location and it is not this department's intention to be black-mailed into doing anything other than what we have done now to satisfy this family. Everybody has apologized and attempted to be nice to the Reingrubers. They have had a reporter up there. The reporter has said we have done everything that could have been expected to have been done; I do not know what else we can do.

If the hon. member is going to pick out a lot of these little things as he goes along during the course of any of the estimates—where every person who has any little complaint, which has really no foundation except in the particular emotions of the particular person, then we could be here until the cows come home.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister. First of all, we may have to come here for 12 months of the year and if so it will not be a great disaster. But let me say that the complaints brought up in the House are ones that had justification, certainly as far as I am concerned, which we have not been able to satisfy by writing to the Minister.

One of the members in the Opposition has written a number of letters to the Minister about this. It is a very, very simple request, not to move the training school, but to return the windows to the state they were before, so that this family will not be badgered.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not like this—just let me give a chronological event of some of these things.

February 1, 1969, at 7.20 p.m.—Mrs. Reingruber called that the drapes were open in the dining area.

Mr. Sopha: Well, what is her beef anyway?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The boys are looking out and seeing what is happening in her yard.

Mr. Sopha: Well, what is wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know.

Mr. Shulman: Do not misconstrue—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are a lot of people in the city of Toronto and in any other town who are living right next door to school yards where they have hundreds more young people to contend with, and they are not always easy to contend with.

Mr. Sopha: I doubt if anyone by the name of Reingruber exists.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mrs. Reingruber called that the drapes were open in the dining area. The reason for this was a boy was scrubbing the walls. They took the boys off and closed the drapes.

February 3, 1969, at 9.30 p.m.—called that the drapes were not drawn in one section, so they were drawn.

February 5, 1969, 6.25 p.m.—drapes open in the dining area of two sections. Five minutes later she called again before the supervisor could get there. There were no boys in the area at that time.

February 13, 1969, 5.50 p.m.—telephoned over to report the drapes were not drawn. This was because of a broken hook, there was just a gap. This was corrected and the drapes were closed.

March 2, 1969, 6.50 a.m.—telephoned that the drapes were open in D section. The night men had opened them at 6 o'clock in order to open transoms to let in air. This was explained to her and reasons why the drapes were open.

March 6, 1969, 8.55 p.m.—she telephoned over that there was a boy looking out between the drapes. This could have been possible as the supervisor was preparing them for their showers.

Does the hon. member really want to waste the time of this House with this sort of nonsense?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: All right, let us go on to something else.

I have here the reports of the National Council of Crime and Delinquency which reads on the front "Think Twice Before You Build a Detention Centre." This is in reference to young people, juveniles, and has reference to the building of places like the detention centres you are building for children. This is a fairly lengthy document.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which detention centres do we build for children?

Mr. Shulman: Training centres.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Training schools?

Mr. Shulman: Yes. There are different expressions in different jurisdictions, depending on—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what I want to know. Detention centres here are something else again.

Mr. Shulman: This is a 16-page document.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member sure he is talking about training schools and not the holding units for children which are under The Department of the Attorney General?

Mr. Shulman: They are referring to both. They are suggesting that as an alternative to detention there should be a different plan used, because these children should not be in detention.

I will not read the whole 16 pages but I would like to read the three alternatives which they suggest, because I think this makes good sense as an alternative to detaining children.

Three specific alternatives to detaining children can drastically reduce the number detained and their length of stay:

1. Intensive probation services between adjudication and disposition to provide relationship surveillance that helps the parents and the child assume responsibility for his behaviour.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member, Mr. Chairman, is talking about detention centres which are the holding units before they go to court. This is under The Department of the Attorney General.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I think I know what I am talking about. This is specifically referring to both types.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But not the one you referred to.

Mr. Shulman: I am sorry, you are incorrect. This first point applies to one of the types which happens to be under the Attorney General. May I read the rest of it to you?

Unlike police surveillance, relationship surveillance provides daily contact with the child, the parents, the school, and the community to obtain co-operation, give support and help work out problems caused by pressures which contribute to delinquent behaviour. It gives the delinquent youth an opportunity to show his good intentions by rectifying delinquency-producing behaviour immediately.

New York is successfully using probation officers with case loads of 10 to work with adjudicated delinquents on suspended detention remand who would otherwise have been detained pending court disposition.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are back again on detention centres.

Mr. Shulman: I am still on the same point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just take it up with The Department of the Attorney General. I have handled enough of his estimates for two days.

Mr. Shulman: The member for Sudbury has already brought this up. Unfortunately the two are intermingled.

Now this is another point, if I may digress for a moment. Your probation officers, and the parole officers should be working together. In fact, they should be under the same development. This is where there is an artificial split. Again I must give credit to the member for Sudbury—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is under consideration.

Mr. Shulman: It is "under consideration." It is common sense; why do you not do it instead of considering it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We always consider things before we do them in this government.

Mr. Shulman: You could do them for the past 25 years and now you say you are still considering them.

Mr. Sopha: The answer is yes.

Mr. Shulman: They consider but they do not do. I will continue the quotation, Mr. Chairman:

This procedure pays off by obviating institutional placements.

Mr. Sopha: Is that an American publication?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: New York city.

Mr. Sopha: Well, he is a neo-colonial.

Mr. Shulman: It does not say. It just says "copyright 1968 National Council on Crime and Delinquency." Maybe it is a Canadian National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

Well, where was I:

—effective probation is the most important alternative to detention. Improvement of probation services may be more important than establishing or enlarging detention centres.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Attorney General's Department, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: "Point two—" We now come to this department.

Mr. Martel: Can anybody over there tell the time?

Mr. Shulman: To continue:

Emergency shelter care when removing a child from his home is imperative, but secure custody is not.

Michigan, Florida, New York and a few other states use shelter care successfully for delinquent children pending court disposition.

Thirdly—special group homes, medical hospitals, or other facilities for children with very severe emotional disturbance, mental deficiency, or mental illness, children who do not belong in detention—and this is the point I was really coming to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You still have not gotten to our department.

Mr. Shulman: Oh yes, I have, because—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, that is the Attorney General's Department.

Mr. Shulman: This is not the Attorney General's. You have children's training centres where you have mentally ill children.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those are the detention centres I am referring to. The hon. member is getting confused—they are referring to detention centres because he mentioned "pending court decision," and pending court decision they could not be in a training school.

Mr. Shulman: All right. Well just to find out who is confused I will read you the first paragraph of this lovely little book which begins:

Think twice. If you wish to build a detention home or juvenile detention centre, juvenile hall, you probably live in one of the 2,800 counties in the United States that have no place to detain delinquent youths except in jail or jail-like facilities.

Now does not this apply to your estimates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. What the hon. member is reading is the deficiencies in that great American system he is talking about where the counties handle children and training schools. What they are in fact saying, if I heard him correctly, is, "you have to keep them in county jails because you do not have detention centres."

Mr. Shulman: Oh, no, no.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You do not have detention centres.

Mr. Shulman: This is explaining why you should not build detention centres.

All right, let us try again. They are explaining why you should not detain these boys in detention centres—they call them detention centres and I am saying it is like a training school.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it is not. It is a detention centre.

Mr. Shulman: Well all right—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member does not understand it, because if he will read it again, it says "before court appearance."

Mr. Shulman: "Before court appearance" applied to one group. Let us go to the general branch of detention—and I believe the Minister will agree, he detains these people, and detention has three malignant effects. First, holding the detained youngster in forced association with other delinquents intensifies his hostility to society and exalts his status in the delinquent group. I hope the Minister will agree with me, this is what does occur in the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, the hon. member is still talking about detention centres, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: All right, in training schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, these do not come within the correctional system.

Mr. Shulman: You see we are arguing about semantics, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Not that, it is not semantic but that it is out of order if it has nothing to do with these estimates.

Mr. Shulman: Well, the training schools certainly have to do with these estimates.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member must restrict his remarks to training schools as they apply to these estimates, then.

Mr. Shulman: All right, I will—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister had clearly indicated that the topics discussed by the member were not in his department and they are, therefore, out of order.

Mr. Shulman: All right. Does the Minister agree that training schools are in his department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no need to get sarcastic; get to the point.

Mr. Shulman: Well, the point I am going to make is that holding detained youngsters in training schools in forced association with other delinquents, intensifies their hostility to society and exalts their status in the delinquent group. Point one, would the Minister agree with me?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. I still think you are confusing the fact. I think what the book is saying is that they are forced to keep them in training schools because they do not have detention centres.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps the Minister will forget the book. I am now talking about—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wish the hon. member would forget the book.

Mr. Shulman: I am suggesting to the Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that keeping these boys in training schools intensifies—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will the hon. member answer a question for me?

Mr. Shulman: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In all these jurisdictions which have such wonderful systems, so much better than Ontario, how is it that some are having just as much trouble with juvenile delinquency and most of them are having more trouble than we do here?

Mr. Shulman: Sad to say, Mr. Chairman, as far as I know, no jurisdiction has found the overall answer to juvenile delinquency or crime, but we are all trying.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why do they—if they have such good systems as the hon. member is always quoting to us—why do they have so much juvenile delinquency? In fact, why do they have so much more than we, in most of those cases?

Mr. Shulman: Well, sad to say, their particular problem is a racial one which, fortunately, we do not have here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not always a racial one.

Mr. Shulman: Well, that is the reason for the high rate of juvenile delinquency. However that, I am afraid, is not going to solve the Minister's problem. The Minister has a problem here which he is attempting to look after. We have suggestions to make to improve that problem and I hope the Minister will listen to them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Fine, but I wish he would make his point instead of just quoting these long statistics from other jurisdictions.

Mr. MacDonald: He might be able to make it if you would quit interrupting him.

Mr. Shulman: The second point they make here is that these boys should not be separated from their home and familiar environment to be put in training schools or whatever you will call them. The suggestion is that separation from home and familiar environment makes a child feel he has been abandoned. "If no one cares about me, why should I care?" Most delinquent children have been rejected by their home, their school and their community. Confinement in a training school heightens their sense of rejection and lowers their self-esteem, and self-esteem is one of the most valuable deterrents to delinquency.

Thirdly, detention underscores failure. It denies the child an opportunity to assume responsibility for his own behaviour under close supervision in the community between adjudication and court deposition or after sentencing. Now the point which they are suggesting—and I am asking the Minister for his views on this, he has had more experience in this than I—this group—the National Council on Crime and Delinquency are suggesting that it is an error to take these lads and put them in groups such as we are doing in our training schools because they are getting in with other delinquents where they are learning other forms of crime. What they are suggesting is that it is better to have them off in foster homes or under supervision in cottage type jurisdictions, where there are only two or three boys.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Cottage type training schools?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, but the training schools I have been in contain 50, 60 or more boys.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Has the hon. member been to Hagersville?

Mr. Shulman: No, I have not been to Hagersville.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, try that.

Mr. Shulman: All right, I will try that. How many boys are there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You will find out, or try Port Bolster?

Mr. Shulman: How many are in Hagersville?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, they live in cottages.

Mr. Shulman: How many are in Hagersville?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: About six or eight to a cottage.

Mr. Shulman: And how many are there all together?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: About 60.

Mr. Shulman: Well the suggestion here is that this is an error because when you have a group of 60 associating together, you are going to get the problems which we have just been discussing. It is better to get them off in homes where there are two or three maximum; where they will not have the opportunity to be learning the various crimes which a group automatically have known among them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will send them out to your house.

Mr. Shulman: I would not mind—

An hon. member: That would be a good idea.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister consider this approach?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will table that document I would be glad to read it. I think he has it confused and I would like to read it.

Mr. Shulman: I may have the document confused but I do not have my suggestion confused. This is the same suggestion that my colleague from Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) made to you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member is suggesting that we would be better having smaller training schools, or cottage type training schools, I agree with him. We are doing that. Hagersville is a place which is showing a great deal of success. There has been a tremendous amount of interest shown in it. He has visited so many other institutions I would suggest that for a while he stay out of the jails and visit Hagersville which is just the other side of Hamilton. He would find a tremendous programme going on there where the youngsters are living in cottages and living in a little village, as a matter, associating with the children of the staff.

There is a great deal of hope in this particular area and we are building a new training school in Sudbury which is of the same type, the cottage type.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 403. The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, what is the date on that article?

Mr. Shulman: It is 1968.

Mr. Ben: 1968. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that what the hon. member for High Park is trying to bring forth in reading that article is something that Professor Grygier brought out about four or five years ago. For the benefit of the hon. member for High Park, Professor Grygier was with The Department of Correctional Services. I believe he is now the head of the department of criminology in Ottawa.

Grygier carried out an empirical study and I believe one of the institutions he used was Brampton. What Grygier stated was that contrary to commonly accepted beliefs everything tends towards the norm when it comes to institutionalizing people. In prisons, the opposite takes place. In other words, when you put people in prison, the reverse occurs, contrary to the accepted belief that they tend towards the norm and the bad improve a little bit, maybe the good become a little bit worse, but everything tends towards the average. However, by putting them in prison the bad become worse and the good become better. This is what his empirical study showed. So naturally, the question then arises, why put good people into jail—they are already good, and if you put bad people into jail they come out worse.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: This is, in essence, what this article is saying. In fact, it is not original. They are just stealing from Grygier and I think what they are saying is that prisons are wrong per se; that they do not serve the function the people have thought they served.

An hon. member: The crime of punishment.

Mr. Ben: That is right; punishment in itself is a crime. Perhaps the solution ought to be putting everybody on probation to a citizen or a group of citizens in a community. I find myself questioning the end result of implementing what Professor Grygier's conclusions would lead one to believe because you have many situations where parents cannot handle children. Nothing has led me to believe that by placing them in a foster home, the foster parents are going to be in any better position to handle those children than the natural parents.

It is true that, in many instances, it is the failure of the parents that leads to the difficulties the children find themselves in—but it does not always necessarily hold. The question arises, what are we going to do with those children if we do not institutionalize them? I am asking that question—I am not trying to make a point—because, frankly, I have not decided and I would welcome somebody else's opinion.

Grygier says that it is wrong to put people in prison. Only the good improve and we should be satisfied. If they are good, we should not ask for any improvement. The bad become worse, he says. The last people you should put in prison are the bad ones, because they are going to come out worse. So what do you do?

This man was head of the department of research for quite a while, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact, he brought out this paper while he was still employed by the department. So the Minister might perhaps have a comment. Where do we go?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I forget what he called that, I was just trying to remember. I might point out that Dr. Grygier—and this is more to the point because we are talking about juveniles now—Dr. Grygier did suggest that there was some evidence that it might be better to put children in a training school in the first instance. He thought a good three months of discipline, which is something most of them had never had, might be better for them. I do not necessarily agree with this, but this was one of his postulations, one of his theories, and he thought there was some evidence of this. No one really has the answer to it. I am not too sure that he is right; I am not too sure that he is wrong. But to come up with these glib answers—there just are no glib answers to it.

The hon. member for Humber has brought up the fact that most of these children are in training schools because they have not been able to function in their own family setting because, in fact, it was not a real family. We try to create as close to a family situation in the training schools as we can. We succeed more in some than we do in others. And when the child appears to be ready, we send him out on placement under supervision and I think we do a fairly good job.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a few remarks at the member for Humber in this regard—that is one of the damndest theories of criminology or penology that I have ever heard. I would like to know what he means by somebody being bad and getting worse under these conditions. I know there is an eminent judge in this province—I have heard him speak on occasion—who, having sat on the criminal bench for many years, believes that human beings are born criminals from the word go. If that is the sort of thing that moves through the mind of the hon. member, then there is very little hope for penology at all, I would agree.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I was not postulating any theory, I was stating the results of a paper that was presented by Grygier. These are not my theories, not my postulations—

Mr. Lawlor: What is the definition of bad?

Mr. Ben: Please do not refer to it as my theory because—

Mr. Lawlor: I daresay the member is misstating him to start with. Secondly, if the member is stating it correctly, what is the definition?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is that expert advice—

Mr. Chairman: It seems to me we are straying somewhat from the rehabilitation of juvenile in the estimates.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Has the Minister any plans to set up new foster homes for children leaving the training schools? How many are there now and how great is the shortage, and what may be done to eliminate the shortage? Could the Minister give me some answers to those, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You will be around all week, we are not going anywhere.

Mr. Ruston: It will not take long.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not set up the foster homes. We arrange for foster home placements the same as the children's aid society does. I do not know that there is any particular shortage at the present time. We have some 1,600 or 1,700 children out on placement, mostly in foster homes, some of them in their own homes, back in their own homes again. I do not think there is a shortage.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, one of the papers I get great pleasure in reading is the Cobourg Sentinel Star and I have here the issue of September 4, 1968. On the front page, you may see, there is a series of pictures and under these pictures is "vandalism", "vandalism", "vandalism". Apparently nine boys from the training school got out and created a great deal of damage. There is a long article here—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Another Reingruber case.

Mr. Shulman: It is not a Reingruber case; a series of homes were damaged. It is especially serious when the paper printed a front page editorial on the matter. The Minister may not think it is serious, but the people around Cobourg do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How many homes are on there?

Mr. Shulman: There is the Harper home, the barn—I can read the article if the Minister would like.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How many homes? The member said a series of homes.

Mr. Shulman: I do not know that, quite honestly. I do not recall.

Mr. MacDonald: Once again the Minister is doing nothing but interrupt.

Mr. Shulman: The point is that the people in Cobourg were very disturbed because the training school had not warned the public that these nine boys had escaped. And if I can quote the last lines from this article, and they are now quoting one of the people whose home was damaged:

I would like to know who is going to pay for all the destruction. The boys' parents can't, they have no money. What makes me so mad is, if my cattle get out on the road, the police can charge me. This is beyond all common sense. It is not right. Somebody has got to draw the line somewhere. One or two boys, yes, but nine since yesterday and they do not even let us know they are out.

It appears unreasonable to me that in this administration if an escape like this occurs you should not notify the local authorities. I would like to ask the Minister two questions. First of all, why were they not notified, and secondly, who did pay for the destruction?

Did the department make any contribution toward that particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On August 28, two staff members and 13 boys took part in a day camp programme from Brookside school. This is a programme of healthy activity off the school property which has been in operation for about six years. In the course of the camp programme nine boys, who in the course of a game were not under immediate surveillance, absconded. The supervisors on duty made a quick survey and when it was determined that they had indeed gone, the school was informed according to normal procedure.

Six boys had previously absconded from this day camp, 33 others from the training school proper, during the fiscal year. From the school, all available personnel were rounded up immediately and a search of the area was instituted. The search continued until well after dark. A total of 18 members of the staff were involved as well as local and provincial police. One member of the staff used his private airplane to assist the search. No trace of the boys was found until a phone call was received from the police on the following afternoon, indicating that the nine boys had been spotted at Camborne.

A number of staff under the direction of the deputy superintendent proceeded at once to the village where they were met by the police and informed that the boys were on a forested hill behind the village. All nine boys were returned to the school.

During the time that they had been away from the school, the boys had wantonly damaged property of the Harper residence near Camborne. Although there have been previous instances where boys absconded from school and damaged public property, it has usually been in the form of stealing cars or other articles. The superintendent of the school and the deputy superintendent visited the home to survey the damage and the owner, Mr. Eric Harper, was informed that the school would do all it could to clean up the mess that had been made.

The boys were returned to the school and questioned as to why they had left, without satisfactory results. They were confined to the grounds of the school for one month, lost all merit marks earned to date and detailed to clean up the Harper residence. The boys have since appeared before a juvenile court judge and all pleaded guilty to charges of (1) unlawfully breaking and entering a dwelling, the property of Eric Harper; (2) did wilfully destroy and damage the property of Eric Harper.

The house was scrubbed out and everything cleaned that had been fouled. Repairs were effected by maintenance men at the school, linoleum was replaced, materials costing approximately $100 were purchased to replace broken windows, door hasps, and so on. An offer was made to Mr. Harper to have the tractor repaired at one of our institutions but this was turned down. A piece had been broken from the stove which had previously been severely cracked and no action has been taken with respect to this. The tractor has now been repaired at Guelph Reformatory and has been accepted as being in good repair by Mr. Eric Harper.

It is interesting that, in the opinion of the motor mechanic in Guelph who repaired it, of the $313 total cost of repairs, only $52 could be attributed to the damage caused by the boys. The rest was replacement of worn parts caused by normal wear and tear.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think you did very well in this case. The one point that is left bothering me is that the paper here suggested that local police were not notified until the next day. Is that incorrect?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They were notified immediately.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Vote 403 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Correctional Services.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go to the order paper and consider legislation and, if time permits, carry on with estimates.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.45 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 1969

The House met today at 2.30 p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today is scout day. We have in the east gallery a scout group from Kitchener; and in the west gallery, five scout troops from St. Catharines.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary) presented to the House the following reports:

1. The annual report for 1967-68 of the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute for the year ending March 31, 1968.
2. The annual report of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) for the year ending March 31, 1968.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for an increase in the minimum automobile public liability coverage from $35,000 to $50,000, on an inclusive basis, effective September 1 of this year. I am informed that presently over 80 per cent of insured drivers have coverage in excess of the new minimum limits and will, therefore, not be affected.

The bill also deals with a number of routine and housekeeping amendments designed to update the Act and adopt uniform language across Canada as recommended by the Association of Superintendents of Insurance.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker has a ruling before the orders of the day. Last week the member for Sarnia directed a question to me as to when a division actually occurs. "Lewis'

Parliamentary Procedure" in Ontario, at page 85, makes it quite clear that the actual division is when the members stand to record their votes for or against the question. This is supported by "May's Parliamentary Practice," 17th Edition, at page 422, which states that the division occurs when the members separate into the two lobbies for the purpose of being counted, for and against the question.

I believe the member's confusion arises from the wording of clause (a) of rule 107, which states:

Upon a division, the yeas and nays shall not be entered upon the minutes, unless demanded by five members.

This appears to contemplate that after the division takes place, it will not be recorded unless five members so request.

However, the application of this rule that, to the best of my knowledge, has always been followed in this Legislature, is that the division itself does not take place unless requested by five members, and if so requested, is recorded. Clause (a) then goes on to provide that on motions to adjourn the House or the debate only the numbers are recorded.

It should be noted here that when the House is in committee, a division is not recorded for the reason that only the committee's report is recorded. I suggest that clause (a) of rule 107 should more properly read:

The yeas and nays shall not be entered upon the minutes unless a division is demanded by five members; and on questions of adjournment of the House or of the debate, the numbers only shall be entered.

I believe the member's primary concern is with the application of clause (b) of rule 107, which says:

On the question being put every member in the chamber, with the exception of the Speaker, must record his vote.

As the whole of rule 107, along with rule 106, deals with divisions, it appears obvious that clause (b) refers to the putting of the question after the division has been called. The clause obviously refers to a division and provides that every member in the chamber when the question is put at the time of the division must vote.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my gratitude to you for clarifying this ambiguous rule and, if I might, congratulate the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) on his consistency. He is wrong again.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite out of order.

The hon. Minister of Correctional Services has a statement.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, last night during the debates on the estimates of my department the following dialogue regarding Don Jail took place between the hon. member for High Park and myself at approximately 5.30 p.m. and I quote:

Mr. Shulman: If a prisoner is referred by a magistrate for a mental examination and I would appreciate a straight yes or no answer, will he see a psychiatrist?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will have to check that. I want to make sure before I give an answer to the hon. member. I will get that answer for him. But I want to point out to the hon. member, regardless of what the conditions were at the Don Jail at any one time, we just took the Don Jail over in July of 1968.

After approximately a five- or ten-minute lapse, I received a note from Dr. Norman Goodwin, director of medical service for our department, and I then stated in answer to that question:

I have the answer for the hon. member. The answer to his question is yes, all court referrals are examined by psychiatrists.

Just so, Mr. Speaker, there would be no misunderstanding, I want to read into the record a memorandum from our director of medical services, Dr. Norman Goodwin to my Deputy Minister. This memorandum is dated March 19, today, and it is to the Deputy Minister from Dr. Norman Goodwin, director of medical services:

Re Metropolitan Toronto Jail—psychiatric assessment.

A question was raised in the House last night respecting the examination of inmates remanded to the Metropolitan Toronto jail for mental examination. My interpretation of this question was with respect to those remanded for psychiatric examination. In all cases, when a person is remanded by the courts to the Metropolitan Toronto jail for a psychiatric examination, such examination is, in fact, carried out by a psychiatrist. I therefore sent a note to the Minister advising him that the answer to the question was yes.

After adjournment, you advised me that your interpretation of this question was different from mine. I therefore wish to clarify the situation. As I have already stated, all cases remanded by the courts to the Metropolitan Toronto jail for psychiatric examination are, in fact, examined by a psychiatrist.

When a person is remanded for a mental examination, this examination is carried out by two of the physicians at the jail. One of the jail doctors and the governor hold a case conference every day, Monday through Friday, with a visiting psychiatrist. During these conferences all border line cases are referred to the psychiatrist for consultation and/or examination.

I hope that this has clarified the procedures followed and regret any misunderstanding which may have occurred as a result of the note which I sent to the Minister during the estimates.

It is signed by my director of medical services, Dr. Goodwin.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? Has the system remained the same in that the Don jail doctor is being paid on a piece-work basis in addition to his salary for the mental examinations?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. I explained this last night. The hon. member asked me that question and I even read out his salary, if the member will recall. He is no longer operating on any basis whereby he gets a fixed fee plus so much per examination. He gets a fixed salary. He is a member of the civil service—I should say public service.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs has a statement.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I have for some time been observing the increasing numbers of mergers, takeover bids and consequent formation of companies known as conglomerates.

Note has been taken of the public interest in these matters, which has been expressed in the daily papers and news magazines, not only in Canada but in the United States and Great Britain as well. Discussions have been held with the Ontario Securities Commission and the chairman, and we consider that the matter is of such a nature that a study and review of the situation as it exists is desirable.

Accordingly, I have asked the Ontario Securities Commission—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—do I take it this will be the order now, when a member has a question, that the Minister jumps the gun and makes the statement before the question comes up?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raised the same question by way of point of order yesterday, and I dealt with it yesterday as I will do with it today. Ministerial statements as to matters of policy and otherwise within their department are quite in order, it has been the custom to have them at the beginning of the orders of the day. If there is a question asked, then in due course the member placing his question may ask his question and that is the ruling of the Chair and it applies on this day too.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have asked the Ontario Securities Commission to conduct such a study and review all aspects of mergers, takeovers and conglomerates. The terms of the study are being now finalized and I shall have a further statement on these matters in the next few days.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier:

Is the Cabinet continuing discussions with Metro Toronto on the possibilities of north and east expansion, or is the decision to restrict further Metropolitan growth definite?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there never have been any discussions between the Cabinet and the Metropolitan Toronto council.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, for clarification I would say of leading members of the Cabinet, surely the decision would be considered by Cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Of course. I must make it clear that one Minister has been involved and I have told the House this in answer to a question. But that does not necessarily mean that the whole Cabinet is involved. They are two entirely different things. So my answer to the question is—if I could just find the question it would help, I have it here some place.

Mr. Nixon: We are asking for clarification.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The answer is quite clear to me. It may not be to you. I really wanted to read the question so I can answer it in proper terms in order to satisfy the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: All right, let us hear it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The Cabinet is not continuing discussions with Metro Toronto because it has never commenced them. Any discussions that have been held, as I say, have been held by the Minister himself.

On November 28 in this House I said that the government, in implementing regional governments, would seek community participation in the formation of regional governments and, where possible, we shall strive to achieve community acceptability of these proposals.

That is precisely what we are doing and that is precisely what the Minister is doing. But I do not think I can let the assumption go that is involved in the question, that the Cabinet was sitting down discussing it with the Metropolitan council because it was not.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to pursue this, if the Premier will permit a supplementary question. Would he tell the House that he, as leader of the government, was involved in these discussions, as was reported? I believe he answered affirmatively on a previous occasion.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I answered a question here, I do not recall what day it was, saying that I had never been involved. I was not involved in the meeting. These were the meetings where this was mentioned as a speculation, I believe, in one of the newspapers, which prompted the question in the first place. I was not involved.

Mr. Nixon: Well, as a speculation in one of the newspapers, is the Premier aware that the statement was made yesterday or in this morning's paper that the Minister, presumably having consulted with the leader of the government and certain Cabinet colleagues—I would think it would be a Cabinet decision—had announced that there would be no further possibility of Metro Toronto expansion.

I would like to ask if that is firm policy or if this is still under discussion by the Cabinet, the senior members of the Cabinet, or perhaps only the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough)?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a great many assumptions in this question and many of them are not valid.

I can only say that government policy is as it has been spelled out in this House. You refer to the statements I have made myself, a quote of what I said on November 28. Certainly there will be a lot of negotiation necessary, but the fact of the matter is that if you do anything in these matters you have got to take a position and you start from there, and that is what we have done.

There will be discussion about these matters, but that does not mean that presently the situation is open. I read the press reports, and what is building up here is whether we are to say that there is going to be a firm wall built around Metro Toronto or that there is not. The question can never be that black and white and I think any member of this House would realize that.

On the other hand, if we are to get on with the whole process of establishing other regional governments in the area, you have to take a position and start from there. So if you want to know what government policy is, it has not changed since the statements that I made in this House and those made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Nixon: If I could pursue this — one further question if I may. The statement that the Premier has read to us calling for continuing involvement and consultation is all very well, but according to press reports the Minister, who speaks for the government in this regard, is announcing perhaps — he is not back from the announcement yet according to the newspapers — that there will not be further expansion permitted in the Metropolitan area towards the north and east. I wonder if the leader of the government might be able to confirm that that is in fact irrevocable policy.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, as I say, Mr. Speaker, that is a decision which was made here and has been announced. But I will not permit the government to be put in a position whereby if we do find out that it is necessary as the discussions continue that there be some alterations in the boundaries it will immediately be thrown back at us that we said it was a fixed, immutable rule that we would not change the boundaries of metropolitan Toronto. One has to use a little common sense.

Mr. Nixon: So if you do not want to be in that position —

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No. I do not want to be in that position and I point out to you, you have got to use a little common sense when you start to deal with matters of this kind. We took a position from which to start; we have set out how we propose to deal with it, and that is it. It is all there in our statements.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is the answer to the question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for High Park wish to speak on a point of order?

Mr. Shulman: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that it has been accepted practice in all Legislatures that announcements that are going to affect the market price of securities should be made after the market closes.

I think a serious gaff has occurred here today, sir, and that those who are in this Chamber are now aware of certain information—three quarters of an hour before the market closes—which is going to seriously affect the price of a number of stocks on the Toronto Stock Exchange. I would like to suggest to you, sir, that this has been a very serious error and I hope that you will impress upon the Minister he should not make this error in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has two questions from yesterday of the Prime Minister and one today.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the question to the Prime Minister today is:

1. Will the Premier advise the House how he can equate the listing in the parliamentary guide which shows the Premier of Ontario receiving $30,000 a year, and the Premier of Quebec receiving $22,000 a year; the members of the legislative assembly in Quebec receiving $18,000 a year, and the members of this legislative assembly in Ontario $8,000 plus $4,000 expenses.

2. How can the Premier equate the paying of janitors in high schools of the province $11,500 a year, which is equal to the payment which members of this Assembly are now receiving?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have not checked these figures. I do not know what the Premier of Quebec gets and I do not equate figures of this type; I do not consider that part of my function. So when you say how do I equate, I say I do not equate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has two questions from yesterday of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Sargent: A question of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Further to the Premier's statement on jobs for students this summer, will he advise why he will not consider a tax concession plan for industry to employ students during the summer months—which is in effect in New York State now—the augmentation of a plan similar to the one under way in Nova Scotia to employ students building low cost housing as a part of the construction force this summer? And will the Premier advise why he cannot cut $10 million off highway construction this year and supply 20,000 university and high school students with summer jobs to give them $500 each to continue education this fall?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member says, "will he advise why he will not consider"—nobody has asked me to consider tax concessions until his question came along. I will now consider it and tell him that I am not really convinced that this is any answer to the problem. I think that the approach we are taking, when we are asking for—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well if you want an answer to the question, you might listen. If you do not care, be quiet and I will tell the rest of the members the answer to your question.

We do not have to grant tax concessions. We think that there are job opportunities available in this province for students that can be developed without dipping into the public purse to the extent of making tax concessions. I do not know what the tax concessions would be and then I think, of course, we are right into the situation we wish to avoid — where we are subsidizing young people for doing work that is not worth what they are paid to do it. I do not think that is good either for the young person involved or for the taxpayer.

Secondly, the augmentation of a plan similar to the one underway in Nova Scotia—well I believe that there was an article in one of the newspapers regarding this. But it is a pilot project only. It has not been accepted by the Nova Scotia government. I do not know that it would be applicable in this province and, in any event, as I have pointed out to you already, we have our own programme which we would like to see work for a year before we consider any other changes there might be.

Mr. Sargent: What is your programme?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well if you had been here when I announced it, you would know all about it. Just refer to Hansard and you will see it all laid out. Do you say it will not work until you have given it a chance.

Now in reply to the hon. member's third question—

Mr. Sargent: All you are doing is—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Wait and see. You want me to advise why I cannot cut $10 million off highway construction and supply 20,000 university and high school students with summer jobs, and give them $500 each to continue their education.

I do not quite understand what you mean. There are several interpretations that may be put upon this question. If you were suggesting that we take $10 million off the highway budget and distribute it to 20,000 university and high school students at the rate of $500 each, that is one question that we would not consider, of course.

We have a question of loans and bursaries already—loans and grants to university students. Out of the public purse we pay about $3,000 for every university student in the province. Now you are suggesting that we cut back in the highway programme.

I do not know whether that would be in the riding of the member for Sudbury, who wants more roads up there, or whether it would be up in Grey county. You want all the roads dispensed with and then a handout of $500 to 20,000 students—

Mr. Sargent: What is the programme?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will get to that. That is the other interpretation.

Are we to take the taxpayer's money and cut down on the number of highways we build in the province, in order to make work where jobs do not exist? I do not think we really want to do that either. We do not think that is an efficient approach.

We will, as a government, employ more than 8,000 students this summer, but as a matter of policy none will be working at jobs that are not meaningful jobs. They will be paid for what they do and they will provide effort in the job equivalent to what they are paid.

We do not propose to introduce a new method of subsidizing university students by creating jobs where jobs do not exist, simply to put money in their pockets—and particularly if this is going to mean—in terms in which the member phrased the question—that we are going to cut down our highway construction programme in some part of the province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will continue with his question.

Mr. Sargent: I would just say, Mr. Speaker, that a lot of people would be glad to get a letter from the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member has another question which he will place, please.

Mr. Sargent: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Prime Minister—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Ask him that one about the pay again.

Mr. Sargent: All the men behind the Prime Minister are laughing at him, not with him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did the member look behind himself?

Mr. Sargent: A fine-looking group.

Will the Premier advise the House why the Ontario government is advertising in London newspapers and other European papers, offering jobs to people to come to Ontario to work, in view of the high scale of unemployment in this province. Will the Premier advise why, with all our technology and resources in Ontario, with the vast amounts spent on our educational system, we cannot find Canadians and train them for the large list of job openings being advertised in Europe?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would say this, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario immigration service provides a specialized service to employers in this province who cannot obtain the skilled labour here that they want. Those ads are placed by the Ontario immigration service. They are paid for by the employer who wants the skilled help. During a meeting this morning that we had with the Ontario federation of labour, the Minister of Trade and Development pointed out it is estimated that each skilled worker of this type probably produced about another seven jobs.

These are highly specialized jobs for which industry in this province needs certain people and we attempt and co-operate with the employer to find these specialized skills. There are some school boards and hospitals that regularly recruit in the United Kingdom; occasionally Hydro does for very specialized skills. We have had a very high demand for a good number of years because of the expansion of industry in the province for certain specialized skills. There are shortages.

“In view of the high scale of unemployment in this province”—once again you have allowed a statement of fact in a question, which should not be there because it is quite erroneous. There is not a high scale of unemployment in this province. In fact, in January, unemployment in this province reached the lowest seasonally-adjusted rate it has been for a long, long time, 2.7 per cent. At that rate, you really are talking about full employment. Even at that rate we are employing 152,000 more people in this province in January, 1969, than we employed in January, 1968. I think the rate of 2.7 per cent is about as close to full employment as anybody is ever going to get. It simply means that the inference or the statement in the member's question is not right.

As far as training people for particular jobs—why we cannot find Canadians and train them for this large list of jobs—we still permit people to decide their own way of life in this province. We do not direct people into courses. We let the market place exert its influence and by and large people will train themselves for those areas in which their employment might more easily be felt.

Quite often we have shortages of skills or skilled workers which arise in certain areas and which can happen very suddenly in a localized way. That is why we have the machinery that we have to fill these jobs. But we are examining our courses all the time. We relate the courses that are offered to the needs and the forecast needs of industry in the province in order that we may provide the courses that will train people for the jobs that are going to be there when they finish. We have not yet reached the point, and I hope we never will, when we take a group of people and say “thou must be trained in this”. We leave that freedom to the individual to decide what training he will take.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): A question of the Prime Minister:

In view of the Prime Minister's statement that only a nucleus of key men would be hired from outside the area to work on the Ontario Hydro Lower Notch project at Cobalt, and in view of the high unemployment rate in northeastern Ontario—

(a) will the Prime Minister instruct the appropriate Minister to take immediate action to prevent the importation of 23 workers from Mont Joli, Quebec, by subcontractors, Messrs. Bijou and Rice, for work on the project?

(b) will the Prime Minister further request the appropriate Minister to instruct both prime and subcontractors to hire all workers, other than key workers, through the local Canada Manpower office as long as workers are available from that source?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think a practically identical question was asked of the Minister responsible yesterday and he said he would take it as notice. Now the question is redirected to me in precisely the same form, so the answer will appear in due course on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. Prime Minister that it was directed to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) and by him referred to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales), who reported to Mr. Speaker who then reported to the House that it did not fall within the jurisdiction of either of those two departments. Therefore, the question was redirected to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Nixon: So I guess the Premier is stuck with it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is what happens, Mr. Speaker, when you are not here for a day. I would be quite happy to take this as notice and I will do the necessary research to provide an answer.

Of course, we do not control it. These men are employed by the local contractors who have been awarded the job, and I notice, too, that you have made the exception for key workers. I will have to find out who these people are that are coming in from Quebec. There will have to be a little work done to find out what the facts are, because I have already learned from long experience in this House that I cannot rely completely on the facts as set out in the questions addressed to me. I will do the best research to find out whether the facts in this question are correct.

Mr. Jackson: Will the Prime Minister accept two small supplementary questions?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Even a large one.

Mr. Jackson: First of all, will he tell us who the appropriate Minister is and, sec-only, would it not be advisable for the province to write in these conditions on contracts before they are let?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I want to find out, as to what, in effect, is in the contract between the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission and the contractors. I believe in some of their contracts matters like this are dealt with. Probably we will find when we get to it the whole thing revolves around that question of key workers; that may not be so but I am quite prepared to find out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre now has the floor.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had three questions for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. He answered them in part but I want to repeat these questions because I want to ask a supplementary, to cover the question he did not answer fully.

Is the Minister considering legislation to deter non-cash or non-monetary acquisition of control by conglomerates; secondly, has the chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission recommended such legislation; and thirdly, does the Minister share the concern about such takeovers publicly expressed recently by the chairman of the Securities Commission?

In fairness to the Minister, I would like to say I do not think that his statement will have any market effect on these stocks because this is not the first jurisdiction that has been giving consideration and has announced action on conglomerates. Thus the market already has had a drop as a result of previous jurisdictions taking action.

But I would like to ask an additional question—a supplementary question of the Minister—in view of the considerable material that is now available on the subject of these non-monetary takeovers and the mounting pressure for such takeovers, has the Minister given a target date for completion of the report so that legislation can be introduced in this session?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that I do not have legislation before me with respect to non-monetary acquisitions of control.

Secondly, no recommendation about such legislation has been made by the chairman of the commission to me.

Thirdly, the answer to the third question, I do not think, can be given in any yes or no fashion. I think one would have to look at the circumstances and the circulation surrounding any particular transaction so that it could be assessed in its right light and right circumstances.

With respect to the time factor, I think I agree with the hon. member that there is material available. One of my hopes is that this material which is available can be brought together quickly and we can assess from it just what further material is required to give us an adequate picture of the situation as it exists as quickly as possible.

I cannot give a target date but I am not talking in terms of a two-year study or anything of that sort. I would like it to be done as quickly as possible. Then, when the study is completed, we can look at it and see what action, if any, should be taken from the facts as presented.

Mr. Deacon: For clarification, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister advise me if this target date does mean he could consider recommending action by this Legislature, or not recommending it, during this session? This is my great concern.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not think, in all fairness that I could give a specific answer to that question. I shall ask as I have asked, that this study be proceeded with, with all despatch. It could be that it will not take a long period of time. On the other hand, if there is much research to be done, it could take a further amount of time and there is the question of how long this Legislature is going to sit. I certainly have no control over that matter and if, for instance, we were to wind up at the end of April, I doubt if the study would be completed by that time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Lands and Forests. Has the interdepartmental study on the effects of DDT been completed yet? If so, when will it be made public? If not, when will the study be completed?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member; this question should be directed to The Department of Energy and Resources Management because the chairman of the committee in question is the Deputy Minister of the department.

Mr. Deans: Pardon me, might I enquire, did the hon. Minister say to the irresponsible Minister?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just told the hon. member, the chairman of this committee comes under my colleague, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. His department is responsible for this report and naturally it should be directed to him.

An hon. member: That is your problem.

Mr. Deans: Might I, Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, enquire of the Minister of Lands and Forests why it is that on the three previous occasions I asked of him the answer to this same question, he answered me?

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker will transfer the question to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management for answer tomorrow. The hon. member for Thunder Bay has a question.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. What were the findings of the OWRC in their investigation of pollution of Lake Superior by Zenmac Mines at the concentrator at Selin?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the investigation revealed that due to severe icing conditions in the tailings impoundment area, there was some deterioration of effluent quality. The company has been requested to take appropriate corrective action by increasing the retention time within the holding base.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 24th order, committee of the whole House; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

THE APPRENTICESHIP AND TRADESMEN'S QUALIFICATION ACT, 1964

House in committee on Bill 56, An Act to amend The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964.

On section 1:

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, just a brief question. I wonder if the Minister would explain those persons referred to as the "other persons exempt" other than those that are specified in the section?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, this refers to tradesmen who are employed in industrial plants and performing their work there. Under a change in the regulations these people are no longer included if they are working in industrial plants.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, that is what I assumed and I mentioned that, on second reading, but there is nothing in the regulations, or in the Act itself, that spells out those that are exempt. You know, the regulations and the Act, tell us who are allowed to be certified, if their trade is designated, but there is nothing that makes exemptions. The Act only states what we know, that if they are industrial plants, they are exempt because they are not covered by the Act. In no place, does the regulation or the Act, say that employees in an industrial plant are exempt from the Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act. This is the question I am trying to arrive at.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I wonder if the member is aware that we changed the regulations, in pursuance to the report of the general advisory committee in reference to apprenticeship. Those recommendations were changed last year and now this provision is included in accordance with the recommendations made to us by the general advisory committee.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of those who are not expert in this field, would the Minister tell us what the classes are, that are exempt under the regulations from this section?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Well, for example, an industrial electrician or sheet metal worker employed in an industrial plant, is exempt, so long as he is working within the industrial plant, performing work there. If he were working independently outside, then he is not exempt.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister have the regulations here which provide for that exemption, or not?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I have an excerpt from them. I do not have the entire regulations here. They are under regulations 342-68. But, there is a provision for persons——permanently employed in an industrial plant while performing work entirely within the plant and premises or on land appertaining thereto, except work performed in the maintenance and repair of motor vehicles, trailers or conversion units registered for use on the highway under The Highway Traffic Act or (b), while engaged in a trade or occupation that, in the opinion of the director, is not one in respect of which compliance under sections 8 and 9 and subsection 2 of section 10 of the Act is required.

I would be glad to send this over to the hon. member if he would care to see it.

Mr. J. Renwick: I think it would be very useful, Mr. Chairman, because I certainly followed the first part, but I was completely lost in that reference to the last part—"in the opinion of the director."

In other words, not only is it to be established by regulation but then within the regulation there is a matter which is then within the opinion of the director, as to whether or not the exemption takes place. I think it is very unclear, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get a further clarification, if I may, and I should like to give some sort of an example, to arrive at my question.

At the present time the Steel Company of Canada has their own apprenticeship programme negotiated by the union and the company. I understand that a few weeks ago, there was application made by a representative of the apprentices in this particular plan—and the plan is registered—to have those apprentices under the negotiated apprenticeship plan. The Steel Company of Canada was to receive certification in their relative trade once they completed their apprenticeship programme under the apprenticeship plan in Stelco.

Some of those employees, I understand, have had an answer in the affirmative, that yes, they can now be registered and if they submit their names they will be registered under The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen Qualification Act. I am sure that there is a misunderstanding somewhere. They are of the impression that when they complete their apprenticeship programme under the Stelco plan, they will be certified tradesmen under their relative trade.

My opinion is that this is incorrect. Can the Minister enlighten me as to whether they would be entitled to have been certified as a tradesman completing their apprenticeship under the Stelco programme, or not?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Well, Mr. Chairman, I had not heard of this particular situation previously. But it would depend on whether the plan in this particular trade—and the training course—has been approved by our department. In any event, I will look into the situation since you have raised a particular case. I will see what we can do and I will advise you of it.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, this morning I was approached by a constituent who has a small roofing and sheet metal business. He is experiencing a great deal of trouble in keeping personnel, who seem to be frightened by the apprenticeship programme. Even though these chaps are experienced roofers and sheet metal people, they seem to be chaps that, somehow or other, are frightened off by the programme they find themselves having to enter into. I suppose they are not used to the book work and paper work and things like that.

I am wondering if the regulations and the flexibility, or discretion, you leave with the director is to help maintain the status quo condition. I understand this is your principle when you are bringing in these tradesmen regulations—that someone who has been in the trade for several years and has had experience in the trade, even though he does not exactly come up to the mark, there is room for some degree of discretion on the part of the director if there is a feeling that this man is qualified to work in that trade.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, the matter to which the hon. member is referring is under subsection 3 of section 10. It is a different section, and that is what we refer to as the “grandfather period,” where a person has been working in a trade which is to be made compulsory. If a person has been working in that trade with the experience and for the length of time required for training, normally he is given his licence initially during a particular period after the date for compulsory certification. It is a different section.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Just on that point, I was of the understanding that the grandfather clause had expired. Is that not so?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I am speaking in generalities. I am talking about a general situation and he is talking about a sheet metal trade and the difficulties in that.

I was dealing with the general situation.

In reference to the particular matter raised by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce and by the hon. member for York Centre, I am not aware of cases where people are being frightened off—I think that is the term you used—from the difficulties of the trade.

I think we should bear in mind that the manpower section of my department will always deal with these people and endeavour to assist them by providing extra guidance from our counsellors, if it is necessary. It may be at times that these people are not aware of all the requirements and perhaps need greater explanation than they are getting from their employer.

If you would care to give me the name or the particular area where they are employed so that we can deal with it with some particularity, I would be glad to do so.

Mr. Deacon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I will give the Minister that name.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, if I may just clarify the point in relation to the grandfather clause. Am I to understand that the grandfather clause differs with each trade insofar as the length of time is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, it does not. It depends on the time when it is going to be announced—the time when the trade shall become compulsorily certified—and it is worked from that time.

There is certain flexibility, but we try to keep it uniform for each one.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister if in this bill there is any protection to the apprentice from being laid off by the concern to whom he happens to be apprenticed?

I can specifically refer to the Ford Motor Company a year or so ago when they were having the changeover; one of the class of individuals that did suffer were the apprentices in the tool and die industry. These apprentices looked forward to permanent employment with Ford Motor Company in developing skill in tool and die making. All of a sudden, they found themselves released by the company and unable to continue in their tool and die apprenticeship programme at the Ford Motor Company.

I know The Department of Labour in town did attempt to place the individuals throughout the community, but I think there should be a little more protection for the apprentice. Once he engages upon an apprenticeship programme he should be allowed to complete that programme.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, that is another matter that is not included within the principles of the bill presently before us.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, is there actual protection for an employee, or an apprentice, somewhere in the regulations, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Well, Mr. Chairman, obviously there was a problem in the case that you recite of the Ford Motor Company. They were laying off a large number of people because there was no work there.

If that situation generally develops then I think it cannot be avoided, but the Ford Motor Company, in that instance, undertook to retain, or bring back, those people as quickly as possible. There were a number of them who did not find positions, as you and I know, because we tried to work it out, but normally if the work is there the training programme is to be continued and to be finalized.

Mr. B. Newman: Normally the programme would be approximately four years, if I am not mistaken, Mr. Chairman. Surely industry should know, or should be able to programme themselves, so that for a four-year programme they would know that they would need X number of apprentices. I think it is incumbent upon industry and the department here to see that once individuals are taken on in an apprenticeship programme that they be allowed to continue that programme to completion.

CITY OF LONDON

House in committee on Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the city of London.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): The hon. member for Elgin has an amendment to this section and he is absent for a moment. I wonder if we can hold this bill until tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman: Hold that section?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Hold that section, yes.

Mr. Chairman: Could you not read it for him?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview) This is highly irregular.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I could read the amendment but I have not got the supporting documents if there is any argument.

The amendment would say that section 3—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The hon. member for Elgin is here now.

Mr. Chairman: Bill Pr3—you have an amendment for section 3.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): Mr. Chairman, I move that Bill Pr3, an Act respecting the city of London, be amended by adding thereto a new section 3, as follows:

Notwithstanding any special or general Acts the board of education for the city of London shall continue to be composed of seven members to be elected at large by a vote of public school supporters only, and two members to be elected at large by a vote of Roman Catholic school supporters only, for the city of London by renumbering sections 3 and 4 as sections 4 and 5.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member could explain the necessity for that amendment. It was not discussed at the private bills committee.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): How do you know?

Mr. McNeil: Yes, I think I can, Mr. Chairman. Apparently when the city of London had an annexation a few years ago, the Ontario Municipal Board ruled that there would be a school board of seven members to be elected by a vote at large and two to be elected from—that is, seven members to be elected from public school supporters and two from separate school supporters.

Then, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, when the new Act came into force last year, they were under the impression that this municipal board ruling would be continued. But they found, after the bill had been introduced and passed by the private bills committee, that the new legislation superseded the municipal board ruling. That is the reason for the request of this Act. Just a little detail.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Just housekeeping.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a little confusing. I was not able to follow the explanation too clearly. I wonder if the proper notice has been given of the intention to introduce this amendment to the public school board and to the separate school board. If this, in fact, is the case, can the member tell us how this notice was given? Was it given by registered mail, by advertisement, and is there any proof that can be brought to us to show that proper notice was given? Because this is the reason for all the elaborate procedures before the private bills are dealt with. Most unusual way of proceeding, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McNeil: Yes, there has been a resolution tabled in council. There has also been a letter from the school board supporting this. They have all been tabled with the Clerk of the Legislature, and I can assure the hon. member that everything is quite in order. This is a request of the city of London. There is no opposition to this legislation and I would not think you would be in a position to oppose it at the present time.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. McNeil moves that Bill Pr3, an Act respecting the city of London be amended thereto by adding a new section 3, as follows:

Notwithstanding any special or general Acts, the board of education for the city of London shall continue to be composed of seven members to be elected at large by a vote of public school supporters only, and two members to be elected at large by a vote of Roman Catholic school supporters only, of the city of London, and by renumbering sections 3 and 4, as sections 4 and 5.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the member about the two individuals who would be elected at large by separate school supporters? Must those individuals be separate school supporters? The individuals themselves, must it be separate school supporters who run for the office?

Mr. Singer: Very good question.

Mr. B. Newman: Because apparently, according to The Municipal Act in other municipalities and even my own, a member who was a public school supporter was elected to the separate school board. We discussed this in the House and attempted to have a change made so that only separate school supporters could stand for office to a separate school board.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Chairman, that is good question. I understand that separate school supporters elect two separate school members. This is the way it has been explained to me.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment states that two members to be elected at large by a vote of Roman Catholic school be supporters only of the city of London.

Mr. B. Newman: That is right, I understand that. But the individual running for the office to be the representative on the separate school board, he does not have to be a separate school supporter. He could be a separate school supporter and still run to be elected to the separate school board.

An hon. member: That would be highly irregular.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, it is all right to say that it is highly irregular, but it did happen in my community, and if I am not mistaken it happened in North Bay.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What would happen as a result?

Mr. B. Newman: Why should not then a separate school supporter be allowed to run for a public school board office?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why do you not bring that up on another bill?

Mr. B. Newman: I am asking now because this happens to be apropos to the amendment to the Act.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Chairman, I have a letter here from Mr. Mitches, who is the solicitor for the school board of the city of London, and I might quote this letter Mr. Chairman.

As we mentioned when annexation was ordered by the Ontario Municipal Board on October 3, 1960, to take effect January 1, 1961, it ordered that the board of education for the city of London should be composed of seven members to be elected at large by the vote of Protestant school supporters only, and two members to be appointed by the board of trustees of the Roman Catholic schools for the city of London.

As a result of the recent new legislation which consolidated school boards, the order of the Ontario Municipal Board has now been superseded, which means that the board of education of the city of London would have a minimum of 14 members. The reason that the London board did not move earlier is because at first, the opinion was that the Ontario Municipal Board had the power to review the matter and extend its order.

But this is not the case, and, secondly, because final solicitors' opinions were not obtained until February 6, 1969, by the board of education for the city of London, and February 25, 1969, by the city council.

The board has given serious consideration to this matter and has decided to retain, if at all possible, the present numbers. To support this——and I have in my possession a photostatic copy of a letter dated March 3, addressed to His Worship Mayor McClure, and members of the council of the corporation of the city of London, and signed by Dr. H. Dorothy Smith, chairman of the board of education for the city of London. If the members so desire I would be quite prepared to read that letter.

As chairman of one of our local boards, the board of education for the city of London, I beg to inform you that the trustees have passed a resolution which recommends that the present number of trustees be re-elected at the next municipal elections for the purposes of school Acts, that is, namely, seven public school trustees, and two Roman Catholic separate school trustees.

We appreciate that at present your council has petitioned the Legislature of the province of Ontario for the passing of a private bill. We would appreciate your council's assistance and consent if the necessary motions and approvals are obtained from the Legislature by the board of education, your council would permit a part two to be added to your private bill, which would petition the Legislature for the granting of a total of nine trustees elected as herebefore set out, to the board of education.

We would ask that the council consider this matter this evening, and we would respectfully request that your council support us in this regard.

And, Mr. Chairman, a resolution from council:

I hereby certify that the municipal council at a meeting of March 3, 1969 adopted the following resolution, namely;

That the Clerk of the legislative assembly be advised that in the event that the board of education is able to secure permission to incorporate in the city of London private bill, being Bill No. 3, of an additional part 2 dealing with the matter of electing and the number of trustees to serve on the board of education, the council of the corporation of the city of London consents to the said addition, which would have the effect of authorizing the election of seven public school trustees and two Roman Catholic separate school trustees as members of the said board of education; being understood that any costs involved would be borne by the board of education in accordance with their undertaking dated March 3, 1969, and that the solicitor for the board of education be authorized to inform the Clerk of the House and the private bills committee of this action, and further that the city solicitor be authorized to render any assistance as may be necessary to secure inclusion of the foregoing provision in the said private bill. Minute No. 203.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member still has not answered my question. The question is, may a public school supporter run for trustee to represent the separate schools in the city of London?

Mr. Chairman: That really has nothing to do with this amendment, because the way the law is now will still apply.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Mr. Chairman, in listening to the member for Windsor-Walkerville, I believe this exists within all the separate school boards in Ontario, does it not? I do not think there is anything that says you must be a separate school supporter to be a trustee under The Separate Schools Act, is there? That is my understanding, but I am not sure of it.

Mr. B. Newman: Then may a separate school supporter become a trustee on the public school board? I am simply asking for reciprocal treatment, that is all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If that is a matter of government policy. Should this have a bearing on this private bill?

Mr. B. Newman: Sure, it may be. I am simply asking if in this bill a public school supporter may run as a trustee—that is all.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman has suggested this amendment does not change whatever the existing law is at the time. Does the member's amendment carry?

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, let me speak further to this. I started this discussion off perhaps with a bit of tongue in cheek, but as I have looked at the Act and listened to the hon. member, I think there is really a much more basic objection to this amendment.

The city of London bill, which was processed through the private bills committee in accordance with all of our procedures, deals only with hospitals. Now, without any notice to us, without any notice to the private bills committee, without any notice to any of the people who live in London, suddenly the member for Elgin gets up and introduces a bill dealing with the separate school board and the public school board.

If we are prepared to accept this and do away with all the safeguards that we have built up procedurally over the years to protect people and give them an opportunity to be heard when private bills are dealt with, then there would be nothing to prevent—on a dull afternoon with minor attendance in the House—somebody coming in under the guise of a city of London bill or a city of Toronto bill and introducing something that has never been properly considered.

There is no Cabinet Minister here. The Minister of Education has given us no opinion. He would have had his representatives at the private bills committee had there been an educational matter there. We have no idea what The Department of Education thinks or any of their officials. We have no idea other than what the member read to us about what notice was given, what advertisements were made, if any. There was nothing like this before the private bills committee.

I think this is highly irregular and I would urge the member, to save us all some embarrassment, that he withdraw this amendment. If his amendment was in line with something that was in the bill, that had something to do with hospitals, and generally was within the principles of the bill as laid down and it was a grammatical correction or a correction to change some slight oversight, I would say fine, let us accept the amendment. But here he comes in with a completely brand new principle, nothing to do with what was before the private bills committee, nothing to do with what was before the House before, and I think this amendment should be withdrawn.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Chairman, I cannot shed a great deal of light on this, except to make one or two brief comments. Obviously this is being handled by the member for Elgin because of the death of the member for Middlesex South (Mr. Olde) in whose name this bill stands. I do point out to the hon. member for Downsview that the amendment went on the order paper Tuesday, March 11, so that the House has had notice of this for more than a week. Whether or not that notice was likewise given to interested parties in London, I cannot say.

I do not know the appropriate procedure and I do not want to offend my friend, the member for Elgin, but the idea occurs to me that this might be taken back into the private bills committee, if that is acceptable to you, and that would give an opportunity to the members of that committee to consider the pros and cons of this request—which apparently has the support of the school board and of the council and perhaps of others in the city of London.

Mr. Singer: I think that is the least—

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): I think, Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances, there is obviously some misunderstanding or there is still some information necessary about this bill. So with the permission of the House perhaps we would just leave private bill No. 3 on the order paper in committee and then have all these questions raised. If the member would not have any objection.

Mr. McNeil: I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to it going back to the private bills committee. As I understood it from the Clerk of the House, when there is legislation of this type that is being superseded by a public Act then it is not necessary for it to go back to the private bills committee—but I am not opposed to that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it should be pointed out there was notice of this.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Revenue and the House leader, but let me enunciate this principle very clearly. I do not think that we should ever establish a policy that where we have dealt with a bill in a certain form in the private bills committee, an amendment purely extraneous to its content should be introduced here unless whoever introduces it comes with the advice and the assistance of the appropriate Cabinet Minister and with appropriate proof of notice and advertising and so on. Otherwise there is no point in having a private bills committee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The notice is here.

Mr. Singer: No, that is not sufficient notice. We have no way of telling at all, whether all of the other safeguards have been looked after. Those safeguards are there for good reason.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fairness to the hon. member for Elgin, he pointed out he was advised by the Clerk.

Mr. Singer: I would reiterate, and reiterate as forcibly as I can, that if these procedures are meaningful at all, then they should be adhered to if it is going to be government policy. Out of the blue, we have an amendment that has not been discussed before—that is fine too, we can deal with that in the appropriate manner. As I say, I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion offered by the House leader.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not a matter of government policy.

Mr. Singer: It is government policy if the government is going to bull it through this afternoon. And if the hon. Minister is not prepared to accept that statement, we can argue about it further. Does the Minister want to divide the House on it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not want to divide the House on anything, I want to make that clear, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member advised this House that he was advised by the Clerk of the Legislature that this was the manner in which to proceed with this bill. In all fairness to him, the suggestion should not be made that anybody is trying to bull anything through or that he was doing it in an improper fashion.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if that was the advice given by the Clerk, then the advice was wrong, and if the government had any intention of bulling this kind of an agreement through the House it was undemocratic. If the government wants to carry on with that kind of thing, we will divide the House on it, we will make our speeches about it and we will let the public judge who is right.

Hon. Mr. White: I think we are all in agreement—

Mr. Chairman: We will not proceed with Bill Pr3.

Hon. Mr. White: If I may just say this one word, I think we are all in agreement that this change should be looked at by the private bills committee, that being the wish of the Legislature, and if that meets with the concurrence of the hon. member for Elgin, I should like to say that this is an extraordinary situation. Of course, the bill is standing in the name of a deceased member. I personally would like to commend and thank the member for Elgin and the member for Lambton for assuming the responsibility of ushering this bill through. They have done a commendable job and the fact we now prefer that the matter go into committee is no reflection on the able way in which they have presented the case to us.

Mr. Chairman: Bill Pr3 will now be held over—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): May I raise a point of order here, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Young: It is just this: A bill of this nature which introduces new material from the city of London—there is nothing of this in the original bill—is a different proposition, a different subject matter. Should this not be vetted through the regular committee dealing with stationery and printing, through which all bills of this nature go at the beginning? It seems to me the process has to start there and move on through in the proper way, go to the committee and come back to the House. There is a stage there I think that we cannot forget.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, this is the point that has been made and we certainly concur in this. I hope we will agree that the whole exercise has been very informative and very instructive and a very innocent series of events.

If you will withdraw Bill Pr3 may we go now to Pr5?

CARLETON UNIVERSITY

House in committee on Bill Pr25, An Act respecting Carleton University.

Mr. Chairman: On section 1:

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on Bill Pr25, on section 1, I am not a member of the private bills committee and I am quite confused about the provision of section 1 of the bill. It indicates that there is now going to be a number of students who will become members of the faculty board, which is a body which has existed in Carleton University and in Carleton College before for some considerable time, in accordance with procedures to be established by bylaw.

I have no intention of embarrassing in any way the member who is sponsoring the bill but I simply point out to the committee that the Act itself, under which Carleton University and before it Carleton College was constituted, makes provision for the bylaws to be passed by the board of governors of the university. It also provides certain limited authority for the senate of that university to pass bylaws provided the board "has not otherwise determined".

Had the member been here who was sponsoring the bill, I would certainly have wanted to be advised as to what kind of bylaw is going to be passed under the authority of this revised definition of faculty board and whether the procedures which are going to be established by bylaws are going to provide for some, at least, minimum representation of students on the faculty board. I think we are entitled to know when this bill comes through committee of the whole House that, in a matter which is of such widespread public importance at the present time even though this procedure of a private bill is still used, we should have a very clear idea as to what kind of bylaw the university expects to pass, pursuant to the authority which we are about to confer on them.

I can make these comments again on section 2 of the bill, but I want to draw to the attention of the committee that in passing this bill there is no indication whatsoever as to the composition of the faculty board, other than the very general statement or general clause which is included in the bill—

Together with such students of the faculty or school as may be chosen to be members of each faculty board according to procedures established by bylaw.

It may be that the member who sponsored the bill would be able to provide some explanation to the House about the bylaw which is going to be passed, or about at least the framework within which the university is considering passing the bylaw. I will defer any further remarks, Mr. Chairman, until you get to section 2 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 stand as part of the bill then?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, what happens in the Legislature in this event, where there are questions to be asked of specific clauses, quite specific questions, and the member who sponsored the private bill is not present nor is the Minister who would normally be responsible for the department?

Mr. Chairman: I think under the circumstances, in fairness to the sponsor who is otherwise engaged, it would be wise to withdraw the bill from consideration at this stage until the sponsor is here to provide the information that is required. Perhaps we could leave the bill on the order paper in committee and consider it at such time as the sponsors return.

House in committee on Bill Pr34, An Act respecting the town of Mississauga.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill Pr34 reported.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee rise and report certain bills without amendments.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report several bills without amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The thirty-fourth order; second reading of Bill 83, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

THE CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue) moves second reading of Bill 83, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon) was on his feet first.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. White: I wish to remind the hon. members of the changes which this would effect. And then at the end of the debate I should like to have the opportunity of rebutting some of the criticism.

These remarks will be very brief, because the Treasurer did explain in some detail on March 4 the changes that are being proposed and the reasons for those changes. Hon. members will find these comments on pages 25 and 26 of the Budget statement.

The amendments to the Act respect four major changes which can be summarized as follows:

1. Acceleration of corporations tax instalment payments.
2. Raising the rate of capital tax from one-twentieth of one per cent to one-tenth of one per cent, with a minimum of $50 per year, except for some special cases where the capital tax will be $5 per year.

3. Providing for capital tax and other special taxes to be paid in addition to income tax otherwise payable.

4. Abolishing the general place of business tax.

A system of bi-monthly instalment payments will replace the quarterly system and will apply to all corporations whose fiscal year commences on or after March 15. The first instalment payment on the bi-monthly basis will be made on the fifteenth day of the third month for the fiscal year in which tax is payable, with the remainder of the instalments falling due at regular two-month intervals thereafter.

This has the effect of accelerating the first instalment by two months and the last instalment by one month. The acceleration of instalments does not apply to those companies, the fiscal years of which commence prior to March 15, 1969.

No changes were made for the due date for payment of the balance of tax for a current year, which remains at six months following the close of a fiscal year.

The rate of the capital tax has been increased from one twentieth of one per cent to one tenth of one per cent, but in no case will the capital tax be less than $50 per year, except for those corporations previously subject to the specially reduced place of business tax of $5, in which case the tax for these corporations will remain at $5 payable as a tax on capital, rather than as a tax with respect to place of business.

These changes apply to corporations the fiscal years of which end on or after March 15, 1969 and subsequent fiscal years.

Another significant change involves the repeal of section 12 of the Act, which permitted deduction of income tax from capital tax, place of business tax and special taxes. This means that the deduction will no longer be permitted and that capital tax and other special taxes will be payable in addition to income taxes. This applies to corporations, the fiscal years of which end on or after March 15, 1969 and subsequent years.

Payment of the capital tax calculated at the new rate will apply to those corporations whose fiscal year ends on or after March 15, 1969. This additional payment will be due on or before the fourth instalment date, which is the fifteenth day of the second month following the close of the fiscal year which falls in the transitional period.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a brief condensation of the legislative changes that are contained in this bill.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the recommended changes on the whole in this section are incorporating some of the recommendations of the select committee and of the Smith committee.

One of the points that I was not quite able to unravel, in going through this Act, was the elimination of place of business tax. This applies still, I suppose, to non-profit organizations and the co-operatives, but no longer applies to a corporation's share capital. I would appreciate clarification of the exact position there.

The capital tax of one tenth of one per cent is something that causes a lot of returns. The recommendation of the select committee was that we have a flat tax of $65, which would, in effect, bring in the same total amount of revenue. It would require a lot less fussing and return making on the part of corporations as they change their amount of capital.

It is not an onerous amount of money and the amount of money now being paid in is really just sufficient to cover the cost of the operations. It is not a source of important revenue to the government, and it seems odd that we should still ignore the need for simplicity and keep this complicated form of calculating the capital tax on a basis of some percentage.

Otherwise, in the Act the new basis of paying income tax in six equal instalments seems like a reasonable way of making use of a corporation's money as it is earned. In view of that, I am in full support of this amendment.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, all I wanted to say was that any comments that we wish to make on this bill can be dealt with just as readily when it comes through committee of the whole House, clause by clause.

Mr. Speaker: Is there anyone else wishing to speak on this bill? Does the hon. Minister have anything further to say?

Hon. Mr. White: No, Mr. Speaker. I quite agree with the member for Riverdale that we can discuss the details of this better in committee. Permit me to deal with one or two points made by the hon. member for York Centre.

We are eliminating a place of business tax entirely, for both profit and non-profit organizations. In certain instances, however, the capital tax will apply where previously it did not and where previously the place of business tax did apply. We are simplifying the situation to an extent by having one tax instead of two taxes.

The select committee recommendation of a flat tax of $60, or $65—my memory tells me it was $60, but the hon. member has used the figure $65—was found by us, on scrutiny, to be less than would be needed to produce the amount of revenue which we require from this particular source. I think it is not entirely fair to say this ignores the simplicity of it, because we have moved to a $50 minimum—we have moved from two taxes to one tax.

We are making certain other administrative changes, all of which are designed to make the application of the tax more simple and the administration of the tax easier and more efficient both for the department and for the taxpayers.

I point out to my hon. friend that these several points—I am not including acceleration of corporation tax instalment payments, which turns up $42 million—will produce another $17 million per year.

It is for those reasons, of course, that the changes are being made—to make the taxes simpler, more efficient, more equitable and more productive.

I will be very glad, Mr. Speaker, when the bill comes before the committee of the whole House, to answer questions in greater detail—to clarify the intent and the effect of these various clauses.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 42nd order, House in committee of supply; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TOURISM AND INFORMATION

Mr. Chairman: The estimates of The Department of Tourism and Information.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Chairman, I am delighted again to report to the members on the activities of The Department of Tourism and Information, The Department of Public Records and Archives, and the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology.

You will note as our estimates progress that we seek only modest increases for the 1969-1970 fiscal year to cover the natural and inevitable rise in operating costs. The one exception is the Centennial centre, where I am asking the Legislature to vote about $1 million more than last year. This reflects, not only the final development costs leading up to the public opening of the centre on September 26, but also the projected operating expenditures for the remainder of the fiscal year thereafter. Of course much, if not all, of this amount will be offset by revenue.

My department plans no major new programmes in 1969-1970, Mr. Chairman, but it should not be taken from this that the year will be one of consolidation. During my tenure as Minister I have been gratified that we have been able to limit increases in departmental overhead in order to maintain flexibility in promotional expenditures. The result has been a far greater growth in programmes, as compared to maintenance, permitting us to extract the greatest possible degree of efficiency from a relatively small but skilled staff.

There exists in my department a high level of enthusiasm for the development and promotion of the travel industry in Ontario, even if there is sometimes discontent at the resources available to do the job. But if such difficulties do in fact exist, our people seem to be able to make up for it by giving a little more of themselves.

For this, Mr. Chairman, I should like to express my thanks to all members of my department, not only for their spirit and their vigour, but also for a quality of performance that is unsurpassed anywhere.

A major undertaking of the information and promotion division this year will be the preparation of a comprehensive document outlining the role and functions of the 36 regional tourist councils in the province. This study, we expect, will provide specific guidelines to assist councils in getting the most benefit out of their promotional funds and efforts.

This year, the division will begin work with the St. Lawrence parks commission to prepare a promotional programme similar to one provided for the Huronia historical parks a year ago.

Interest in tourism marketing plans prepared for eastern Ontario and Metropolitan Toronto has led to discussions with other regional groups considering similar marketing plans for their areas.

Preliminary work on such a plan already has been started in southwestern Ontario at the request of the newly-organized co-ordinating council of the "Land Between the Lakes" tourist councils. When completed, this plan will provide a comprehensive and long-range study of tourism marketing and development needs for an area stretching roughly from Windsor to Dunnville and northward to Tobermory and Collingwood.

This year we seek $1,875,000 for advertising outlays and publications, an increase of $155,000 over last year. However, this amount will not, in fact, be sufficient to cover rises in advertising rates and production costs and, therefore, there will be no expansion of last year's programme.

My department will continue to use colour television commercials in 15 major United States metropolitan markets. These commercials are really miniature documentaries of Ontario vacations that had great acceptance in 1968. Hon. members will recall that they received two international awards: top prize among 163 entries in the festival of the Japanese radio and TV council, and third prize in the international film and TV festival in New York City.

We will also continue our print campaign in US and Canadian magazines. The creative approach for our US magazine ads utilizes large, enticing pictures, light-hearted, but provocative headlines, and copy that has been geared to our research findings.

Again we have a special programme for northern Ontario, featuring some of the more rugged personalities of the north photographed for us by Yousuf Karsh. This will be the third year we have used this particular approach and we feel it has been most effective in creating a favourable image for travel in northern Ontario.

We will continue the programme instituted last year of inserting full-page, full-colour advertisements in a US hunting and fishing publication, hopefully with the co-operation again of the more than 170 members of the northern Ontario tourist outfitters who joined with us in this venture in 1968. A direct mail piece incorporating our ad and the ads of the operators was made into a merchandising piece and distributed at outdoor shows and through US sporting goods shops, a co-operative effort that greatly increased the impact of Ontario's outdoor story.

Enquiries that result from our advertising campaigns are backed up with a number of alluring and informative books, or brochures, which are distributed on a wide scale. We believe literature is the most tangible means of portraying Ontario's image to the travelling public. In addition to a general lure book and regional route books, we produce of course, a series of special interest publications, such as "Ontario Fishing", "Ontario Hunting", "Rocks and Minerals", "Ontario Travel Facts", "Ski Facilities", "Ontario Campsites", and so on.

For the last two years we have co-operated with the Quebec Department of Tourism, Fish and Game in the production of a joint publication called "Heritage Highways". This book depicts the pleasures and attractions of a motor trip from Niagara Falls through to the Gaspé. Once again we propose to carry out this co-operative venture supported by an advertising and promotional campaign in our major US markets.

An off-shoot of this co-operative programme has been the development of a very real entente between my department and the department of my Quebec colleague, the hon. Gabriel Loubier. Contacts at the Ministerial and senior official level have led to a continuous and valuable interchange of ideas between Quebec and Ontario. Mr. Loubier has won the admiration of all of us in Ontario for his imagination and for his concern in the development of tourism in central Canada. It is a pleasure to work with him.

Mr. Chairman, we are gratified that "Man and His World" will again open its doors in 1969, for it will give impetus to travel throughout central Canada. This is a wonderful tourist attraction which, I must admit, causes some envy on our part. However, I assure my friends from Quebec it is not a petty envy. All of us hope that "Man and His World" will be a resounding success—just as we expect the new Ontario pavilion at the CNE and the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology will be real competition for "Man and His World."

The press relations section of the publicity branch has added the names of 400 trade publications to the mailing list for "Synopsis"—the name given to a story and photo service designed exclusively for US and Canadian weekly news papers and house magazines. This mailing list now has grown to 2,059.

In addition, the press relations services 445 US daily newspapers within our prime tourist marketing area, as well as 238 members of the Society of American Travel Writers and 1,039 North American outdoor writers.

This year my department will participate in the first Canadian conference of the American Society of Industrial Editors in Toronto April 29 to May 2, where we will be hosts at the opening luncheon.

In conjunction with the State of Minnesota we are planning pre- and post-convention tours of northwestern Ontario for the Outdoor Writers of America in early summer. Our press relations section plans this year to invite more and more top freelance travel and outdoor writers from the United States to tour the province's major attractions and gather material for articles.

As part of our convention promotion programme we will soon publish a special supplement on Ontario's convention facilities and attractions in "Sales Meetings" magazine, circulated to 46,000 decision-makers in the convention and sales meeting market. In cooperation with the Canadian government travel bureau, we are looking forward to welcoming a group of convention planners from the United States later this year.

Recently my department has released two new Ontario travel films, one dealing with the attractions of northeastern Ontario, and the other, which was shown to members of the standing committee yesterday, on fresh water sailing. Added to our catalogue of 27 films, these will have national distribution through my department and international distribution through the travel film library of the National Film Board.

Last year our film on Sainte-Marie among the Hurons, produced for the Huronia historic parks branch of my department, won the Canadian Tourist Association's maple leaf award for the best 16-mm. film on travel and recreation in 1968, giving us another valuable addition to our travel film library.

Two new films are planned for 1969. One will feature fresh water fishing in all sections of Ontario, while the other will depict Ontario's winter attractions. We also plan another series of one- to three-minute capsule films on Ontario's various vacation attractions to be made available free to television stations for us as fillers.

My department's advertising and publicity programmes are specifically designed to create an awareness of and interest in the province of Ontario as a vacation destination. Ultimately, the responsibility for converting this awareness and interest into a vacation decision rests with the information branch.

The 1969-70 fiscal year will see a gradual expansion and upgrading of the three basic approaches with which the branch communicates with those who have shown an interest in visiting our province.

An increasing emphasis is being placed on giving a more personal touch to all mail replies emanating from the branch. This is done by means of a programmed automatic typewriter which is able to provide specific answers to questions from a large supply of prepared, written material.

A second function of the branch is the distribution of department literature, both in bulk quantities to travel information offices in Canada and the United States, and individually in response to written enquiries.

This year, the branch will begin a programme of pre-packaging of literature kits to cover specialized interest fields such as camping, hunting, fishing, rockhounding, and so on. This will provide the prospective visitor with a comprehensive description of the facilities and attractions available and will ensure the material reaches him without delay.

The third aspect of the branch, of course, is personal travel counselling. The branch maintains a year-round counselling office in Toronto and during late spring and early summer supplies trained counsellors to work at Canadian government travel bureau offices in our key US market areas.

In addition the branch provides booths and staff for a programme of travel and sportsmen's shows.

During 1969 the tourist industry development branch will review and, where necessary, revise the regulations made under The Department of Tourism and Information Act respecting the licensing and inspection of tourist accommodations in the province. The regulations ensure that the travelling public is provided acceptable accommodation at the stated prices.

The development branch representatives throughout Ontario work with the tourist industry in counselling operators in methods of improved management and service, as well as staging seminars within the industry to improve operations and hospitality. Seminars will be held in high schools to acquaint students with the importance of the tourist industry to the local economy, and to inform them of job opportunities in the tourist field.

Nineteen Ontario government reception centres will be operated in 1969, most of them at border points. Seven now remain open on a year-round basis, while others are opened at peak traffic periods.

Studies to be carried out by the research branch this year will lay stress on the motivation of visitors to specific tourist attractions in Ontario so that we may better know how to aim our promotional appeals at our prospects.

A survey of visitors to Sainte-Marie among the Hurons, and a similar survey of visitors to the Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake, will provide an analysis of marketing data which will help us shape future advertising and publicity programmes.

The same objectives will be carried forward to a study of visitors to Manitoulin Island. This will indicate not only the socio-economic characteristics of these visitors but also, in simple terms, their likes and dislikes in accommodation and visitor facilities.

Information will be gathered on the characteristics of cottagers in Ontario, including their origins, how much they spend, how many visits they make to their cottages, and how often they entertain guests in the cottage areas. Such data will help determine the impact of cottagers on the local economy, as well as providing information for future development of cottage areas.

During 1969 the research branch will examine the local economic impact of the size of tourist establishments and the viability of different-sized facilities. In a previous study, it was shown that hotels and motels with 30 rental units or more have a higher occupancy rate than smaller facilities. If this trend is confirmed in the future, the policy of the department would evolve towards recommending the construction of larger tourist establishments.

The research branch also will attempt to complete a study begun in 1968 on the ratio of transient or tourist rental units to population in selected Ontario cities. To date this has indicated the ratio tends to remain static over long periods. For example, in Toronto there are approximately 5.5 tourist rental units per 1,000 of population. This figure has remained much the same for the last 20 years. Giving validity to this information may permit us to forecast the number of tourist rental units needed in our cities up to the year 2000.

Mr. Chairman, as we progress with the development of the major tourist attractions of our Huronia historical parks branch, we also note their emergence as a new and major resource for English- and French-language Canadian educators and students. This is especially so of the reconstructed Jesuit mission, Sainte-Marie among the Hurons, near Midland.

In Sainte-Marie we have on the one hand a valuable tourist attraction and on the other, a unique tool of teaching. Educational field trips in this re-creation of Ontario's first European community gradually have extended beyond the single-day visit. In more than one instance, teachers and students have devoted up to a week of their holidays to explore the learning potential of Sainte-Marie.

A substantial increase in Quebec visitors seems to mirror an appreciation of Ontario's contribution to this important segment of New France's history. This reaction is accentuated by a warm response to the bilingual hostess-interpreters at the site.

Last year there were 134,442 visitors to Sainte-Marie, including 44,051 students on education field trips from Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan and New York State.

During the forthcoming year we will begin the screening of the award-winning Sainte-Marie among the Hurons film, which I mentioned earlier, in the twin theatres of Sainte-Marie's orientation centre. This film also is scheduled for nine showings on The Department of Education's ETV series.

A highlight of the year will be the official opening of the museum of the Upper Lakes at Wasaga beach, site of the sinking of the Nancy during the War of 1812. At Penetanguishene, restoration and reconstruction of the British naval and military establishments will add to the nearly score of structures already completed.

Mr. Chairman, credit must be given to the Canadian government for its contribution to the recreational and cultural assets of the Sainte-Marie complex. The Canadian Wildlife Service of The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is establishing the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre nearby, providing a unique situation whereby we will have interpretation of natural and human history in a single valley through the co-ordination of our two levels of government.

Before this session ends, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to extending an invitation to all members to pay a visit to the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology. However, I plan to delay this invitation as long as possible so that members will be able to see the Centre in as advanced a state as possible.

The centre will be officially opened on September 26, this year, and it is my firm belief it will shortly thereafter become known as the most functional science museum in the world.

Each member will have the opportunity of inviting a limited number of guests to the opening ceremony and to a preview of the exhibit halls before they are opened to the general public. Once the members have had a chance to view the centre in its late stages of development, I am sure they will want to take advantage of this opportunity.

I should just remind you that the Centennial Centre will emphasize the present and the future, instead of the past. Achievements in science and technology are given a significant place, but the accent is on man's expanding horizons—our limitless opportunities to discover, to learn, and to improve the quality of our life.

Thus one of the centre's major objectives will be to stimulate inquiry and a thirst for knowledge among our youth. To this end we have made provision for the proper integration of visits to the centre with regular scientific and social studies. It is fitting the centre should open at the start of the 1969-70 school year.

During 1968 the training and organization related to the establishment of a records services branch within the archives department was completed.

Under the guidance of the Treasury board's records management committee, and with the assistance of our branch records analysts, we began systematic records scheduling of the records of all government agencies. Departmental records officers have been appointed by the various departments, and during the coming fiscal year it is expected that most of the major bulk series of government records will be under schedule.

Our central depository for non-active departmental records at Cooksville now takes in some 40,000 cubic feet of records at a space cost of approximately $1.50 per cubic foot. Previously these records occupied departmental operational space costing approximately $7 per cubic foot.

Another 40,000 cubic feet of dead records were examined and scheduled for destruction, at an approximate space cost saving of $5 per cubic foot. More will be disposed of in 1969. In addition to space savings, improved reference services offered by our centre's staff should greatly assist information retrieval from less active records.

As a by-product of increased emphasis on records scheduling throughout government agencies, many documents of permanent research value have been identified and transferred to the archives proper.

Use of the archives' public research facilities has been increasing yearly, sparked by enlarged university enrolment, increased awareness by other government agencies of its research potential and a general growth of public interest in the local and regional history of the province. These trends are expected to continue in the coming fiscal year, necessitating a moderate increase in archival staff to keep up with our expanding holdings and research demands.

An active and continuing programme of marking historical sites will be continued by the archives' historical branch next year to bring the total marked to some 600. Two of these will be outside the province, one to the Hon. George Brown at his birthplace in Alloa, Scotland, and other other to Sir Isaac Brock on his native Guernsey in the Channel Islands.

Two plaques already have been erected overseas—one in Glasgow, Scotland, commemorating the birth there in 1820 of Canada's first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, and the other at Wolford Chapel in Devonshire, England, marking the burial place of Lieutenant-General John Graves Simcoe, Upper Canada's first Lieutenant-Governor.

The historical branch also will undertake research in connection with government and local reconstruction projects, archaeological investigations and architectural inventories, and will be responsible for answering inquiries from tourists and our own citizens relating to Ontario's historical attractions.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to having an opportunity to amplify on these few remarks during the debates to follow.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure again this year to be assigned the role of critic of the government's "propaganda department"—The Department of Tourism and Information. If only this department would spend more time and money on realistic ways to attract tourists here and less on bragging about Tory achievements, we would have last year's tourist revenue of $1.2 billion tripled and quadrupled in no time.

But with all due respect to the most likeable Minister in the House, he does not seem to have any pull at all with his government. This is perfectly obvious in the hon. Treasurer's (Mr. MacNaughton's) Budget, which makes Tourism and Mining bear the brunt of the new tax increases.

It is almost as though the tourist industry had been singled out for destruction in this province. Meals, liquor, motel and hotel accommodations, theatres, gasoline for pleasure craft and Ski-Doos all are hit squarely by the Budget. The Minister of Tourism must be really embarrassed by all this. I know I would be!

But I invite the front row hierarchy to take a good look at him. He is not such a bad guy. Why pick on him? I would not want to have to open the mail he will be getting this summer from those tourist operators—oh, boy!

Hon. Mr. Auld: I had a very good meeting this morning with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White).

Mr. Knight: I have something to say about a report from them which the hon. Treasurer has received or possibly received just before he headed south, I understand.

I'm sure the hon. Minister pleaded with his Premier (Mr. Robarts) and the Treasurer not to do it, but to understand, as he tells us in his department's annual report, that "the tourist industry of Ontario is fast being realized as a major factor in the economy of Ontario." Maybe he should not have spoken out so plainly or so honestly. The Treasurer obviously took him at his word, and levelled his tax arrows at the tourists. "Little arrows . . . little arrows . . ." How does the saying go? Well, the tourists got it this year.

The question now has to be: Once those tourists realize this Robarts Government is "socking it to them" this year, will they return in 1970 to the Province of Opportunity? They have already seen the price of hunting, fishing and camping shoot up. I am very concerned that this government is pricing our province out of the key tourist market with these continuous increases. People can be taken once; maybe twice. But you cannot fool them after that.

You are certainly not going to catch Ontario residents spending their holiday funds in their own province, now that they know how much more meals, motels and other holiday ingredients cost due to the Treasurer's budget. So you are driving the domestic holiday dollars out of Ontario. Maybe this is why the hon. Treasurer has not been around in his seat for the last little while. I understand he is spending his tourist dollars outside of Ontario. I stand to be corrected but I would not be surprised if he were.

If the Minister of Tourism is looking for another portfolio, I don't blame him. He is getting no encouragement at all from his Premier and Cabinet.

It seems to me that not too long ago I counted three Cabinet Ministers on that side for these very important estimates and about four members of the hon. Minister's party in the House for his speech.

I can see the Treasurer's point. If you have got to increase taxes he thinks it's just as well to put the bite on outsiders as on Ontario residents. However, that kind of logic has a way of backfiring because so many of our Ontario residents depend on those same outsiders to earn their livelihood. Communities like the one I represent enjoy an economic shot in the arm during a good tourist season, so putting the tax bite on tourists is really putting the bite on our own people, who will suffer in the long run, and it will not be very long, because these tourists catch on fast.

And what about the great potential in convention promotion? These tax increases hit directly at conventions, too, Mr. Chairman. This is all the more disturbing when you consider that this department to the Minister's credit, recently has been gearing itself for a big push on the promotion of conventions in Ontario. So we find that just as the Minister and his department do something good and long overdue for conventions, along comes the hon., the troubled Treasurer, to throw tax hurdles in front of his hon. colleague. Even though he has long legs, the hon. Minister of Tourism will never be able to clear these obstacles.

Nor has he been able to glean greater funds from the Treasurer for his department this year in order, one might suspect, to offset with promotion these damaging tax increases. Surely, the hon. Treasurer was aware of what he was doing and upon whom his tax increases would fall heaviest? The tourist! In all his great financial wisdom, did he really think the $424,500 increase for tourism this year—the gain to be made would be sufficient to neutralize the adverse effect these increased costs will most certainly have on the industry? However, the hon. Minister of Tourism realized it. I was watching his face when the axe fell on his department. His debonair expression wilted to a ghostly, pallid smile.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Knight: This is the truth, Mr. Chairman. I was watching him especially because I know how I felt when I heard it. Even though he must have had some inkling of it in Cabinet, the news seemed to hit him like a Mack truck.

He may not appear to fill the part but this Minister has become the Cinderella of the Robarts government. If they want to gloss over the ugly interior of anything, this department can do it. They are promotion specialists, and that is what this department, in its present context, should be called—the Promotion Department—nothing else. The Minister and his experts are professionals in promotion. I would not attempt to knock their award-winning films, or 60-second TV commercials, nor the magnificent lure brochures they produce and circulate, nor, more especially, the invaluable assistance they give to community tourist councils all across Ontario. Nor their historical parks developments—I think all these things are wonderful. We can all be proud of these things. At this they are simply excellent. I am in the promotion business and I think I can speak with some authority.

But what good is all this expensive “come-on” if tourists only come for one year, find out the truth, and not only do not return, but tell their friends to go elsewhere?

A letter and a brief recently addressed the hon. Provincial Treasurer of which a copy was also sent to me and, I suppose, many others, I think supports what I am saying about these taxes and the adverse effect it is going to have on the tourist industry.

This brief is signed by the Canadian Restaurant Association, the Canadian Tourist Association, the Ontario Motel Association, the Association of Tourist Resorts of Ontario, the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters, the Convention and Tourist Bureau of Metropolitan Toronto, and the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association.

Now it goes back to the last page, here, where we sum up the conclusions of this brief, and if I may, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to read these conclusions.

In our opinion, the proposed changes to broaden and increase the retail sales tax base could have a negative effect, and, in fact, impede those segments of the economy which the government is trying by other means and measures to encourage. We suggest that a decline in the number of tourists in the province of Ontario will effect a proportionate decline in retail sales and other revenues such as those derived from gasoline tax. At the present time the hospitality industry in Ontario has a very distinct competitive advantage over other jurisdictions and we respectfully suggest that this advantage should be maintained.

And this brief points especially to that eight per cent sales tax that hits the tourist industry in the province of Quebec at the present time. Now, of course, the advantage that Ontario had is gone. And this report makes several recommendations that I would like to include at this time also.

(a) There should be no tax on the sale of hotel and motel rooms. However, if the government does not seek to change its position in respect of taxation of hotel rooms, we suggest that at least the implementation of such tax be delayed until October 1, 1969, instead of being implemented on April 1.

Now, I think the reasons for that are obvious.

And then that the tax on food and alcoholic beverages should be maintained at the present five per cent level:

The 5 per cent tax on food sales should apply to all sales in excess of one dollar and not be restricted solely to restaurants.

The discriminatory practice of not taxing directly competitive suppliers should be abolished. Liquor purchases under banquet permits should be subjected to sales tax based on the retail selling price of a drink. The gasoline tax should continue inasmuch as it applies to the daily operation of tourist establishments.

Well, there you are. This Minister and this government has had its warning from the authorities in the field of tourism in this province, excluding myself, in this letter. I do not think the Minister's chances with the hon. Treasurer or the Premier or his Cabinet are worth a hoot. However, as I said before—the Cinderella of the Robarts government.

If this department is really going to handle the business of tourism in Ontario, in my mind it has got to be able to turn some of that commercial charm on the Robarts Cabinet which makes decisions on roads, parks, campsites, licensing, travel trailer accommodation, water pollution control, marina development, dumping facilities for boats and trailers, and on and on. These are the real factors involved in building a multi-billion-dollar tourist industry. This department at this hour is just playing at Tourism. It is a game of promotional commercial arts that lures the tourist into the trap, but does not hold him there, nor will he ever get caught again. There is just no follow-through, and that is what bugs me.

I would like to ask, how long will this government be content to cater to the rich American tourists for whom costs are no obstacle? When are we going to make it economically feasible for those millions of other would-be American tourists to holiday in Ontario? They are the ones who now travel by trailer, bringing all the expensive gear with them, so that they will not have to buy it at Ontario's high cost.

If they were loaded down with provisions last year when they arrived at the border, you can imagine what those trailers and cars are going to look like in the immediate years ahead.

I repeat my suggestion of last year at this time and place. Develop trailer park sites on each of those hundreds of community fairgrounds across the province—every community has one lying idle 90 per cent of the time. Trailer caravans of hundreds of units that travel the United States every year just do not come to Ontario. We cannot accommodate them.

Such a trailer site at the CNE grounds here in Toronto would make it possible for the traveller to live right downtown, spending money in our stores, restaurants, theatres, public transit—you name it. The trailers would stream into the CNE grounds, it seems to me. I do not see why the city of Toronto does not adopt the idea. But perhaps it is too Drapeauish for Metro Toronto to consider. If I suggest the idea to the hon. Minister over there, I am sure he will say, "What can I do? I am in the business of promotion and information."

Every centre in the province, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, should consider this idea of making greater use of its fairgrounds.

Mr. Chairman, I just happen to believe that it is practical ideas like this one that the Minister and his department should be promoting. He should be seeking ways to offer the tourists at the lower income level ways and means to holiday in our land of opportunity, even if he has to be knocking on the doors of the Ministers of Highways and Lands and Forests and Energy and Resources Management and Education every day regularly. The hon. Treasurer will not listen to him; perhaps these other Ministers will.

Speaking of Toronto, I note with a certain amount of self-satisfaction, the Premier's announcement for a $13 million pavilion on the Metro waterfront which will complement the CNE and will include a marina. This was one of my suggestions of last year—the Toronto marina, that is.

Now I wonder if we will follow through and make a network of these marinas possible in waterside communities all along the Great Lakes system? We are blessed that the province of Ontario touches on all of the Great Lakes. It takes seven states in the United States to cover the same area to the south. I do not think we are making enough use of that great waterway.

It is also interesting that this one proposed expenditure for Toronto—$13 million—is more than the entire budget appropriated this year for Tourism all across Ontario, which is $12,510,000, of course. And it is even more interesting when we consider that $3,608,000 of that is for that white elephant, the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology. And that is almost one-third of the whole Tourism budget. What that centre has got to do with tourism, I will never know. It should be part of the Education department as far as I am concerned.

My concern is amplified by the fact that tourism is considered to be the third largest industry in my part of the province, north-western Ontario right after lumbering and mines. As tourism grows up there, so grows the great northwest. And let us not forget that the great northwest part of this province is almost as big as Texas. When I see this government playing at something which has such great potential for my area of the province, I see red, and so do the people I represent.

Tourism is glanced over so lightly in the order of values down here that my remarks today and those of the Minister probably won't make the last page in the great Metro newspapers. And yet, if you go to any major resort area elsewhere, the tourist is king.

Everybody moves for the tourists' comfort. People become tourist conscious in these places. In this province we resent them, let us be honest about it. Maybe not so much now that we see how the hon. Treasurer is able to use them for an extra buck.

Really, why should tourists come here, when they can go to Nassau, Miami or Barbados, where the spirit of welcome of local governments and residents permeates the very air around them? Tourists do not mind spending the dollar, but they want to feel important. They have to be wooed by the natives.

And this leads me to my major recommendation: I think this whole department should undergo a major shake-up. To begin with, toss out that white elephant Centennial centre! Archives and History—give that to The Department of Education too! The department is doing a magnificent job on straight come-on promotions with its films, TV and brochures and an equally great job at counselling with these historical parks and cities. I say keep those and keep up the good work!

What this department needs is a section that gives it some teeth, teeth that will take it out of the Cinderella field and into the era of practical tourism development. Teeth that will move the Cabinet to spend dollars where Ontario tourism really needs it. This department needs another section that educates Ontario residents towards a whole new attitude and approach to the tourist. Ontarians must recognize the tourist dollar for what it can mean to our economy and to our employment situation.

I envisage here a selling job. Put your master "come-on" men to work on our own residents, so that Ontario will be converted into a Nassau or a Jamaica that makes the tourist feel like a "million bucks", instead of this present narrow-minded parochial attitude too many of our residents show with expressions like: "Oh, there goes a lousy American." This department, in my view, Mr. Chairman, is missing the boat right here at home. Like the National Film Board, it has great influence in the foreign market place, but none whatsoever with its own government for the people at home. Yet, right here is where it has got to start concentrating!

How about another section to make summer job openings for our students with programmes like The Department of Lands and Forests has been fostering, because summer, students and tourism go together automatically. We must have co-operation from The Department of Education to train these people at our community colleges for the tourist industry, in line with the announcement on student summer employment with my hon. leader.

Besides which some of these students, I feel, would have an awful lot to offer this department by way of ideas and energy if we would only get them involved. This department has got to clear out the dead wood that has little or nothing to do with tourism and concentrate on really manufacturing tourist dollars.

Theatres—there is another $150,000 item that does not belong in Tourism so far as I am concerned, because the calibre of films that are corrupting our community movie screens these days indicates to me "theatres" matters should be transferred to the Attorney General's (Mr. Wishart's) department. Maybe he will do something about those "adult" and "restricted" signs outside theatres which, in my mind, hypocritically pretend to assure parents their children will not be admitted to the rough pics. While all the time we know they are nothing but a great big lure to suck customers into the theatre. We all know that—and it does not really matter how old the customer is as long as he has money.

Mr. Chairman, that is a matter for the Attorney General. Right now we are concerned about tourism. I say a whole new spirit of determination has got to come alive within this department—a spirit that would fan out and affect every tourist operator and every resident of this province with an awareness of the potential of this great industry. Unlike the brief, a part of which I read to you, which reflects nothing but pessimism and fear and that is the truth of it.

Then must come that great united push to make this the land of welcome. That is the kind of promotion that has lasting value—Ontario, a real land of welcome. It is not the thin veil that are films and TV commercials which fade in a moment of time or glossy brochures which wind up in the trash can or gathering dust on a shelf. Tourists will remember a land of true welcome. They will come back and they will bring their friends with them.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have read the annual report of The Department of Tourism and Information with interest, particularly the section on press relations. I note that a special effort has been made to reach the trade publications.

A few years ago, I suggested that we should endeavour to place articles in the publications of such industries as the Steel Company of Canada, Canadian Westinghouse Company, Bell Telephone Company, Ontario Hydro, Imperial Oil Company, to mention a few. Almost any company of any size publishes a magazine or paper which is sent or made available to its employees. Also, I suggested at that time that articles be sent to the trade union publications. Some local unions will also have their own publications, such as that excellent paper Steel Shots published by Local 1005 United Steelworks of America. This paper has won awards and has been the subject of a National Film Board production.

Articles placed in these publications would receive the attention of a concentration of large numbers of people who are more likely to notice articles in a publication which is of personal interest to them because they concern their place or conditions of employment.

Many of these people are interested in skiing and spend ski weekends or vacations in the province of Quebec or the state of New York and there would be no reason why we should not be promoting this type of holiday in Ontario ski resorts. Also I happen to know of a bus load of employees from the Steel Company of Canada who, this very week, are off on a golfing holiday in the United States. Now I know we can not promote golfing holidays in Ontario for this time of year but perhaps we could consider a promotion of this kind of holiday beamed to capture the interest of the readers of these publications from early spring to late autumn at the many good golf courses available throughout this province.

Your reports over the years have indicated that Ontario residents are their own best customers when it comes to touring Ontario. I can well believe this, because the average Ontario worker, with an income of $5,000 or less, is pretty well limited to his own province. Motel and hotel rates are too expensive for his pocket book and he must rent a cottage or make use of Ontario's camping facilities.

Camping is becoming more and more popular as families are discovering the economics of such a vacation because it costs very little more than the gas to travel with. They can picnic on the way, using our many wayside picnic tables.

On this matter of wayside picnic tables, I must say I was impressed as I travelled last year through New Brunswick. They seemed to space their roadside tables further apart but then they used a larger area and grouped perhaps 6 to 8 tables together. What is even better, they provided toilet facilities at each of these roadside picnic spots. I believe this is a service we should now supply for the motoring public in Ontario.

We are soon to face another problem and that is providing a method of disposing the waste coming from the toilet holding tanks which an increasing number of campers are installing in the many and varied types of trailers which are now such a common sight on our highways.

Today's campers are a luxurious group, compared to those of a few years ago. Gone are the days when a camper pitched a tent and stayed on a camping site for the duration of his vacation. He is truly on wheels now and wheels are made to make moving around easy. Today's camper has either a camper trailer, which can be set up in minutes, or he has a house trailer or the kind that is part of a truck.

We must now provide the type of service the camper on wheels needs and the most serious need is dumping stations for his toilet holding tanks. It is serious, not only from the standpoint of the camper's convenience, but from the point of pollution prevention.

I believe a dumping station costs in the neighbourhood of $3,000 and I do not think we can look to anyone else, but the government to meet this need, although I understand that one oil company, Fina I believe, on Highway 400 at the Cookstown interchange, has provided a dumping station. However, it is a pretty expensive method of attracting trade and that would probably be the only inducement for private capital to provide this service.

The Department of Lands and Forests has provided this service in most of our provincial parks but this will not meet the constantly increasing need. It is estimated that more than 2 million trailers will be on American and Canadian highways by next year and presently there are only about 3,000 dumping stations in the whole of both Canada and the United States, with most of them in the United States. As far as I know, it was planned that about 80 of our provincial parks would have this kind of service in operation by the end of the 1968 camping season, and the one private installation which I mentioned. Eighty-one in all of Ontario is not sufficient to meet the needs of the campers in this large province.

What will the camper do? Dump it in a ditch on the highway or side road as has happened in the United States? We all know the length of time it has taken to educate the public to avoid littering our roadsides with paper, bottle and can waste, which, after all, was mainly a matter of avoiding an unsightly mess. This problem is much more serious. It is a health hazard and one which must be taken care of very soon before bad habits are formed. This is also a problem shared by boaters who presently have nowhere, that I know of, to dispose of this type of waste and will be adding to the pollution of our waterways.

I do not know exactly which department has this new responsibility, but certainly it would seem to me if we want to promote the tourist industry, The Department of Tourism and Information must endeavour to discover the needs of the tourist. Indeed, it must try to anticipate them through research and then follow through by urging the proper department, or perhaps several departments, to provide for these needs.

I notice that several hundred plaques marking historical sites, events or persons have been erected throughout Ontario—something like 40 just this past year. This is very good—very desirable—but do we really believe the tourist will consider it worthwhile to make a stop just to read the words on a plaque and gaze at the countryside or a building? Compared with the sense of participation in another period of the history of our province that one holds after touring Upper Canada Village or any of the other pioneer villages, or from wandering through Dundurn Castle in my own city of Hamilton, viewing an historical plaque gives you nothing.

Yet these plaques commemorate places, persons or events important in our historical background. I believe we should do something to bring these situations to life in the imagination of the viewer. We should do something to make them sufficiently interesting as to cause the traveller to stop and learn something more of our rich heritage. I am wondering if we could install a sturdy display case containing a miniature scene of some activity related to the site.

As it is now, they are just markers of interest only to the student of history. They fail completely to capture the interest or imagination of the tourist, and I think it is to be regretted that we have failed to make history live in this regard.

We discovered the great interest in things historical when the Centennial trains and trailers toured Canada and a lot of this interest was created through the reproduction of little scenes from our past. Perhaps we could put this knowledge to good use through installing miniature scenes in display cases, as I suggested. In any event, surely we can find some method more visually interesting than a plaque to mark our rich historical background.

A billion-dollar industry, such as tourism, deserves encouragement. The hon. Minister has stated that for every $1 spent on tourist promotion the revenue returned is $372, with an additional tax revenue of $20. That is almost $400 received for every $1 spent on promotion. Quick figuring indicates it is proposed to allot an increase over last year of only two per cent of the department's budget for promotion and information. I question if this is a sufficient allowance, in view of the possible returns.

Our vacation habits have changed. No longer is travel the privilege of the wealthy. No longer is the average worker who wants to provide his family with a vacation limited to visiting good old Aunt Mabel on the farm. Anyway, most likely good old Aunt Mabel is off travelling herself. He may not be able to afford the best hotel or motel accommodation, but he is on wheels and determined to see this land of ours and of our neighbour to the south.

If we want to induce the vacationer on wheels to come to Ontario and to explore this province with its abundance of vacation attractions, then we had better not only do a good promotion job but we simply must provide better services for the vacationer.

Your figures show that the Ontario resident is our biggest and best customer and we must induce him to explore his own province thoroughly before he ventures off to further fields. We must remember he is the individual with the greatest opportunity of exploring the province, not only on his annual vacation but on weekends as well.

One last thought, Mr. Chairman, before I close. We are all aware of the interest Canadians have in a winter vacation in sunnier climates such as Florida and we are exposed to constant southern winter vacation promotions. I know we do a large amount of our promotion in the United States. Our money is spent there in 15 major Metropolitan areas, I believe mainly through one-minute TV commercials. I would like to know if we are reversing the coin, so to speak, and promoting Ontario summer vacations in places like Florida where one would think a desire to escape their hot, humid weather would cause them to look favourably on a summer vacation in Ontario?

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister have a reply to the members at this time?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I do not know in what context the hon. member was using the term "Cinderella". I do not know whether I am complimented or worried but I want to thank him for his kind remarks about the work of my own department.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Sounds like the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman).

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, except that it came from the other side, rather than from me.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You know what I meant.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The hon. member for Port Arthur spoke at some length about the effect of the Treasurer's budget on the tourist industry. As I have said before—and I think any Minister in any department where taxes are imposed which may affect the work of that department would say the same thing—I was not delighted.

On the other hand, I also said that I do not think that it will have a severe effect on the tourist industry. It is not going to help but as the hon. member pointed out, or read from the brief which was presented to the Minister of Revenue, myself and the Deputy Treasurer and others this morning, the industry in certain aspects has had a very substantial competitive advantage tax-wise in the past. Some of this has been lost by the effect of some of the tax changes, but the industry itself, I think it is fair to say from the discussions I have had with members of the industry—and I am sure all members would realize that I have had a number since that Wednesday—feel it can survive. It is unfortunate—there are certain aspects they would like to see changed.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Yes, but why did you not ask the insurance companies and people like that what—

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would love to discuss this with the hon. member when we are discussing the estimates proper, Mr. Chairman, but I do not think this is the place to discuss that.

As I said, I feel that the industry will continue its efforts and the industry makes great efforts on its own behalf in promotion. I think we will continue to grow and this time next year we will see that we have had another substantial increase in total tourist dollars, generated both within our own province and without.

Mr. Knight: What about 1970?

Hon. Mr. Auld: 1970 is the year I am speaking of, next year. I think we will see another increase, just as we have had an increase last year over 1967 in the overall, which a lot of people felt would not happen.

Mr. Knight: Is the Minister prepared to rise or fall on that statement?

Hon. Mr. Auld: He would be prepared, if the Attorney General would let him, to make a little wager with the hon. member, which would be far more profitable to me, I might say.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He would just have to rise and fall, that is all.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do not know if I can do that with those tight glass slippers. However, there were many interesting suggestions in the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre. Generally speaking, they relate, as the hon. member for Port Arthur said, to the work of other departments. He pointed out, although he disagrees with it, that the job of this department is promotion.

We, of course, work with The Department of Lands and Forests in connection with Parks and recreation, game and fish. We work with Highways in terms of highway signs, and we work with all departments in many aspects. But our specific job, and the job which is involved in the money in the estimates before the House at the moment, is in the promotional field primarily. I have made notes of the comments of the hon. members and no doubt they will have an opportunity again to raise them in the estimates of the various departments charged with specific responsibilities, such as parks, roadside tables, and so on.

I would make one comment to the hon. member for Hamilton Centre. In that part of the estimates which are involved at the moment, the estimates of my department, are included the St. Lawrence Parks Commission and the Huronia Development area. In the St. Lawrence Parks Commission, facilities are being added for dumping stations for trailers. We recognize, as does The Department of Lands and Forests, that this is a growing need and that the camping habits of the people are changing a bit. People who used to camp in tents have now moved into campers and trailers and so on and other facilities will be required, although I doubt that the province will ever be in a position to supply these facilities all over the province rather than in provincial installations.

I know in California that the oil companies have got into this field as a competitive thing. I think as this kind of camping grows in this province, private enterprise and municipalities, as well as the province, will be involved in providing those facilities which are certainly most necessary and which, if not provided, literally drive people to practices which we would not want to see.

I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Hamilton Centre about our use of his suggestion and that of others some years ago in dealing with industrial magazines, company magazines and so on. I am not sure whether Steel Shots is on our mailing list at the present time. My understanding is that we deal with a number of trade union publications but I can assure him that if it is not on the mailing list at the moment, it will be tomorrow. As he points out, this is an excellent way to reach just the kind of audience in our own province that we want to reach.

I would say in that vein that while about 70 per cent of our advertising expenditure is spent in the States and outside the province, we have a substantial programme within the province to encourage our own people to travel within our province even more. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, there is the joint programme with Quebec. We have worked with Manitoba in the past; we have worked with the adjoining states as well, to get inter-provincial travel.

Ontario is very fortunately situated in relation to those with whom we co-operate; if we have any success at all we are going to generate more traffic throughout our province because of our geographical location. And we are very keen to do this and we are doing it on a regional scale.

I would disagree slightly with the hon. member for Hamilton Centre about the value of our historic plaques around the province. Certainly, from the information that we have received and the comments. They are important; they are of interest to people. They are certainly not of as great interest as something like Upper Canada Village or Sainte-Marie among the Hurons, or Pioneer Village or Dundurn Castle, or a whole host of things. But I think they are of great interest to our own people who, perhaps, have their appetite for our own history heightened a bit or they are led, by seeing a plaque, to read a bit about events that have happened in Ontario. They are certainly of great interest to travellers who indicate in replies to any questionnaires I have ever seen, that history is somewhere around two, three or four in the fields of interest that people have.

Certainly no one would be more delighted than I if we had a whole host of attractions like Sainte-Marie and the Nancy museum at Wasaga and so on. We are gradually doing these things as funds are available. But I think the plaque programme has a real part in our overall promotion as well in the education of the province.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister move over to his mike; we cannot hear him.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was doing that so I would not bore you. I had finished what I had to say, so I hope you can read it tomorrow.

On vote 2101.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: I notice that the first item in vote 2101 here has to do with salaries and it seems to me there is a cutback of $64,000 indicated from last year. I wonder how the Minister explains this. Is there some kind of a programme for mass firings being contemplated?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, there is actually what appears to be a $4,000 decrease, but in fact the increase is about $18,000. Last year this item included the administrative costs of the Ontario Heritage Foundation which, as I recall, was something in the order of $21,000. That has been transferred to the archives and history programme, which is further along in the estimates. There is no increase in staff; there are four people fewer on the staff, but the rates of salary have increased along with all the others throughout the service.

Mr. Knight: On item 2, I just wondered what travelling expenses would this $18,000 be contemplated for? Possibly Osaka?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I might say, hopefully.

Mr. Sargent: Is it true you are taking the whole House over there?

Hon. Mr. Auld: By film.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The Minister will not win an award for that one.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This is all the travelling expense of the Minister and Deputy Minister and the administrative branch.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, the third item really puzzles me because that has to do with maintenance. I just cannot understand what maintenance would cost $125,000, just for administration, unless the Minister is planning on extensions and embellishments to his office.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the maintenance vote of $125,000—is this the one to which the hon. member refers?—includes such items as printing and stationery, furniture and equipment, maintenance and rental of equipment, communications, expense of department-owned cars. I can give the hon. member the figures; printing and stationery, purchase of equipment, communications, personal services, advertising—that is personnel advertising—department trucks, express, postage—which is a very large one now that the postage is charged to the department rather than to the Provincial Secretary—moving, staff training and $2,500 for “other”.

Mr. Knight: This is strictly a Queen's Park office? It does not pertain to maintenance of any other buildings owned by the department throughout the province; strictly here in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, just to the head office on Bloor Street.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I make a suggestion to the Minister that now the estimates have taken on a different form in the estimate book, that his annual report follow the estimate book. That way it would be easier for us to follow the estimate and get right into his annual report and be able to discuss more intelligently the various votes.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the annual report for 1969 will follow the new form of the estimates.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, during a recent meeting of the committee on tourism, I raised the question of the value of that committee to this department and to the department of natural resources, whichever departments that involves. During the committee meetings we sit and we listen to dozens and dozens of briefs. However, there is absolutely no chance for any discussion on those briefs. The report from the committee is brought into this House without the committee ever discussing a brief more than two or three minutes at the most.

I would like to ask the Minister how he thinks this committee should conduct its business in order to facilitate the operation of this department? How should they conduct their business in order to give the people that come before that committee a fair hearing rather than just a façade of a hearing? How should we go about conducting our meetings of this committee so that we, as members of the House, have something to say in it? And does he also believe that it should be separated from the natural resources part of the committee and would it do a better job if it were separated?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would hesitate to suggest to the committee how it should carry out its functions. I do not think that I would be very popular if I did so. But it does seem to me that the committee, under whatever name it may be, has a valuable role to play as far as assisting our department is concerned. And perhaps more important than that, it has a valuable role to play with the industry and the people who come to—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): That is just not true.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, I think it has a valuable role to play. I have not said whether I think it is playing it or not. I would not presume to comment on the work of the committee.

In the industry the great problem—and I think this was indicated in yesterday's committee meeting. It certainly has been in the past and I think yesterday's meeting and the comments I have heard from people who presented briefs there, was an improvement over the past.

In the past, people have come from the industry to make proposals. They make them to us but we are not the operative department. If it has something to do with fishing, the dates for a fishing season or the expansion of a park or some discussion with Highways about their signing policy, a whole host of things, the committee is there and can hear briefs.

And when you get the briefs in advance they can ask representatives—preferably the Ministers from the various departments concerned—to attend there. It means that these organizations can attend in one place, and put forward their proposals, their complaints, their suggestions. After having come from a great distance, they do not have to be told they have to come back next week to some other committee for some other part of their brief. In this kind of thing, it can be a valuable co-ordinating agency.

I think—as I think the chairman of the committee said yesterday—if the committee so wishes it can sit down, have a meeting of its own without presentations from departments or without presentations from witnesses who want to appear before that committee, and thrash out material that it has or ideas that its members have, and put forward in its report to this House, resolutions respecting certain things.

I think that this can be a valuable function of the committee and I think other committees have done this kind of thing in the past.

Mr. Jackson: Just to go on with this a little further. The Minister has said it is a co-ordinating body, it brings together all of the Ministers and all the interested people. I will agree with him there. But when the Minister receives these briefs previous to the committee meetings and we receive the brief with the comment from the department which is, in my opinion—and I think in the opinion of the most of the members—an extension of government policy on that resolutions or brief, what purpose does it serve for us to be there? You have already passed your judgment on that brief. You have stated to us that this is what the department wants.

Now during the committee meetings last year the same thing was brought up—that we serve no useful purpose—and yet again this year there are 20 to 25 of us sitting in there, three and four hours and sometimes longer listening to briefs and giving these people that come from hundreds of miles away—in fact, some of them from thousands of miles away—the mistaken belief that we can do something for them, that we are even listening to them.

Most of the members are there to fill seats and if we are not going to serve any meaningful purpose then this Minister, if he really believes that we can do something, should take an active part in changing government policy and saying to the chairman of the committee and to the Prime Minister, if necessary, and to the Speaker of the House, whose committee it is, that instructions should go out to the committee that they will hold meetings and have a discussion rather than just sit there and fill seats and serve no purpose.

I can assure you that while we are there, filling that seat, we are letting our other work sit—work that most of us could be doing and I am quite sure that most of us have to do. I just cannot understand why the Ministers who are involved in these departments, if they feel that committee can do something to help their work, to facilitate their part of the estimates of this government, should not be working to make that committee work.

I believe it is the responsibility of the Ministers who are involved. I am rather puzzled when we go in there and we see what is happening and we go on year after year after year. Although this is only my second session, I have talked to other members and this is not something new. It has been going on for many years. Now unless we are going to change it, we might just as well forget going to committee meetings. I am one person who believes the committee can do something about it. We are going to have to have some action from that side of the House before we will serve any useful purpose.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, this is a very functional department and as the Minister pointed out in the meetings of yesterday, his department serves two main functions; one to get tourists to come to Ontario and secondly, to ensure that the establishments that are providing accommodation for the tourists that arrive meet some kind of minimum standard.

I would suggest that there are two areas in which his department is deficient. Number one is in the development phase of tourist business in Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, can we deal with that under vote 2102?

I wonder if I might ask the committee, because of the form of the estimates this year, if this would be agreeable. I think it might be simpler for everybody if, when we get to vote 2102, which has the bulk of the departmental activity in it, we deal with this. Instead of sub-items one to eight, by these programmes. Say we deal with promotion service, St. Lawrence Parks Commission, Huronia Historical Parks, tourist industry development services, and research services. I think that this might assist the committee in dealing with things in order.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further under 2101, the head office, department of administration?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on this vote, the total vote last year was $11,500,000?

Hon. Mr. Auld: $10,875,000.

Mr. Sargent: And your total vote this year is $12,500,000?

Hon. Mr. Auld: $12,510,000.

Mr. Sargent: Well that is an increase of possibly $1.75 million in your vote. It is really more than that. It is another million on top of that because last year you had almost $1 million for Centennial in there. This year, you do not have that cushion, right?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Last year, Mr. Chairman, I think the Centennial Centre was $2,500,000.

Mr. Sargent: Two and a half million—well here again I am following with the big book—

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is $2,526,000.

Mr. Sargent: The point I am trying to make, Mr. Chairman, is we have an increase of $1.7 million in your estimates, but then you do not have the expenditure of Centennial so really you are up a lot more than $1.7 million then? What is the reason for the increase? You are really $2.7 million up.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not sure that I understand. There is no Centennial planning branch, you know, this year which was in last year.

Mr. Sargent: That is the point—we do not have that expense. Now where is all the money going?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think if I could suggest to the hon. member, in the major items there is approximately $1,050,000 increase for the Centennial Centre for Science and Technology. There is no Centennial planning branch but there is—

Mr. Sargent: That is a capital cost out of your department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is a capital cost in the sense that it is the artifacts and the administration of the centre. It does not include the structure which is in Public Works.

Mr. Sargent: Well let us leave that, but in effect then we have a 25 per cent increase in your estimates this year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the total?

Mr. Sargent: In the total, yes.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is about 18 per cent I would think. The difference is between $10,875,000 and $12,510,000.

Mr. Sargent: That is quite a jump—17 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well as I mentioned in my opening remarks, the major increase is that additional $1,050,000 under the Centennial Centre for Science and Technology, which is vote 2106.

Mr. Sargent: Is that a one shot or a continuing item?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. This is the final year for major expenditures for the contents of the centre. I think I mentioned last year that we anticipate we would be updating about 20 per cent of the exhibit content each year at probably—I could stand corrected—about $225,000 a year in the future.

I am advised, too, that in this year's budget in total salaries there will be something in the order of $350,000 increase over last year. That is the same number of people, but at the higher rates of salaries after the last civil service revision. This would come to about $350,000.

Mr. Sargent: Will this Centennial Centre ever be revenue producing? Can it ever be self-liquidating?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It will be a revenue-producing operation as soon as it opens. We anticipate that our revenue will cover the operating costs of the centre, excluding any special educational aspect.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak for a few minutes on departmental policy. I would like to refer the committee to a news report that was in one of the Lakehead papers as the result of the unveiling of a plan for tourism, or an assessment or a survey of tourism, in northwestern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if that would come under vote 2102 under the research branch?

Mr. Stokes: No. This relates directly to the policy of the department, although I suppose the actual unveiling of it would come under the research department. But I am talking about statements that the Minister made at that particular time.

In it he says that there are 12 government departments directly or indirectly responsible for tourism. I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if it is really possible for this government to deal with tourism in a co-ordinated or a meaningful way when there are 12 different governmental departments directly or indirectly responsible for or concerned about tourism in this province.

I think it is a particularly fair question to be asked by a member coming from northern Ontario where we only have the mining, the forest products industry and the tourist industry. I think if there was one government department that was really concerned about tourism, it could devote all its efforts to tourism, rather than have this sort of disjointed and unco-ordinated approach.

I think the Minister made reference to the close liaison that he had with The Department of Lands and Forests, and with The Department of Highways and, by his own admission, nine other departments within this government. I am just wondering how he thinks we are going to get a co-ordinated approach and the best results from a disjointed effort such as this.

He did make mention of a new committee to co-ordinate government activities. He said he was speaking of a special government committee to prevail upon Cabinet for a better co-ordination of government activity with regard to tourism. I have something more to say with regard to policy, but I wonder if the Minister would like to comment on that particular aspect of it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I wonder if the hon. member could tell me a little more about what he just mentioned, that I had suggested there was a new committee, or some separate committee to co-ordinate activities to be set up.

Mr. Stokes: I would just like to quote. It says:

Twelve government departments are now directly or indirectly responsible for various aspects of the tourist industry, and he proposes that the new committee co-ordinate all government activities and carry out a tourism development programme. Mr. Auld told a public meeting that the main recommendation is not one that we can deal with automatically in view of the regional development apparatus that is being established by the government overall.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The hon. member is referring to one of the recommendations that was in the report of the northwestern tourist study. In fact, that was the first recommendation as I recall. I think I commented at the time that the study was being prepared when The Department of Economics and Development—now the regional development branch of the Treasurer's department—were working out their new proposal for co-ordination of government agencies and departments.

I think at the time we presented the report in Kenora, I mentioned that while this was obviously an important recommendation of the committee that put the report together—the consultants, I should say, that put the report together—it would have to be looked at now in the light of the area development programme and committee which had just been set up at the time. I think perhaps the hon. member for Rainy River who, I think was there, would recall that is what I said. As a matter of fact this is presently being pursued. As I say, that report, if you want to discuss the report itself, should come under the research branch.

Mr. Stokes: What has been done to co-ordinate the activities of the 12 government departments that are directly or indirectly responsible for tourism in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If I said 12, I suppose I could equally have said 10 or 14. As I mentioned, I think, in the standing committee yesterday I suppose every government department has something to do with some aspect of tourism, because tourism affects just about everybody in the province. As far as those departments with whom we work on specific things, we have standing or continuing liaison through committees of our own staff and staff in those departments. I think we mentioned Lands and Forests yesterday as one because we probably had the closest common interest and so on with Lands and Forests.

Here is what the report that the hon member referred to said:

At the present time the following provincial departments are directly or indirectly responsible for various aspects of the tourist industry: The Treasury Department, regional development branch, as I mentioned; The Department of Highways, The Department of Transport; The Department of Tourism and Information; The Department of Education, recreational programme for children and adults; The Department of Lands and Forests; The Department of Municipal Affairs; The Department of Agriculture and Food; The Department of Health, for instance, is responsible for standards of sanitation facilities used by the public; The Department of Energy and Resources Management, Hydro-Electric Power Commission; The Department of Mines.

This will vary, of course, in various areas of the province. For instance, in my part of Ontario, eastern Ontario, The Department of Mines would be involved practically not at all because there are very few mineral rights, unpatented lands, and so on.

All I can say to the hon. member is that we work closely with any departments which appear to be involved in any projects that we are undertaking. We act as a channel of communication from the organizations and the accommodation and food end of the industry. Generally speaking, they channel inquiries through us and we direct them to the proper department. The Department of Health, for instance, two years ago, about swimming pool regulations—this kind of thing.

Mr. Stokes: Well, to get back to what this department is responsible for in regard to tourism. How does the Minister coordinate his efforts with regard to, say, the inspection of tourist accommodation with The Department of Health?

I had occasion not long ago to ask someone in government who was responsible for inspection of certain accommodation. As a matter of fact, I think it was the brother of the member for Rainy River. I asked him if he was responsible in his capacity for inspecting certain facilities. He said, "Oh, no, that is The Department of Tourism and Information. If it was a little bit different type of accommodation, it would be done by another government department."

It is obvious to anyone travelling, as I do, by automobile from here to my home town in Thunder Bay, that obviously very little is being done by way of inspection, because the condition of some of the accommodations is atrocious. That is why I ask why the overlapping of responsibility with regard to inspection? Why the lack of liaison, the lack of coordination in the effort—particularly in the field of inspection of accommodations—with regard to health and sanitation?

It appears to me that it is a very disjointed effort. That is why I would like to get to the bottom of this and say, why is there the overlapping? In a good many cases it is quite obvious to me that no inspection is being done at all, or lot of these places where they serve food would be closed up—a lot of these places where they have washroom and restroom facilities would just automatically be closed up.

I could not conceive of any department of government, whether it is this department, or The Department of Health, or any of them, allowing conditions like this to exist in the province of Ontario, particularly at a time when we are trying to attract, not only people from other provinces, but from other jurisdictions, particularly from south of the border. It is amazing that people even patronize this kind of thing.

But in the north where you have accommodations spaced 50 to 75 miles apart, obviously the tourist is at a disadvantage. He is at the mercy of these operators. It is quite obvious to me that there is not adequate inspection, or I think these various establishments would have been closed up long before now.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, first of all let me say that we are responsible for licensing of tourist establishments and the terms of our regulations really relate to space—so many square feet of space per person; a certain space in the washrooms, and this kind of thing.

I suppose it is inevitable—I suppose it may become even more complex, but it is an age of specialization. I think the hon. member would agree with me it would be very difficult for us to train a man to inspect for The Department of Health which requires its own special training and constant updating to keep abreast of changing rules and changing concepts.

The Hydro Electric Power Commission, who are pretty technically competent people, if they are to do their job properly—say The Department of Labour, with elevator inspection, in those places where they have elevators, a whole host of things.

What we do is inspect sort of generally; we inspect for general cleanliness and so on. If we find, in view of our inspection, that a place appears to be poorly operated and there is a health hazard, we will report this to the Health people. If it appeared that there were electrical hazards, we would report this to the hydro people.

Our own staff do not pretend to be competent to enforce regulations of other departments, some of which are quite technical and quite complex and change quite often. So that here, again, we look at the accommodation end of it in terms of physical space, the general standard of upkeep.

I like to think that our people are more counsellors than policemen and we have our men trained in hotel accounting, hotel operation, motel operation, this kind of thing, so they can give counselling assistance.

We do enforce the regulations, of course, and from time to time we suspend a licence. In the other technical fields, this is done by other agencies of government who are skilled in that field and may be called in by us if they have not caught these things in the normal course of their work.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further under vote 2101?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would the Minister wish to discuss licences under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think this should be vote 2102, development branch, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knight: Just before we adjourn, I think I should clear up the stigma of Cinderella that I labelled the Minister with in my opening remarks. I think I should qualify that by saying it just seems to me that the Minister and his department are a joe-boy of the Cabinet wherein, if you do not know what to do with something like archives or something, well, you drop it on the Minister of Tourism and Information because he does not seem to have too much to do. From this point of view and in the order of priorities, it would seem to come last and thereby be the Cinderella and I would like to give this Cinderella some teeth. I hope that clears it up.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I will be able to sleep tonight with my door unlocked.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will do some legislation. We are anxious to turn to some third readings and perhaps later on in the afternoon, the Lieutenant Governor will come in to give Royal assent to some legislation. Time permitting, we will return to the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the east gallery are from the 4th Markham Girl Guide company, Markham; and in the west gallery, the 4H Agricultural Club, Stirling, and members of the Young Progressive Conservative Association, Port Rowan; and in Mr. Speaker's gallery, we have students from the Intercollegiate Student Council of North York.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased at this time to table the report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission on protection of privacy in Ontario.

The bulk of the report is a preliminary study conducted at the request of the commission by Professor Edward F. Ryan of the faculty of law at the University of Western Ontario. This study was authorized because of the concern which we all share for the preservation of the privacy of the individual.

While the commission report is very brief, it adopts the preliminary report of Professor Ryan and suggests various methods by which a study in depth might be undertaken in this particular field. The commission recommends that either a Royal commission or special task force be established to pursue the matters raised in the report.

As the hon. members are probably aware, the House of Commons at Ottawa has referred the subject of electronic surveillance and similar matters to the standing committee on justice, in order that the standing committee may study the problem and report thereon to Parliament.

I have, therefore, forwarded copies of this report to the committee, since the information should be of great assistance and considerable interest to the men who will be preparing the report to Parliament on substantially the same subject.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the standing committee of Parliament will, in the national sphere, provide a good deal of the study and deliberation that the Ontario Law Reform Commission recommended might be given by an enquiry at the provincial level. Indeed, this is a subject that perhaps relates more closely to the responsibility of legislators than to any other persons, at this stage when we have all been directing our attention towards legislation to control electronic surveillance and wiretapping.

The report I have tabled covers a broader field than wiretapping and associated eavesdropping devices and it relates to many phases of communication, information retrieval and computer applications that are having an increasing effect upon people throughout our country. However, it must also be apparent that the immediate problem is that related to electronic eavesdropping.

It is my own opinion, as previously expressed in this House on many occasions, that a national law controlling electronic surveillance is necessary and desirable and I am sure that the government of Canada is working towards that objective. Certainly this has been my submission to those with whom I deal in that government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose that at this particular point in time we should appoint further Royal commissions or enquiries as recommended in the report, although I fully realize the merit in the study which has been undertaken. It does seem reasonable that we should co-operate and promote in every way possible the enactment of a national law in the area that is most urgent and demanding and then direct our attention to these other areas in the context of the new federal law.

In the meantime, we may all consider this report and the very interesting and challenging issues which it raises, for they are of significance and deserve our consideration.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could address a point of clarification to the Attorney General? Do I correctly understand from his statement that at the moment he proposes no action—that he is merely tabling the report for study and reference by the federal authorities?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, the report which—as I have pointed out—was the study done by Professor Ryan, was adopted in its entirety, I believe, by the law reform commission in a very brief report from the commission proper.

My thought was, as I say in the statement, that since a study is going on at Ottawa and since I feel that this is really a national field, generally, and particularly in the electronic eavesdropping area, that furnishing that report and that study to that commission would be sufficient at this time, and that we should not set up, at this time, a Royal commission by the provincial government.

I believe the studies which will be completed at the federal level, with this as one of the submissions being made to it, will take care of a very large area of the subject.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, what I had in mind was not just the Royal commission, it was whether or not the Attorney General proposes to take any action within the fields that he can in this session of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I did not quite answer the question. We are certainly studying the report to see what areas we may move in, but I did want to make clear that I do not propose to suggest the appointment of a Royal commission.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, a question about the report.

Mr. Speaker: No, the only question the hon. member may ask is on a point of clarification, not about the report but about the Minister's statement.

Mr. Sargent: In view of the fact that the Minister has no recommendations as far as follow-up on this, would you clarify the fact that the overlapping or duplication of the two, federal and provincial, and the cost of the report.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, it is not quite fair to say—or correct to say—that the Minister has no recommendation. We have received the report, we are studying it. We have considered the recommendation regarding a Royal commission and we feel that, since there is presently a commission at Ottawa studying this matter, the best contribution that we can make is to let them have the report.

We will continue to study the other areas where we may find it possible to bring in legislation, but we have not had time to make a policy on that yet.

I do not think the cost is a very large item. Professor Ryan did the preliminary study. The commission is a standing commission in any event, it is a commission which is a continuing commission, I should say, and this is part of its work. The law reform commission I regard as a commission which will probably continue to assist us through the years.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for clarification purposes under this head, too. Arising out of what the Attorney General has just said, am I to understand that so far as reports and studies—leaving out Royal commissions and all that sort of thing—but as to ongoing studies with respect to invasions of privacy of all kinds, not just in electronic equipment but in polygraph tests, lie detector tests, and so on, that these studies are now terminated or is there a determinate policy of indefinite studies of an ongoing nature?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I would say they are ongoing now, from a departmental point of view, using the report. But I do feel that the committee at Ottawa be able to deal with most of it. As I have expressed many times, I feel that a great deal of this area is something that should not be separated—one thing in one province, something else in another, nothing in another, and so on. I feel that many of these subjects will be covered from a national point of view at a national level and, I would hope, with national legislation at the federal parliamentary level. We are studying the report to see if there are any areas where we can, as a province, cover certain of the suggestions and recommendations made in the report.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HOMES FOR SPECIAL CARE ACT, 1964

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Homes for Special Care Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to regulate the location of homes for special care.

THE PHARMACY ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this amendment may be termed a housekeeping amendment. It deletes a clause making the Act subject to any Acts of the Parliament of Canada. It is redundant insofar as the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction.

THE NURSING HOMES ACT, 1966

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Nursing Homes Act, 1966.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, there are three amendments here. The new provision provides for the relocation of residents in an unlicensed nursing home. The proposed amendment authorizes regulations respecting the location of nursing homes and general penalties provided for contraventions of the Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a point of order at this point?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): I would like to ask the Minister one brief question, sir.

What does the Minister mean by "location" of nursing homes or homes for special care? What is the implication of the word "location" in regulations governing the Act?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The implication, Mr. Speaker, the intention, is to ensure that the homes be placed strategically rather than they be centralized in one particular area and so the patients would have to come from long distances.

Mr. Lewis: Throughout a community?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes. It is not a case of saying that a nursing home shall be on this particular block; we do not mean that.

THE PESTICIDES ACT, 1967

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Pesticides Act, 1967.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, there are two amendments to this bill. The definition of land extermination and structural extermination are amended to include prevention and to clarify the intention that termite extermination is the function of a structural exterminator.

Members and officers of the pesticides advisory board are exempted from personal liability for anything done in good faith under the Act or regulations.

THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting The Department of Health.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to codify the functions of The Department of Health, which have heretofore been unwritten.

THE DOG TAX AND LIVESTOCK AND POULTRY PROTECTION ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Dog Tax and Livestock and Poultry Protection Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, this bill, this amendment to The Dog Tax and Livestock and Poultry Protection Act, is simply to clarify the position of the kennel operator with the requirements of the Act for dog tax.

THE ST. LAWRENCE PARKS COMMISSION ACT

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The St. Lawrence Parks Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the amendment permits the transfer to the commission of jurisdiction over roads now under the jurisdiction of The Department of Highways, and provides for the division of responsibility where a road is assumed by agreement with a municipality or The Department of Highways. It also permits the same controls over controlled-access highways of the commission as applying to those of The Department of Highways and to exercise similar controls over land adjoining controlled-access roads.

THE CORONERS' ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Coroners' Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to provide that the jurisdiction of each coroner shall extend throughout the province instead of on a county basis, and that where a coroner's appointment is revoked by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, he is entitled to a hearing before the public service grievance board.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, the Clerk of the Assembly, who is also secretary of the Ontario Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, has an announcement which I would like him to make, followed by a statement by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, I have to inform the House that with your approval in your capacity of president of the Ontario Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, copies of the constitution of the association were ordered in sufficient quantities to furnish a copy to each member.

Unfortunately one parcel appears to have been mislaid in the mail. Therefore the number received will be divided between the caucus offices and delivered this afternoon. If and when the missing package turns up, the remainder will be delivered.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, again on a point of order. The Speaker made a ruling on this, but this Minister has laid an egg again and he is going to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is entirely out of order. The hon. member has no point of order, or if he has he has not stated it. If he has a point of order he will state it and he may have the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to state my point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Right.

Mr. Sargent: The chair is recognizing the fact that a Minister has an important and embarrassing question coming up in the House and the chair allows him to make a statement in anticipation of the question. I think this is entirely wrong and unfair to the Opposition.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The question is anticipating the statement.

Mr. Sargent: He knows what we are going to ask him.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Mr. Speaker has already ruled on this and he will not repeat his ruling, and that is that. A Minister is entitled, regardless of whether there are questions or statements by other members or other Ministers, to make a statement before the orders of the day with respect to his department, its policies and affairs, and, therefore, the hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, perhaps the member should have some support on this side of the House. This is three days in a row that members of the House have put questions in and the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has no point of order, or if he has it has been dealt with in the Speaker's ruling that these statements are proper in the way they are being made. The only recourse as far as I am concerned is for the House to indicate that it does not wish to abide by that ruling of Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Last year, I announced in the Legislature that general guidelines on citizen participation in various phases of urban renewal were being prepared. The guidelines were being prepared on a basis of consultations with various groups and individuals actively engaged in either planning for, or in the implementation of urban renewal at the local level, as well as with individual citizens.

This approach rightfully required further consultation as principles and procedures emerged. A number of drafts were prepared, and the final version now available, was completed last fall, but its introduction was delayed pending the report of the federal government's task force on housing and urban development, which was released at the end of January this year. Copies of the guide are being mailed to the municipalities and will be placed in the member's mail boxes.

The guidelines are contained in a publication entitled "The Three R's of Citizen Participation." The publication outlines basic principles underlying citizen participation in urban renewal, and offers specific suggestions for guiding both citizens and municipal officials, including consultants engaged by municipalities.

It is extremely difficult to offer definite guidelines on a subject as complex and varied as citizen participation that would apply to each and every community in the province of Ontario, or even to different parts of the same community. Many of the suggestions, therefore, are general and deliberately flexible to permit experimentation and adaptation to local conditions.

In one community, for example, citizen participation might be effected through a series of open forums, or through the formation of block committees; in another, through the co-ordination of representative groups or individual door-to-door interviews. It is most likely that all of these forms will, at one time or another, have to be utilized to some extent, and it is imperative that the news media be thoroughly informed as the programme develops.

The day-to-day mechanics of participation, from community to community, matters less than the fact that a genuine, sustained and carefully thought out effort be made to enlist the co-operation of all residents in each area where a renewal scheme is contemplated.

Any such effort will require satisfactory documentation by the municipality during the preparation and implementation of the scheme as a basic requirement to the necessary approvals and financial aid from either the province or the federal government.

Whatever the content of a given programme, two guiding principles should underlie its organization: comprehensive citizen representation, and responsible participation by both citizens and municipal agencies alike.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice has a statement.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, in view of the recent comments respecting the appointment of an arbitrator to resolve the negotiations between the Oakville Police Association and the board of police commissioners, I thought I should advise the House that I have now appointed Cecil L. Snider, QC, to replace Judge Moore.

Mr. Snider has had a distinguished career in the service of the public. He has just completed 11 years as chairman of the Tax Appeal Board of Canada; before that he had served Ontario for nine years as Deputy Attorney General and for nine years as an assistant Crown attorney in the city of Toronto. He is a man of demonstrated capacity to understand and recognize the nature of a problem and at the same time has the legal and judiciary experience to develop reliable solutions to difficult problems.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, this gentleman will be of great assistance in resolving the difficulty which has arisen in these negotiations in Oakville. I should also mention that I have appointed Mr. Snider to act in a similar capacity to arbitrate the matter in dispute between the police association and the board of police commissioners in Windsor.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question from yesterday of the Minister of Health, if I might put it at this time.

Was Dr. G. L. Waldbott, of Detroit ever licenced or otherwise authorized to carry out medical examinations of a clinical nature in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I can best answer this question by stating that Dr. Waldbott, to the best of my knowledge, has never been licenced to practise medicine in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: I have a number of questions of the Premier (Mr. Robarts), who is not in today. The fourth question is entered in your office in my name incorrectly, Mr. Speaker, and I would like the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) to ask that question, if that is convenient for you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Later, that question only will be asked. It will be asked when it comes the turn of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, if that is agreeable to the hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I had two questions of the Prime Minister but one had to do with Medicare and I am wondering if it is possible to put it to the Minister of Health. It is a very simple question.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Minister of Health would take it; or he may take it as notice, if he is not prepared to answer.

Mr. MacDonald: Will the Prime Minister dispel all the speculation regarding Medicare with a statement as to the government's intentions?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, there is another question not totally unrelated to this item.

Mr. Shulman: I think that is my question.

Mr. Speaker: There is one from the member for High Park and one from the leader of the Opposition. If the leader of the Opposition will place his perhaps—

Mr. Nixon: Will the Minister comment on statements made by private insurance companies, as reported by the CBC, that the insurance companies are being required by provincial authorities to adjust their policies to accommodate Medicare in Ontario by July 1, 1969?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for High Park ask his question directly of the Minister?

Mr. Shulman: It is for the Minister directly. It is in three parts.

1. Has the Department of Health informed private medical insurance companies that Ontario will join the federal Medicare system on July 1?

2. Is it the policy of the department to inform the insurance companies of these major decisions before informing this Legislature?

3. Is the reason for this policy the sizeable donations made to the Progressive Conservative Party by these companies?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South, I would say that while we have had conversations with these parties no decisions have been made, no directions have been laid down and no conclusions have been reached. When they have, this House will be notified before anyone else is.

In reply to the question put by the member for High Park, I would say the answer to number one is no; number two is, therefore, irrelevant; and number three, in my view, sir, is not worthy of a reply.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in fact, this is a point of order, but I have a question as well of the Premier which might be directed to the Minister of Trade and Development since the ministry is prepared to respond that way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health indicated that he was prepared to accept the questions.

Mr. Nixon: This has to do with the land on the lake front.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): I have questions on the same subject. Perhaps if those who have questions for me ask them, then I can go ahead and answer the one the member would like to ask.

Mr. Speaker: In order, then, to accommodate the leader of the Opposition, and the Minister, we will take the questions of the Minister of Trade and Development. He has said that after they have been asked, if the leader would ask his they tie in. That is what the hon. Minister has said.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I had a question some days ago of the Minister of Health with regard to the membership in the Pesticide Advisory Board, and—

Mr. Speaker: There are several from another day and the hon. member for York South should place his now, of the Minister of Health.

Mr. MacDonald: That is just what I am doing. I placed it some days ago and I am soliciting the reply.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize the hon. member had placed it. The reply is to question 916.

The members of the Pesticide Advisory Board are: Mr. D. F. Manson, Dr. G. S. Cooper, Mr. J. L. Baker, Mr. P. H. Richardson, Mr. F. Scott Pierce, Mr. W. L. Smith and Mr. K. B. Turner.

Three vacancies now exist. Mr. Ralph Troup was The Department of Health representative; he resigned because he left the government service in January. Mr. A. G. Sellers of Cedar Vale, tree expert, resigned because of pressure of business. Mr. Manson, the chairman of the committee, resigned because of a difference of opinion between himself and the department. And only yesterday I received the resignation of Mr. P. H. Richardson on health grounds.

The duties of the board are clearly spelled out in subsection 4, section 5, of The Pesticide Act which states the board shall:

Examine applicants for licences and recommend the issue or refusal thereof, recommend after hearing a submission of written reasons the cancellations, suspension or reinstatement of licences, and perform such other functions as the regulations prescribe.

The board was recently formed and the pressure of a backlog of applicants for licencing has kept it quite busy to date. As soon as this backlog has cleared up—and should other matters of importance to the department come up—they would naturally be referred to the board.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister, unless I missed it has not addressed himself to a portion of the second question—that the board had never been asked for advice or suggestions on any really important questions. Do I take it that the Minister's reply is that the specifications as to their jobs are laid down in the Act, and that answers this question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would say so, Mr. Speaker. In my view, no matter of real importance which the department could not clear up on the basis of the advice provided by the staff has come up—and therefore no question has been referred to the board as yet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of this Minister from the other day, March 19.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Minister of Health. Is the Minister aware of the refusal of two Sudbury hospitals to admit Mr. Romeo Rousseau, a recipient of workmen's compensation, who was brought from St. Charles to Sudbury by ambulance, and who had to turn himself in to the Sudbury police in order to get treatment from the doctor who services the local jail? Will the Minister conduct an investigation into this matter?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this. Naturally this information would not come to me, since I have nothing to do with the hospital's admission or discharge of patients. However, if the hon. member wants to give me more specific details, I would be very glad to conduct an enquiry into it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the other day of this Minister.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of Health. Could the Minister advise with regard to the doctor shortage if he, and his Ontario health authorities, are investigating the Russian health care system which is using specially-trained paramedical workers whose training ranks somewhere between nurses and physicians?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I personally went to Russia three years ago to look this situation over. I was not impressed and I do not think it would help the care of the people in Ontario in any way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale placed certain questions. Oh, he is in his seat now! I was going to have one of the other members who had spoken to me ask them.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Health. Will the Minister direct the public health officer, in whose jurisdiction the town of Prescott, county of Grenville, is located, to take all steps necessary to have water service restored to those persons who have refused to pay the capital surcharge imposed by that commission, pending the decision of the county court in the application brought to test the legality of the surcharge set down for hearing on March 31 next, because of the health hazard involved?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, in looking into this matter, I am advised that the problem is really a legal one. We have, however, asked the medical officer of health to see to it that no person suffers from lack of water, and he has given us an undertaking that he has the matter under constant supervision and will attend to that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wondered if I might place a question to the Minister of Health on behalf of the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Gisborn), who asked me to do so.

Mr. Speaker: If that is so, it would be good if the hon. members could advise me at the beginning so that I could have them in order too.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health:

1. Is it correct that two patients in Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital committed suicide this year?
2. If so, does this indicate a lack of proper supervision?
3. Have inquests been held as yet? If not, when will they be held?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is yes. To the second part, no. To the third part, inquests have not been held. This decision rests with the coroner.

Mr. Speaker: Now the hon. member may wish to place his own question.

Mr. Deans: A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Has the inter-departmental study on the effects of DDT been completed? If so, when will it be made public? If not, when will it be completed?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the advisory committee on pollution control is continuing its study on the effects of DDT, and has already instituted certain controls working through the member departments. I have recently received an interim report from the committee, and it is my intention to make a statement on this subject and table copies of the report before the Easter recess.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, might I enquire, by way of supplementary question, whether the Minister intends to ban the sale of DDT in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Now we have come to the Minister of Trade and Development and there are a number of questions, some of them related. Perhaps if we ask the questions of the Minister of Trade and Development not connected with that particular matter, and with the permission of the members, I would like to indicate them.

Then we will take this conglomeration of questions from various members with respect to the waterfront in Toronto, which is the source of several questions. So, perhaps the member for Hamilton Centre would ask his question.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): A question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

What is the amount of the forgivable loan made available to Canadian Westinghouse for their Orangeville operation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No forgivable loan has yet been processed for Canadian Westinghouse Company in respect to their Orangeville operation, but there is one under review.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington South.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Has there been any justification for the 30 per cent increase in the price of lumber in the province during the last two months, and has this increase had any effect on recent contracts signed by the Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not get that question today. I will take it as notice and get the answer for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview has two questions of this Minister with respect to the lakefront.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): One question from yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Is the charge accurate which, according to a story in this morning's Globe and Mail, has been levelled by Samuel Cass, Metro traffic engineer, that the Minister has:

1. Been breaking two local bylaws in hauling fill to a new project in the Canadian National Exhibition property?

2. Held no consultation with local authorities in respect of this bylaw-breaking traffic?

3. Never asked for, or sought, permission to dump fill?

What steps does the Minister now plan in respect of this situation?

Now this may be tied in with the question I have today. Do you want me to go ahead and ask that one?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think we should have these questions asked. The Minister indicates that he may be able to answer them all.

Mr. Young: Another question of the Minister.

Does the Minister consider that his ultimatum to Metropolitan Toronto in respect to the lakefront property he claims for the province is preferable to orderly negotiations in respect to this situation?

Will the Minister make a statement to the House in respect to provincial claims to this territory?

Does the Minister plan to seek the co-operation of the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) and the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) in order to send in armed OPP patrol boats and parachute jumpers to occupy this territory?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate perhaps today when you read the press, it looks like a "Keystone Cops" comedy over two small bylaws, but I will answer the first question:

No it is not accurate.

1. Metropolitan Toronto bylaws 2990 and 1551, as a matter of strict law, do not apply to the Crown and its agents. Nevertheless, as a matter of courtesy, and as a matter of normal government practice, officials of the Ontario government consulted throughout this project with Metro officials as to concept and implementation.

2. (a) The department and/or its agents met with CNE and Metro officials to discuss landfill operations and traffic in connection with the proposed Ontario CNE pavilion on March 6, 1969;

(b) They again met with Metro officials, including the deputy-commissioner of traffic, Mr. F. J. Sanson at City Hall on March 7, 1969;

(c) They again met on March 14 in the morning and again in the afternoon of the same day;

(d) On Monday, March 17, 1969, Metro road work crews began to effect changes to the site of the proposed Ontario landfill project to permit construction to start.

3. Answered by the above.

Now, insofar as the other question is concerned, I had no intention of releasing a letter to Mr. Allen until after the executive committee had met tomorrow, when I think they will meet and change these bylaws. However, as some of the letter has been released to the press, I would like to read into the record at least one paragraph which I think will give the hon. member and the members of the House the information they require.

I quote from a letter I wrote to Metro Chairman Allen dated March 18, 1969:

As you are aware, the province has been reviewing its position with respect to the Metropolitan Toronto waterfront plan, as by far the most substantial proportion of the lands to be created under this project would be on provincially-owned water lots. As part of this review, a study was undertaken by The Attorney General's Department as to the status of various leases and grants which had been made in an earlier period.

This study would indicate that a substantial proportion of the lands to be included in the harbour city development, including lands south of the CNE to which you refer in your letter, were improperly deeded by the federal government and are, in fact, the property of the provincial government.

This matter is still under study by the Prime Minister, and that is why we have not discussed immediately the position of the Lakeshore Road/CNE lands with the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto.

I hope, Bill, that this letter reviews once more the urgency of this programme for all concerned, but particularly Metro. It does not seem to us that we are creating any problems for Metro council that are of any significance, as ownership of all lands that could be disputed can, as we have assured you, be settled to the mutual satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question which I think should be put first, and then we will come back to the leader of the Opposition and the member for York South.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Trade and Development:

Would the Minister elaborate on his statement in the Globe and Mail this morning, March 20, that the federal government made an error 50 years ago when it deeded the lake front land west of the Toronto Island Airport to the city of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In answer to that question, in general our position is that certain water lots to the west of Bathurst, some filled and others not, were not part of the public harbour in 1867. Consequently they did not pass to the federal government in 1867 by virtue of section 108 of The British North America Act.

Mr. Speaker: The questions which I have left pertaining to this problem have all been asked of the Prime Minister or the Premier. I would think that we might find out from the hon. Minister if he would care to have them asked and then if he can answer them, all right; if he cannot, perhaps he will take them as notice. Would that be satisfactory? It will clear the deck at this time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know what the questions are, Mr. Speaker. I do not mind them asking; I will see if I can answer them. If I cannot, I will take them as notice.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, part of this question I would like to put to the Premier when he returns, but one part that this Minister might deal with, is:

Will the land title difficulties interfere with the timetable for the construction of the new Ontario government pavilion at the Canadian National Exhibition announced last week, which will be located on the off-shore islands?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not think it will, if we can get on with the fill job. That is why when we made our announcements we got under way immediately.

There are two factors at the moment. If we can get started on Monday again, which I hope we can, I do not think the delay this week will mean too much. On the other hand, there are construction talks coming up in May, and if they develop into a strike and there was a six-week or two-month delay, then fill would not be available. This is one of the hazards that we face at the present time. Again, it is one of the reasons why we wanted to get started as quickly as we did.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary to that: It appears from the stand taken by the Metropolitan chairman that he is not prepared to accept the provincial proposition that the federal government made a mistake in the configurations 100 years ago. It looks as if you are going to be involved in a court case and very properly so. Is there any alternative to that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think there is an alternative. We are going ahead to improve the lands and if, when we are finished improving, they belong to Metro, fine; if they do not, we will settle it, as I said earlier, to our mutual satisfaction. This has already been discussed with all the people involved. In the meantime, we said we would not hold up the waterfront project; we would get along with it. If there is a discussion on lands later, as to who own the lands and who is the rightful owner, that can be discussed without any difficulty.

Mr. Nixon: Finally, if there was so much consultation with senior Metro officials, how can the Minister account for the fact that the Metro chairman now refers to it as a land grab?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot account for what Mr. Allen has said. There must be other matters. I see in the press that he has other difficulties with the government; perhaps this is a combination of many problems.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has a question?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think my question to the Prime Minister has been covered to some extent, but perhaps I can put it, and then a supplementary emerges.

Why does the government not openly negotiate with Metro Toronto with regard to developments along the lake front, instead of unilateral decisions secretly made?

Now the Minister's reply, in effect, has been that there have been negotiations and he detailed some of them. My supplementary question is how is it conceivable that Metro chairman Allen would not be aware of these? Is the Minister not getting himself into a state of cold war, not only with Ottawa, but also with the municipality? Can he fight on two fronts at the same time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Frankly, I do not think it is a cold war. I said I think it is a tempest in a teapot and I outlined here the other day, on a question from the hon. member for Parkdale, the meetings that have been held with Mr. Allen and his officials. Now if he has not communicated with his officials, that is not my responsibility. I was not aware that he was not aware of what we were doing and the discussions we were going to have with reference to those plans.

I might say that if the member walked down to the lake front here he would see some billboards about the Metro waterfront plan. That includes 5,400 acres of land to be filled in, in Lake Ontario. Any land filled there belongs to the province and there are only 200 acres out of that 5,400 in the Toronto harbour which is not ours. When you look at land fill in Lake Ontario, which is worth about $250,000 an acre, I think the people of this province have a right to know who is dealing with their land.

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder if the Minister would feel the solution to the problem is that he send a copy of all minutes to Mr. Allen so that he might be kept in contact with his own officials. Is that the Minister's view?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I think we will make sure he gets a copy if he has not already got them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale has a question, but I presume from the wording of it, that it would be preferable to have it answered by the Premier.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I think this question could be answered by the Minister, if he wants to attempt it. It is on the same subject.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will try it.

Mr. Trotter: The question is this, Mr. Speaker:

What provision has the government made for boating activities inside the sea wall, which will be stopped because of the government's unilateral action of dumping fill in front of the CNE grounds, in connection with the construction of the new Ontario government building?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me first say that we have not dumped any fill into the water as yet. We are taking care of the first stage, which is on the mainland. Discussions were held with the CNE official, Mr. Bert Powell, with reference to the boating activities. He felt they could move them further west and there would not be any delay or any difficulties experienced.

Mr. Trotter: I was wondering, as a supplementary question, is the Minister aware of the activities of a club, like the Argos, let us say, that has been operating for years; with the type of boating they do, I do not think there is any other place for them to go. I did not know if this land had been taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we have had discussions. In fact, I think the Argonaut Rowing Club has already been talking to my staff with reference to the difficulties that could be experienced. Let me say that before the project is finished, I think somebody will be inconvenienced; but when the project is finished, they will have better waters to race in than they have at the present time, so it is a matter of having a little patience and getting the job done as quickly as possible.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I have just one more supplementary question. Would it not be better if the Minister gave the public some idea of what plan he did have? All these questions really would seem to be answered, but he asks them to be patient. But they just do not know what is going on. I wonder if the Minister does.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, of course, I know what is going on, as I think most people do who have been associated with the project. I am quite sure, unless we had announced this project, we would not know who had any objections. Now, I think the minute you announce a project, you are going to have people come forward and say, "I object", and when they start to object we can, we hope, sell them out of their objections. So, by announcing the project we now find people are coming forward and saying, "Well, what are you going to do about this and about that?" and we will find the answers.

But we cannot foresee what is going to happen to some of these people who may want to use the waterfront during the time we are building this building. However, I think we will find a solution for them. As I said, we have talked to the exhibition people. We do not want to delay any activity of the exhibition, we need all the activity they can get. But I think the exhibition also needs this concept that we are putting up for them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nipissing has a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Lands and Forests:

How many charges have been laid against residents of the province under the new regulations, effective January 1, requiring resident angling licences?

Is it the policy of the department to issue warnings for the first few months?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Nipissing, 42 charges have been laid. A large majority of the charges were laid after warnings had been issued that angling licences were required.

The answer to No. 2: Yes, it is our policy to issue warnings. However, after a period of giving warnings our officers are instructed to lay charges wherever it is felt warranted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside. He has a question from yesterday, actually from March 18, of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

In 1958 the county of Essex expropriated ten feet of about 200 properties along E. C. Row Avenue with the intention of widening the road. On January 1, 1966, the city of Windsor annexed the E. C. Row area.

Whose responsibility is it now to carry out the promised compensation?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, from our knowledge of this situation, it would appear that this is a matter that would be taken into account by the Ontario Municipal Board when it makes an order under section 14 of The Municipal Act. This is the section dealing with the adjustment of assets and liabilities between the local municipalities and the counties. As yet, they have not made such an order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale has a question from yesterday of this Minister.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

What action will the Minister take to require the public utilities commission of the town of Prescott and county of Grenville, to restore water service to those residents who have refused to pay the capital surcharge imposed by that commission, pending the decision of the county court in the application brought to test the legality of the surcharge set down for hearing on March 31 next?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, The Public Utilities Act authorizes a municipal corporation or a public utilities commission that is entrusted with the control and management of a public utility, to shut off the water service when the rates imposed therefor are in default. This Act is administered by my department but it does not authorize me to take any action to restore water service to those residents in the town of Prescott who have had the service shut off, because they have refused to pay the capital surcharge imposed by the public utilities commission.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would permit a supplementary question, I take it from that that there is no authority the Minister has then, of any kind, to deal with the arbitrary action of the public utilities commission in the case of the imposition of a charge which is subject to test in the courts.

Perhaps the Minister would see whether or not in such circumstances he should not obtain the authority?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I think really this is something that can be worked out at the local level. I have no power to interfere with what might be determined as an arbitrary act of people refusing to pay their bills.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of this Minister.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

In view of the report in this morning's Globe and Mail that the Minister is unaware of the implications of an $88 million OWRC project in Chinguacousy township to the population growth of that township, how could the Minister of Municipal Affairs be so unaware that a population explosion of this magnitude could occur so soon on Metro's western doorstep? I might say he was 5,000 per cent wrong in his estimation of it. How could the OWRC sign agreements for the construction of the lines without informing the Minister what it would mean in terms of development?

And how could the officials preparing the MTART study ignore in their final publication what must have been apparent as far back as the winter of 1966 when the report was first given to Cabinet? And how could a decision, even a tentative one, on forming a regional government for the Peel-Halton area be taken so soon after the disclosure of this information, which, if proved to be true, would mean that a city larger than Hamilton would be nestling up to Metro?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the ultimate population figure mentioned in the press did not in fact originate in my department. This is a figure advanced by the township officials as their estimate of potential development for the township. In other words, a speculative figure which might apply to any area of the province. The hon. members are aware that any area has a potential to accommodate population that will probably never be realized in our lifetime.

The eastern trunk sewer of the Ontario Water Resources Commission is in the initial phase of design. This phase covers a projected growth for 30 years. Over this period, the system will have a capacity to accommodate up to approximately 150,000 persons, plus industrial wastes in the township of Chinguacousy. However, the installation of sewer and water facilities does not automatically dictate the development which will occur in any area. Many other factors have to be taken into consideration, one of which is the tax base of the municipality. The official plan of the township of Chinguacousy as of this date permits the development of up to approximately 60,000 persons for the total urban area of the township.

Therefore, notwithstanding the potential of this or any other area, the actual rate of development will be controlled by the official plan of the township as amended from time to time.

The MTARTS report presents a series of alternative plans for the development of the Toronto region. The government is currently examining these various courses of growth to determine which one, if any of these, should form the basis for provincial policy. One of the major functions of regional government is planning on a regional basis. It is obvious that regional planning is imperative to determine development policies on a broader area.

It seems entirely logical to establish the necessary machinery to carry out this function.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this, would the Minister accept three supplementary questions? I realize that the Minister has many things going on and I doubt that anyone could know all the answers, but am I right to assume, Mr. Speaker, that the press was correct and that the Minister was led to believe that the population would be 56,000 instead of 560,000? He was out 504,000 people in his estimate, is this true?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The township officials are very optimistic.

Mr. Sargent: No, I want to know the answer, this is very important.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Just like the Budget, sometimes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think probably it could be said that we are dealing with two figures. One is a figure advanced by the township officials, 560,000; however, the official plan of the municipality as approved at this point, uses a figure of about 60,000, plus industrial wastes from that area. It sounds like a wide variation. Who has been misled, I am not prepared to say at this moment.

Mr. Singer: Since when are people categorized as industrial waste?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I think the hon. member will find, if he would like to talk to the Ontario Water Resources Commission, that they often deal in population plus a percentage. It is a very involved formula, depending on the kind of industry which might be involved.

If I can put it this way—560,000 might be a reasonable figure if they were all homes and there was no industry, no commercial areas at all, which of course is impractical.

Mr. Sargent: Can we assume that the press figures are right and that you were a half million wrong?

Will the Minister then advise of the figure of $88 million for the OWRC development—how could the lack of liaison between these two important bodies in an amount that big, how could that happen?

Mr. Speaker, he says he does not know how it could happen and this shows a serious situation—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asked permission to direct a supplementary question.

Mr. Sargent: I think it is a shocking situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: How can they laugh about $88 million? No wonder we are broke.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions which I took as notice, one on February 13 and one on March 17. I have the answers and I should like to give them to the House.

The member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte) asked a question along with the member for High Park in February:

Why did the coroner and Crown attorney in the inquest of January 24, 1969, into the death of Nicola DiFederico, city of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, refuse permission to the union representative to ask The Department of Labour representative at the inquest whether the employer, the Algoma Steel Corporation, was in violation of The Industrial Safety Act?

I investigated this very thoroughly, Mr. Speaker, and would now inform the House that an inquest was held in the city of Sault Ste. Marie on January 24, 1969, into the death of Nicola DiFederico, an employee of the Algoma Steel Corporation, who came to his death on January 4 of this year.

As to the question—"why did the coroner and the Crown attorney refuse permission to the union representative to ask The Department of Labour representative at the inquest whether the employer, the Algoma Steel Corporation, was in violation of The Industrial Safety Act?"—I would say, Mr. Speaker, this is not a correct statement. That statement is not correctly framed.

I am informed that a few days prior to the inquest, a senior representative of the union contacted the coroner, Dr. Sullivan, in an effort to have questions blaming the company for the accident put forward, and the coroner, of course, declined.

Immediately prior to the inquest the assistant Crown attorney, Mr. Douglas Gaetz, was approached by a senior representative of the union who requested that the Crown be asked a prepared question regarding a previous conviction of the company under the provisions of The Industrial Safety Act.

Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that the majority of the hon. members of this House are conversant with the rules applying to a coroner's inquest. An inquest is a hearing to determine the cause of death, the circumstances surrounding the same, and any fault relating thereto. Recommendations with respect to an accident would be made by a jury upon hearing all the relevant evidence.

Mr. Martel: An exercise in futility.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The Crown attorney, after listening to the request, advised the representatives of the union that in matters such as the one before them, questions involving previous convictions would be irrelevant, prejudicial and of no probative value. During the course of the inquest, Mr. Bruno Rebelatto, an industrial safety officer with The Department of Labour, gave a complete and objective report of the accident and of the directions to the company as a result.

At the conclusion of the inquest, the coroner asked in general whether anyone present had anything further to add and there were no further submissions from anyone.

Mr. Speaker, I have made extensive inquiries into this matter and I am of the opinion that all relative information was brought forward for the consideration of the jury. I do not propose to reopen the inquest into this matter. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the length of my reply to these questions will convince the members of the House of my interest in the matter.

And I would add this, Mr. Speaker—and I think I should make this very clear—that even in a criminal prosecution, a question as to previous conviction, as to record of the accused, is never permitted. It is strictly against the rules of evidence.

It is not relative to the matter being tried and would not be relative, or of probative value at an inquest. Even in a criminal prosecution it is only after conviction when the accused has been found guilty, that one may then inquire, relating to sentence, as to the matter of previous conviction.

So it was entirely out of order to suggest that, in a coroner's inquest, a question should be asked as to whether the company in this case had been guilty of a previous conviction.

Mr. Shulman: No one suggested that.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. Attorney General, for record purposes, could provide the number of that question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps I can, Mr. Speaker. Question No. 537 was the one asked by the hon. member for High Park and the similar question asked by the hon. member for Dovercourt was question No. 606.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a supplementary question if the hon. Minister will answer it.

Mr. De Monte: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I not correct in assuming that this is not a criminal prosecution?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Certainly.

Mr. De Monte: Am I not also correct in assuming that the purpose of the inquest is to discover how the person died and if there is any culpability attached thereto? Am I correct in that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not get the question.

Mr. De Monte: It is not a prosecution, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right.

Mr. De Monte: But it is a probe to find out how the person died and if there is any criminal culpability attached to the death. Am I not correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, no; the member is absolutely wrong.

Mr. De Monte: All right. I am correct in my first question, am I not? Well, would not a question presented by the union to probe into the cause of death be relevant to the inquest, and would not that question be a relevant question, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The question submitted by the union was as to whether there was a previous conviction. Now surely the hon. member is aware that the facts relating to a death, to a situation, to a circumstance, a happening, has nothing to do with something which occurred months before.

Mr. De Monte: But if I may—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

The hon. member has directed supplementary questions to the hon. Minister and this is not the time to engage in a debate. If the hon. member has another question by way of a supplementary question and the hon. Minister wishes to answer it, he may ask that permission.

Mr. De Monte: Would the Minister accept another supplementary question?

If the inquest is trying to establish the cause of death, would it not be relevant to show the inquest that this has happened before? Not to show whether anybody was guilty or innocent, but relevant to the inquest to show that it had happened before and that the condition should be changed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would ask the hon. member a question by way of answer to his question. If he were defending an accused for breaking and entering would he think that the fact that the man had broken and entered some store or place some months before would be relevant to the trial of his guilt on this offence?

Mr. De Monte: No it would not, but—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the answer then.

Mr. De Monte: My respectful submission is that this is not a prosecution, it is an inquest, and there is a difference.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have another question. It was asked by the hon. leader of the Opposition. That was No. 908. A very similar question comes from the hon. member for Wentworth, No. 917. The question of the leader of the Opposition was:

Is the Attorney General aware that Waterloo Crown attorney William Morrison has refused to prosecute thirteen property tax rebate cases in the Galt area, saying that the courts should not be used as a collection agency? And what action does the Minister intend to take in this matter?

A similar question from the member for Wentworth:

Is any action contemplated against Crown attorney William Morrison of Galt, who refused to prosecute 13 persons charged under The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act?

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make very clear that the assistant Crown Attorney, William Morrison, did not make the statement which is attributed to him by the Press "that the courts should not be used as a collection agency."

Nor did he walk out of the court in the sense that the headline in the Press indicated. I investigated this matter through the Crown attorney for the county of Waterloo, Mr. Dawson, and I should just like to expand a little bit on the circumstances:

Mr. Dawson, in his correspondence with us, said:

I am dictating this letter with Mr. Morrison with me at the time. He did not walk out in the sense indicated in the article, but left in the usual manner, after being excused by the court. And he denies saying anything about the court being used as a collection agency.

Also, he today was in communication with the reporter representing the Evening Reporter newspaper in Galt, from which the Canadian Press got its story. This reporter, whose name is Ray Struthers, admitted he made an error in attributing to Mr. Morrison the remark that the courts should not be used as a collection agency. And he also admitted that there was nothing in the actions of Mr. Morrison that would justify the headline of "Crown attorney walks out and won't prosecute landlords."

An hon. member: Where did the remark come from?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I could inform the House where it came from, but it came from someone outside the court. It was not a remark made by the Crown attorney or anyone acting in the Crown attorney's office.

I think it might be of assistance, Mr. Speaker, if I did review briefly for the hon. members, the statutory provisions involved, and the manner in which they relate to the Crown's responsibility to prosecute offenders in this province. Hon. members are no doubt aware that section 7 of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act does two things. It makes it an offence, punishable on summary conviction, to contravene the provisions of section 4 or the regulations and, more importantly, it authorizes the judge to make an order directing the payment of the rebate of the portion then unpaid.

There are thus two features of the section—quasi-criminal offence and the civil judgment. Under section 14 of The Crown Attorney's Act—Crown attorney aids in the administration of justice—the section provides an imperative duty to prosecute only in the case of indictable offences. In summary conviction matters and private prosecutions, the Crown attorney has a supervisory capacity, firstly to ensure justice towards the accused, secondly to prosecute any public interest.

He has a statutory responsibility also to advise justices of the peace. Crown attorneys in the province have been advising justices of the peace on these particular matters, and the justices of the peace have been informing themselves about these matters as they are entitled to do.

However, the Crown attorneys do not, as a matter of ordinary practice, prosecute these private prosecutions where the information is laid by a private citizen against a private citizen. In some cases, the Crown attorney has prosecuted one or two cases to establish the proper procedure and practice and this has worked very well.

I would draw to the attention of hon. members that in Highway Traffic Act cases, for instance, which are quasi-criminal, they are prosecuted almost entirely without the intervention or the assistance of the Crown attorney. He may advise—he does advise—the justice of peace. Generally he does not remain in court. He walks out when his cases, indictable cases and those more serious cases are finished. Generally he is excused by the court and this is the case in this type of prosecution.

These, as I point out, are informations laid by private individuals against private individuals, and there is no obligation. In fact, it is not our practice at all that the Crown attorney should prosecute.

I would take this occasion to read from the section 14 of The Crown Attorneys Act the language of the Act which sets forth his duty, and that is 14, subsection d:

The Crown attorney shall watch over cases conducted by private prosecutors, and without unnecessarily interfering with private individuals who in such cases prosecute, assume wholly the conduct of a case where justice towards the accused seems to demand this interpretation.

We do not, as a matter of practice, get into those cases with The Crown Attorneys Act.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask the Attorney General, is it not a fact that there have been prosecutions by Crown attorneys in these cases in other areas of the province?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There have been a very few to set a pattern as I mentioned in my reply. But we do not feel an obligation here at all, and it is not our usual practice in this type of statute.

Mr. Nixon: In fact, you as the chief law officer are advising the Crown attorneys that they should wash their hands of any responsibilities in this regard at all, and that it is an action between private individuals.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, that is not quite correct. We have tried to indicate that way these cases should be prosecuted and, as I say, there have been some. But if we were to have Crown attorneys acting in every prosecution of not just this Act but of this type of case, including highway traffic, we would need another 200 or 300 Crown attorneys in this province.

Mr. Nixon: I ask the Attorney General, surely he would agree that while this legislation is still in its trial stage, and that in fact it may be abandoned in another year, that this is the sort of thing that sets it apart from the standard type of legislation with which the Attorney General has been trying to equate. I think that the government should accept its responsibilities and assist in prosecutions in a general way.

Mr. Singer: Certainly it gave a pledge to do that when they brought the Act in, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs said he would do it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, just to pursue this for a moment, I would point out that these cases were conducted without any difficulty. The presiding justice has a duty in respect to them. There were convictions rendered, there were settlements reached, there were orders made. There was no difficulty in the prosecution of any of these cases.

Mr. Nixon: Well, how did the role of the prosecutor ever come to the fore if they were represented by attorneys privately?

Mr. MacDonald: Bad reporting.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Represented by whom?

Mr. Nixon: By attorneys they hired as individuals.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not sure that they were. I do not think that they were.

Mr. Nixon: So they were unrepresented.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The accused or the prosecuted?

Mr. Nixon: The prosecuted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think they prosecuted themselves and there was no difficulties with the cases.

Mr. Singer: No, except in Metropolitan Toronto where the chief justice of the peace will not accept any.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Attorney General, since he is clearing questions, will check on question 493 which I believe he took as notice on February 4.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is that the one where the hon. member was to furnish me a copy of the letter? I do not think I have it.

Mr. Shulman: Did you not get it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I asked in a note for it the other day.

Mr. Singer: That is what your memo said.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 64th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF TOURISM AND INFORMATION

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2101:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, in his opening remarks the Minister went out of his way to give a lot of credit and praise to the activities of his counterpart in the province of Quebec. It is still fresh in our memory that the information that came from Quebec indicated that the Minister of Tourism there was very fullsome in his praise of this Minister and, as a matter of fact, had indicated that Ontario had brought her tax situation into line with that in Quebec so that there would not be discrepancies that would be not in the best interests of tourism in Quebec.

The Minister denied that there was any sort of an agreement or even collusion in this regard but this might be a chance where, the rules being a bit different than in the question period, he might expand a little on that.

Perhaps he would tell us to what extent he does co-operate with The Department of Tourism in Quebec, and to what extent there were discussions that would tend to bring our taxing and cost situation for tourism into line with Quebec.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Chairman, I would be delighted to. Perhaps I might clarify the matter. After I saw the Canadian Press story and the matter was raised in this House, I got in touch with the Minister in Quebec, and he sent me the following wire. This is dated March 17.

Some Montreal newspapers in their March 11 edition have reported their interpretation of the press conference which I gave at Place Bonaventure on the occasion of the annual exhibition of hotel and restaurant suppliers. In answer to a question from a newspaperman, I have stated that co-operation between Quebec and Ontario was quite close and successful in the field of tourism at large.

I have also underlined the fact that new taxes in Ontario on rooms, meals and liquor were helping to bring competition on a more equal basis between Quebec and Ontario, especially when both were looking at conventions and important tourist groups. I have also stressed the excellent relations between yourself and myself, and that we were trying together to launch joint programmes that would appeal to customers of both provinces and would help cut promotional expenses, while giving better results to both provinces.

I sincerely regret that part of that press conference was interpreted contrary to the spirit in which it was given. The conference was given in French without any prepared text.

signed,

Gabriel Loubier,

Minister of Tourism, Fish and Game

To expand on that, I can only say to the leader of the Opposition that our co-operation is in the promotion field and not in tax fields or fields outside the realms of our two departments. In fact, while we have discussed, for instance, certain fish and game laws, simply because this is a matter of interest to Mr. Lobier, it is not to me. He has mentioned things to me and I have suggested he talk to the Minister of Lands and Forests in this province.

As I think I mentioned when I answered the question in the House, the Minister in Quebec did mention to me that he had been receiving many representations, particularly from the Montreal area about the eight per cent room tax, and that it was a great problem for him. I simply said I sympathized and was glad that at that time we had no such tax. I, of course, gave no undertaking to recommend to this government that we should impose a room tax. I do not think the hon. leader of the Opposition would expect that I would have, no matter how great our co-operation in the promotional fields were.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): In this vein, Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the Minister thought that this new tax in Ontario would hurt the hotel and motel business in Ontario? Obviously, it has hurt business in the province of Quebec. Is there any reason why it will not hurt business in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member was here yesterday when I answered that same question. I think, in essence, I said that it was not going to do it any good, but I did not think that it was going to do us irreparable harm. I expect this year we would have an increase in business over last year, as we had last year over the year before.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister. Could the Minister advise us of the result of the meeting of the motel and hotel operators with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) and, I believe, yourself yesterday, and the request to have this put off until the fall?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that it was a very cordial meeting.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you very much.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to remind the Minister that during the opening of these estimates he mentioned that the department operates several vehicles. Can he tell me how many vehicles and who carries the insurance on these vehicles?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are three vehicles and the insurance is carried in the same policy, I believe, as all government vehicles, through The Department of Highways.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale has a question?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister about the format of his estimates and whether or not, instead of mingling The Department of Public Records and Archives, he would in future years separate the two departments so that we can clearly differentiate between The Department of Public Records and Archives and The Department of Tourism and Information.

I notice, for example, that The Department of Public Records and Archives appears, somehow or other, to come under vote 2103. If the Minister is the Minister of each of these departments, then I think it would be most helpful to have the functions separate.

I know that people can consider The Department of Public Records and Archives to be a rather, perhaps, marginal department from one point of view, in terms of its financial commitment or the financial cost to the government. But from another point of view it is a very essential part of preserving the historical records and tradition of the province. I find it, on the one hand, confusing; I also find it to be a downgrading of what could be a very important, separate segment of the government's administration.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to discuss this with the Treasury people who, in effect, set up the form of the estimates. I think the hon. member is aware that it is a separate department, except that, being relatively small in number, its administrative work is done by the administrative people of The Department of Tourism and Information.

As a matter of fact, since I have been Minister, I have attempted to stress the fact that it is a separate entity, and a very important one, and I believe it is. There are some functions of the department in the historical branch having to do with museums and the plaque marking programme which relates it, I think, to The Department of Tourism and Information more than it would any other department. But I would agree with the hon. member that at least its function is quite separate. While it is a separate vote here, it may be that we can have the estimates rearranged to have it as a separate entity in the estimates, if this would be the wish of the House.

Mr. J. Renwick: I hope so because, for example, at the Canadian National Exhibition, The Department of Public Records and Archives' particular booth was really quite a fascinating display and was very interesting. I think that most members of the Legislature would not have recognized that it was established as a separate department and that it has that status within the government service.

On the same point, it would seem to me that the status and the position of the archivist for the province would be much enhanced if his department were treated as a separate and distinct department. The displays down the hallway here are a very important historical part of the province's activities. More and more we are going to have to preserve those items of the tradition and history of the province of Ontario from encroachment. We are going to have to preserve not only their records but the actual physical establishments in which they were part and parcel of the social and political life of the province.

I am glad to hear the Minister would give consideration to it. I would certainly like to endorse that and I would ask the Minister now to give us some indication of the status and position of the archivist of the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I do not have in front of me The Act of The Department of Public Records and Archives, but perhaps I can get it here. The archivist of Ontario has certain specific duties analogous to those of a Deputy Minister—certain special duties regarding the preservation of documents, and the approval of the destruction of documents which are not considered to be of historical value. To sum it up, I can just read section 2 of The Archives Act:

Department of Public Records and Archives, hereinafter called the department: 2(i) There shall be an officer in charge of the department to be known as the archivist of Ontario, hereinafter referred to as the archivist, who shall be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council and shall hold office during his pleasure and be in charge of administration of this Act under the direction of the member of the executive council to whom the charge of the department is from time to time assigned. The archivist has the rank of a deputy head of a department and in relation to the department has all the power to perform the duties of the deputy head of the department.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, to repeat what I said a few moments ago, The Department of Public Records and Archives, to all intents and purposes, is a separate entity. But for reasons of economy and administrative convenience, the personnel matters, the purchasing and the other administrative functions are carried out by the administrative branch of the Department of Tourism and Information.

I would agree with the hon. member that the archives department is an extremely important government function. It is becoming more so with the records and management programme, for instance. The day will no doubt come when it will be economical and more convenient to have it completely self-contained, rather than only partially so as it is at the present time. I do not think that I could at this moment give an undertaking on behalf of the government that additional personnel will be added to the department to do those administrative functions. I can, as I think I have done, give an undertaking that we will continue to recognize its importance and to make the department itself better known to the people of the province.

I have found in my travels around that it is not well known. In fact, we are suggesting we do certain things to make it well known such as indicate its existence on the historic plaques that are put up. In that magnificent display which was put together by The Archives Department—and particularly the museum section which is in this building on the ground floor—at the time we opened it I noticed that the department's name was not mentioned and I had it put on because I think it should be recognized.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, is the archivist paid at the same rate or same level of pay as the Deputy Ministers of other departments?

Hon. Mr. Auld: He is not at the rate of Deputy Minister. He is very close to it, and I think the reason for that is that his salary was just reviewed and a substantial increase was made in October. We are perhaps a little out of order. That should be on 2103.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are out of order at all because it comes under the general vote of this department. As to whether or not there is going to be a recognition of this department as a separate entity, that is a matter of policy I would think. I agree with the Minister, there is no need to duplicate personnel just for the sake of duplicating, but from the point of view of the presentation of the affairs of that department, I would hope that the Minister, as he said he would, will take up the question of a separate presentation and of raising the status of the archivist to that of a full fledged Deputy Minister of the government. I think it deserves that importance.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, under this vote, I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister that in southwestern Ontario, we have one of the largest ports of entries of American tourists at Windsor. Before Highway 401 was opened for traffic, the tourists used Highway 2 and Highway 3 and Highway 98. A lot of businessmen built motels, restaurants and service stations, along 2 and 3, and invested many, many thousands of dollars. But after 401 was opened, the tourists left those Highways 2 and 3 and used 401.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, could I interrupt the hon. member? I think he is talking about our border information centres that should be under 2102.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 2101 carried?

Vote 2101 agreed to.

On vote 2102:

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps the hon. member Mr. Chairman, could continue.

Mr. Spence: These businessmen invested thousands and thousands of dollars in motels and service stations and restaurants. But after Highway 401 was opened to traffic the tourists did not use Highway 2 and Highway 3, but used 401.

I am not objecting to that; we need 401. But the signing on 401 leaves the feeling in southwestern Ontario that it is not sufficient to stop the tourists there. In fact, it directs them right through to the Quebec border as I understand it, Mr. Minister.

They discussed this with the government and were told that maybe the traffic would come back after a number of years to Highways 2 and 3. But the traffic has not come back. So this leaves the men who invested thousands of dollars in motels and restaurants and service stations in a very difficult financial position. They think, Mr. Minister, that you should take a different stand in regard to advertising at Windsor to encourage more tourists to use Highways 2 and 3 to help these men who have invested thousands of dollars. Highways 2 and 3 are scenic sights. There should be a different approach to advertising. Maybe there should be more and better advertising on Highway 401 advertising 2 and 3.

I wonder if you have looked into this, or made any study, or will you look into this at Windsor to see if there could be some different approach to advertising Highway 2, Highway 3 or Highway 98 which would mean a great deal to these businessmen who have invested thousands of dollars, and who today are facing a very heavy financial position?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, as far as the signing policy on highways is concerned, this is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme). Perhaps I could sum it up this way.

To those people who stop at our information centres at the border points or on 401, we indicate to them the most direct route to where they wish to go and the other routes. I think it is fair to say that our policy has been to suggest to people that as tourists they will find it more interesting to drive along the non-controlled access routes.

The situation to which the hon. member refers is of course not unique to that area. It is one which has affected communities adjacent to any of the controlled access highways. I would presume that this will continue.

While I do not say that it is going to make anybody feel any better, or that it will help, a similar situation has happened to people who have had an investment in an area where, for instance, a bypass has been built. Again, this is getting into policy of another department, but I know in my own riding there have been strong representations made to the Minister of Highways to bypass a community for traffic or safety's sake. Then there are strong complaints from the same community once the bypass is built and the traffic pattern changes.

I do not know how this can be avoided in all places, and it is a problem. However, to sum up I would simply say that the policy in my department in giving travel information is to recommend that people take the non-controlled access highways to see the scenery, to see the local sights and to find accommodation.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the Minister what his policy is going to be in relation to the tourist reception centres in the city of Windsor?

Earlier in the year, I asked the Minister in questions before the orders of the day concerning the keeping of the centre on Huron line at the Ambassador bridge open on a year-round basis. When I look in the annual report, I notice that outside of Point Edward there is no centre in Ontario that has as many visits into its reception centre as does the combined total of Windsor tunnel and bridge. We have 104,000 at the tunnel and 85,000 at the bridge and probably the 85,000 is as a result of the centre at the bridge not being open on a year-round basis.

If it were to open on a year-round basis, I would say that it would surpass the Windsor tunnel in visitors seeking information.

Would the Minister explain his policy concerning the reception centre on Huron line outside the Ambassador Bridge?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I can expand very much on what I said when I answered the hon. member's question a while ago. As I recall, at that time I said that we were looking at this situation because it would appear that there was considerable change in the traffic pattern.

One of the matters which will affect this is US Highway 75, which is not entirely completed on the US side, but it is virtually completed, I understand. I think what I said a while ago, and which I would have to repeat today, is that we are watching the situation, that it may be that we will keep the Huron line centre open all year round instead of the one by the bridge and by the city hall.

The reason for this, of course, is primarily finances. It may be that we would make that change and we might then find there was a need to have both open the year around. In which case we would attempt to do it because we are attempting, of course, to give service to those people who want it, and we have to operate to some extent experimentally in these things.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Minister will not at any time consider closing either of the two. In fact, I think it is a backward step closing the one at the Ambassador Bridge during the winter months. You try to sell winter activities in the province of Ontario and then you close the door. You have one of the nicer tourist reception centres in the province at the Ambassador Bridge; it is unique; it is unusual. Why build it, if you are not going to put it to use? Why use it only on a part-time basis?

We criticize educational authorities for not having schools open in the summer. Here you have a facility and you close it in the winter months. It just does not seem to make sense. If the Minister looks at his own statistics, he will find that practically all other centres in the province do not draw as many visitors to the tourist reception centre as does the one at the bridge and this is on a part-time basis. How many more would they attract if you had it open on a full-time basis? And the Minister is the one who wants to sell the province of Ontario to our visitors. I certainly think he should not even consider closing the place, even on a part-time basis. There are enough university students that could use this employment. If you do not give them employment here, you give it to them in a loan.

I hope the Minister reconsiders any thoughts that he does have concerning that, Mr. Chairman.

May I ask the Minister at this time if he contemplates the use of a slogan on licence plates? This has been recommended by chambers of commerce for years and years and years, and so have we on this side of the House. You had it one year; it was excellent. Why is a thing like that given up?

Hon. Mr. Auld: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is of course, licence plates are a responsibility of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett). When I was in that portfolio I almost had a slogan on the plates.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, it is easy to push it off on the Minister of Transport. But this Minister sits in the Cabinet with him, surely he has some weight in the Cabinet.

An hon. member: That is no asset.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can only suggest to the hon. member that he ask the Minister of Transport.

Mr. B. Newman: I will ask him, Mr. Chairman, but I would like an answer from the Minister now. Has he approached him?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The member can tell him, if he cannot find it, I still have a plate I had designed.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Would you like a slogan?

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the Minister if he would consider the development of Peach Island, Peche Island, in the Detroit River, as a tourist attraction on the same basis that he has the Upper Canada Village development at the eastern end of the province? Upper Canada Village loses 50 cents per person visiting the village. In other words, we subsidize everyone who drops into the village to the extent of 50 cents a year. Why would the Minister not consider—

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is not right.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, you do, because our revenue from Upper Canada Village was forecast at $1,402,000 and the budget is $2,600,000 for the whole complex of the St. Lawrence Parks.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps when we get into the details; that is in the next item in this vote. But I point out to the hon. member that he is talking about the budget for the entire commission on the one hand, and revenue from the entire commission. I would tell him that the Upper Canada Village just about breaks even, give or take a few dollars either way, in its operating costs.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, when I look at the annual report for St. Lawrence Parks and then I look at the annual report, I do not find it as such. I find that you lose 50 cents per visitor.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps when we get—

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister then, has he anything in mind in the way of the tourist promotion project in the most important entrance to the province of Ontario—the garden gateway to Canada—in the Essex county and Windsor area? Years ago, I made mention to the Minister of a seignery that had been promoted by residents of the area. Has the Minister given any further consideration to anything for the local area?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that my answer will not entirely satisfy the hon. member, but perhaps I can put it this way: At the present time, we are completing the Huronia project, Sainte-Marie among the Hurons, which will be virtually completed this year with the exception of the museum, which will be about two years from now. The military and naval establishment at Penetanguishene, which we hope to complete for 1971. The museum of the Upper Lakes at Wasaga Beach is completed.

Once those projects are complete I hope that we will be able to undertake another similar project somewhere in the province; we are looking at a number of areas at the present time. I have not forgotten about the seignery programme, although I think I mentioned at the same time this was the kind of project which might well be undertaken locally. In fact, I think the Essex tourist association made some investigations, had a study of the thing, to which we contributed, I think, a good deal of information.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister why should it be undertaken locally? It is for the development of tourism throughout the whole part of the province. The St. Lawrence Parks Commission was not undertaken locally, so why should any other community undertake it locally?

I think it behooves the Minister to have his department study the feasibility of implementing some type of programme with the idea of tourist promotion in the area. The Minister well knows he has the Greenfield Village and the Ford museum in Detroit, and he knows the tremendous tourist attraction these are. We have all those millions who come into the Detroit area who could be very easily attracted to something in the Essex county area, because it is only a matter of, maybe, one half-hour's drive from the Ford Dearborn museum into the Windsor area. It is a natural to have something developed in Windsor. Once we get our tourists into Essex county and they see how nice it is, they will want to see the rest of the province of Ontario.

May I ask of the Minister if he uses any type of trailers for the promotion of tourism in the United States? Several years ago I made mention that you could have a trailer where you would have a motion picture projector. You could drop in, say, in the city of Dearborn and set up, and some summer evening show the motion picture showing the highlights of the province of Ontario or even have "A Place To Stand," production run over and over again. I think this method does have a lot of potential. I wonder if the Minister has ever considered it, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, we have considered it. I think at the time, two years ago, when the hon. member brought this up, I commented on it. Our position really has not changed; there are certain advantages to this type of promotion, but in terms of our judgment we do not feel that it is a priority at the present time compared with, say, our media advertising programme of television, magazines, newspapers and so on.

Mr. Chairman, I think we agreed yesterday that we would go through this vote by these items: the first one, Promotion Services, St. Lawrence Parks Commission, Huronia Historical Parks, Tourist Industry Development Services, and Research Services. I think I might mention that Promotion Services include the advertising programme, the publicity programme and the information programme in the reception centres which we have been discussing. I think the others are self-explanatory so that if there are other questions regarding promotion we might deal with them at the present time and then we can go on to the next item.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would licensing come under this vote, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, licensing would come under this, but under the tourist industry development branch which is in—

Mr. T. P. Reid: All right, we will save it for that one.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It would be after Huronia Historical Parks.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would like to ask the Minister how many photographers do you have working in the department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Four.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Four. I have a question on the order paper dealing with this matter. I have here in my hand photographs by Karsh. Could you tell me how much that cost? I understand it is a series.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think $1,500 per photograph, and that includes the copyright.

Mr. T. P. Reid: $1,500 per photograph. How many photographers?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Four.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Four. Does that include one of yourself?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Unfortunately, no.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can you explain why your department has at least four photographers? They are always very much in evidence when the Minister is travelling around, taking pictures of the Minister shaking hands and patting people on the back and so on; I am sure there must be more than four. It looks like a personal bodyguard. But can you explain to me, if you have four photographers in your department—on our northwestern tour we had more photographers from The Department of Lands and Forests than members, why we spent a total of $6,000 on these photographs?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If I can do it briefly, Mr. Chairman. I think all hon. members are aware of the prestige which Mr. Karsh has in the photographic world.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is it costly?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not sure that all hon. members were aware of what his fees were until you asked the question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I just cancelled my appointment.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will be glad to arrange for one of our photographers to take the hon. member's photograph at a considerably reduced fee.

The purpose of the programme is, as I outlined last year, to reach an audience which we do not reach in any other way, in essence, very—I do not like to use the word but I do not know of any other—sophisticated. I hope that defines the audience which we are trying to reach, in one specific series, to spotlight northern Ontario.

The use of Mr. Karsh as a photographer was decided on because of the prestige which he has, in not only the photographic world but in North America and, in fact, in the world in general. From all reports—and this will be the third year that we have undertaken this programme—it is getting the kind of response, generating the kind of enquiries and, presumably, producing the kind of business which we had hoped to achieve.

I think that our photographers are very competent but they are not portrait photographers.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They are always taking yours.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think that they perhaps may be a little biased, but I do not know that those photographers get the kind of use that Mr. Karsh's do, if I can put it that way.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do you have to pay him a fee each time you use these?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, I mentioned this was a copyright.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You mentioned a sophisticated audience. Now I do not know who is writing your material but there is one line in this particular ad that says, "Of its lakes you lose count after you pass 100,000". If that is aimed at a sophisticated audience, they must be translating from Zulu into English. Of spectacular rock, sky and forest panoramas". Who is writing this stuff? The wording of this ad negates the whole impact—if that is the word—of the picture itself.

Really, how much more awkward can you get? Of its lakes you lose count after you pass 100,000". It sounds pretty amateurish to me, and if you are spending this kind of money on these ads why not have somebody who knows how to write ads.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I tell you there is going to be great distress tomorrow on Bay Street when they read this at the agency.

Mr. Singer: Maybe you should try another one.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would say—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Are you satisfied with this one?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am, and from the studies that have been made of readership—I believe it is called the Starch study—it has been achieving the results we want. I hope the hon. member would not want it to be phrased something like this: “When you get to Ontario you really have to take your shoes off if you are going to count all the lakes” or something on that order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I do not know about that. Surely “Of its lakes you lose count after you pass 100,000” is kind of a tongue twister. You must agree that that is rather awkward.

Another point in regard to this particular one. Were these departmental people who posed for these photographs?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In some cases. I think the one to which the hon. member’s question referred is a member of the staff of The Department of Lands and Forests. There was one—he was a well-known guide and I think a resort operator—Mr. Richardson. But there was no fee paid for the models if that is what the member is asking.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That was what I was getting at.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Walter Kenyon of the Royal Ontario Museum.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, I wonder, I really question whether this is money well spent. You have a picture of a Lands and Forests officer—supposedly the picture is of Arnold Olsen, whoever he is, wearing a Lands and Forests outfit—and then the people are told to write Arnold Olsen, care of The Department of Tourism and Information. He certainly gets around.

Hon. Mr. Auld: He does not necessarily have to—

Mr. T. P. Reid: I should hope not.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview) Just the dog and cat bit.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Chairman, I was quite interested at the committee meeting on Tuesday on tourism. The big problem there, for most of that day, was that the tourist industry could not get enough money, or borrow enough money, to carry on.

We are now promoting tourism on a year-round basis. I wonder if the Minister could tell us what percentage of the tourist industry in Ontario is actually equipped now to handle the tourist business on a year-round basis?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really could not answer that question, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is referring to the accommodation end of the tourist industry I presume. I am not sure that we would have an accurate breakdown because some of the accommodation might well be used in the winter time but it is in such a location that it could not be. For instance, I am thinking of some of the hunting camps and so on.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, should not this be under the Tourist Industry Development Services?

Mr. Chairman: Well, the Chairman felt that perhaps it was, but at the same time the hon. member for Hamilton Centre was discussing the promotion of this, so if the hon. Minister wishes to discuss it under promotion he may do so.

Mr. Davison: Just on this point, we are spending a lot of money now on promotion telling the people in the United States where they should come. Does the department not know the areas where they can go during any part of the year and how many people can be accommodated in a certain area? Surely you must know this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In a way, Mr. Chairman, I think I could answer. But as the hon. member’s question, as I understood it, was, “How many accommodation units are there in the province that could handle winter business?” I cannot answer that question.

But, we are, as I have mentioned before, promoting on a year-round basis and I think with some success. One of the problems, of course, is that although those resort areas, or those accommodation units can be winterized with little or no expenditure, the operators have not attempted to do so until they saw the business coming. This is sort of which came first, the chicken or the egg?

We are attempting, and I think as I say with some success, to get more people travelling in the winter time. So far I have heard no complaints that there was not sufficient accommodation for them. It may not have been exactly what they wanted, but I have heard no complaints, and I do not think that we have had any that people came to an area which we had suggested and found that they could not be accommodated.

Mr. Davison: I would agree with you, but the problem is in the tourist industry, if we are really going to bring tourists into Ontario, we are going to have to get more money in there to get them to rebuild in a lot of cases. But how are they going to do it if they are only going to be open two or three months?

Mr. Chairman: That comes, I think, under Tourist Industry Development Services rather than promotion.

The hon. member for Kent under Promotion Services.

Mr. Spence: Would campers' fees be under this section?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Under Lands and Forests.

Mr. Spence: Yes, but that is one of the things that hurts the tourist industry in this province, if I am correct. The fees in the province of Ontario are a lot higher than in other provinces and some of the states, a lot of the states.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further under promotions?

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Through you to the Minister, last year, under promotion, I believe the department had a $75,000 item, the cost of wining and dining and toasting American editors and newspaper writers, TV, radio people, and so on. I do not see this $75,000 item in these estimates this year and I wonder if the Minister, in his wisdom, Mr. Chairman, has decided to drop that or whether it is still in, and if so, has it been increased or reduced from $75,000?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, that would be in the maintenance part of vote 2102.

Mr. T. P. Reid: How did we get into maintenance?

Hon. Mr. Auld: You have to be in the right place at the right time.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Shall I bring my own photographer?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That amount has been reduced by $10,000. It is now $65,000, and if you bring your own photographer you may have to pay for his meal.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, how does the Minister continue to justify this expenditure, albeit he has reduced it? What tangible benefits does the tourist industry in Ontario derive from these trips? Are they increasing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would say the tangible benefits which Ontario receives are in the stories written by the travel writers who come and whom we take around the province either in groups or individually. I suppose one could lump it in the term good public relations.

We are in a very competitive field.

As a matter of fact, if hon. members would like to find a calling—and if they are good at it—which they would enjoy, and where they would be received royally around the world, they should get into the travel writing business.

To me, as I say, if you are good at it, there would be nothing better than making your living going out and hunting and fishing and then writing about it, particularly if you are being escorted around.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, how many stories, or how many affidavits, do you have? What can you put your finger on to prove that they are going back and are writing stories that are of benefit to this industry?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do not have the figures in front of me but I think it would be very difficult, again, to specifically state if Mr. A. were here how many stories he wrote as a result of that visit and how many he wrote, or did not write, if he was not here. We have generally distributed in the areas those stories that emanated from visits of travel writers, outdoor writers and so on. I can try and get the information for you but it would be rather speculative. I can only say that we are quite convinced that, along with many other jurisdictions, this is a worthwhile bit of promotion.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay was trying to get the floor on promotion.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Getting back to promotion, I see there were grants made to various regional associations—

Mr. Chairman: That comes under the tourist industry development branch, not promotion.

Mr. Stokes: What about these? Is this promotion?

Mr. Chairman: I believe those were discussed under promotion, yes.

Mr. Stokes: I noticed the "Great Ontario Adventure Vacation" is supposed to give potential visitors a panoramic view of what to expect when they reach our fair province. As I look over it—a very sophisticated publication that emanates from northern Ontario—there is only one picture. If I did not know the place first hand I would not even be aware of that. As a matter of fact I cannot even find it right now, that is how unobtrusive it is. Here it is, here. Is that a picture of Ouimet Canyon?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that even with my glasses off, I cannot see it.

Mr. Stokes: That is the point I am trying to make.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the photographs in that, as we call it, the major lure book are not titled. They are not specific to a part of the province. The purpose of it is to give an overall picture of the province and not attempt, by any means, to have a picture of every part of the province. If we attempted to do that we would have a publication of about six inches thick, and extremely costly. The hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management says two feet thick.

The purpose is to give an overall impression of the province. I think if the hon. member will look into the back part of that he will note that if a card is torn out and sent in to us indicating what region of the province a prospective visitor is interested in, we will then give more definitive information. I think that there are many photographs in there which could have been taken at any one of several parts of the province, and that was one of the reasons for selecting some of them.

Mr. Stokes: Just to pursue this further, I imagine if someone did fill out this card—

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is a picture of Ouimet Canyon, I am informed.

Mr. Stokes: —This little tear-off that you referred to—I imagine you would send them “Ontario, Wilderness Ways of the Voyageurs”. I imagine that is the book you would send them if they were interested in going to northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Either that or “The Land of the Polar Bear Express”, depending on which part of northern Ontario.

Mr. Stokes: I am talking specifically about northwestern Ontario. I notice you have got “Sailing at the Lakehead”. How many people would be involved in “Sailing at the Lakehead”? They would not take a sloop out with them. What percentage would you orient this kind of advertising to? Or “Trotting Races Are Popular.” Now where would you go—to Greenwood? Where would you go for trotting races in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think Manitoulin Island.

Mr. Stokes: The point I am trying to make is, are you really interested, in this department, in promoting tourism in northern Ontario? Particularly northwestern Ontario? There is nothing in these booklets, these publications, that demonstrates to me that you are really interested in promoting tourism in northern Ontario. For example, last year when I was this Party's critic for your department, I asked you specifically if you would get out any publication that would show the people what the potential was, and just what was available to the tourist in northern Ontario.

I specifically asked you about the publication you put out that would be of interest to rock hounds. And I think I read a couple of letters into the records regarding rock hounds in the area, particularly up along Highway 11. I asked if you would not take the recommendations into consideration, and make the half million North American rock hounds who are definitely interested in this aware of just what the potential is in northern Ontario.

I happen to know there are a couple of unique deposits in Northern Ontario. I think this is the only place they can be found in the world. Yet, in trying to get this promoted, it seems to fall on deaf ears with The Department of Tourism and The Department of Mines. I was wondering if you are really attempting—in a serious way—to tell the people, to tell the potential tourist, just what is available in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can only say that the department has taken our entire programme to every part of this province, both the advertising and the promotional programme. We have had comments from all the tourist councils and chambers of commerce. Certainly those meetings which I have attended—and I have attended many of them—and reports from those meetings which I have not attended, indicate that the people in the tourist industry feel we have a very balanced programme, and that the kind of material we are producing is the kind they want.

In fact, we have been working with various regions and helping them with their marketing programmes, using the same basic approaches as we have used in our own marketing programmes, and the same basic approach as we have used in our own literature.

We attempt to give—and the people in the industry feel we are giving—a balanced picture of an area. In northern Ontario, of course, not only is it covered in three publications depending on how one defines northern Ontario—the one to which the hon. member refers, plus Polar Bear Express and Champlain Country. But it is carried in the specific book on fishing, the specific book on hunting, and also in the other—the advertisements and so on.

We are still using the rock hound publication—to which the hon. member referred last year. It will probably be some time later this year or next before we have a new edition of it. It was written for us by the foremost geologist in the province. I am afraid I am not an expert in geology.

I have accepted the remarks of the hon. member and we are going to look into that. But as I say, the industry seems to feel that the publications we have put together are good and are all-encompassing as far as any single publication of reasonable size and colour can be.

Mr. Chairman: On promotion, the hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up on these particular remarks the Minister has made that the industry itself is in agreement with the type of promotion that has been made to date. Possibly this is what they tell the Minister at the many meetings he attends. But as is often the case, once the hon. Minister or senior officials leave, a different story may come out to other interested parties.

I would like to refer this back to the remarks of my hon. friend from Rainy River, who brought up the question of the Karsh photographs and the type of advertising. I would also like to relate this back to the public accounts, whereby the James Lovick Company received $1 million for advertising during that particular fiscal year—out of the $2,256,000 maintenance appropriation. Is the James Lovick Company still the principal or sole recipient of funds for the promotions of the province as such?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The James Lovick Company continues to be our agency.

Mr. Paterson: Exclusive agency on all matters relating to the province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: All our advertising programmes.

Mr. Paterson: Yes. Might I ask what appropriation in that maintenance fund is for them this year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: $1,875,000. The current year it is $1,720,000. This coming year we are requesting $1,875,000, as I think I indicated in my introductory remarks.

Mr. Singer: They do not need any other clients except you.

Mr. Paterson: No. That is for sure.

The reason I raise this—and I believe it has been raised in years gone by—is that personally I feel that possibly the departments should look at other advertising agencies that they bring in in a package deal for, say, a five-year programme.

Put this out for bids and possibly we will get a better or different type of perspective than what is being put out. I think my friend from Rainy River expressed more than one person's opinion in relation to the advertising of our province.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to pursue the matter that the member for Windsor-Walkerville mentioned about the tourist information centres and, of course, Windsor is the largest port of entry into Canada. I represent Fort Erie, which is the second largest port of entry into Canada. Some six million vehicles travel this bridge every year—with more than five million of them automobiles.

The question I think I raised last year was: When is the Minister, or the department planning on building a new tourist information centre at Fort Erie? I know in the past members of his staff have been in this area, talking on different occasions, and telling us that they are going to give it consideration that we will have a new tourist centre information booth at that particular point.

Now the revenue that is collected at the Peace Bridge, which shared with the Peace Bridge Authority, the Buffalo Port Authority, and the Canadian Government, is some $400,000. This is split on a 50/50 basis—$200,000 of it goes to the federal Department of Revenue.

Now I would like to bring this to the attention of the Minister. There is $200,000 going to Ottawa. Why I do not know, but some of this money should be kept and spent in this area, perhaps to build this new centre which is needed.

This amount of money continually goes to Ottawa, year after year. Some years it is much higher than $200,000. But surely I think that with your contacts you should be able to get some of this money here, and build us a decent information centre. There are some points that I would like to bring to your attention also, if this new building is to be built.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Do you think I might have more success in getting funds from Ottawa than my colleague, the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton)?

Mr. Haggerty: We would. It is your department, is it not?

Mr. T. P. Reid: You are the promotion man.

Mr. Haggerty: Promotion is right, this is what we are dealing with.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Promoting money out of Ottawa these days would be a real mark of success.

Mr. Haggerty: Let us leave this for a minute. The Americans who come to Canada are tourists, spending millions of dollars a year in this province. Now, what is lacking in this area is a bank where they can exchange their money. There must be some building that is open for say, six months of the year—from May perhaps up until October—for their convenience, where they can exchange their money, instead of traveling all over the province of Ontario.

I know of many cases where people have had to travel to St. Catharines to a tourist booth on wheels, a mobile unit, and to other places.

I think this is where we need a new tourist establishment, in this area where the people can find out where to travel in Ontario—to see Ontario as it is. And I wish that you, Mr. Minister, would, with the Treasurer, go to Ottawa and see if you cannot get some of this money. I think we deserve it in this area.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I might just mention, Mr. Chairman, that—as I think I mentioned last year—we would like to have new facilities in Fort Erie. The Department of Highways is working on plans for a change in the road configuration there and has assured us that it is going to reserve space in its configuration so that we will have a good location.

One of our problems in the past has been when the department embarked on the programme of having information centres at border entry points, it just was not possible to get a location which was convenient for tourists or where there was adequate parking. There were a lot of other problems.

We hope that, whatever changes are made at Fort Erie, we will be in on them and that there will be funds at that time to put in a new centre. But I would have to be frank with the hon. member and tell him that in terms of priorities at the present time, our first priority is the Pigeon River bridge leading to the Lakehead, where we have had a trailer for some time and which I think the hon. member for Rainy River and the hon. member for Port Arthur are aware of—and remind me of on many occasions, along with the daily representations of the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) and the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman).

At Hawkesbury, we have a building which has not fallen down yet, but is not too far from it. And it would appear that Public Works will have funds for two locations for us in the coming year. So those are our priorities at the moment.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I thought Hawkesbury and Pigeon River were in the programme some four years ago. Does the Minister mean to tell me he has not got them built yet?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I want to remind the hon. member that the situation at Pigeon River is that it has taken us until, I think, three weeks ago, to acquire the property from the federal government on which to locate a permanent centre, although we have had good co-operation in that they have allowed us to put our trailer on their property until such time as we resolve this permanent site.

The problem at Hawkesbury has been jointly provincial-federal, federal public works are building a wharf.

Mr. Haggerty: The matter of the property at the Peace Bridge entrance; I am sure the property is there, right at the entrance to the Peace Bridge, right alongside the Queen Elizabeth Way.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We may have highways come along two years from now and change the traffic pattern and we will find we are in the wrong place.

Mr. Haggerty: Well, have you not another provincial building there, not too far from there? I think the Ontario provincial police are within this same area. There is land available in that area. There is no reason why a building could not be built in that area.

Mr. Chairman: Under promotion, the hon. member for Wellington South wanted the floor.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, I spoke to the Minister yesterday about receiving a letter from the owner of the hotel in Fergus, and this man, of course, was concerned in this letter he had written to the Minister—with a copy to me—about the fact he has belonged to the association promoting tourist accommodation. He said he has made three payments, but is not yet registered. This man, along with one other gentleman, provide excellent accommodation in the town of Fergus. I would like the Minister to undertake to see that this man is registered and the necessary steps taken to help him promote his hotel in that area.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member said, he mentioned this to me before. Unfortunately, the letter of which the member has a copy, the original has not yet reached me, because I checked again this morning. However, the publication to which the letter writer refers is, I believe, "Where to Stay" which is in the process of being updated. If he is not in the edition which he has seen, he will be in the edition which is coming out hopefully in the near future.

Mr. Worton: It is mentioned in the letter, Mr. Chairman, that like my friend, the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), he is in a dry area and this presents quite a bit of difficulty in his promoting his business.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just one remark or question here. In the public accounts there is purchase of photographic supplies, motion pictures and equipment, totalling some $87,000. I believe this is an item also this year. I would like to know if it is an item under these estimates, and what exactly it is for.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the budget for the current year is $109,000, the request before the committee at the moment is for $129,000. This is made up as follows: Film production, $60,000; replacement prints, that is, prints for the 27 films that we presently have in our library, which, of course, wear out and which are distributed for us by the National Film Board, who are on a 50/50 basis with us, $15,000; the department library replacement prints, $10,000, which is a new item this year. We had no funds in last year for this.

Commercial distribution, $5,000, the same as last year; $10,000 for telecasts, which we are doing again jointly with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. These are the fillers which I mentioned in my remarks yesterday. $4,000, which is a new item this year, for versioning in foreign films, that is putting other language sound tracks on our present films, all of which are English; and prints from outside agencies. These are travel films which other agencies produce and we buy prints of. And then equipment and supplies, which is the equipment for our own photographers, $20,000.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Just one other matter, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister: The Minister and his officials indicated at the NOTO meeting held in Kenora that they were prepared to open a permanent office of The Department of Tourism and Information in Fort Frances. As you know, we have 250,000 tourists coming across the border there every year and they spread out into the rest of northwestern Ontario from the border crossing at International Falls, Fort Frances.

Could the Minister advise me at this time if there are any plans for a permanent structure at Fort Frances with a permanent employee probably, I would imagine, Elmer Stone or Peter Hughes, from the Kenora office being placed in Fort Frances?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can only say that as the hon. member knows, all our development officers are at our headquarters at the moment in Kenora where our district office is. We have been considering for some time the pros and cons of putting one of the field staff in the Fort Frances headquarters. It is still under active consideration and I cannot tell the hon. member this afternoon whether we will be doing it next month or some time from now.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I can appreciate that. I just gathered from the remarks made in Kenora that as soon as the new bridge was built, hopefully across the Rainy River at International Falls, Fort Frances, that the department would build a new tourism building there and staff it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is true. And when that day comes we would attempt to have the building include office space as well as tourist information space, so we could then have a man stationed there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would the Minister say the bridge is the hold-up?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps I could put it the other way. We probably will not be building a new building until we know where the bridge is going to be.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton Centre has been trying to get the floor.

Mr. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I was interested yesterday afternoon in the Minister telling us that they were now starting to do a promotion job among travel agencies. I was quite interested in a book that came to my door last weekend, in fact most of the people in Hamilton got it. It is put out by Lucas and King and is called "Vacation Guide for 1969."

It has pictures and shows you places to go in nearly every place in the world but Ontario. Right across Canada. You can start at the east coast and go to the west coast, but there is not a word about Ontario in there.

I looked at a magazine put out by a travel agency in Ontario and what I am interested in; are there travel agencies in Quebec or in the western provinces that put out this type of a book that tells the people to come to Ontario? I was just wondering how you missed out in not getting into a book of this type?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should first say that travel agents earn their living from a percentage of the travel ticket which they sell and the accommodation which they may book at the other end. On transportation, I think their percentage on domestic flights is 5 per cent and on foreign flights is 7.5 per cent and sometimes 10 per cent. Not all travel agents, in fact there is only one in Toronto who specializes in Ontario tours. They look for long trips because the fare will be higher.

I can only say that we have taken the first step in discussing with travel agents the difference between selling one $1,000 ticket and making $50 commission, and selling 50 $100 tickets so that they would make a larger return and, in fact, try to get into the bulk business rather than the individual business, if I am making myself clear.

There is another question, too, with travel agents and resort operators in this province. Not all resort operators are prepared to give a travel agent commission for booking their accommodation, particularly in July and August because in the last few years they have not required it. They are getting enough business without the assistance of a travel agent. Without going into too much detail on what is mainly an administrative matter, I suppose, or a promotional matter here, I can say in fact I suggested to ASTA on Tuesday night, I think it was, that they start working with the resort operators in what they might call their slack season on a percentage basis.

I think through this kind of co-operation we can generate more winter, spring and fall business. I would suspect that travel agents on the west coast would be selling trips to Ontario because it is far enough. By the same token, I do not think that a travel agent in Vancouver is selling a lot of travel in British Columbia.

Mr. Davison: That is fine, Mr. Chairman, but what I was interested in was: are any of the other provinces doing this same thing where they are using Ontario? That was what interested me. You are talking about the travel agency on the basis of promoting year-round vacations in Ontario. I was quite interested in a book somebody sent me from British Columbia and it is called "Beautiful British Columbia." It is put out four times a year so that in each publication they show what is going on for that season. I have looked through the publications here in Ontario and I have never seen anything that even comes close to this.

The interesting and nice thing about it is that it is something that people can buy in British Columbia and send to people in other parts of Ontario, in Canada or the world. Quite frankly, I have only spent a few days in British Columbia but after receiving this book for about two years now, I am certainly going to go back to British Columbia and do a bit of traveling there. I have discovered an awful lot of nice places to go and when they show you a picture, you are told exactly what it is and they explain all about it. It is quite interesting. Apart from that, they also send you a little calendar that you hang on your wall. It is a scenic calendar and this is also presented by the government of British Columbia when you subscribe to this book for $2 for one year.

This book is put out by the Minister of Travel and Industry in British Columbia. Would it not be possible for The Department of Tourism—I know it is expensive—to have a set-up like this whereby you could get this into homes in a lot of places in North America where they are not getting the type of tourism information that is coming out now? I think this is a good thing and I would hope that this department would take a really serious look at doing something like this.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would agree with the hon. member for Hamilton Centre, it is an excellent publication and I have read it myself. We have looked and are looking again at this kind of a promotion which is not self-supporting; it is a subscription piece and it does pay for a good deal of its cost. The lure-book, to which reference is made a little earlier, is in a somewhat similar vein. From the comments that we received from people in the industry and our competitors in the industry, it is an excellent piece—the kind of thing that when somebody receives it, they can keep it on the coffee table as a reference, rather than throw it away. The only thing I would say about the B.C. proposal, as applied to here, is that you have to look at these things in terms of priority and marketing. B.C.'s tourist industry is a little differently based from ours. A great many of their tourists are of a higher income level and come from a greater distance than, say, some percentage of ours.

Thus far, it has been our judgment that the amount of money involved in doing a piece like "Beautiful B.C."—which, I say, is excellently done—will produce more return for us in another media, for instance, television or regular magazine promotion or joint promotions with regional tourist councils or tourist organizations. But as funds become available—which is the old phrase, I suppose—or as we constantly re-assess our programme, it may well be that we might be into something like it. There is no doubt about it, it has great value and in that case is extremely well done.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in looking over the annual report of the Minister, we find that as a result of the studies, 18 per cent of the Ontario visitors have incomes over $29,000; one other figure is that the average individual coming in from the United States, has a household income of $10,000 and up to $15,000. We are catering, Mr. Minister, to people who have a fairly high income.

How about selling the province to people within the province, those who would have an income much lower than that? Why don't we talk about using a series of trailers such as was used by the Canadian government during Expo year, which travelled the length and breadth of Canada with various exhibits concerning our country? Could you not, Mr. Minister, copy that idea? Have you thought of that? Is it not feasible or is it practical to be able to use a series of trailers travelling throughout Ontario and attempt to sell Ontario to residents within the province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, it would be a very costly way, I think; very much more costly method than the present method we use, which is Canadian magazines. I am not sure that it would be as effective because, just off the top of my head, I cannot conceive what one would put in a trailer that would be interesting enough to get people to come through the trailer as compared to opening a magazine which you get in your home—

Mr. B. Newman: The same thing that was put in the Expo trailers.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —But I do not think that the purpose of the Expo trailers was to promote travel across Canada. I think the purpose of the Expo trailers was educational—

Mr. B. Newman: It was promoting Canada. It was to promote something—

Hon. Mr. Auld: It was reminding Canadians of their heritage and of the many great people and events which had gone to make up that heritage. I do not really think, Mr. Chairman, that kind of approach could solve tourism in Ontario more effectively than the mass media. As I say, the great problem is reaching the prospect. You have to have some way of catching his attention, perhaps with a mobile trailer with a photograph of Ouimet Canyon in it, or of the grain elevators at the Lakehead, or the Hudson Bay post at Moose Factory, or the nuclear plant at Pickering. I am not sure that the people would go to a trailer to see those, whereas they now will see an ad and write in to us and get information about it.

Mr. B. Newman: Could you not, Mr. Minister, have exactly the same thing that you show on TV—these one-minute trailers on television—right in a mobile trailer?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Could I ask the hon. member, if he had a choice, would he rather look at it at home with a beer, or go down the street and look at it in a trailer?

Mr. B. Newman: I have yet to see one of your one minute TV trailers.

An hon. member: It is not on TV there.

Mr. B. Newman: So apparently it is not hitting my area. My area is a very important area. We are in the centre of a population that might run into say 35 to 40 million within an eight-hour travelling distance of the city of Windsor.

May I ask you, Mr. Minister, if you are using the schools at all in an attempt to sell Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is a difficult question to answer. Formally no. We have, as I mentioned in my introductory remarks, been conducting seminars in some high schools having to do with the employment possibilities in the tourism industry. However, we have not been running, under our auspices, any programmes in the school about travel in Ontario. I think in social studies and other courses, at least that is what they are called now—when I was at school, it was history and geography—I think that the young people in the schools are learning about their province.

Mr. B. Newman: May I, first of all, respectfully suggest to the Minister that we undertake some studies or a pilot project in some given area in the province where they would send in tourist consultants with motion pictures and so forth in an attempt to show the highlights of the province of Ontario? This would encourage the students to have their parents visit Ontario first before they go south of the border.

May I ask of the Minister if the department has considered publishing in US newspapers, weekend tours of the area, within say a hundred driving miles of centres like Niagara Falls, Fort Erie, Windsor, Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie in an attempt to attract the tourist or of promoting a three day visit first as a lure to come in? I feel that once we get them in, they will come back.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We do not do that, Mr. Chairman, but this is the kind of project which can be undertaken, and very effectively carried by regional tourist councils.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the regional tourist councils do not have enough money to do all of this.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Neither do we.

Mr. B. Newman: You could put some of your funds in that. I notice in the Detroit papers that Shell advertise weekend tours—I should not say weekend tours—one-day trips into Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well we can think about it.

Mr. B. Newman: Maybe you could consult with some of the big oil interests and have them undertake a similar project in American papers so that our American friends could come and visit us.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We have discussed with the oil companies the, "heritage highway programme", which they have undertaken in the States. Thus far the oil companies have not been anxious to work together about this because they are concerned about the Combines legislation.

In connection with schools, I should have pointed out to the hon. member that there are film programmes. There are films which our department has produced about various parts of the province and various aspects of recreation such as hunting and fishing and just touring history. Sailing is most recent one, but they are all distributed and shown in the schools.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Minister, the film alone, without someone making comment after the film in an attempt to sell, is not effective enough. It is the sales talk, which follows the film, that is, by far, more effective than simply watching a motion picture film in an auditorium.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, this is a $3,052,000 item that we are discussing under the very broad caption of Promotion Services. Maintenance, for that matter, covers $2,256,000 of it, and this entire item, Promotion Services is the largest item for the whole tourism business.

I would like something clarified here. We have heard the Minister twist that word "maintenance" into dozens of connotations here this afternoon. There are so many things jammed in under "maintenance" it is not funny. We hear an awful lot of scuttlebutt going around, that the government uses this department to promote the government, and I of course, do not believe a word of that. However, I feel that now is the time to set the record straight. I wonder if the Minister would state whether these funds, $3,052,000, are being used to promote anything other than tourism?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The answer to that is "no", Mr. Chairman. The hon. member would recall that under the government system of accounting, as far as major divisions are concerned, there are only three—salaries or travel expense, and everything else is maintenance.

I am delighted and prepared, and we have been working for some time to have all the information here. If there are any questions that the hon. member has about the items that go to make up the maintenance section or any of these votes, I would be delighted to give it to him. I can understand that when you see that kind of figure, it makes you wonder. But I have given the breakdown in a number of these votes, and I would be delighted to give it any time any hon. member wants the details.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted the hon. Minister to kill that bad rumour once and for all. Thank you.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister how much is going to be spent in promoting tourism at the CNE this year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I hate to tell the hon. member this, but the CNE exhibit—all the departments in the CNE—come under The Department of Public Works.

Mr. Chairman: The St. Lawrence Parks Commission.

Mr. Paterson: I visited there with the select committee a couple of years ago, and noticed there was a great amount of summer employment in that area. I wonder if the Minister could inform us how many students will be hired this year and whether this will be an increased number as opposed to last year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Approximately 300, Mr. Chairman. The largest groups will be the Fort Henry guard which I think is in the order of 85, all boys, or male university students. There are, I think, 30 girls at Old Fort Henry, approximately the same number at Upper Canada Village; no, more at Upper Canada Village and in the parks. It is a little hard to be correct down to the last one because the names that we have do not indicate ages in all cases. In some of the parks where there may be students working, taking tickets, with beach safety supervisors, they might be adults. But in total it is about 300.

Mr. Chairman: The St. Lawrence Parks Commission.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, earlier in the discussions I had made mention that we lose approximately $1 million a year on the St. Lawrence Parks Commission. Now I look under, not the public accounts but the annual report, and I find that the estimated revenue from the St. Lawrence Parks Commission is $1,402,000. When I look at the estimates, I see we are budgeting for $2,600,000. Will the Minister explain where the $1,200,000 is going to come from then? Is that a loss?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is speaking about the total expenditure of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission as opposed to the total estimated revenue. Perhaps we should go back a little in history.

The St. Lawrence Parks Commission was set up as a result of an agreement between the government of Ontario and the government of Canada to provide park space and open space along the St. Lawrence River. It was to replace, in many cases, those areas which were being flooded or destroyed because of the seaway and the power authority. I do not think that the commission was ever planned to be totally self-supporting.

A great deal of the commission's land is what the commission refers to as non-revenue land. The commission acquired, at a cost of something over $1 million, from Ontario Hydro, who shared its acquisition costs with New York State, New York State Power Authority, and also the seaway authority, about 35 miles of shore front from just east of Morrisburg to Cornwall.

Now, some of that is developed into parks and camping areas and so on and revenue is received from the use that the public makes of that. But, a great deal of it is non-revenue producing land or a game sanctuary in one case, and there is no revenue that pulls from that. In addition, I would point out that the total expenditure includes a good deal of capital expenditure as well as operating expense.

The capital expenditure each year has become less and in fact is, I suppose, you might say that there would not be any further capital expenditure. There has been more capital expenditure in recent years than perhaps envisaged ten years ago because of the necessity to expand the camping areas but they are revenue producing areas.

Mr. B. Newman: I thank the Minister for the history lesson but when I look into the books, into the two books, the estimates and the Minister's Report, I do not find the type of a picture which he expresses. I find that the estimated revenue is $1,402,000 for the whole St. Lawrence Parks Commission. I look in the estimates and I find that the capital cost for construction and development is only going to be $250,000, yet the total budget is $2,693,000 for the St. Lawrence Parks Commission. We are losing approximately $1 million a year in that operation.

Two million people visit the parks over the course of a year and we are subsidizing visitors to the St. Lawrence Parks Commission to the extent of 50 cents per visitor. This is a nice thing, Mr. Minister, why not come along and set up that same type of a project in other parts of Ontario? If you are going to subsidize one part of Ontario, why not subsidize another part?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Why not have another St. Lawrence Seaway?

Mr. B. Newman: This is why I ask you to put up some type of tourist attraction in the Windsor-Essex county area, because we would not mind that $1 million a year subsidy in our area either.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to bring to the attention of the House, the fact that the Fairfield family of Lennox and Addington county have been very generous through the years. A few years ago, Fairfield Place was left to the St. Lawrence Parks Commission and it is a very historic house, constructed before the year 1800. Many tourists visit this house and see its furnishings and admire the fine state in which it is kept. It really is of historical interest and it is the type of thing that, even if it does not produce much revenue, it does have a lot of visitors. I still think it is worthwhile to the people of Ontario to own and have it as something of very great historical value. Now, more recently, Mrs. Mabel Fairfield Gutzeit, of the village of Bath, passed away, and she, of course, was a Fairfield before her marriage. Now she, in turn, has left her historical house, which likewise was constructed prior to 1800, along with the contents and a great collection of paintings.

Certainly we have reason to appreciate Mrs. Gutzeit's generous gift and we are interested, of course, in the future of this latest Fairchild house and the paintings. We understand that the paintings have been brought to Toronto for evaluation, but we would hope, and we think it is probably in terms of the legacy as she would want it that way, that those paintings be on display in the former house that she occupied, during the summer months at least.

Now I can understand that it probably would be impractical to leave them there in the winter time due to possible theft or fire, but it seems to me that they do belong to eastern Ontario. I would hope there is no intention of taking them elsewhere or that there is no intention of not having them on display in the Fairfield house in Bath during the summer months when tourists may see and admire them.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, just in connection with that, I would like to concur in the remarks of the member for Prince Edward-Lennox. I have written to the chairman of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission in this connection suggesting that in the winter time they could have these pictures stored, or have them on display at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre which is connected with Queen's University in Kingston. I am sure that if representations were made to the directors of the centre they would be more than happy to keep them and show them in their centre in Kingston.

I think this is most important. These pictures have been in eastern Ontario for many, many years.

It would be a shame to have them come to Toronto and lay in some dusty cupboard rather than have them back in eastern Ontario and shown there. As the member for Prince Edward County indicates, they could be in the original house during the summer and then taken to some suitable place like the Agnes Etherington Art Centre at Queen's University for storage and display in the winter time. I would very heartily recommend that this action be taken.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would reassure my hon. friends that the chairman of the commission has mentioned this to me, and I believe that this is what the commission will plan to do. I agree with them that this would be the logical place to keep this art and make it available to the public, and it seems only fair that it stay in the area from whence it was given to the province.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that the Minister has given that assurance and we will look forward to seeing them down in eastern Ontario very shortly, we hope.

I trust I am in order when, on looking at the attendance figures of the various parks, I am wondering if there has been any analysis made as to why the attendance in some of the parks has increased substantially, while the attendance at some of the other parks has decreased; whether there has been an analysis as to what makes the attendance go up in certain areas and why has the attendance fallen in other areas? I am wondering if the Minister has any comments in that connection?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, there has not been to my knowledge any survey commissioned in this connection, but actually the commission is always interested in attendance trends. I know in the past that in some cases we have found attendance has dropped because of road repairs being made in some area; because of work going on in the park itself, entrance roads, and this kind of thing. If the hon. member has any specific question perhaps I might be able to get the answer for him if I do not have it here.

Mr. Apps: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. What I am particularly concerned about are the two parks west of Kingston between Kingston and Adolphustown, and those are the parks at Adolphustown and Fairfield, both of which have shown a very substantial decline in attendance.

I see Upper Canada Village has gone up quite a bit; Ivy Lea has stayed about the same; Morrison and Nairn have increased; Farran has increased; and Charlottenberg has increased.

I think it would be a good idea to sit down and examine these parks, compare them, and find out what may be attracting visitors in one area, in one park, and see if the other parks have similar facilities and just try and determine, with the experience of the parks that are improving their attendance, how the other parks can also be improved so their attendance would be increased in the years to come.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I will pass that along to the commission and we will see what we can find out and convey it to the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Huronia Historical Park. Tourist Industry Development Services.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I think it was last year the Minister announced a study of the possibilities for tourist development in the Lower Grand. He shared the responsibility of this with the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, and while there was some considerable publicity at the time about the potential of the Lower Grand as an expanding tourist centre, there has been little or nothing said about it since.

At the time the Minister felt that the government of Canada might do something rather than the government of Ontario. But this is certainly a matter of continuing concern to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan) and myself, because so many people are coming out from Hamilton and the growing communities in that area. I would expect some kind of a programme, whether a joint one with the government of Canada or otherwise, would be set in motion to meet the needs of this area of the province.

I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs has finally realized that the provincial responsibility in planning in Haldimand-Norfolk is of paramount importance when we see the new industrial development down there, but certainly recreation and tourism is going to be associated with it as well. I wonder if the Minister had any second thoughts about that area of development?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the report to which the hon. leader of the Opposition refers was produced with the budget of my department. As I recall it, it was produced originally at the request of the Niagara Iroquois tourist council, who asked that it be done.

The hon. leader of the Opposition is correct in that there were a number of suggestions or recommendations in the report which might relate to either federal responsibility as it has been in the past, having to do with waterways and so on, or the conservation authority, which is provincial, municipal and in some cases, federal. This report was circulated in the area.

I am afraid I cannot tell the hon. leader of the Opposition just what is happening to those various agencies at the moment, although I can tell him that we hope to continue jointly with the federal Department of Transport, the study that involves representatives of a number of federal and provincial departments on the inland waterways in the province.

If you will recall, we did a study of this kind jointly with the federal government two years ago, and it was hoped that this could be continued jointly. I think it is now going to be continued jointly, and no doubt this might have a bearing.

Mr. Nixon: Might I pursue this a bit? It is our experience, I suppose, sitting on this side of the House, that whenever a Minister tells us that his responsibility is shared, this is an indication that little or nothing is going to be done. I would suggest to the Minister that this is a project he might very well take hold of himself in his department and move it towards some kind of action and with some completion goal associated with it.

The Grand River has suffered from gross pollution for a long, long time. There are those who feel it is improving. I am among those who think the situation is improving. We are spending a lot of money in sewage disposal and other efforts to improve it.

But this could be an excellent centre for tourism, and it actually would fit into the idea that the Minister mentioned a moment ago under another vote—of heritage highway. He has heard me on this subject before because in close proximity is the Six Nations Indian reservation, the most populated one in Canada. The highway that runs through it and beside it might very well be a part of a heritage highway that would be within easy access to Buffalo and the citizens of New York state.

It is loaded with history and interest, and if it had added to it an area of water recreation, such as the Grand River could provide, then it would be a very attractive centre indeed.

I think the projected cost associated with the report last year was $10 million, which is something that we would have to consider very carefully under present circumstances. But it appears to me that if the Minister is going to spearhead an approach in this connection, he will wait a long time if he waits for his colleague in Energy and Resources Management to move. He might be prepared to say we would wait a long time if we waited for our colleagues in Ottawa to move.

The point is that this does come under the Minister's jurisdiction, and I would urge him to examine it very carefully with the possibility of having some community involvement in the area, just to see how keen the local people would be to participate; how keen the local tourist association and Niagara-Iroquois association would be to follow community efforts in this connection; and try to see if he could not persuade the projects of the government and the Treasury board to put this high up on the list of priorities, because I think it is important.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, last night in a few brief comments, I made the remark that this department was deficient in two areas, and someone behind me said the first one was the Minister. I would not want to go so far as to say that. But looking at the estimates of this department, we find that there is only approximately $8 million that is spent directly on tourism.

The rest is St. Lawrence Parks, Huronia Historic Park, which surely should be under Lands and Forests. We have the institute of science, and Centennial centre of science and technology, which should be under The Department of Education. This leaves the Minister with very little responsibility.

We also learned, and those of us who are in northwestern Ontario and were involved in the northwestern Ontario tourist industry study, are aware that in this study on page 72 was outlined the fact that 12 different departments are involved in the tourist business. Actually, there should be one more, as we learned at the committee meeting yesterday. Added to that list should be The Department of the Provincial Secretary, under whose aegis comes the liquor control board affairs of this province.

Surely these laws are more detrimental to the tourist industry in Ontario than any other single factor. However, the fact there are 13 other departments of government that directly infringe upon the tourist industry in Ontario, has frayed the responsibility of this particular department, and has left little authority in this department to have any kind of impact upon tourism in Ontario.

That is bad enough in itself. But the real deficiency in this department comes in the fact that the Minister has not provided any kind of development fund for the tourist industry. The Minister goes out glad-handing around the province of Ontario, the rest of Canada, all through the States, and yet there is no provision in his department to ensure that facilities are available for the tourists when they arrive in Canada.

The tourist industry is an industry that requires long-term capital assets, long-term capital investment in plant, in accommodation and rooms, and the financing for them is not available at the present time. Banks are loath to make these kinds of loans.

The Industrial Development Bank acknowledges that it is not a development bank. The Ontario Development Corporation is not overly interested in these kinds of loans, these small business administrations loan up to only $25,000.

Now, the NOTO association asked the Minister to set up a fund of some $3 million to provide loans. The gentleman was talking in the $100,000 class, but I think a more reasonable figure would be for loans in the $25,000 to $50,000 class so that tourist operators could expand their facilities and provide the accommodations that are necessary.

Now, for the Minister to go out holus-bolus across the country and across the United States and invite people to come to Ontario and, at the same time, not be able to assure them of accommodation once they arrive here, I will call a Machiavellian fraud. It is certainly very poor advertising on his part.

I would ask the Minister at this point whether he or his department is prepared at this time to recommend to his Cabinet colleagues on the Treasury benches that such a fund be set up? The NOTO association did not ask for a handout or an interest-free loan. They asked for a fund of some $3 million at a reasonable rate of interest—around eight per cent. Is the Minister prepared at this time to recommend such a fund to his colleagues?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member that we are discussing at the present time, and have been for several weeks, with the Minister of Trade and Development and the Ontario Department Corporation, an expansion of their programme. They make no bones about it. They are not primarily at the present time in their terms of reference, involved in loans to the tourist industry, except for those types of facilities which will tend to fill up existing accommodation in an area.

It is a good programme and has been very effective in those places where it have been applied. I cannot tell the hon. member what decision will finally be arrived at by the government. I do not have to remind the hon. members that funds are not flowing freely. On the other hand, I think we would all agree that the industry is a dollar earner for the province, and I am hopeful that there will be some expansion of the present programme.

I would agree with the hon. member that the industry do not want hand-outs or grants; they want relatively long-term financing at current rates of interest, not exorbitant current rates for third mortgage but the first mortgage type rates, of 8 or 8.25 per cent. I am hopeful that we will make progress in this area. Although I think that not only does the provincial government have a responsibility and an interest here, so does the federal government because in terms of tax revenue they stand to benefit substantially from improved conditions in the tourist industry, just as this province does. In fact, they stand to benefit to a greater extent.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would you be prepared to give up the jurisdiction in this area?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Indeed. I would say that all provinces would be prepared to have the federal government take over tourist promotion, providing that the provinces were convinced that the federal authority would do it effectively for that province.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The Minister is surely aware that his problem is the number one priority with all the tourist groups in Ontario? It was recommended, I believe, by the tourist industry committee of the Ontario Economic Council as far back as 1965. The Minister will recall at the NOTO meeting at Kenora last fall, where he was present as well as myself—

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was up there again.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes. In the briefs that were presented to him by various elements in the tourist business in northwestern Ontario and northern Ontario, the number one priority was such a fund. Surely, the Minister is aware that this is a returnable sort of thing. If you loan, these tourist operators money, you are going to get it back. It is not a sort of an open-ended welfare programme where the money is spent, or even a $0.5 million free loan. The province is going to get the money back. I would urge careful consideration.

I would like to go on to something else—the matter of licencing. Your department is responsible for the licencing of tourist camps and tent camps, is this correct?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, of tourist accommodation other than that which is in conjunction with facilities licenced by the Liquor Licence Board. But we have several types of licence. There is the outfitter's licence which I think you are referring to compared to, say, a hotel or a motel.

Mr. T. P. Reid: These outfits cannot operate without such a licence from your department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is right. Anybody who has two or more cottages or units. And we classify tourist establishments in ten categories, starting with cabin establishments and working down to tourist outfitter establishments. There are outpost establishments, for instance, which are—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Are Americans allowed to have these licences?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, at a higher licence fee.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What is that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is $60 as compared to $20.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is ridiculous, is it not, that an American can come in and use our natural resources, set up a base camp, a tent camp, in the Ontario wilderness for $60, have his people come in, fly them in most cases, from the American side; have them buy a fishing licence for $8.50. This is the only revenue that accrues to the province of Ontario and the residents of Ontario. This is all the money the province gets out of it. The American operator goes back to the American side with all the money that he has made out of Canadian resources, without having to pay any taxes or any fees except the very nominal one of $60 for a tent camp. Meanwhile, he is exploiting and exhausting our fishing and hunting supplies in the province of Ontario.

I would urge upon you, sir, to give this your very serious consideration. You, in effect, are promoting the American tourist in competition with the Ontario resident who has to pay these taxes, who has to give better service to the people coming in, and who has to pay all the other licence fees that your department and Lands and Forests, and so on, impose upon him.

How can you sit there and say you are promoting Ontario tourism and allow this sort of situation to continue?

I would like to know if you are going to change this regulation and either: 1. No American outfitters are allowed to operate a tent camp in Ontario, or: 2. Make the licence fee so restrictive that at least Ontario will make some money out of this in some way.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I should clarify this a little. There are a number of the extremely good resort operators, particularly in north-western Ontario, who are United States citizens and who have a substantial capital investment with their headquarters operations as well as their outpost camps. They purchase their supplies in the province; they pay Crown fees for outpost areas, and they act just like Canadian operators. There are many good ones and I think the hon. member knows some.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We are talking about the ones that operate from the American side of the border.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have no sympathy for the ones to which he refers either. He is talking about the people who actually, in many cases, do not even have an outpost licence with us because they fly in as private individuals. These are the people about whom we have had discussions with Ottawa for four years that I can think of. I will not rehash all the complexities. The hon. member and the other northern members, I think, are aware of this. At the present time—as I said the other day, without the use of the Royal Canadian Air Force—if that is what it is still called and if, in fact, we still have any aircraft in it to police this kind of thing—we have not yet found the answer.

This matter was brought up at the north-western Ontario associated chambers of commerce commission to the Cabinet a week ago. The Minister of Lands and Forests mentioned at that time that they are working on a plan which they think may be able to control this. What, in fact, is happening is that people are flying in, fishing, and flying out, and making no contribution to the local economy or to the province other than the purchase of a fishing licence.

There has been, as yet, no way to control this because in the first place you cannot prove that they are outfitters.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would ask you this, sir. Are there any outfitters operating from the American side of the border—and I am thinking particularly of Ely, Minnesota, in that area—that you are aware of who are able to get these licences for outpost camps on the Canadian side?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I cannot give the hon. member specific information, but my staff indicate to me that there may be—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will you act to stop this particular practice?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We will look into this aspect of it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Are you also responsible for the licencing of houseboats, commercial houseboats?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Only if they were rented as a cottage and somebody had more than two of them. Houseboats, I may say, are a very grey area.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do you licence some, in effect? If I have five or six houseboats and I am operating a commercial operation renting them to American parties coming into Canada to fish? Are you responsible for licencing?

Mr. Singer: Only if they are not grey.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Only if they would be anchored in one place, permanently at one time, and rented as a resort. Otherwise it is like a rental boat or cruiser, which we do not licence.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further under development service? I thought the hon. member for Port Arthur had been up before? The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: On this same point of licencing, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend mentioned the licencing of trailer camps. I believe that the department does licence these facilities when there is accommodation for six or eight trailers in a lot. I wondered, does this licence supersede or go beyond the jurisdiction of local municipality bylaws in relation to such activities, or do the local bylaws supersede?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If I understand the question correctly, anybody who operates a trailer camp, as defined in our regulations, is required to have our licence. But we do not licence those places which are sort of permanent residence areas, where somebody leases a lot to a fellow with a house trailer who moves it in, takes the wheels off, and put it up to the utilities.

Mr. Paterson: The reason I bring this up, Mr. Chairman, is that a number of municipalities, especially in my own area, have bylaws that prohibit people from living in a trailer within the boundaries of that municipality for, say, a one-year period. It must be moved out over-night and can be moved back in. There is some thought that if they were licenced by the department this would give them a little stronger hold in this regard. I think underlying this whole situation is a certain stigma that has been placed upon the owners or the people that live in these mobile homes.

I wonder if it is not the prerogative—if not the duty—of the Minister of this department to try and enhance the position of these people; possibly get more constructive information out to the municipalities so they will not be afraid of this type of development and in many cases probably encourage it, because of our extreme housing shortage and the difficulties of these people requiring sites that are of a more permanent nature.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister have a comment?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I did not realize the hon. member wanted a comment. I think perhaps we are talking about different things. I would agree with the hon. member that some municipalities, because of their bylaws preventing trailers, have made it impossible for the transient tourist to find accommodation in their area. This is a problem. On the other hand, I know that many municipalities have not wanted trailer sites for a number of reasons and one of them has been the problem of educating the children who come with the mobile homes.

If there is any specific area where we can be of assistance in pointing out to the municipality the pro's and con's of having accommodation available for transient trailers, we would be delighted to do so.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further under development?

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, in my own municipality we have people from other jurisdictions who move their mobile homes or their trailers into the campsite, and who commute back and forth, say, to points in Michigan, during the summer months. They would prefer to leave these accommodation facilities at that campsite because of the friendships that are developed and the facilities are there.

The municipal bylaws basically prohibited this. I know some municipalities wink at this, but it is something I think the department should look closer at and maybe along with the hon. Minister of Trade and Development pursue something that will enhance this type of accommodation.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TOURISM AND INFORMATION (Concluded)

On vote 2102:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2102, development service, tourist industry. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, just before the supper recess this evening, my colleague, the hon. member for Rainy River, through his remarks, indicated just how conscientious the people in north-western Ontario are about tourist development and the fact that they are examining their situation and trying to come up with ideas of their own. I am sure this committee would want to encourage that.

And this brings me to another affidavit, another indication of just how we are trying to help ourselves. A former alderman in Fort William by the name of Steve Luckinuk has produced a report which he entitles "The Design for Development of the Superior Woods Portion of Ontario." I think it is certainly worthy of the consideration of this committee and I would be very anxious to find out whether the Minister has read it, and what his comments would be.

I should point out to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that this report has had one main recommendation and that is for a crash programme of controlled cottage development as a prime economic goal for the Superior Woods area over the next ten years. The proposal has been very thoroughly studied by Mr. Luckinuk.

First of all, it suggests that we call that entire area above Lake Superior—that would include the districts of Patricia, Kenora, Rainy River and Thunder Bay—Superior Woods. And then that we undertake a programme of developing or constructing cottages—setting land aside and constructing cottages around 50 lakes that would seem to be the best lakes at the moment for this type of development. And he points out in his report that this would be only one per cent of all the lakes up there.

I am sure the hon. members who were on the northern tour last year will recall, through the courtesy of The Department of Lands and Forests, flying over miles and miles of lake after lake after lake. They looked so lonely down there, just waiting for someone to come in and do something with them, and I am sure this is what this gentleman, Mr. Luckinuk, had in mind.

I was speaking to Mr. Luckinuk on the phone this morning, Mr. Chairman, and I feel that the theory upon which he bases his proposal is an extremely good one. The gentleman, like myself, seems to feel there is just not enough being done in this department along the practical point of view—what he would call a completely new approach.

So, with the permission of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I would like you to hear how Mr. Luckinuk voiced his argument to me this morning:

As the author of "The Design for Development of the Superior Woods Portion of Ontario" in northwestern Ontario, I just would like to repeat that, insofar as I can determine—

Mr. Chairman: To the best of my knowledge, the use of a tape recorder in the proceedings of the committee, or the House, is not permitted.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, would this not be considered an audio aid? The hon. member for Rainy River—

Mr. Chairman: I do not know what it might be considered, but it has not been used—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to argue the point. It seems to me that whatever we can do to substantiate our argument—to make it easier for the hon. members to understand our point, especially to present an affidavit that backs up what we are trying to say, should be acceptable in committee.

This is a very short statement—this is not a speech—in which this gentleman, who is the author of this report, who has put hours and hours of work into it, is heard with his main idea. After all, what am I bringing it up for, Mr. Chairman, if not to convince this committee, especially this Minister and this department, that this is a good idea?

The hon. member for Rainy River raised a huge photo and he had his visual aid, which he used in the House today to put a point across to the Minister. The hon. member for Thunder Bay had several booklets which he raised. And now I come in here as a broadcaster with some knowledge of the audio aid and I feel that this is something that is available to anyone else, I am sure.

Mr. Chairman: The use of such equipment has not been permitted in this House. I would rule that it may not be used at this time.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Chairman, in that case I would like to just summarize what Mr. Luckinuk said in his proposal in order to complete my argument, and I am very disappointed, Mr. Chairman, that the House will not accept this kind of an aid. I think it is another indication of just how antiquated our rules are here, as the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) has stated. By the way, courtesy of CHUM radio.

In the opinion of the writer of the report, Mr. Luckinuk, the efforts of the various government bodies have been misdirected. I would like you to think that over; it is very important, Mr. Chairman.

In the opinion of the writer, Mr. Luckinuk, the efforts of the various government bodies have been misdirected. The money spent on tourism in the area should be reallocated, with a switch of a high proportion of these moneys from inviting sightseers to the area, to developing a vast seasonal dwelling area.

And this is Mr. Luckinuk's main point. Why just have them for a couple of days—and I believe the large percentage only stay in Ontario for one or two days—when you could perhaps have them for two weeks, three weeks, four weeks, when you place them in cottages? And, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to call this report to the attention of the hon. Minister and ask whether he has seen the report and whether he is prepared to give it complete consideration.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Chairman, I got a copy of the report this afternoon about twenty minutes to five, so I must admit that I have not read it. I am just glancing through it at the moment.

From what the hon. member says it sounds as though it is directed towards other departments than this one, inasmuch as he was talking about cottage development, which is a good thing. It is the basis of a great deal of the tourist industry in this province, as the hon. member knows.

I have flown over, and in fact paddled across, some few of those lakes in the area which he mentioned.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Not all 100,000 of them.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not all 250,000 of them, no. But I hope to before I die, because it is magnificent.

And all I can say is that the—

Mr. B. Newman: You will have to start now if you are going to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I started quite a few years ago in Algonquin Park, but—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): You have come a long way.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, I have been through the park anyway. All I can say about this "Design for the Development for the Superior Woods Tourist Region of Ontario" is that, naturally, we will look at it with a great deal of interest.

I presume, although I do not know, if it has been circulated to other departments who might have more direct involvement in some of the suggestions.

The member for Fort William mentioned this yesterday at the standing committee, and unfortunately I guess my copy took a little longer getting to me than his did to him. We are always interested in any suggestions that come—and we get quite a few good ones—and we will take a look at it.

Mr. Knight: I wonder, as the hon. Minister has not had a chance to see the report, whether he would like to hear this comment from Mr. Luckinuk?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would be delighted at about nine o'clock tomorrow in the office, Mr. Chairman. Which might solve your problem.

Just while I am on my feet, if I might indulge the committee. Earlier the hon. member for Port Arthur was asking about the $75,000 for so-called entertainment and what we were getting out of it. I brought a few bits of material from the last year which I thought he might like to have a look at.

I do not know how one could establish what the commercial value of all this material is in things like Sports Afield, and Outdoor Life, Outdoors, Sports Afield again, and again. Leisure Living, the Detroit Free Press, Mohawk Airlines' Gateway, which is a volume in the aircraft, the Sunday edition of the Buffalo Courier Express, the Cincinnati Enquirer. I will not go through all the newspaper clippings—the Detroit Free Press—a whole host of them. But if the hon. member would like to take a look at them, I would be delighted to send them over to him for perhaps two, or three, weekend sessions.

I would also point out that of that $75,000, a portion involved this year is a provincial dinner for the Canadian Tourist Association, which in 1969 will be meeting in Ontario, and which is hosted traditionally at one function by the host province.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, may I say thank you to the hon. Minister. I am still reading some of the material he sent me a year and a half ago, and I would certainly be glad to have a look at this.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the development of the tourist industry in the province, how does Algonquin Park fit into this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, it is a great attraction in the province.

Mr. Stokes: How do you intend to use it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Personally I hope to take my children there again next year, and enjoy it.

Mr. Stokes: Have you been there? I have not been there, but I would like to know from the Minister if his department has made any recommendations to The Department of Lands and Forests on what the priorities of this government should be—what the government should do by way of multiple use in the park, or whether it sees it more for its recreational value, than for its commercial value?

Has the Minister and his department made any recommendations or given any thoughts on the subject at all?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, the only suggestion that I recall making was a facetious one. I said that perhaps with the amount of use being made of the park, we might have to resod the portages during the summer.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Surely that is not an adequate reply from the Minister to the member for Thunder Bay? Does the Minister, for example, know who the members of the advisory committee are: the committee which is advising his colleague, the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle)?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I no doubt can find out their names. But seriously, we are not involved in the question of the long-term plan for Algonquin Park, any more than The Department of Mines, or The Department of Highways would be. My own interest, and the interest of our department, is to make it available to as many people as possible for recreation.

Now that does not mean that we necessarily feel that it should be restricted in this area. I think the hon. member would agree that our interest is to make it available to as many people as possible for whatever recreational uses they might desire.

I am one who used to canoe trip through the park in the 30's when it was used by far fewer than it is now. That is why I mentioned facetiously about sodding the portages.

As I recall, the last time I went through the park was before the war, in 1939, when I think there were 125 canoe trip parties, other than those from the boys' and girls' camps, through the area. But the last time I was in the park, I was told that there was something in the area of 9,000 or 10,000 canoe trip parties.

There has been a great change in use of the park, because of the vast numbers of people who go there because it is so close to this metropolitan area. That is the only comment I would have, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, may I pursue this, if we can get the Minister to be serious? He has the delightful capacity for supercilious and facetious remarks, but perhaps he can act as a Minister for a moment.

To say that his department is not interested, any more than Mines, or Highways, is to ignore the whole function of his department.

Mines, according to the policy of this government, should not be in Algonquin Park at all, so surely you have more interest than Mines? Highways is going to be there only for certain road construction, and that is limited, presumably, to other than roads to resources. This department should be intensely involved in Algonquin Park, and the reason for it I put in these terms.

Some of the representation and the flood of material that we have had with regard to Algonquin Park argues that there is about $5 million in wages from the exploitation of the forest resources there. This is very important—a vital necessity in terms of the livelihood of some 1,000 people in the communities on the fringes of the parks.

But there are some people who argue that there are now $6 million a year being spent in the park by tourists, and another $6 million a year spent by those same tourists elsewhere in the province on the way to the park. Their contention is that if the park were developed fully for recreational purposes—for tourist purposes—that that $12 million total, involving $6 million in the park, could be doubled or trebled.

In other words, you could find work on a purely recreational basis to provide the employment that is now available in the exploitation of the woods resources. If one were to come to the conclusion that the woods resources are near the end of their tether, perhaps we are going to have to place the emphasis on the recreational end.

In short, this Minister, as the Minister promoting tourism and recreation, particularly for residents of this province, should be intensely involved, not like the Minister of Mines who is not involved at all.

This is why we are asking him: what are your views, what are the departments' views, in the context of your developing still further the second largest industry of this province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the government, I think that the hon. member would understand the views I might have in terms of formulating new policy regarding Algonquin Park I would express to my colleagues in Cabinet, or in the parks integration board. I do not think until such time as a new policy is developed—if in fact a new one is—it would be proper for me to express my views in this forum.

As a private member I might, but as a member of the government, we work out our policy having to do with all the conflicting interests—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): We are not like the federal government.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): No, you have no policy.

Mr. MacDonald: I would say to the Minister he at least is now talking logically and sensibly. A few moments ago you said you had no more involvement than Mines and it has none at all.

You have some views and presumably you are pressing them and sometime we may get a policy from the government; is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would say that if there is a change in the policy it will be expressed by the Minister of Lands and Forests, under whose jurisdiction Algonquin Park comes. If there is no change in the policy then there would be no announcement.

It would seem apparent that there may be because the Minister has put forward a proposal for interested parties to discuss.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, let me put my question specifically to the Minister. Has the Minister investigated and is he in a position to give to this House, facts—which will not have any relationship for the moment to a policy decision of the government later—facts with regard to the tourist potential of Algonquin Park?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that I could give any facts, because we have done no specific study in relation to Algonquin Park in our research branch.

I have personal opinions; I have the views of the department, in terms of its tourist attraction potential, which I express in the proper form.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, what the Minister is saying right now puts a lot of doubt in my mind that this department does anything.

If they are not looking at what goes on in Algonquin Park, are they looking at what is going on in all of the other provincial parks? Are they looking at what is going on in all of the towns in this country that are trying to attract tourists, and do you know what is in those towns? Do you know what the tourist attractions are, and are you working to co-ordinate the efforts of all of these groups that are involved?

What you are saying now is that there really is no co-ordination amongst the departments, other than what you say is underneath, or between, the Cabinet members. You have admitted that you really do not have any say in what goes on, you put forth your ideas. Where do you come in, as the Minister of—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Where do you come in in your party?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Obviously ahead of you in yours.

Mr. Stokes: We are more interested in when you are going out.

Mr. Jackson: When we get to the Minister of irresponsibility we will get to his department.

There is a grave doubt in my mind that the $12 million that your department is spending is well spent, after what you have said in the last few minutes. You do not know what is going on in Algonquin Park, which is a major tourist attraction in Ontario. You admit you do not really know what is going on.

Can you tell us what is going on in the other provincial parks; what you are doing to make them tourist attractions? Or are you just sitting back and letting The Department of Lands and Forests do what they want and then saying, "Well, they are there. I don't know what is in them, but you are welcome to come and see them?"

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is reading a few things into what I have said. He has been reaching a little.

Mr. MacDonald: For a while you were saying nothing and we had to read everything into your statements.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would remind the hon. members of the committee that last year we announced that we were doing a study in conjunction with, or in co-operation with, a number of other departments for a tourist survey of this entire province. It was based to some extent on the experience we had in the Kenora study, with which I think all hon. members are familiar.

I frankly admit, and I think at the time we announced the study I said, that we did not know all the tourist attractions in the province. We do not know specifically what the accommodation situation is in some parts of the province for certain seasons, which is something we were discussing earlier this afternoon.

I cannot honestly give a factual answer to the question the member for York South asked me a moment ago, and I said so. I am aware, of course—and my department is aware, of course—of the great attraction of Algonquin Park and, in fact, of all the provincial parks. The St. Lawrence parks commission, for instance—we know the increase in attendance each year, the camping habits of people, but I cannot specifically say what the answers would be factually to the questions which the member for York South posed.

I can assure the hon. member that we are very interested in the parks programme of the province. It is a great tourist attraction, not only for our own people, the urban people who are moving out around the province. We want them to travel around the province, not only to enjoy themselves, but to learn a little more about life in the north, for instance, as opposed to life here in Metropolitan Toronto. And we encourage this.

Parks are a great way for many people to take those first steps and to travel around a bit. But I could not factually answer the question of the member for York South.

Mr. Jackson: I have just one question to add to this. Is there a committee within the Minister's caucus which sits on parks and is the Minister a member of that committee?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There is the Ontario parks integration board and I am vice-chairman of it.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might pursue this. Here we have a park that is the largest in Ontario—one of the largest in Canada—and the Minister of Tourism and Information should be more concerned and more interested than any other member of that party, or the Treasury benches, for that matter.

We have had intense dialogue going on between the various interests in the park, whether they be recreational or whether they be commercial. I do not think the Minister can deny that he is fully aware of that.

If he is not prepared to get up and make a statement with regard to what his department's concerns are for the use of the park, could he not, as an individual, get up and say what his own individual thoughts are?

Now, if he is going to be playing politics with it, I think he has some responsibility to this House to get up and assure its members that the best use possible is going to be made of the park and its facilities. He should assure the people of the province that the best use possible will be made of the park.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, that is a very simple thing to do. I can assure the member, on behalf of the government, that the best possible use will be made of the park.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, we have wondered for a long time about the real need for this department. Presumably the Minister has something to do with parks, and presumably he and his officials from time to time sit down and make plans. Now, how can you plan—this is what this discussion has been about for the last 15 minutes—how can you plan about Algonquin Park when the government has not declared what its policy is?

Is it going to continue to be a park solely for recreation purposes, or is it going to have a huge lumbering operation—an ever-increasing lumber operation? And when the vice-chairman of the parks committee brings his estimates before the House, surely that is the time when the members of the House, the members of the public, the people of Ontario, are entitled to know what planning this department is doing, insofar as the future use of Algonquin Park is concerned?

It is not enough to say that “my colleague will answer in due course.” You are the vice-chairman; you are a member of the Cabinet; you are here with your estimates, and we are entitled to get from you some type of explanation.

What are the plans that your department has for the use of Algonquin Park for the next twelve-month period? You are asking us for a lot of money so that you can carry on your department. Part of the carrying on of your department is the use that is going to be made of this park. What use are you going to make of it?

That is the answer, Mr. Chairman, that we are entitled to, and if the passing of these estimates means anything, then we are entitled to a fair and a frank answer from this Minister at this time.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, bless his heart, knows far better than what he has said.

There is not one dollar, nor has there ever been, in the estimates of this department for Algonquin Park. The Minister responsible is the Minister of Lands and Forests; he is chairman of the parks integration board, and he is responsible for Algonquin Park.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on this same question, as it came through to me from the Minister.

The Minister of Tourism and Information, in charge of the responsibility for the recreational facilities available for tourists within the province of Ontario, has said that his position, so far as the review for the plan for Algonquin Park is concerned, is no different than that of the Minister of Correctional Services, or the Provincial Secretary.

As I understood what he said, it is that in due course, when his colleague the Minister of Lands and Forests produces the plan, after all the discussions that will take place and the whole matter is reviewed, then he, as a member of the Cabinet, along with the other members of the Cabinet, will express his views on the policy.

What my colleague from Thunder Bay is saying — what the member for Timiskaming is saying—what my leader is saying, is that you, as Minister of Tourism and Information, have a very special interest in Algonquin Park. That if you do not interest yourself, along with the Minister of Lands and Forests, then we will find that the recreational aspects of Algonquin Park are going to be seriously downgraded. They are seriously downgraded in the provisional plan which your colleague, the Minister of Lands and Forests, has put forward.

Of all the Ministers, the one who has a special interest, equal to the interest that the Minister of Lands and Forests has, is yourself. And I think that you must assert within your own Cabinet the proposition that you must be intimately involved with the Minister of Lands and Forests. You say that you were familiar with the park; I have some degree of familiarity with the park, as I am sure many members have, but if you look at the map, which your colleague the Minister of Lands and Forests has stuck in the back of the provisional master plan, you will find a miniscule portion of Algonquin Park set aside for so-called wilderness.

Now, I know the argument that it is not a wilderness, in the traditional sense of the term, because it has been logged over many years. But that is not the kind of wilderness which is available in Algonquin Park in its present state. You will find, for example, that as my colleague from Thunder Bay said in the question to the Minister the other day, if you read that report, the provisional management study, in a cursory way you get the impression that the timber licences are all going to be cancelled at the end of May, 1979. In substitution for them there is going to be volume-cut arrangements.

But when you actually read the text of it you find that there are 1,700,000-odd acres where that will not apply in the park. And the only place that the timber licences are going to be cancelled and this new method developed, hazy as it is, is in about 400,000 acres of the park. You are going to find that the Minister of Lands and Forests has suggested that the roads will come under his department—and the kind of roads and the quality of the roads.

In other words, the Minister of Lands and Forests, responsible for the overall management of the park, is, in fact, without consultation with you, deciding upon the recreational use of Algonquin Park, and the quality of recreation and the variety of recreation which will be available within the park—the whole gamut of what attractions there will be in the park. As you say, in 1939 there were very few people, but by the early 1950's and the early 1960's, a tremendous number of people came from this urban area and from outside the province, and if you do not interest yourself in it, the time will come when the Minister of Lands and Forests presents his master plan to the Cabinet and it will be just too late for you to become involved in the recreational aspects of it.

I assert, I think quite properly, your interest in that park because the policy of that park is being subjected to an overall review. That cannot be said about the St. Lawrence parks commission or the other parks which are in the hands of the Minister of Lands and Forests. This is likely to be the major token park in which basic decisions are made about the recreational facilities and the balance between recreational facilities and other uses for the park.

I simply assert what my colleagues have been saying, what we have been trying to say here, that you have a very special interest and that it is just not sufficient for you in this circumstance to consider yourself just one among many members of the Cabinet who do not have that kind of special interest.

I think you are going to have to take that special interest, because the Minister of Lands and Forests' advisory committee, with two exceptions, does not have anyone oriented towards a recreational aspect or a leisure aspect of the use of Algonquin Park. He is getting advice from the wrong people. He is getting lots of advice, but there is nobody who can effectively counteract with the recreational demands and needs of Algonquin Park and pose that in counterbalance to what the Minister of Lands and Forests is constantly hearing.

The groups who are pressing the other side of the coin are being ridiculed, the so-called "wild-lands people". Everybody is trying to put them off to one side as some kind of nuts who are interested in preservation of wilderness, as the rich people who come from Bay Street and do not have anything else to do in the summer except go and sit in the solitudes of Algonquin Park. But there are many people in this province who do not have a voice in the recreational policies.

For example, the 500,000 people who used the camp facilities last summer, do they have any organized voice to bring their views to bear on the government? No, of course they do not. The only person who can do it is the Minister of Tourism and Information, and I think he has got to get up and get interested and get involved, at this point in time in what is going to happen to Algonquin Park, because it is going to establish a very real pattern for other areas. Because it happens to be one of the major parks which is close to the urban area, the demands on that park are going to require all the skill and ability that this Minister can bring in order to counteract the tremendous pressure that the Minister of Lands and Forests is under from those who have a historic vested interest in that park.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, is the Minister advertising the beauties and attractions of Algonquin Park in any of his material over the next year? Does it appear in any of his literature, in any of his brochures, in any of his film material? Is it included in talks on the glories of the province of Ontario and the value of coming here and spending the tourist dollar?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, it is, of course, but it is not in a specific publication devoted entirely to Algonquin Park, but it is included with many of the other attractions of our province.

Mr. Lewis: If it figures in your material then how is the park being conveyed to the public, to those whom you wish to entice? How is it being conveyed? Is it being conveyed as a wilderness area? Is it being conveyed as an area whose recreational facilities are gradually being undermined by this government? Is it being conveyed as an area where lumbering in certain parts takes precedence over all other forms of human activity? How are you conveying it in the next year and how do you intend to convey it? What has the policy been?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, we do not, as we obviously cannot, go into the detail of the various attractions in all the provincial parks in our general literature. The facilities available in Algonquin Park are indicated in the camping or parks booklet that we produce, which indicates what facilities there are there.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the point simply is that the facilities are changing by virtue of the master plan—the facilities which have their attractions now may be completely set aside if the forces agitating at the door of the Minister of Lands and Forests win out. What we are witnessing here tonight is not some simple blandishment about “Algonquin Park not being part of my estimates”. What we are witnessing tonight, Mr. Chairman, is a political decision on the part of the Tory government to progressively degrade the value of Algonquin Park as a resource in the province of Ontario. That is really what is implied by the Minister’s refusal to get involved in this.

It obviously has to be because if the Minister is the vice-chairman of the advisory committee, if the Minister views it as a major tourist attraction, and if the Minister cannot therefore substantiate—or indicate, let alone substantiate—what is involved for his government in the preservation of the park, then one can only assume, that all that is implicit in the master plan will come to pass. And much of what is implicit in that plan—when it rates the park as a valuable recreational resource—means ultimately that this Minister and The Department of Tourism and Information will not have the park as a natural resource to advertise one year, two years, three years hence. Either it is, as my colleague pointed out, a matter of a Cabinet policy decision, which has already been made—and I suspect that is simply what it is. I was going to put an alternative, but I do not think there is an alternative. I think that the refusal of the Minister to engage in a discussion on the plans for the park indicates that the die is cast. This is a political decision of the worst kind for recreational facilities in the province of Ontario, and one with serious deleterious effects in terms of the prospects for long-run tourism.

If the Minister does not get up to fight for his department—indeed, he has to fight for it in the face of many Cabinet intrusions from other colleagues—then he has acquiesced on this issue, and the policy is revealed—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Pure rhetoric.

Mr. Lewis: It is not.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2102?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister thinks it is pure rhetoric, let me recall to the House that some eight or nine years ago we had a select committee in this Legislature, headed by Kelso Roberts, in which we were looking at government re-organization. One of the problems we grappled with, and never solved, was what in heaven’s name should be done with parks.

We have a parks integration board which, presumably, has had an integrating effect in terms of policy. But parks are in a half a dozen different departments, and I must say I am having increasing doubts about the wisdom of parks being left in Lands and Forests, for the simple reason that if it is left in Lands and Forests—I do not say this is necessarily criticism of the Minister—invariably the influences in The Department of Lands and Forests are in the forest industry. They subordinate the importance of parks, which exist, not for forestry, but for recreation.

Now let me be specific and show you where I think you have got things twisted rather badly. It is illustrated by the fact that the Minister of Lands and Forests is chairman, and the Minister of Tourism and Information is vice-chairman of the parks integration board. If you read the purpose of Algonquin Park—the objective in the provisional plan that is being presented—it is stated, in clear and unequivocal terms, that the purpose of Algonquin Park is primarily a recreational purpose. To the extent that there is any multiple use, it is permitted only if it does not detract and encroach seriously upon the prime purpose of recreation.

Let us face it, Mr. Chairman. If you leave this whole issue in the hands of the Minister of Lands and Forests that prime purpose is going to be encroached upon. If the Minister of Tourism and Information is not in there fighting—fighting on behalf of his department and what his department is attempting to do for tourism and recreation in this province—then that issue, that important basic purpose, is going to get lost. Indeed, there is some evidence that it is getting lost. So I come back to a point that I made earlier, and I reiterate it only because I want to put it as a very firm request to the Minister.

Evidence has been given to us that the amount of income that accrues to the communities, to the area, as a result of visitors to Algonquin Park is in the range of $6 million. That, interestingly enough, is just a bit more than the wages that are attributed to those who are involved in the forest industry, either directly in the park, or in the mills in the towns around it.

In other words, if you have some picture—and this is what I suggest to the Minister he should get—if we have some picture regarding the potential for recreational development, for tourist attraction in Algonquin Park, you may find that the $6 million is $12, $15, $18, $25 or $30 million. That potential might far outstrip the relatively small amount of money—$5 million—which is going to those who are involved in a desperate marginal existence in the forest industry in Algonquin Park and around its fringes.

It may be wise—and I put this to you as a possibility—that the forest industry is about exhausted in Algonquin Park, but you do not need to leave the people without employment. They can be fitted into an expanded tourist industry with an even greater income than they now have at the present time.

To what extent that is possible depends on this Minister doing his homework. His department must do the research work. You have got to be, not the tail on the dog—you have got to be the dog, so to speak, as far as Algonquin Park is concerned; because it is primarily a recreational facility. To the extent that the forest industry is in there, it is only an incidental that should not encroach upon its prime purpose.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to carry this a little bit further.

On Wednesday, or on Tuesday, I raised the point of what was going on in our committee on natural resources and tourism. This was one of my points. Today we sat in that committee for three and one-half hours. We mulled over the whole problem of fish and why we do not have fish in Ontario. The Minister gave us some good answers. It was not at all his department—with without fish we do not have tourists.

Muskoka right at the moment has a big problem. They have tourist resorts with no fish in the lakes for them to fish. When we get in there the Minister of Lands and Forests is fielding questions on pollution that should have been fielded by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

An hon. member: Impossible.

Mr. Jackson: Fielding questions that should have been fielded by the Minister of Tourism on why they do not have facilities in certain areas.

I cannot understand it. If we are going to have tourism in this province, we cannot have it just by the Minister sitting back and saying: "What happens here, I will accept and then try to get tourists in there." He has to have a first-hand knowledge of what is there. He also has to have first-hand experience of what is there, and he also has to have a hand in putting it there.

Until that happens, the $12 million that is spent in this department is, I would say, badly spent—very badly spent.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, my colleague raises one of the major points in this whole discussion.

The major stumbling block to the tourist industry in this province is undoubtedly the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. His inability to see the great problem that the pollution that he is allowing to continue in this province creates for the tourist industry, is perhaps the greatest problem that you face at this time.

What I want to ask you is this: what have you done in the last year to bring to this relic's attention the great need for an all-out assault on water pollution in this province, in order that we can have a decent fishing attraction, swimming attraction, so that the beaches will be fit to be used, so that we can sell the greatest natural resource that we have in the tourist industry? What have you done recently in this way?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Ask him where the pollution is—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting debate, and one, of course, of concern to me, as Minister of Tourism and Information. But I am afraid that we are straying far from the purpose of these estimates.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I understand our system, the purpose of this debate is to deal with the estimates—

An hon. member: You are way off base.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am very interested to hear the comments.

I think it is obvious to any member of this House who knows our system that the Ministers of various departments express their views about various policies, from all the points of view, from various aspects. I am not properly in a position to discuss the policies of The Department of Energy and Resources Management, or The Department of Lands and Forests, or The Department of Highways.

I discuss these from the point of view of the interests of my department in Cabinet and in the various committees, just as my colleagues do, on matters which we bring forward. As I say, I do not think that we are wasting our time here, but I think that the comments that have been made are properly comments for, in some cases, the estimates of the departments directly involved. Or in other cases, the original purpose, as I understand it, of the Budget debate as opposed to the estimates.

It seems to me in the interests of doing the business of this House that if we could confine ourselves to the items which are involved in my estimates, we would accomplish the objects the hon. members wish to accomplish more effectively.

In the case of water pollution, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management is here with his staff and his figures. If it is a matter of fish and wildlife, when the Minister of Lands and Forests is here.

I do not think that any hon. member opposite expects me to say what I think The Department of Lands and Forests policy should be in Algonquin Park, until such time as any new policy is announced by the responsible Minister. I would be a little upset if the Minister of Lands and Forests announced that he were changing the advertising programme in The Department of Tourism and Information.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I do not accept what the Minister says as being true.

We were discussing the tourist industry development services and before we decide to vote $761,000 we want to know what you are doing to improve the conditions in Ontario and what you are doing to sell them.

Now it is quite obvious that if you permit your colleagues to allow the tourist attractions of Ontario to deteriorate, as is presently happening, then of course your function will become redundant.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is your idea and yours alone.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Oh no, it is not. Everybody in this province knows the truth of that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Keep talking like that because you will never get yourselves into this position.

Mr. Deans: The whole purpose of this exercise surely is to determine whether or not you are doing a good job.

Mr. Stokes: You just keep wallowing in your activated sludge.

Mr. Deans: Now what we want to know is this. Quite obviously, the attractions are deteriorating. We want to know what you are doing to try to shore them up and I, personally, want to know what has been done by The Department of Tourism to bring to the attention of The Department of Energy and Resources Management, the deteriorating condition of the water resources of this province as they affect tourism.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might take a moment of the committee's time to point out the responsibilities of the tourist industry development branch.

They are basically twofold. One is to license accommodation, to ensure that certain standards are attained in that accommodation, and the other is counselling, management advice, this sort of thing, in the accommodation field. That is the purpose of the development branch which is the heart of vote 2102 that we are now dealing with.

Mr. Chairman: Research services—the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, would the Minister like to be rescued from Algonquin Park for a moment?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, I would like to visit there again. However, carry on.

Mr. Deans: The park will not be worth going to if you allow them to continue as they are doing.

Mr. Burr: Before the Minister decides to dissolve his Ministry according to the suggestions we have heard, I wish he would listen to a few words that I would like to say in support of the hon. member, my friend from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) regarding the establishment of one of these tourist attractions on Peche Island, which we pronounce as "Peach Island" in Windsor.

I will be very brief. This island has something over 100 acres above water and another 200 or 300 acres below water, which could be filled-in in a fairly easy manner—but the important thing is that this island has the best beach, I think, in the whole of Essex county. Yet until last summer it was inaccessible to almost everybody in the county, or in the province for that matter, but the water there at the head of the Detroit River is, I am told, the best swimming water available in the whole area, perhaps between Lake Huron and the St. Lawrence River.

This is one important consideration which I would like the Minister to consider in talking over this matter with his friend the Minister of Lands and Forests, who has a sympathetic ear. There are wooded trails—I have a visual aid here, these are popular today—for those who want to walk through what resembles a forest; there are lagoons for boating; there are some open places for other recreation; and it would provide a late afternoon retreat for the hard pressed, sweltering citizens of the city of Windsor and Essex County and their friends who are visiting with them. It would prove a good tourist attraction.

The people of our area are afraid that this is going to become a Coney Island and they do not want any kind of American Coney Island or Canadian Coney Island—they want a place to which they can go that is noise free, pollution free, auto free and has an excellent, safe swimming place. I would ask the Minister to think about this whenever he wants to get away from the great problem he has in that other area from which I hope I have rescued him for a little while.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a few questions of the Minister regarding the development of the tourist industry in the Bruce Peninsula, and particularly around the Tobermory area. I believe the Minister has been in receipt of a brief which has been presented regarding the preservation of underwater wrecks in the Tobermory area suggesting that their preservation as a recreational, historical and tourist attraction is most vital to the province.

Now there has developed in this area, in the last few years, a great influx of tourists which has been brought about, not by anything this department has done, but because of the fact that there exists in Tobermory something which is not available in any other place in Canada, and that is the concentration of underwater wrecks in clear water.

Only in the Caribbean Sea can this situation be duplicated with the result that on weekends there are now as many as 500 divers congregating in the town of Tobermory, and with them their families and wives which swells the tourist industry a great deal in that area.

These people are coming not only from Ontario but also a great many from the underwater clubs of Detroit, Michigan; from Toledo, Ohio; from Pennsylvania, and also from New York state. We have a potential here for developing a new tourist attraction, but it is going to take a great deal of co-operation from various departments of government to preserve these wrecks and I would just like to read a few sentences from this brief which was presented to the Minister. It says:

It is now a well known fact by serious divers of the Ontario Underwater Council, officials and many of the members, and also by amateur archeologists and indigenous people of the Tobermory region that the shipwrecks of the Bruce, and particularly Tobermory, are being exploited by the weekend sports divers.

Now, I know there are a lot of complicating factors resolving the jurisdiction of these wrecks in the Tobermory area, but it is going to take a great deal of co-operation from many departments, both provincial and federal governments, to preserve these wrecks and to prevent them from being carried off out of the area—and the resource completely depleted.

There are 5,000 divers in Ontario, many coming in from the States, and this resource is going to be rapidly depleted unless something is done about it very quickly. The tourist development in the area is rightly a responsibility of this department, so I would think, myself, that it is the responsibility of The Tourism and Information Department of the province of Ontario to take the initiative to establish whatever is necessary to preserve these wrecks, to develop the tourist industry in the area, to develop marine museums in the area, and to prevent the taking away of all the artifacts and sections of the wrecks.

Now, would the Minister answer and tell me if anything is being done in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would say that this, properly, would be a matter for The Department of Public Records and Archives, because, in fact, even though it was commented earlier that there was no relationship between the two departments, this is one of a number of fields where there is.

We have an Act which allows the Minister to designate an archeological site which, in fact, this is.

In 1965, I think it was, we started what has been a long discussion with the federal authorities about these underwater archeological sites which, in my view, is what they are. But there is a great legal difficulty, as I think the hon. member knows, because any wreck, and ship that sinks and which is not removed by the owner, is dealt with by the receiver of wrecks, and there is a good question as to just who owns it or whether you can in fact prevent people from going down and taking bits of it away.

The situation is that we have set aside a very modest sum and attempted to get archeologists who are divers to look into some of these areas. The area which the hon. member mentioned is one with many wrecks, and there are others, around Manitoulin Island and on the north channel, and down certain parts of the St. Lawrence, and in fact, I suppose, in other places too.

Our difficulty is really twofold, one is to find a sufficient number of competent people who are divers to deal with this situation, the other is to have sufficient funds to employ them to survey these areas, and perhaps to bring up those things which are important and once they bring them up, to treat them properly.

If the hon. member has looked into this, he will know that it is difficult to haul things out of the water that have been under the water for many years. Unless you treat them in a special way, they virtually disintegrate. And thus far, we have not been able to resolve this jurisdictional problem. We are well aware and quite concerned about what is happening in the area to which the hon. member refers and of some other areas, but so far I can only tell this committee that we have not found a practical and effective solution.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, just one or two other points. I was given to understand that it could be argued that the province does have jurisdiction for three miles offshore in the Great Lakes area. I do not know if this is correct or not.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Under The Canada Shipping Act, the wreck is owned by the Crown, in right of Canada. I cannot give the hon. member all the details but if a ship sinks the owner is expected to get it out of the way—if it is in the way of navigation—and if he does not, the Crown can do it and charge him and try to collect. If in fact it stays there, it is owned by the Crown, in right of Canada.

Apparently the receiver of wrecks—I think there is only one in Ontario, excuse me, there are two in Ontario—just apparently do not have the staff to police this kind of thing so we have a great vacuum. We do not have the staff, the trained personnel, or the funds to make an arrangement with the federal authority whereby we might collect all these things and bring them up.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, the establishment of an underwater museum so that nothing could be brought up, I think has possibilities. When these things are brought in, they are brought in through the town of Tobermory. Now, surely there must be some way whereby some provincial area of authority could tell the boat owners who are being hired to take these divers out there—you would have to have an educational programme—of the tourists coming in.

The way it is now, the receiver of wrecks in Parry Sound simply says, "We have to bluff our way into telling people: 'You are not supposed to take that stuff out of the water'," and this is not good enough.

I think this department should do this in the interests of tourism. Here is a tourist industry which has sprung up there, just by itself, and we should be promoting that tourism and getting it developed into something really big for that area. Believe me, the Bruce peninsula needs development as a tourist area; it is coming along very well, but I would think it would be well worth the effort and expense of this department to co-ordinate the efforts of both other departments of this government and the federal government to look into this very, very thoroughly.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, through you, sir, how many of the 27 recommendations prepared in the northwestern Ontario tourist study last year have been carried out so far and how many will be carried out in the coming year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question. A number of the recommendations were directed to the area in general, some were directed to various departments of government. There have been two meetings in the area sponsored by this department in connection with the report.

The first one was when the report was presented, I think last July, and at that time I stated to those present that this was a report prepared by our department in co-operation with the federal government under an ARDA grant; that the report did not state what the government was going to do, but that it made a number of recommendations and suggestions, some of which applied to tourist councils, some to municipalities, some to other governments.

We had a subsequent meeting in November at which time various interested groups in the areas came back with their comments on the brief, and in some cases opposed certain sections of the brief. At that meeting we indicated that we would produce copies of all these briefs and circulate them to all those who had attended and that further meetings could be carried out.

The first recommendation of that report, which was probably—since it was the first—one of the most important, was that a committee be set up to co-ordinate many of these things.

I think I pointed out at the time the consultants were preparing the brief that the then Department of Economics and Development, now the economics branch of The Department of Treasury and Economics, was also working on the design for development programme, and in the interim had set up a committee which seemed somewhat similar to the committee suggested by this report. I pointed out that perhaps the implementation of those parts of the report which would be the responsibility of government, provincial, municipal or federal might well be dealt with by that committee. That is where the matter stands at the moment.

Mr. Shulman: Am I to understand, Mr. Minister, that nothing has been done at this point as a result of that report? Is that a fair statement?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, if that is your interpretation of what I said, that could be—

Mr. Shulman: At great length, as I understand it. Well there are a number of recommendations here which certainly would fall within your department's authority and I certainly find it rather disturbing that someone in your department authorized the funds to prepare this report, and then it just seems to have been washed away, as everything does in this department.

We see here they have suggested, in addition to the suggestion you mentioned, to establish a northwestern regional tourist development committee with terms of reference to co-ordinate all departmental activities. We do not care much who does it, but you have a good suggestion, and apparently it has foundered somewhere in the department. You should get on the ball and get this done. The second thing here, is to set up priorities for developing the various areas within an opportunity region, and then survey each in detail and prepare a comprehensive plan.

Surely that comes in your department, does it not?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I did not hear that last part, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: The second suggestion—to set up priorities to develop the various areas within an opportunity region and then survey each in detail and prepare comprehensive plans. Would this come under your department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: That is very interesting. Where does the Minister think it should come?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Presumably in terms of the report, which I may say I did not write, in the terms of reference in whatever committee is co-ordinating the multitude of agencies who are involved.

Mr. Shulman: Surely that should be your department, should it not? You are responsible for tourism.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do not think that this department, that I should set up priorities for development in an area where so many agencies are involved. I think that the area itself should set its own priorities.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps the Minister did not understand the recommendations. Perhaps I had better read it again. It was not that the area should be developed, it was to set up priorities for developing the various areas. Now, obviously, each area is going to think they should develop first.

Someone is supposed to set up the priorities. They are suggesting that some level of government do this. Now if it is not The Department of Tourism, what department is it? Highways, or Provincial Secretary?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I recall the report, Mr. Chairman, it was not a department, but it would be whatever coordinating committee that was set up. I think there were 18 geographic areas set out in the report to decide the priorities of development in those areas. But the kinds of development might be—they were many. In some cases it was highways, and in some cases, as I recall, cottage areas, and in some cases attractions, a whole host of things.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask the Minister how much he paid for this report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think the cost was $25,000, which as I say, was an ARDA project.

Mr. Shulman: I would like to ask the Minister whether, in his promotion in the United States and other provinces, he promoted the province as a province or did he promote separate areas of the province, in a regional way?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not sure that I can answer the question definitively, in the terms it was asked. We promote the province as a province. The only area that we promote separately, if I can put it that way, is northern Ontario in the Karsh programme. In terms of our U.S. and other provinces of Canada programme, we promote the province as a province.

Mr. Shulman: I wonder, has the Minister read this report? May I read one of the suggestions in the report? Do not promote an entire province. Special regional campaigns are advisable and should be aimed at specific markets. Has the Minister seen this report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Shulman: Do you agree with this report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I agree with many things in the report, in some cases. Personally, I question some of the recommendations but the purpose was to produce a report for the area. Many aspects are involved other than tourist promotion which is the responsibility of this department.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the Minister in his annual report has taken a little credit here. I quote:

The northwestern Ontario tourist industry study prepared during 1968 is the most comprehensive report on this part of Ontario to date, offering 27 recommendations for development of the tourist industry in the area of study.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to belabour this, I just want to point out that the things he takes credit for, he forgets and does not carry. This report is a waste of money—you have not done a darn thing about it.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, three or four years ago, when I took a more active part in this tourist industry debate, I posed a question on the development branch in relation to, I believe, the Michigan programme called the "Har-bours of Refuge," and this was in relation to the yachting traffic that possibly could come to our shoreline.

In that programme, I believe the purchaser of gasoline in the state of Michigan, say, did not get a rebate on the gasoline but the amount of those funds that were rebated, say, in the province of Ontario, were designated in Michigan to create these harbours of refuge along their coastline every 20 or 30 miles.

And since the province has seen fit to take this gasoline rebate from the boat owners, and I might say there are many thousands of small outboard motor boat owners in our province who are paying these funds that were originally designated for highway travel use, I wonder has this department and the Minister, who sits on the Treasury Board, made representation to acquire any of these funds to assist in the creation of harbours of refuge along our coastline? Or, in the future, will he attempt to develop such a policy for the encouragement of the yacht or boating traffic in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I hate to keep saying this but there are no funds in these estimates for this kind of programme. I would doubt that if such a programme is developed that it would be under the jurisdiction of my department. Perhaps I should mention my own personal interest as a boat owner, and one who is going to lose about $160 a year in gasoline tax refunds.

But we have been interested, and we have had discussions with other departments about facilities for boaters, both with Lands and Forests which has a programme that it initiated some time ago in a limited way of boat launching ramps and trailer parking facilities in the provincial parks, and with The Department of Transport, on the possibility of establishing harbours in certain of the areas, I think particularly, Lake Superior, and part of Lake Huron and the north channel of Georgian Bay, where these facilities are lacking and where, to encourage boat tourism, they will be required.

The hon. member knows the federal government has a programme where they will meet 50/50 with an individual or a government, the cost of dredging and harbours of refuge, but I am afraid that I cannot tell the hon. member of any programme which is being developed at the present time. I can only say that it is being discussed and, of course, we are interested in terms of development of tourism, but I would doubt that we would be the operative department.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman: if I may ask the Minister under this vote, grants to regional associations. Who decides the region? Who decides what area is going to be a certain region? Is that set out by your department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member repeat his question, I did not catch it?

Mr. B. Newman: How do you decide a certain region is going to be Algoma regional tourist area? Who decides that this is going to be? Does your department tell the Algoma people that this is going to be a certain region?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, this programme was set up in, I think, 1961, and so I cannot, at first hand knowledge, explain to the hon. member how the original 32 regions were established, but I understand that it was as a result of discussions between officials of the department and various area groups, chambers of commerce, local tourist associations, cottage owners' associations, and so on.

In the past two years, we have, as a result of discussions with the tourist councils, agreed to the alteration of certain boundaries and, in fact, the division of certain of the tourist council areas which were very large—just too large geographically to be effective—producing three additional councils within the north and the northwest.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, are these regions limited to a $5,000 grant?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is a matching grant of up to $5,000.

Mr. B. Newman: Now, a region, the Minister mentions, could be too large geographically. Likewise, it could be fairly small geographically but it would have an area that is adjacent to a centre of very heavy population. And when I look at the Essex-Kent regional tourist council, they get a grant of approximately $5,000.

I think the Essex area really could use the $5,000 in itself in promotion just across the border, and the Kent county grant could have a separate $5,000 grant. I think the Essex-Kent county regional tourist council should really be broken up into two. They could do a far more effective job if they were two units, and they would have twice the amount of money.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: I was somewhat dismayed at the reluctance of the Minister to react to the question put to him by the member for High Park when he asked whether he was in favour of the recommendations of the study done on tourism in northwestern Ontario. I would like to refer briefly to a news release in the Port Arthur News Chronicle that covered the report that day and it said:

Mr. Auld told a public meeting that, "the main recommendation is not one which we can deal with automatically in view of the regional development apparatus which is being established by the government overall. Yet it suggests a logical approach and I am asking our research director to put this recommendation before the government senior advisory committee on regional development for their appraisal and consideration," he said. The Minister said his initial reaction to the 111-page report containing 27 recommendations and the reactions of others in the government have been decidedly favourable. "I believe this report is destined to become an extremely valuable document in the future development of the tourist industry in northwestern Ontario," he said.

Mr. Lewis: The Department of Public Archives is what he meant.

Mr. Stokes: I wonder has the Minister made that recommendation to the advisory committee on regional development and what has their reaction been to it some nine months later?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As a matter of fact, I have the speech that I gave that night in front of me because I thought somebody might ask me about this tonight.

An hon. member: Is it worth repeating?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Yes, read it again, we want to hear it again ourselves, it is so good.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, it is 13 pages, it might take a little too long. But it was a pretty good speech.

Mr. Lewis: I have heard it was a dud.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, I could send the hon. member a copy. He can read it as bedtime reading and I am sure he would be delighted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He reads Playboy.

Mr. Lewis: I gave that up.

An hon. member: It would put him to sleep.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The answer to the question of the hon. member is that it has been referred to the committee on regional development. And I would just quote:

What we now have in hand seemed in fact to go somewhat beyond this, that was to evaluate in broad terms the areas' potentiality in growth in the tourism and recreation centre and to identify in terms of programmes and a limited number of potential projects means whereby the government of Ontario could encourage and stimulate this growth.

I say, "what we now have in hand", quoting from that speech, seems to go somewhat beyond this. The report provides not only a plan for government action but a guideline for stimulus to the tourist industry by all of its own participants, those who are engaged in and benefit from tourism, whether they are private individuals, organizations or municipalities.

Mr. Stokes: But has the advisory committee appraised and considered it and if so, what has been their recommendation or reaction to it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: To my knowledge, they have not produced any recommendations but I presume they are studying it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the committee's attention to the amount listed here for "grants to regional associations", $160,000, out of a total of $7,550,500 for tourism in this province.

Mr. Stokes: Thirty thousand dollars in northern Ontario.

Mr. Knight: It is astounding and shocking, Mr. Chairman, that this is all that goes to these local councils, because the local tourist councils are the key to real tourist development in this province and the more money that this department can channel through these local associations the better it is going to be. I cannot believe that only $160,000—Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the Minister how much or how he determines priorities, how much goes where, who gets the most and who gets the least, and why do they get it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, all the councils can receive the same amount, that is, a maximum of $5,000.

Mr. Knight: What is it for?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will not take the time of the House to read the amounts that have been received. Actually, the total is $160,000. In 1967-68 of that total potential of $160,000, $157,212.02 was actually granted. There are no priorities. Each council is designated and receives up to $5,000 on a matching basis. They can spend that money for any kind of promotional purpose they wish, whether it be advertising, printed material or tourist attraction. The only proviso is that they must not spend more than $500 for administration.

Mr. Knight: Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that a local or regional council has an idea, they have a scheme in order to attract tourists, it could be a marina or some kind of a garden or park development. Can they not solicit funds from this department toward the cost of such a project in order to attract tourists?

Hon. Mr. Auld: They could use that $5,000 for that purpose.

Mr. Knight: This is all they would be able to get out of this entire budget of $12,500,000 or whatever it is now?

Mr. Lewis: How much would the member give them?

Mr. Knight: How much would I give them?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Knight: I would give them far more. All of this money that is going into theatres, archives and history, or the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology, in the name of tourism, just does not make sense to me; this is not real tourism. I think it is the local councils that can really promote or really cause the tourist industry to increase in this province.

I just wonder, while we are talking about a regional council, whether the Minister is aware that the Lakehead chamber of commerce does not really know how it is going to be able to go on taking care of tourist matters in the Lakehead area. Even now, it is very seriously considering passing it back to the municipalities, it has even been made aware of the economic problem that they have encountered, in as far as tourism is concerned, at the Lakehead.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If they are unable to raise funds locally to promote tourism, then it would appear to me that there cannot be the kind of interest in tourism locally that we would like to see. But I do not think the hon. member would expect the province to subsidize every community in this province for tourist promotion. The province's responsibility in this field, as I see it—and I think hon. members would agree—is to promote the province as a whole and to encourage, as we have done by setting up regional tourist councils, areas to get together, to pool their funds and their time and their energy, to do a better job for an area. I think it is axiomatic in this field that two plus two equal six, if I can put it that way. If you can get a group working together to pool their funds, they can do a better job and they can do the job in the area.

Mr. Lewis: That is not axiomatic—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, I learned this from my son, he is doing new math. But, seriously, the purpose of setting up the tourist councils was to get areas to combine their efforts so that they could do a better job combined than they were doing in a fragmented way. By the same token, we have been asked to, and we have been, assisting several tourist council areas to produce a marketing plan. From the early results of the first one which was in eastern Ontario, it would appear that this is a better way—just as the Canadian government travel bureau promotes Canada as a whole. We do not expect them to do more promotion for Ontario than they do for British Columbia.

Mr. Knight: Do you feel that grants to these local councils and the work that you do in theatres, through this department, is on the same priority? You are putting almost the same amount into theatres, whatever you are doing in theatres, as you are into local regional council tourism.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, to answer the hon. member's question. The theatres branch is self-supporting and in fact, I think makes a small profit because of a fee for both for licensing the theatres and for reviewing films. So I do not think the analogy is a correct one in that case.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue the remarks of the member for Wentworth, just for a moment, in reference particularly to the tourist industry around Lake Erie. There is a very good tourist industry around that area, particularly around the Nanticoke area where there are, I believe, some five provincial parks within a fairly close area.

A project is afoot in Nanticoke which is going to nicely destroy your tourist industry in that area. We have raised this matter, of course, with the responsible Minister but as every member of this House knows, the Minister responsible for that particular problem, of water pollution, does not have the mental acumen to understand it. So, I am raising it now with this Minister, Mr. Chairman, because you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is unparliamentary.

Mr. Shulman: —because, when this new hydro project is completed in Nanticoke—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Auld: —we are discussing, in this estimate, the estimates of the development branch of the department which, I have explained, have to do with licensing of accommodation and counselling of tourist operators. I do not think the hon. member is discussing anything germane to this estimate.

Mr. Shulman: I am discussing counselling of tourist operators. There are a number of tourist operators in that region and the tourist facilities that are available involve fishing, swimming and the various activities available through your provincial parks. Now this is going to be completely destroyed within the next three or four years unless you, as the responsible Minister, intervene with our Prime Minister to see that something is done in this field.

I realize you cannot do anything with the Minister that is responsible, and we are asking you to intervene with the Prime Minister because otherwise this very important area is going to lose its tourism. You will have no fishing because you are pouring superheated water into Lake Erie; you are going to have a growth of algae; you will not be able to swim.

Downwind from the plant will be all the provincial parks where the sulphur dioxide will be pouring down. The whole industry in that area is going to be destroyed unless you, as the responsible Minister, take some action.

Mr. Lewis: Well, what is the Minister going to do, Mr. Chairman? What is the Minister's answer to the problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Ask the member for High Park to resign.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am very happy to discuss my estimates.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2102?

Mr. Lewis: Do you see it as a threat to the tourist resort in the area, or do you see it as something about which you just shrug your shoulders? How do you feel about a development of this kind?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He thinks that the member for High Park should resign.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, like any other member of this House, obviously I am concerned about water and air pollution. It seems to me, though, that we are discussing the estimates of my department and there is nothing in these estimates having to do with either water or air pollution or provincial parks.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, we are simply trying to preserve your estimates, and you as a Minister, and you are gradually dismantling the entire department. Tourism as an industry in the province is being undermined by the Minister of Lands and Forests and the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Now you have to jack up the mental acumen, as well, of Cabinet Ministers. You have got to—the Minister of Trade and Development is gradually intruding on your preserve.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): When you first came into this House—

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact—

Mr. Chairman: Can we get back to the tourist industry development services, vote 2102?

Mr. Lewis: The Minister indicated that counselling and management of the tourist operators and in the area of tourism was part of his department. I fail to see the distinction he makes between counselling and management around the growth of the tourist industry, and the point the member for High Park makes, that a particular area of the province around Lake Erie is going to be destroyed as a tourist resort within the next three or four years because of—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member sees the difference all right.

Mr. Lewis:—what the Minister of Energy and Resources Management is failing to do. Now surely, Mr. Chairman, that affects the development counselling and management of the tourist industry? Surely that is a legitimate question? I am just asking the Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Out of order.

Mr. Lewis:—I am just asking the Minister, as he is being asked, what does he intend to do about this apparent intrusion on his tourist attractions?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Intensify the counselling.

Mr. Lewis: Everyone is asking.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister have any further comments in that respect?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The only final comment I have, Mr. Chairman, is really the same one that I gave when we were discussing Algonquin Park. Policy having to do with water and air pollution emanates from either The Department of Health or the Ontario Water Resources Commission which presently reports to this Legislature through the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. If I have comments on behalf of my department, I make them to him. The government policy is made known in due course.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2102? Development services?

The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, there is $450,000 in this item for salaries and I just wondered if the hon. Minister, in keeping with the suggestion of the Premier a few days ago, has plans to engage more student help during the summer in the development of the tourist industry? I would like to know whether he has any programme to get students involved, because it is pretty obvious that summer and students pretty well go together.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I mentioned this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, that in the department there are some 300 students involved in summer work. In the tourist industry development branch this summer, there is one student involved. Last year, I think we had two, but this branch does not lend itself to students because in terms of inspection and counselling, we require trained people. It is not the kind of work where you can put a young student, who comes from university, into for three months—and have him be effective. When we are doing surveys and so on, as we have done in the research branch in the past, we have use for a few students.

Mr. Knight: There is one more thing, Mr. Chairman. I just wonder whether the Minister is preparing a programme in conjunction with The Department of Education for the better training of tourist operators? Whether there is any, shall I say, progress, in this field, any improvement in the proper training of our tourist operators and our tourist counsellors?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am happy to tell the hon. member that now with the community colleges, there are persons in various aspects of hotel, restaurant and resort administration in I think nine of them. Some have relatively few options, a number have very many and this is a great improvement. The University of Guelph is starting, this year, a degree course in hotel and restaurant administration, I think it is called. Up until about a year and a half or two years ago, there was only one course in Ontario, at Ryerson, in hotel business administration. But we feel, and the industry feels, that this is a great step forward.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back on the regional associations and the $160,000 that is being appropriated for that. As I recall, back at the inception of this programme in the early 60's, there were approximately 32 regional councils set aside with the qualifying grant of $5,000. I somewhat agree with the style of mathematics of the hon. Minister, as we in Essex county feel that the two plus two, with our wedding of the county of Kent, has added up to three and we, in fact, have been less effective than we were prior to that time.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We always spoke very nicely about you.

Mr. Paterson: We like the people of Kent county and we have tried to assist them but it is quite burdensome.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wonderful people.

Mr. Paterson: But anyway, what I would like to get at is that during this period of eight or nine years that these councils have been functioning, there has been, to my knowledge, no real growth in the activities of them compared to, say, the regional development councils of our friendly Minister of Trade and Development. With the event of regional government looming on the horizon, the other types of designations of areas, I just wonder if the Minister honestly, in his own opinion, feels that the great bulk of these regional tourist councils have fulfilled the original objectives that were set out in the underlying terms of reference; or whether many, or some, have fallen by the wayside; and if, in fact, we can see the death knell of these regional tourist councils looming on the horizons?

Certainly the restrictive nature of a $5,000 total grant available, regardless of the amount of money and area effort put into projects to generate things, and the restrictive amount of $500 limit on administration, is a very serious limitation. I think it has really throttled the development of these associations and, personally, from what I have seen—and as the Minister knows, I was involved directly in this type of work in the early 60's—it would now appear to me that the regional development associations may have to become the arm that is going to fortify the tourist industry by reason of these associations.

Would the Minister like to comment on this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact I have been preaching for, I think, three years the gospel of the regional tourist councils joining together in the regional development areas to do the tourist promotion, so that the regional development associations would get out of that aspect, into smokestack industry promotion, while the tourist councils might become, say, the tourist committee of the development association, and to some extent that is now happening in the eastern Ontario development area.

Mr. Paterson: Would this $5,000 be available in some of—

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is still available and that really, in a sense, is the carrot to try to make this come about because in some areas there has been a real duplication of efforts as between the tourist promotion activities of the development council and the various tourist councils.

I think we are making some progress in this and I think that in the long run it might even bring Essex and Kent together.

Mr. Paterson: Then I would think that two plus two might equal six in our particular case.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on development services? The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, could the Minister indicate what plans his department has for the Bruce trail along the Niagara escarpment, if any?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The only thing that I can say, again, Mr. Chairman, is that we have no plans to develop it as such because we have no funds in the budget for it. We do mention it in our literature; or in effect promote it. I think that the question as far as developing physically the trail itself is concerned should be addressed to the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. Chairman: The development services, vote 2102. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: I notice no item in the estimates to cover membership in and grants to travel organizations. Now it may be in there, but does it come under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It would be in maintenance.

Mr. Stokes: I am referring to your financial report of 1967-1968, where there was an expenditure of $10,700 in membership in and grants to travel organizations. I was wondering how $2,000 to the Mississippi parkway commission would be spent?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The total amount in grants to and memberships in travel organizations is $17,000. In the Mississippi river parkway commission, which is Ontario and Manitoba in Canada and all the states down the Mississippi, from Minnesota south to Louisiana, there are two funds. One is for promotion, the other is for administration, and what they call lobbying.

Manitoba and ourselves felt that we should not properly be contributing to a fund which lobbies the U.S. federal government.

Mr. Lewis: There is no lobbying in this government?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, just representation.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We do not think that provinces in Canada should be involved in lobbying the government of the United States, which is the point I was making. So that that $2,000 is used for promotion brochures and advertising for the Mississippi river parkway, which is a road so designated by signs on it. It runs through all the states of the midwest, from the Gulf of Mexico to the border at Fort Frances.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2102; developments?

Mr. Stokes: Just let me pursue this.

Does the Minister not see the Canadian side of the Mississippi parkway—I understand the member for Kenora is a member of that. I was wondering to what extent he is involved in the Mississippi parkway authority. Does he report to the Minister for this $2,000, or is this something apart from his membership in that association?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The Mississippi river parkway commission—

Mr. Chairman: Does this really come under development?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Actually we have passed it, but—

Mr. Chairman: It should really have been brought up under promotions.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If I may take just a moment. I am glad to tell the hon. member we receive the financial report through the Canadian delegation, or the Canadian membership, which consists of, I think, ten people from northwestern Ontario. We receive the audited financial report of the Mississippi river parkway commission.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on development?

Vote 2102 agreed to.

On vote 2103:

Mr. Chairman: Archives and history. The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: I might ask of the Minister—I have not had occasion to be in the Sigmund Samuel building this year, but is the archives branch is still located on that property? Are the facilities adequate in those premises to do a proper job, or are you making representation to get in one of the new provincial buildings?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We are extremely crowded in the archives building and we have made a report, or a request, to The Department of Public Works for additional space.

Just how this is going to be accomplished I am not sure, but we are extremely crowded, because there has been a great increase in the use of the archives facilities. Not only that, there is an increasing amount of material to be stored there and made available, and, of course, we have the Canadiana collection there as well.

Mr. Paterson: Might I follow up on this?

If your archives branch moves out, would this added space be available to the Sigmund Samuel, or related type artifacts, for a display—

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not sure that I can answer this definitely because I am not sure just what, if any, provisions there are about the use of the building for the Canadiana collection.

It has been suggested that the collection should properly be moved to the Royal Ontario Museum, because actually it is owned by the ROM, as I understand it, and simply displayed at the archives.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this year was the 150th anniversary of George Brown. The people of this province are most interested in what he achieved. The Department of Education gave away a series of books as history prizes—his biography written by professor Careless. Considerable attention was paid to the ceremony by the government of this province.

We have in the city of Toronto, as the Minister well knows, his home on Beverley street. Now I wonder if the Minister is going to devote some of the money he has under this vote 2103 to preserving that home, because this is just about his last chance.

There is no point in going into a great long history, but George Brown is one of the genuine fathers of Confederation who lived in the capital city of this province. He lived on Beverley street, here in Toronto, and the home is about to disappear unless someone does something to preserve it.

I wonder if the Minister has any plans at all to do something to preserve George Brown's home.

Mr. Lewis: Politics, perhaps.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Actually, I think I mentioned this in the House last year.

The house on Beverley street is not, according to my information, likely to disappear. It is presently owned by the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto and leased to the school for retarded children, I believe.

It is a little complicated in that the original structure has had an addition put on it, some years ago.

We have been, perhaps slowly but steadily, trying to establish a value for this property. So that hopefully—and again, I am not sure that this is what will happen eventually—what we hope to do is to acquire title to the property, so that it will not be destroyed.

We have had it inspected and it has not been radically changed physically. So at some point, when this school finds other premises, we might be able to preserve that part of the original property, or that part of the property which is original.

I have had discussions with Metro Chairman Allen about this; Public Works has searched the title—I am not sure that they have completed that. There are apparently some complexities there, and the archivist has had his expert on buildings inspect the property.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The building was obtained through the services of the Minister for Correctional Services.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could not take some positive steps, with the agreement of Metropolitan Toronto, to put something on the title at this stage so that there can be no doubt. Things have a way of being forgotten on occasion, and this occasion, the 150th anniversary, would be the most appropriate time, without any great expenditure of money. If, with the consent of Metropolitan Toronto, you put out a notice of expropriation and in due course figured out how much money you were going to pay them, I do not think it would cost any money but at least it would preserve the property and indicate the intention of the government of Ontario with regard to it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will look into that. I want to be very careful in view of some of the press comments today of provincial-metropolitan relations. I want to make sure, and make very clear that both of us know exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Singer: I am not suggesting for a moment that we launch a "Bay of Piglets" out of Queen's Park.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex South was on his feet.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Downsview has, I believe, brought up the area of the heritage foundation, under this vote. In public accounts there was a grant made of some $500,000 to initiate that programme. Is this the correct area to discuss this particular matter?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would think so.

Mr. Paterson: There are one or two things I would like to ask in this regard. First, I believe there is going to be public subscription of funds to add to this $500,000 source of funds for the initiation of this programme. I would like to ask how successful this has been, how successful you have been in acquiring artifacts or buildings, what projects you have under way, and to whom interested persons should write—to the Minister, or to the chairman of that board, or to the secretary of the archives board, or the heritage foundation—could the Minister give me some information there?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The report of the foundation will be available shortly, which will have the details. I think it is, as far as a public subscription is concerned—the foundation has not, as yet, undertaken that kind of a campaign. I believe that some donations, or—

Mr. Paterson: Have you approached large industries or concerns that are interested in this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I honestly cannot answer that question definitively. I believe there have been some discussions with individuals. There have been certain donations. The one that I think of immediately is the Field House in Niagara on the Lake, where an arrangement is in the process of being worked out with the Ontario College of Pharmacy. There have been quite a number of donations offered. In fact, you might say that they have a surfeit of riches in their first—they have not had really a full year of operation. But by the very nature of these things, they seem to take a long time to come to fruition, and the solicitor seems to take a long time to work out the deeds of gift, and so on. So that, as of tonight I cannot tell you of the long list of things that have been completed. I can only say that there are a number of things in the works and I have been asked on some occasions not to make them public until such time as they are completed. I hope that is satisfactory.

Mr. Paterson: I shall be pleased to wait for the annual report. Is the department not putting any more money into this Heritage Foundation, during the current estimates?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are no additional funds for this year, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2103. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: I am a little disturbed, under this particular vote—and this applies also directly to the encouragement of tourism—to see buildings which should be part of our national heritage literally being allowed to fall into rack and ruin.

The member from Downsview has mentioned one building which may disappear. I would like to mention a perhaps far more important building, which is the Rockwood Academy in Rockwood. The Minister has not heard of this? The Minister has put a plaque up there. The Minister has a delightful habit of putting plaques up all over the province: "here was", and the thing can fall into rack and ruin. But it is all right, we can look at a plaque. It would be nice if, instead of putting the plaques up, we could preserve the buildings.

Rockwood Academy is one of the very few schools dating back to that time—it dates back to 1850—which was set up for the teaching of the conservatives of the time. As a matter of fact, among the former pupils, I understand, were Adam Beck and the fourth premier of Ontario, Mr. A. S. Hardy. It is a shame to see what has happened to this building. In fact it has deteriorated so badly that eight years ago it finally was sold, with all the land around it, for $8,000. It could have been bought for that sum by the province.

A dedicated man, a Mr. Joseph Drenters, bought the building and he, as an individual, has done what he could to preserve it and prevent it from falling into further deterioration. But one individual cannot be responsible for buildings of this importance. I would like to suggest to the Minister, through you, sir, that money should be voted through the Heritage Foundation, or any other way, to buy buildings of this nature, because we have so very few of them.

As you travel across the rest of North America, particularly across the United States, you see so many buildings of this type which are preserved by the federal government because they realize their importance to future generations, to tourists, and to the people of their own state.

This particular building, the Rockwood Academy, would fit so very well into that particular area. It happens to be a rarity, the only one of its type that I have seen, and I have travelled about this province quite a bit, calling at the Minister of Correctional Services' various institutions. This particular academy, I believe, is unique; and I would like to suggest to the Minister that steps be taken in the very near future to make certain that this building is preserved.

I understand that the area immediately across from it has now been purchased for use as a housing development, and there is encroachment coming in on all sides. Unless the Minister takes some steps we may wake up next year to find that the building has been torn down, and we have a lovely new housing development there. So I would like to ask the Minister, would he make some effort in this particular area?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would tell the hon. member that I will bring this to the attention of the heritage foundation, although I think they are aware of it. The hon. member may be aware that we have, starting I think three years ago, undertaken, with the co-operation and assistance of one of the members of the archeological and historic sites advisory board, who is also a professor of architecture at the university, to do an inventory of the pre-Confederation buildings throughout the province. One of them, of course, is this structure and we now have, of all those which were standing at that time, photographs, drawings and sketches of them so that if they have disappeared, it will be possible to replace them.

It is just not possible at the moment to acquire every building which perhaps he would like—and certainly I would like—to see acquired and preserved. But I think through the heritage foundation we are going to be able to set some priorities and I will certainly bring this one to their attention again.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, is it not possible in some legal way to put some sort of a lien on the deeds so that before such a building is sold or torn down, the government would have first option on purchasing it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There is no legislation presently to accomplish this.

Mr. Shulman: Could the Minister consider bringing in such legislation? It would appear to me that, as part of our national heritage, we should take immediate urgent steps. Perhaps the money is not available now but at least take this precaution so the buildings do not get torn down before we get the money to buy them.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This has been discussed. Actually I think it started off from a situation that arose in Kingston and then again in Niagara-on-the-Lake. This is something that we have discussed and will be discussing again with The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2103? The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister how the determination was made that the Ontario Heritage Foundation will pay $50,000 for the Field House. I am not questioning it, I am just curious as to how much the vendors of the house paid for it, what the condition of it was, who makes the assessment as to value? It is my understanding that $50,000 was paid to Judge Robert Cudney and Miss Rita Cudney for that property. I would like to know by what method the valuation was reached.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the property was assessed by an appraiser and I believe it was approximately $48,000 we paid for it. But it had been assessed by a qualified appraiser.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, at Niagara on McFarland Point there is one of your plaques which refers to the De Puisay house which, of course, is no longer there. This house originally stood about one mile south of Huron and so on and so forth. It was purchased in 1779 by Lieutenant-General Joseph Genevieve De Puisay, Count De Puisay, 1775-1827, the leader of Royalist resistance in France 1792 to 1794. He commanded its forces during the expedition in 1795, and in 1798 he led a party of immigrants who settled in Upper Canada. The plaque goes on: "One of the oldest remaining houses in the province, it is a good example of construction popular during Upper Canada's early years".

My understanding of the background of it is that that house was donated to the Niagara parks commission in 1965. A ceremony was held at which the then chairman of the Niagara parks commission officiated at the unveiling of this plaque in July, 1966 and then,

I understand, in March, 1968, the house was sold for $4,000 odd by the Niagara parks commission and removed from the site.

Mr. Singer: That is because they did not like the former chairman of the parks commission.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am just curious as to whether or not your Ministry knew what was taking place. Had any participation or discussion with the Niagara parks commission taken place before this house property was sold? Where it is now, what continuing interest, if any, do you have in what is apparently, obviously, a part of the heritage of the province, and under what circumstances was it sold to the extent that you have any knowledge of it, other than knowledge which perhaps only the Niagara parks commission has?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do know something about this because in the original instance the house was owned by a canner in the area; I cannot think of his name. It came to our attention because the owner who wanted to see it removed had offered it, I believe, to a local fire department as a place for training. The fire department was approached by a number of people in the area who were concerned about this.

We approached the Niagara parks commission which undertook, in effect, to give it a home, to build a foundation on which it could be placed. So it was moved from its original location onto the parks commission property, I think next to the McFarlane house, and kept there.

It was not restored. The parks commission did not have any plan to restore it, furnish it or anything like that. They were giving it a home. A prospective owner came along who was interested in acquiring it, restoring it and using it, and the parks commission, I think, properly sold it to this owner who in turn has moved it to its present location.

He has been in touch with the Heritage Foundation which is, in fact, discussing with him, or perhaps negotiating with him, some sort of an arrangement whereby it will remain on his passing or his wanting to dispose of it. I am also informed that the restoration he is doing is being done with competent, professional assistance so that, in fact, when he has completed it and it living in it, the building will be in far better condition than it was when its peregrination started.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 2103 carried?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on the same point. I am not an expert in the field but my understanding is that, in fact, the renovations which are taking place will result in substantial structural alterations to the property; that the house will not be restored into anything resembling its original condition; and that, in that sense, it will not be available as it was originally constructed and, therefore, would apparently not be available as part of the heritage.

But what I cannot understand is, did your Ministry have any knowledge about this sale that was made by the Niagara parks commission? Were you consulted about it? Did you consent and agree to it? Are you now concerned in any way about the renovations or the work which is being done on that property, or did it, as is so often the case, fall between the Niagara parks commission on the one hand, and this Ministry on the other?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We were aware of it, Mr. Chairman, and while it was not necessary for us to do so, we did agree with the parks commission's plans. In connection with the original condition, perhaps we are playing with words unknowingly, or unwittingly. My understanding is, and I think this was confirmed because it seems to me that we have a report made on the structure before the Niagara Parks commission accepted it, that at the time it was about to be destroyed, it had been substantially altered structurally from the way it was originally built by De Puisay.

My understanding is, and I stand to be corrected on this, that the present owner is attempting to restore it to the way it was originally built, rather than the outline or the structure that he purchased.

Mr. J. Renwick: My information is otherwise, but I cannot conduct a useful discussion about it to any further extent. Would the Minister tell me, using the Field House as an example, what are the terms of the arrangements for the Field House? In other words, do the vendors of that property have some right to remain in residence there or to live there? Is it then opened to inspection by the public or is it an outright purchase and you have a superintendent or caretaker looking after the property for the foundation? Just what exactly is the arrangement under which these properties are acquired so far as the vendors are concerned?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Regarding the Field House, I cannot give the hon. member the exact details, but it is owned by the foundation. It is rented to a tenant who, as part of the lease, agrees to have it open to the general public so many days a year, and I am afraid I cannot tell the hon. member just how many days or what days. But it is the type of thing that is done, for instance, by the National Trust.

Mr. J. Renwick: Is it likely that, in the Minister's annual report, he is likely to give the particulars, the exact particulars of these transactions? In other words, assuming for the moment that Judge Cudney and his sister are the ones to whom the Field House has been rented, is it rented at a nominal rent or is it rented at an economic rent, in addition to the $48,000 which was paid? You paid the $48,000 for it, but are they paying a nominal rent or an economic rent for the use of that property?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid that I do not have the details in front of me. I am informed it was from Judge Cudney that the foundation purchased the building, they are not the present tenants. The present tenants are paying a rent. It certainly is not a nominal rent and I am afraid I do not have the details of the amount per month, but it is not a dollar a year or anything like that. I can get that information for the hon. member if he would like it, before we have the annual report. If he is prepared to wait for the annual report, I am sure that it will be in that document.

Mr. J. Renwick: As long as the full details are in the annual report, I am quite prepared to wait on. I was concerned that the annual report may not contain that kind of detail. For example, I think where there is an accounting being made in an annual report, again using the Field House as an example, one should know what the price that was paid for the house by the vendors was, when they originally acquired it, what money was expended on it, so far as your evaluator took that into account, and how you arrived at the price of $48,000; then the existing arrangements under which the tenants occupy that house and the rent which they pay for it. I think this information is essential if there is to be any public accounting of the use of the funds available to the Ontario Heritage Foundation.

I would like to just come back momentarily to the De Puisay House. Why would it be that if the Ontario Heritage Foundation is interested in that house, it would be sold for $4,000-odd to the Chipman family and now the Ontario Heritage Foundation is beginning to become interested in it? Why was not the Ontario Heritage Foundation prepared to buy that house at the relatively nominal amount of money involved and in turn, if the Chipmans have a special interest in that property, to lease it to them under the same arrangement that apparently the Field house is rented?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, as I recall it, the foundation was not functioning at the time the De Puisay house was sold, but had it been, I doubt in their priority that they would have had the funds to acquire it, move it, and then restore it. I have heard the figure and I am afraid I cannot remember as to what is involved in the restoration, but I know it is a very substantial amount of money because I believe there was an approach made to the foundation to, in effect lend the money and acquire a life interest or something of this nature, in the house. However, the foundation was not in sufficient funds or had other higher priorities for their funds to be involved with the De Puisay house at that time. With admittedly limited funds they have had to be very cautious in just how they expend them. I know that the chairman of the foundation, Mr. Wade, has had discussions with, I believe, Mr. Chipman. I think they are still hopeful of working out some arrangement which will insure that the house will not be destroyed in the future. But for the immediate future, it would appear that what we wanted primarily to be accomplished, has been accomplished, that is, the preservation of the house and then its restoration.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, is it the intention to move the plaque, which the department raised on that property, to the new location of the house?

Well, then, am I correct that the Ontario Heritage Foundation uses only the interest portion of the $500,000 which is available to it?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, in October, 1968—I do not know the exact date of the inception of the foundation, but it is not very long ago—but, what rate of interest on $500,000 produced the $48,000 that was paid for the Field house?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, the $50,000 was placed in their current account so that in fact it was the interest on $450,000. I think the rate of interest is—well, whatever the current government rate is at the moment, roughly six per cent.

Mr. J. Renwick: My problem is simply one of mathematics. I do not know how you get up to $48,000, that is the point.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, it is because of that $50,000—in effect, current funds—that they started off with.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the Minister under this vote if he is considering setting up some type of village similar to Greenfield Village, as they have in the city of Detroit? There are a lot of these historic buildings that may not be able to be restored on the site but could be restored in some central location just as the Ford interests have done in Greenfield Village. They have taken scientific buildings and buildings of historic interest and concentrated them in one area and as a result have developed a tremendous tourist attraction.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do we have to have everything as good as the United States?

Mr. B. Newman: Would the Minister consider such a thing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I mentioned this afternoon that we hoped to do other projects, once we get our current projects completed.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister, then, under the fourth item in grants, if there is a grant being provided for the Walker Museum in the city of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is not municipally owned, is it?

Mr. B. Newman: I would think it is. It may not be, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, because I do not have a list of all those museums in front of me, that if it is owned by the municipality it would qualify for a grant of up to $1,000.

Mr. B. Newman: But they would have to apply for it. Would that be it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: They would apply and they apply before June—

Mr. B. Newman: Well, I will check that then, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Before we ask the Minister to erect any Greenfield Villages on this side of the Canadian-U.S. border, I want to ask him, as other members have, to consider one further salvage operation and that is the one of the Sir James Baby house, in the west end of Windsor. I wrote to Mr. W. H. Cranston last April about this structure, but unfortunately the chairman of the Ontario Archeological and Historic Sites board, was ill at the time. I did not have an opportunity to have any further discussion with him about the province's ability to participate in the preservation of this structure.

I would like to read part of my letter to Mr. Cranston to the Minister, Mr. Chairman:

A member of the Algonquin Club, which is an international historical organization with an interest in the history of the Detroit River and the St. Clair frontier region—and I just want to interject, Mr. Chairman, that we are still very much a frontier region in Essex county along the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers. To bring back into our discussion the remarks by my colleague, the member for Sandwich-Riverside, we are still trying to retain lands on the Ontario side of the waterway that have fallen into the hands of modern-day American financial enterprises who are, as you know, developing Pêche Island—attempting to develop Pêche Island—whose efforts so far have proved ostensibly unsuccessful. The members of this House, of the Windsor area, have been endeavouring to engage the attention of the Minister of Lands and Forests and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, in an effort to re-acquire that property for the use and development of and by Ontario and Windsor residents particularly.

To continue with the letter about the Baby House, Mr. Chairman:

The Algonquin Club recently passed a resolution supporting an application to the Ontario Municipal Board to enforce a Windsor zoning by-law against the location of a crushed stone operation in the vicinity of the Bobbie House.

The Club noted that the Baby House was one of the most historically important houses in Ontario and the whole border region. Furthermore, the Club stated that it's widely recognized for its architectural significance. Every effort should be made to preserve it for future generations of Canadians and Americans to enjoy. It would be a tragedy to lose it.

The Ontario Municipal Board ruling, however, left the crushed stone operation in the same location, that is, directly opposite the Baby House. Residents in the neighbourhood were concerned about the large volume of dust drifting over their properties including the Baby House. In addition to the damage which was then apparently occurring to the building there was also the failure of any group in the area to undertake the development of the house as a point of historical interest.

The house is owned privately and is being well taken care of by the present owners. However, the public's awareness of the interest of the Baby House is extremely limited and I feel that much more could be done both in respect to the house's preservation and its development as a point of historical interest than is now the case.

If you have any suggestions as to the manner in which steps could be undertaken to promote both these matters, I would be very pleased to have advice.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the house still remains in private hands and is in a rather out-of-the-way location in Windsor, as far as attracting any number of visitors to it. There is that usual plaque standing outside the house recalling, for visitors who come to look at the exterior—and very, very briefly—what its significance was and is now.

I want to suggest to the Minister that as he has undertaken consideration of the acquisition of the former George Brown home in Toronto through the heritage foundation, perhaps he could devise a means, through the foundation, to ensure the preservation of these structures of historical interest in this province. If outright acquisition is impossible at this point, because of lack of funds, then I suggest he enter into some kind of arrangement with the present owners whereby at least sufficient maintenance could be undertaken to ensure the buildings are kept from harm—the kind of pollution that has affected the Baby House in Windsor. To provide for, perhaps, restoration of the house in part or in full to its original appearance.

I think that either of these suggestions might well be undertaken in the instance of the Baby House and some of the other structures of historical interest that have been discussed this evening. Certainly, if there is any new effort to be undertaken in the Windsor area by this section of the department, I think it should be in respect to this very important historical structure in Windsor.

Mr. Lewis: I live in an old house in Newmarket.

Vote 2103 agreed to.

On vote 2104:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2104? The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: It seems to me that there is a $63,000 cutback in the amount appropriated to this particular section from last year. I wonder if the Minister could tell the committee where that amount went to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Is the hon. member speaking on 2104?

Mr. Knight: Well, archives and history. Is it not down $63,000 from the —

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2103 has been passed. We are on vote 2104.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did you make a ruling?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I ruled that vote 2103 has obviously been passed and we are on vote 2104.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Actually, the hon. member may recall that last year there was a substantial sum—$48,000, for the contract for the people who started up the government records management service. That contract was completed and that item no longer appears.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2104? The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: May I ask of the hon. Minister if he has had numerous write-ins, specifically from the United Church Women, complaining about the moral standards of the movies shown in our province? No doubt the Minister will recall the question I had before the orders of the day concerning this matter.

I realize this topic is something very hard to judge. We all think on our own individual planes. And who sets moral standards and what are the criteria?

I realize it is very difficult, but it does seem from the Minister's reply to my question that only three movies were banned in the province, 20 some odd were clipped and the other sections were designated into adult or family entertainment.

Does the Minister have any comment and have there been write-ins from other groups other than this one particular church group?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the only group which wrote in as a group was from the Windsor area, although I have had more letters this year—and I think the chairman of the board has had more letters this year—than previous years.

By the same token, I think that the board has been a little more severe in certain fields—perhaps not more severe, but has had more work to do, because of more films which required attention in the past year than in the past. The board's standard and judgment is, I think, as it has been.

I think the board, by and large, is in tune with public taste, but as the hon. member has said, and it has been said in this House many times, it is very difficult to satisfy everybody.

There are all kinds of considerations involved. In fact, I well remember the evening in this House some years ago when two members from the official Opposition got up, one after the other. The first one was severely critical of the fact that we were doing any censorship and the other one was severely critical of what was being let by.

I think I remarked that night that while we were not satisfying everybody, we were apparently not satisfying either extreme, so we must be somewhere in the middle and perhaps somewhat as close to being as right as you can be in this field.

I think that the concern—and I mentioned this in my estimates speech last year—that the board—

Mr. Nixon: I do not recall that. What year was that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can tell you who one of the members was. It was the late member for Nipissing, Leo Troy.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, yes, he used to bring in comic books.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is right. He was very concerned, I think, about a trailer, rather than an actual film.

As I said last year, the board was asked to have more removed—to have adult classifications rather, than restricted, and I think the pattern is the same this year.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2104? The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I have received at least a half a dozen letters from women's organizations in my own community concerning this topic and I suggested to all of them that they write to the hon. Minister expressing their views.

Would the Minister care to read a copy of a letter that he sent to the people in the Windsor area concerning this topic, so that we could know what the Minister's views are specifically on this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid I did not bring a copy with me, Mr. Chairman, but I think basically what I said was that I was interested in their writing to us, that the board had taken cognizance of some of the changes and had requested more deletions and had classified more films as restricted, and I think—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Were you for or against sex?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I ended up by pointing out that the best way to deal with this kind of situation is for the people not to go to the film.

Mr. B. Newman: How are they going to find out that they need to object?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, I suppose you could send one from the group and get her to report back.

An hon. member: Oh, there is no fun in that.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister if he is considering any changes in the members of the censorship board?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not at the present time.

Mr. B. Newman: Okay, thank you.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the hon. Minister who it is that enforces the signs that occasionally are put up outside theatres to the effect that the films are restricted to persons 18 years or over, or are for adults only? Who enforces this; what is the meaning of this sign? Is it really enforced?

If youngsters are allowed in the theatre, can the police go in and charge the theatre owner? Has it ever happened?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If a film is restricted, the theatre owner is required to have a restricted sign up outside. The theatres branch has a staff of inspectors who cover a number of activities, one of which is to see that the proper sign is outside. Others have to do with safety and licensing of projectionists, and so on.

Mr. Knight: What happens if a theatre manager does not have a sign, or has it but still allows youngsters, say, 11 or 12 years old, into the movie? Is there anything done to the theatre manager?

Hon. Mr. Auld: He could be prosecuted.

Mr. Knight: Can the Minister tell the committee, Mr. Chairman, when the last time was that a theatre—

Hon. Mr. Auld: The fine on conviction is between $50 and $500.

Mr. Knight: I see. Have any theatres been fined in this manner recently?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am informed not.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2104? The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would the Minister give us the names of the movies which were banned, and of those which were censored?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was hoping somebody would ask me that question.

An hon. member: You just happen to have a list.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, I just happen to have a list. The three that were not accepted in any form were three epics called, "The Gruesome Twosome", "The Girl, the Body and the Pill" and "She Devils on Wheels".

The Star commented editorially:

Whatever may be said about the principle of censorship in general, Ontario's strong censorship can hardly be considered a threat to liberty of expression in the province.

The report, submitted to the Legislature by James Auld, Tourism and Information Minister, shows that the censors reviewed 463 feature films in 1968. Of these, they ordered deletions in only 22 and have refused approval of only three. The three rejected films, incidentally, were, "The Gruesome Twosome", "The Girl, the Body and the Pill", and "She Devils on Wheels".

We doubt, somehow, if banning them left any great gap in Ontario's cultural life.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The hon. member wanted a list of those films from which there were deletions and it is always a great temptation to put these together in double bills. However, I will leave this opportunity for the hon. members tonight.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Who gets to keep the clippings?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can start off with, "Wild is my Love" and "Adventura al Motel", but we will start the American ones—"Revolution", "Wild in the Streets", "Savage Seven", "Wild is my Love", and "Angels from Hell".

The British—and these first two are a good pair—"Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" and "Just Like a Woman", and the third one is "Primitive London".

The foreign ones—that is non-British or U.S.—"Anzio", "Adventura al Motel", "Birds in Peru", and "Games Men Play"—which might have some sort of a context, too, I suppose—"Serpent", "Playgirls", "Women of Pleasure", "Three Day Pass", "Carmen Baby", "Brute and the Beast", "She Beast", "Sergeant"—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Watch your punctuation there.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and "E Intouno a Lui Fu Morte", and the one Canadian one was "High".

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2104? The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, ostensibly these films are censored to prevent corruption of people of the province of Ontario, could you indicate if this had any effect on the censorship board?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I must say it never occurred to me, Mr. Chairman, to ask the members of the board about that but they seem to survive.

Vote 2104 agreed to.

On vote 2105:

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, on vote 2105. I am wondering if this programme includes the provision of technical advice and assistance to the government departments in the field of records management—the operation of a records centre and the distribution of news releases to radio and television stations. Could you tell me the nature of those news releases? Where do they emanate from and to what extent are these services made available to the legislative members?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is primarily the radio and television service which has been operating for some years and which was a matter of great debate before the hon. member was first elected, I think. I can give him, perhaps, the totals.

It includes a report from Queen's Park which is done weekly, or was done weekly until last July, distributed to 62 radio stations plus Broadcast News, which is a CP radio affiliate. There were 19 of those weekly reports sent out in spot news, which is either a member of the Legislature making a report which is sent to a station, or a station calling in there asking for a comment or a report from some member. There were 188 of those.

Mr. Stokes: Could you give me a breakdown of the 188? Who requested them and when?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can give the hon. member a sample. We could take January of this year:

January 2—the hon. Darcy McKeough press conference on the tax reduction allowance. January 2—the Prime Minister on the late hon. Ivan Rand's death. January 6—The Department of Agriculture and Food, a press conference on the farm income report. January 13—the leader of the Opposition press conference. January 14—the member for Sarnia, press conference on tax rebate. January 16—the Minister of Education, press conference on the length of the school year. January 22—special to CHIC, the Minister of Municipal Affairs on Peel-Halton regional government. January 23—the leader of the Opposition on a special. January 27—the Ontario Law Reform Commission, press conference. January 27—the Minister of Education, press conference on the Franco-Ontarian report. January 29—the member's report, the member for Ontario South. January 29—the Minister of Trade and Development, press conference. January 29—the leader of the Opposition, press conference. January 30—the leader of the Opposition, a special on pollution. January 31—the Minister of Trade and Development, press conference on high rise condominiums.

February 3—the Prime Minister, press conference re party and federal and provincial conferences. February 4—the member for Kenora, spot news. February 7—the member for Kenora and the member for Fort William on the member's report. February 11—the member for Hastings South, I guess it is, for the member's report. February 11—the Minister of Tourism and Information, spot news re the Centennial Centre of Science and Technology. February 12—the Minister of Education on the passing of the late Neil Olde. February 13—the member for York South, press conference. February 13—the Minister of Mines, spot news. February 13—the Minister of Transport, regarding the expiration of licence plates. February 13—another member's report, for the member for Ontario South, the member for Kenora and the member for Fort William. February 12—the member's report for the member for Oxford. February 17—the leader of the Opposition, press conference. February 17—spot news regarding the member for Kenora and Indian and Eskimo resolution, and also about expiration of licence plates. February 18—spot news, the member for Grey-Bruce and the member for Welland South, and so on.

Mr. Stokes: How does somebody get a piece of the action?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Just go down and see the people down there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who is running this show?

An hon. member: It mentions your name, you were not listening.

Mr. Singer: How about party officials?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the case of a party official, the physical facilities are used down there at the request of the press gallery here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the media wants to see you.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not help him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am.

Mr. Singer: He needs you.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, as the Minister of Correctional Services says, if the media in this building want to interview somebody who is in this building and has some reason to be here, the facilities are available. I believe that this has been used by all parties in that connection.

Mr. Singer: How many times has it been used for the purpose of interviewing the president of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The same as for the Liberal Party.

Mr. Singer: We do not need your help either.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I could not say. All I can tell him is that, in terms of press conferences, there have been 43 on behalf of the government or government supporters, 19 on behalf of the Liberal Party, nine on behalf of the New Democratic Party and what is referred to here, as other groups—eight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We sure are leaning over backwards.

Vote 2105 agreed to.

On vote 2106:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, some questions on the Centennial Centre:

Can the Minister assure us that the construction is now completed and the work that is going on there is simply of a nature of finishing and preparing the exhibits? That is the first question.

The second is, the request under this vote over $3.5 million should be approximately what it would take to run the Centennial Centre on a continuing basis. However, I wonder if the Minister would comment on just what we might be expecting in the way of costs to operate the centre once it is in full use by the public and particularly, the students of the province.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I cannot say that the buildings are all completed. My information which, of course, is to an extent second hand from The Department of Public Works is that building "A", which is the main entrance building on Don Mills Road, and which we are presently occupying, is virtually complete although there are some things to complete. In fact, I noticed up there the other day a few electrical outlets that are not finished. There are minor things that still have to be completed. The same holds true with what we refer to as building "C", the building down on the valley floor, the centre building, building "B", where the main administrative functions will be in the auditoria and the three first theme halls, Space, the World and the Molecule. We are told we will have beneficial occupancy some time in April—April 15.

Now, as far as the exhibits are concerned, we are progressing on schedule with the exhibits. It is very difficult to give a meaningful set of figures because one exhibit may take up 50 square feet and another one, like the Hydro one, might take up 5,000 square feet.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might simplify my question. Can the Minister assure us that on opening day in September or October of this year, that the museum will be completed and be occupied with exhibits? It is obvious that the exhibits are going to be changing over the life of the museum and we hope it will be more than a century, but will it be completed at that time and is it not going to be opened until it is fully completed and in full service?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. As the hon. leader of the Opposition has said, I suppose it would never be completed in the sense that there will always be change going on. But we expect roughly 540 exhibits will be completed at that time. It could be that there will be only 520, yet there might be 555. The hon. members will realize that we are constructing some of these totally ourselves. Some we are fabricating from some portions that we make ourselves in our own shops and some components which we are purchasing. And in other cases, quite a substantial number, the entire exhibit is being built outside. We have schedule deliveries on all these items but from past experience I hesitate to say that everything will be delivered on schedule. But I am quite confident and I know the board is because this was considered at great length, before the opening date was settled, that we will have the exhibits complete and the building completed when the opening takes place.

Mr. Nixon: And it will be correct to say that this department is going to continue administering the museum as a working enterprise and that it will not be administered by The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is the present plan, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder then, if the Minister could tell us what the completed cost would be? There have been a number of figures bandied about and the Minister tends to react sometimes rather violently when the Opposition makes an estimate. But since it is at least within range of full completion and full use, I would like to know what we have invested in the Centennial project?

Mr. Singer: Centennial, loosely meaning 1969.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was just checking because I would like to be accurate for the leader of the Opposition. I cannot give him—

Mr. Nixon: It is an obvious question and one that you are going to have to live with for quite a while.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Including the estimates presently before the House, the expenditures through my department, to the end—

Mr. Nixon: Well, do not give us this three-Minister division. How much money have you invested in the project?

Hon. Mr. Auld: At the end of the forthcoming fiscal year, which would be 1970, the expenditures through The Department of Tourism and Information will be approximately $10 million which includes artifacts, exhibits and administrative costs since the inception of the project.

The figure which the Minister of Public Works has given for the building itself, the contract price, is $21,700,000. I am afraid I cannot give the leader of the Opposition what that final figure will be, whether it will be above or below that, there have been certain deletions from the contract, to my knowledge, and certain additions. What other costs have been involved, I cannot say—and, of course, as I recall his comments last year, I think it was, that $21,700,000 was a gross figure, I think there was some $900,000 of federal sales tax rebate plus the $2½ million federal grant—

Mr. Singer: What about the land costs?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There was no land cost. As the hon. member will recall, we lease for a dollar a year from Metro parks or Metro conservation authority for part of it and Metro—

Mr. Singer: Considering the fact that you are seizing the waterfront, they might change their minds about this.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Apart from Metro parks and apart from Metro conservation authority.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, there is one further piece of information I was interested in. The Minister of Public Works indicated that there was a continuing contract with the architect to upgrade the idea of the use of the building. And as I understand it, it was a contract that would go on for a number of years. Is the Minister the authority to which this contract will be expressed in the next few years? He knows nothing about that at all?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid I could not have been in the House when this was discussed. I do not recall anything about this; I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. Nixon: I do not have the quote from the Minister's colleague with me but when we were investigating the architect's cost either last year or the year before, he indicated that there was a flat seven per cent fee and this was augmented with funds to allow the architect to travel about the world before he began. There was also a contingency in the contract which would be, the Minister said, to the advantage of Ontario and that Mr. Moriyama, I believe his name is, would be available on a continuing basis, at a set fee, to assist the government in keeping the museum up to date as far as an educational institution was concerned.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid I have no knowledge of that. It certainly is not as far as my department is concerned.

Mr. Nixon: And is not in this estimate?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, these items under vote 2106 are new ones and I was trying my best to follow the Minister in his total estimate of cost—what did he say?—$21.7 million plus $10.1 million, is that right?—$21.7 million from public works and $10.1 million from this department up to the end of this year, this fiscal year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Approximately $10 million, I will get the exact figure here some place.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member waiting or just meditating?

Mr. Singer: Waiting.

Mr. Trotter: Waiting for the facts he does not have.

Mr. J. Renwick: Artifacts.

Mr. Trotter: The artifacts.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will give the figures. Up to March 31, 1966: $1,032,250. For fiscal 1966-67, $1,307,000; 1967-68, $2,078,000; 1968-69 estimate, the current year, $2,526,000—and I might just say as of the up-to-date figure for last month, we are about $80,000 below that estimate for the year.

These estimates are $3,608,000, giving a total of $10,551,250, although I should point out that included in this year's estimates are operating expenses for a portion of the year, but there is no estimate of revenue which will, of course, have a tendency to offset a portion of it.

Mr. Singer: I am a little puzzled by these figures, Mr. Chairman, because last year, with some considerable difficulty, we got the $30 million which would have excluded whatever overages there are on the contract in the meantime. I suppose the Minister is going to indicate that if there are any, these would be only within the knowledge of the Minister of Public Works, but the figure we had last year certainly would not include this $3,608,000 that the Minister has in his estimates this year? Did he project that forward?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think one of the figures that has been indicated before has been the contribution by industry to the project. The figure of $30 million that was bandied about a bit two years ago included an estimated $2 million for contributions from industry. At the present time, up to the present, contributions from industry are in the order of approximately $900,000, nearly a million dollars. Now, there will be other contributions that we expect in this fiscal year, so that I would be able to give the hon. member, perhaps at this time next year, the total amount of money in the project, including donations less federal grants, sales tax and all these things, but I am afraid I cannot give it to him at the moment.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. Has it gone up over the $30 million that we were talking about last year? Has it materially increased since then?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, because there would be approximately $864,000 in these estimates for operating expenses which we expect will be offset by revenue—perhaps a little more than offset, perhaps a little less. But that figure was not included in the $30 million.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 2106 carried?

Mr. Singer: No, I am a fair way from being through yet. Is it fair to assume then that your Budget figures do not show any offsetting figure for revenue at all?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No.

Mr. Singer: They do not? So that in addition to anything else that the Treasurer predicted when he gave his Budget speech, you anticipating another million dollars surplus on top of the Budget that your department has shown under this heading?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as I know, the Treasurer did not anticipate revenue from the Centennial centre, but I would want to check that with him.

Mr. Singer: All right. Now, item 1 under vote 2106, salaries in the amount of $2,065,000. It seems like an awful lot. What is that $2 million for?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That would cover the current complement of 167 staff, scientists, installation people and so on, plus the estimated amount for the security staff and the additional curators, guides, and so on. The difference in salaries this year, this forthcoming fiscal year, and the current year, is approximately $864,000.

Mr. Singer: What was that figure?

Hon. Mr. Auld: $864,000. That is made up of two aspects, the civil service increases that were granted last year in the revision, plus the additional staff which will be required when we start operating, some of whom will be hired after April 1, and some of whom will be hired in July, August or September.

Mr. Singer: When the centre is in regular operation, if we can call it that, if we are going to arrive at that stage, what will be the full complement of staff?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It should be approximately what it is at the present time, plus short-term or casuals. Now, there are certain decisions regarding, for instance, security services where we have bodies there, but they are now shown on the complement—if I can put it that way, because we purchase the service. In the same sense, some of the cleaning may well be done by contract, rather than by our own staff.

Mr. Singer: Is Mr. Moriyama's salary being included in this amount?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. One other thing I might just mention, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to mislead the hon. member. In addition, at the present time, we are budgeting for ten teachers who will be involved in the educational aspect of school groups who come in. Now it is not yet determined whether, in the long run, those teachers will be on the centre's staff or whether they will be on The Department of Education staff and rotate.

Mr. Singer: Have you had any discussions with OISE about this, or with the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We have had no discussions with OISE, but with The Department of Education we have.

Mr. Singer: What salary is Mr. O'Dea going to get?

Hon. Mr. Auld: His salary will continue—his contract of $22,000, with no fringe benefits.

An hon. member: Did he not quit?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. O'Dea has moved from being director general to being senior scientific advisor. He is remaining under contract for, we hope, another year and his duties now are to continue liaison with scientific museums and also, particularly, to follow up a number of the contracts for the exhibits which are being built in Europe and elsewhere.

I think there are some 25-37 which need to be followed up to make sure that we have them here in time for the opening.

Mr. Singer: How many persons—

Hon. Mr. Auld: He is also, as I say, senior scientific advisor and continuing to advise the centre on the scientific aspect of some of these exhibits.

Mr. Singer: Is there another director general who was hired to take over the job of Mr. O'Dea?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid the hon. member did not read the press release or the paper. There was an—

Mr. Singer: I cannot keep up with all the press releases.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The new director general who became director general on February 15, is Mr. Douglas Omand, who is sitting here in front of me.

Mr. Singer: And what is the salary being paid?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That has not been established by the civil service commission.

Mr. Singer: I see, so he is working for nothing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I doubt it and I think he has confidence that when his salary is established there will be payment of any retroactive difference.

Mr. Singer: How many people of the 167 are being paid salaries over $20,000 a year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Two—well, there would be a total of three.

Mr. Singer: Who are they?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The chairman of the board, Mr. Crean, the director general and the senior scientific advisor.

Mr. Singer: How much is Mr. Crean being paid?

Hon. Mr. Auld: $23,000.

Mr. Nixon: Just one question in this connection.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am sorry, $22,000.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. O'Dea is on full salary in his new capacity as senior scientific advisor; has he not returned to the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, he is right here. He is returning to the United Kingdom, I believe at the end of this month, to make his headquarters there.

Mr. Nixon: To take up another occupation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Pardon?

Mr. Nixon: To take up another occupation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, no. He is under exclusive contract to the centre but he is going to be travelling, following up on the production of these exhibits, liaising with museums and also returning here, I think for two weeks, the last week of one month and first week of the next month, to work in his capacity at the centre.

Mr. Nixon: What does he do for the third week out of each month then?

Hon. Mr. Auld: He would be following up on the production of these exhibits of which there are quite a quantity. I have not the figure here but I think I gave it to the hon. member who asked me the question in the House.

Mr. Nixon: What would be the estimate of his travelling expenses in addition to his salary?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It will be considerably less since he will be based in England rather than here, and as I mentioned—

Mr. Nixon: But he will be flying back here once a month to consult—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Once every two months.

Mr. Nixon: Six times a year, you do not fool around.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask one brief question in connection with the Centre on Science and Technology.

Last year during the estimates of this department, there was a news release saying that, according to Mr. Pigott, of Pigott Construction, there could be litigation as a result of delays and that extra expenses and claims have already been submitted in the amount of $419,000. And there could be litigation in the amount of another $500,000. I was wondering if any of that came to pass, and if so, are there any amounts in these estimates to cover such contingencies?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, there are no funds in these estimates having anything to do with the Pigott contract because Pigott is employed by The Department of Public Works.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2106? The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister about the way in which the centre is financed? Is Pigott the chief, the prime contractor and have they a contract for building the whole complex at so much money or is it the cost-plus arrangement? How is it done?

Mr. Chairman: This comes under Department of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes; the hon. member should ask the Minister of Public Works. All I can tell him is that it is my understanding that Pigott is the prime contractor and that he has a fixed price contract.

Vote 2106 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of Tourism and Information.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will carry on with the estimates and then, of course, there is the private members' hour at 12.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): No Budget debate?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I understand no one is ready. Do you have any objections? All right.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): It appears, Mr. Speaker, that there has been too short a notice for some of the members and it may be better if we proceeded with the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 o'clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE FISH AND GAME ACT, 1961-1962

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Fish and Game Act, 1961-1962.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any notice of the introduction of this bill and I do not think it can be introduced—

Mr. Speaker: Without the unanimous consent of the House!

Mr. Singer: That is right!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview is quite right. If the Clerk will check and see if notice has been given of this.

Clerk of the House: I have no notice.

Mr. Speaker: No notice. This bill may only be introduced upon the unanimous consent of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that this unanimous consent be given?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Yes!

Mr. Singer: No!

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That will "larn" you!

Mr. Brown: It sure will.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We will remember this co-operative experience.

Mr. Singer: Yes we will. We have been getting a lot of it this year.

Mr. Speaker: We have had similar events from both sides of the House and both of the Opposition parties; and I would hope that the members would follow the rules and save these moments of embarrassment for some members.

Before the orders of the day, the hon. Minister of Trade and Development has a statement to make with respect to a question yesterday.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, in answering the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) yesterday on question 947, a typographical error was made and the statement in answer to (1) should read: "Metropolitan Toronto Bylaws 2990 and 1551, as a matter of strict law, do not apply to the Crown and its agents."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food has a statement.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in announcing to this Legislature that Mr. Donald Plaxton, a well known St. Catharines district fruit grower, has been appointed to the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board and will assume his new duties as a member of that board on March 24, 1969.

Mr. Plaxton comes to the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board with a wide range of experience in the production and marketing of farm products, particularly fruit and vegetables. He has been a member of the Ontario Tender Fruit Growers Marketing Board since 1963, and in 1968 was named chairman of that board. He is a past president of the Niagara Peninsula Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association, and at the present time is also serving as member of the growers' committee of the Ontario Fresh Fruit Growers' Marketing Board.

Mr. Plaxton is a valued member of this community and he continues to operate a very business-like fruit farm operation in partnership with his son Kenneth. He will bring valuable experience in the fruit and vegetable industry to the board and he will, I am sure, complement the great wealth of experience provided by the other two producer members, Mr. Ed Hutton, of Guelph, and Mr. Ray Lougheed, of Barrie.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would explain on this announcement, if, as, or when there is a general farm organization in Ontario, will this negate the government appointments like this?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Speaker, it certainly will not, because these are members of the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board.

Mr. Sargent: Appointed by whom?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The Ontario Farm Product Marketing Board is appointed by the government; it is the government board that works with the locally elected commodity boards throughout the province.

Mr. Sargent: This is the government's appointment?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh yes, this is our appointment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has a statement.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to make a statement regarding the town of Trenton.

I have today directed a provincial municipal audit, under section 17 of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, into certain of the affairs of the town of Trenton. Specifically the audit will enquire into the alleged bonusing of industry in the years 1967-68, which was raised in this House by the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman).

This audit is to be conducted by Mr. John A. G. MacDonald, solicitor, and Mr. John L. Gartley, senior accounting advisor, both of The Department of Municipal Affairs. This audit will commence immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services from the other day.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, whereas the Manitoulin Island area is one of the areas of heavy concentration of Indian people in Ontario, when is the Minister going to appoint a community development officer to serve this area?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, it is our policy, in accordance with the terms of the Indian development agreement with the federal government, that our community development officers serve only those reserves which formally requested service through their chief and council. The one reserve in the Manitoulin area which has made this request—the West Bay reserve—is being served by our community development officer who works out of Sault Ste. Marie.

I am informed that all reserves in the area are aware that this service is available upon request. I might add that six of the reserves in that area have their own welfare administrators under The General Welfare Assistance Act. All these administrators have taken advantage of our Indian band welfare administration courses offered by our training and staff development branches.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, do I understand then that the reserve on Manitoulin Island has not requested such an officer directly from the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are, as I have indicated, a number of reserves and one reserve has made the request. It is being serviced.

The others are aware of the availability of this service but have not as yet requested it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Brown: A question of the Minister of Health.

Did the department have a study prepared concerning the per diem rate for nursing home care?

What were the outstanding features of the report that persuaded the Minister that $9.50 per day was an adequate rate for nursing home care?

Is the Minister aware that a copy of this report has been refused a member of the House?

Will the Minister table this study for the benefit of the member of the House?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the hon. member's question is yes.

The second part: On the basis of an analysis of nursing home costs it was ascertained that a rate of $9.50 per diem was adequate to meet current expenditures, depreciation and provide for an appropriate return on investment. In addition, it took into account additional expenditures related to the increase in the minimum wage.

I think there is a certain degree of misunderstanding in respect of our setting a rate for nursing home care, Mr. Speaker. We do not presume to dictate to the nursing home industry what they shall charge, we simply state that $9.50 per diem, in our judgment, is the rate that will be paid by any department of government which subsidizes, either in full or in part, the maintenance of patients in nursing homes.

The answer to the third part of the question, Mr. Speaker: I am aware that a member was refused the report and I do not intend to table the report. This was simply another departmental study asked for to assist us in carrying out the functions of our departmental responsibilities.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Why the secrecy?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No secrecy about it at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would like to ask a supplementary question? The Minister will hear it?

Mr. Brown: Could the Minister share with the members of the House at this time the salient aspects of this study that led to a conclusion that $9.50 was adequate? I would like to hear a breakdown, in other words.

What are the cost components that led to $9.50 a day being a rational figure?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I just included that in the answer to the second part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a series of questions.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): To the Minister of Health:

Has the investigation by the Sudbury and district health unit been completed regarding the spoiled food being packed by Crawley and McCracken into the lunches of Falconbridge employees?

If so, will the Minister table the findings, or supply me with a copy of same?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this study is completed but I would point out to the hon. member there is no requirement that the district health unit submit a report to The Department of Health.

The district health unit is an independently operated body. It is responsible for its own actions as long as they are carried out in keeping with the administration of The Public Health Act.

However, I have asked the medical officer of health if he will let me have a copy, which I shall make available to the hon. member.

Mr. Martel: A question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food:

Was a soil study done by Professor Hoffman for The Department of Agriculture and Food? If so, is it true that soil maps have been in the printing stage for two years? And, why?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the soil survey of the Sudbury district was undertaken late in 1966 as a part of the continuing programme of the federal ARDA commitment to develop a Canada land inventory or, in other words, a map of all land in Canada from the standpoint of agricultural capability.

In the case of the Sudbury district, the work of compiling this report was assigned to Professor D. Hoffman, the associate professor of soil sciences at the Ontario Agricultural College of the University of Guelph. The survey has necessitated a very great deal of work in a multitude of soil samples which has to be taken from the various parts of the district and when these are completed and placed on the map, the map is then sent to federal ARDA at Ottawa. We hope that by mid-summer of this year, sufficient soil samples will have been taken and identified so that the various areas can be described and then sent to the federal ARDA branch to check it all out.

If everything is in accordance, then it is sent for printing. We would hope that by a year from this coming summer we will have that report in final detail, printed as a colour map, so that by looking at it, the various types of soil are defined by the colours that are used to describe them—the same as all other maps where soil surveys have been taken.

But I would point out to the hon. member that one of the reasons why this has taken what might appear to be a longer time than necessary is because there had not been this very detailed survey of soil samples and testing done in the Sudbury area before.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park. I would point out that one of the questions submitted in the name of the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside is actually that of the hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services, in four parts: Was there a sit-down strike at Burwash on February 4?

How many persons were involved?

What was the reason?

What disciplinary action was taken?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I have not had sufficient notice of this question to get the information from the institution. Therefore, I shall take it as notice.

Mr. Shulman: Do they not tell the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, we have all sorts of these things. We have a lot of unwilling guests.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside does have a question of his own.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question of the Minister of Health: How many hospitals in Ontario have artificial kidney units?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Fourteen.

Mr. Burr: How many home artificial kidney units are in use in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: To the best of my knowledge, one.

Mr. Burr: Only one?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Burr: Can the Minister assure the House now that all persons involved in the operation of these units have been altered to the dangers of the use of fluoridated water in the kidney unit?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I answered this question for the hon. member a few days ago.

Mr. Burr: But not satisfactorily.

An hon. member: What else is new?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has questions?

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A question of the Minister of Social and Family Services: Since the proclamation of The Day Nurseries Act, August 10, 1967, how many licences for day nursery facilities have been issued and how does this compare with expansion prior to the proclamation of the new Act?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, licences for day nurseries are in effect for a calendar year and the following figures show the number of day nurseries in operation over a five-year period as at December 31 of each year: 1964-348; 1965-356; 1966-391; 1967-441; 1968-484.

The effects of the recent amendments can perhaps be more clearly seen in the following figures, which show the number of day nurseries receiving public funds for the same five-year period as of December 31 of each year: 1964-33; 1965-42; 1966-46; 1967-45; 1968-100.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A further question of the Minister for Social and Family Services.

Would the Minister tell the House whether one gift of $60 to a family of four on family benefits during the Christmas period constitutes a casual gift of small nature under section 10, (2t) of the regulations under The Family Benefits Act?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members of this House are aware, in the light of an earlier question that I answered, each case is considered on an individual basis. It is, therefore, not possible for me to provide an answer with respect to a specific gift without knowledge of the donor, the relationship of the donor to the recipient, and the circumstances of the recipient at the time of the gift.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Would he give me some light as to why whichever particular donor it was who gave the money would make any difference?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I think it would be a very relevant factor, in relation to establishing whether a gift is a gift in the term as it is understood both by the man on the street and by the interpretation of the technical term of a gift.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a further supplementary question? I would like to ask if the Minister would give me an example of what would not be a legitimate donor of this kind?

Mr. MacDonald: That was a fair enough supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: For example, if somebody were to hand over some money in accordance with some general provision extended to a great number of people in accordance with some legislative provision.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept another supplementary question?

Mr. MacDonald: That is one we should keep on the record.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister, does he mean like the tax rebate?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It would be a matter of interpretation whether a legislative refund in terms of a tax rebate were a tax rebate or a gift. My understanding is that the Minister of Municipal Affairs was giving tax rebates and not gifts.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is damned casual, anyway!

Mrs. M. Renwick: This will be my last supplementary, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would accept it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This has now become a debate, I may suggest—

Mr. MacDonald: I now know the difference between a Scrooge and a nit-picking Scrooge.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Look behind!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has declined to accept further supplementary questions.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development has the answer to a question from the other day.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) asked a question with reference to lumber prices, the increase on construction contracts for Ontario Housing Corporation and our discussions with the lumber dealers this week to ascertain what had been the reason for a 30 per cent increase. We are told, of course, that in British Columbia, logging conditions had been down, which had reduced the amount of lumber available. I would also think, without checking into it, that an added factor such as wage increases and transportation costs would also have an effect on the increase in lumber prices in this part of the country.

Insofar as the Ontario Housing Corporation is concerned on question two, we have not entered into any new contracts recently, due to the fact that a considerable number of developments have been awaiting federal approval for several months. As most of us know and as the hon. member will appreciate, prices of most building materials are increasing, therefore the delay in receiving federal approval will not only have the effect of retarding OHC's efforts to meet the housing needs of this province, but will mean a substantial increase in capital costs. I think we have spelled this out for the Minister in Ottawa as carefully and as clearly as we can and I hope that this coming week some action will be taken to let us get along with the programme.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a matter of urgent importance to the people of my riding. I received a telegram from the mayor and council at Timmins and from the Timmins-Porcupine Development Commission and I would like to direct it to the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch). It concerns the processing facilities of the Texas Gulf Sulphur Company with respect to the Kidd Creek Mine Development. The telegram reads:

THE PEOPLE OF THE PORCUPINE REQUIRE YOUR IMMEDIATE ACTION IN THEIR BATTLE FOR SURVIVAL. WITHIN A SHORT TIME TEXAS GULF SULPHUR—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would realize that this is not the place for such a statement. It is a matter of urgency to his people, true, but this is a matter I think he could take up directly with the Minister and get results. I would so advise him and I would rule him out of order.

Mr. Ferrier: It is a matter of such importance to our area, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I quite agree, but it is not a matter of public importance to the province as a whole.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is of great importance to the people of this province.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, surely the whole question of the location of the processing facilities of Texas Gulf mines is a matter of importance, not just to the area of Cochrane South, but for the whole of the province of Ontario. The member for Cochrane South received this telegram just before coming into the House. He had no opportunity to consult with you about it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is not in his place, the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) is not in his place, and the member for Cochrane South felt that he had to raise that question at this point in the House proceedings because of its urgency and because of its public importance to the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: I realize the problem that the hon. member has, but as I was about to point out to him when he had the opportunity of making further remarks, matters of urgent public importance are raised by certain procedure in the rules of this House which we have tried to follow. The hon. member, of course, did not follow that procedure and the hon. member for Riverdale has indicated why, because the message only came in.

Under the circumstances, of course, then I would suggest that the hon. member might very well wish to arrange to meet with the appropriate Ministers, or at least with the House leader, and deal with the matter. But so far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, the hon. member is out of order and that would complete this matter unless there is something else to be said that would be in order.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 71st order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND CITIZENSHIP

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to submit, for the consideration of the members of the committee, the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship.

In doing so, I come to the conclusion that perhaps we have an opportunity to discuss our very diversified programme and departmental activities as we consider each of the votes which are before us as part of these estimates. Therefore, I do not intend to make any general remarks by way of introduction.

Before I sit down, however, I would like to take this opportunity on the tabling of the estimates of the department, to pay tribute to my Deputy Minister, Mr. Jack Yoerger, and through Mr. Yoerger, to all the members of the departmental staff, the supervisors and staff members who all work together as a great team to make my job such an enjoyable one as the Minister of this particular department.

I am very proud to head this department of government because of the people I work with in the department and particularly, for the programme of contact with the people of the province in the various activities of the department. So, perhaps as we go through these estimates we will have an opportunity through the exchange to discuss the details of our department.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has sort of taken me by surprise. I expected a statement from him but it is a pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to rise again to lead off the estimates of the Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Welch) on behalf of my party.

When one studies the activities of this department one finds that it is made up of mainly the companies branch and other minor administrative functions given to it by statute. Also, the Minister has the job of administering The Department of Citizenship. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Provincial Secretary is concentrating most of his resources on the teaching of English as a second language. This is a very laudable thing. It is absolutely vital that immigrants receive instruction in the English language, along with their children. I attended a conference some weeks ago for teachers of English as a second language and some of the projects I saw were excellent.

However, I feel the Minister should now turn his thoughts, in a much more definite fashion than hitherto, to the problem of bridging the cultural gap between the immigrant generations. I am myself a member of the first Canadian born generation of my line, and so I know about this cultural clash at first hand.

The mores of Canada are still very different from those of the countries from which immigrants come. Even in Europe, traditions persist which have no counterpart here. We are inclined to think that, because we can now switch the satellite into our TV networks, and see the Pope on his balcony, DeGaulle receiving Jean-Guy Cardinal or Tokyo students rioting, that somehow we have achieved the global village. Well, we have not, not yet, except perhaps in the international fraternity of the young, as so well caught by Moses Znamer on Sunday, March 16, in his documentary on Yugoslavia. There we saw how even immigration from the countryside to the spanking new city of Belgrade had created exactly the gap I am talking about—a gap of light years in attitudes and experiences. If this can happen after a journey of only one hundred miles, the one-way trip across the ocean can be traumatic indeed for the older generation, even today.

Nowadays, we are getting a much greater variety of immigrants. The people of Spain and Portugal, who never came before, are arriving in Ontario in ever rising numbers. From the Far East we see a rise in numbers too, and perhaps the participation of Ontario in Expo 70 will increase this flow even more.

Is this a self-correcting state, I wonder? In the long run, this could be so. Certainly, there is no second-generation problem to speak of. But so long as the immigrant flow continues—and I am not suggesting that it should be cut off—then there will always be a first generation problem of some consequence, I feel, unless and until we all turn into carbon copies of each other on a global scale, which is the last thing we want.

At this juncture, Mr. Chairman, I, as a first generation Canadian of Italian background, would like to say something about this battle—and I do call it a battle—taking place between the two founding nations of this country and I am referring to the English and the French battle in connection with biculturalism and bilingualism.

We Canadians of a background other than French and English take exception to the fact that this battle between these two great people might destroy our country. This is uppermost in the mind of all Canadians who are not of these great groups.

This is a great country and this is a great province but for God's sake let us not destroy it over such picayune problems. You know, you cannot impose culture, you simply cannot impose it. You cannot impose language. The problem is, and I repeat it, do not let this little fight between two-thirds of our nation destroy this nation.

We are born and exist in the greatest nation in this world and I take extreme exception to the fact that this seems to be happening right now. You know in Canada nobody is forced to speak any language today. In Canada it does not matter whether you speak Italian or whether you speak Polish, or whether you speak Ukrainian, you can go into any court of law and receive justice and I know this from personal experience. Nobody has told me in this great country that I cannot speak Italian, no one, and I speak it fluently; my father also spoke it. Nobody told my father that he had to accept this culture or that culture. My father came from a culture, one of the greatest cultures history has ever known, he was proud of it, but nobody could have told my father that you have to speak French or you have to speak English.

We do not care what language we speak in this country. We only care that we come from Canada. We are proud to be born here and my father once told me, "Every time you wake up in the morning thank God that you were born in Canada." I wanted to make this point, Mr. Chairman, because I am getting sick and tired of watching these two great races fight each other, the result of which may be to the detriment of our country, to the detriment of our province.

In considering, Mr. Chairman, our great nation, we must consider all the people that make up this great nation. In my riding I have 57 different racial groups. I have Italians, Poles, Ukrainians, Japanese, Chinese and Filipinos. I think my riding is a perfect example of people working together, not so much caring where you come from, except that you are here and working to make this nation the great nation that it is and the great nation that it should be. We are lucky in this country that we do not have the concept of the melting pot, and that this concept has never taken hold here. Instead we have the concept of the mosaic.

Have you ever seen a mosaic? Each little part makes up the whole; each contributes to the whole with its colour and its piece fit in to make a beautiful, beautiful picture for a beautiful piece of wall. This is the whole concept I want to bring to your attention today, Mr. Chairman, that it is this that will make Canada great, not the fact that we speak one language or another language, but the fact that all these people are working together to create a great and viable nation. There is no other nation in this world, there is no other province in this world, that has the opportunity we have. No nation. They look at us and they say, "There is a nation that is great but some day will be greater."

The concept is that the people must retain the best elements of their traditions and cultures, even as they try to keep their homeland language alive and to pass it on. There is a difficulty. The problem lies within the first generation—and when I refer to the first generation I refer to the generation that is born here—springs from a family that has a culture deep in the roots of some other country and therein lies that gap that causes problems in our country. Not every Canadian-born child of immigrant parents is equally keen to learn the language of his parents. He has to be convinced, in the face of all the modern distractions of the new world, that the older values, too, have merit. This is not easy. It calls for educational assistance in itself, and it is a very subtle thing to put over to the young.

This is not something that can simply be met by a lavish public relations effort. It is a very selective approach that is needed, and perhaps the stress must vary from group to group. It certainly involves the presence of the Minister himself at many more festivals and functions than he has hitherto seen fit to attend. It is certainly no more than the truth to observe that the Opposition is far more diligent in this regard than is the government. If functions are to continue to have real meaning in a transplanted milieu, then they must be supported, not so much by money as by the very real and continuing presence of the provincial government, as personified by the physical presence of the Minister and his colleagues at occasions of remembrance and festivity.

The absence of the Minister from such functions may be interpreted as the stamp of approval on a policy of assimilation. The melting-pot philosophy can be the product of apathy, just as much as the conscious policy of our neighbours to the south. There are these two ways of achieving assimilation, and I would suggest that, while the Minister is taking no active steps to kill these cultures, he is indeed permitting them to wither on the vine. Get out, I say, and attend more functions.

Further along this line of thought, the Minister must actively encourage full participation in Canadian life by immigrants, and this fulfillment demands, in the culmination of a five-year acclimatization, the gaining of citizenship. I do not think that the Minister is doing enough to bring non-English speaking immigrants along this road. His presence should be felt in subtle fashion all the way. His presence should be there all the time. Too often, after the first flush of welcome, there follows a period of isolation and loneliness, a sense of the government not caring. An immigrant comes here, he is welcome, then he is thrown out into the world and nothing really happens. This must be changed. We need a climate of interest throughout, right up to the proud day when the immigrant claims his citizenship certificate and takes his place on an equal basis with everyone else in this lively nation.

It seems to me that too much energy has been diverted to promotional ends that are not people-centred. The Minister is asked to promote this and that, to be the shill for each and every enterprise that the government dreams up, and, in this preoccupation with the puff-piece, he tends to lose sight of the real purpose for the existence of his office, which, surely, if it is anything at all, is a people-centred institution. I want to follow up the success of last year's one-day conference on the teaching of English as a second language with a very relevant observation, and that is: What steps is the Minister taking to use the airwaves, and the facilities of the educational television branch at Bayview Avenue, for language-training purposes? It is clear that the direct budget under this heading is very small, and the ETV branch itself is pre-occupied with the French language, the public accounts committee was told, to the point where 20 per cent of its production effort is going in that direction, to meet the needs of only 10 per cent of the school population.

However, the ETV branch is doing very little in concrete terms for the other great segment of our population—the people of the mosaic of cultures other than English and French—and it is quite clear that, with the budget shown in the estimates now before us, if all of it were devoted to educational television, it would not pay for 30 half-hour programmes, let alone the network time to air them on the CBC and its affiliates. I think that the Minister has to get together with the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), and point out that vote 1703 contains only $649,000 in total for language training, whereas vote 502 on page 48 has over $7.5 million earmarked for ETV, of which the immigrants are getting nothing specific as yet by way of programming of English as a second language. I am told that Mr. Don Crowdis of the ETV branch has been talking with Mr. Carson and Mr. Columbo of the Minister's office about this and that a sum has tentatively been set aside for this purpose, but that nothing has been finalized as I speak. I hope you will tell them to get on with it.

Since it looks as though there will be many hurdles to jump before the federal Bill C-179—An Act to Establish the Canadian Educational Broadcasting Agency—gets through Parliament and is transformed into electronic real-estate, I should like the Provincial Secretary to look, in co-operation with ETV and with the Metropolitan Educational Television Association, at the possibility of using the existing and licensed cable television networks in urban areas to disseminate the teaching aids already in existence, together with what Messrs. Crowdis, Carson and Columbo may come up with, to all the immigrant homes that are now hooked up to cable television.

This is not going to be a Cadillac service, I know, but it will be a beginning. Only a few days ago, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission gave the green light to the cable television operators, and the Secretary of State's office is now in the process of working out guidelines for the original programming that will emanate from the studios of the cable companies. These people are hungry for inexpensive and prestigious programming, and now is the ideal opportunity for the Provincial Secretary to move right in and pre-empt one of the two available channels and show his audio-visual material which was so much in evidence at that seminar. We could use those films, slides and audiotapes over and over and over, perhaps as often as a dozen times a day. I can assure you that immigrants will watch it, if the material is already proven through classroom use, as is apparently the case.

I have heard a comment over here that it was a showcase. It may have been a showcase. It may have been a public relations gimmick but what I saw there was good and excellent. The only complaint I have is that they are not using it. They should use it. They should get it out on to TV. I went to a seminar and they were talking about producing these concepts on TV and how they would meld them in with books to be sent out to the immigrants. You know, we can talk until we are blue in the face. Unless we put it into action we may as well throw away these seminars.

Now, when we consider the immigrant, from whatever country he has come, he has to earn a living. The man usually comes by himself and brings over his wife and his family later. The immigrant must work in order to exist here. He must work hard, and they do work hard; they are good hard-working people, the backbone of our nation. But they have difficulty attending some of these schools that we have set up. I think the drop-out rate in some cases is enormous. If he knew that he could sit down at 9.30 at night and look at a programme, combine it with a book and learn the English language, I am convinced that he would do it. This would help him to integrate into the Canadian mosaic.

I have a specific proposal on this aspect, and that is to use channel 6 on the cable TV which carries CHF1-FM sound only, for immigrant English language use in the mornings; and channel 9 which carries CKEY-AM sound only, for immigrant language use in the afternoons and evenings—of course CBLT comes in on channel 5 on cable and CFTO comes in on channel 8.

The cable operators, sir, whose consciences have been somewhat pricked by the knowledge that their licences are contingent upon public service, will breathe more easily, and at the same time the immigrant community will be served. It ought to be possible to negotiate a fairly sharp deal on this, that would involve little or no further expenditure to the public purse. I do not see this growing into another $7.5 million empire, as ETV has become in three short years, but I do see the great chance of a businesslike venture here, and a deal in the public interest with a group of operators who are pretty vulnerable at the moment. I suggest you seek the seconding of Mr. Crowdis from ETV for the purpose of getting this thing under way.

Of course, the Bell Telephone Company will have to be brought into this. They have a contract with the cable operators which forbids them to broadcast educational programming. Rogers Cable TV is one company that is going right ahead and piping WNED-TV Buffalo's educational channel 17 in anyway, translating it to channel 10 on the regular dial. Channel 17 is not on the air all day, and, if the cable companies feel that their subscribers will scream if deprived of Jim Fleming's news or CKEY's music, then it ought to be possible to work something out on cable channel 10. And the Bell Telephone Company is just going to have to be shown that this restriction forbidding cable companies to carry educational programming is beyond their right as a common carrier. I do not think this will need to be done at this level and we should make that clear to them.

They should not dictate what goes over the air on their lines; they have a duty to the public and they should be able to be required to follow that duty. Who are they to forbid educational programming on the TV that goes over their lines? I think this is a disgraceful thing and something should be done about it right away.

So now is the time for the Provincial Secretary to act, and take advantage of this situation which will not last for many more weeks before something else moves in to fill the vacuum as soon as the federal guidelines are laid down. I need not, of course, further maintain the position that education—in which I include second-language instruction by television—is a provincial responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, in line with our general policy of keeping our opening remarks as short as is possible, consistent with the exposition of our viewpoint on matters of concern, I intend to terminate this lead-off speech, and to treat certain more detailed matters as they come up vote by vote. By way of warning, however, I should advise the Provincial Secretary that we shall expect a fairly full accounting for the deterioration of the postal service following the move of the main office to another building in this complex. I am told that the Opposition office is expected to have all its daily mail in by four, even though the secretarial staff works until five, and, of course, the House goes on until six, not allowing for evening sittings. It does seem completely absurd that we should be expected to tailor our work day around these most unrealistic hours. We shall want, not just a few words by way of explanation, but a fairly full answer. Since this may need some preparation, I thought it might be courteous to alert the Minister now, so that he may put his staff to work on it in the interim. Thank you.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, may I congratulate you on your elevation today?

I should like, as lead-off speaker in the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship for the first time, to compliment the Minister on his ability or his good fortune in having been able to assemble such a competent staff.

I should like also to express my appreciation for the many courtesies that have been extended to me by members of the staff and by the Minister (Mr. Welch) himself. And I should like especially to congratulate the Minister and his staff for the arrangements that they made for the conference held on Saturday, February 22, at the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute for the teachers of English as a second language. At this conference, there were at least 17 different panel discussions on various aspects of teaching English as a second language, or TESL, as it is known for short, ranging from the motivating of adult learners to the effective use of field trips. The potential role of television in teaching English as a second language was discussed at considerable length in one of these panels. As the Minister was not present at this particular discussion, his impression must necessarily be second hand. And I should like to pass on to him my impression of the discussion and that was this: There was very little enthusiasm for spending money on TV in the hope of teaching English effectively as a second language.

One of the objections was the passivity of the listening learner, an objection which I mentioned on December 17 which I was discussing the value of ETV, educational television, in Ontario's whole school system. There are many forms of instruction where movies, film strips and video tapes are of great use, but in teaching a new language, television has a bottom-rung rating.

A lesson in language is not like a lesson in science or mathematics; it cannot be compared with a lesson in chemistry or algebra or botany or zoology. In all these there is a precise answer to be worked out, there is a fact or a series of facts to be discovered.

But language is a method of exchanging ideas. Questions and answers, statements and comments, commands and either an acquiescence or refusal. These constitute the great framework on which all language is built. Without this immediate interplay, the immediate response between the teacher and the learner, without this dialogue, language is of very little use and it serves little purpose.

In an arithmetic lesson, five times five always has the same answer, 25. Every time you ask it, that is always the right answer; it is always the standard answer. Some people might like to teach arithmetic by television, certainly I would not. In a language lesson there is no standard answer, no correct answer, for the question, "What do you think about so-and-so?"; "What do you think about such-and-such?" And there is no correct or standard answer for "Where are you going?"; "What are you doing?".

When there is no teacher present, language is very difficult to learn. Educational television in schools has the merit at least of having a teacher who may possibly be able to exploit and develop the material presented. But after a television lesson in English as a second language, there would be nothing; there would be no follow-up; there would be silence under normal or average circumstances.

In short, Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the Minister and his staff on the methods they are using at present in teaching English as a second language, but I wish to suggest that any improvements they may be able to make are not likely to be found in the area of television.

Knowing how tight a budget the Minister is operating on this year, my personal advice—and I stress this is my personal advice—is this: Any additional resources of time or talent or money that he is able to find should be directed to the expansion of the present courses, many of which are carried out by volunteer community workers, and along the present lines.

One of the most interesting parts of the programme at this conference on February 22, Mr. Chairman, was a short film which showed a typical instruction class in which a teacher introduced a new grammatical construction, based on the expression, "I wish I were".

Now, in practising or drilling this construction, the teacher used such examples as "I wish I had a good job" and in developing the drill practice the teacher used the example, "I wish I had a new car." "I wish I were rich." "I wish I had her telephone number". Now, these last examples—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): And you wish you were a Liberal.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): The member has to be kidding.

Mr. Sargent: The only place to go is up.

Mr. Burr: These last examples drew considerable criticism in later panel discussions, partly on the ground that almost every one of these new Canadians in the circle, in the class, had been offended or made to feel uncomfortable in one way or another, and partly on the ground that they were being brainwashed with the attitudes of what is loosely known as the American way of life or what could be called the "acquisitive society" or the "materialistic society."

These interesting reactions on the part of the teachers of English as a second language point up one problem—and I should like the Minister to make some comments on this when he is replying. The problem is, to what extent does teaching English as a second language involve the teaching of Canadian culture or North American culture? I should like the Minister to give that some thought when he replies.

There are also a few comments I should like to make on the government's hospitality fund, which it is the Provincial Secretary's misfortune to have to administer. I say his misfortune because I am sure—he is smiling so my colleague says it gives him great pleasure—I was being charitable.

I say his misfortune because I am sure that if the choice were his he would establish better priorities. For example, this government's hospitality fund paid out over $11,000 for the president of Italy and when the conference for the teachers of English as a second language was held, back in February, each teacher who came paid a registration fee of $5. Many of these teachers travelled long distances at considerable expense to attend this conference and when they arrived, they paid a $5 registration fee which covered a luncheon and a coffee break.

Yet the visit of the President of Italy cost the Ontario taxpayers $11,378. Presumably, most of this was spent on a banquet or banquets to which were invited hundreds of people who could well have afforded to pay $5 for the honour of dining with the president of a foreign country. We would not charge $5 to the President of Italy, but would charge $5 to MPPs who were invited, or to Cabinet Ministers who might be able to round up $5 if they scrounged a bit. Mr. Chairman, I mention the President of Italy merely because of the extravagant cost, over $11,000. The visit of the President of Austria cost us $8,766.50.

An hon. member: How about Princess Alexandra?

Mr. Burr: Oh, I am coming to her. I am not suggesting that the conference for teachers of English as a second language should have had no registration fee. I am merely pointing out the incongruity of the situation. One group of dedicated people comes to Toronto on a serious mission and pays for the privilege $5 each in addition to all their travelling expenses. In the other situation a visiting head of state arrives and a large group of affluent citizens, including perhaps the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman)—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Am I regarded as affluent?

Mr. Burr: I believe you are.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would not mind a comparison with some of the hon. members opposite.

Mr. Burr: This group is given hospitality at the expense of the taxpayers of Ontario, who include the first group. Why can government hospitality not be kept within reasonable grounds? Only $358 was spent on King Constantine of Greece, only $320 was spent on the Vice-President of Taiwan. Only $610 was spent on Queen Juliana of the Netherlands. These are reasonable amounts. Why did the hospitality for Princess Alexandra's visit cost us $29,000?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Oh, these white Anglo-Saxon Protestants over there—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Your expenditures are in terms of the importance of these dignitaries according to your likes, are they? Look at the hierarchy of power here; really something!

Mr. Burr: This raises another rather delicate point, Mr. Chairman. When President De Gaulle visited Quebec a couple of years ago there was a great controversy about a Canadian province having diplomatic relations with an outside country. If our Provincial Secretary or the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) had put his foot down and told Ottawa that Ontario did not wish to be involved with the heads of state of foreign countries, he could have saved this government of Ontario thousands of dollars. In fact over $75,000 was spent in extending hospitality to visiting heads of state as recorded on page Q7 of the 1968 Public Accounts.

Mr. Sargent: This all goes to Ports of Call.

Mr. Burr: Why do you not own that, Eddie?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, he only owns dry hotels.

Mr. Burr: The budget for the government hospitality fund for 1968, as approved by this Legislature, was $40,000. Yet the Minister spent almost twice this amount on visiting heads of state alone. Surely the entertainment of visiting heads of foreign states is a federal responsibility and any provincial participation should be on an appropriately modest level.

Back in December the Premier reported to the Legislature that Ontario had sent $20,000 worth on food to help the starving millions in Biafra. We now find in the public accounts that far more than that—$29,000—actually was spent on hospitality involving one visiting dignitary. Governments must have priorities but they should be justifiable priorities. When the people of Ontario read that over $207,000 was spent from the Ontario government hospitality fund I hope they will read too that this Legislature authorized only $40,000 and that the rest came from the Treasury Board over which we, in the Opposition at least, have no control.

On February 23, 1967, during the estimates of the Provincial Secretary, the Minister enunciated some of the principles followed in distributing the government hospitality fund and the clearest guidelines seem to be these, four in number: First, the fact that the guests were coming from outside the province; second, the fact that the organization had not benefited in the previous year; third, the reasonableness or extent of the request; fourth, budget limitations.

I suggest that those are good guidelines, but I find that in the 1967-68 there were eight organizations who were given hospitality despite the fact they had received hospitality in the previous year, 1966-67. Three of these were so relatively inexpensive as to escape criticism—namely, Colombo Plan seminars, the Silver Cross Women of Canada convention, and the International Rescue and First Aid Association. Two others—the Ontario Public Service Quarter Century Club, Toronto Branch, and student exchange luncheons—perhaps could qualify on the basis of need, although that is not one of the Minister's guidelines.

The reason for the provincial lawn bowling tournament's success in passing the Minister's qualifying test eludes me at the moment, but perhaps this was an oversight, as perhaps were the two other repeaters. The Central Canada Broadcasters Association was accorded hospitality in both years, perhaps because a few of its members came from outside the province and thus helped the organization to qualify for the hospitality fund under what might be called the Minister's extra-provincial proviso or the extra-territorial eligibility test.

The only organization, however, which anyone knowing the Minister's guidelines would be positive could not qualify in 1967-68, but did, was the Toronto Men's Press Club By-line Ball. It failed the Minister's first requirement because this organization did not come visiting from outside the province; in fact it did not even have province-wide membership and it did not come visiting even from outside Toronto. It failed the second test because it had been admitted in the previous year. The extent of the request turned out to be over $4,100 in 1966-67 and $4,600 in 1967-68. When compared to the $50 hospitality extended to the International Rescue and First Aid convention in 1966-67, which dropped to $39 in 1967-68, and such items as $150 for a whole high school band being entertained, the Toronto Men's Press Club request may seem somewhat unreasonable.

Mr. Lawlor: A very questionable item; some sort of a bribery involved.

Mr. Burr: Especially for two years in a row. Thus it failed to pass the Minister's number three test.

Mr. Lawlor: I notice to the extent that he uses the press—all kinds of ethnic press and what-not—subsidization, backdoor; there are four or five cases here—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Four or five cases of what?

Mr. Burr: The Minister's fourth and final test, that of budget limitations, approved by the members of this Legislature, should have stopped this request because it exceeds ten per cent of the total year's budget for the government's hospitality estimate. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, this illustrates merely the power of the Toronto press. Perhaps it shows that the Minister forgot his guidelines. Perhaps it shows that the Minister did not know what was going on in his department—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): More likely!

Mr. Burr: —and, perhaps, and I think this may be nearer the truth, perhaps some greater power interceded.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Is there a greater power?

Mr. Burr: In the Cabinet, yes. And perhaps it is another illustration of what the government—

Mr. Stokes: Questionable right now!

Mr. Burr: —considers top priority.

Mr. Stokes: Divine intervention!

Mr. Burr: Perhaps it will not happen again this year—perhaps.

My other question for the Minister, on which I would like him to comment, is this: In the Minister's estimates for the coming year, can we be assured that the Minister will follow the excellent guidelines he set down two years ago and will he resist pressures—from whatever direction—that would cause him to depart from these guidelines?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I just take a brief opportunity to comment on the remarks made by the hon. members for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte) and Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr). May I, at the outset, quite sincerely say how much I have appreciated their comments and the constructive approach to much of our programme. Referring particularly to the hon. member for Dovercourt, I just wanted to make one or two comments in addition to those.

He talked in terms of the government presence at various functions sponsored by our various ethnic groups and I think this is a legitimate point. I hope that he will agree with me at least that this Minister is not the only Minister who can assure physically the government presence at these functions. Many of our members, in fact many of the members of this Legislature, do, in the exercising of their riding responsibilities, attend many of these functions. My Cabinet colleagues are doing this all the time as well, to mention the Minister of Correctional Services and the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Practically every week end.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not argue this point with the hon. member, sir. I agree with him that we cannot overdo or rather over-emphasize this evidence of goodwill and our legitimate interest. For instance, this morning in our gallery above you, we have some 40 or 50 students from the adult learning centre here in Toronto, made up completely of Czechoslovakian refugees.

I met them this morning as did the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) and they have been taken on a tour to identify them with the operation of government. The Speaker spoke with them this morning as well and we are doing this all the time without, perhaps, the attendant publicity which goes with other types of functions.

I could not agree more, we must never let up on this tangible evidence of our interest in them and our concern for them. I say this as well—that we work very closely with The Department of the Secretary of State in Ottawa. I have some responsibility in this field and have a wonderful relationship with the citizenship people from Ottawa. They have some outstanding men in the service that have worked with our people.

You certainly have to have a great dedication to this work to give the time which both our citizenship people and, I believe, the federal people do in this. They would be the first to agree that there is always room for improvement and if only there were more time and more people available, this welcoming and evidence of good neighbourliness, keeping in mind the strangeness that these people must experience coming to a new country, would grow.

I would hope that in the constructive and helpful tone of the remarks of the member for Dovercourt, we might continue in this work.

I turn just briefly to the comments of the member for Sandwich-Riverside and, on behalf of the staff of the department, I thank him for his kind references to them and to their dedication. Two specific questions were raised in the course of his remarks and we might comment on the others as we go through.

He asked me to comment first, if I remember correctly—and he will help me if I overlook any of his questions, I hope—the relationship of the teaching of English to Canadian culture. I am not, as he would well know, an expert, and I appreciate his assessment of our teaching programme because he is in pedagogy and is a teacher of great reputation from his area—in fact, our new assistant director of citizenship of our department is a former pupil of his from the Windsor high school system.

An hon. member: Oh, you have a socialist?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Of course, in the civil service, we look for the best man regardless of his political background. You know that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And sometimes they can even be NDPers!

Hon. Mr. Welch: However, may I as a lay person, simply indicate that I suppose any introduction to Canadian culture, is good whatever that might be—and I would be very interested in having an exchange sometime on what we mean today by Canadian culture, particularly in view of the very well founded comments of the hon. member when he was making reference to the Americanism that crept into those repetitive questions in the learning situation and in the sample film which we both saw at that time.

All three of us were at the same conference, we could not have seen the same group, naturally, with all the numbers there were, but whatever that Canadian culture might be I suppose it is incidental to the teaching process. Perhaps, I speak now as a lay person, that in using the situations and material for this approach, they would identify these questions with perhaps something which is exclusively Canadian and helpful in the integration process.

So the first concern is teaching English to the students and in the implementation of whatever the method might be, and the auxiliary material, I would assume that by implication this moves in. You will also recall at that same conference, Mr. Chairman, the movie "Here We Go Round", and there will be some comments on that in some parts. But I think there was some evidence of a recognition that in the teaching programme itself, there is more than just English being taught, as incidental as it might be. There was some introduction to those things into which we hope there will be some integration as well.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister explain then why this could not be in The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If the hon. member would permit, Mr. Chairman, when we get to vote 1703, that would be a very legitimate question to raise at that time. I would like to have an exchange on that as it comes up because I think it is a very worthwhile question.

May I just quickly go to the hospitality matter. We shall be into that vote shortly and I would be less than frank if I did not share with you the fact that there are certain difficulties in living within rigid guidelines, notwithstanding their enunciation in the Hansard, to which you make reference.

Most of the concern in the early part of the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside's comment in connection with the hospitality fund had specific reference to Centennial year. Now I make no apology personally, or on behalf of this government, for this government being a good host to heads of state during our Centennial year.

Mr. Sargent: Not that good.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Over $200,000.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is a value judgment with respect to these matters, as the hon. members know, in consultation with the Centennial commissioner. In the general arrangements between Ottawa and the provinces, it is my understanding—I stand to be corrected—that when heads of state were invited to come and join with us in our 100th birthday celebrations, they came to the capital of this country.

I think it included a visit to Expo at Montreal and they could then choose, as I understand it, two other provinces in their official visit and Ontario was a very popular choice.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Naturally.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think we should be guided by this.

Mr. Trotter: With a bun-feed like that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, I hasten to remind the hon. member that his opinion is just as valid as anyone else's as to whether or not these amounts are excessive, but let me point out that there they were, in our Centennial celebrations, and we acted in our capacity as host for the dignitaries.

The other point that I want to make in connection with this is that we attempt to live within our guidelines, we attempt to live within the budgets. We have attempted in these estimates to set out a more realistic approach to our funds, keeping in mind that, as in our personal situations, we sometimes find someone visiting with us somewhat unexpectedly and therefore we have to look after them as they arrive.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Depending on whether it is a girl friend or a mother-in-law, for example?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not know what further explanations I could make; it may be, as we get into the particular votes, we could have an exchange on these items. I conclude as I started by thanking both hon. members for the constructive and helpful way in which they discussed these estimates, by way of introduction.

On vote 1701:

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1701, general expenditure; the hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: While we are on this question of the hospitality fund, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks. I can remember at one time in the estimates that the hospitality fund was $40,000 a year, and I used to complain about it. Now it is up to $90,000. I can well understand that during what we call Centennial year, as a result of Expo, you were going to have higher expenses. I never dreamed they would go over $200,000, which to me seems to be an utterly ridiculous figure. I do not know what kind of guidelines the government has, but they certainly are not narrow and strict enough.

For example, there is one item—and this may relate to what you mention as your guidelines—for dinner for the Governor General costing over $12,000. That was probably as much money as that man earned, sir, when he was a member of this Legislature. In those days the salaries were lower, and it is probably as much as he earned. When we think of guidelines I ask you to remember how I used to belabour the hon. Minister of Family and Social Services, who used to have your position as the Provincial Secretary, for being too loose with the hospitality fund. In 1967, the so-called Centennial year, we turned down a request of the Big Brother movement for $18,000 and yet we can spend $12,000 on one dinner for the Governor General.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trotter: Now, surely, that man does not expect it, and after all, you all know him well, he's one of your fellows, just pat him on the back and shake his hand and save the government $12,000. It is just not necessary to spend the money in this way. I realize that large companies and large firms have their PR departments and they have to have goodwill, but even this government two years ago was spending approximately $6 million—and this includes your estimate—on advertising and in PR work. It is higher than that now. I think it is utterly ridiculous that government, and particularly this government, spends that kind of money. This estimate is symptomatic of the attitude that the government has; it just does not seem to care. It is throwing out money right, left and centre, and I think it is time you quit the high-class bun-feasts. I think Princess Alexandra's dinner cost far more than—

Mr. Sargent: How much did it cost?

Mr. Trotter: Over $29,000. Two dinners in that one year, for the Governor General and Princess Alexandra, amounted to about $49,000, and this is just stupid. If this is the type of guidelines that you are using, heaven knows where this estimate is going to end.

Two years ago, you asked this House for $40,000 and the Treasury Board orders increased it to well over $200,000. Now when I see a Treasury Board order go through for a hospitality fund, I wonder if it could be in the year ahead we are planning. If there are going to be more Treasury Board orders, it is just completely contrary to common sense and in my view it is an outrage on the people of this province the way you are spending money on hospitality.

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I comment on this. I think I should adjourn for purposes of the private members, but I would just make this comment: As you know, the $40,000 figure was put in somewhat as an arbitrary figure in previous years, for which explanation has been given. They kept it at $40,000 until 1968.

Mr. Trotter: Two dinners were over that. Two dinners were over the entire estimate. Crazy!

Hon. Mr. Welch: Last year when we requested the $65,000, we had conducted a study and attempted to put a more realistic figure into the estimates and live within it. This year, we have attempted to do the same thing, keeping in mind the increase in the cost of this type of function.

This might be a good point, Mr. Chairman, to introduce a motion that the committee rise and report, and pick up our estimates at this point when they are next being considered.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises, would the Minister tell us if he proposes, immediately following the completion of his estimates, to deal with the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario and the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, as has been the tradition and custom in the past?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think what we will do, Mr. Chairman, is that we will put both reports on the order paper and debate them as separate orders, the same as we did last year and the year before.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Private member's notice of motion No. 21 by Mr. Trotter:

RESOLUTION: That Ontario should introduce a mandatory system of automobile insurance based on the principle of compensation without fault, that would reduce the case load on our courts and ensure prompt and fair payment for the injured, in line with the recommendations of the select committee on automobile insurance.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), resolution No. 21 standing in my name which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker, in a final report of the select committee on automobile insurance, which was presented to this House in 1963, the unanimous recommendation of that committee as made to this Legislature was that Ontario should introduce a mandatory system of automobile insurance based on the principle of compensation without fault. Some may wonder what they mean by compensation without fault. It is based very similarly on the principle of workmen's compensation. If a workman is injured at work he receives his compensation whether or not he was negligent or at fault.

Despite the fact that the committee recommended a mandatory system of automobile insurance six years ago, today we have only managed to introduce a half-baked voluntary system as of January 1, 1969. As of the first of this year many of the insurance companies, not only in Ontario but literally across Canada, have introduced policies where an individual is covered for medical insurance, for death benefits, medical payments, and things of that sort. The payments are very small, and I will deal with that as I go on, Mr. Speaker, but I did want to interject here that the insurance companies are on a voluntary basis probably feeling that the pressure is on them—have made some halting steps forward. We, by means of our legislation, have helped in making this mincing step forward.

Mr. Speaker, even very conservative elements in our society such as the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada and the All Canada Insurance Federation, have believed that the traditional fault liability system sometimes falls short of providing justice to those involved in, or affected by, automobile accidents.

Mr. Speaker, if these two groups of people think there is something wrong with our fault liability system there must be something very wrong because they—literally the lawyers and insurance companies—are the two groups who stand to benefit most from the present system as it is today. But I feel that even the most conservative elements having to deal with this subject are concerned. They may be concerned in some respects for the public and there is no question that some of them are, because there have been members of the bar, like the present Mr. Justice Edsell Haynes, who is very outstanding in this field, and who has made a surprising number of good recommendations. In fact he has recommended more than the government is willing to accept.

So, Mr. Speaker, when I accuse the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada of being very conservative, I want to say in all fairness that there are some who see the light, and there are some who want change, and I think there are some who want change even among insurance companies because they know that the present system has become so difficult and so unfair to those involved with automobile accidents that government is going to have to move in on them, not in a half baked way but in a complete way. I say simply this: that the old system has been on trial for a long time and is not passing the test and that is the test of servicing the public of the province of Ontario.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the manner in which we deal with auto accident cases belongs to horse-and-buggy days. We should abandon the existing tort system and favour the compulsory no-fault system of automobile insurance issued by private carriers under the control of a government board.

The select committee of 1963 thought so and even in November, 1968, a commission, headed by Mr. Justice R. A. B. Wootton, in British Columbia, said the very same thing. In other words this serious condition has become chronic, and despite the fact that in British Columbia they have an excellent record—as records go—in settling cases, I think over 73 per cent of the accidents in British Columbia are settled within approximately six months, which is an amazing record and better than ours. And even with that record they are concerned because they know that the very serious accidents, the ones where the situation amounts to a catastrophe for the individual, are not being solved. So I say that as up to date of November, 1968, Mr. Speaker, distinguished citizens of this country, particularly in British Columbia, are urging what I am urging on this House this morning.

Those of us, Mr. Speaker, who are lawyers, may feel a twinge of pain when we do away with the trial of judge or judge and jury because the lawyers' pocketbooks will also be hurt. There is no question about that, but, Mr. Speaker, the laws exist for the benefit of society as a whole and not for lawyers and not for insurance companies. The report of Professor Allen Linden, of Osgoode Hall—a report, incidentally, that was financed by this government—said this:

The compensation paid to people who suffered injuries in automobile accidents showed that 37 per cent of those injured received compensation from automobile insurance. Twenty-three per cent received compensation from sources such as the Ontario Hospital Insurance Commission, or PSI or OMSIP—

In other words the insurance companies were off the hook——and 40 per cent of those injured, received nothing.

In other words they had to take care of their own injuries.

So I ask, Mr. Speaker, why should these so-called "other sources" like PSI that paid for 23 per cent of the claims, be responsible for it when the primary responsibility for automobile accidents is with automobile insurance and automobile insurance companies?

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that I as a lawyer probably have ingrained into me the importance of the common law and the liberty that is given to us as individuals. We could not exist as a government today in this province unless we had English common law, but when the system becomes outworn it should be changed, and one of the things wrong with our legal system today is what we call the tort system in regard to automobile accidents. To those who are not familiar with the expression it is this—that if a person is injured in an automobile accident, he sues. It is a tort action, there is the plaintiff and the defendant, and the court decides what the result of the case should be, who is at fault and how much should be awarded. Some of the cases are heard by a judge and many of the distinguished jurists in this province, like former Chief Justice McRuer, have complained often and very fiercely of the fact that such cases should not be before our courts, that our courts are being crammed with cases affecting scraped fenders and broken bumpers.

Because of our court system taking so long, many people just abandon their claim—here in the city of Toronto it takes approximately two years to get a case before the Supreme Court and the larger a city gets it seems to become more complex and more involved. For example, in the city of Chicago, it takes 70 months to get an automobile case before one of their courts and in Philadelphia it takes 51 months. I use these two American examples—I know there are differences in our law and as to the cost—because the thing that I do emphasize is that as a city becomes more urbanized and larger, this does affect the delay before our courts so that we simply need to have a new system. Often the success of a case depends upon the tricks of the legal trade. I can remember how one lawyer, a number of years ago, won a case simply because it involved an elderly lady, a pedestrian who was struck by a car. He knew she had trouble and had medical help with her feet and he kept questioning her on that very fact and was able to emphasize that as she walked she tended to look down toward her feet. Hammering away on this point, he was able to have the case dismissed, simply on the grounds that she was never looking where she was going, she was always looking at the feet that needed care. Well, he was a smart lawyer and he won his case but is it fair to the individual who has suffered injury? Is it fair to society? My answer is, no, and such cases should simply be taken out of our law courts.

The old tricks of the legal trade are no longer good enough and it is time that we changed the system. It costs money. To get $1 in compensation, it costs $1.60 in premiums. It is one of the most inefficient systems we could possibly have. Distinguished men like the late Professor Cecil A. Wright—and again I point out that these men were not socialists, they were not men away out on the fringe of ideas, they were very practical and able men—and the former Chief Justice McRuer, have emphasized time and again that we need a change. Our select committee, with a unanimous report of all the parties of this House, recommended a change, and yet we still really do very, very little.

It is true we now have what is called a voluntary system as of the first of this year, but the voluntary system is not going to affect the tort, you are still going to have tortuous court procedures which I feel simply are not necessary.

The fact that you have a voluntary system means that a person still need not be insured, that under our present motor vehicles accident claims fund, there are going to be many people who are left uncovered.

The insurance companies may say that such an increase or extension of insurance benefits is going to cost more, that they are losing money. Well, if the insurance companies give the bleeding heart routine, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House of this, that when they say they are losing money, they do not include in their statements to you, the ratio of loss over automobile accidents as to the interest they make on premiums paid in advance—they do not include the interest they make on their very extensive investments.

So that even if their actuarial rate seems to show that their profit is being reduced, regarding the actuarial rate insofar as automobile accidents are concerned, I want to remind and emphasize that they do not tell you again about the money they make on premiums paid in advance and on the money they make on the investments they already have.

The insurance companies in my view have stood in the way of progress more than any other group in our society, insofar as bringing changes in automobile insurance, and in a good many other aspects as well, Mr. Speaker, that I will not go into at this time.

But today our superintendent of insurance has very little control over the insurance companies. The insurance companies have what they call a green book with the rates of insurance. I do not know of any occasion when the superintendent of insurance has ever objected to any of the rates. It is amazing that they can never find anything wrong with what the insurance companies say in their green book.

And today if an insurance company just simply does not like the colour of your eyes, they can virtually make it impractical for anybody to drive a car in the province of Ontario. And if anyone is going to be denied the privilege of driving a car in this province, it should be denied by a government board, not by a private group of companies that are the most powerful lobby, not only in this province of Ontario but throughout Canada.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Why does the member keep them in the picture then?

Mr. Trotter: I feel, in conclusion, so that I can give some of the other speakers an opportunity to speak on this matter, that we in this province should introduce a mandatory system of insurance that is government-operated.

They ask me why I keep the insurance companies in the field at all? I can say, at this stage in our economy and in our history, that I can see no practical aspect of wiping out insurance companies at this point and I do not intend to. I think that the private sector in our economy has a very important part to play but I feel that it must be a co-operative effort.

I do not deny that in the history of this country, insurance companies have made a contribution, but the difficulty is they have become far too powerful and they are holding back progress in too many fields and more particularly, in automobile insurance.

It is time that we in this House accepted the recommendations of the select committee of this Legislature made six years ago and amend our law and see it that our laws serve the public and not any particular group.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey South.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind who has the floor; I may as well follow the list and that is what my list says, too. However, on reading the terms of the resolution, I think that one would be inclined to agree with it on the first observation, also in reading the terms of the report of the select committee in 1963.

But I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there are other considerations and I for one, as a layman—certainly this imposing list of lawyers here will have more to say from their technical point of view than I will—but I simply want to say briefly that the application of compensation without fault in the industry for coverage is a very good one.

And I believe it follows that after the introduction, on January 1, 1969, by the government of Ontario in that all licensed drivers now, as I understand it, who make application for insurance cannot be rejected by a company which somehow refutes to some degree the gentleman who introduced the motion, at least that is what he had to say in this regard. This is so.

Now, compensation without fault overcomes the disparity, to some degree, of a person who is the guest driver or guest passenger in a car and it gives him the opportunity of receiving quickly some financial assistance. It seems to me that in the public at large these days, everyone wants some sort of financial assistance immediately following an accident, and this seems to cover that particular area without having all cases subject to tort law, as the member has well spoken in that regard.

I am not—because I am not a lawyer—particularly concerned whether the tort system be eliminated or not—maybe it is a good thing, I will have to take his advice in that regard—but I do believe in the application of compensation without fault as a result of what has been done in regard to the coverage.

I believe it was our own present Minister in the government who personally recommended the rights of the individual and particularly, as I said, the guest passenger. This aspect was well received by both the public and the insurance industry. Naturally, I think it follows that the industry is going to sell more insurance but they have not got the right today to reject anyone who is properly licensed within the terms of government requirements.

Whether compensation without fault at this time should be compulsory or mandatory, would be somewhat premature, I believe, and I hope to be able to prove that. I am inclined to suggest that we should see what the acceptance of the present plan, as projected, is.

For instance, I believe any compulsory or mandatory application at this or any other time would have the effect of increasing, to a substantial degree, the proliferation of irresponsibility on the highways and I think that this has been proven. There is, I think, in this jurisdiction, and in many other jurisdictions, particularly some of the American jurisdictions, evidence and enough jurisprudence available today to indicate that the compulsory aspect is not particularly a good one—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is there any other jurisdiction that has shown this?

Mr. Winkler: There is sufficient evidence in the application of this particular aspect of insurance to prove this. Now I am—

Mr. Singer: Not at all.

Mr. Winkler: Yes, there is.

Mr. Singer: Not at all.

Mr. Winkler: As I understand—

Mr. Singer: The member is talking about an entirely different thing.

Mr. Winkler: I am not. The member can make his speech if he wishes.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Winkler: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the insurance companies are in agreement with this particular coverage, compensation without fault.

Mr. Singer: Certainly they are.

Mr. Winkler: And they are also in agreement with the use of the unsatisfied judgment fund and certainly, if one is used, I think the other should apply. Now why—

Mr. Singer: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Winkler: —now why the gentleman over there introduced the motion—yes, Mr. Speaker, will you deal with that man?

Mr. Singer: Am I bothering the hon. member? I am sorry.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, the insurance companies, as I said, are in agreement with the application of this coverage, and I do not think that follows in direct agreement with what the introduction of the resolution—the introducer had to say. But if, in fact, the situation were compulsory or mandatory then I think, of course, the use of the fund is also a very necessary one.

Mr. Singer: Has anybody suggested doing away with the fund?

Mr. Winkler: No, but in this instance I am saying—Mr. Speaker, that gentleman is just throwing me off balance here and I think we will have to let him make his own speech.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Winkler: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that today in the province of Ontario, anyone who has standard coverage as of January 1, 1969, also has compensation without fault at this particular time and he will have this without cost to himself until the renewal of his premium arises at whatever time in 1969. Then he will have the option of determining for himself whether he wants to carry this addition to his insurance premium or not. And inasmuch as I understand the broad coverage of this application, it will cost the driver $7 per annum. I suppose one will say immediately, "That is to begin with", but I asked them what would it cost if the government of Ontario made it compulsory or mandatory. It would change in a tremendous hurry, I believe.

Mr. Singer: It would cost $7 per driver; that is exactly what it would cost.

Mr. Winkler: However, under this scheme he has the right to accept or to reject, and I believe that as the other aspects of insurance have been accepted by the public, the public should have the right to accept or reject. I am informed that that cost is universal not only in the province of Ontario but also across the entire country.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by putting it this way. I do not believe the government can force compulsion of the inclusion of compensation without fault. They can recommend and I think they should recommend the inclusion in general coverage of standard policies. Then I just ask the House once again, Mr. Speaker, to bear in mind that that rate of the increase of accidents would be more than I believe these people presently anticipate.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, in general I would support the resolution this morning except that it does not, of course, go far enough. We believe we should have a system of automobile insurance without regard to fault. Claims should be met in that regard. But if this kind of insurance is to be effective and to work adequately we must also have a public system of insurance. How the mover of this resolution can berate the insurance companies as he did, to point out the kind of thing they are doing to the motorist public and the public of Ontario, and then to accept them as the carriers to continue this, I do not understand. I doubt if he does, because some of his own friends in Saskatchewan have had a look at this and have seen how it works, and have changed their minds completely and are going to continue the public plan in that province. I will come to that a little later on.

Certainly I would say this morning that it is only consistent brainwashing by the insurance trusts—presenting them on a par with home and motherhood—that has prevented the people of Ontario from rising in their wrath against the way they are being fleeced and bamboozled by the automobile insurance companies in this province. They are bamboozled in the first place by tremendous costs. In order to drive we have to have insurance today. That is a must; even though we do not have the compulsory feature, it is there and people cannot drive without it. We just do not dare do it. The cost in this province of the kind of insurance we have, is 2.5 times as high in administration as the publicly operated insurance plan in Saskatchewan with a Liberal Premier. Last year in Ontario, 41.5 cents of every premium dollar went for administration costs, leaving only 58.5 cents to meet claims. The Saskatchewan plan has operated on an average cost of 16 cents per premium dollar since its inception in 1946 and last year or rather the last year for which we have reports, that is 1966, I have them here—the cost was 11.6 cents. In that province it leaves 84 cents to be paid out in benefits. Contrast that with the 58.5 cents in the private insurance plans we have in the province of Ontario.

The second way we are being bamboozled is that when we buy insurance we just do not get what we think we are paying for, that is, adequate protection. The mover of the resolution this morning quoted the Linden report. That has been quoted time after time in this House; a survey which demonstrates without doubt that the people buying insurance just do not receive the coverage which they think they are getting and for which they pay.

After an accident we may wake up to find out we are not protected at all or very inadequately. The more serious the accident the less likelihood there is of proper coverage. The more serious the accident, of course, the greater the need. The greater is the chance too in serious accidents of long delays in settlements—and we heard something of that this morning. Court cases take time and if there is any doubt of who is to blame, it has to be established before the settlement.

This again, is the argument for compensation without fault. Another way in which we are being bamboozled and fleeced by the insurance trust is that after the accident, we often discover we have been paying into a loan fund, not insurance. If the company pays out money on our behalf it immediately raises the rates to get it back. That is a loan fund, that is not an insurance policy, and many of us have had sad experience in this field. Not only do the companies get back the amount they have paid out on our behalf but they get more than is paid out very often.

I will say that in catastrophic accidents this does not occur. It would take just too long to get this amount back. But in the ordinary variety of accidents that occur on our highways, the company pays the money, then it assesses the insured in order to get it back. It is a loan fund not insurance. Then again, after the accident, or even a traffic violation, the insurance company sets itself up as judge and jury, Mr. Speaker, and adds a fine of its own to what the court has already assessed. They punish the offender further by upping the premiums. Sentences meted out by regular courts can be appealed and we can also appeal the sentence handed out by our own Department of Transport, which through its point system, may rule us off the highway. We can appeal that. But there is no appeal whatsoever from the dictates of the insurance trust. How we, as civilized human beings, can put up with that I cannot quite understand, particularly where we say, as the former speaker did, that we should still leave the control, this kind of control, in the hands of these people.

Even worse, the insurance industry takes our premium money in advance and then invests it and siphons off the interest earned. If this interest were ploughed back, as it should be, rates could be lower. By skimming off this part of the income the companies can often show a book loss and demand increased rates.

It is impossible from our reports from the superintendent of insurance and others, to establish how much is skimmed off this way, but I have here the report of the Saskatchewan public company and it tells us that during the period that the public service has been in operation there, since 1946, $5.2 million have been returned to the fund in interest earned. That is almost five per cent of the total amount. And let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that this is a publicly operated insurance at cost, there is no padding, a cost which returns a very large amount into the payment of claims.

Now, with the kind of insurance we have, the private insurance, in this province, we can well see that the part that should be returned and is now skimmed off in investment interest could well amount to twice that five per cent—it may be ten per cent, it may be 15 per cent, we have no way of knowing at this point.

Ralph Nader in his book, "Unsafe At Any Speed", says this about the American insurance:

Since the ceiling rates can be raised as the level of premiums rises, the monetary incentive to reduce the causes of death and injuries in automobile accidents by advocating safer vehicles is reduced.

Moreover he says:

The profits of the casualty industry now come much more from investment income than from earned premiums. Between 1959 and 1963, for example, the casualty industry had an underwriting profit of $1.38 billion and a net investment income of $4.01 billion. The higher the volume of prepaid insurance premiums, the more funds are available to produce investment income.

This investment income should be ploughed back into the main stream to help in setting rates.

The public insurance which I have mentioned can overcome these effects of the private companies and bring lower costs. It is bought at cost with the licence, or possibly with an added couple of cents on each gallon of gas bought. This eliminates, of course, the sales cost, advertising and profit.

It pays without regard to fault, saving court costs and eliminating much of the delays to establish blame. It ploughs interest in investment back into the fund thus raising total incomes and lowering rates.

I have here a statement from the Wall Street Journal of November, 1967, where it says this:

A close look at Saskatchewan's experience is particularly pertinent now because of mounting dissatisfaction with the way automobile casualty and liability insurance works in the USA. Auto insurance in the United States, its critics say, is too costly, and liability benefits are too uncertain.

Courts are clogged with lawsuits seeking to pin the blame for accidents on one driver or another.

The injured person who cannot afford a lawyer often receives no liability payments at all.

The Saskatchewan plan has been operating for 21 years. It was established in 1946 when Saskatchewan elected the only socialist state of provincial government ever to take office in North America. The socialists promptly set up the government-operated insurance system. Though the socialists were replaced in 1964 by a regime of the middle of the road Liberal Party that promised to return auto insurance entirely to private companies, the provincial insurance system has been maintained and there appears to be little likelihood of a major change.

"Government auto insurance has given us a lot of headaches," said Liberal Party Premier Ross Thatcher. "I would have to admit, however, the plan is working".

Now we have the statement from Mr. Thatcher in the Star of January 29, 1969:

Premier Thatcher bluntly declared his government had decided against any change in the system of universal compulsory auto insurance administered by the government agency. The government has decided on one agency—

And these are pertinent words:

—agency with a monopoly over auto insurance is able to provide motorists with the cheapest possible auto insurance.

This is Liberal Premier Ross Thatcher, who has had experience with the only publicly owned auto insurance plan in North America. Mr. Thatcher has decided against all the promises he made that he was going to get rid of. He made those promises right through the province, before the last election.

He now finds that the people will not stand for its removal because it is working and working to the advantage of the people. So that crowning proof of the success of a public plan is that Ross Thatcher, who promised to scuttle it, now has uttered these words and he says that it again provides the motorist with the cheapest possible auto insurance, and he is going to keep it.

Even ultra free-enterpriser Thatcher has seen the light, and sooner or later his party and the Tories and the people of Ontario will see the light as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I guess my time has expired and perhaps I had better leave it at that, but I think we have to recognize that a plan such as that mentioned in the resolution can only work, and work effectively, if it is a public plan administered through a government agency.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in rising to support the resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Parkdale. I think it is long overdue that this resolution was given some serious consideration by this government.

Mr. Speaker, the proposal that the hon. member for Parkdale advocates, compensation without fault, is not a new concept. It has been in effect in Canada here, or in Ontario, in the guise of The Workmen's Compensation Act for well over half a century, and if one considers that Bismarck introduced a system similar to this over 125 years ago, one can only wonder just how reactionary this particular government is. Not only that, but the system of compensation without fault has been discussed and written about for at least the last 30 some odd years.

In 1932, Columbia University undertook a study which was subsequently called the Columbia scheme and under this scheme it would have been a state operated compensation scheme similar to the workmen's compensation board, that is compensating persons injured in automobile accidents without consideration of fault.

In 1955, Professor Ehrenzweig at the University of California law school put forward a plan which was subsequently called by his name, the Ehrenzweig scheme, which called for voluntary accident insurance by private members. Under his scheme there would be periodic payments rather than a lump sum settlement.

In 1958, Professor Leon Green, of the University of Texas law school, sketched a scheme for compulsory insurance by private insurance subject to regulations by the state. The amount that would have been paid would have been fixed by the courts subject to a limit set by the state and there would have been no compensation for pain and suffering.

Subsequently, in 1965, there was a proposal of the California State Bar Association. Under this scheme, all payments would have been made regardless of fault and would have been deducted from the common law recovery which would still have been permitted. In addition, liability insurance for limits of $25,000 and $50,000 would have been compulsory.

Two professors — Professors Blum and Kalven—of the University of Chicago published a study in 1965. They believed that the suggestion for eliminating many of the awards for pain and suffering and removing most cases from the courts, would only produce a saving of about 15 per cent which would be quite insufficient for compensation without fault to be provided by insurers without extra charge.

Then Professor Keaton from Harvard, and Professor O'Connell from the University of Illinois wrote a book which is almost a bible on this subject now—"Basic Protection for the Traffic Victim"—and it was published in 1965.

They called for compulsory insurance by private insurers to pay all the out-of-pocket expenses and loss of income of those injured in traffic accidents up to $10,000 per person, $100,000 per accident. There was no coverage for property damage.

Then a scheme came into being which was introduced by a nation-wide mutual insurance company in 1959; they called it their family compensation coverage. They thought that the other insurance companies would pick it up but fortunately they did not, so it sort of went by the board.

The hon. member for Yorkview was speaking of the Saskatchewan automotive accident insurance scheme. He failed to point out that in 1965 or 1966 their deficit was $991,773. The amount of compensation paid was extremely limited. The maximum was $10,000 for one death and they paid sums like $100 for loss of a child up to six years of age, increasing by $100 amounts per year until for persons 15, 16 or 17 years of age when the payment was $1,000.

Not everybody was or is insured under that scheme. For instance the coverage does not apply—and this is the 1967 guidebook—to residents of another province or country while riding in Saskatchewan, in or on vehicles not registered with the Saskatchewan highway traffic board, out of town people or to persons entitled to workmen's compensation benefits arising from accidents. Principal sum is payable, however, in the event of loss or death.

Mr. Young: They can still sue, as here!

Mr. Ben: There they go. They can still sue. They say: "Well, we are trying to avoid this suing".

Coverage does not apply to federal government employees while operating vehicles owned by that government, to holders of international driving permits while operating a motor vehicle, to persons using or operating motor vehicles under the influence of drugs or intoxicants except for death benefits, drivers without unexpired Saskatchewan licences are not eligible for personal injury benefits, to any owner-occupant of a motor vehicle not registered under The Vehicles Act for the current year provided the vehicle is one that should be registered, to the driver or owner-occupant of a motor vehicle to which is attached an unlicensed trailer if licence of the trailer is required, except for death benefits. And there are three other types that are excluded.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Other than that, they are insured.

Mr. Ben: Yes, other than that. They get very little, the thing is operating under a deficit but that is the way it is going. As far as the Liberal government carrying it on is concerned, they have no choice. I think it was estimated it would take about $5 billion to undo the con job that the CCF did on the people in that small province, telling them to believe they were living in paradise. And he says they have to look after the interest of the people to keep them healthy, wealthy and wise, rather than try to undo the harm that the CCF caused. So they put their money to good use in Saskatchewan.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Why does the member not face up to reality?

Mr. Ben: Then, of course, there is the famous report of the select committee of this province—you know, the first place that LSD was introduced in this country was in Saskatchewan by the CCF government and they still have not been able to face up to reality, they are still in that hazy dream.

The select committee, Mr. Speaker, had on it such distinguished gentlemen as the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), who was the chairman; and a Minister of the Crown—the member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme), who at that time was not a Minister but who is now a Minister of the Crown, charged with the responsibility for highways—and the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), a Minister of the Crown. This select committee with those three illustrious gentlemen on it—plus others, of course, because being a select committee, the preponderance of members belonged to the government side—they advocated a certain scheme and it is amazing that it was rejected.

The Linden report, which was already mentioned by some previous speakers, pointed out the very sad state of affairs in this province. Professor Allen M. Linden, in his study, compared tort and non-tort recoveries and noted that of those attempting recovery through tort law, 57.1 per cent went without compensation, 28.8 per cent recovered all their losses and 14.1 per cent recovered in part.

Under non-tort recoveries, i.e. hospital insurance, workmen's compensation, life insurance, etc., 17.6 per cent received full compensation and 30 per cent received more than half their losses. Under combined recovery from tort law and social welfare, 54 per cent received full compensation; and in only 2.4 per cent of the cases was the unrecovered loss in excess of $2,000. Considering these statistics it is well to recall that unless the injury or death was at least partly due to the fault of some other person there could have been no grounds for a tort recovery. And Professor Linden advocated the implementation of the scheme advocated by the select committee on automobile insurance, a select committee of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one has to wonder why this thing has not been implemented. Well, there are a number of arguments advanced against this and I would like—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has one minute of his time left, perhaps he could draw to a conclusion in that period.

Mr. Ben: It is very difficult to wind up in such a short time, Mr. Speaker, but one of the reasons given is that it is immoral and the hon. Minister had this to say in 1966:

In effect the mandatory provision for compensation, regardless of fault, applied to motor vehicle accidents would mean that the government had selected one type of personal calamity for special consideration. A person who caused a motor vehicle accident or his family would be eligible for compensation but the same would not necessarily be true if a person were involved in another type of accident or if it should be his misfortune to be stricken by permanent or crippling disease. The discrimination would be illogical and unjust.

Mr. Singer: What Minister said that?

Mr. Ben: This hon. Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett).

Mr. Singer: Oh, that Minister.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I say phooey and the Liberal Party says phooey, because we believe in compensating victims of all misfortunes and if the principle of workmen's compensation is right then this particular principle would be right. There is one big gap in this province, Mr. Speaker, between those who are injured in workmen's compensation and those who have the right to receive unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is well over his time. Will he please bring his remarks to a conclusion?

Mr. Ben: All right, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that this will be the first step forward and we are striving for the day, Mr. Speaker, when the Liberal Party gets into this government, and introduces a scheme of compensation for victims of accidents—period.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members know, this same resolution was debated last year in the Legislature. Since that time we have seen that the insurance industry has, with the prodding of this government, extended its coverage in a very effective manner by providing coverage for injuries to occupants of motor vehicles—and, you might say, based on the principle of compensation without fault. I am advised, Mr. Speaker, by representatives of the insurance industry that although it is early to tell exactly how successful the voluntary system is, approximately 80 per cent of those people covered with automobile insurance have definitely indicated that they wish to have this extra coverage and have consented to it being included in their automobile policies. When one realizes for how short a time the industry has in fact made an effort to promote and sell this coverage—

Mr. Singer: They have given it to everybody for the first year for nothing, so there is no problem yet.

Mr. Kerr: Well no, only until their existing policy expires.

Mr. Singer: Yes, when they renew—

Mr. Kerr: However, when one realizes for how short a time the industry has in fact made an effort to promote this coverage, I think hon. members will agree that probably by the end of this year everyone with automobile insurance will include such coverage in their policy. So far, under this voluntary system the extra premium is nominal. However, the claims to date, I would think, would probably be very few.

In re-reading the hon. member's resolution and also the recommendations of the select committee of 1963, I do not think the committee was advocating or recommending the abolition of the tort system or tort law in accident compensation. The committee did recommend certain death benefits, dismemberment, loss of sight benefits, medical payments, and so on. However, I hope I am right in that, as the committee did not go into the whole principle of tort and compensation without fault, they were not advocating its abolition and saying that their recommendations were the last word by any means.

Some of the arguments for this principle, and I think it was referred to in this debate, refer to the Keeton-O'Connell plan in the USA, sometimes without realizing the different situation that exists between our two countries. The tort system in the USA is increasingly condemned there. There is a contingent fee prevailing almost everywhere which results in legal costs of litigated claims being anywhere from 30 to 50 per cent of the total recovery. I doubt whether the comparable average percentage of legal costs in this jurisdiction is as high as 12 per cent. Prolonged delay in obtaining a judicial result after trial is not a major problem in Ontario and only possibly in Toronto is it a minor problem. An Ontario claimant can bring his case to trial within six to nine months from the commencement of proceedings, and trials within three or four months in most parts of this province are not unusual. The criticism of delay may be valid, but the proposed remedy, that is, a drastic change in the tort law, is not responsive to the problem.

In my opinion there are probably three principal reasons for delay. First, during the last few years, delays have been occasioned, particularly in Toronto, by the substantial increase in criminal cases which take precedence for trial over civil cases. These criminal cases at times literally clog our courts. Is this a reason for changing the substantive criminal law?

The second reason is the lack of sufficient judges available to try these cases. In Ontario in the past few years there has been an increase in all forms of court business which is commensurate with the population increase. Delay is developed due to our failure to provide the facilities and personnel needed to keep pace with this growth. Another reason for delay is that a small percentage of lawyers, both for the plaintiffs and defence, are dilatory, disorganized and inefficient in moving their clients' auto claims forward to final disposition. This is a defect which surely can be corrected and the bar as a whole must redouble its efforts to find ways to increase the speed and efficiency of dealing with automobile tort cases. There are occasions when competent plaintiff's counsel have valid reason for delaying the final disposition of the plaintiff's claim in personal injury cases of a severe nature. It is frequently difficult to obtain, until considerable time has elapsed, a final medical prognosis sufficient to enable the counsel to assess the value of the general damages of the plaintiff.

In most cases plaintiffs are rarely financially destitute or prejudiced by the delay. A great majority are supported by some form of sick benefit plan provided by their employers whereby they recover a portion if not all of their income. Hospital and medical expenses are almost invariably paid by some other agency. Moreover the insurance industry itself, in an effort to overcome any criticism for the delay in payment to the needy victim, has developed a plan supported by the majority of insurance companies in Ontario where in cases of clear liability, advance payments are made on behalf of the defendant to the claimant to cover his loss of income, medical and other expenses as they are incurred. The claimant is then free to proceed to trial when his injury has "matured". The offer of general damages made by the defendant's insurers appears inadequate.

Now back to the situation in the States: Statistics indicate that delay in the courts in the American metropolitan areas, such as Chicago as mentioned by the hon. member, averages 31 months, and is said to be as much as six years in Cooke county, Illinois.

Again, those people who refer to the Keeton-O'Connell plan sometimes neglect to point out the sad state of tort law in the USA and how in fact, legislatures in the various states have not really kept up with us here in this country. Certainly some reform is drastically needed in most areas in our neighbouring country. For example in the USA, if two cars collide, and one driver is ten per cent at fault while the other driver is 90 per cent at fault, even if the ten-per-cent-at-fault driver is seriously injured, he has no right of action against the other driver. In Canada under our contributory negligence rule, he does have such a right of action, and he is entitled to receive damages in proportion to the degree of fault of the other party.

Another example may be if two cars collide—I do not have time to give this other example, Mr. Speaker. However, I could go on to mention the contingency fee, the legal fee, that is charged in the US by lawyers. This, of course, is considered not proper conduct in Ontario and this would be reflected I would think in our claims and in our insurance rates.

I just want to say that, having read Professor Linden's latest report where he advocates a form of peaceful co-existence, this seems to be, at least at this time, a reasonable solution to our problem here. In his suggestion there would, in fact, be limited accident benefits such as recommended by the select committee, and at the same time our basic laws as to negligence tort would still be in effect and there would be—

Mr. Speaker: I would draw to the hon. member's attention that the private member's hour has now expired.

Mr. Kerr: I would just say in winding up then, Mr. Speaker, that I do support the basic recommendations of the select committee. I do not think they have advocated the complete abolition of the tort law in this province. I think that, as I suggested, they both can exist and if claims are kept to a certain minimum, then by the use of our present tort system and our negligence Act, people who would have what we call extra claims, pain and suffering, could also enjoy the benefits of our common law.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker if I may rise on a point of order—perhaps it is a matter of privilege—and bring to your attention one thing. Owing to the inability of the members of this House to adhere to the rules, we as the third party are constantly not able to have a second speaker. Unless the motion happens to arise from this particular section of the House, we speak third. And when members do not adhere to the rules, out of necessity it eliminates the opportunity to speak a second time for this section of the House.

On the last three Fridays I have been slated to speak second for this party and on the last three Fridays I have been unable to, owing to the inability of the members to adhere to the rules. I would ask you, sir, if you would attempt to keep them within the time limits.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on this same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would allow the Speaker to speak to the point of order as raised by this hon. member first.

I am well aware of the situation and I am also well aware of the fact that private members' hour is usually five minutes late in starting, which is the fault, shall I say, of all the members because the members today were sitting in the committee of the whole House, which, as you all know, is all of the members here. That, of course, does cause a difficulty. I would also point out that usually—and it has happened today again—the member for the third party who speaks first very wisely probably believes what is going to happen, and usually is allowed, and I allowed it again today, to go on over his time because I knew this would happen. It was impossible to put the number of speakers in.

I believe that the point raised by the hon. member is a fair point, a good point. It does not always happen to that party; it has happened to the other two parties too. All I can suggest is that some arrangement be made by the Whips whereby either we have a fewer number of speakers so that they can be assured of speaking, or that the time for each member to speak is cut down, because it is almost impossible on the 20 minutes and 10-10-10 minute deal to get in the speakers who always wish to speak three to a side. It is practically impossible because we never start on time and we always have the members wishing to go just a little bit over, no matter how much Mr. Speaker urges them to cease and desist.

So perhaps—yes, there are some Whips here—perhaps the Whips would discuss it among themselves and see what they can do before Monday's private members' hour comes.

Now, the hon. member for Humber has a point.

Mr. Ben: Yes, I was just going to point out that I agree something should be done, but I would also point out that the lead-off speaker started late but he finished 20 minutes after. The hon. member for Grey South finished at 27½ minutes after, the hon. member who then spoke for the NDP, the member for Yorkview, spoke for 15 minutes, and I restricted my remarks to 10 minutes. This happened last week also. The Speaker gave a reason for it and I accepted it, but I do resent that the pot should get up and imply that all the other pans are black. The reason is well taken but I do note where the fault lies.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if I may make just one final point on this: As I understand the rule at present, it is 20 minutes—

Mr. Speaker: It is not a rule. It is an agreement among the party Whips.

Mr. Deans: The agreement—I apologize—the agreement is 20 minutes for the first speaker, ten minutes for each of the second two speakers, and five minutes for the final speakers; and that, sir, as I understand it, would take 55 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: The member's understanding is not the same as Mr. Speaker's so we will have to leave that with the Whips to sort out by Monday or some later date.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, when we resume Monday we will consider legislation, and then if time permits, turn to the estimates.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): I wonder if we could have a further list of estimates than we have now?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would like to know the name of the department which will follow the hon. Minister's.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Social and Family Services will follow the Provincial Secretary, then The Department of Mines and The Department of Transport. I will have to get you the rest. I will have the list on Monday, but these are the next three after these current estimates. As you know, the Treasurer's estimates are not completed and we may resume them to get them cleaned up as well.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder what we can anticipate under the heading of legislation, Bills 73 and 74 on Monday?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am not prepared to discuss any particular bills, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I presume the private members' hour will also be on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: I would urge the Whips to try to sort out our problem by Monday at 5.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.10 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon our guests are in the west gallery and they are students from Sultan Public School, in Sultan.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT CLAIMS ACT, 1961-1962

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I introduce a bill to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act.

The first amendment will facilitate proceedings in certain circumstances enabling the Minister to act on behalf of a deceased person. This amendment is to the benefit of those who are victims of collisions.

The second amendment will increase the limit for payments from the fund from $35,000 to $50,000. Further, if more than one uninsured vehicle is at fault in a single collision, the limit will apply to each of these vehicles.

The increase to $50,000 recognizes the general rise in evaluation of claims since the $35,000 was set in 1962. It is in keeping with our policy of maintaining the position of the accident claims fund as a thoroughly effective method of providing compensation for the innocent victims of collisions that are caused by an uninsured vehicle. To be consistent with our plans for this increase in the limit of the fund, I asked the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs to consider a corresponding amendment in The Insurance Act. That amendment was introduced last week, providing for an increase to $50,000 in the minimum public liability coverage in automobile insurance policies.

Thus the amendment I am introducing in The Accident Claims Act, combined with the change in The Insurance Act, increases the provision of compensation for the victims of any collision regardless of the insurance status of the vehicle at fault.

THE REGISTRY ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Registry Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Doing away with the registry now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There are some 20 amendments, Mr. Speaker. We are bringing the procedures of our Act up to date generally.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): That Act will never be up to date.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We keep moving forward.

Mr. Singer: Anything startling?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. member would not expect me to warn him, would he?

THE LAND TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Land Titles Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Some of these amendments are complementary to the changes in The Registry Act amendments and assist in bringing the procedures in the two methods of land registration together.

Mr. Speaker: This morning, I would inform the members, the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier) consulted me with a view to moving the adjournment of the House today, to discuss as a matter of urgent public importance, the fear of the people in his electoral district that the proposed smelter of Texas Gulf Sulphur Company, processing the ore from the Kidd Creek mine, may be located elsewhere than in the Timmins area.

While I am very sympathetic to this proposal and agree that it is of public importance to the area in question and perhaps to all of Ontario, I was reluctantly compelled to rule it out of order, as not complying with the existing rule and precedents.

One of the established requirements for such a motion is that the matter to be debated must be a specific matter of recent occurrence. The member for Cochrane South and the member of Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), who advised him, agreed that there had been no recent occurrence which would meet this requirement.

Now, I have pointed out to the hon. members that, of course, the rules of the House are always subject to the unanimous determination of the members of the House as to what is to be done. But I have ruled that the proposed motion to adjourn the House to discuss this matter is out of order.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask this question: In view of the fact that you concede this is a matter of public importance—so that this is just another instance when the rules seem to frustrate rather than facilitate the conduct of the business of the House—I wonder if we could get the unanimous consent of the House—perhaps the Minister might be willing to concur in it—so that this admitted matter of public importance could be debated?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I think that is quite proper, and the proper way to deal with the Speaker's ruling rather than what we have sometimes done.

The hon. Prime Minister wishes to speak.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under very close, intensive negotiation at the moment. I do not think anything would be served by a debate. I can make these comments to the people of that area, however. We have been very interested in this whole matter from the beginning and I can assure the House that it is receiving attention.

As recently as this morning it was negotiated, and I hope that we will be able to make some announcement in the not-too-distant future. But I cannot see that any purpose would be served by such a debate at this time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I might make a comment, on a point of order. I was very interested in hearing the presentation that had been put to you by the hon. member for Cochrane South, but surely if our rules in this regard are going to be meaningful, he should have had an opportunity to put his reasons to you and to the House before you gave your reason for not permitting the adjournment. I think this is one example of the fact that the rules do not, in fact, accommodate the obvious requirements if we are going to respond to the needs of the community. Now, as far as giving consent for this particular debate is concerned, I would be delighted to give the consent of the group which I have the honour to lead.

I feel that the leader of the government has, in fact, entered into the debate to some extent already by assuring the citizens of the province that he and his government are up to date and on top of the problem. I do not find that satisfactory, and I think it would be a useful exercise if more information were to be made available.

If the Prime Minister thinks it would jeopardize the delicate negotiations, that is another matter. But I do not believe he has made that point.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would move that the House give unanimous consent for a debate on this matter.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we will not consent to that. I think my position is very clear. We have been discussing this matter over a continuous period of time and I wonder myself at the propriety of this motion. Either the subject for debate fits the rules or it does not. I do not see how it can be introduced by unanimous consent, other than by taking the position that this House can do anything at once, in any respect, if we had unanimous consent.

Mr. Nixon: Well, certainly if you are not prepared to consent it is not unanimous.

Mr. MacDonald: That is the basic theory of Parliament.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Because you have no rules.

Mr. Speaker: The matter appears to me to rest at this particular point, properly and in accordance with the rules. The hon. member for Cochrane South discussed the matter with Mr. Speaker this morning, and for the reasons which Mr. Speaker has given to the House it was thought that this was not within the rules, and Mr. Speaker so ruled. The leader of the New Democratic Party has appealed for unanimous consent of the House. I believe a motion would be out of order but he has made that appeal. The unanimous consent is not forthcoming and therefore, as Mr. Speaker must abide by the rules, the rules say that the matter, of course, would be closed.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am forced into a situation that I did not want to be in. We have no alternative, in view of the archaic nature of our rules, which do not permit either the introduction of the motion in the first instance—so that you deal with it behind the scenes, though I would give you full credit and thanks for bringing it out into the open—or an opportunity for a motion to be made, as is the case in most other Parliaments, and then the Speaker can rule after the motion is made.

In short, on at least two grounds the rules are so archaic that, I repeat, they frustrate rather than facilitate the normal, ordinary, sensible conduct of the business of the province. I am, therefore, left with no alternative but to appeal your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: The appeal of a Speaker's ruling is without debate; and therefore the appeal by the member for York South will now be put to the House.

The vote is on the Speaker's ruling that the proposed motion to adjourn the House for debate on a matter of urgent public importance, proposed to be made by the hon. member for the electoral district of Cochrane South, is out of order.

The Speaker's ruling was sustained on the following division:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 59, the "nays" 18.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the ruling upheld.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South was on his feet before the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): My point of order is this, Mr. Speaker, that it is my conviction that the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) has moved his estimates down in the order of consideration so that he will not have to come to grips with this Texas Gulf smelter problem—

Mr. Speaker: The member has not stated any point of order, he is stating a conviction. Now will he state his point of order.

The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, with great respect I want to question the propriety of your making your decision on the request for the adjournment in this House. Perhaps you might enlighten me and other members who would ask for further information in this regard. Having gone through this procedure myself, I have brought to the attention of your Honour, outside the House as is required, my feeling on another occasion that perhaps an adjournment would have been in order and it was your decision then not to proceed.

I think it is often forgotten that another aspect of the archaic approach that we take in this particular matter is that if in fact you had permitted such a debate it would have been ruled out of order on all occasions in this session when we might have had some more information pertaining to this important subject, which would put us in a position to discuss on a more intelligent basis the decision that apparently is about to be taken by Texas Gulf. So I would like your views on that, sir, and the whole procedure that is before us.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. leader of the Opposition has said, he and one of his members had the same problem during the last session. As I recall it it was dealt with at that time in a manner similar to this time.

First of all the hon. leader of the Opposition is quite correct that the rules do specify that if this matter is dealt with by a debate on an adjournment to discuss the matter of urgent public importance then it cannot be debated further at the same session. That, of course, is always a problem for any member or any party wishing to discuss a matter that is of public and urgent and of great importance to the member or to his constituents or the people of Ontario.

That point is well taken and is one which often decides the course of the matters. Now with respect to the manner of dealing with it, I may say that I have followed the precedent which I set last year which, according to what information I could gather, was the manner of dealing with it. I certainly would have no objection to an hon. member making such a motion in the House because it would immediately be ruled out of order. The Speaker's decision is not debatable and therefore, there would be no debate.

One of the reasons that it has been handled in the manner in which it has been to give the member concerned, and his party caucus, the opportunity of deciding just what they wish to do about it. Sometimes the decision falls on one side of the line, as last year, and sometimes on another side of the line, as this year.

I cannot say that I disagree with the statements made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and at various times by the Prime Minister, and today certainly by the member for York South that our rules do need something done to them.

The other problem that Mr. Speaker faces—as the hon. leader of the Opposition will know and, as a matter of fact, made note of today in one of the remarks that he made—is that unless the rules, archaic or otherwise, are endeavoured to be followed, we do not have any rules. The answer, of course, is to have a revision of the rules and then try to stick to those.

Should we have this matter come up again, since it apparently is the feeling of the House, I have no objection whatsoever to dealing with it, should I be in the chair, as the hon. leader has suggested and as the member for York South discussed with the Speaker beforehand. Whether he approves or not, the Speaker can give his approval. The member can make his motion, but that again would be the end of the debate until the Speaker's ruling were dealt with.

Those briefly are the considerations and they were fully discussed, I know, last year with the hon. leader of the Opposition and his party representatives. This morning they were discussed with the hon. member for Cochrane South and with the member for Riverdale. I have not had the opportunity of discussing it with anyone other than the Clerk of the House because I felt that this was a ruling which followed the ruling made last year and apparently was the proper way to deal with it.

I am convinced that the House would prefer some different way, at least to the left of Mr. Speaker, and I can see that it would do no harm. So the next time there is an occurrence like this, I shall consider very seriously whether it should have Mr. Speaker's approval to be at least moved in the House or not, rather than following the precedent which I have set, that I followed today.

I trust that will meet the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order; two points really.

The first one is that I do not know who is responsible for initiating a revision of the rules of this House but I suggest that it should have happened a long, long time ago.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if the rules of this House stand and are to be lived up to, I suggest you do not have the right to do as you have just indicated you are going to do, namely review the precedents and come in, a week or two from now, and decide whether or not there would be the right to introduce the motion. I think this is wrong. It underlines the whole archaic nature of our rules.

If the rules of the House are going to be revised, let them be revised, and do not let them be reinterpreted by you when the pressure gets irresistible at some point or another. I think this is a wholly invidious situation for all of us, and particularly for yourself.

I repeat, I do not think you have the right to come in, two weeks from now, and reinterpret the precedents of this House and do it differently. I suggest, if nobody else has the initiative, you have the initiative, Mr. Speaker, for moving immediately, to establish an appropriate body for the revision of the rules of this House. We have talked about it for years. The time for action is long since past.

The second point I wanted to make, by way of a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that I for one—and I do not pretend to speak even for the rest of my group, let alone for the rest of the House, at the moment—I for one am not going to be threatened with the proposition that if you bring in a motion to deal with a matter of urgent public importance, that then it is off the order paper for the rest of the year, because that rule has never been lived up to in this House.

Every time we have a motion that comes in on a private bill, or a private resolution, and we deal with it in this House, presumably never again in the Legislature can that be raised, even by a member of the government. An hon. member reminds me that there is no vote on a private member's bill or resolution. Well, I suppose that is the catch, there is no vote and so you have got us over the barrel.

Let me put my case on something that is wholly on sound ground. The amendments that we consider to the Throne Speech are kitchen sink amendments, they include everything. The Liberals lead off and we have no alternative but to add to it, so the kitchen sink is very overcrowded. In fact, most of the business of the House is out of order from that point forward, that is, when the vote of the Throne Speech has been taken, because these matters have already been voted on in the amendment to the Throne Speech. So, I refuse, Mr. Speaker, to be intimidated with the threat that if we bring in a motion of urgent public importance that item can never be discussed again. You would be enforcing a rule which we honour in the breach all the rest of the time in our conduct of the business of this House.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me back to my first point, that the rules of the House should be studied and revised. I suggest, if nobody else is willing to take the initiative, that it rest with yourself, sir.

Mr. Sopha: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There are few subjects that are of more importance to the way in which we do our business in this House.

Mr. Speaker: If you would give me the floor, for a moment, I would like the hon. member for York South to explain to Mr. Speaker, whether the threat and the intimidation that he is talking about is being imputed to Mr. Speaker. The speech which the hon. member has just made is one which I, as Mr. Speaker, will not accept if there is any such imputation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if you are taking it personally, I withdraw the comment in terms of you personally. But I am a little puzzled as to why you have become very sensitive, on prompting from the Clerk of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will read what the Clerk of the House sent me: "This is all out of order, debating a ruling already upheld. He is speaking now of an entirely different rule."

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am pointing out that the hon. member should make plain that he is not imputing threats and intimidations to Mr. Speaker. All Mr. Speaker did was explain to the hon. member from his party what the rules were, as he understood them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it was the hon. leader of the Opposition who rose and raised this matter. I have become a little puzzled at the sensitiveness of this matter and the time when you get angry, sir. And if one person can get angry, two people can get angry in this House. I have said, sir, that every time this matter has been raised with you and your predecessors we are faced with the threat that if this motion is brought in, never in the rest of that session can we debate the same matter. I ask you, sir, why it is that you enforce the rules in this specific instance, which denies the Opposition the right to bring in a matter of urgent public importance, when we breach that rule throughout the whole of the session, regularly, every session, after the Throne Debate has been voted on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made himself plain now, by saying that it is the present Mr. Speaker and his predecessors. I accept his comments, and they are quite, as far as I am concerned, proper, although according to the Clerk of the House, out of order. The hon. member for Sudbury had a point of order.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that few subjects are of more importance than a discussion of the way in which we conduct our business in this House, indeed the efforts to make what goes on in this place relevant to the life of the province in general. Now, it is a mistake to think, sir, that in the nation's capital they do not do some things that are of very superior quality. I want to remind you that the House of Commons in Ottawa has recently, in a very progressive way, updated the rules that apply to that House.

In addition, sir, for a long time they have had a book of Canadian precedents, to which they have adhered, whereas we in this House—and I suppose it is an outgrowth of the nineteenth-century provincialist attitude that led us to look across the sea to the mother of Parliaments at Westminster. Now, sir, this discussion today is very germane because tonight I shall take the opportunity to look at that rule again. I always thought the rule was, that a member seeking to move to adjourn the House and discuss a matter of urgent public importance, had the opportunity in the House to state his reasons briefly, and to draw attention to the circumstances that led him to make that request.

Mr. MacDonald: There were a lot of efforts to achieve this down through the years.

Mr. Sopha: We were put in the position today, by the method adopted in that group, of not having the faintest idea of what the rumours were or what the background was. In fact we had no information at all on what motivated the member from Cochrane South, and accordingly we had no alternative, in acting responsibly, but to support you in your ruling. And we will stand by that decision today, and that is the way I assume the leader of this group—well, I will leave that, I will leave that because I am not seeking to quarrel.

Mr. Lewis: Well done.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I want to make this additional point. If I spent some time this evening, I would refresh my memory about a speech I made two or three years ago—I think it was two years ago—advocating the initiation of a rule updating process and I recall at that time—and I think it is not unfair to say to the leader of the government—that if I looked at his speech, made immediately after mine, I would see where he said that the rules were just fine and that everything was hunky-dory and we could go on and live with them.

Well, I say to you sir, in relation to this point of order, it has been demonstrated that we cannot live much longer in this type of environment and some initiative has to be seized. So, may I, in furtherance of what the hon. member for York South has said—because I am so intensely concerned about this—may I ask you, sir, whether tomorrow you will give us guidance, having reflected about it overnight, as to whether one of us, or a number of us, in the official Opposition, perhaps in both parties, might put some form of resolution on the order paper, or take some other initiative, that would give you the power to initiate a revision of the rules? At the same time I suggest, because of the success of the Ottawa exercise, that it be done by the members of this House themselves.

I do recall, speaking historically—and I have studied this matter, that a number of years ago, I guess it would be maybe 12 or 15 years ago, there was a parliamentary committee that looked into the rules, under the chairmanship of a former speaker of the House. And the only place that report can be found, I assure you, is in the journals of the House, a copy of which is behind the throne. It was never published in any other form. It gathers dust and it is completely forgotten. But I want to urge upon you some initiative, at a very early date, whereby we might seize this thing and I hope this impels the leader of the government to make some observations about it today.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I would be delighted to, Mr. Speaker. I have quite a list of amendments I would like to propose to the rules of this House, and I would be happy to meet with the leaders of the two other parties at any time. I have been working on these for some considerable time; I have mentioned them upon occasions to both the leaders of the other parties. We have amended the rules—

Mr. MacDonald: The initiative rests with the government.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We have amended the rules periodically through the years since I have been here. I do not think a single session has gone by when we have not had some alteration or amendment to the rules. I would, however, be quite prepared and happy to play my part in putting forth what I think the amendments should be. I will arrange, with Mr. Speaker, to convene a meeting of the two other leaders, and myself, and perhaps they will then be ready to make their suggestions as well.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): On a point of order, until such time as the rules are revised, I wish to point out that it is quite essential that we follow all the rules, because we cannot break them sometimes and not at other times. Some three weeks ago, a member of this party made a motion within the rules of the House that a question be put and at that time the rules of the House were ignored. Today, where the cap fits somewhat differently, the rules of the House are followed strictly. Now, until such time as the rules are revised, the ruling must be applied evenly.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order that was raised originally, without reference to this other matter that has been brought in. I must say, in response to the offer from the Premier to convene a meeting of the party leaders that the rules might be adjusted, that while I am quite prepared to take part in that discussion, I feel that the rules, if they are changed, should be changed as a result of a committee of this House, not necessarily just the party leaders. He surely is in agreement with that view and would take the initiative to set up such a committee, whether it is a select committee or some other vehicle, whereby we can review what we are doing.

Now, I would also like to disassociate myself from some of the comments that have been made from my left, because certainly it is within the powers of Mr. Speaker to set precedents himself. When certain occasions come up where it is necessary in his view to interpret the rules in a certain way, then he does so, and he is either sustained by the House or overruled by the House and the precedents of Mr. Speaker are kept in a list in our book of rules and we are supposed to go by them.

So surely the objection that has been raised by the leader of the New Democratic Party that Mr. Speaker does not have this in his armoury as far as controlling the House is concerned, is simply unacceptable. But I would hope that, when we come to review the rules of the House—and it is obvious, we must do it very soon—that it be a committee of the House involving Mr. Speaker or one of Mr. Speaker's predecessors, if that might be better.

We should do it that way and not by some meeting just of the three leaders to decide, or try to decide, among themselves what the course of events should be.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, may I say that some three or four years ago the former hon. member for Woodbine, Ken Bryden, requested the establishment of a committee to do precisely this. We have drifted for four or five years.

I would agree on this small point with the leader of the Opposition—I am not interested in sitting down with the Prime Minister other than to hand in proposals for a change and get them to a committee. It is a little ludicrous to suggest that the three leaders, busy as we are, are going to come together with proposals and rescue the ones that the Prime Minister has allowed to accumulate dust—and then suddenly introduce them.

It has to be handed to a committee for study. And I do not know that there is really any need for the leaders of the parties to meet to initiate the whole process. If it requires a committee, let the Prime Minister introduce a motion to establish a committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one final comment on the observations of the leader of the Opposition. We have had interpretations in this House by the Speaker, so that we have a series of precedents which are contradictory.

Mr. Nixon: What makes the hon. member think it will be the last word?

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Because he is the only one who says anything.

Mr. MacDonald:—and it is like the Bible. You can get a precedent to support anything you want. Therefore, another ruling by a Speaker in the sequence that you presumably have to live up to—or at least observe because it is in the book—is just a backdoor method for changing the rules of the House.

When we have a set of rules that are generally acceptable, I would agree that the Speaker's re-interpretation upon receiving approval of the House, is a fair procedure. But not in the chaos that we have at the moment. This is just a further addition to the chaos and creates a further contradiction in the precedence the House tries to live by.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to add a footnote to the addendum of the parenthesis of what has gone before. Not being a member of the elect, sir, of the House triumvirate which has been alluded to, I would like to suggest—as the member for York South has indicated that all of us in this House, as private members of the House, would wish to participate in the alteration of the rules rather than having them somewhat gratuitously handed to us, and that it is now appropriate to appoint that committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, this has been talked about for all the ten years that I have been here. Now, it is very interesting to hear the—

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a point of order?

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to the same point of order that the other gentlemen spoke to and I am just as entitled as they are to speak to it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to continue. This has been talked about for as many years as I have been in the House and nobody does anything about it. It is always a good thing to do but it is never being done.

In fact, a year ago the hon. members who are members of the third party voted against a resolution put by my leader to set up just such a committee. It is there, it is in Hansard, and that is what they did.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Oh, come on!

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): What a revolting development!

Mr. Lewis: That was his "John Robarts is a nice man" resolution.

Mr. Singer: Now then, in addition, Mr. Speaker, before we started on the estimates the hon. Prime Minister indicated that there was going to be some resolution brought forward about how we might deal with the estimates. Notwithstanding that good intention, we are dealing with the estimates in the same old time-wasting, time-consuming repetitious way.

Now, the House really is controlled—and there is no doubt — by the leader of the government as long as he has as many votes as he has.

The only way we are going to get a change of rules is not from you, sir, with great respect, it is only if the Prime Minister wants it. And the fact that we are labouring under these ancient, archaic, unfair rules is the fault of the Prime Minister. The only way we are going to get them changed is if the Prime Minister does something.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview has just talked about wasting the time of this House. If that party and the government had accepted the responsibility today, we would be debating Texas Gulf rather than the rules of this House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members have precipitated a debate where a debate is not allowable, but after listening to the views of the members, I felt it was desirable that everyone who wished to speak on this at this time should do so. I would say that no one would be happier than the Speaker for the time being with a set of rules which everyone would agree with.

I, as the Speaker, at the present time feel that is an impossibility, and not to be expected from human nature. I would also like to advise the hon. members that there have been overtures and meetings when this matter has been brought up. And it has not been entirely forgotten by either the leaders of the Opposition parties, or by the Prime Minister.

I would also like to assure the House that I feel the proper way now to deal with this is a combination of what has been said on both sides of the House. The hon. members will remember that Mr. Speaker is responsive to the House—but to a majority of the members of the House. And so far, the great majority of the members of this House have not made their voices heard.

So my view is that we should follow—and I will endeavour to do so — the suggestion made by the Prime Minister to have a meeting of the three leaders. Then, if they agree a committee is the proper solution, the necessary action would have to be taken by someone other than Mr. Speaker.

But it seems to me that the Prime Minister's suggestion is a way to get the matter moving, particularly in view of the fact that it has been set out—which is quite correct—that the running of the House is up to the leader of the government members, the Prime Minister. If it is then agreeable with the members of the House as a body, I would propose to proceed with the matter in this manner. And at least something will be started.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Prime Minister.

Part of this was asked last Thursday—the third question—when the questions pertaining to Ontario's legal right to the land on the lakefront was being answered by the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall).

So I would ask the Premier: What is the basis of Ontario claims to all lakefront land west of Toronto Island airport? And will the Premier appoint an impartial commission to assess this claim in view of the Metro council chairman's strong opposition, or does he intend to have it settled by judicial decision?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will require an impartial commission. It is difficult for me to give you the legal basis upon which these claims have been made. Obviously there is some doubt as to who has title to the land and frankly, until this is settled, it is very difficult to do anything with the land in question. It has to be settled one way or the other. We have to establish a title.

I do not anticipate any great difficulty in settling the matter. There are certain bills that have been passed to deal with it and the lawyers really are looking at it at the present time. I would not want to attach to this whole thing more significance than it really rates. May I put it that way? Because certainly it is not the intention of this government to hold up whatever development may take place along the waterfront because of ancient flaws in titles.

But in order to correct them, you have got to find out what they are, and I am quite certain that once we get them spread out and have a look at what the flaws in the titles are, we will be able to work it out on a satisfactory basis. But I do not think it will take an impartial commission. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. Nixon: It may lead to court action?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It might, but I even have some doubts about that. I really think we have to see what the total picture is before we can say how we are going to attack it. It is not a question of a land grab on the part of the government. We are not trying to take anything away from anybody else.

There are agreements in the past which no doubt we will honour, but it is just a little difficult to decide what the situation is—as any lawyer in this House will tell you—until we have hammered out what the legal position is. Then, if we have to give a quit claim deed to somebody to legalize what has happened in the past, we are prepared to do so. But that is the kind of thing we have got to ascertain.

Mr. Nixon: Well, might I ask a supplementary question? If the Premier was not sure of their position, why did the government move so definitely without getting it settled?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think we are quite settled in what we are doing now.

There are two things here. One is the actual fill that is taking place. I do not think there is any doubt about that. There are some questions about previous properties that have been dealt with over a long period of years. That is where the doubt is. But with any land that is created as a result of present filling operations, I do not think there is any doubt in anyone's mind that that belongs to the province.

Mr. Nixon: I will tell the Premier the doubt that is in my mind was raised by the statement of the hon. Minister of Trade and Development when he said the land was incorrectly deeded to the city of Toronto some 50 years ago. Now I do not know how the Premier can explain, or how he can expect the Metropolitan council to nod and say, "Oh yes, that was incorrect," without some basis of fact in argument?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think the hon. Minister was speaking on the basis of advice given him by his own lawyers, but that is not applicable to the land we are talking about—that we are filling.

Mr. Singer: The Premier means he spoke out of turn?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not mean he spoke out of turn at all. I do not think he spoke out of turn at all.

Mr. Singer: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I really do not think he spoke out of turn at all.

Mr. Singer: Even the Telegram called him arrogant.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh well, all right, all right—sticks and stones.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): It has called the hon. member that many times.

Mr. Singer: The whole bunch of them collectively.

Mr. Lewis: That must terrify them when the Telegram moves in on them.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Nixon: This question is to the Premier and it dates from last Thursday.

What action will the Premier take to bring an end to what has been referred to in the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 20, as an "outstanding lack of co-ordination and co-operation among various government departments" associated with regional government planning?

Would the Premier agree that these matters should have been co-ordinated and directed from his office so that inter-departmental conflicts would not now be holding up progress in these related fields?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for High Park who has a similar question also from last Thursday would place it at this time and the Prime Minister could answer both—question 958.

Mr. Shulman: What was the number of the question?

Mr. Speaker: Question 958.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. For the Prime Minister:

1. Is today's Globe and Mail correct in stating that there is "an outstanding lack of co-operation" between the Departments of Municipal Affairs and Treasury?

2. If so, what steps does the Prime Minister intend to take to improve this situation?

3. In the Prime Minister's opinion, would the replacement of one or both of the responsible Ministers solve this problem?

4. In the Prime Minister's opinion, which of the two Ministers would it be preferable to replace?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I do not agree with the story in the Globe and Mail, all the rest of the questions are irrelevant.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer's estimates will be before us perhaps later in the day or tomorrow and we can ask him his views. I do not think that he would have any doubt as to what the changes would be.

I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Development, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Minister comment on the report in Saturday's Toronto Star saying that "a senior provincial government official" indicated that Ontario's main purpose in staking claim to 52,000 acres of waterfront land and lake bed is to influence development of Metro's proposed Harbour City?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, just to show you how things get out of context, that was 52,000 acres when I got it today and I just moved the decimal point back one.

The province has not made a specific claim for 5,200 acres along the Metro Toronto waterfront. What I stated today, and what I stated last week to the Metro executive, was to point out that the province has one of the major interests in the central waterfront area, including the proposed harbour city development.

In our view, many of the grants made by the federal government in this area are questionable—they still are and Ottawa is looking at it—as the water lots in this area are primarily provincial. We believe that in the interest of all concerned, the actual ownership of the lands involved should be decided upon. It has never been our intention—and I restated this this morning to the Metro executive—to take over parklands that are being used as parklands.

If the province has a major land interest in the harbour city development, I am sure that the Legislature would expect me to carefully consider all of the province's interests in this vital development, and this is the course that I have followed on the government's behalf.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I think the government is over its head.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask further. The Minister, as I understood it, said that many of the grants are questionable and Ottawa is looking at them. Has the government of Ontario asked Ottawa to review their decision to grant the title to this land?

Mr. Singer: What does the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) say on all this? It should be his department.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister has his own lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Our people have discussed the grants previously given by the federal government, which are called quit claim deeds. Now I am not a lawyer, but your friend on your right there can point out that a quit claim deed is where the federal government—

Mr. Singer: Even the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) shudders.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —the federal government has given every right that it has, but it says if anybody comes back and objects then you must be prepared to fight it on the other fellow's grounds.

What we have suggested here is if we are going to build on Harbour City, and some of that land is a quit claim deed, I am sure that Harbour City themselves, or the harbour commission, would like to know if they have the right to build on that land. This is what we are trying to clear for the harbour commission, and also for Metro, in these discussions of the claims that we have listed for them.

I might say to the House this afternoon, Mr. Speaker—I think it is reported in the press at noon, I have not seen it—that we had a very good meeting this morning. All matters with reference to the waterfront at the Exhibition were settled, and we will expect to be dumping fill in there, starting on Wednesday morning.

Mr. Nixon: Did you say that Ottawa was looking at it, or not, and if so, how are they getting involved in this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Ottawa is looking at the claims that they granted 50 years ago—yes, they are looking at them.

Mr. Singer: We have 23 departments and 23 legal opinions.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Prime Minister but he has vanished, so I will have to withhold it again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: The word is quik—q-u-i-k—not quit.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: A question to the Minister of Health—and a slight typographical error has crept into this, I note, Mr. Minister:

Have employees of The Department of Health been asked to sign an affidavit that they have not and/or will not, give any information to Farm and Country concerning the government's pesticides advisory committee?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. What did the hon. member say the typographical error was?

Mr. MacDonald: "Have not" and "will not".

Mr. Speaker: Instead of "did not".

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, no employees of The Department of Health have been asked to sign an affidavit that they have not—and I have "did not"—but I will alter that to say that they will not be asked to sign an affidavit that they will not give any information to Farm and Country concerning the government's pesticides advisory committee.

However, I might say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a rule in my department that releases to the press are authorized by myself.

Mr. MacDonald: Just so that we are not playing games, may I ask the Minister whether or not this matter has been discussed with the employees—affidavit or any other procedure apart? Have the employees been canvassed as to whether or not any one of them may have been the so-called source, or leak, with regard to the story that was carried in Farm and Country on the pesticides committee.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, they have not and I do not intend that they will be.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Minister of Mines.

During consideration of the estimates last year, the Minister stated that the government was putting pressure on Texas Gulf to build their copper smelter in Timmins, even though there was a copper smelter as close as Noranda, but that the location of a zinc smelter might be anywhere in the province of Ontario. In view of the fact that ore shipped from the Kidd Creek mine has turned out to be primarily zinc, has the government re-considered its position and insisted that the zinc smelter should be in the Timmins area?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South has a similar question addressed to the same Minister. Perhaps he would place it now.

Mr. Ferrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; question of the Minister of Mines.

During his estimates last year, the Minister informed the House that Texas Gulf was engaged in two feasibility studies concerning the location of their zinc and copper smelters and, in late November, the Minister, in reply to my question, informed the House that the company could not meet the deadline. Will the Minister now inform the House of the present status of those feasibility studies and the latest developments concerning the location of the two smelters?

Second question: in view of the growing uncertainty about the smelter location announcements, is the government prepared to introduce legislation to guarantee that a maximum degree of processing of our natural resources will take place within the province, preferably at the location of the ore body?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the question asked by the leader of the NDP and the last part of the question asked by the hon. member for Cochrane South, I would say to you that if there is any change in government policy required, it will be announced in this House in due course.

In respect of the two feasibility studies: My information from the company is that the feasibility study respecting the copper smelter has not yet been completed. They have not yet received it. In relation to the feasibility study regarding the location of their zinc smelter, they have completed it and they are carrying on very intensive negotiations at the moment with the government respecting the location.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Etobicoke.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer of Ontario. Many small firms, in planning their manufacturing needs for the years 1969 and 1970, ordered equipment late in 1968 or early in 1969, before the new tax was suggested. Due to the time required to manufacture certain equipment, delivery, in many cases, will not be made until after April 1, 1969.

Often such equipment is sent FOB point of manufacture. Such equipment becomes the property of the purchaser the moment the transport pulls away from the equipment manufacturer's plant somewhere in the U.S.A. In the light of the foregoing, would the Minister advise:

1. Whether equipment invoiced and shipped before the end of March, but not received in Ontario until after April 1, will be taxable under the new five per cent sales tax on production machinery?

2. Will any special consideration be given to cases where equipment belonging to the purchaser is shipped in March but does not arrive at the purchaser's plant until after April 1, 1969?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I am going to quote from "Circular 69-1 Vendor Information Service", published by the retail sales tax branch under date of March 24, which is today and which will be in the mail to all vendors today. I think the sections of the bulletin that I will read and which I will make available to the hon. member will provide the answers to the questions:

Delayed delivery: Goods may be considered as tax exempt under each of the following conditions:

(a) The goods were shipped FOB supply point or point of origin and were in the hands of a common carrier at the purchaser's risk before April 1, 1969.

(b) The goods have been sold to the purchaser, can be physically identified as belonging to him and are held at the purchaser's risk prior to April 1, 1969.

(c) The goods are in bond or in transit and are owned by the purchaser prior to April 1, 1969.

Now with respect to contracts for production machinery, contracts entered into prior to April 1, 1969, involving production machinery and not completed as of that date are subject to the "delivery date" rule. This means all machinery and equipment delivered on or after April 1, 1969, under such contracts, is subject to tax.

I will make a copy of this circular available to the hon. member, for his information.

Mr. Braithwaite: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is that circular to be sent to American manufacturers as well?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would rather think that it would be sent to all vendors in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Will the Minister investigate a report that discriminatory action taken by Ontario Hydro management against the members of Local 18 of the United Carpenters Union at Nanticoke has resulted in the loss of wages for the employees and threatens the success of the project?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the action reported to have been taken by the Ontario Hydro management was not discriminatory. It was taken within the terms of the current applicable labour agreement and is not expected to influence the success of the Nanticoke project.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Is the Minister aware that the action that was taken by Ontario Hydro management against the carpenters was directed against the carpenters only, and that this action was not taken against the other trades and therefore it was, in effect, a discriminatory action?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I was not aware of that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

When will the Minister reply to my letter of January 15, 1969, drawing to his attention the exceedingly small print used by Weston Credit Jewellers in an advertisement calling for carrying charges of 38.5 per cent and in case of default, additional interest of ten per cent plus collection costs?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, an answer to the hon. member's letter has been mailed. It was delayed, awaiting confirmation that the company accepted the direction from the Consumer Protection Bureau and changed the format of their advertisement to give greater prominence to the section disclosing interest charges on time sales.

Default charges are standard practice on all contracts of this nature. Purchasers are expected to meet the provisions of the contract and penalties are imposed when they fail to do so.

Mr. Stokes: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Does the Minister not think that 38.5 per cent is an outrageous rate? And what was the result of his representations to the sales agency?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It sounds like a good deal of money, but I simply say that the rates of interest in such transactions are controlled by the federal government.

Mr. Stokes: Pardon me, as a supplementary, the Minister said that the matter had been taken up with the sales agency; what was their reaction to it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is right. On the basis of making the disclosure of the facts more prominent.

Mr. Stokes: Did they give that commitment that they would make them more prominent?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, we have not received that back from the company mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Attorney General.

Does the Minister consider as just, a 90-day sentence handed out to Robert F. McCarthy by Judge Michael Cloney on March 20 at Toronto Provincial Court for non-payment of a $1.80 breakfast eaten at the Royal York Hotel?

Second question, does the Minister intend to intervene in this matter?

And the third question, will Mr. McCarthy have to serve the full sentence?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I made inquiries into this matter and my officials advise me that on November 29, 1968, Mr.

Robert F. McCarthy, an American citizen, visited the coffee shop at the Royal York Hotel, ordered a meal and then did not pay for it. Mr. McCarthy was charged under section 307, subsection 2 of the Criminal Code which deals with obtaining food by fraud.

The gentleman appeared in court and was given a suspended sentence. On January 10, 1969, he was deported to the United States. On March 14 of this year, in the same hotel around 7.30 a.m. Mr. Robert F. McCarthy ordered breakfast and again did not pay for the meal.

Mr. McCarthy was charged under the same section of the Criminal Code and on March 21, 1969, he was convicted and sentenced to 90 days.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He still will not be charged for his meals.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to intervene in this matter. I believe the suspended sentence in the first case, and the deportation, speaks for itself.

As to serving the full sentence, there is a matter of good conduct remission which is 13 days off a sentence, and of course the gentleman can make application also to the National Parole Board. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I have further evidence of this man's criminal conduct in the United States. I will not read it to the House.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? I can understand the court may have records and so on, but it seems to me—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will place his question.

Mr. Makarchuk: Very well, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that other people have managed to abscond with about a million and a half and get a similar—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is not asking a supplementary question, he is making a statement.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, will the Minister pro-rate this particular term, perhaps, or sentence?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The member wants to know whether he got two eggs or one.

Mr. Lewis: He has served his sentence by eating at the Royal York.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a question of the Prime Minister, which perhaps he would place. It is a question from March 21, No. 967.

Mr. Shulman: I have a number of questions of the Prime Minister. May I put the question to the Prime Minister, who is in his seat now?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, would you ask that and then go on with the rest of your questions?

Mr. Shulman: What steps is the province taking to collect the $41 million owed to Ontario by the federal government for health aids under the federal-provincial sharing programme and in part dating back to 1957 for mental hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this money is owing. We have taken many steps over the years, so far to no avail. But I will itemize the steps that have been taken and that we are taking and will provide the hon. member with an answer.

Mr. Shulman: May I suggest a good lawyer?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, it would not work. Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Provincial Treasurer from last week:

Why has his department refused to make the requested payroll deductions in the case of Mrs. Pearl Campbell, who is employed by The Ontario Department of Education, as outlined in a letter written by Mr. J. G. Demeza, superintendent, Ontario school for the deaf?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I saw this question for the first time today. I enquired about it and I find that the research to provide the answer for the hon. member is still proceeding. I hope to be able to answer the question within a day or so.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Mr. Speaker; in five parts:

1. Why did the Ontario Securities Commission delist the stock of the Great West Life Insurance Company from the Toronto Stock Exchange after the Toronto Stock Exchange had refused to do so?

2. Was the purpose of this de-listing to assist the management of Great West Life to prevent Great West Saddlery and the Bronfman family from gaining control of Great West Life?

3. Was the Minister aware of this action before it was taken?

4. If the Minister was not aware of this action, what disciplinary action does the Minister intend to take at the Ontario Securities Commission to prevent a recurrence?

5. If the Minister was aware of this action, was he at that time aware of the significance of what was being done?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I am informed that on Friday, January 31, the commission — in light of the facts and circumstances which then existed—exercised its discretion in the public interest pursuant to the provisions of section 141(b) of The Securities Act, 1966, as amended, to suspend the trading of the shares of the Great West Life Assurance Company from January 31 until Tuesday, February 4, 1969, inclusive.

The answer to part two of the question is no. The events leading to the suspension are a matter of public record. Rumours of the proposed takeover bid by the Great West Saddlery Company Limited had resulted in the suspension of trading in the shares of both Great West Life and Great West Saddlery by the Toronto Stock Exchange for a period prior to January 31. Great West Saddlery made an announcement concerning the terms of the proposed takeover before the trading was reinstated.

The president of Great West Life, having certain plans and facts which he felt unable to release before they were presented to the Great West Life shareholders at the meeting to be held on February 4, requested that trading in those shares be suspended until the meeting was held and the facts announced.

The proposed takeover bid from Great West Saddlery, while announced, had not been made. The commission acceded to the Great West Life request just as it had done for Great West Saddlery the previous July 8.

The commission, in publishing its timely disclosure policy in its weekly summary of September 27 of 1968, stated in part:

It is essential that all investors be placed on an equal footing insofar as knowledge of the material facts regarding the company which has securities in the hands of the public.

Therefore, immediate disclosure of all material and significant information through news media is encouraged. Unfavourable facts must be disclosed as promptly, fully and plainly, as favourable facts.

And that was the content of the policy declared in that weekly summary I referred to.

With reference to part three of the question, the answer is no. The answer to part four of the question, none. And the answer to part five is that it is not applicable.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept two supplementary questions?

Would the Minister explain why, instead of delisting the stock, he did not instead order that the information be given out by Great West Life? And secondly, would the Minister explain to me how the actions taken by his department could be in the public interest when in effect they were merely to sustain the management of this company?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Would the member repeat the first part of the question?

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister explain why he did not demand disclosure of the facts which he suggested the president of Great West Life did not wish to release, rather than delisting the stock?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This was a decision taken by the commission itself without reference to me. They made a decision in the light of all the circumstances and it was their judgment that that was the proper course to follow.

As far as ordering the company to make the disclosure, I think at the time—and these would be my comments—that the time factor in making the disclosure public would have taken much longer and would not have been effective with respect to the time available and intervening before the annual meeting was to be held.

In addition to that, the company itself had requested that this action be taken. I might say that the Manitoba Securities Commission, where the company has its head office and where a large number of shareholders are domiciled, took similar action to that of the Ontario commission.

Now, the second part of the member's question has to do with—

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister explain how this action was in the public interest, rather than the interest of the president of Great West Life?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not think that this had to do with any proposition that was directed to Great West Saddlery at all. My understanding of the explanations which have since been given to me was that it had to do with the disclosure aspect having to do with certain increases in dividends, or certain other situations which were going to be disclosed at the annual meeting of the Great West Life Company itself on the occasion of the annual meeting, and the most effective way of stopping any action in these weeks was to suspend the trading. The proper time for the announcement of any change in dividend policy was to be at the annual meeting.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a further supplementary?

As I understood the Minister to just say that the action taken had nothing to do with Great West Saddlery, is the Minister saying then that if a company is going to increase its dividends, it is better to delist the stock rather than force the announcement of the increase in dividends?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, and the proper place for that statement to be made, in the course of the business of this company, was at the annual meeting.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General.

Was Mr. Stanley Dubreuil taken from his home in Windsor on August 16, 1968, by four Windsor policemen who were under the impression that he was mentally ill?

Was Mr. Dubreuil sent to the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital by the Windsor police?

Was Mr. Dubreuil released by the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital with the explanation that an error had been made?

Why and how did this incident occur?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and have an answer very shortly.

Mr. Shulman: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health, in six parts.

Did a patient, Donald W. Hall, commit suicide in the Penetang Psychiatric Hospital on January 31, 1969?

Did this suicide occur after commencing Hall on a new drug?

Was the patient kept under close supervision after being put on a new medication—if not, why not?

How many suicides have occurred in Ontario Psychiatric Hospitals since January 1, 1969?

Are these suicides occurring because of inadequate supervision due to lack of staff?

What action does the Minister propose to take to prevent further occurrences of this nature?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes.

What the hon. member means by a new drug is quite beyond me. He was on medication and he was under close supervision at the time when he was on medication.

Four suicides have occurred. Three are still under investigation but no incident has been reported as due to lack of supervision because of inadequate staff.

The department has a routine in all of these cases. Every tragedy of this kind is reported to me immediately and a committee of investigation is immediately set up before the coroner becomes involved at all.

A full report is expected from every hospital and the coroner's report comes to us. We seek to follow all of the reasonable recommendations and some of them, I might admit, sir, are not reasonable. But every effort is made to prevent such tragic circumstances.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will hear it.

Mr. Shulman: If four suicides have occurred since January 1, 1969, would the Minister not agree that this number could be cut down by more complete supervision?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not. We are continually aware of the fact that the more freedom we give patients in the treatment of mental disorder, the more calculated risks we have to take. One of those calculated risks is the possibility that the patient will finally succeed in taking his own life. We do everything humanly possible, short of restraining or constricting the treatment, to prevent these tragic circumstances, but they do occur and they will occur, in spite of everything we do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South might wish to place his question from March 21.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

When will the report on the Niagara escarpment be made public?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is presently being examined by the various departments interested and when that examination is complete, it will go to a committee of Cabinet. I cannot tell you just when that will be but when we have finished our examination of it, we will decide what we are going to do.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if I may just make this comment.

I have had enquiries from at least two municipalities with regard to this, because it is holding up all of their planning. I would hope that the Prime Minister would move as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question outstanding from March 12, of the Minister of University Affairs.

In view of the story in the March 12 issue of the Globe and Mail regarding the comments of Mr. E. E. Stewart, Deputy Minister of University Affairs: Why does the Minister allow a civil servant in his department to make major policy statements at public meetings concerning the policies of the Minister's department before the Minister states his policies in the Ontario Legislature?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister was invited to—I think it was called a teach-in—by the faculty association of the University of Toronto, to discuss with them, along with others, the government policy and the committee on university affairs' recommendation in respect of university finance. There were a number of questions asked, with a certain amount of give and take.

As I read the press reports, which I assume are the same source of information as that of the member for Scarborough East, I fail to recognize any major policy statements that should have been made by the Minister. In fact, perhaps the member for Scarborough East and I, one of these days, Mr. Speaker, should get together and determine what constitutes policy.

I do not think there is anything in what the Deputy Minister said, as I read it, that constitutes any change or any major government policy. There may have been some explanation of the procedures, the rationale, but this surely is the responsibility of anyone who is involved in the governmental process.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Is it the policy of The Department of University Affairs that professors at university be paid for only eight months if the teaching year continues only in the fall and winter semester, as Mr. Stewart stated at that meeting?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member perhaps is taking one portion of what was said.

The policy of the department really is very simply this. The department reacts to, as does the government, the recommendations of the committee on university affairs, which makes these determinations based on the formula.

I understand that the chairman of the committee on university affairs will be appearing before the committee on education tomorrow at 11 o'clock when the member for Scarborough East will have ample opportunity to get into the details of the formula and how these are determined, as far as the individual institutions are concerned.

Mr. T. Reid: Can I ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, whether this committee is an advisory committee and if so, whom it advises?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, surely the member for Scarborough East has not been here as a member for some period of time without recognizing that the committee of university affairs is an advisory committee to the government?

Mr. T. Reid: That makes it clear then why the Minister has a Deputy Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): A question of the Minister of Health.

In view of the $10 million new plant expansion announced by Union Carbide for Welland on March 5, 1969, what is the department requiring the company to do to control pollution in this sophisticated plant expansion, which will produce graphite electrodes?

What is the department doing to control existing air pollution at the present Union Carbide factory?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, section 7 of The Air Pollution Control Act, 1967, requires that Union Carbide and all companies submit an application for a certificate of approval covering the plant expansion, as announced in this case on March 5, 1969.

To secure this certificate of approval the air pollution emissions from the plant will have to meet the standards set in table 1 of Ontario Regulation 449-67 under the Act.

The second part of the hon. member's question: The existing Union Carbide plant at Welland has been surveyed under section 8 of The Air Pollution Control Act, 1967. This report will be completed shortly and the requirements will then be made upon the company, which will have to abide by them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Education arises as a result of the actions of the Toronto board of education late last week.

Will the Minister indicate if Mrs. Fiona Nelson will receive a board of reference, as requested by Mrs. Nelson and her federation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I communicated with both Mrs. Nelson and the Toronto board to ascertain if the requirements of The Schools Administration Act had been followed. As soon as we have the replies to these communications I will be in a position to inform the House whether a board of reference can be granted.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would comment on whether—if a board of reference is found not to be appropriate—whether the Minister would accept a tribunal, as suggested by the federation over the past week, as a means of bringing some justice into this situation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think really it would be relatively unwise to explore alternatives to a decision that may or may not work out in appropriate fashion. I would prefer to answer that when I make the determination whether legally a board of reference can in fact be granted.

Mr. Pitman: Might I ask a further supplementary?

I wonder if the Minister would indicate how long it will take to get a decision of this nature? I am sure the Minister will realize how important time is to a teacher at this time of the year.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, under The Schools Administration Act, as I recall it, I believe there are 30 days from the receipt of the application before the determination has to be made. In other words, I think it has to be made within 30 days. I think Mrs. Nelson's application was received in the department on March 5.

So quite obviously time is considered in the procedures and it would indicate to the hon. member there are not too many days to go before the information has to be there and a decision made.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore has a question from last week of the Prime Minister.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister given consideration to coinciding the Easter recess of this Legislature with that of the schools, so that the members, particularly the out-of-town ones, have an opportunity to be with their children during that period?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, yes, this was considered. As the timing of events in this House worked out, it seemed we had resumed for too short a period after Christmas.

In other words, our deciding to take a break from Easter related more to the length of time that this House has been sitting than to the fact that the children are out of school at that particular time. The matter is elastic, it can be adjusted to suit the members. I felt that this was really what the members wanted.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am with my children a good deal. Has the Prime Minister considered giving me a rest?

An hon. member: What about the hon. member's children?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): I have an outstanding question, Mr. Speaker; should we deal with that? The question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, that would be fine.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Outstanding from March 21. What is the hold-up in the claim of Sheldon Boutillier, claim number C-7433163, for settlement with the Workmen's Compensation Board, Ontario, before Mr. Boutillier leaves Ontario for Prince Edward Island?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question: Arrangements have been made for Mr. Boutillier to be examined at the board's offices for disability assessment and this will take place prior to his proposed leaving for Prince Edward Island.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Minister. A question of the Minister of Trade and Development—a series of questions, Mr. Speaker.

What was the overriding factor in the Minister's decision in December last to make the residential tax rebate a benefit to all Ontario Housing Corporation's tenants, instead of the Minister's original intention that he would make the rebates only to those paying an economic rent?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister suggests that all the questions be placed and then they will be answered.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How does the Minister arrive at economic rent, and market rent?

How many Ontario Housing Corporation tenants pay an economic rent, and how many pay a market rent?

What was the total amount of rents received by the Ontario Housing Corporation in 1968, and for how many units?

What is the total amount to be allowed in rent deduction, in lieu of residential tax rebate, to Ontario Housing Corporation tenants and to how many tenants?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will take this question as notice and have these questions researched for the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I have to leave and I have the answer to a question the hon. member for High Park asked on Friday. I wonder if I could be permitted to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: With the permission of the hon. member.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On Friday last, the hon. member for High Park asked a four-part question, number 971, Mr. Speaker. Was there a sit-down strike at Burwash on February 4? How many persons were involved? What was the reason? What disciplinary action was taken?

The answer to the first part of the question is: yes, there was a sit-down strike. The answer to the second part as to how many were involved is: 39 initially. After a brief meeting with the deputy superintendent, ten of the original inmates decided to go back to work, reducing the figure to 29. Later during the day, one additional inmate refused to work.

For the third part of the question, the reasons given by the inmates for their refusal to work were as follows: one man complained of the insufficiency of concerts staged for the inmates' benefit by visiting entertainers; one man complained about the quality of the preparation of the food; one man complained of delay in being moved from his dormitory to the visiting room when he had a visit.

A few inmates complained about the quality of medical and dental treatment. Some complained about the delay in implementing the federal government's stated intention to equalize the rates of remission between the provincial and federal systems. They had read that this would take effect when the federal omnibus bill was passed and were demanding immediate action.

Another complaint was that the Ontario Parole Board, on a recent visit to the institution, refused to grant parole in the majority of cases reviewed at that time, and did not provide reasons for their decisions. This is the normal practice of the board, the reasons for which I gave in detail to the House last week.

The answer to the fourth part of the question is that the following disciplinary action was taken: each inmate involved in the refusal to work; forfeited good conduct remission and was placed in indefinite confinement on a special diet for a period not to exceed ten days.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question? Were any prisoners transferred to district jails because of this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, there were 13 transferred to jails.

Mr. Shulman: Then why did the Minister not mention that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because the hon. member did not ask that question. The hon. member asked the question, what disciplinary action was taken. As has been pointed out in the past, this is not disciplinary action. This is not punishment for having taken part in the action. Prisoners are removed to other institutions because they are the disturbers, the agitators who are the most likely to attempt to create further trouble. They have not been transferred for what might be termed disciplinary purposes.

Mr. Shulman: Would they have been transferred otherwise?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No; but, Mr. Speaker, this could be a very deceiving question and one designed to bring on an answer which is not true.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us not make the answers more deceiving.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member had asked, on a previous occasion, whether transfer to jails was for punishment purposes. At that time I answered no, and I explained exactly what I have explained today. The ones who have created the disturbance are removed to jails if it is felt they will continue to be the agitators and perhaps create further disturbance. But this is not as part of their punishment. The punishment is precisely what the others have been meted out. In other words, loss of good conduct, remission, special diet, and so on.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister if any prisoners are still in solitary as a result of this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I cannot answer that.

Mr. Shulman: Well, would he find out for me? Did the Minister say yes?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fact, I do not recall saying that. Do you mean whether they are in confinement?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I cannot give you that answer. I do not have it. I will get it for you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre will please continue.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to relinquish the floor to the Minister of Correctional Services, but I had not finished speaking to you with regard to the questions to the Minister of Trade and Development. I would like to ask the Minister if he would accept a supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Since it is notice, I cannot accept a supplementary, on this basis.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister points out correctly that until he has brought in an answer to the questions asked, a supplementary question would appear to be fruitless. So there will be no supplementary.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, is it wrong for me to have a question on the answer the Minister gave?

Mr. Speaker: Well, might I ask the hon. member to tell me what question and what answer she is referring to at the moment?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, when I asked questions one to six, the Minister replied he would be doing research. I would like to ask what research the Minister needs to do to answer question one?

Mr. Speaker: Well, that question would be out of order. When the Minister has made his research and given his answer, then the hon. member will be entitled to ask him a supplementary question—whether it would be answered or not—as to the type of research. There will be no supplementary questions, then, in connection with this question. As the Minister has pointed out, there has been no answer.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many tenants of the Ontario Housing Corporation have not yet received their residential tax rebate? When did the first rent reductions in lieu of municipal tax rebate to Ontario Housing Corporation's tenants become effective? And by what date will they be completed?

Why were tax rebates for Ontario Housing Corporation tenants paid as late as March 1969, when all other landlords in Ontario were required by law to do this by the end of 1968? How many general welfare or family benefit recipients are tenants of the Ontario Housing Corporation?

In the Minister's letter to Ontario Housing Corporation tenants, in which he called the rebate a benefit he was pleased to bestow upon all Ontario Housing Corporation tenants to enjoy this benefit immediately, was there any mention that the same benefit from the Minister's department would be recalled at a later date by another Minister of the Crown, namely the Minister of Social and Family Services, if the recipient received any type of welfare benefit?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will take all this as notice, Mr. Speaker, and get the information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has questions now of the Minister of Social and Family Services?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Question of the Minister of Social and Family Services. How many persons on either general welfare assistance, or family benefits pay more money for rent than they receive in shelter allowance, and what is the total amount of money involved?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the details of our case load are constantly changing in a number of ways. Rents vary from time to time and leases are being negotiated. People move from one location to another, often with variation in the amount of rents. There is much movement on and off the case load—that is, new applicants becoming eligible and other recipients no longer eligible. In view of the constantly-changing nature of the case load, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to provide the information requested.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Another question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

1. Are welfare administrators in Metro Toronto encouraged or allowed to seek the co-operation of the Ontario Housing Corporation in their attempts to house welfare recipients? Or do they rely solely on the Metro welfare housing department on George Street, which I understand, supplies only those landlords who will take welfare recipients as tenants at welfare rates for shelter?

2. What is the policy with regard to welfare administrators trying to cope with emergency housing cases such as evictions? Are they allowed or encouraged to work with the Ontario Housing Corporation on these cases, or are the administrators to rely on the one family hostel in Toronto on Dundas Street, where husbands are not allowed to stay with their families?

3. Why are husbands not allowed to stay with their families at this family hostel on Dundas Street?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, since all three parts of the question refer to matters affecting the Metro Toronto department of welfare, it would require consultation with members of that department. I would be pleased to obtain this information and answer the question at some later date.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 71st order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PROVINCIAL SECRETARY
AND CITIZENSHIP

On vote 1701.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1701—page 126. Carried?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Wait until the Minister's advisors find their places—he is helpless without them.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1701 agreed to?

On vote 1702: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): On vote 1701, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I thought it had been carried. However, if the hon. member was up, carry on.

Mr. De Monte: I was up. Mr. Chairman, I notice that, the vote is up $51,500. Could the Minister tell me in what areas the increase took place?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): I think the end result is that the salary increases account for $43,000 of this and the government hospitality vote is up $25,000. We also have two decreases in memorial wreaths and in the maintenance vote.

Mr. De Monte: I notice your memorial wreaths item went down by $2,000 but how many memorial wreaths do you hand out for $10,500? Do you have the figure?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Approximately 600.

Mr. De Monte: 600! I notice in an item from last year's accounts, Mr. Chairman, of $29,018.65 and it says United Kingdom, Princess Alexandra—what was that amount spent for in detail?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is that in order, Mr. Chairman? He is asking a question in connection with the public accounts. Would that not be the public accounts committee? He should not be asking that question in this vote.

Mr. Chairman: I think that this is quite correct, that we had discussed the matter of the debating of public accounts previously. I think it is quite in order for the hon. member to direct a question to the Minister as to whether or not the same item is in this year's vote, so that he can relate the previous year's public accounts to this year's vote.

Mr. De Monte: I know that this item is not in this year's vote, Mr. Chairman. I am wondering, are you going to—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): You cannot ask what it is; the NDP made that clear last time on the vote.

Mr. De Monte: Well do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister is not going to answer that question?

Mr. Chairman: I was not certain that the hon. member had directed a direct question to the hon. Minister. Is the hon. Minister—

Mr. De Monte: Perhaps the hon. Minister then would tell me if there is a similar item in this year's budget, or estimates—surely I can ask—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, just because something is in the public accounts, does not rule out its discussion when the Minister is before the House, because the public accounts committee has a limited number of members. It is the only opportunity that the other members of the House get to question actions in the past, and we have always, in the past, been able to refer to public accounts and to get an explanation for expenditures when the committee estimates come before the House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, before you answer that question, just so there will not be any misunderstanding; in the absence of the hon. member we did have this matter out during the discussion of one of my colleague's estimates. I was simply going along with the ruling that was made at that time and supported by your group in the House.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, I am sorry—it was not—I take that back.

Mr. Ben: It was not even put to a vote.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I take it back.

Mr. Ben: All right. It was not even put to a vote. What the other party said was that we cannot go to the public accounts, but our position was that we can ask questions. The Chairman rephrased the question so that it did not make sense but he rephrased it so that the question was, "Can you debate the public accounts?"

Our point was, "Can we ask a question," and that is not debating. But then the NDP said, "Well, you cannot question the government so—"

Mr. Lewis: I wonder that the princess ever visited us at all!

Mr. Chairman: Well the Chairman had ruled last week that, to come to the committee of supply which is debating this year's estimates, we can make reference to previous public accounts by way of questions such as "is the same item in here for this year's estimates, or has it increased or decreased."

The hon. Minister has remarked that this particular item is not in. We are debating this year's estimates. Now, to come to this committee to debate the public accounts, as such, without relating them to this year's estimates, in the opinion of the Chairman, is not the reason for this committee. We are here to debate the estimates. Reference may be made to the previous public accounts, but not to take the public accounts and debate the previous accounts in their entirety, or in part thereof, without relating them to this year's estimates.

Mr. Ben: Well, Mr. Chairman, do you not distinguish between a question and a debate? If I ask you your name are you suggesting I am debating?

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, surely I have a right to find out in connection with these estimates what was spent last year in the amount of $29,018.65. Surely I should be able to find out why that money was being spent and for what, in relating it to these estimates.

I notice that these estimates now, for hospitality, are up to $90,000. The 1967-68 estimates were $200,000 and change. I would like to know from the hon. Minister what $29,018.65 was spent for in that particular account.

Mr. Ben: We should put it to a vote, the government only has eight members in the House.

Mr. Singer: Continuing on this point of order, Mr. Chairman, surely if the public accounts revealed some great scandal and it had been ascertained at the public accounts committee; are you suggesting that when the appropriate Minister brings his estimates before the House that we cannot criticize him for that information that is revealed in the statement of public accounts, which incidentally, Mr. Chairman, is tabled before us at just about the same time as the estimates are brought before us?

Now, the public accounts committee has what—eight or nine members on it—it does not deal with every department every year. Whether it deals with the Provincial Secretary or not I do not know, but it would seem to me that you are cutting off the legitimate opportunity for criticism that we have at this time on the estimates when the appropriate Minister is before the House. I do not know what happened in the discussion on another day—apparently I was not here when it took place, but if that ruling was made, with the greatest respect, sir, I think it was wrong. You are limiting our ability to debate and our ability to call the Minister to answer for his past actions. The fact that it may, or may not, be dealt with by another committee of which only eight or nine of us are members, is no answer at all.

Mr. Chairman: Well, if the Chairman may just comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Downsview. The Chairman has no desire or intention of restricting debate in connection with these estimates in any way, shape or form. However, on the occasion previously mentioned, the hon. member came in and, without any reference whatsoever to this year's estimates, the questions put were "Now, what is this figure in the public accounts for a certain period consisting of?" There was no reference whatsoever to this year's estimates.

The Chairman maintains that in dealing with the estimates under general expenditure, vote 1701, the hon. member may refer to the matter of government hospitality funds for example, which is $90,000, relate it back to the public accounts of a prior period, and in that manner bring in discussion on the previous public accounts. But, to debate the public accounts as such is not, in the opinion of the Chair, the proper place in this committee of supply.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, where is the proper place?

Mr. Chairman: We have a committee on public accounts.

Mr. Singer: But that is no answer. Surely all members of the House—this is one of our sacred rights—all members of the House are entitled to find out when the appropriate Minister is before the House, what money was spent for. This is the only opportunity we have in the whole session.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman has no intention whatsoever of permitting any long, drawn-out debate in connection with whether or not we can permit debate on the public accounts, whether they should be restricted or not. I put it up to the hon. member if he feels that is a fair and proper place in this committee, proceed.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, if I may, on just one point: The example that you gave us was that we should ask first, is there a similar amount in this year's estimate?

Mr. Chairman: I suggested that would be a proper question.

Mr. Ben: Surely a logical sequence of events would be to ask, for what purpose did you require $51,000 as shown in the public accounts for the last fiscal period? If that answer is given, the next logical question is, are you making the same expenditure in this year's estimates? It would be rather stupid to ask if you have the same amount in this year's estimates without even knowing—

Mr. Chairman: I do not wish the hon. member in any way to appear stupid, so he may ask any question he wishes.

Mr. De Monte: Well again, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister, through you, what was the $29,018.65 spent for? Itemize it, please.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I cannot give it itemized, but I will be glad to obtain it. The total amount to which the member makes reference was what was spent during Centennial year as the entertainment and functions for Princess Alexandra, as part of a series of special guests we had in this province during our Centennial year. The actual breakdown of that figure which the member quotes, I will have to get for him, but that was the total.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, continuing on with this government hospitality fund for a few minutes when you talk about spending this considerable sum, first of all you obviously make no provision for it in advance of the case. I mean it is three or four or five times greater than anything you did make provision for. Surely you realized the Centennial year was on its way—it only happens once in 100 years.

And if you look in the estimates of The Department of Tourism and Information we just completed, there is in excess of $900,000—going on to a million dollars—for entertainment and other forms of expenses under his estimates. We turn over to your estimates and run into another $200,000 when you voted $40,000 to start with.

My main objection to it is, at least in part, the way it falls. It looks to me that there is a greater tendency now—and I would like some explanation from the Minister—to allocate moneys under these things to the press, to the journalists. Now, the reasons for my objections are obvious on the face of them. I would not want to see—and I am sure the hon. Minister would not see—the press subverted under a hospitality fund.

But on four occasions in the year of the public accounts which we are discussing—I might relate it to the present year and I trust it does not happen and is not in your present budgeting arrangements, despite the fact you have increased it to $90,000—you gave out money to the Canadian ethnic press association in excess of $2,000, the Canadian weekly newspapers association for $1,600; then again, what was mentioned, the Toronto Men's Press Club By-Line Ball, $4,500; and again the Ontario Weekly Newspaper Association, close to $1,000.

This is the first time that it appeared to public knowledge. In occasions in the past the press have been mentioned, but just once, as I recall. But here it seems to be getting to proliferate, and I want to scotch it, if humanly possible, and get some assurances. I cannot imagine why the press would need sums of money to start with, and there are a number of other items here. I cannot imagine why they would need your assistance at all either.

But just staying on that one point, I wonder if the Minister would have any comment to make.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I think when this matter comes before us annually, the very important point that we keep in mind is that we do not apply a means test in the disposition of these funds. I am sure that one could take a look at the applicants from time to time who write to the department in connection with their convention or seminars and come to the conclusion that there is not any one of them that could not afford to have it themselves, if that were the only test, namely, a means test.

Surely the hospitality fund is what it says, it is an opportunity for the government of Ontario to extend hospitality to those who come to this province to have their meetings or their functions. Now, if this is the case, the name of the organization or the function of the group, really is not relevant, and it just so happens that, in the movement around Canada the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association meet in Toronto this year and next in Regina.

I want to underline that the main rationale behind the disposition of these funds is that the province would in fact be the host to these groups coming from outside the province in most cases to have their functions here, and to be accorded, as I say, the hospitality of the province.

As to the other point, as you will recall last year when we discussed these estimates, we were attempting to introduce some factor with respect to these estimates that would be somewhat realistic to what had been expended on hospitality in the past. I know the member's point is well made, that for Centennial year we made no special provisions with respect to the hospitality fund.

The visits of heads of state and these special visitors for Centennial year were co-ordinated through the Centennial commission by the heads of state planners here and the expenses for this were charged to the hospitality fund. We had no idea how many of these special visitors would elect to come here as opposed to the other visits, as I explained last Friday morning.

So, I think if he were to take the heads of state visits out of that sum to which the member made reference—in excess of $200,000—and remove them from the consideration, he would see that there is some relationship between the sums voted for hospitality under normal circumstances compared to the special circumstances of 1967.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I do not see the rationale. I cannot for the life of me see what rule of thumb or what divination is used in choosing. The Minister says that we extend hospitality to those coming from outside the province, but surely that is not the case with respect to the Ontario Weekly Newspaper Association or to the By-Line Ball of the Toronto Men's Press Club, and this same reservation runs all the way through.

The Minister says they have plenty of "filthy lucre" of their own with which to have this entertainment. He said the means test was not the test that was utilized here, it was not a question of whether they had the moneys or not really, it was a question of the open-handedness of this province with respect to visitors. But I would daresay if you went through this, a good third or more would not be visitors at all from outside the province. They are people within the province, not only within the province but well equipped financially to look after their own entertainment. And if such is the case then the fund is presently being abused and continues to be abused.

You look back over the years . . . in 1966-67 you voted $40,000 and you spent $57,000. Back in 1961 was the last year in which you stayed anywhere close to the $40,000. You had $43,800 that year. Last year you voted the $40,000 and you got to $207,000. Then you voted $65,000 to come into this year and now you are jumping it again.

But this is subject to great abuse and you know what is in the back of our minds. We are terribly concerned that the government does not use taxpayers fund—that is, the money out of all our pockets—to play games and to fructify its friends or to win friends, in any event, through this particular device. It seems to me that up to a point, particularly where the nub twitches, that is with the press, that you are turning into that area.

I would like just to come back on 50 per cent of the cases, the four cases here, your argument does not sustain itself. How do you account for the other two?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that although we talk about this by-line ball, it is my understanding that this is the Canadian Newspaper Association's annual event whereby they make the presentation of their awards. Now to refer to it as the Toronto By-Line Ball is not really to represent to the House the correct name of the sponsoring group which is, I understand, the Canadian Newspaper Association or some such name.

All I can say to the member is that he is just entitled to an opinion like anyone else and I can assure him—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): You cannot justify it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, that is not the case at all. If you want to have the last word, to have it on record, then leave it there if it makes you feel better. I only tell you we try our best to live within the guidelines we have already laid down and, within our budget, to extend the hospitality of the province.

I can assure you there is no attempt other than to deal with each application on its own merits concerning the people who are in the association or organization which is having the meeting.

Mr. Peacock: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make it clear to the Minister that I do want to challenge him to justify the increase in this expenditure, if not the whole expenditure. When we have just had a Budget in which grants to our health fields have been cut back and in which one programme after another has been deferred, or postponed, how can we bring this estimate in here with an additional $25,000 spending on such falderal as this? I suggest he has no justification at all for continuing—never mind increasing—the expenditure under this vote.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well that is a very reasonable question and I might say the first time it has been asked. I will be very happy to attempt to answer it.

It is my understanding, on the basis of increased costs, that in order to do the same amount of entertaining and to accomplish what we did last year, we will require these additional funds.

One keeps in mind that, after consulting with the various places where these functions will be held—and we have no control over that, because these conventions are held in different parts of the province—it was decided that increased costs necessitated us asking for this additional amount of money to do about the same amount of work as the preceding fiscal year. That is a very reasonable question.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one more question? I am not so familiar as the Minister with the philosophy of hospitality, but I wonder if he could indicate to me, in view of the ignorance I suffer from in this field, just what the philosophy is behind government assistance to the holding of such events as the By-line Ball? Is this to further the quality of journalism in this province? What is the purpose of the grant to the By-line Ball?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We do not identify ourselves with the function as such. I have never attended the function, so I really do not know that much about it except that it is a function sponsored by the Canadian Newspaper Association.

Journalists from across this country assemble here to make presentations to those of their members who have distinguished themselves in certain aspects of this Association's activities. The province adopts this as an opportunity to welcome these people from across Canada who meet here for this purpose.

So, the whole philosophy behind it is one of hospitality. And it is the same for any of these people who ask for our assistance or who advise us that they are meeting in our province. As you perhaps know, a special menu is provided and, in some cases, the government of Ontario welcomes the delegates and affords them hospitality in different forms, depending on the nature of the meeting.

Mr. Peacock: Could I ask a question in a somewhat different area, Mr. Chairman, before we leave this vote?

Could the Minister tell us in what manner the $5,000 under the statutory vote to Ministers Without Portfolio will be spent?

Hon. Mr. Welch: You are referring to the statutory item under vote 1701? That is their salary, $2,500 each.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1701? The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, before we leave this vote, might I ask of the Minister; is this where we might discuss the scrolls that are presented to couples who are celebrating 50th anniversaries?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, I hate to let this vote go by without saying something in this regard because, from first-hand knowledge, I think all members of this House are aware of the wonderful feeling that it brings to couples which are presented with these particular scrolls.

I am sure it is something we would like to see continued. Our federal counterparts are somewhat jealous of the method in which the province recognizes these couples who have succeeded in being very worthy citizens of our province.

Approximately how many of these scrolls are given out in a year? What is the budgetary estimate for this year?

Hon. Mr. Welch: In round figures, I think about 3,500 scrolls for various reasons, depending on birthdays and anniversaries. As you know, we budget for that number.

Mr. Paterson: Might I ask, have these been purchased from one source over the years? Are the frames put out for tender from time to time? And approximately what is the cost of the 3,500 scrolls?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Slightly under $4 per scroll is the cost. We have had an arrangement for some years with respect to their production, so that we do not have to carry a large inventory and get them only as we require them.

We are giving some thought to the design of the scroll and will perhaps be discussing this with members shortly as to whether or not the time has come when we might sort of change the format of these, to make them just a little different. But we have not yet progressed to the point where I have—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What are you going to put on the top? "The province of opportunity greets you"?

Mr. Paterson: Might I follow up on this? I take it from the Minister's remarks that these have been purchased from one source over a period of time and a satisfactory—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Not necessarily. I am glad you asked that, because I did not cover that point in my answer. We have changed suppliers from time to time because we have had some trouble in the past with the frames and so we have been shopping around as far as this is concerned.

Mr. Paterson: Yes. Therefore, if a person had the largest manufacturer of these frames in his own particular riding, it might be worthwhile if that manufacturer submitted a bid to the department if they were interested in this.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If anyone has any designs at all—certainly the department would be interested.

Mr. Paterson: Have your officials looked into the matter of using plastic frames? I notice the change of frames for sale in department stores.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, very much so. We are concerned about it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Talking on memorial wreaths for a moment, I notice that the amount of money has been reduced on this item from previous years. I am not suggesting that it should be more just right at this time, but I would like to put a flea in the Minister's ear on the subject.

You know when we go out with the service clubs on Remembrance Day, there are numerous other wreaths. Our wreaths have been fine up to now, but I have just got the feeling that it should be watched very closely. I mean the YMCAs, the church groups and the others who put forth these wreaths are tending to outdistance us in what we are presenting.

In other words, the prestige of the government of Ontario is, to some extent, at stake in this matter. In this year of retrenchment, it would not be time to suggest we should have more ample or more glorious wreaths. But perhaps in the years to come, the wreaths presented by other organizations less well heeled than ourselves, will outdistance us.

I would not want our wreaths to be dowdy, or for us to be in any way backward about being in attendance and actually placing them on the cenotaphs simply because of their appearance. But there is a bit of that, I feel, at the present time.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask a comparable question in the same area?

Does the reduction of the appropriation mean that you are going to give fewer wreaths, or less expensive wreaths?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am glad this question was raised. Last year when we were voting the estimate, we were a little unsure what the ultimate costs might be in moving to a new size. I think the reduction comes now from more of a refinement of actual costs. If you recall, we used a different wreath last November for the first time. It was slightly larger than the wreath we used in previous years.

We made an arrangement with the poppy fund people of the Canadian Legion to develop the new wreath, so there is no reduction in the number of wreaths. It is just a more accurate estimate of the costs of this new wreath.

I appreciate the comments of the member for Lakeshore. I have had these points mentioned to be before and I think it is something we should keep under close scrutiny.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1701; the hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): On vote 1701, Mr. Chairman: would the hon. Minister in line with the statement on the Budget made by the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), advise us what was the amount his department requested to have approved by the Treasury Board for the whole of the department and by what amount was it cut back by the Treasury Board and which programmes of the Minister's department were curtailed, as this is specifically, as I recall, one of the departments where the curtailment of activity took place.

Could the Minister specify on each of those three items?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Would the hon. member be prepared to leave that with me? We will be back to these estimates, so I can give you those particulars.

There have been some inter-departmental changes which are reflected in these estimates, and if the member would allow me to get that information in more detail, I will see that he has it before these estimates are completed.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister fully understands the questions which I raised covering the whole of this department for the $7,187,000 to be voted?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Right.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, in going through the hospitality fund, one cannot help wondering how you arrive at the amounts of money that are spent on the various visiting dignitaries. I note big variances from one dignitary to the next. I am curious to know if you do not have a set programme, or pattern, of entertainment that you follow—regardless of where this person may come from—under normal conditions.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If the hon. member is making reference to our special visitors during Centennial year, I am really unable to give any general guidelines; it depended on the time of day they arrived and the types of functions which were, in fact, planned for them.

I might say the actual planning for the heads of state was conducted by the co-ordinator of heads of states visits, in co-operation with the Centennial commission, and so there is quite a variation on the type of functions. I really have no further explanation for that, other than the fact that they varied according to the length of time they were to be with us, the things they wanted to see and the type of functions. In some cases we co-operated with some of the ethnic groups in the community, of course, who were particularly interested in their visit as well.

Mr. Deans: I just wanted to be sure there was no discrimination involved. I look at Princess Alexandra with $29,000 spent, while some poor soul from the Republic of China gets $320 spent on him. I am just curious as to how you decide these things.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Discrimination would be the last factor that would enter our departmental activities.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1701. The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, who figures out the guest lists when there is an invitation, for instance, to Premier Guiseppe Saragat's banquet? Who set up that guest list?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If we are going back now to discuss the visits of heads of states, the co-ordinator of the heads-of-state visits for Ontario, who is the secretary of the Cabinet, would work in consultation with the consular corps, the ethnic community represented by the dignitary, and so on.

It has to be very flexible depending on the guests and the length of time or duration of their visit.

Mr. De Monte: I ask you this question then, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. J. Renwick: May I just intervene on a point of order? The Chairman will recall the discussion which took place, and the concern of members, about the private members' hour. As it is 5 o'clock, it might be well if we adhered to the time for the private members, to avoid—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member's remarks are well placed.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The house resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth) moves second reading of Bill 42, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, once each half hour in this country a child takes poison. Because of this, I feel it is necessary for us in this House today to take a serious look at whether or not we can take action to somehow or other relieve these children, who have no way of taking care of themselves, from the hazards and dangers involved.

One of the most common poisons taken by children is the common headache tablet. It is the leading cause of poisoning to all Canadian children and it causes a quarter of the child deaths from all forms of poisoning in this country. I might point out that the great majority of the deaths happen to children in the two and three year category—two- and three-year-olds.

I realize that practically all of the poisonings—whether they result in death, or whether they result in the infamous stomach pumping operation that takes place in many of the hospitals every day—arrives from the negligence of adults. But I do not think that we should allow this in any way to preclude us from taking whatever action we can.

I recognize that the food and drug directorate of the national health department has taken some action to reduce the dangers and has brought about regulations that will necessitate drug manufacturers to label packages with special warnings of danger of overdose and of improper usage, as they relate to children. Unfortunately, the majority of the children who are the victims of poisoning are under the age to read. They are much below the five years of age level and, of course, any comments that are written on a label on a bottle really makes little sense to them.

Up until recently it was very, very difficult to devise some method whereby we could safeguard the children. But, of late, what have been called child-proof containers have come on the market. Having viewed some of them, I believe that if we were to take the necessary action in this province and make it mandatory for the manufacturers of drugs to use these containers, we would be able to drastically cut down on the number of child deaths and, indeed, on the number of child poisonings in the province.

I want to refer to a newspaper article; it says: "New Container is Found Safer for Medicines." I want to make it clear at this point that I do not intend to beat the drum for any particular manufacturer, so I will avoid as much as possible mention of this particular container that I have in mind, because I know that there are others on the market. And I am quite happy to accept any one at all made by anyone, provided it meets with the criteria of safety. It says:

The use, in two test areas, of a new push-and-turn type of plastic container for medicines has reduced by more than 80 per cent the number of children accidentally poisoned from eating medicines or toxic household products.

In a report to the American Academy of Pediatrics, a research team in the Fort Lewis and McChord areas of Tacoma, Washington, found that small children who tried to force open these containers to get jelly beans or pennies deliberately placed inside them could not do so.

Similar containers were used for prescription tablets and capsules dispensed in Essex County, Ontario, during two periods last year and this year.

This was 1967 and 1968.

Approximately a million containers were used in the Ontario test. There were reports of 21 instances in which children ate the contents and were poisoned. In three of these the child did manage to get the cap off. In the other 18 instances, the container tops were found to be improperly locked by the parents.

At Madigan General Hospital in Tacoma, it was found that in the areas where the new containers were used the cases dropped from 45 in 1967 to six up to October 31, 1968.

There was a 97 per cent decrease in poisoning rates when the post exchanges at Fort Lewis and McChord Air Base attached one of the new containers to each bottle of orange-flavoured children's headache pills.

They go on to explain how the pliable plastic caps on these containers work. But this is of very little importance, because at least we have devised a way whereby we can safeguard children from themselves and this is of vital importance.

In my research into this area I came across an article and I want to put it on the record. I think it very clearly states what I would like to say about the use of this particular type of container, and it does it perhaps even much better than I could have done had I done it myself.

So I would like to read from an article in Steel Shots magazine, of the city of Hamilton. It is put out by Local 1005 of the Steelworkers of America. It is written by one, Pat Murtfeldt, and he is talking about family safety, and I quote:

It lurks in medicine chests, under kitchen sinks, in laundry room cabinets. It cleans, it deodorizes, it cures. And it kills. Five hundred children died from swallowing it last year. And the year before, and the year before that.

They were innocent victims—exploring, testing, judging the newness of their environment. Then they were stricken without warning. More than once a day in the United States, the stage is set:

And as I point out, once every half hour in Canada.

Mother reaches for her headache pills—the pretty red ones—and swallows a couple while her two-year-old son looks on.

Twenty minutes later a little boy is rushed to a nearby hospital to get his stomach pumped while his anxious parents wait and wait.

In another home, another city, two youngsters are playing doctor. One feigns sickness while the other climbs onto the bathroom vanity, grasps a bottle of "candy" pills, and feeds a handful to his patient. The fantasy ends, and so does the child's life. Scenes just like these are enacted each day in homes that hardly expect them.

And I might say at this juncture—going away from this particular document—that this happened in my own home not too long ago, where we believed that one of our children had eaten car sickness pills, and caused a great deal of anxiety. So I am speaking from personal concern as well as from concern for the other children in this province.

Sometime the curtain comes down quickly, never to be raised again; more often the drama continues for agonizing hours as the victim fights for life. The suspense is overwhelming and the ending too often pitifully sad.

Nearly one-quarter of all deaths from poisoning last year occurred among children under five years of age. Pre-schoolers have endless curiosity. They imitate mother. They judge new objects by putting them into their mouths.

Estimates show that each year about 500,000 of these children swallow poisons but survive. Ingestion of household products, such as turpentine and lye and soaps, accounts for a large number, but more than that, even, is the terrible threat of an accidental medication overdose.

And it is about this that I want to deal.

The toddler's life is endangered when he explores the medicine chest before his parents get up in the morning, when he swallows a handful of vitamin pills from a bottle left open on the kitchen table, when he chews several of the pretty tablets that his mother has called "candy".

Despite warnings from doctors, druggists and drug manufacturers, home poisoning accidents have continued to increase each year, most of the victims being two to three years old.

Birth control pills have become an increasingly dangerous threat in many homes. In fact, a 1966 study of the St. Louis Children's Hospital rated oral contraceptives second only to aspirin in causing accidental poisoning among children. Mothers too often leave these pills within reach of the small child.

The National Clearing House for Poison Control Centres in the United States reported that the most common cause of these fatal ingestions is the easy accessibility of medicines—despite repeated pleas by doctors and druggists, some parents continue to treat medicines carelessly. Labels are misread, pills are transferred to more attractive containers, children hear the medicines described as candy.

And I might make just one warning, if I can, to the general public, that surely those sort of things we can easily avoid.

Yet all along, according to some medical authorities, something other than human error has been involved in poisoning accidents. Why blame only the parents—why stress only education of the mother and child when what is really needed is a safer method of packaging, something that will make the dangerous medicines less available to prying little hands?

One solution of the availability problem is the packaging of the pills individually between two layers of plastic.

But this has really proved to be unsuccessful for most areas. A persistent child can quite easily find a way to pry the plastic up, and although considerably safer than the old containers, such plastic coverings have shown that they just do not protect the child if he is persistent. It has been recognized that it is a good contribution but it is not nearly enough.

Another promising development was initiated when Dr. Henri Breault, director of the poison control centre at Windsor, Ontario, held a contest—

And it is about this that I talk——that he hoped would uncover a new safety closure for containers. The contest rules stated that the package must be easily opened by adults, but next to impossible for children under five to get into.

There were hundreds of entries. So this shows the interest. There were hundreds of entries. Some of them turned out to be adult-proof as well, no one could get into them. But there evolved from this, one particular type of container that was acceptable and I am quite sure others that would be acceptable were we to look into it. And this particular container provided some remarkable results. In Tacoma, Washington, as I said, it was tested on 280 children, aged between one and seven.

Bottles filled with candy and sealed with the closure were issued to the youngsters who were encouraged to remove the candy. Researchers watched anxiously as the children bit into, tore at, twisted, pulled, and pounded the containers. Little tempers flared and tears flowed as they became more and more frustrated. Only one child in the group managed to open the container.

That was good enough for the staff of Madigan Hospital, which began issuing prescription medicines in this particular type of container. During the next six months the number of poison cases entering the hospital plummeted from 45 to 55 per month to only three in six months. Of the three, one occurred when a parent forgot to cap the container after use.

There will always be human errors, but it was reduced from 45 per month to three in six months.

Having received this nearly perfect score, this particular container is now available on the market. And I am sure it is not the only container because I have seen others. I say to you as a parent who is concerned that no matter how careful you are, there is always the day when you inadvertently leave the pill jar on the kitchen table or when you leave the pills on the dressing table or perhaps you leave the aspirins down on the kitchen counter by error, there is always the day and everyone does this, no matter how careful they are. It takes only one such mistake and perhaps a child's life is snuffed out.

Now, we in this House have the opportunity to do something to avoid this. We can also take a great step forward by reducing the accidents, as they have done in Washington, from 55 per month to three in six months. We could make it mandatory in this province for all prescription drugs to be sold in containers that were at least child-proof.

And, if we do this, I feel confident that we will have the same kind of result as they had in the United States. We will have the same kind of results right across the province that we had in the Windsor and Essex areas, and we will save many, many children from death and from sickness. And we will also contribute considerably to the peace of mind of many parents.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that this is the first time that this particular bill has come before the House, at least so far as I can find out, and I recognize there may be some refinements required to it in order to make it acceptable to the industry at large, and acceptable to all members of this House. But I do think the basic premise is good, I think it is necessary since we have advanced technologically to the point where we can provide these containers, that we take the action now to start the ball rolling, towards having them made mandatory across this province. It would assure that, as I started out saying, once every 30 minutes a child is not poisoned in this country. Thank you.

Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill 42, An Act to amend The Public Health Act Relating to Child-Proof Containers.

The use of safety closure for drugs and medicines has been closely studied since 1957. A number of firms have been promoting containers to this purpose with great success, except in the field of moisture-proof containers.

About 1958, the Ontario Association for the Control of Accidental Poisoning was formed in Windsor—primarily through the efforts of Dr. Henri Breault of that city. The OACAP has been supported financially by both the Proprietary Association of Canada and by firms in the industry with an interest in safety closures. In June, 1968, Dr. Henri J. Breault presented a report to the Canadian Pediatric Society's annual meeting in Saskatoon entitled, "Poisonings are preventable—experience with one million child-resistant containers"—which was a collaborative report of two similar pilot programmes conducted simultaneously, separately and independently in Canada and the United States.

Speaking of Windsor, Dr. Breault stated and I quote excerpts from his report:

Our project began in 1963, after 6 years, 5,000 poisonings and several deaths, it had become obvious that we were not in control at the Windsor Poison Centre.

Despite sustained intensive and extensive efforts to educate patients, parents and the public concerning the needless tragedy of childhood poisoning in the home, the situation had remained unchanged. Education as an effective tool in poison control had not been the answer.

The theory of accident prevention embraces reciprocal relationships between protection and education, but protection comes first. Safety closures are the only answer, containers cannot be kept "out of the child's reach" but contents can be "kept out of the child's mouth".

Through a careful sampling of 560,000 consecutive prescriptions on the Green Shield Prescription Plan out of Windsor, we learned that 75 per cent are tablets or capsules—solid prescription drugs. Dispense these in safe containers and you protect the child against 45 million potential poisons! Liquids (oral and lotion) at 18 per cent would be target number two once a moisture-proof container has been developed.

In 1965 the Palm-'N'-Turn child-resistant prescription vial for solid medications was perfected. On January 1, 1967, at the request of the Essex county medical society the 60 pharmacies of the area began using this container for all capsule and tablet drugs.

There were a few exceptions, 30 in all, for various reasons. Finally in April 1968, a letter from the hon. Matthew B. Dymond, Minister of Health for Ontario to all pharmacists of the province settled the matter once and for all. Since that time we have had no unsafe prescriptions. Slide No. 7—Dr. Breault was demonstrating his facts with slides—shows this clearly, beginning with seven in January 1967, ending with zero in May 1968. In the USA, the study revealed that prior to safety vials, the poisoning rate was one per 5,000 prescriptions. Since 1967, including all failures, the poisoning rate has dropped to one in 60,000.

Mr. Speaker, time does not permit further quotes from the eminent authority. However, I would draw to the attention of this House that there are now 30 poison control centres in Ontario, effectively controlling the solid drug formula. But, their reports confirm the significant factor of the dangers of household products, which topped the list.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Is the hon. lady supporting the resolution?

Mrs. A. Pritchard: Now, Mr. Speaker, commendable as Bill 42 is, it does not go far enough, inasmuch as statistics reveal that 90 per cent of accidental poisonings among children under six years of age, were from household products.

I suggest, therefore, that this is the area for drastic action. The hon. Allen J. MacEachen, when Minister of Health, brought this matter before the House of Commons. A special committee on safety closures has been set up. It is to be hoped that their report will ensure safety closures for both household and drug products across the nation.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party I rise to support the principles contained in Bill 42.

In a single year in Canada almost 30,000 people report to the poison control centres due to poisoning from a great number of substances usually ingested accidentally or through ignorance. The staggering total of 6,000 of these accidental poisonings are as a result of the ingestion of one single drug—acetosalicylic acid—most commonly sold under the trade name of aspirin. 5,000 of these poisonings take place in children under 5 years of age.

Another 2,500 poisonings are caused by other drugs and medications sold under various trade names or dispensed under the prescription of physicians.

The use of educational means and advertising to promote safety over the years has proved most ineffective in the control of such poisoning. Prevention must be fostered through inaccessibility to these substances, particularly in regard to young children. The latest statistics from the Hospital for Sick Children Poison Control Centre indicate that during the year ended December 31 last, there were 1,393 children treated in the emergency department for symptoms of poisoning. Of this number, 122 were admitted to the hospital for treatment, and three died.

The leading causes of poisoning according to the records of the Hospital for Sick Children, are ASA or aspirin, sedatives, insecticides, cigarettes, turpentine, cosmetics, furniture and floor polish, bleach and lye. It is apparent from these figures that prescribed drugs and patent medicines are the cause of almost 50 per cent of all the poisonings treated in emergency situations at the Hospital for Sick Children. Of this 50 per cent, nearly 90 per cent are caused by ingestion of over the counter drugs and patent medicines sold by pharmacies and elsewhere in supermarkets. These are packaged and manufactured by the drug industry itself who have taken no steps to protect the public in this regard. There is no question that the time has come that government regulations must be established to enforce the use of approved safety containers designed to prevent accidental poisonings among small children. Safety cap vials have been perfected and used with dramatic reductions in the number of accidental poisonings, particularly among infants and very small children.

Statistical studies and evaluations have been made, and are available, which indicate the value of these containers. Up until 1963 there was very little interest in this area of concern and only educational programmes had been used to attempt to persuade parents of the dangers involved. As I stated before, these proved most ineffective.

In that year, under the direction and impetus of the Windsor poison control centre, as well as the assistance of the Windsor Medical Association, and other interested groups, the Ontario Association of Control of Accidental Poisoning was established. Its purpose was to devise, implement, introduce, and support aggressive procedures and methods for the invention or design of childproof safety caps for the control of accidental poisonings. The association fostered the production of such a container in 1965, which was awarded their seal of approval. In 1967 a detailed study of the use of such containers in the dispensing of prescription drugs was carried out in the two controlled areas that were previously mentioned by the other two speakers.

In the Essex area over half a million prescriptions were dispensed using the Palm-'N'-Turn container. The result of the study indicates that with the total proper use of such containers, poisonings due to dispensed capsules and tablets would be virtually wiped out.

With the almost universal use of the approved child-proof container, the only prescription drug poisonings encountered at the Windsor poison control centre were those from liquid preparations and prescriptions dispensed outside the controlled area, as well as from drug samples, not properly packaged, distributed by the medical profession.

It becomes apparent from the results of these tests that the Ontario Association for the Control of Accidental Poisonings has been successful in having produced a safety vial applicable to common use which has led the North American continent in this field. The association has now been established as a non regulatory body which is providing, on a voluntary basis, a method for the approval and design and use of child-resistant containers. It has already set up requirements and indicated procedures by which it will give its approval to containers for the packaging of both pharmaceutical and household products.

Those safety features for solid medications that are child resistant are now a concrete reality. They are being mass-produced for commercial use and are readily available at a cost only slightly above those that were previously used. The use of these containers, however, has not been as widespread as one would expect within the pharmaceutical retail profession. They are becoming the rule rather than the exception, but there are still many pharmacists within the province who, in dispensing these lethal medications, either because of economic factors or because of apathy, have not used the safety container which has been made available to them.

The Ontario Pharmacists' Association has supported the efforts of the association for the control of accidental poisonings and, within the near future, it is hoped that total use will be made of the Palm-'N'-Turn container, or some equivalent. With the passage of this bill, or its acceptance as part of the government programme, this use would be made mandatory, not only at the level of the dispensing pharmacist, but also by the large manufacturers of over-the-counter merchandise and patent medicines which can be found on the shelves of the drug stores, variety stores, or supermarkets in the province.

The hesitance of the patent medicine manufacturers, as well as the ethical drug companies who manufacture over-the-counter products, to use the proven safety container, is beyond comprehension when one considers the products that are manufactured and distributed by them as a direct result cause over 40 per cent of all poisonings, and over 90 per cent of all poisonings attributed to the ingestion of drugs and medications.

These drug manufacturers and packagers have apparently decided that the economics and expense of packaging with the safety type container are beyond the scope of a reasonable return for them. They have failed to accept the responsibility in regard to the people of our province, and particularly to those young children under the age of five years who are not able to differentiate themselves. How can apathy, disinterest and disregard exist among this affluent group of manufacturers where the life of every child in our province is at stake?

These same manufacturers who, because of the economic factors, refuse to co-operate, at the same time carry on promotional and advertising expenditures which at times represent over 20 per cent of the cost of their production. Acceptability in the market place and the creation of profit is placed far ahead of the safety of people. It is in this context that there is no question that governmental regulation is necessary to make them comply with at least the minimum requirements.

The drug and patent medicine manufacturers within our province seem to understand only the strong arm of the government and without it will continue completely to ignore the urgent need.

The Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) about a year ago indicated his support of the use of this type of container when he sent a letter across the province to all those involved in the packaging of prescribed medications. But apparently he does not have the same attitude towards drug manufacturers, who are by far the worst offenders. There is now a public outcry for the control of the packaging of the most common drug poison— aspirin, or its generic—and editorials have appeared in a good number of newspapers indicating their support for government regulations to control the poisoning of this one specific product.

We ask the Minister of Health to act in at least this one area to provide for the required control. We must, however, note that the bill before us today will eliminate only a portion of the number of avoidable accidents that happen each and every day. The effects of the bill would be at least partially limited by the lack of technical knowledge to produce suitable containers for use with liquid substances, and by the fact that the poisoning of many household products would not be controlled by this bill, because they are not included under the two Acts that are set out in the bill.

It is, therefore, essential that the government provide the control requested in this Act, as well as provide leadership, along with the Ontario Association for the Control of Accidental Poisoning and the research to produce suitable safety controls for many household products such as turpentine, bleach, and floor and furniture polish, which are of equal concern.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): In rising to speak to this bill, Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult, because most of what I have to say has been said many, many times. My only concern is that some day we will pay heed to our own words and enact legislation so it will not be necessary to say them so often.

I must agree with the member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Pritchard). I, too, say the bill does not go far enough. But it is a step in the right direction and if we are to wait until we have an all-inclusive bill before this Legislature, every minute that we waste—every half hour there is another child in the hospital. We cannot afford to wait and while we wait, watch the children die. We are not doing our job here.

As I say, everything that I say now has been said before. We talk about children who eat pills thinking they are candy; how do we stop this? Well, we have one answer in the pill container.

We also have a job of education that has to be done in this province. The companies that bring out the little doctor kits and the little nurses' kits, with the little bottle of pills and tell them how good they are, as children, to play doctor and keep out of mother's hair. We are leading them on the point that all containers contain candy.

We have to educate, not only the companies, but the parents that these are not educational toys unless they educate them towards the dangers of the pills, rather than on the good taste of them.

We have to educate the drug companies who flavour pills so that we can force them down their little throats a little easier. The Aspirin with the orange flavouring. I would much rather take the trouble of convincing my child that it is good for him and that he needs it—if need be, forcing him to take it—than to convince him that it is candy and that it should be taken without any problems.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): How many kids has the hon. member?

Mr. Jackson: To the question from the hon. leader of the Opposition, I have five children and I can assure him that I am extremely worried about the dangers of pills.

To go on, Mr. Speaker, this new container that this bill speaks of, I took one—after we were sent one by the Ontario Safety League—with two aspirin in it, which should not have been in it because they are unlabelled. I took that container and I gave it to four of my boys. The older one can surely open it, he is 16. But the four younger ones go down to two. Two of them opened it. The youngest one could not open it. The second youngest one did open it by jumping up and down on it until he broke it.

However, it did prove to me that under normal circumstances they would not have been able to open that pill bottle. I took a child's aspirin bottle which supposedly has a child proof cap on it—it is a plastic cap that is pushed on and is supposedly too difficult for a child to remove. All four of them removed that cap without any difficulty whatsoever, which proved to me it was not child proof and should not be advertised as child proof.

I am a little worried that as we go along we are more concerned with curing an ill after it has taken place. Every hospital throughout the country is setting up poison control centres and I do not think we will ever be able to do without these centres. But when we listen to the facts that came before us today and realize that over 50 per cent of the reason that those poison control centres are there are because of aspirin and ASA tablets, the most common of all drugs, and the fact that children have too ready access to these drugs.

If we only realized what it costs to this country in human life and in actual dollar bills then surely the ones here or the ones throughout this country that are apathetic towards human life can at least look at their wallet and see how much it is costing them. We put very little effort into prevention. We put a great deal of effort into curing the ills that we cause by our own lack of consciousness.

I had the very unhappy occasion over the weekend of attending a funeral. A funeral of a woman who was 45 years of age. I watched those children and the grief that was in those children at the loss of their mother. Now just imagine the grief of the parents when they see their child lost through something they could have prevented.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, nothing I could put forward now would add to the facts and figures that have come before you. All I can say is that I support the bill and I hope that everyone in this House does.

Mr. R. T. Potter (Quinte): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity of speaking on this bill today. I am afraid I have not got a lot of statistics to back up what I have to say but I am speaking from 25 years' experience as a family doctor.

Everything that we have heard today is perfectly true. We see far too many children poisoned every year from taking drugs or other substances of one kind or another. In my experience I have found that most of these poisons, more than half of them, are of the household variety, of substances such as cleaning solutions, even lye, coal oil, oil of wintergreen, furniture polish and things of this nature.

On the other hand, we still have, as has been stated here today, cases of children dying from ingesting pills or capsules that were prescribed for adults. And last, but by no means least, is the common aspirin tablet that everyone seems to treat very casually and leave all over the place.

Now for most of these solutions we have not got any type of container that is any way foolproof. Certainly, none for the solutions, none for the powders. But we have got one that I am aware of and most of you people are aware of—this container that you have to push the top down and then turn it. I do not believe it is sufficient to say to the pharmacists, please use these containers whenever possible, because it has been stated here today there are still pharmacists that are reluctant to use them, whether because of the cost or because they just are not interested.

On the other hand, so many of these common substances in tablet form that are poisonous to children, are dispensed across the counter and do not have to be put up by a pharmacist. I think it is most important that this type of tablet be put in as foolproof a container as possible. It has also been pointed out this afternoon that the name of this container is a misnomer, that it is really not child-proof and I think that I can bear this out very well.

Most children, after they have seen it used a few times, particularly in the four-to-five-year age group, can open it. On the other hand, I have found that when they have been used by pharmacists, elderly people who are suffering from arthritis or some other type of debilitating diseases, have trouble opening them. So when we are going to use them in one case to help people, for other people they are a hindrance. But the fact that we have not got anything better, Mr. Speaker, is no reason to me why we should not be using today what we have got or what is available to us.

I think that we should make it mandatory that the best container possible be used today. I think that we should encourage research to try to improve this container and at the same time to produce one that can be used for liquids. And last, but not least, I think that we should have an educational programme on the television and newspapers, to try to smarten up us adults and not leave these things around where children can get them.

I think that we cannot remove the responsibility that is ours, to see that we keep these things out of the hands of children as far as possible, but, on the other hand I think that we must use every means possible to see that we use safety containers when we can get them.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add my support to Bill 42, but also to make the point that it does not go far enough, and furthermore that the problems of the "pill culture" in our society today can probably not be solved by legislation. It is interesting to me, Mr. Speaker, to note that at a time when sickness is decreasing in our fairly affluent Canadian society, pill taking is increasing at a phenomenal rate.

I suggest that this dichotomy in our society reflects a lack of responsibility on behalf of the private sector, both those who produce pills and put them into containers as well as those who advertise pills of all sorts—on television especially—implying that if you do not take a pink pill when you are feeling pale, there is something the matter with you.

But I would like to say that the point raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. R. S. Smith), can be endorsed in another respect as well. The hon. member noted that the hesitance of the patent medicine manufacturers, as well as the ethical drug companies who manufacture over the counter drug products, to use the proven safety container, is beyond comprehension when one considers that the products that are manufactured and distributed by them are the direct cause of over 40 per cent of all poisonings, and over 90 per cent of all poisonings attributed to the ingestion of drugs and medicines.

I would like to point out that private sector manufacturers produce little nurses kits like this, Mr. Speaker, which contain all sorts of things in them, including little pills in a number of colours and in a number of containers. Pill containers which open easily. Pills which are made out of candy coated licorice. This is an irresponsible act by the private sector, the manufacture of these little nurses' kits.

A little two-year-old opens up this kit, finds a couple of bottles of pills in it, finds the top comes off—a little snap top—takes the pills out, chews them, and says: "Isn't this nice. In mommy's medicine cabinet there are also pink pills for pale people. I will reach up to mommy's cabinet, take some of the pink pills, take a couple myself and give them to my little six-month-old brother, who will like them too. The pills are very nice."

So I would like to underline the point made by my colleague from Nipissing—if I can get this licorice off my teeth—that the private sector manufacturers have a social responsibility. The sooner they face up to that, the sooner government will get out of their business.

But until the private sector smartens up, until the private sector, itself, adopts an ethical code concerning containers of pills, then this government must act.

Second, the manufacture of nurses' play kits with these candy pills, which inculcate the pill culture in society, which re-enforce the pill culture of parents, is an irresponsible act of promotion by the private sector. Therefore, on behalf of this party, and particularly my colleague from Nipissing, I support this bill, simply stating that it does not go far enough.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, just to support the resolution of my colleague from Hamilton, it might not be a sensational subject, but if the hour spent this afternoon saves the life of one child, it will be well worth while.

I noticed in an article concerning twist-and-turn containers, that eight out of ten children who take poisoned substances are between the ages of one and four. Of course, this container will deter them from getting to the contents inside, but I think the speaker who mentioned the educational job that is needed, touched on an important point.

I think the provincial government can take some responsibility in this regard. The Department of Health could circulate small leaflets or stickers, making them available to drug dispensers, to put on their counters for the purchasers of drugs to take home with them. These would carry the name, location and phone number of the poison control centre in each particular municipality across the province because all the education in the world does no good if people do not know where to go for particular assistance in any case.

And if they are in outlying areas and they have a situation where the child takes a drug, a poisonous substance, and they do not know where to head for immediately, they are in trouble.

So the educational job can be helped by this government in providing leaflets, or stickers, so that every person some time or other gets in their hands the address and location of the poison control centre in their locality, and have it stuck near the telephone. So that, as soon as anything happens, they immediately know where to go and save valuable time and likely a life.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this? Otherwise, the House leader perhaps might deal with the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Deans: Perhaps the Minister would like to comment?

Mr. Speaker: Before the House leader deals with the matter, may I thank the Whips for making arrangements today, because today it would have been possible, if every member on Mr. Speaker's list had spoken his allotted time, to have come within the time limit. I am very grateful for this assistance and I am sure the members feel that the debate runs much better if properly managed from the beginning.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go to the order paper and do some legislation, following which we will return to the estimates.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Which estimates?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The ones presently before the House. We will complete the Provincial Secretary and then back to the Treasurer, and then Social and Family Services, Mines and Transport.

Mr. Singer: Then the public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before you welcome our guests to the galleries this afternoon, perhaps I could be permitted to extend a welcome to Timmy of 1969, who is sitting under the gallery with Whipper Billy Watson, a man known, I think, to all of us, not only for his athletic prowess but for the great work that he has done in the whole area of crippled children over the years.

Timmy and Mr. Watson are here to promote the Easter Seal campaign which we all know is used to raise money from the public for the help of crippled children. His name is Ian Walmsley and he comes from Oshawa. He is 11 years old, he is in Grade 5, he goes to camp every summer, he wants to be a scientist, he has a cat called Sparky—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Do not tell the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart).

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Timmy will have to understand we have some private jokes in this House. He is a boy scout, his favourite hockey team is the Montreal Canadiens, and his favourite players, I am informed, are J. C. Tremblay and Bobby Orr, so perhaps Timmy, you will have some fellow supporters in those wishes of yours, and those interests of yours. I offer a very warm welcome to you, and I offer my congratulations to you for what you are doing on behalf of young people like yourself who have some handicaps to meet, and meet them with such a cheerful smile and with such energy.

I am sure that the campaign will be successful. It would be a sad thing if, in this province, it proved not to be. I am quite sure that with the impetus that we, and many like us, can give this campaign, it will prove to be successful, and once again these young people in our community will be given the support they need in order that they may lead full lives like the rest of us. Welcome to you, Timmy.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if you will permit just another word in welcome to Timmy; I felt, when I saw the young man come in with his formidable bodyguard, that as well as thinking about a career in science, he might even think about politics because he can certainly attract the press and the photographers in a big way.

He has a few interesting weeks ahead of him and his responsibility is a heavy one. I know that he is concerned about not letting his school work get behind, but what he is doing for young people in our province is very much appreciated by all of us, whether or not we have boys at home that age, so I want to join with the Premier in extending a hearty welcome.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to join with the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition in welcoming Timmy and congratulating him on the very good job that he is doing.

He is obviously a lad who leads a rich, full and a broad life, and he has just taken on this added chore as though it were part of the burden of life and, therefore, no burden at all.

I am informed by my colleague from Oshawa that not only has he all the attributes that the Prime Minister has indicated, but he comes from a very enlightened political family.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I know this is rather unprecedented, following the leaders, but I too would like to welcome Timmy and I have already sent him a letter congratulating him on his appointment. I know that when anybody from Oshawa heads up a campaign it cannot possibly be a failure, and I know the Easter Seal campaign will be successful and I want to congratulate Timmy again.

Mr. Speaker: Our other guests this afternoon in the galleries are, in the east gallery, students from Courtice secondary school at Bowmanville; and in the west gallery, from Strathroy collegiate institute in Strathroy, and from Gledhill public school in Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the annual report of the Minister of Lands and Forests of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968; and the annual report of the Inspector of Legal Offices for the year ending December 31, 1968.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the fifth annual report of the pension commission for Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1968.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's twelfth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without further amendment, Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the city of London.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if there are no ministerial statements, I have a question for the Premier.

Can the Premier report further on the negotiations with Texas Gulf Sulphur Company on the location and time of construction of a smelter and/or refinery in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, I am in no position to make a further report. I can only assure the hon. leader of the Opposition, so that he does not need to ask this question every day, that as soon as I possibly can, I will, because I am very interested in making this information available when I have it.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps the Premier would permit a supplementary question? I am sure he is aware and has received the same communications, as all of us as members have, from the mayor of the corporation of the city of Timmins and it would indicate the great concern that the people up there, as well as we as members, feel in this matter.

I have another question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is not in his seat.

An hon. member: Here he comes.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps when the hon. leader of the Opposition has asked his question, the member for York South, who has a similar question, would place it.

Mr. Nixon: Right. Will the Minister explain the factors leading to a Cabinet decision to override the view of the Ontario Water Resources Commission and approve the construction of a 1.4-million-gallon-a-day sewage treatment plant to be built on the west side of Richmond Hill?

Second, were there any threats of resignation from the Ontario Water Resources Commission in connection with this decision?

Last, what part was played by Mr. Hollis Beckett in persuading the Cabinet to overrule the OWRC?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my question is related to one of those asked, as follows: On what basis did the Minister come to the conclusion that the Don River could carry the effluent from the 1.4-million-gallon sewage treatment plant which he authorized for west of Richmond Hill, when the OWRC had already concluded, and laid down a rule, that no more upstream sewage plants would be allowed anywhere in the province, and particularly north of Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question from the leader of the Opposition first.

The decision to approve the construction of the sewage treatment plant was made in consultation with the OWRC, and consequently there was no question of overriding the commission.

The answer to the second part is no.

In answer to the third part, I have already stated that there was no Cabinet decision overriding the OWRC. Mr. Beckett never appeared before Cabinet in connection with this matter, and, therefore could not persuade Cabinet in any way.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I cannot help it. I do not write the paper.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Pretty tricky operation!

Hon. Mr. Simonett: In answer to the question of the member for York South:

The treatment provided at this location is of the most advanced type and meets all requirements laid down for sewage treatment plants by the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

In answer to the second part of the question: I am not aware that the Ontario Water Resources Commission has laid down the rule that no more upstream plants would be allowed anywhere in the province.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister might allow a supplementary question.

Is he aware of the fact that Metropolitan Toronto has spent millions of dollars eliminating package plants of this type south of Steeles Avenue; and that this was with the co-operation of the Ontario Water Resources Commission and under a policy expressed by the vice-chairman, the member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) who does not happen to be here today? I would ask the Minister if he is aware of this conflict in the statement that he has just given the House?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I cannot see where there is any conflict here. I know there is a certain policy laid down by OWRC. As I said last year when I announced that this plant would be built, it was given the approval of OWRC in order to take care of a situation in that particular area at that time. As far as I am concerned there has been no conflict in any place.

Mr. Sargent: No politics are involved at all?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Sargent: The paper is wrong?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister a supplementary question.

He has stated that he is not aware of any such policy or rule having been laid down by the OWRC. That may be correct, but would he ascertain whether or not that rule has, in fact, been laid down?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I might try and ascertain whether the rule has been laid down but I have never heard of it and I have been in discussion with OWRC on many occasions.

Mr. MacDonald: It is the facts we want.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Of course, I cannot vouch for what was said by someone else, but it has never been said to me when I have been talking to the commission and personnel of OWRC.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The fact is the Minister reversed the whole policy of Metropolitan Toronto in this regard.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister answer a question in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Not from a member who has not placed a question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs from yesterday.

Is an appeal to the Cabinet the only recourse for citizens of Belleville who object to the decision by the Ontario Municipal Board handed down March 17, concerning a proposed shopping plaza in the north end of the city of Belleville?

Second, has the Minister received any correspondence with regard to the decision or the possibility of an appeal?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. leader of the Opposition is referring to zoning bylaw No. 8549, as amended by bylaw 8604 of the city of Belleville. The application to the city relating to this matter was heard in Belleville by the Ontario Municipal Board during the week of February 4. The public hearing, I understand, lasted the better part of a week, thus providing the citizens of Belleville a good opportunity to make their views known to the board.

The application to amend the bylaw was dismissed by the board by order dated March 14. In cases of this kind there are four methods of review. Now, sir—first, under section 93 of the OMB Act, by way of a stated case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal on a question of law. Second, an interested party may petition the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council under Section 94 of the Act. Third, an appeal may be taken to the Court of Appeal on a question of law or jurisdiction on leave of the Court of Appeal under section 95 of the Act. And, fourth, the board may review, rescind, change, alter or vary any decision, approval or order made by it under section 42 of the Act.

This method, I understand, is used only occasionally on the ground that new evidence has come to light which was not available at the time of the original hearing.

In reply to the second part of the question, I would advise the hon. leader of the Opposition that no such correspondence has been received to my knowledge. In any case, it should be directed within the required periods of time to the body or person having jurisdiction—that is, the Ontario Municipal Board, through its secretary, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, by filing a petition with the clerk of the executive council, or the Court of Appeal, as the case may be. I have not had any correspondence. I may say that both the hon. member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) and the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Rollins) have been in touch with me on two occasions about this.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a point of order.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question and draw your attention to a situation I found on arrival at the building a short half-hour ago. The front doors of the building were barred by two Ontario Provincial Policemen against citizens wishing to enter the building. I hope we never see such a thing again, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask on whose orders the provincial police were acting? They were barring uniformed citizens of the humane society. Four or five had been allowed in and the rest were barred; however, I understand they have entry now. I challenged Mr. Godfrey, the OPP man, that they were keeping citizens out of a public building. I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, to know if this was done on an order.

Mr. Speaker: This is the first time the incident has been brought to my attention. I know nothing about it. I will be glad to investigate—

Mr. Sargent: Ask the Prime Minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I will be glad to investigate the incident and report to the House.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. One need only have looked out of the window at least 10 or 15 minutes ago, to see that humane society vehicles had virtually cordoned off Queen's Park. I do not believe that people are running about the halls with nets. No members were concerned, but I must say, sir, that it is worth looking into.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: Could the Premier advise what progress has been made in the negotiations with the federal Department of Indian Affairs in regard to the claims of the Indians in the Kenora-Rainy River area to the ownership of land beneath lakes and bays lying between the headlands of reserve territory?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, The Department of Lands and Forests is going through its own records to see what the situation is. It is waiting also for information which is coming from the Indians themselves, who are involved. The department is compiling information through the district office in the area. We do not propose to go outside the department until such time as this information has been gathered, so that, at the moment, in answer to the specific in the member's question, we are not negotiating with the federal Department of Indian Affairs but no doubt that will come in due course after we have gathered the information that lies within the department itself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Before asking my question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps, in reference to the point of order that was raised, it might be wise to send a search party for the Minister of Agriculture and Food who appears to be missing.

I have a question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgent need for a psychiatric unit in Oakville, will the Minister intervene with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission or make the necessary moneys available?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, intervention is not necessary. The Ontario Hospital Services Commission has already given approval in principle for this hospital to establish a psychiatric outpatient clinic in the nurses home on a temporary basis, until these facilities are provided as part of a proposed building programme. The approval is given, of course, on the understanding that it will be contained in the overall list of priorities being reviewed by the commission.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will hear it.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister aware that in yesterday's Oakville paper it was reported that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission had refused the funds because they said they were not available?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have already answered the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has a question of this Minister.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Health: In view of the fact that the community of Schreiber is shortly to lose its only doctor and that doctor shortage is a critical problem in Northern Ontario, will the Minister act immediately to provide basic health services for that community and wherever needed?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I answered this question on March 4, 1969, and I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition may wish to place his question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs: Will the Minister explain the decision taken by the Ontario Securities Commission to enquire into the CBC news item dealing with the discovery of rich uranium prospects in Quebec?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the securities commission that this is a routine matter. It is not a formal enquiry. I assume that they are requesting information from all concerned in view of the press statements about the magnitude of the alleged find, and the claims that were made with respect to the content of uranium per ton which, in the press story I have before me, is quoted as being that the property contained some 29 million tons of uranium, with ore values ranging as high as 11 lbs. per ton. I would assume that the commission's interest in the matter arose from the fact that the highest content per ton, with respect to Canada's largest uranium producer — the Dennison Mines—averages just over three lbs. per ton.

Mr. Shulman: Complete fabrication, that story.

Mr. Nixon: Could the Minister tell the House how many companies holding property in that area are listed? Are several of them listed on our stock exchange in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I could not answer that.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you. Will the Minister tell us further, is it a customary practice of the securities commission to enquire into the veracity of public accounts of this type?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would think that it would be a matter of good business acumen that the commission would try to keep abreast of press stories and information that is disseminated to the press.

Mr. Nixon: Beyond that—and this will be my final question if the Minister will permit it—would the securities commission be prepared to issue a statement disclaiming the truth of the press report?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would not go that far. I have always taken the position, with respect to departments of government or commissions with which I have anything to do, that if they perform their function they must keep abreast of the times and know as much as possible about what is going on: They must keep abreast of all information so that they are updated with respect to the subject matter that concerns them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Treasurer has a reply to a question asked on March 13 by the member for High Park, number 898.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to request your indulgence to make a rather lengthy reply to this question, since I believe the facts deserve careful examination.

I expect that the member for High Park, because of his reputation for research, is well aware of all the circumstances. I trust, however, he will not object to my intention of providing a full explanation of this matter to the members of the House.

The Mrs. Pearl Campbell named in the question was widowed in February, 1968. Her husband died of that most unfortunate disease, leukemia, following an illness of some two years. At his untimely death, she had four children, one of whom was born exactly one month before the loss of her husband.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that these were most tragic and trying circumstances for this mother.

Following the birth of her child, Mrs. Campbell was unemployed until September, when she joined the staff of the Ontario School for the Deaf in Milton as a contract teacher. She is now attending the teacher education centre in Belleville for one year for special education. Previous to that, the Ontario government had provided her with a mother's allowance to help her through her difficult period of mourning and childbirth.

I do not intend to elaborate on her financial circumstances. With the lengthy illness of her husband and the family she was serving, one does not need much imagination to conclude that Mrs. Campbell was faced with considerable difficulty and was receiving little income with which to meet it. I think it is significant to note, Mr. Speaker, that Mrs. Campbell was not prepared to give in to the circumstances and problems that confronted her; she was not content to sit back and get along with the mother's allowance she was receiving.

As I have mentioned she joined the staff of the Ontario School for the Deaf at Milton as a contract teacher, taking a one year in-training course to secure a specialist certificate.

Her personal physician, Dr. Neville Weston, has written that Mrs. Campbell is a competent, hard-working teacher. She has many responsibilities and merits every support and encouragement.

Against this background, the facts of which were not difficult to obtain, and many of which were outlined in several letters related to the pertinent question, another development unfolds, which involves the firm of Phil Glanzer Associates, 223 Coldstream Avenue, Toronto 12, which describes itself as agents in division court. As best I can interpret the file, the firm obtained a judgment against Mrs. Campbell for $121 and costs on March 15, 1968, one month after the death of her husband and two months following the birth of her fourth child. The judgment was obtained in the sixth division court of Halton county located in Burlington.

For reasons which I suggest are quite obvious, Mrs. Campbell was not able to meet judgment and the firm of Phil Glanzer Associates, on September 25, 1968, obtained a court order under which Mrs. Campbell was to pay $5 a month beginning on October 1, 1968. I point out again that the order was obtained from the division court at Burlington.

On October 23, 1968, the transcript of the court order was sent to the first division court of Hastings county in Belleville. In the interests of brevity, let me trace the action of Phil Glanzer Associates in their tenacious pursuit of this judgment.

On November 18, 1968, the firm obtained a direction to garnishee, forwarded to the Ontario School for the Deaf where Mrs. Campbell was located.

On November 22, the superintendent of the school, after pointing out that employees of the provincial government cannot be garnisheed without permission, advised that Mrs. Campbell was making payments to the sixth division court. He outlined Mrs. Campbell's intention to meet her obligations, obviously convinced that the mother was meeting her responsibilities despite the ordeal she had been through.

On November 23, Mr. Phil Glanzer, of Phil Glanzer Associates, wrote to me stating categorically that Mrs. Campbell's statement of intentions could not be believed and requesting me to require her to pay $10 each pay day, which is every second week. That same day he also wrote to the superintendent of the school for the deaf noting haughtily that employees of the Ontario public service can be garnisheed, and stating that Mrs. Campbell had done nothing to relieve her debt, except to use subterfuge to avoid payment. He accused her of shifting from one address to another, stated her word means absolutely nothing and wondered how the superintendent could be so naive as to believe her explanation.

On November 25, Mr. Glanzer arranged for the clerk of the sixth division court of Halton county to send an affidavit to the superintendent that she had received no moneys on the judgment.

On November 26, Mr. Glanzer demanded further action from the superintendent of the school, calling Mrs. Campbell "a bare-faced liar".

On November 20, Mr. Glanzer wrote my officials to state that Mrs. Campbell's claims that she had made payment were a figment of her imagination.

On February 13, Mr. Glanzer rebuked the superintendent's defence of Mrs. Campbell by stating categorically that the division courts had received no payments since December 5.

On February 21, Mr. Glanzer wrote to my administrator stating that Mrs. Campbell was playing games, and that the division court in Hastings had received no payment.

On March 10, my administrator advised Mr. Glanzer that Mrs. Campbell had paid $20 to the court, covering the $5 a month judgment for the months of October, November, December and January, and that she had paid a further $5 on February 18, thereby meeting the terms of the judgment.

I understand she has subsequently paid $10 for the months of March and April of 1969. I might explain here that Mrs. Campbell tendered payments to the division court in Burlington, but these were not accepted since the order had been transferred to the court in Belleville.

On March 12, Mr. Glanzer appealed by letter to the member for High Park, suggesting that The Ontario Department of Education refuses to implement the payments, advises him that provincial government employees are immune from garnishment, and states categorically that my department simply refuses to do anything about this situation. He further asks in that letter to the member for High Park, "Are we going to allow The Department of Education to harbour a known judgment debtor and refuse to make deductions on a legitimate court judgment?" He concluded his appeal to the member for High Park by stating "We would appreciate your co-operation in this matter".

The question before you, Mr. Speaker, indicates that the member for High Park has agreed to co-operate with Mr. Phil Glanzer of Phil Glanzer Associates in this particular matter. I must assume that in his energetic endeavours to embarrass this government on any pretext, and without regard to the pain he may cause individuals, he hopes to put me in a compromising position by asking this question.

I have one further document to read into the record, Mr. Speaker, a letter from the family physician, Dr. Neville Weston, to whom I made reference earlier. At this point I might explain that the collection undertaken by Phil Glanzer Associates was on behalf of that same doctor, who had moved from Ontario to St. Vincent's Hospital in New York. Dr. Weston noted that "I have received no communication from the above-mentioned associates in almost two years". Let me quote directly from Dr. Weston's letter:

Mrs. Campbell and I have been, and remain, close personal friends for these many years. Her receiving a bill at all must have been a secretarial error, she being covered by a PSI contract to the best of my recollection.

Aspersions and inferences concerning Mrs. Campbell I consider unwarranted and untrue to say the least. It is to be hoped that her career and future prospects will not in any way be prejudiced by Mr. Glanzer's communication.

The doctor then concluded with the statement I quoted earlier to the effect that Mrs. Campbell is a competent person, with many responsibilities, who merits every support and encouragement.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this detailed explanation will answer the question as to why my department has refused to make the requested payroll deductions.

I might also state categorically, sir, in case there may be supplementary questions, that I will not be pressured into doing so by the hon. member for High Park. I do not know what his objectives are, nor what his association is with Phil Glanzer Associates, but may I say to you, sir, that I will not countenance any further demands from either the member for High Park, nor Phil Glanzer Associates, concerning this case.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments and allusions made by the hon. Minister I must say that I asked the Minister for information, as I would if any constituent had written to me. The allusions and suggestions made by him are a flat lie.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): There goes the member's credibility again.

Mr. MacDonald: The latter part of the answer is completely out of order.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Just creditable to the Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Trade and Development. Has Texas Gulf Sulphur consulted or discussed with the government the possibility of an equalization of industrial opportunities loan in connection with building their zinc smelter?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is no, because this is a federally designated area and we do not give grants under the EIO programme to federally designated areas.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I have a question of the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Would The Department of Trade and Development be prepared to offer a loan or a grant to Algoma Steel if they decided to extract and/or process the large tonnage of iron ore in the Geraldton area under lease from the Longlac group?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, their application would be looked at. The merit of the application would be on the basis of processing, not extraction. If they made an application on that basis, we would give it consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question from March 21 of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Lands and Forests: How much revenue will accrue, approximately, from the sale of fishing licences this year and what will it cost to sell these licences?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Sudbury East, the sale of angling licences should bring the following revenue: the resident angling licences about $2,150,000, non-resident angling licences $3,100,000—making a total gross revenue of $5,250,000. The cost to sell these licences, which consists of printing and issuer's fees, should be about $466,000.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure the people of Ontario that they will not be required to pay income tax on their tax rebate?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, this is a tax reduction programme and the home owner benefited by having his tax bill reduced by the amount of the applicable tax credit.

In the case of tenants, whose municipal taxes are a component of the rent structure, the landlord was required to pass the benefit to tenants by way of a reduction in rent or by a cash rebate.

In both cases, the amount of the rebate is a reduction of expenditures, and in my opinion would not be subject to income tax in the hands of the individual householder.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

I would like to ask the Minister: He does not see the tax rebate, then, as income?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of this Minister, the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In the past decade there has been "unacceptable deviation", according to the association of assessors, in the ratio of assessment value to market value in every county. Will the Minister advise:

1. In how many counties the variance is more than ten per cent?

2. In how many counties is the variance between 15 and 30 per cent?

3. Will the Minister estimate how many millions of dollars will be lost because of the variance?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the variance of assessed values from one municipality to another in all the counties of the province is greater than ten per cent. In fact, the variance is greater than 30 per cent in every county as well.

It is reasonable to say that until the advent of county assessment each municipality had its own assessor, who acted and valued property independently from all other assessors in the county. Since some assessors valued property at fairly high rates and others had lower rates, it is reasonable that the variance should exist. The county assessment commissioner system was developed in the hope that the variance could be reduced substantially, if not erased entirely. The County Assessment Commissioner System was developed in the hope that the variance could be substantially reduced if not erased entirely.

The programme could only be successful if each county assessment commissioner undertook and completed a revaluation of all properties in all of the municipalities within the county. None have so far completed this work, and in fact only a few have started to reassess.

It is also worth noting that not only is there a variance among municipalities within the counties in excess of 30 per cent but there are variances among the classes of properties within each municipality of greater than 30 per cent. I would refer the hon.

member to the appendix to chapter 13 of the Smith committee report which gives in detail the results of that committee's finding in this regard.

It is impossible to estimate accurately the total loss of revenue through poor assessment practices throughout the province by the under assessment of certain properties, or worse still the fact that certain properties are not assessed at all.

The total tax requirements of the municipalities must be met regardless of the condition of the assessment on which it is based. So from that point of view no revenue is in fact lost. However, we have estimated that relative to the average of assessment of the municipality, some property owners are under assessed by an amount of assessment that would produce taxes in excess of some millions of dollars. I am not sure that we can assume that the property owners that are assessed above the average pay too much taxes in an equivalent amount.

It is safe to say, however, that far too many property owners are paying too little taxes relative to the average and that others are forced to make up the difference by paying too much.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: If in the last ten years we are supposed to have been operating under the provincial manual and your manual would have negated the need for this variance, why has it not been put into effect in every municipality?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have no doubt that we will discuss this during the course of my estimates, Mr. Speaker; or perhaps in the course of the legislation. I think the important thing is that we are doing something about it.

Mr. Sargent: Ten years later!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Sargent: The municipalities are losing hundreds of millions of dollars and he does not know anything about it!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister will please leave the member alone.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, leave me alone.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member place his question now to the Attorney General?

Mr. Sargent: Will the Attorney General advise what steps have been taken—as of this hour—to release Mary Cameron from the Walkerton Jail? She has been held there without trial for six weeks on a drunk charge because she would not wear a dress instead of slacks in court.

Second, what steps is the Attorney General taking toward the dismissal of this county judge, Otto McLevis?

Third, how many judges in Ontario are unaware of the civil rights of citizens?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I notice some interpolations in the question from the way I have received it.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not put as many in the answers!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am looking into the whole matter and I will give an answer very shortly.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister told me that last night. At 6.00 of the clock last night he said that he would have an answer today. And this is the answer of today.

An hon. member: She is still in jail!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We were not in the House last night.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a question to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Well, the hon. member is rather in a dilemma, because there has been no answer to the question and therefore, no question supplementary to the answer.

Mr. Sargent: Well, he—

Mr. Speaker: No, there cannot be a supplementary. That was decided the other day.

Mr. Sargent: This is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is serious.

Mr. Sargent: A person has been held—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member cannot make a statement and he—

Mr. Sargent: Can the Minister answer the question?

Mr. Speaker: The member cannot ask the Minister another question; he has asked his question.

Mr. Sargent: Let him row his own boat here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is not in a position to say he will answer it or not. The rules of the House do not allow such a question to be put. Other members have tried in the past and so has the hon. member. I have no objection to it but we are in the same position as we have been in the past, that these are the matters that should be dealt with.

The hon. member for Hamilton East has a question of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Public Works:

Is the land acquisition branch of The Department of Public Works negotiating to acquire land for provincial park development known as the "Fifty-Point Project" in Saltfleet township?

If so, with whom are they negotiating—individual owners or land developers?

If land developers, who are they?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would draw the attention of the House to the anniversary of the National Independence Day of Greece, which is March 25, celebrating the emergence of that country to independence in 1821. I know that all here would want to join with the Greek people who are in Canada in wishing that the events of April 21, 1967, will soon evaporate from their history so that Greece will be restored or will return to the democratic tradition, which is such a valuable contribution to the heritage of the western world.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wonder if the Premier could indicate to the House when he intends to call the Constitutional debate once more. I know he is aware of how important this is, particularly as many of the members still have not had the chance to express their views.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to call it whenever the Whips will indicate to me who wants to participate. The same is true of the Budget Debate. To date I do not think anyone has indicated they are ready to go on.

I think we might safely refer this to the Whips and when they have a list of speakers I will be pleased to find a position in the business of the House to call them.

Mr. Sargent: The same way he is going to raise the pay.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill 1, An Act to amend The Evidence Act.

Bill 17, An Act to amend The Milk Act, 1965.

Bill 22, An Act to amend The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act.

Bill 50, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Bill 56, An Act to amend The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964.

Bill 60, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Bill 61, An Act to amend The Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act.

Bill 62, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the Statutes.

Bill 63, An Act to provide for the consolidation and revision of the Regulations.

Bill 65, An Act to amend The Change of Name Act.

Bill 66, An Act to amend The Matrimonial Causes Act.

Bill 67, An Act to amend The Deserted Wives' and Children's Maintenance Act.

Bill 68, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Bill 69, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, as a fitting epitaph to this next particular bill on The Department of Justice and to the setting up of this particular department outlining the criteria and the scope of the responsibility for the Attorney General and Minister of Justice in this province, I would like to read into the record a brief statement which I adverted to only in part in the earlier part of this debate. As I say, it will cap, perhaps, the proceedings touching this bill.

I want to advert to the book called "Criticism of the Bar" published in 1819 by John Payne Collier, who said this of the Attorney General:

Of all the offices in the gift of the Crown, that of the Attorney General is perhaps least to be coveted for, whether the government be popular or unpopular, the person filling that place can scarcely avoid being the object of general dislike. He is only to be considered as a servant of servants, the curse of the Israelites. The Attorney General stands forward almost alone as the public spy, informer and prosecutor. The wrath of the parties and the dislike of the nation at large are levelled principally against him.

It shows how long a way we have come since 1819. We cannot at this date think thus of the Attorney General and his office. This bill will bear out the important role and distinction he will have to play when not being so regarded within our law.

Having, partially as a result of his own personal merits, brought this office into esteem in Ontario, the Attorney General will still have to face the very grave implications to him that are contained in the operation of that bill. I commend him on putting the bill before the House and bringing it into being. I exhort him and hope to be able to compliment him in the future as to the exercise of the powers so conferred upon him.

Bill 70, An Act respecting The Department of Justice.

Bill 71, An Act to amend The Fines and Forfeitures Act.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I think these next three bills—78, 79 and 80—should be repealed and the government should launch their taxation in the areas that can afford it—the areas of corporations, insurance companies and banks. I think it is high time, when every other economy is looking for a way to reduce taxes. In these three bills we are loading the taxes and soaking the poor.

I am opposed to these three bills.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has covered the three of them in one statement.

Bill 78, An Act to amend The Tobacco Tax Act, 1965.

Bill 79, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Bill 80, An Act to repeal The Hospitals Tax Act.

Bill Pr2, An Act respecting Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the town of Burlington.

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting the city of Niagara Falls.

Bill Pr7, An Act respecting Bobier convalescent home.

Bill Pr8, An Act respecting the town of Lindsay.

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting March Diamond Drilling Limited.

Bill Pr10, An Act respecting the town of Parry Sound.

Bill Pr11, An Act respecting the city of Cornwall.

Bill Pr14, An Act respecting the county of Ontario.

Bill Pr15, An Act respecting the town of Mitchell.

Bill Pr17, An Act respecting the county of Peel.

Bill Pr18, An Act respecting the board of education for the city of Windsor.

Bill Pr19, An Act respecting the city of Belleville.

Bill Pr22, An Act respecting the township of Teck.

Bill Pr23, An Act respecting Maimonides School for Jewish Studies.

Bill Pr26, An Act respecting the Tilbury public school board.

Bill Pr27, An Act respecting Co-ordinated Arts Services.

Bill Pr28, An Act respecting the city of Sarnia.

Bill Pr29, An Act respecting the city of Peterborough.

Bill Pr30, An Act respecting Banks Alignment Limited.

Bill Pr34, An Act respecting the town of Mississauga.

Clerk of the House: The 74th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF

On vote 1701:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I am sorry. I was not in the House yesterday when they discussed this hospitality fund, but I know that this was an unusual year, having an amount of $207,000 to expend on entertaining, etcetera. The fact is that I feel that this whole matter of entertaining at government expense is used for political purposes. I recall the dinner of the Princess Alexandra, an amount of $29,000. I am wondering how you can spend $29,000 in one bash like that?

I recall they held this party at the Inn on the Park, and my wife and I were there. We were not invited to the inner circle. The party was divided in two sections—for the brass and the common people, who drank separately. And then my wife decided she would like to sit near the Princess and so we got a table up near the front, as close as I am to his honour, the Chairman, and she got a good look at the chair the princess would be sitting in.

So I found myself rubbing shoulders with the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), and I thought to myself, this is a nice fellow sitting here. And on my left I had the bag-man, Harry Price of the Conservative Party, and Harry and I are not too buddy-buddy, and I thought it was going to be pretty strained relations, but my wife was enjoying things anyway, sitting that close to the head table. But one of the gendarmes came and touched me on the shoulder, and he said, "This is no place for you."

An hon. member: This is no place for a peasant.

Mr. Sargent: For a peasant is right. He said, "I am sorry, sir, you are not allowed to sit here". And I said, "What do you mean, I am not allowed to sit here?" He said, "Well, this is reserved for certain people." And I find that the Conservative Party allotted the seats to the brass in the party, and they are using public funds to do things like this.

So I was asked—I was embarrassed—but I was asked to leave my seat beside the Attorney General; I was not good enough to sit beside him or the bag man, Harry Price. Harry Price had a higher stature in the party than I did. Now, I know a lot of people think I do not rate that, but I think, Mr. Chairman, that the office of a member of Parliament rates higher than a bag man for a party. I think, if you will be perfectly fair as you sometimes are, that you will agree with that.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): What utter nonsense. The incident we are discussing took place in 1967. Why did the member not come and ask me about it after it happened? I would have been delighted to have found out what the answers were.

But 1967, 1968; we are now in 1969, and here it comes up on the floor of the House. Why did the member not come and ask me then? We have lots of conversations outside the House; he could have asked me about it, and I would have been happy to look into it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, if I had ever asked the Prime Minister this, he would have said, "We will talk about it in the estimates". He would have taken that lofty perch and he would sneer at me and say that he does not equate things like this because it might be embarrassing to the government. But you cannot equate the fact that we should be getting a bit more than a quarter of the pay the Prime Minister gets; we should be getting as much money as the members in Quebec are getting, but he will not admit that. So that is how fair he is.

Getting back to the vote here, I think it is wrong, Mr. Chairman, that this Treasury bench can take $207,000 of the public money to spend on about 50,000 cases of booze a year across this province, and to use it for political purposes. So I was told, along with my wife, that I could not sit there because the top brass of the Tory Party had to sit there. I was delegated to back and left field some place and of all things I found myself sitting with Ralph Cowan, and we could not even see the head table from where we were.

So here we have the supreme intelligence of the Tory Party filtering down saying, "Now here are two renegades, we will put Sargent and Cowan back in left field". But this is how things operate. They take the list and say, "These people do not have any stature and we will use public funds to put them where they should be". So here we have a man—I thank the Prime Minister, we will look for him coming back some time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will be back.

Mr. Sargent: Along the same line—booze—we had a case about Melchers, Mr. Chairman, that the Prime Minister will not bring to trial because it is embarrassing to the government because people know this is going to hurt the Tory Party. It involves the fact that a member of the distillery had to pay $10,000 to get his name on the board. The case is still pending, and never will come to trial.

If we look through all these estimates, Mr. Chairman, we will find not only $90,000 here in this department, but we will find probably $1 million a year spent on tipping the bottle by you people who direct who shall drink, and where they shall drink, and how they shall sit. I think it is criminal when you are raising taxes across the board for people across this province who cannot pay their taxes, people who cannot get housing. We have all these problems, and you have the nerve to ask us to pass a vote for $207,000 worth of booze. And you break down what you are spending each year—$1 million worth of booze in this party in the year—it breaks down to about 1,000 cases of booze a month, or maybe 250 cases of booze a week.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Booze not food.

Mr. Sargent: All right, that is what we are talking about, booze, right here, now. I am talking to an expert. I take that back, the Minister is no more than I am, I am sorry. I did not mean it that way.

But I think it is wrong, Mr. Chairman, not because it is this Minister's vote, it is a Tory Party policy. They have been here 25 years, they can make these decisions and can laugh at us commoners over here, they can make us sit in the back of the hall while their bag man has a better seat than my wife, and I think that stinks.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, I only want to say this, that certainly I want to disassociate the government from the seating arrangements at that luncheon, and any embarrassment that was caused.

Mr. Sargent: How did Harry Price get a better seat than I?

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I go on to point out that that particular function was a Royal visit and the entire reception was looked after, insofar as the arrangements were concerned, by the Lieutenant-Governor. The amount of money which we are being asked to vote for hospitality in the coming fiscal year is $90,000, not $200,000—odd, to which reference was made. It is my understanding that the hospitality function of government is, in fact, handled through this particular vote, which includes the many and diverse applications that come in from time to time during the course of the year for this type of hospitality.

Certainly in the seating arrangements, in the invitation lists, particularly during Centennial year, great care was taken with respect to those visits. The co-ordinator of state visits always made sure that there was a great deal of consultation, particularly with the visiting dignitaries of the various ethnic and national groups which were in this province, to make sure that the list was a complete and representative one. I do not think I really can add anything more, Mr. Chairman, to the comments which have already been made in the last couple of days on this particular vote.

Mr. Sargent: I thank the Provincial Secretary for his explanation. I do not suggest he has any part of this, and I will take his word for it, but I think it is high time this party quit using the political gambit in all these entertainments—using the taxpayers' money to further the Tory party.

An hon. member: The only way to stop it is to throw them out of office.

Mr. Sargent: It has gone too far and I suggest the Minister's explanation of that particular dinner covers the bald part—not that I give a darn where I was sitting, but it just goes to show what happens when you people have all this money to spend at the public trough and the public funds. I think you have gone too far in using public funds for political purposes.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1701.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister whether he has any information on the three questions which I asked him last night. This might be an appropriate time—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Yesterday, the hon. member for Riverdale raised some questions in connection with the overall vote. May I simply point out in answer that the Budget statement made by the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) makes reference to the voted amount for 1968-69, plus the necessary and additional amounts which would be required to complete that particular fiscal year, making a total forecast gross expenditure of $7,353,000.

It happens—and we should keep in mind that in order to complete the 1968-69 figure it was necessary to make a forecast and this, I think, explains some of the answers to the question which the hon. member wants—that this amount I just made reference to, the $7,353,000, is $145,000 more than the amount which is actually submitted for the consideration of this committee.

Practically all of this additional amount that we make reference to was required due to the length of the last session, as well as a fall sitting which was not anticipated at the time of the introduction of the estimates a year ago, and which we do not, of course, feel will be repeated this year. So therefore, keeping in mind these special amounts, these estimates which are now before the House will not require any curtailment of our present programme or the services provided by this department.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman—I am sorry, are you still on this? Go ahead.

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. member for Riverdale pursuing the same thing?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I think perhaps he should be permitted to finish his questions in that respect.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am curious as to how the remarks of the Minister fit into the remarks of his colleague, the Treasurer, on page 16 of the Budget where the Treasurer takes credit for the remarkable success of the austerity programme. He then goes on to say:

—many of whom suffered painful restrictions on their programmes.

This is through the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board imposed severe restrictions and in the four departments of Public Works and Health, Energy and Resources Management, and the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship, the approved spending for 1969-70 has been cut below last year's level. Almost without exception, new programmes, and programme improvements, have been deferred, capital expenditures have been restrained, and large administrative reductions have been made.

I just wanted to ask the Minister—and I take it from what he has said—if in fact, there were no new programmes which he was planning to introduce, no programme improvements that he would have made, and that no deferments have taken place? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is not correct, Mr. Chairman. The point I was trying to make is that I understand the question raised by the hon. member yesterday was to ask what new programmes were in fact postponed because of the cuts.

The point I am trying to make is that our estimates this year are $145,000 less than what was estimated to be our total expenditure for the current fiscal year. Then I proceeded to give an explanation why, in the forecasting, this has happened. The end result of these estimates is that this department will be able to carry on its present programme and perhaps not expand some of its services as quickly as perhaps we would have liked, but there is certainly no cutting back with respect to our current level of service.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister, so that we can exercise some kind of value judgment on what the Minister's department wish to accomplish and what the Treasury Board, for purposes of economy, said that they could not accomplish, state just what are the new programmes then, since you are going to be able to carry on at your existing level of services? What new programmes or programme improvements did you intend to implement which in fact you are now not implementing because of the budgetary limitations that were imposed on your department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, we exercised that restraint ourselves before we even made the presentation to the Treasury Board.

In other words we followed the theory that there was no point in making these presentations at this time. There would normally be certain expansions in the citizenship programme which we would not ask for this year in order to attempt to live within these estimates as we presented them. In other words we exercised that particular restraint ourselves prior to making any presentation.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then, Mr. Chairman, the presentation which you made to the Treasury Board was not cut back by the Treasury Board? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well the point is, that it was not required because we had exercised that particular responsibility ourselves before we made our presentations.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then, so far as your department is concerned, the Treasury Board does not participate in any of the success, which must be attributed to their skill, in bringing about these painful restrictions on their programmes, even though your department is named in it.

I take it, from what you have said, that in submitting your estimates for this year to the Treasury Board for the overall review, you got the same number of dollars that you asked for? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, I think in general terms it is fair to say that the Treasury Board was satisfied in a very careful scrutiny of the estimates of this department, that we had, in fact, exercised care in the scrutiny of our own spending programme. So, they do share in it, in the fact that they concurred in the request.

Mr. J. Renwick: I want to labour the point, Mr. Chairman, because I want to get it clear. The Treasurer explained at great length in his Budget—not just the portion that I quoted, but throughout his Budget statement—about the painful operation that was involved by the exercise, through the Treasury Board, of restraint on the government departments.

I take it, speaking only about your own department, that in fact you submitted estimates that were below last year's estimates; that you internally in your own department decided that you were not going to implement certain new programmes or certain programme improvements. And, because you had done that, in fact, the Treasury Board in your case simply approved of what you had submitted. Would that be correct, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Maybe I can make a comment here, Mr. Chairman. There were directives sent to all the departments prior to the estimates being examined by the Treasury Board setting out certain guidelines and respect to new programmes and requests to review existing programmes to see if they could be subordinated to new ones if necessary. In this instance it was possible for The Provincial Secretary's Department to conform with these guidelines and produce a budget for Treasury Board that met the directives that had been submitted.

I think that is a fair statement to make. The estimates were carefully scrutinized by the Treasury Board, but in each circumstance we found that the guidelines had been well complied with.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well then, I do not want to enter into a debate with the Treasurer because we will be coming back to his estimates. I think perhaps he will be refreshed after his holiday and be able to give more adequate explanations than he was giving before he left on his holiday, about this problem, because again I want to revert simply to the Minister.

The Minister in fact is saying that he submitted certain estimates to the Treasury Board and those were approved. Did the Treasury Board, apropos of your department, come back and say, "You have certainly done very well, Mr. Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship, but can you not do a little better?" After all, this was supposed to be an austerity year in the government's book.

What programmes did you forfeit and what improvements in programmes would you have undertaken had you been able to obtain further funds, or did you not want further funds? Are you quite happy to have your department level off?

In other words, in what way are the people of the province of Ontario going to suffer in the curtailment of your programmes? For example, I think it is proper under this first vote to say, in terms of the citizenship programmes of your department, that you are not operating at an optimum level in that branch of your operation by any means, so far as the language training requirements of language demands that are made on newcomers to the country. Did you curtail that programme? Did you curtail some other programme? Did you fail to improve some other area? This is the information which we want because it goes right to the very guts of the government's approach to the problem.

We tried to get the information from the Treasurer, now we are reduced to trying to get it from the individual Ministers, because the Treasurer would not tell us what the priorities of the programmes were, in detail. I therefore want to know either on this general vote, or specifically on the other items, what programmes did you not initiate and what improvements did you not effect, that you would have effected within a reasonable expenditure of a few more dollars?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I might speak to that point particularly. I think the area of expansion in a department such as this would obviously be the citizenship branch, and particularly the work that we have, or the responsibilities that we have in the citizenship branch function of working with our new people and in their integration in the Ontario, or rather, to put it a little more broadly, the Canadian community.

I would think that there are many aspects of our programme which could, in fact, be expanded with more personnel and, therefore, with more money. We made the decision internally that we would attempt to maintain the programme at its current level of involvement, keeping in mind that even that required more money, what with salary adjustments and increased costs. However, I think it is reasonable to share with you at this time, Mr. Chairman, and the members of this House that if more money was available, I am quite satisfied that on the basis of my brief tenure of the responsibilities of this office that we would find other areas in the citizenship function, be it the information service or be it the field of research.

The field of research is one where I have a particular interest in wanting to test some of our new programmes, particularly the work we are now doing in research—and we will come to it in the debate—with pre-schoolers, and the mothers working with them in these programmes. You have touched on the language training programmes, you have touched on our relationship programme, if you can put it this way, and our community activities.

We have to maintain our community conferences at only four, rather than doing six, or perhaps eight of them. This is the type of approach which we made in really the main area, which would allow for and provide for, some type of expansion. So we attempted to maintain it as best we could, at that particular level of service and, as I repeat, notwithstanding the fact that that would require, in itself, some extra funds.

The other aspects of our programme are such that we, perhaps, do not have the flexibility. There are certain things we have to do and it is unfortunate in a way that the citizenship branch is one where you do have a bit of flexibility. You can have some control over the speed by which you develop and the way in which you might expand your programme activities.

In the internal scrutiny of our programme, this is the sort of problem with which we were faced and, therefore, it was our responsibility to satisfy Treasury Board in those discussions that we had, in fact, exercised that type of scrutiny and restraint ourselves within the department.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, to finish it off—if I could just put it in capsule form—in the one area in your department where your department is involved with rendering services to people in the province, this is where you exercised the value judgment that there was to be curtailment in terms of the guidelines that had come down from the Treasury? Do I take it that you did not feel that there was any need for you to participate in urging the government that this was one vital area of your department's activities which should go forward; that in whatever scale of priorities the government came up with—and I am almost beginning to think it is part of the mythology that there was such a scale—you did not feel under any urge or any need to argue the case for the citizenship branch?

It is related so much to the newcomers to the country and the need is so great as anyone knows who, as I happen to, represents a riding in the city where there are many, many people from Italy, Greece and other countries, who need this kind of assistance.

In capsule form, Mr. Chairman, it is quite obvious that in this particular branch, this particular Minister decided that where people were concerned they would not only curtail them, he did not feel under any obligation to argue for their extension in terms of the vast range of the other value judgments that the government had to make about these so-called priorities.

Mr. Chairman: I would just point out that we are arguing on vote 1701. I realized the hon. member for Riverdale used the citizenship branch as an example in his general comment under 1701 and therefore I did not rule it out of order. I would hope, however, that further comments in connection with the citizenship branch would be kept to vote 1703.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Riverdale. As you know, he is entitled to his opinion as a member of this House, and he has drawn certain conclusions which I would hope that we would recognize as being his conclusions.

No one knows better than I the tremendous responsibility that we have as a government insofar as our new-citizen work is concerned. I think he has been somewhat unfair to suggest that I have not recognized the responsibilities in this particular field and that I have some strange sense of priorities. If he really studies the entire estimates of this department very carefully, if a man is to be responsible in a Ministry to carry out some guidelines and to show some restraint and some curtailment, there are very few areas which provide for this.

This happened to be one and I am quite satisfied, notwithstanding my personal feelings in this matter, that I would have been less than responsible had I attempted to not accept some share of the responsibility to live within the guidelines that were issued by the Treasury Board. I am quite satisfied that in maintaining our programme at least at the present level of service we will be doing, with a very dedicated staff, the best possible job that we can. I leave the record of the department in this regard for the judgment of those with whom we work.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, may I just make one comment? I have no intention of being unfair to the Minister or to the members of his department. I take it that the Civil Service of Ontario, by and large, is dedicated and resourceful and interested in what it is doing. What I am saying is I pay any amount of tribute to this Minister for having injected some new meaning into the citizenship branch in the short time which he had occupied that portfolio, but I do not draw back from coming to the conclusion—on the basis of the answers given to my questions by the Minister—that, in fact, there has been a curtailment of those services which would otherwise have gone forward where people in our community need those services. I have got no indication that, within the give and take in the discussions that took place about these priorities, the Minister asserted his priorities for his department as being of great importance.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I have a related question and the hon. member for Dovercourt has indicated that he will yield the floor. May I get it in another context to the Minister? The Provincial Treasurer has indicated that the estimates were cut back $400 million. By that I presume that the natural growth of existing programmes, plus new programmes would have taken your estimates up to approximately $3,400 million?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, this is completely out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not out of order.

Mr. Sopha: We are not discussing the Budget. I rise on a point of order. Are we discussing the Budget here or the estimates of this department?

Mr. MacDonald: Can I ask a question of this Minister without the Liberals' running interference?

Mr. Sargent: No, you cannot.

Mr. Chairman: May I just say that vote 1701—

Mr. MacDonald: Obviously I can, but have I your permission to do so?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1701 is under general expenditure. We are not in the Budget Debate, but the remarks of the hon. member for York South, in my view, do relate to the general departmental administration under vote 1701.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. My question to the Minister is this: How much of the $400 million that the government has cut back was cut back in your department from your original presentation of your estimates?

Mr. Sargent: Even the hon. Treasurer does not know that.

Mr. MacDonald: If the Minister says none, that means that nothing was cut back, that every department did it as a self-imposed cut-back. Apparently the Provincial Treasurer just reached out of the air and said that because of the series of self-imposed cut-backs, $400 million was cut back. If $400 million was cut back, it is an aggregate of which there were a number of components. One of those components was the cut-back in this department. My question is, what was the cut-back in this department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, please forgive me for speaking on this. I think it is out of order, quite frankly. I think we are talking about a situation that is totally unrelated here, but I explained it before. I will attempt to explain it again. First of all, as I mentioned before—and I am out of order now but if I am out of order I am replying to the general character of your question—

Mr. MacDonald: I did not ask the Minister to intervene. If he is out of order, let him sit down. I asked the Minister whose estimates are before us, how much of a cut-back was made in his department? Because when we are finished considering the estimates, we should have a series of cut-backs from each department which will aggregate $400 million or else the Provincial Treasurer has misinformed the House.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the hon. Provincial Secretary would handle this question from the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think we are getting into another question and the hon. member is approaching it in another context. I do not have my original presentation to the Treasury Board here with me. I only have the estimates that we have.

I go back to the answer which I gave the hon. member for Riverdale, that these estimates which I have tabled for the consideration of the committee are $145,000 less than our current anticipated expenditures. That is not what the hon. member wants. He wants me now to share with him what we originally thought our needs were and what in the give and take discussion with Treasury Board, we had to cut back. I cannot tell him because I have not this information here with me.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I submit there are one or two alternatives; either this Minister provides us with this information because we are going to ask it of each Minister, or alternatively, the Provincial Treasurer, if he wants to do it neatly in a package, indicates to us where the cut-backs were made in each department because he boasted about the blood, sweat and toil—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I certainly did.

Mr. MacDonald: Right—involved in cutting back $400 million.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: I think we are entitled to know where the cut-back was in each department. Indeed, we are entitled to go one step further; what were the programmes that you cut back? Because each one we examine we find you have cut back on those programmes that were servicing human beings.

Mr. Chairman: If I may just comment on the remarks of the hon. member for York South. He suggested that he intends to direct the same question to each department. It may be answered by the specific departmental Minister or by the hon. Treasurer.

Now I suggest that it would be proper for him to direct the question in the first instance to the Minister responsible. If that Minister does not wish to answer, or cannot, perhaps he could defer it to the Treasurer for the time when his estimates come up. But there should not be any projected debate in this respect without end.

Mr. J. Renwick: No, all we want is the information.

Mr. MacDonald: We just want the facts.

Mr. Chairman: In this particular case the hon. Minister has suggested that he is not able to provide the information at this time.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps he can get it later.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister wish to provide this before his estimates are completed?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty I have at this particular stage is that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Hon. Mr. Welch: —is that I do not have the information here. If the member will give me some time to get this I hope that perhaps I might be able to provide him with some information.

Mr. MacDonald: Any time—by mail next week if necessary.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Will that be satisfactory then, if I have not got it by the time we are completed?

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman would like this clarified. Are we to get this information before the estimates pass?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): The Treasurer has gone for it now.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I cannot guarantee that. I do not know how long he will be.

Mr. Chairman: All right; the hon. Minister has undertaken to provide the hon. member with—

Mr. MacDonald: I will get you off the hook, Mr. Chairman. If a week from now I have not got it I will ask a question before the orders of the day to the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Sargent: That will shake them.

Mr. Chairman: That sounds like a very good solution.

The hon. member for Dovercourt on vote 1701.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, I asked the hon. Minister for some information on that item of $29,018.05 in the accounts; does the Minister have that question answered?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I do; thank you very much.

This had to do with the visit of Her Royal Highness, Princess Alexandria; the total amount was $29,018.

Mr. Sopha: I think her name is Alexandra.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Did I say "dria"; I am sorry, "dra"!

Mr. Sopha: Alexandria is in Egypt.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be the last one to want to argue with the hon. member about proper names.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Particularly on Royalty!

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, particularly on the subject of Royalty.

That is right; $29,018.65 made up as follows. The grand ball totalled $14,986.24—are you making note of these?

Mr. De Monte: I will.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The luncheon at the Inn on the Park was $10,191.43; the Lieutenant-Governor's reception was $2,757.63; various printings—invitations, menus and so on—$1,083.35.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1701; the hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, at the end of the estimates yesterday, when we rose, I was in the process of asking the hon. Minister who picks out the people that are invited to these functions, and I did not get the answer completely then. Could the Minister answer that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I answered that for the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) just a few minutes ago, but I think if you were to give me each particular one I could perhaps share with you the procedures, Mr. Chairman, that were followed.

We were talking about the heads of states and special visits during 1967. Any visits by royalty were handled by the Lieutenant-Governor and his aide and the procedures were—

Mr. Sargent: Well, that is a Tory setup to start with.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The heads of state visits were handled by the co-ordinators for heads of state visits; and as I understand, depending on the country from which the guest came, there was consultation with the various groups in Ontario who make up that particular ethnic community and group, to make sure that it was a representative group, depending on the length of stay and the type of function.

In many of the other hospitality functions, Mr. Chairman, the group itself specifically ask the government to extend hospitality, and the group itself looks after its list because it is related to the activities of the particular convention or association which is meeting.

So great care, I am advised, is taken on the invitation lists where we in fact have some nominations to make, insofar as this is concerned, along the lines which I have just mentioned.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, on the affair that took place for the President of Italy, Giuseppe Saragat, there were many people in Toronto and Ontario who were very upset about that list. I just wanted to point that out to the hon. Minister and suggest that perhaps this type of choosing should be left to somebody more responsible than the people who worked that list out, perhaps in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor, or the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, or somebody else. I just wanted to inform the Minister that there was quite a bit of unhappiness about the list of people who were invited to that affair.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sorry about that. This is the first I knew of it, and I appreciate the comments.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask this Minister, among his responsibilities are those of custodian of various insignia, and indeed the seal of the province of Ontario. I suppose when documents are executed under seal that it is the Provincial Secretary himself who performs that act; and of course he is in charge of protocol. Indeed all those matters that have to do with the traditions of this province, and both since Confederation and as it existed from 1792 onwards.

Now I should like to hear from him just what is the policy of this government, if a policy has been decided upon, in respect of the coat of arms of Ontario. Really, the coat of arms is a very pleasing, very artistic—in my view—design; and indeed in many ways reflects the life of this province from its inception. A few years ago, and I ask this most seriously, a few years ago the government of this province went to work with a surgeon's knife on the coat of arms, and as we now see the coat of arms reproduced on Ontario's flag it is denuded of the livestock; they were taken off.

Even more serious than that; I want to call attention to this thing here, this stylized version that one sees with ever increasing frequency. I sometimes have called it a cross between the pretzel and a doughnut, sometimes a cross-eyed owl; and indeed, if you look at it long enough, it is an optical illusion.

Now it is on government stationery, and various government bodies use this symbol on their publications. Two illustrations of its use really startled me. I saw a laundry truck down on College Street, a vehicle apparently owned by a private entrepreneur. It was on the side of the truck. Really, the final straw is when I see it appear on doorknobs over in the other building, the new complex just opened.

I would really seriously like to know where the authority is? And where does that authority originate? Who gave the directive that the coat of arms of this province should be replaced by this symbol?

I am told—the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) told me, and I am in a state of disbelief; I would not believe it until I saw the contract—but he tells me, and he is not inclined to exaggerate, he actually told me that money has to be paid for the purchase of these things. He told me that the symbol for CN, that CN symbol, cost about $20,000. The Hydro symbol—that stupid-looking thing on their stationery that they send out, the plug, the electric plug—they had to pay money for that one. I would like to know whether money was paid for this one; and if so, how much?

But more important, I am seriously asking where is the authority? Is it statutory? Is there some obscure statute somewhere, some Order-in-Council, some regulatory power, that enables people to use this device on official publications of this government?

Specifically, where was the authority derived to put it on the doorknobs of those two buildings, that new set of buildings over there? And where is the authority to denigrate the coat of arms of this province and to drive this coat of arms into the background, to render the coat of arms of the province obsolescent?

What is unsatisfactory in this is the nature of the question that I ask—what is unsatisfactory about the coat of arms on government publications that it has to be replaced by this modern and up-to-date thing of which I am asking if money was paid?

Mr. MacDonald: The member sounds like Eugene Forsey—

Mr. Sopha: I am glad the member mentioned Eugene Forsey, because that enables me to say that I also want to ask, is this another instance of the creeping repulicanism that bothers Eugene Forsey? Is that what it is?

If you look over the Speaker's chair, I think I am safe in saying that those are the coat of arms of the old province of Canada before Confederation.

And you will note that on those—and they are replete with the history, of course, of Great Britain, Scotland and Ireland—the whole history is depicted in that coat of arms, and on top you have the crown. Well, I am very pleased that that very fine woodwork exists and is treasured and kept above the Speaker's chair. That was replaced after we became a province by these, and I am referring to the coat of arms on a publication provided by The Department of Tourism.

My question is, what is wrong with them as being a traditional reminder of our provincial right? Why do they have to give way, showing as they do, symbols that can be understood, the maple leaf, the cross of St. George, perhaps the caribou and the moose, the bear, recognizable symbols typical of our province and our country? Why do they have to give way to this stupid thing? This optical illusion?

And under what authority do they give way, who decides when a government publication is sent out? The civil service commission is one example which came to my attention this morning. It does not have the coat of arms on it at all, it has the trillium, the stylized trillium. Who decides that?

Where does the authority derive that they shall use this symbol instead of the coat of arms of the province? I think it is about time that we got some rationale into this, and heard from the responsible Minister just when this policy decision was made, who was the author of the decision, how much money was paid for this version, where is the statutory authority for its use and what is the intention in the long run? Is it going to be this one, the old coat of arms of the province, or is it going to be this one, or are they going to compete, and if they are going to compete, which one is likely to win?

Or may we hope that, at some time, someone over there in authority—this Minister if he is responsible—is going to come in here and tell us once and for all what the situation is going to be? I have observed in the ten years I have been here that this government surpasses any other in the universe in changing symbols. They change from year to year.

But I am one who places a high value on tradition—meaningful traditions, ones that are part of the fabric of our life, our cultural life. That has nothing to do with going every two years to see if John Graves Simcoe is still dead; I do not value those traditions.

But meaningful traditions I do not want to see surrendered lightly, at somebody's whim, as the result of the winsome presentation of some advertising agency. I do not like to see these things changed lightly.

So for a few brief moments, and of course we do not want to take up too much time, I would like to hear from this Minister just what is the policy between these clashing symbols?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, actually I am delighted that a question of this kind would be raised, for it helps us perhaps to share the pride we have in the symbols and in the customs that we use here in the province of Ontario. I might say, if I can quickly review the questions that have been raised by the hon. member, in the first place no funds have been voted from this department for the art work or the style work, insofar as the logo or symbol to which he makes reference is concerned. So I am unable to answer the question with respect to cost and the development of the idea. I personally do not know by what statutory authority it may have been developed.

Mr. Trotter: I think it cost $7,000.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I see. I have not the slightest idea, because it was not something commissioned under this department, at least since I have been Minister.

Mr. Sargent: It is a pretty complicated thing.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I might point out that there is a book on the logo published by the government. It is something controlled through the office of the Prime Minister. There is what is called a control manual for the use and application of the approved Ontario government symbol and logo type.

It is a publication here and if I had the permission of the member, I would be very happy to send it over to him in order that he might review it, rather than reading the entire contents of the book here. It may well be, perhaps, when the estimates of the Prime Minister are before the House, he might then be in a position to give some more particular details after he has had an opportunity to study this booklet.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I would be delighted. I ask the Minister, does it say in there who approves?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It says:

This book was prepared under the authority of the government of the province of Ontario. The use and application of the symbol and logo type is to adhere strictly to the specifications herein stated.

And there are many pages, even as to the drawings and the height of print and so on. May I send it over to the member?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I want to go on record as saying I do not think there is a more able Minister in the Legislature than the Provincial Secretary. I am not critical of the job he is doing, but I am critical of some things that have been done, sir, in the past. And the only way we can judge, Mr. Chairman, the only way we can get a track record is to check the accounts book. The Prime Minister took me to task for harping back to 1967. How else can we judge what is going on? We do not have anything for 1968.

So we are talking ancient history but it is the only yardstick that we, as supposedly intelligent directors of a large corporation, can assess the goings-on, as it were. So somewhere along the line, when we have an intelligent government in this province, under the leader of the Opposition, we are going to straighten things out and give you people, when you are sitting over here, a chance to see how we are currently spending money.

There is no business corporation in the world that sits down to judge its financial affairs without a current record of the fiscal situation. So here we are—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1701!

Mr. Sargent: I am getting to the point, Mr. Chairman. So if you are critical of me for assessing this record, I cannot do anything else but. What else do I have to look at? Somewhere along the line, if the Treasurer would bring into us, even in loose leaf form the 1968 expenses, then we could judge currently what is going on.

An hon member: It is too simple for him.

Mr. Sargent: That is right, it is too simple for him. But we have here two items in this first vote. We have an item here, as I mentioned, with Inn on the Park for $29,000 for Princess Alexandra, and two lines below on page Q7, we have an item: Inn on the Park—$23,000. So in those two items we have an expenditure of $52,000 plus.

I do not suggest there is anything sinister in the delegation of these parties to one area, but I would like to know eventually, not today, the amount of money spent in the year 1967 in the different hotels in regard to Centennial.

Did the Westbury get the major part of it? I would like to know how much moneys were expended in the Westbury Hotel, in the Inn on the Park, and the Royal York Hotel—specifically those three hotels, in that particular year.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister wish to undertake to provide that information, or does he have any comments?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am advised that the various hotels are, in fact, listed in the public accounts and it would be a very easy job to make that list on the basis of the information already in the public accounts.

Mr. Sargent: You have the staff for it, I do not.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Fine, we will be glad to summarize what is already there.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much.

Vote 1701 agreed to.

On vote 1702:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat a point that I have made for several years now, and we still do not seem to be making any great progress. I have never really been able to understand the reason for part of the responsibility for corporations being in the office of the Provincial Secretary, and a substantial part being moved into the office of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree).

Now he has taken over a new aspect of this, or his department has taken over a new aspect of this. Within The Department of the Provincial Secretary we deal with names, which is a very complicated thing. I understand there is something called a names committee—I had to wrestle with them in my practice not too long ago—and I gather the names committee is just another name for the fellow who makes the decision anyway.

He goes and meets in a little square room and throws it about by himself and eventually if you have shown him a good bill of goods, he says that name is okay. I gather, too, that you are going to take in the partnership names—that is in the wind somewhere is it not?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps the member is making reference to the proposed Bill 126 which required the registration. As you know, the select committee requires the registration of names in which companies are trading just as a matter of information.

Mr. Singer: Practising lawyers will recognize we have a little difficulty with this name business on many occasions. Then, of course, there is this whole business of forms. We have some computers down there, I guess, in the Minister's office which do a great job of turning out forms. There is hardly a mail that comes into any legal office where you have not got umpteen forms addressed to all companies you may have handled, and these things almost come through regularly. I suppose if somebody kept a calendar of them you could gauge the day of the month by which date you get a certain kind of mail out of the Minister's office.

I have been very concerned, Mr. Chairman, and I have expressed this on the company law committee, about the uselessness of many of these forms. The annual return form, for instance, I think is just really hopeless, I do not think it conveys any information to anybody. It keeps a lot of people busy; it keeps the machine busy; if the form is not in on time there is complaining letter number one, complaining letter number two, complaining letter number three.

Every now and then, I suppose, after 10 and 12 complaining letters, somebody gets summonsed; some lawyer in the department has a task. There are a couple of young ladies I had a discussion with—one of my clients got into this position—who worry about it and say, "Well we will not go to court, let us adjourn it for another week."

We must have spent a couple of thousand dollars of departmental time, and some dollars of my time, in figuring out whether or not we were all going to be hauled off to jail because one of these company information forms had not been filed on time. Granted the law says it should have been done and it was not done when it should have been done, but what real purpose is achieved?

It would seem to me that when the Treasurer is sending out forms for corporation tax, and when the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs is getting his feet pretty wet in this same field, that surely the time has come to take everything to do with companies and put it in one branch, under one direction, even with one set of computers, and to eliminate a lot of the useless pieces of paper that are kept somewhere on file.

The search of these company annual returns, other than providing ammunition for some question from the odd member over on the left, I do not think achieve really anything.

You look at a company return and the date is March 31 and it says that on March 31 the directors were so and so. You have no information for the next 12 months and the directors could have changed April 1 and changed half a dozen times from there on in. The information is not current at all.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We have to notify the department.

Mr. Singer: Oh yes, I know that and that is what the Act says and very few people do. If you do not notify them, who knows that you did not notify them unless there is some great public scandal involved in it? Most of these companies—99.9 per cent—carry on and do their business reasonably well and manage to stay out of the trials and tribulations of all these legal people that you have inhabiting these departments.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that in this day and age, when we are trying to get better methods of doing things, you do not get better methods merely by putting a computer in to gather the same kind of information that has been useless for many years in the past, and continues to be useless.

I would like to hear whether or not this Minister and/or his colleagues have any plans to bring together, under one central direction, all the myriad of information that is demanded, to cut down on the return, to make them more meaningful, and to stop all of these pieces of paper that constantly flow out of the department—the use of which escapes me completely.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think, in commenting on this very briefly, Mr. Chairman, it is a very reasonable question to ask. This question comes up from time to time and those of us who have been engaged in the practice can appreciate this very much. Various briefs have come into the department from some of the chambers of commerce and from the commercial world, generally, in their concern about the number of forms. It is my understanding that our department, along with Revenue, have been working for some time to attempt to find some way to combine this approach to the information they require.

This will necessitate some type of computer programming, as you can imagine, what with the number of companies that we have to deal with, and perhaps at this stage it would be sufficient to say that a study is under way to find some simplified way to combine these forms which would be consistent with the programming.

The whole position of the annual return, which is an interesting question, was touched upon recently by the select committee on corporation law and it is reported as the hon. member will well know. It was incorporated in draft Bill 126 when it came in, and the select committee, as it was reconstituted, was asked to continue its studies of the annual return because in the first place it did not have the time that it needed to go into that in some detail. So we are hopeful that maybe with that type of objective review we might have something to go on.

Reference was briefly made on names, and no one is more sympathetic than the Minister to the problems that must be faced by the public generally in this question of names. If the hon. member, or any member, has any suggestions, please do not hesitate to let us know because it is becoming increasingly difficult in a jurisdiction such as Ontario.

Whether we might have a bank of names for non-active companies—I use that term from a non-active commercial aspect—we might have a bank of numbers or names which we could use for that type of company, but the name search procedure is quite involved, as the hon. member has quite correctly pointed out, and it is an amazing job that they do in order to protect the public from any confusion, and to know with whom they are dealing insofar as this name business is concerned.

Sufficient to say that these and many problems are constantly before us and we are always open for ideas and open for anything which would increase and improve the service which we give to the public through this branch of government.

Mr. Singer: My concern, Mr. Chairman, is that once we get something into the works, we never know how to get rid of it. Because we have had company returns for I do not know how long—I guess as long as we have had a Provincial Secretary's Department—much of our energy seems to be directed to getting them in more efficiently. Nobody has bothered to look at the forms and see whether or not useful information is given and whether the public is served.

We have the form, and it goes out whenever it goes out. Then, I am sure, there has been a programming pattern evolved as to the number of complaining letters that you send and the great hours that were spent on selecting the wording of complaining letter number one, which is less severe than two, and on down the line. But when all this information is gathered in and sits down in those files, what purpose does it serve? This is the thing that bothers me.

It is so like the building of useless administration that we see in all levels of government, and I would really applaud this Minister if he came in one day and said, "I have decided that we are going to do away with the annual return. I have decided that the extra little bit of information that is of importance can be put down at the bottom of the Treasury forms". The Treasury forms are more important because you collect some revenue from those, surely the same information could be there. "We have done away with two computers," or that "we have given them to another department and they are going to function somewhere else." And that, "we have done away with a pile of paper nine miles high," because I bet you send out that big a pile of paper every year. I wonder how much it costs you just in postage and in bulk paper to keep all these requests flowing year by year?

An hon. member: In three copies.

Mr. Singer: In multi-copies, yes. And then the demands: Once they get into the machine, the demands keep coming, even after your returns are in.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that this review, which is at present under way, might produce some of the economy of paper to which reference was made. One of the interesting problems, now this has come up on the study, is the fact that all these annual returns come up at the same time. As you know, by June 1 you must file all this information that is gathered as of March 31. This review might give some thought to breaking this work load down in itself, perhaps to using the anniversary date of incorporation as the date, or something to spread it out a little more. This is only to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that these matters are under pretty active review. We look to the select committee for some help and direction in this matter as well.

Mr. Singer: The select committee, as reconstituted, does not have me on its membership. I was on the former select committee and I think it was perhaps on my suggestion that we put in—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): They will try to get by.

Mr. Singer: I'll allow it is a struggle. I think it was at my suggestion that that recommendation was put in, but the obvious base of that recommendation is, to do away with the stupid old form. I do not think you need any great study to come to that conclusion. I do not think you need have a new series of sessions of the new select committee to come along that far. I would think if you took a good look at those forms and determined the practical use which they have it would be very simple to come to the conclusion, very quickly, that you do not need them any more.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, to the Minister. Under this vote, under The Companies Act, does this include racing charters?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It would include charters, but we do not issue charters for racing. That will be a special Act, by legislation.

Mr. Sargent: A few years back there was quite an investigation under your department, long before you were in politics, insofar as the issuing of charters for gambling, for private clubs, under this Act.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This had to do with the Roach Commission, I think, in which social clubs, those that are called non-profit, or those corporations that are of a social or a fraternal nature are incorporated under The Corporations Act. But not racing.

Mr. Sargent: I do not hear you too well, I think your mike is turned down. I cannot hear you too well. I would like to know if we can get a list; is there a list of the gambling charters now in force, or the social club charters now in force under which gambling is allowed—or the whole ball park on what is going on as far as the issuance of charters is concerned in your department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I simply say there are no gambling charters issued at all. In fact, if gambling is the object they cannot get a charter. But I think, to be helpful here, Mr. Chairman, I should point out that all corporations of a social nature—social clubs, this type of corporation—in fact, do receive their charters under a special section of The Corporations Act.

Each corporation is published in the Ontario Gazette, and I suppose I sign 30 or 40 charters a day, some of which would be for social clubs of some kind, Lions clubs and other non-profit organizations. But I make the distinction between the social club on the one hand and what the hon. member refers to as gambling clubs or gambling activities. Because if that, in fact, is why they want the charter, they do not get it. It is just not a legal activity.

Mr. Sargent: I am told that there are still some charters alive in Ontario if they want to gamble; they are still alive if they want to be activated.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not have any information on that, sir.

Mr. Sargent: All right. Would the Minister check into that? I am told on good authority that there are some unactivated gambling charters still alive under your department. I would like to know if that is a fact.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be glad to give whatever information I can. I just want to make sure I understand; is the hon. member asking me to give information about charters which are still in force, through our department, which allow gambling? That might be a very easy question to answer right now. I am sure there would not be any, but if the hon. member feels there are some, we will have such a search conducted. Have you any names at all? Mr. Chairman, could the hon. member help in any way by giving me any names of such organizations?

Mr. Sargent: If the Minister says there are none—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am not saying that. I am saying I would be very surprised if there were any.

Mr. Sargent: I was told confidentially that there were some charters not activated for gambling under your department—or under a government department, so I would assume it would be your department.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be glad to check on this, but you see, we could not incorporate such a company because the objects of the company are contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada. That is why I take the position I do. It may be that the hon. member is making some reference to some dormant charters which were around as far as horse racing was concerned, and which were the subject matter of something at a previous time. However, perhaps I can consult with the hon. member later and try to be as helpful as I can in that regard.

Mr. Sargent: In passing, there are some charters with wide terms of reference, or terms of operation, that I wish you would check into. Would you then let us know the number of race track charters there are in the province and who owns them? I would like to have an answer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sorry, fine.

Mr. Sargent: This will be furnished?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Whatever information we have in the department that is public information, we will certainly be very glad to give it.

Mr. Sargent: Is it the policy of the department to allow a monopoly on race track charters?

Hon. Mr. Welch: This department does not issue race track charters.

Mr. Sargent: Then who does?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Any charters now would be by special Act of the Legislature.

Mr. Sargent: Are there dormant charters in escrow you are holding?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We do not hold any charters in escrow. I think what the hon. member may be making reference to was some previous practice whereby someone went out and bought some charters which did make some provision for horse racing.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Would that be Earl Rowe?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am not familiar with any of the names of any who were involved in that particular activity. I think maybe it may save the time of the House—and I do not wish to curtail the questions of the member—if the member would sit down with the officials of our department and be specific on what he wants. We would be glad to share with him any information which we have in the department.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think it is anything for behind closed doors. I think it should be public information; who owns what, and how they obtain these charters. The fact is that we are talking multi-millions of dollars through political favouritism; inside deals with people in the government. I think it is time we laid things on the deck to see who owns what and how did they get them and what is still available.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Which members of the government are inside?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I just want to point out to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that we have about 100,000 active corporations on our files, and—

Mr. Sargent: Do not be evasive; I am talking about race track charters.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We do not issue race track charters.

Mr. Sargent: How do they get in business then if you do not issue them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: They have to make application now to the Legislature to get such a charter. Around the turn of the century there was some provision, I think, under the Criminal Code, for the granting of certain charters which provided for this racing business. Attached to these were a certain number of days which qualified, I think, under the federal Department of Agriculture, or some such procedure.

I am very hazy on it because I am not familiar with this. It is nothing that comes within the jurisdiction of this department. I think at that time, in the early 1900s, such charters were, in fact, granted. I may be quite wrong. Some were not used for a period of time and someone realized that these were available and then made offers to those who were—

Mr. Sargent: So any new enterprise in this field would have to be by an Act of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Right.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Sargent: I would still like to have a list of who owns what charters in Ontario. Could I have that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Whatever information we have you can certainly have.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if it is difficult to incorporate a social club through his department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, I do not think it is.

Mr. De Monte: What procedure is followed when there is an application for a charter for a social club?

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I speak in general terms? An application comes in in accordance with the terms of the Act with the actual directors named in the application. The name concerned would be checked out. The objects of the incorporation would be checked and where they had reference to some other department of government, they would be referred to that department of government for comment. With the usual detailed study which would be made of this type, and indeed and incorporation, in due time, all things being acceptable and within the statute or its regulations, the charter is issued.

Mr. De Monte: I am given to understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Ontario Provincial Police check out every person who makes an application for a social charter, a charter other than a private company. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There is some investigation conducted either by Ontario Provincial Police or by the local police officials with respect to those who are making application for incorporation and the premise which is set out there.

Mr. De Monte: What type of investigation do they carry on?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not know; you could ask them. We ask for some report with respect to the applicants and the premises which are recited in the application—I think this stems from the very commission to which the hon. member made reference, the Roach commission study—in order to satisfy ourselves that there is no intent to conduct activities that would be contrary to the criminal code or other related statutes.

Mr. De Monte: I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if the objects of the application are in keeping with good social club habits. Why are the people checked out? I mean who decides whether they get a charter or not, the police, the OPP or the Provincial Secretary?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Provincial Secretary.

Mr. De Monte: Do you make a search for a criminal record? Do you know whether they do that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Provincial Secretary relies on the police investigation.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, may I follow up that same point?

Mr. Chairman: On the same point?

Mr. J. Renwick: The point that the member for Dovercourt raises is a very difficult one. I just do not agree with the procedure. The fact of the matter is that a police report is not available to the people who make the application if they are refused the incorporation. They have no grounds and no way of knowing on what basis the police make the decision that for some reason or other, the people are not acceptable. The member for Dovercourt and other lawyers will bear me out in this, and you find that you are up against a brick wall. You are also beginning to run into other things which are non-incorporation problems such as the city disagreeing with the incorporation of a club at a particular premises because you have not got adequate parking. But the principal point is this question of the police report. Neither the lawyer acting on behalf of the applicants, nor the applicants, are given any satisfactory explanation as to why they are refused incorporation.

The Minister knows that I had this problem with a club which the police report in the first instance said, "Wait a year and come back again." Then it was sort of—"Well, if you conduct yourselves properly unincorporated for a year, we will have another look at you and see whether or not you are all right."

It meant that I and these constituents of mine had to go down and speak to the inspector at the police department, who reviewed the matter, and have him come up and look at the place. Somehow or other we satisfied him that the people were just ordinary citizens who wanted to have a club, and we got the incorporation through.

But, I think there has got to be some procedure by which the lawyer on behalf of the applicants or the applicants are entitled to know the specific reasons why the police will not approve of the incorporation of a club at a particular address. I do not think anybody is arguing about the point that the crime commission were dealing with, namely that you cannot have floating characters and that you should be able to specify where the premises are. But I would ask the Minister if he would comment about whether he thinks some procedure can be worked out by which the information, on which the police have turned down an application, will be made available to the applicants so that they can deal adequately with it, otherwise, we are up against a brick wall.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I think we should point out that it is not the police who turn down the application. In the process of considering the application for the charter the Provincial Secretary asks for a police report. On the basis of the police report and/or other material which comes back through the various referrals, the Provincial Secretary exercises the discretion which is provided for in the Act and so it may be a combination of matters, of which the police report is only one.

A great problem—I am glad the point was raised. We all understand, perhaps because of the investigations, that the department exercises this care. If we are to get complete reports I think that we have to satisfy people that we want their report to have some confidential aspect to it.

I go back to the main principle of incorporation of non-share corporations, and certainly it is not planned to change this principle, even with the new legislation under The Business Corporations Act the matter of the issuance of the charters is still discretionary. It is a discretion of the Minister, it is not as a matter of right. The Business Corporations Act will change this, if it is re-introduced and passed for business corporations. But at the moment we are talking about the issuance of a charter at the discretion of the Minister and he, in order to exercise that discretion, requires certain information in the public interest and consistent with the recommendations which were set out in the report of Mr. Justice Roach. The obtaining of a police report is one of these matters. Now I am asked whether or not, if the application is turned down, I would make the police report available. At this stage I am really not prepared to comment on it without thinking that particular matter out a little more carefully.

The point is, and I repeat myself here, that it may be a combination of matters of which the report of the police itself is only one. I certainly feel it is very important that we have very frank and full reports from our law enforcement people with respect to these applications. They would know some of these people and certainly the places at which they are going to conduct their activities. I do not really feel any legitimate social club in this province is particularly concerned about this type of investigation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex Kent, if the hon. member for Riverdale is finished.

Mr. J. Renwick: I wanted to pursue the same point. I do not get the significance of the last remarks. The case I had is that ordinary citizens wanted to have a club and they were not able to get it incorporated until they came and spoke with me about it because they had been turned down. I agree obviously with the point which the Provincial Secretary makes; I not only understand it, I agree with it that it is a discretion which he exercises.

Even the exercise of discretion in this case is an exercise which must be made in accordance with the legal terms of the principles of natural justice, that is, the right of the person to be heard. He cannot second-guess the discretion or the result, but he has a right to be heard; he has a right to know what the case is that he has to hear. There should be some procedure to make certain that this does take place and that the case which has been made against him, which prevents him from having a club incorporated, has got to be a valid one. He should have an opportunity of answering.

I happen to think that it was most unfortunate that the club I intervened on was able, by talking to the police and others, to clear the roadblocks away. It left the impression that if you know a member of the Legislature, you can get it incorporated. This is the danger you run into in this kind of a situation. I think it is very important that the procedure be established by which the police report, either through some formal or informal hearing with the Minister or with the Deputy Minister, that the police report, or the police officer who makes the report, should be available to be questioned in those cases where the applications have been refused.

I do not think it would be difficult to establish that kind of procedure in the first place.

I think its very existence would militate against it being used very often and I do not think there would be all that many applications hereafter that would have to be dealt with in this way.

But I think the procedure involves the question of whether or not you have exercised your discretion properly. If the people making the application do not have an opportunity to answer the clandestine report that is made by the police to the Provincial Secretary, then you are in danger of denying people. You may call it the exercise of discretion, a privilege, but privilege which should be open to all the lawful citizens of the province of Ontario. I think you run dangers both ways unless you are prepared to set up some kind of procedure.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Along this line, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Essex-Kent has been trying to get the floor.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, mine was not on this particular item. It was with regard to the race track charters—

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps, if there are members who wish to pursue this particular item, the hon. member would yield the floor? If there anything further on this particular item?

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I would like to pursue that for my own knowledge and information.

Am I correct that essentially there are two discretions to be exercised in connection with club charters? One is the question of the exercise of your discretion in the issuance of the charter itself and as to whether the club will be entitled to club premises and the benefits under the Criminal Code that accrue thereto. And, secondly, with reference to the rights to club premises, is it there and there only that a police report is required?

Hon. Mr. Welch: All such applications, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member will recall, have to set out the place of address. This is a must. In order to change the place of address, you must take out supplementary letters patent; that is how important the actual location of the activities is. It is that address which is checked out, and so on, as part of the police investigation.

There is only one discretion and that is the actual discretion which the Minister exercises or does not exercise in the granting of the charter. As you know, in this type of incorporation, you are not permitted to use office incorporators; those who are actually going to be the first directors must be set out. These people, plus the location or the address of the social club, are matters of further investigation as part of the general routine in studying the application, prior to the Minister deciding whether he will exercise his discretion and grant the charter.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, to the Minister through you; my experience is quite minimal in connection with these club charters, but those I have seen have provision that the club cannot provide for itself a clubhouse or similar premises. There is the exclusionary clause in connection with, I think, section 118 of the Criminal Code, the provision in connection with gambling. Do you make an investigation in connection with all club applications or just those where they are requesting a clubhouse?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the charter to which the member is making reference must be an older charter because certainly any charter now has the specific address and the proviso is it cannot carry on its activities other than at that address.

Mr. Bullbrook: I see. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on this particular point? The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, at this point in the discussion, the hon. Minister is just referring to police investigations of applications to form social clubs. He and I know there was a charter in my own particular riding a couple of years ago that the police investigated, that was not of a social club nature. Could I ask—I believe this is not normal procedure—what was the percentage of incorporations, say, last year, where the OPP checked into the background of those people?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If I understood the question correctly—and the member may correct me—every application is checked, either by the Ontario Provincial Police or by the local police. Every application for this type of charter is checked this way.

Mr. Paterson: Whether or not it is a social club? Or a normal business transaction?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am just talking about social clubs. I am sorry, I thought that was what the member meant.

Mr. Paterson: I am referring to one that was not a social club. How often does it occur that the OPP would check into—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am advised the only type of incorporation where such an investigation is carried out is, in fact, a social club.

Mr. Paterson: I think I would have to disagree on that. The hon. Minister will be aware, because of certain discussions we had by long-distance telephone, of the OPP investigating the incorporation of a co-operative in my particular riding. I wonder on what basis the request would go to the Ontario Provincial Police to check a normal type of incorporation which bona fide farmers are entitled to carry out. I think the Minister—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would want to be very careful in answering this one. I think the hon. member would agree with me that there were some special circumstances surrounding this. This was not a case of this department requiring any police investigation at all. I think, in view of certain activities on the part of the applicants there with respect to a company with which he was formerly connected, was this not the matter where the Attorney General was, in fact, conducting certain investigations with respect to whether or not there had been violations under the Criminal Code? It had nothing to do with our department and the application for the new co-operative.

Mr. Paterson: I will agree with the Minister on this point that there was some approach made at some level of government to inflict the presence of the OPP upon these people. Basically, it turned out to be a very good thing because it cleared the name of a whole segment of the population in my area. But I wondered, does this happen in normal incorporations from time to time that we in this Legislature are not aware of?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The answer to that question is no. The investigation to which the member makes reference was not initiated by this department because of the application, but was the subject matter of investigations being conducted because of other activities, in which one of the applicants had been involved.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. member for Yorkview want to pursue this point?

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Not on this point.

Mr. Chairman: If there is nothing further on this point, the next speaker was the hon. member for—

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Chairman, I have one.

Mr. Chairman: On the same point?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, this is about the social clubs. Do the police go around asking neighbours about the characters of people applying for the charter? Or do they simply go into their old records to see if there is anything there? Is there an active investigation or do they simply go through the records to see what the people involved have done, or have not done, with regard to police records?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not know that I am able to give you complete detail on what the police do in order to provide their opinion. All our department gets on them ultimately is some report on the basis of the location, or the applicants. I really would not be able to be more specific.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the reports that the Minister receives from the police department about the people applying for a social charter include a recommendation that these people are of good character, or that these people are of questionable character? Is this a character report on the people as well as about the location of their premises?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh yes, the report does go to the individuals who are making application, and if there is anything in connection with any of the applicants which they felt should be drawn to the attention of the department with respect to previous activities in which they had been involved, or indeed their general good reputation among the people of the community, this would be the sort of thing which would appear in connection with this type of report.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the police give the Minister the statement about the character of these people, even if these people had not, in fact, broken laws of the province, or of Canada, or of some other nation, by simply saying that their neighbours do not think much of them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, this is not the type of reports which I read, the latter comment would not apply. This is simply a general investigation with respect to the people who would be known and how they are known by the investigating force in that particular area.

Mr. T. Reid: Could the Minister explain, Mr. Chairman—I am not a lawyer so I do not know much about these things—why is it necessary to know anything more about the people applying for social charter, other than the fact that they have not got a criminal record or they have not broken any laws of the province, or of Canada? Why is it necessary to know anything more than that one simple fact?

Hon. Mr. Welch: This is generally all we do know. I was answering your question in a very general way. This does not preclude the investigating officer volunteering other information. But, generally speaking, I would suppose most of the reports we get would be of that particular nature.

Mr. T. Reid: But yet some are not. The thing I cannot understand, I will just state it right away, is why even in one case—and it only takes one case to contradict a principle—a person who does not have a record of any sort with the police should be judged guilty by the fact that he is not given a charter because the police simply say, "Although this man has no record, as far as we are concerned, we think he is a shady type."

Why judge a person guilty of getting a social club together for some nefarious means before he has broken the law? I do not get it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think perhaps the member has jumped to the conclusion that that would be the case. The hon. member now sets out a specific set of circumstances, and I would think it would be highly unlikely that we would have reports of this nature. During the course of my questioning by the member surely, I hope, I did not give this impression.

Mr. T. Reid: If I understood the Minister correctly, Mr. Chairman, he left the impression with me that the police are not simply concerned with the question of premise, not simply concerned in all cases with just the question of whether or not one of the applicants has broken a law, but also about the character of an applicant. He went that far. If he goes that far—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I did say that in the course of these opinions there could likely be, and there are likely situations where the police volunteer other information; that is information other than specific violations of the law, or the fact that there have not been any. They might volunteer that he happens to be the mayor of the city, a great public servant—I mean there are all kinds of things that could come in in order to identify the applicants.

Mr. T. Reid: Why is it necessary to identify the applicant except in so far as to whether or not he has broken the law in the past?

Hon. Mr. Welch: This could happen quite obviously unless we get a printed form out and have them check answers. These come in in paragraph form, and the investigating officer shares with us what he thinks. There is no set form which is sent to these people to narrow the type of questioning down. If that is your point, this is one that could be taken under consideration as well.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, let us finish this up. The logic of what the Minister is saying is that he does not set the guidelines for the police investigation, the police set the guidelines for him and that is—I will not use the harsh term—the “mule backwards”. The simple fact remains that I can logically envisage, from what the Minister has said, that if the police say “This man is not of high character in the community,” the Minister might say, “Well, we should not grant this man a social charter,” thereby judging that man and his group of friends guilty by the fact they refuse him a charter.

Surely the whole point of the exercise that I am involved in now, Mr. Chairman, is simply that if a person has not broken the law, he must be assumed to be a man of good standing in the community—the courts have not proven him guilty and he is innocent until proven guilty—

Mr. Sargent: He could be a Liberal; he could not get it if he is a Liberal.

Mr. T. Reid: —and, therefore, although it is not a right—I can see why granting a charter like this should not be a right—so, therefore, there is an element of confused discretionary power in here, which in effect could amount to judging a group of people to be guilty of something before they have the charter.

If you think they are going to infringe upon the principles of your social charters, then you grant the charter and move in on them when they contravene the purpose of the charter, but you do not judge them guilty before they get the charter. You judge them guilty after they have infringed upon one of the principles of the charter.

I would just like to refer this to the Minister, Mr. Chairman, and leave it at this point with the suggestion that it is he who should set the guidelines for the police, not the police to set the guidelines for their reports to him.

Mr. Chairman: On this same point, the hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I am also concerned about this position where the police seem to decide as to who gets the charter, and who does not get the charter. Bearing in mind the police attitude towards, as an example, people with long hair, what if a group of hippies apply for a charter? Do they automatically get denied because they have long hair?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not know of any reports that have been based on personal appearance at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand why you do this police investigation at all. Is there any more public interest at stake in granting a charter of this kind than there is in granting a charter to a limited company with share capital?

What great public interest is there if six or seven people want to band themselves together to have a club for collecting stamps and to acquire premises for that purpose. Presumably you are going to send the police in to find out if they are suitable people to have that kind of a club. What public interest are you protecting?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. member, Mr. Chairman, has read the Roach report, I am sure, and I only say, with the greatest respect, that perhaps if he would reread it he would see what has developed as part of our departmental policy. I am not that familiar—the hon. member would perhaps understand the Criminal Code better than I in this regard—but I understand that the code itself does confer certain benefits on an incorporated activity, as opposed to an unincorporated group, and so they were therefore, very concerned with respect to the type of organization.

I only point out that much of our procedure with respect to social charters has developed as a result of the recommendations of Mr. Justice Roach and there is concern in the department with respect to these charters. Now, as far as the other point to which you make reference, where the use of office incorporators and so on, this would be, perhaps, a very difficult thing to do. They can change from time to time which is, of course, the reason why we insist on having the original incorporators, by name, who are going to enter into this activity. Here, once again, it is a matter of departmental policy, and we think, particularly with respect to those non-share capital charters with social aspects, that they are, in fact, subject to this.

Now, while I am on my feet, I might say to the hon. member for Brantford that we have, in fact, incorporated, in the department, a group known as the Yorkville Diggers.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister will agree with me. We are rapidly moving to the stage where we are going to allow one man companies, with or without share capital, if the first recommendations of the select committee are paid attention to, and I think they will.

Hon. Mr. Welch: With share capital.

Mr. Singer: With share capital, and maybe even without share capital, and I think it is going to come as of right, not as discretion. You would do it by filing a memorandum. Surely the disease is in the other protections that may exist, and not in the issuing of a charter. The issuing of a charter allows holding in common of property and that sort of thing, and maybe the disease is contained in the Criminal Code, rather than the type of investigation that you are carrying on. It seems to me, and again I harken back to what we were saying at the beginning of this vote, that we indulge in so much useless activity insofar as the granting of these charters is concerned. We are back to the days of the Royal favour that was being bestowed on someone to carry on. They get it under the great seal of the country and the monarch would smile happily on whoever he was granting the privilege to, and off you go and you can carry on business in a name other than your own. This day and age is quite different, and those recommendations that I talk about, and which were in the first report of the select committee, seem to make good and abundant common sense to me.

Now, insofar as social charters are concerned, perhaps there is a point in a little more investigation, because of what is in the code. Why do you not get at what is in the code and put the people who run a social charter on the same basis as you and I are on? If we do something wrong that is contrary to the law, somebody is going to tap us on the shoulder and say, "Come away, you have sinned and we are going to punish you." Now, surely that kind of a concept makes sense in the world today, rather than all these artificial creations that we are creating—because we are reaching back into history and we are still bestowing a favour in the name of the Crown. "Here is a charter, you lucky person, you are getting some great benefit." I just do not think it makes sense in the kind of world we live in today.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I am concerned about my friend from Essex-Kent (Mr. Ruston), but I just briefly want to suggest to the Minister, in this regard, that his department being the nerve centre, as it were, of all operations that make this octopus tick here—I think, to recall that back in the crime report, that the whole focus of the crime report was centred around his department, because it was through the issuance of club charters that great revenues were derived for the party by the Ministers in charge of the department, and by a man named Cudney, who resigned because of the stick-handling going on and all the close association with the criminal aspects of our province. And so the office of the Provincial Secretary was taken apart with a fine tooth comb.

It would seem to me that there were many reports that came to light that did a lot of harm to your party, and what I am leading up to is this. You have, in the course of your operations, a lot of police reports, and I wish to ask first, who has access to these reports, and secondly, if there is a dossier kept on citizens in general? How big a file do you have on people in this province and is there a dossier at large on the people of this province? In other words, do you have a master dossier of the people of this province on record in your department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, Mr. Chairman, not in the context of the questions asked. Each individual application is treated separately. The police information and other confidential information is not on the public file, and is not available in the search office. Just to repeat here once again—I make reference to the Roach commission report, and although this was during a time under another Minister, I think the member would want to have a fair comment on the record that this department received a clean bill of health with respect to that study—

Mr. Sargent: That is entirely wrong. I think the Minister will realize that there were wide scale resignations in your department, and there was proof positive in this large book we have, I have read it from stem to stem. The issuance of gambling licences was for a fee and many people went to jail for it.

You must know that, Mr. Minister. If you do not, you are very naive. Do you have a large dossier on many people? Who has access to it? Would a member of the Treasury Board have access to those files?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There is no such dossier.

Mr. Sargent: On whom?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I was just answering your question. There is no such dossier.

Mr. Sargent: These police reports that you have in your department, who has access to them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: These are interdepartmental. They are for the information of the Minister in exercising his discretion. They are not public documents.

Mr. Sargent: All right, they are not public documents, but are they available to a Minister of the Crown?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As far as I am concerned, they are private information in the course of the operation of The Provincial Secretary's Department.

Mr. Sargent: I would suggest to you, Mr. Minister, that if the Prime Minister of this province wanted to know something about some one person, he could direct that information to be laid on his desk in five minutes' time.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He would not have to ask me for that, I am sure. If he wanted information, there is a way.

Mr. Sargent: I suggest to you that if the Prime Minister can have that information, Joe Doakes in Sault Ste. Marie can have the same information, and this is not the case. And I would like to know from you, sir, if you know that there is a file in Queen's Park, either in the Attorney General's office or your office, containing the history of a man named Sargent from Owen Sound, the history of Lorne Henderson from Sarnia? Are these things on record in Queen's Park?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We have no such records in The Department of the Provincial Secretary, and that is all I am able to say.

Mr. Sargent: To your knowledge, is this in your department or the Attorney General's?

Hon. Mr. Welch: To my knowledge, I do not know in what department such a list would be, if one existed.

Mr. Sargent: With the permission of the Chairman, about police reports, and I suggest this is a very important area—

Mr. Chairman: We are talking about corporations.

Mr. Sargent: For those of us, in opposition, to watch you for 25 years, to see this bureaucracy you have built up, the complete control of the province, for you to say you do not have these files is a completely—

Mr. MacDonald: Careful.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is hard to believe.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1702, the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakehore): At this point for a moment, just to keep the points clarified, I think the Provincial Secretary will agree with me that long before the Roach report ever came into being, and the recommendations were adopted to the extent that they were, that this police surveillance took place. Back in those days, there were also grounds in which you did not require people of religious, social and athletic clubs to be inspected by the police, or to receive a report from them if you imposed certain conditions. And I am wondering in this day and age whether it might not be a wise thing to reconsider the weight of those conditions, which, firstly, related to the fact as to whether access was available by police and fire departments.

In other words, the lock and bolt situation, in which case the police in those days complained and that in part, got the crime investigation off to a start. Secondly, you put a clause into the charter, in those days, and I suppose it is still there, that they could not operate; that any of the advantages conferred by the then section 226, now 168 of the Criminal Code, with respect to the area, or the amount of money, the quantum of the gambling, if the incorporators forfeited that and did not utilize it, then you would not, according to your own report which was then submitted to the Roach committee, require any police report at all.

That, apparently, remains your policy, along with a number of other ones—for instance, that there be no office incorporators for social clubs, which is a very good move—and secondly, the limitation that they cannot change the designated place where they may operate without supplementary letters patent. But even again that was not novel, I suggest, with the Roach report, that was required as part of the departmental specification long before that time.

What I am getting around to is really querying the business of investigating people in social clubs, particularly members of many of these philanthropic and benevolent associations. It is an onerous piece of business. You do keep these police reports very severely under guard; it certainly is not available to the profession, nor to those lawyers who object that their clients have not been given the charters.

Therefore, would it not be better, since the nuisance, the evil and even the peril of social clubs, as they were in those days with the three thieves, the Feeley-McDermott situation, has been pretty well obviated, to write into the charter certain clauses restricting their range and type of activity, placing limitations upon them and obviating and getting rid of this business of having people who want to be joined together in that sort of community placed under police investigation and surveillance? It very often leaves a shadow over their whole situation; they do not know why in many cases they have not been brought under the cover.

Secondly, those who do know or have good reason to know why, do not make the initial applications and are nonetheless members and often in very high and very good standing in the clubs themselves. But they deliberately refrain from becoming the incorporators to start with. They set up innocent fronts and the police cannot penetrate. With that in mind, after all these years and after that fiasco has blown over, would it not be better to revert actually to your earlier position?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be quite willing to review that procedure once again. The thought that crosses my mind, as an initial reaction, is that perhaps it is better to exercise the control before the charter is issued than it is to try and follow up violations of objects clauses. Perhaps at this stage I could simply indicate that I would be very happy, in the course of the review of the procedures, to include the points which have been raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: To follow up, could I ask the Minister, Mr. Chairman, what happens to the police file on an application for a social club after the Minister has made his decision on whether or not that group of people will be granted the charter? Does that file remain in his office; does he burn it in ashtray or does he send it back to the police? What happens to that police statement after the Minister has made his decision?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As far as I know, it is kept in a particular file, in the confidential section of that file, and is not a public document. I draw that distinction because, you see, these corporations file annual returns as well. The information for public search is kept in one spot, but the application and the information which is relative to the application is kept in the confidential files of the department.

Mr. T. Reid: Could I ask the Minister why it is necessary to keep the police statement in his files once he has made a decision?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think under the circumstances, we just want everything on record, because Ministers do change, to explain the procedure that was taken at the time. It is just kept on the record like everything else which is relevant to the application.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, I wonder, when the Minister is issuing these licences—or, rather, charters—if he looks at them and takes into consideration that possibly some of these clubs may be contravening the human rights of people; that they may be of a discriminatory nature. I also wonder if the Minister takes into consideration some of the clubs that are in existence right now, for an example, the Granite Club of Toronto, that I gather will not really qualify for a stamp of approval for the human rights people. Does the Minister take this into account in any of the places where the charters are handed out?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think it is fair to say in a general way, Mr. Chairman, that any application for a club which contains as one of its objects something contrary to the statutes of the province would not be permitted. Any statement within the objects clause which would contravene any of our human rights legislation, naturally, would not be allowed.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister be prepared to cancel a club charter if it could be proven or is proven in court that a certain club discriminates against people?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, just to have this matter clarified, I am talking about the objects clause. With respect to what happens on the part of a corporate citizen violating any of the law, this is a matter in which they are treated as any other. I mean the corporation can be brought before the courts for violating any particular statute of this province. I do not know anything about the charter of the club to which he makes reference.

I would venture to say there is nothing in the objects clauses, although I really should not even say that because I really do not know how long ago it was incorporated. But I would be surprised to find any discriminatory objects within the objects clause itself. What the practice of this or any club might be in this regard, it stands in the community as a body corporate which can be prosecuted for any violations.

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished with that point?

Mr. Makarchuk: No, I am not. From that, I take it the Minister would sanction the operation of clubs. Another example is the London Hunt Club, which also, I gather, discriminates against people of Jewish background.

Mr. Sargent: Liberals!

Mr. Makarchuk: No, it accepts Liberals. Am I to take from the Minister that he is not prepared to move into situations where a club, supposedly a public club, discriminates against people because of their ethnic or religious persuasion?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not know of any such clubs in the first place, Mr. Chairman. The member says he thinks some of these clubs do this. I do not know this. I am only talking now about applications for incorporation of social clubs; we would not permit in such applications clauses which provided for discrimination against the present law. As to the clubs to which he makes reference, I am sure of the same thing: if, in fact, there are social clubs that do this, then they are subject to the same law as the hon. member and I are: It would be for some law enforcement people, or indeed the hon. member himself, to lay a charge before a justice of the peace to have the body corporate prosecuted.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, I am not too sure about my law; I do not think there is anything in the law that really says a club is not permitted to discriminate. I am appealing to him strictly on a moral basis; surely you will not sanction the operation or the continued existence of a club that practises discrimination? This is what we want to know.

Is the Minister for it or against it? In other words, will the Minister hand out charters to clubs that practice discrimination? Will he permit them to hold club charters as long as they practise discrimination? Yes or no?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Brantford is talking about discrimination in its broad context. This department would only deal with those things which are legally defined. When we get into the field of morality and beyond the law, this gets into another area.

I think under the circumstances—I speak now as a lawyer—we are faced with the law as it now is and I am not prepared to go any further except to say I am sure the hon. member would understand that all members of this House are opposed to discrimination and are working in a statutory way to provide for certain legal standards in this regard. I am speaking now to the legal implications of this, insofar as the statute law of this province or, indeed, this country, is concerned. Other types of discrimination may be going on with respect to men's clubs not wanting women in their clubs and all this sort of thing. I do not know; some people might even label that as discrimination. I really am not qualified to go beyond the fact that from a legal point of view this would be our interpretation.

Mr. T. Reid: On the same issue, Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister, who investigated on behalf of the police, the policemen's social club application?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, but I would be glad to get that information for you.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the Minister think it right for the police to investigate themselves to see whether or not they recommend the charter for themselves?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sure it would not be the same police, it would be some other level of police investigation. But I will be glad to get that information. I do not know that particular answer.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on this particular point? The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, the Minister mentioned a while ago about some of these race charters being picked up. It seems to be, in some areas, and in my own area, that I have been informed by some of the people who belong to the agricultural societies and municipalities, that there were some racing charters they thought they had for a number of years back. They had not used them, of course, for a long time and they are of the opinion now that these have been picked up by someone and that they never were reimbursed for them, or just do not know where they went.

Hon. Mr. Welch: To go back to the racing charters, I think, if I have my dates right, sometime prior to 1912 there were some of these charters issued and they were forfeited over a period of years for non-use. Thereafter, someone discovered they were there, paid the back fees with respect to returns and so on and acquired them. Now all I am saying is, in answer to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, that in order to get a racing charter in those terms, would require a bill of this Legislature.

Mr. Ruston: These were picked up by someone else. Were the people that originally had them not notified of this, that they had a chance to either pay up the back dues and take them themselves, or not?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am not familiar with the procedure at that time. But I see no reason why they would. They lost them for non-use so, therefore, they were forfeited.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York-view has been trying to get the floor. Unless he wants to yield to the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside who has been trying for some time?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, I should like to explore the matter of the use and the purpose of the corporate records. As I understand it, this department registers the—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I think we have been pursuing the procedure of clearing one topic at a time, so if the hon. member would not mind, the hon. member for Grey-

Bruce wants to talk about racing charters again.

Mr. Burr: Again?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Very briefly, I would like to ask the Minister—this is very important to us here at this point—you raised $50 million last year through race track charters, under the issuance of your department. What is the setup regarding off-track betting now, insofar as Toronto is concerned? What control do they have from your department?

Mr. Chairman: This does not come under The Department of Provincial Secretary at all.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, I am under companies, Mr. Chairman. We are under companies.

Mr. Chairman: Not—the remarks the hon. member—

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, this is companies we are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Welch: There are no corporations in Ontario now, incorporated for the purpose of conducting off-track betting.

Mr. Sargent: Well, let us assess, under whose control are they?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, at the moment they are carrying on in an unincorporated fashion, I suppose, as agents or—

Mr. Sargent: Is any application before you for this?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We have some name requests before us at the moment.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to explore this, Mr. Chairman. This could open a whole new spectrum insofar as revenue is concerned. Why do you limit the terms of operation to betting on horses only? Why could you not make that baseball, hockey, football, soccer and dogs, the whole bit, and then the revenue picture for the province could be five times what it is. You could have $200 million a year if you give people a chance to bet legally on all these things.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this Liberal policy?

Mr. Sargent: I think it would be a very good Liberal policy. In other words, if we are in this business to do things legally, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: This has nothing to do with The Provincial Secretary's Department.

Mr. Sargent: I think it is a good shot because—

Mr. MacDonald: A good shot at policy, too.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister does not see anything wrong with it? Do you see anything wrong with it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Wait a minute—

Mr. Sopha: I know of no horses that bet on people.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Minister is making reference to corporations with this object. Now the matters to which the hon. member is now making reference would require some amendments to the Criminal Code.

Mr. Sargent: You have the applications before you for off-track betting.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let me finish. The matter that you are talking about now requires an amendment to the Criminal Code.

Mr. Sargent: I cannot hear you, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The matter that you are now talking about requires amendments to the code. To talk now specifically about off-track betting, I have reported to you that there are some people who have made enquiries of our department with respect to names, which is usually the first step. An application is now before this department on the part of some people in order to incorporate a company for this agency purpose.

This is specifically within the terms of reference I gather from the recent Supreme Court decision with respect to this type of activity. Namely, a man acting as an agent to take bets to the track for his principal. When you get involved in other forms of betting you are talking about areas which come within the purview of the Attorney General and would require amendments to the Criminal Code, as indeed would the whole field of wagering.

Mr. Sargent: As a matter of public interest, sir, there are a number of these places operating in Toronto now. They have no charter and there is no control to protect the public as to their stability or their ability to handle money. Do you not think it is an area where by you should investigate?

Hon. Mr. Welch: This would be a matter of government policy and I feel quite confident that the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) has this matter under very active consideration.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Get a dossier!

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman, before this discussion turned to horse racing and finally went to the dogs, we were discussing corporate records. This was in your absence. As I understand it, this department registers companies under their correct name, with the officers of the company indicated and the addresses of the company. The payment of a yearly fee of $10 I believe, shows that the company is still alive.

That does not seem to give the public very much of a bargain or very much information for a third of a million dollars. We have, in Windsor, an American company known as Sirrah Limited. This company bought an island in the Detroit River a year or two ago and began to develop it as a recreational area on a commercial basis. Now the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: We have difficulty hearing the hon. member.

Mr. Burr: The hon. member has difficulty speaking in the first place.

The company was very successful in getting over $0.5 million of work done on the island, paying out very little or no cash at all for it, and was successful in acquiring about eight almost new canal boats which had been used for a few months in 1967 at Expo. It succeeded in persuading the federal government to pay large sums of money for four ferries. According to the publicity that was used in the city several times, these ferries cost $250—pardon me, $250,000 each and the federal government is supposed to have put up three-quarters of the cost.

What I am coming to, Mr. Chairman, is one of the interesting facts about the company; it purchased—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Burr: —Peche Island for about $310,000 and paid only ten per cent—some people say even less—down in cash. It has acquired some land on the Windsor side of the river near the island, and perhaps some land on the American side.

The strange thing is, a Dun and Bradstreet report says that the assets of this company are about $10,600,000 and the company's liabilities are about $10,300,000. I have not seen this report but this is the gist of it as I understand it.

Mr. Chairman, many people are interested in what American companies are doing in our province, and the logical place for them to go would be to the corporate records branch of The Department of Citizenship. Why could not companies include a one-page financial statement of their operations each year along with their annual return?

How can we in Ontario, or in Canada, hope to have any effective control over our own economy when such a large proportion of corporations, that is the Americans, do not make any financial reports? Why are those American-owned or American-dominated corporations, which are registered in Ontario, not required to make to the Provincial Secretary, a financial report concerning their operations in Ontario? A report which any citizen could examine?

Because they affect the livelihood of too many of our people, we can no longer treat the operation of American corporations as sacrosanct; we must treat them the same way we treat Canadian public corporations, whether they sell stock to the public or not.

I would like the Minister to tell us why this information could not be added and make these corporate records of some use to the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I suppose we can require any information that we like and think would be in the public interest. Earlier today, the hon. member for Downsview was making some reference, in fact, even questioned the information which we are now asking our corporate people to file.

Any shareholder who wants information, financial statements with respect to the operation of his company, may now requisition it. It is a matter of opinion as to whether or not, in the public interest, we would want to have some financial particulars with respect to extra-provincial corporations. They are no different from any corporation here. They have to file their annual return as well.

Any company coming into this jurisdiction and dealing with the public, has to fulfil the obligations that are set out under The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, through the Ontario Securities Commission. This type of information would have to be filed with them by certain companies. But in the day-to-day operations of our department we do not, as the hon. member has already mentioned, require the filing of the financial statement, keeping in mind that insofar as the public is concerned, the information which we do now require is the information which most of the public want in order to know who is behind the limited liability classification.

The financial statement, as it would have reference to shareholders of the company, any shareholder, of course, would have this under the terms of the Act, as they are provided either at the annual meeting or specifically requested within the terms of The Corporations Act.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1702. The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Minister, in line with the statement made by the Minister—he says that any information we want that would be in the public interest can be obtained from the company. As I understand it according to the Watkins report, one of the problems faced by them when they were writing this report, was the fact that they could not get information, particularly on American corporations, as to their financial status, where their money is going, what transfer there was from Canada to the United States, royalties, management fees and so on. This is the kind of information that is needed for the public interest, particularly if you are going to start deciding what your investment is going to be provincially; how you are going to plan your economy and so on. This is the kind of information needed. Is the Minister prepared to follow this up? In other words, bring in legislation eventually that will make these companies file this information, their financial reports, the transfer of payments and so on, and make this public knowledge?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the hon. member for Brantford, I did not make the first statement as he said. I said that in dealing with the public type of information that is required in our office, the annual return now does provide the questions for which most people want answers. This other information—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Wait a minute—let me finish this.

Mr. MacDonald: Most people—

Hon. Mr. Welch: We made a survey in the public records office in this regard. I am not talking about the financial implications. In those companies which are going to the public for money and which are dealing in the financial community in this respect, this is the sort of information which is required under the securities legislation of the province.

I really fail—and this may be my problem here—to understand what you expect this department of government to produce in its public office which would not be obtained by The Financial and Commercial Affairs Department particularly, through the Ontario Securities Commission, in their dealing with the public.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, some of the information that is wanted, or that a Canadian would like to know, is the financial status of the company, not just the companies that borrow money in Canada; very few of them do at the moment. As a result they do not have to file anything with the securities commission or anybody else. But in terms of finding out how these companies operate, whether they operate in the interest of Canada or in the interest of the province of Ontario, we have to know a lot about the internal workings of, and operation of, that firm. This information, in many cases in the States, is on file. All companies in the States, to a great extent, have to file this type of information with their people, their own security exchange commission, or whoever it is. But this is not done in Canada and this is the kind of information that is in the public interest.

This is the kind of information the public is entitled to have and this is the kind of information that the people who are dealing with the economics of this province should have. They should have this information and they want this information but they cannot get it. This is where the Minister can help by bringing in legislation. Perhaps we can have this information on file here in Canada, a lot of it that is only on file in the United States.

It being 6.00 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1702. The hon. member for High Park is on his feet.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Chairman, last year I had the pleasure of having some discourse with you under this particular vote, and through you to the Minister (Mr. Welch), and at the time I was talking about an anti-social company whose name at the moment escapes; it was one of the breweries. The Minister suggested that if I should supply the evidence to him that that particular company was breaking the law and that it was hurting certain members of the public, then he would prosecute. I was wondering if the prosecution has begun, because as I recall I did supply the information to the Minister.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, I would remind the member that that was not an undertaking at that time. The exchange was on the basis of the failure of that particular company, if I am thinking of the right company, to hold its annual meetings. I explained the procedures that were open to him as a shareholder of that company, and subsequently, without going into all the details, he provided me with some information by letter dealing with the operations of that company.

I was satisfied later—I must admit on the basis of press notices of course—that he had an opportunity, as a shareholder of that company, to discuss all these matters with the directors of the company at the time that those meetings were being held. I at no time gave any undertaking to prosecute the company. I told them the conditions under which the department would be interested in approaching this particular problem on the basis of the specific question which he asked me at that time.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps one of us misremembers. I will get the Hansard out; there were several exchanges. To refresh your memory, Mr. Chairman, the situation was that this particular company, for whatever reason, has not held annual meetings for some 12 years, and this is of course against the law in this province. I pointed this out to the Minister as coming under his department and that he should lay charges against this company, and that he should enforce the law in this province.

He suggested that I should lay the charges, or that somebody else should lay charges, or anybody but the Minister should lay the charges. He did not think this was really his responsibility, and he said, "I cannot see that any harm is being done." I pointed out to him that the directors of this company had taken all the money out of the company, some $1 million, and lent it to another company which they also happened to be directors of, interest free, for a period of 12 years.

This did seem a little odd. We do not often see million-dollar loans from one company to another where there are public shareholders involved, with no interest on the money. It turns out that the company that had made the loan, as a result was out some $1 million in interest over these years. No charges have been laid, of course. We do not expect the friends of the government to have charges laid against them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: No, no charges were laid. I thank the Conservative back benchers for their interjections.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it is a great shame that you people do not enforce the law, but we hope that in two years when we have a new government, the law will be enforced in this province.

An hon. member: You will not be in the government.

Mr. Shulman: I think even the Liberals will enforce the law if they happen some time to form the government, but we know the Conservatives will not. We do hope that with similar cases, the Liberals might, you never know.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: No. I refuse to believe that.

Mr. Shulman: In any case, Mr. Chairman, the company in its good time did hold an annual meeting, and they said, "Yes, it is true, we did loan the money out. No, we did not charge any interest. No, we do not intend to try and collect interest back from this other company that has the money. It is too bad but maybe we should wind the company up and solve this problem. But do not worry, as long as the company is around we are going to hold an annual meeting every year from now on."

I come back again to you Mr. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman. The directors of this company have taken the money out of that treasury, and have given it to another company which they also control, interest free. For some 12 years they were able to do this without publicity because you did not prosecute them, even though you knew they were not following the law.

I am not too interested in this particular company, because this is pretty well water under the bridge now, but going into your records I found there are many companies in there that are not holding their annual meetings. Leaving the brewery aside, leaving good old E.P. aside—and I know you do not want to disturb him too much—the only question I want the Minister to answer, if he will, is: Is it your intention in future, if a company is not holding its annual meeting as required by the law of this province, to lay the proper charges? That is really all I want to know. If you answer yes, I shall trouble you no further on this whole matter.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I repeat, for the benefit of the member, the shareholders' remedy in most cases is under section 341 of the present Corporation Act, which was in existence at the time the matter was first brought up. There is no change in the departmental policy in this regard, that where facts are brought to the attention of the department—which, if established, would constitute a violation of the Act—it is not the policy of the department to commence prosecution proceedings in respect of such violations unless the department is satisfied that some public interest is being adversely affected by such alleged violation. I go on to repeat the answer which I am sure the hon. member is familiar with anyway: "The essential point is that in many of these matters there is a procedure provided in the Act for the shareholder to seek his own remedy in this matter—"

Mr. Shulman: Yes. Mr. Chairman, just to conclude this matter, we get the same answer from this Minister—who, we have been led to believe, is a little more up-to-date than perhaps some of the other Ministers of the front bench—as we do from the Minister of Commercial and Financial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), when we find frauds in stock deals and we appeal to him, "Why does not the security commission do something?" It is always the same reply: "The shareholders can go to the courts." And this is what we are getting from the Provincial Secretary. We expect better from him, because he is one of the two or three in that front bench who we think know what they are doing. And this makes us wonder a bit.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Be careful.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, well, it is true. I give him a compliment, it is deserved.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We are still wondering, though.

Mr. Shulman: We are still wondering, but he is one of the two or three where there is some room for wonder. The rest we can cast away with no hesitation. But for him to say that the government is not going to carry out the function of seeing that the laws are followed, that it is up to the individual members of the public or the individual shareholders, is not good enough. This old laissez-faire and 19th century attitude is typical of what we hear from the Minister of no resources and no energy, it is typical of what we hear from the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), it is typical of what we hear from the Minister of Commercial and Financial Affairs. We expect better from you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, let me just follow up on the point the member for High Park has just made on this question. The Minister has referred to the one section of the Act, and I am not engaged in one-upmanship on the proposition at all, but the fact of the matter is that that section of the Act to which the Minister refers, deals with matters in addition to the levying of the penalty. I have been the beneficiary, practising in that particular field, of the laxity of the government over many years in failing to collect those penalties that are imposed by the statutes. I think the point, however, that the member for High Park makes is perfectly right. Either we get rid of them or we enforce them. If the Minister will refer to the preceding section of the Act, it states that every corporation and every person who, being a director or officer of the corporation or acting on its behalf, commits any act contrary to any provision of this Act or fails or neglects to comply with any such provision, is guilty of an offence and on summary conviction, if no penalty for such act, failure or neglect is expressly provided by this Act, is liable to a fine of not more than $200.

Now, the section to which the Minister referred is the next section, 341, where it states that where a shareholder or member or creditor of a corporation is aggrieved by the failure of the corporation or a director, officer or employee of the corporation to perform any duty imposed upon it, or him, by this Act, the shareholder, member or creditor, notwithstanding the imposition of any penalty, and in addition to any other right that he may have, may apply to the court for an order directing the corporation, director, officer or employee as the case may be, to perform such duties, and upon such application the court may make such order, or such other order as the court thinks fit.

The point is very clear that there was no intention, when the Legislature passed that particular section of The Corporations Act, to have the one exclusive of the other. The obligation on the Provincial Secretary is very similar to the obligation which, in fact, the department of the Treasurer does exercise under The Corporations Tax Act. For example, the Treasurer does not hesitate, after giving the defaulting corporation all sorts of opportunities because of human frailty—again, of which I have had the benefit over a period of time—to meet the requirements of the statute, does not fail nevertheless to take them to the court if, in fact, they want to impose the penalty to make certain that tax returns are filed. I think that the point the member for High Park makes, is perfectly valid. I think the time has long gone by when we can afford to have provisions assessing what are in substance very nominal penalties, but at least, token penalties, to make certain that the provisions of the statute are complied with. I suggest to the Minister that he should consult with the Treasurer of the province and adopt the same kind of procedures that the Treasurer adopts if there has been a default and failure of filing returns under The Corporations Tax Act, because they do not hesitate to take companies to court for that purpose, of levying again, fairly nominal fines.

This point has come up time and time again, and every lawyer in the Legislature, because he has benefitted, has been reluctant to insist that the penalties be exacted. I think that the Minister, in order to meet the point the member for High Park makes, and which has been made on many other occasions, has got to institute a procedure. We are voting about $750,000 for the administration of the companies branch of The Department of the Provincial Secretary. Now, if we are voting that kind of money—and I understand from the Provincial Treasurer that money is scarce at the present time, certainly expensive, although I do not know if it is all that scarce—if we are voting $750,000, the principal part of the activities of this branch is the administration of this statute, and I think we have got to get down to using the statute in the way in which it was intended. If the Minister believes that we should eliminate all the penalties—the $5 penalties and the $10 penalties, and the other penalties, day by day, that are not used by the Act, or are imposed by the Act but not exacted by the Minister—then my guess is he should bring in amendments to the Act.

We are engaged in voting $750,000 on a point which to everybody but the persons involved, namely, the legal profession, is something that the public cannot understand. They cannot understand why, if the statute says that a corporation must hold an annual meeting every year, the Minister, when he says there is no real public interest involved in this other than if you happen to be a shareholder, or under that section of the Act if you apply to the court, thinks it is all right to have no meeting. If the Minister wants to rely entirely upon that attitude toward the operation of the corporate law, then that is fine. But let us get rid of the other provisions, let us not kid people that in fact there are penalties which are imposed by this Legislature which are not in fact exacted.

I think the member for High Park has a very, very valid point and I think the Minister should reply to it and answer as to what he intends to do about procedures in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I simply repeat, the hon. member for Riverdale was making reference to the question of the filing of returns when he was talking about my Cabinet colleague? You understand that in this situation there was no failure to file annual returns.

Mr. J. Renwick: Or at least to hold meetings.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is right. The point was the returns were being filed as required under the Act because if, in fact, they had not filed their annual returns, you realize what the implications of that would be in the procedure of cancellation of the charter.

Mr. J. Renwick: But not the exaction of the penalty.

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, I understand, I just wanted to make the point clear. Now on each of these annual returns when the question is asked, "When did you last have your annual meeting?", they in fact reported when they last had their annual meeting, which of course indicated that they were not having a meeting under the terms of the Act. It is at that stage where I mentioned to the hon. member for High Park—and I repeat now—that as a matter of departmental administration the statute provides the requirement for the holding of an annual meeting. The statute also provides a penalty if you do not. Unless we have some evidence of prejudice to the public interest, the vehicle is provided in the internal arrangements of the company. The aggrieved shareholder may proceed to lay an information before a justice of the peace which, in fact, creates the offence when the penalty for it is established.

Mr. Shulman: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Absolutely.

Mr. Shulman: Would you not agree that it is in the public interest, if the directors of a company have taken all the money out?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am really not competent to speak about the internal arrangements with respect to the financing between these two companies. Does that not illustrate the very problem?

Mr. Shulman: The very problem is that you should exercise the law with everyone or with no one.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, no, I understand the hon. member, and he has specifically avoided the particular question. It is my understanding that in the company in which he was interested as a shareholder, 99.92 per cent of the stock of that company was held by that particular company and .08 per cent of the shares were held by a limited number of people including the hon. member. As far as I am concerned, when you got into the internal arrangements, we felt this was best solved by the shareholders themselves.

I am not competent to discuss the propriety of what went on between the shareholders. Certainly if I was a shareholder of that company I would want to know, and if I felt aggrieved I have the prerogative to do something about it.

Mr. Shulman: Why do you keep these laws on the books if you do not intend to exercise them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Because that in fact is the law—they must have an annual meeting and if you do not hold an annual meeting there is a penalty. We simply say to the aggrieved shareholder there is the law that provides for the annual meeting, there is the penalty, and then you lay a charge and if the judge is satisfied, there is a conviction under that particular section of the Act—why would we remove it?

Mr. MacDonald: Who lays the charge?

Mr. J. Renwick: It is you who should lay the charge.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh, well of course that is where the difference of opinion comes in.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying for about an hour to get in on this and I feel that this is the appropriate point to get in here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, since 5 o'clock. An hour of consecutive time in the operation of the House. I have three points that I would like to raise, Mr. Chairman. The first one is this: I was rather interested in reading the editorial in the London Free Press following the report on the conflict of interest, when the London Free Press enunciated a principle which I suggest applies not only in the conflict of interest, but here. The government that makes the law has the obligation to enforce the law. In short, do not say that a shareholder in this instance, within this Minister's jurisdiction, or in the conflict of interest a lowly citizen, has the obligation to lay a charge and pay money out of his pocket to see that the law is lived up to. If you make the law then you have an obligation to enforce it. Otherwise, take the law off the book.

I do not know why the Minister shakes his head. If the Minister feels that the public interest is, in some way, threatened by not living up to the obligations then I suggest that the government that makes the law has the obligation—when it is suspected or when somebody draws to their attention that the law is not being lived up to—that they should initiate the process and not leave the responsibility to the shareholder and not leave it to the lowly citizen in the instance of conflict of interest. That is my first point and I leave it.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): This is a strange theory of jurisprudence, I must say.

Mr. MacDonald: It is what?

Mr. Sopha: Strange theory of jurisprudence.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Well I do not know if it is a strange theory of jurisprudence—

Mr. Sopha: There are all kinds of laws that the government does not take the responsibility of enforcing.

Mr. MacDonald: When they impose penalties I suggest that they have the responsibility to take the action to see that the law is enforced and the penalties imposed—which leads me, Mr. Chairman, to the second point that I wanted to raise.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): What if somebody hits you, do I have to lay a charge?

Mr. Sopha: Well, your second one had better be better than your first one.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, my first one was valid, but you lawyers on the Liberal and Tory side have a queer concept of how the public interest is protected.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Queer—that is not a misplaced adjective when referring to the Liberals.

An hon. member: Oh come on, Donald, now really.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Minister with regard to a point that has been raised with him on a number of occasions in the last two or three hours of the sitting of the House and that is, how the regulations are enforced in terms of cleaning up all those company charters within the company branch files.

I recall years ago when his predecessor was holding the position, and we were dealing with racing charters, that the excuse of the Minister was that the whole situation had been neglected down through the years so that there were literally thousands of dead files. We were trying to cope with the problem of dead files that could be activated by somebody waving a wand, usually a Tory wand, and they came back into life by paying the obligations over all these years in which they had not filed annual returns and held annual meetings.

My question to the Minister is: How long do you let this situation go on? During the past year for example, there are at least two occasions that I can recall, when people have been in touch with me regarding certain companies. When we check, when we look into the files we discover that they have not held an annual meeting, so we get in touch with the Minister who bugs them and they hold their annual meeting, or at least they send in their return. The lawyer acting on their behalf talks to himself, or his secretary, and sometimes his secretary may be more interested in them than himself and he sends in the return and presumably, the law is fulfilled.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is a mockery. What is the state—if I may deal with my point two—what is the state, at the moment, of the cleaning up of what was frankly conceded by the government to be a wholly unsatisfactory situation in terms of dead charters and unfulfilled charters and unfulfilled regulations with regard to the holding of charters?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, the department has been engaged in a very active programme in this regard. We have been cancelling charters at the rate of about 2,500 a year. It is my understanding, I am advised now, that we are caught up to 1966, which is where we really should be on the basis of the Act. And we can keep up to date now that we have reached this point on the question of filing. Of course, many of these cancellations are on the failure to file annual returns and there is a certain procedure there. So the simple answer is that we have caught up to 1966 and can keep this matter now in hand because of this accomplishment.

Mr. MacDonald: So, when I write the letter and, discover that they have not held an annual meeting for a couple of years, the company is in this three-year period in which it can sort of play with the law?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, not play with the law. As soon as they fail to file on the first year they are given notification and if they still have not filed within three years we start the proceedings. We are current, now, with respect to these. In this three-year period they have been advised and have received their warning about their failure to file the annual return.

Mr. MacDonald: What happens on the second year?

Hon. Mr. Welch: They receive another notice.

Mr. MacDonald: And the third year, they are cancelled?

Hon. Mr. Welch: And the third year there is a regular procedure of registered notices, following which the Minister cancels the charter.

Mr. MacDonald: Supposing we go no further than this. Why? If I am driving along Highway 401 and drive at 80 miles an hour and I violate the law, I do not get a chance for two years to continue to violate it.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The member does not need to speak on that subject.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister can speak on behalf of himself.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: In this instance, if the law is violated, why do you give two succeeding years in which the law is violated before you impose some restrictions, or the cancellation of the licence?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think really we measure the severity of the penalty. The cancellation of the charter certainly brings it to an end and the corporation is dead. I think in the example the member uses, you are still allowed to drive; and we think before we take that drastic action that we should provide a certain period of time. So we think in terms of a three-year period to allow them to bring themselves up to date. This happens to be a matter of policy and the member's opinion in this regard is as valid as anyone's. But this is where we are now in this backlog of catching up.

Mr. MacDonald: Having caught up to the backlog, may I make a suggestion to the Minister, that if the law is not lived up to in a single year, perhaps with another three months or six months of grace, if a company has gotten a charter, knows what the obligations are, and is then unwilling to fulfil the obligations of the charter, why should the licence or the charter not be cancelled immediately, with three or six months' grace; why do you go on for three years? The Minister concedes in his normally generous way that I am entitled to my opinion. Well, I am expressing my opinion to the Minister now.

It seems to me that having cleaned up an almost impossible kind of situation, you should clean it up further; that if a person seeks a charter and that charter carries with it certain rights and certain obligations—the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) this afternoon even raised the prospect that the charter would be a matter of right, rather than any beneficent concession on the part of the government—that beneficent concession now, or whatever may be a relaxing of the regulations in the future, should carry obligations that are lived up to, so that with a fair period of grace, three or six months, you hold your annual meeting and submit your return. There is no stalling from that point forward, the licence or the charter is cancelled. I suggest to the Minister that if this were the procedure, you would have no more trouble at the end of one year plus the days of grace or the months of grace, than you will at the end of three years.

Quite frankly, what happens now—I hope I do not offend my friends in the legal profession—is that these matters are neglected in legal offices by lawyers, or their secretaries or the operating officials for certain chartered companies. Either the company is not really operative or the lawyers are negligent of their responsibility. So nothing happens for six months, or a year, or a year and a half. All right, place the obligations that the charter is cancelled, and you will find that at the end of the one year you will clean up the situation and you will not have the kind of untidy mess that still remains to some degree, although I will concede it has been cleared up to a considerable extent as compared with a few years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the third point I wanted to raise—and it is following from what the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) this afternoon was initiating with the Minister: There is a growing request—demand, to put it in stronger terms—on the part of people that if a number of important public objectives are to be met, then governments, at either the federal or provincial level, have to get more information in the returns from the companies that are chartered. At the moment, the information on the returns submitted to the Provincial Secretary is surely of a routine nature—the officers of the company, the time of the annual meeting, things of this nature. I suggest to the Minister that there are three objectives that legitimately require a much fuller revelation of information with regard to the operation of companies.

The first one is the so-called public disclosure, so that those who are investors, or those who may not be aware of the fact that the company in which they have invested money is heading toward bankruptcy, such as Prudential Finance, will be fully informed and can protect their own interests. This, I think, is the first reason why we should have a much fuller revelation than is the case at the present time.

The second one is that this government, with the Provincial Treasurer now taking the lead—I do not know who is pushing him because I can hardly believe that he, on his own initiative, takes the lead—is now dedicated to genuine economic planning. You simply cannot do economic planning at the provincial level, or even more important, at the federal level, until we have much more information with regard to what are the facts of the companies that are now in operation in this country.

There is a third objective which legitimately requires the revelation to the public of much more of the information than hitherto has been regarded as private by the corporations, and that is in the area of collective bargaining. Today, when union-management negotiations get under way, unions find themselves completely in the dark with regard to the financial status of the company. In the United States the returns are such that the union has readily available, as has the public, much more detailed information with regard to the operation of that company. In Canada they are operating in the dark, so that in many instances the company pleads poverty, they simply cannot afford this, and the whole union-management negotiation reaches something of an impasse.

So I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that for the purpose of public disclosure to protect the interests of the investor; secondly, for the purpose of economic analysis that is necessary to meet the needs of economic planning, either privately or publicly through the direction of the government; and finally for purposes of collective bargaining, that there must be much greater revelation of what has hitherto been regarded by corporations as being exclusively their private concern.

In moving to suggest to the Minister what this government should do—and I recognize immediately, Mr. Chairman, that the government at the provincial level has to work within rather circumscribed areas—the real answer to this problem lies at the federal level; not the whole answer, but a considerable part of the answer lies at the federal level.

One of the problems at the moment is that even when we do get some information, for example, at the federal level, it is poured into the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and it comes out in aggregate, so that you have no information with regard to any specific company, or even with regard to any specific group of industries, so that you are not in the position to be able, for example, to engage in sensible economic analysis and thereby plan the development of the economy.

More important still—and here I think we are getting into an area that the Provincial Treasurer can do something—foreign firms in Ontario—and a very significant proportion of our firms are foreign firms, foreign controlled—are relieved of the necessity of public disclosure by virtue of the status that they are private companies. The status of a private company was presumably intended originally in Canada to permit an individual or a family to have the benefits of corporate status though not the right to issue shares publicly, without the cost of disclosure imposed on public companies. In fact, however, corporations have successfully used such legislation to obtain for themselves, with respect to their wholly owned subsidiaries—these are American dominated, or foreign dominated corporations—this legislation to protect their rights of privacy intended originally for individuals and for families. Hence wholly owned subsidiaries of foreign corporations can avoid disclosure in spite of the fact that their parent company in the United States, for example, is obligated and willingly provides this information.

In short, these subsidiaries in the province of Ontario do not provide the information because our law permits them to hide that information that the parent company readily, willingly, traditionally, provides in the United States. What is the significance of this? I was interested in looking back in the Watkins report, Mr. Chairman, to discover that on the basis of data on 743 of the largest companies in Canada it appears that 60 per cent are private companies. That means that 60 per cent of the largest companies—743 in number—do not have to reveal any information because they will hide under the cloak of being private companies. What are the private companies? Let us take a look at them.

In Canada we think of Eatons as being the classic example of the private company, the family concern that has grown up. But under the protection of American subsidiaries acquiring the same status, what do we get when we have private companies who do not have to divulge information? Companies like British Petroleum, Canadian International Paper, Canadian Kodak, Chrysler, Coca-Cola, General Foods, General Motors, Household Finance, IBM, Kraft Foods, Procter & Gamble, Sun Oil—in short, many of the largest corporations in this country are exclusively removed from any divulgence of the information regarding their operation as far as the public domain is concerned. That means that the investors—well, the investors of course are not involved, at least in this country since they are wholly owned subsidiaries; but certainly the government, in terms of economic planning has no information at all. Finally, of course, the trade unions, if there happen to be trade unions within this corporation, are operating almost completely in the dark when they move to negotiate with the company and the company indulges in the normal procedure of pleading poverty and not being able to do anything about it.

Let me get down to specifics as far as this Minister is concerned. I was interested in reviewing the proposals of the Watkins report which had reference to the federal sphere, as to what might be done in providing the legitimate amount of information for the public for purposes of investors, the workers, and the governments, for economic planning. There were a number of areas in which there were at least combined or complementary responsibilities between the federal and the provincial sphere.

The first one that the Watkins report referred to was that there should be an amendment to The Canada Corporations Act so that federally incorporated private companies, without respect to the nationality of ownership, must file returns with The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and make returns of all companies available to the general public. Then, of course, they added that they should seek provincial co-operation to make this an effective means of obtaining public disclosure.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the Minister that for all of the worthy public objectives that I have enunciated, here is a place where this government should move; that in terms of the incorporation of provincially incorporated companies, there should be laid down the requirements for public divulging of information of the operation of that company so that you will have full and clear information to the investors; so that secondly the Provincial Treasurer can quit playing games with economic planning, and be able to indulge meaningfully in economic planning; and finally the workers in that company will have the information so that they can negotiate with that company above board and not be guessing as to what is the financial status of the company concerned.

This government can do it within the province of Ontario for those companies that are provincially incorporated, I suggest to the Minister. If he argues that this would create certain obligations on these companies that would place them at a disadvantage, that action by the province of Ontario, because of its position in the national scene, would place pressure on the federal government to do likewise federally. In other words it would be comparable to the kind of thing that I commended earlier in the government threatening to move with regard to tax reform. If we are going to move with tax reform it will force the federal government to do something about tax reform. You move with regard to the divulging of information in provincially incorporated companies and it will force the federal government to do something about federally incorporated companies. You have a bit of leverage, so exercise that leverage.

Now, there is a second area in which I think the provincial government can move because it lies for the most part within your jurisdiction. I refer to the Watkins report where they said, "Use securities legislation in co-operation with the province" to obtain improved disclosure from companies which issue shares to the public. Let us face it. One of the anomalies in the Canadian political scene is that the biggest stock market is the Toronto exchange. This comes under purely provincial jurisdiction. If this government were willing to use this, if the incorporation of companies in the Provincial Secretary's branch is not adequate to move for the divulging of information, then you would certainly complete the picture in terms of information. I concede that this lies, for the moment, in the jurisdiction of another Minister, namely the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

There is another area that I draw to the attention of the Minister. If he is not willing to move, or, by his moving in terms of the incorporation of provincially incorporated companies, to get the necessary information, then it seems to me that within the province of Ontario he can intercede with his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) or the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, to establish in the province of Ontario a provincial counterpart of what is known federally as The Corporation and Labour Unions Returns Act, which requires that both unions and corporations will submit whatever information you demand that they should submit—so that there is adequate and full and public revelation.

Finally, if it were acted upon, this lies within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Treasurer. Two or three years ago, Walter Gordon—who, at that time, was disturbed about what was happening to the Canadian economy—he may be a great man, but as the hon. member says, if there is anybody more redundant within the Liberal Party, and he himself recognized it and got out, it is Walter Gordon—at one stage, submitted a questionnaire to American subsidiaries, or to foreign subsidiaries, to get information so that we would have some idea of what the impact was of the guidelines that were laid down in Washington in terms of the necessity of sending reserves back to the parent company: the obligations with regard to patents and things of that nature; the obligations with regard to restrictions placed on export. He was seeking all this information. In typical Liberal fashion, of course, the request was made to the subsidiary companies on a purely voluntary basis, so only a small proportion of them replied; most of them ignored it.

In summary, if full revelation at the company's branch level within the jurisdiction of this Minister does not do the job, or if securities legislation and the revelation of at least those companies that place securities on the market does not do the job, if what the provincial Minister of Labour might do with regard to a provincial Corporation and Labour Unions Returns Act does not do the job, then finally, here is another procedure with reference to American subsidiaries which are an important part of our economy, where we can get the necessary information so that we can really do a job in terms of economic planning, in terms of providing the information for unions to negotiate realistically with management, and in terms of investors being fully protected—protecting themselves because they have the facts.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the public is entitled to this information. At the moment, they get nothing of any value other than the routine information as to the officers of the company and what lawyer may be acting on their behalf.

So my question to the Minister is, what is this government considering in terms of the growing, public request for a fuller revelation, for these highly important public objectives? Are you going to move within your jurisdiction? Or alternatively, is there any prospect that the government is going to move within other departments such as the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs?

I do not think we can neglect this any further, otherwise when for example, the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) gets up and talks about economic planning we can quietly laugh because he has not got the facts to do any economic planning. At the moment, he is playing games because he has not got the facts. Who is he kidding? Himself, the public, us, everybody. I suggest that the time has come to quit kidding people and to get down to doing the serious job. But we cannot do it without the information which the government, at the moment, through its laws and regulations, is permitting to be hidden.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Chairman, could I also elaborate on this issue which the leader of the New Democratic Party has brought to the fore. I would like to underline the issues that he has discussed and to relate some of these to the issues that a number of us were quizzing the hon. Treasurer on about the co-operation between his department and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the federal government.

It is quite obvious that until we, in this province, do get the facts on the operations of the wholly owned subsidiaries operating in Ontario and the branch plants of American companies operating in Ontario, we cannot have any rational economic planning in this province.

This again was related to the comment that the member for Riverdale and myself were addressing to the Treasurer. Therefore, I would like to underline the question about this type of information in the hands of the present provincial government. Do they know what these companies are doing in this province? If they do not know, what are they doing to find out? If the Provincial Secretary does not believe that this lies within his jurisdiction—to quote the Minister of Education's (Mr. Davis) favourite word—then where does he believe it lies? Does it lie with the office of the Chief Economist under the Treasury? If it does not, then it must lie in his department. Or does it lie under the Cabinet committee on the co-ordination of economic policy? If it does, who can we quiz at the appropriate time on this type of estimate?

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that there are a lot of issues involved in the question of American ownership and control of companies operating in the province of Ontario. Unless we are to maximize the economic benefit of these companies and to minimize the economic costs to Ontario of the operations of these companies, we cannot control their impact on our economy.

There are issues such as the pricing policies between the subsidiaries that operate in Ontario when they purchase goods and services from their parent companies in the U.S. We should have the facts on their pricing policies.

We should know whether or not the prices they pay for these goods and services from their parent companies, and from related subsidiaries, are market prices or inflated prices or give-away prices. For example, Mr. Chairman, if an American subsidiary in this province purchases services from the American company or purchases goods—imports—from American companies, we should know what prices they are paying. If they are paying inflated prices then what this means is that the parent company in the U.S. is getting a subsidy from the operation of the subsidiary in Ontario. It is a way of transferring profits to the parent company from the subsidiaries without paying Canadian corporation taxes on that type of profit.

I suggest, sir, that the Watkins report and the 1957 report called the Gordon report, identified this as a particular issue—that there are many techniques whereby the wholly owned American subsidiaries and branch plants operating in Ontario can reduce their taxable corporation profits; a number of very neat arrangements can be made with their American companies.

The paying of higher prices than normal for goods and services received from the parent company is just one such technique. And unless this provincial government realizes that these multi-national corporations with branch plants and subsidiaries in Canada are using these very sophisticated techniques, then this government is not collecting its maximum revenue from the operation of these subsidiaries in this province. I would say that the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) should be very much interested in this type of issue.

Without dragging this debate out any further on this particular issue, Mr. Chairman, I would again like to ask the Provincial Secretary whether he considers the issues that I have raised, the issues that the hon. leader of the NDP has raised, the issues that many members in the two Opposition parties have raised over the last two years, are relevant to government in this province. If, as a Minister of the government, he does not consider these issues to be relevant, then let him say it. Let the people of this province know that he and his colleagues in Cabinet do not give a damn about the takeover of this province by Americans. If that is the case, let him state it very clearly.

An hon. member: What about Trudeau?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): What about the federal Liberals?

Mr. T. Reid: The member for Scarborough West should fight his battles here. He should fight his bloody battles here.

If the Minister and this government does not consider this to be a problem, let him say so. If he does consider it to be a problem, then let us know in this House and let the people of Ontario know that it is a problem, that they consider it to be a problem and they have policies to do something about it.

Interjections by many hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I, in somewhat of a summary form, touch on two or three of the points mentioned? I think the members of the committee will appreciate that many of the points raised are not particularly within the purview of the responsibilities of the department. I wanted to make specific mention, however, of some points which perhaps would fall under the purview of what could be The Corporations Information Act. And it becomes a matter of members expressing their opinion as to what information you would require of Ontario corporations to file with government under that Act.

We have seen some evidence even in the discussion of the opinion here as to what value this information would be. I might just speak to this—I do not want to dismiss it summarily—but I do want to remind the members that part of the terms of reference that the reconstituted select committee on company law deals with this question of returns and I suppose the question of returns could be expanded into this field of information. Perhaps, as a matter of developing this argument, the comments of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party are now on record and could be considered by government as well as by the committee. It would not be, I think, proper for me today to be speaking in terms of government policy. That remains for the government to announce in the proper way what its policy would be in due course.

May I simply say this? Insofar as the filing of information, whatever it may be—it may well be that the House has an opportunity now that this matter is before the select committee, to press some of these particular points. I quickly move to this though, to say that insofar as the investing public is concerned, I thought this was part of the reason behind many of the things that had to be filed with the Ontario Securities Commission now, and we have complementary legislation in The Corporations Act which covers Ontario corporations in this whole field of disclosure.

Mr. MacDonald: But this does not cover private companies, which, in effect means all American subsidiaries.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This may be the deficiency. I am talking about all companies at the moment who offer their shares on the public market. They are covered by the securities commission.

I suppose many of the points that have been mentioned—and perhaps we could comment to this extent tonight, that many of the points that have been mentioned do in fact touch other departments of government. The Minister of Revenue no doubt is interested, as would be the Treasurer and The Department of Economics, not to overlook, of course, as well, The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs under which the Ontario Securities Commission functions. So these points are now made and so far as the information which we now require is concerned, we have in the neighbourhood of 3,000 searches a month going on in the public office of the department, seeking out the information which is there filed. What additional information in the public interest might be required is now a matter of opinion, about which I am sure there could be many expressions of opinion both in the select committee and during the course of debate in the House.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, this afternoon before adjourning at 6.00 o'clock, the Minister indicated that he had the authority and the power to require disclosure of any information from any incorporated company chartered in this province. I take it that he derives that authority under section 4 of The Corporations Information Act, which states that the Provincial Secretary may at any time by notice require any corporation to make a return upon any subject connected with its affairs within the time specified in the notice, and on default in making such a return every director of the corporation, and so on, is guilty of an offence.

Clearly the Provincial Secretary has the discretion and the authority to call for the kind of information that members on this side of the House have stressed tonight to be of such importance in the management of our economy; in the improvement of collective bargaining relationships; in the surveillance of company operations that might well lead to the avoidance of any such future spectacles as the collapse of the Prudential Finance Company; that might well lead to a deterrent to the kind of operation that is going on now in connection with the sale of Peche Island by the Sirrah Company Limited of Detroit, an extra-provincial corporation operating in this province, and a corporation about which we know nothing whatever of its financial operations except that which the principal of that firm chooses to divulge in connection with the option that is to take place on Thursday of this week—at which time the very valuable piece of property and extremely important asset of this province, an asset that ought to belong to the people of this province, to be held in their name for their use and enjoyment, will be conveyed or transferred, again probably to another extra-provincial corporation, if it does not in some manner remain within the control of the present owner, as many people suspect it well may.

Under The Corporations Act, Mr. Chairman, the Minister now requires the disclosure of very extensive information about the operations of companies in this province. The Corporations Act, in the sections 70 through 80 through 90, I believe, calls for the provision to shareholders of detailed income statements, balance sheets and where appropriate, statements of the source and application of funds. It would appear to me, Mr. Chairman, on looking at section 4 of The Corporations Information Act, that the Minister could well require the filing of returns by private companies which would contain that very extensive information that is required by all corporations, both public and private, to be afforded to their own shareholders, so that we get away from this secrecy that surrounds the operations of so many of our major corporations in this province—corporations which in the motor vehicle manufacturing field, for example, Mr. Chairman, account for the leading volume of exports by this province, according to the press release of the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) which arrived on my desk today.

In the motor vehicle manufacturing field in this province, two major corporations of the three—General Motors of Canada, Chrysler Canada Limited—are private, wholly owned subsidiaries of United States parent corporations. We know nothing about their operations under the laws governing those firms offering their security to the public in this province, nor do we know anything of their operations under the requirements of The Corporations Act in connection with the operations of the companies branch.

Some years ago, I happened to be given certain information about Chrysler Canada Limited which was obtained from the Securities and Exchange Commission of the United States Government in Washington. In that country, the United States parent corporations are required to file extensive information about the operation of their subsidiaries overseas and in Canada; and it is possible to learn more about the operation of firms such as Chrysler Canada Limited, and General Motors of Canada Limited from the Securities Exchange Commission of the United States than it is possible to learn from the legislation which this government in Ontario has on its own books.

Those three firms, Mr. Chairman, accounted for almost 100 per cent of the $1.5 billion worth of exports of automobile components and finished cars that left this province in 1968. And yet, beyond the listing of the names of the officers and directors of those subsidiaries operating in this province, we know nothing from the records of this government, nothing whatever about their operations.

When you want to look at operations of Chrysler Canada, General Motors of Canada, even the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Canadian Westinghouse, or Kraft Foods—in fact all of the major international firms, listed by the leader of the New Democratic Party a few moments ago—you must look either at the returns filed by the firms, whose head offices are in the United States, with the Securities and Exchange Commission, or at the consolidated financial reports of these firms. These reports cover their world wide operations, in which the Canadian operation is completely buried, and about which no information appears apart from the odd footnote and the extent of the parent company's interest in the Canadian subsidiary.

It means that we have no knowledge whatever of the extent to which decisions are made in the United States about the volume of exports that are to be provided by the Canadian subsidiary to the U.S. parent firms or about the transfers of dividends or capital. When we get to the collective bargaining field, we have not nearly the same amount of information provided to collective bargaining agents on behalf of employees of these major international corporations that would enable them to bargain with the same knowledge and sophistication that their counterparts in the United States under Securities and Exchange Commission regulations and under National Labour Relations Board regulations are provided with so that they can deal confidently and rationally with these major corporations in their collective bargaining relationships.

In this country we will continue to be frustrated in achieving a similar sophisticated and intelligent collective bargaining relationship until we have this kind of disclosure. It cannot be provided under the aegis of The Department of Labour, it must be provided by a department of the government which has regulatory authority over the financial and corporate affairs of these companies. That means it must be provided by The Department of the Provincial Secretary, which now has the administration of the corporation tax, and Corporations Information Act, or it must be provided by The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs. Except that, that department, of course, regulates only the affairs of those companies offering securities to the public in this province. And, as we know, many of these major corporations—this has been the subject of much discussion in recent years—simply will not provide for Canadian participation through the acquisition of their shares. Therefore, they will not provide, and are not required to provide, under this province's legislation, any information concerning their activities in this province.

To return to the point I was making at the outset, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that the Provincial Secretary clearly has within his powers under section 4 of The Corporations Information Act, the means of providing full disclosure in these areas of concern: In the planning of the economy; in the surveillance of the affairs of these companies with a view to the prevention of collapse and bankruptcy that has afflicted a number of major concerns in this province, and to the improvement of the collective bargaining relationship in this province. It would not be difficult or impossible at all for the Provincial Secretary to require the filing of a return, which would include that information that is now required of all corporations to be afforded their shareholders. Also, that those returns be available to the public in the same manner as the present information is available under the returns that are now filed by these corporations with the Provincial Secretary.

There is always the question of exposing information which these firms may consider prejudicial to their business interests, but that, however, Mr. Chairman, is something that can, I think, take second place as it has in the operation of the securities legislation in this province to the overriding importance of disclosure to the public at large. I would hope that the Provincial Secretary would find it timely to undertake measures to implement the provisions of section 4 of The Corporations Information Act, which I think he can do at this time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Provincial Secretary would like to explain to the House why he does not request the companies that were named, to provide the information which is entirely within his authority to request under the Act? Why does he not request General Motors or Chrysler, or British Petroleum, or any of the others, for the information which comes from many of the other companies? It is, after all, information on which much of the planning of this province must necessarily depend.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have listened with a great deal of interest to the member for Windsor West in connection with his interpretation of the possibilities of section 4. May I be very frank to admit that I really had not read into section 4 the wide berth that one might take insofar as to attain this information. I would like an opportunity, more than just this first hearing, to look into this and perhaps even suggest to the chairman of the select committee, that they might take a look at section 4 with respect to this.

I think the first answer to the member for Scarborough West is that the government itself has to decide what information they feel they do in fact want to elicit from these companies. And so, here once again, I come back to comment, as I did in connection with the member from York South. We must make up our minds as a government what type of information we feel would be in the public interest to obtain. Then I am sure we would find some procedure to obtain it, whether at section 4 or through some other legislation, this department, or some other department. I think there are other questions that would have to be settled first on this whole question of disclosure.

I repeat once again many of the comments made tonight with respect to the type of information required upon which certain judgment can be made by certain representatives of the public—be they members of labour unions, be it the government itself or be it the investing public—of course, form an interesting proposition, and which has been enunciated by the member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you for one moment deny that each of those three objectives is a worthy one—requiring government action?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, of course the point is, a disclosure of what? This is the interesting point that is raised and, I must say at this time, The Corporations Information Act is part of the administration of this department, and it is very opportune to be raising these particular questions. The member for Windsor West has raised a very interesting one with respect to the application of section 4. I was just consulting with my advisors and I understand that section 4, in its application, has never been questioned by the courts. We have no court decision with respect to any limitations in respect to the power I have under section 4, or rather which the Minister has. So, I simply want to leave it that way, and to give it consideration so far as development of policy is concerned. To add any more would get me involved, at this time, in a matter of government policy which I am not prepared to do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if one did not know the Minister to be such an ingenuous and forthright a politician one would think that there might be some peculiar tension at the back of the government's mind about the use of a section, the clarity of which could not be more explicit.

The Provincial Secretary may at any time, by notice, require any corporation to make a return upon any subject connected with its affairs within a time specified. What court interpretation does the Minister require to effect that clause? The simple proposition, as the member for Windsor West pointed out, is that there are the very elemental facts, financial facts, that can be elicited by such requests from these corporations, which would provide the government a basis on which to plan this economy. Nothing less.

Many of the corporations involved, Mr. Chairman, have corporate interests — have financial and economic interests—which exceed those of the Ontario economy itself. Let this be noted, Mr. Chairman, that while there are restraints on what the Provincial Secretary is prepared to request, there are no restraints on what the government is prepared to give away. The Provincial Secretary will not require Kraft Foods to file a return, but the Minister of Trade and Development will give them $500,000 free, under a forgivable loan? That is the way the government works. It should be pointed out, Mr. Chairman, that if the government is prepared to give away sums of $500,000 of public money on a forgivable loan, to a company that is not required to file a return under The Corporations Informations Act, then it is a rather interesting anomaly which perhaps reveals more of the government intention than the Minister would wish to extend to the House.

There is really, Mr. Chairman, no basis on which these firms do not disclose information, except the Tory reluctance to win from them economic facts which are then open to public scrutiny. It is part of the essential predisposition of the Minister's colleagues towards the corporate world, and the willingness to extend to them rights and privileges which are granted to no others, and at the same time to extend to them moneys which are granted to very few. Inevitably they are wholly owned subsidiaries of foreign interests. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us not play games with the proposition of sending it off to a select committee so that we wait another two or three years while Ontario's economy is inappropriately planned in the interim. The Minister has the capacity now, God knows. It is a valid request if one is going to hand out hundreds of thousands of dollars to companies on an indiscriminate basis. It is a valid request that the people of the province, at least the members of this Legislature, should know the nature of their financial returns in fairly precise detail. And it does not speak well of this government, it does not speak well of this government at all, that they allow everyone from British Petroleum to Sun Oil to get away with the perpetual hidden nature of their economic dealing, inevitably to the detriment of the people of the province, for economic planning reasons, and to the detriment of the workers who are employed by those firms, for bargaining and negotiating reasons.

I want to add this footnote, Mr. Chairman, if I may, that while that is entirely reprehensible of this government, let it be pointed out that it is as nothing compared to what the government at Ottawa has afforded the international corporations in this country. And let it be pointed out that whether it was Walter Gordon's picayune scheme of 25 per cent ownership which did not avail one of any control, or whether it was the dismissal of the Watkins report or the refusal to implement the Canada Development Corporation, or the rabid continentalism of the Trudeau's, the Sharps, the Bensons, et al—the record of the federal Liberals is so reprehensible in this field of selling the Canadian economy to American corporate interests that it cannot be appropriately documented.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: And while we will fight the issues on this floor with this Minister in the area where he should put his documents on the table, let it be fully appreciated, Mr. Chairman, that we recognize that, to some extent at least, even this government's hands are tied by the policies which are presently followed in Ottawa.

Mr. Sopha: To which it must be added that there are no people on the face of the planet who own less of their industry and their natural resources than do Canadians. It is no coincidence, of course, that there is no country on the face of the planet where there is less in the way of regulation of foreigners who come here and rape our resources.

Mr. MacDonald: Disgrace to the Liberals at Ottawa and the Tories here; what are you going to do about it?

Mr. Sopha: There is none. Even Mexico, which we are inclined, being superior English-speaking people, to look down upon, has far more in the way of regulation than we do. Any business operating in pitiful Mexico must be owned 51 per cent by the Mexicans. There is a deightful story told about the Hilton hotel, which is a striking analogy. When an earthquake struck Mexico City and half the hotel was closed because of a gigantic crack that ran down one side, Mexicans said, "That side belongs to the Americans, the one still operating belongs to us."

But in Canada, of course, we in this country, alone in the western world, have utterly failed to build up any sort of regulatory device against foreigners and make them at least disclose the operations that they carry on in our own country. Put aside entirely as being the responsibility of the federal government, the business of the branch plants taking orders from the head offices in the States, about trading with Cuba, trading with Communist China, and so on. Let us not dwell upon this, but at least we owe it to ourselves, at the very minimum, within the purview of the responsibility of this Minister, to say to these people when they come here and carry away our natural resources, built their branch plants, re-invest and aggrandise themselves by means of the capital that they generate in this country—the greatest mythology of the 20th century, of course, is Canada's dependence upon capital. It is re-investment of the capital that is earned here that they are using. We at least owe it to ourselves—to get back to the beginning of this sentence—that we say to them, "Let us know what you are doing. We are entitled to know the intimate operations of your businesses that you carry on here."

So, what has been said here, apart from the invective heaped upon the Liberals in Ottawa and Walter Gordon, who sacrificed—let it be said about Walter Gordon, he sacrificed himself on the altar of daring to speak out, and his peer group in Toronto could not tolerate the traitorous activity, and saw that he was destroyed—but he had the courage, at least, to speak out; and what is going on, of course—this is merely illustrative, a minor thing—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Stop the barking. A minor request such as made by the member for Windsor West about disclosure should not deter this Minister a moment's time to say that this is the least we can expect. The problem, of course, goes far beyond that. But what is happening in this country, that we colonial people—ingrained colonials; we have really always been colonials, and now we are in the midst of the transition, the great transition. The last vestiges of the colonial ties with the motherland across the sea are being obliterated, and a new colonialism is arising, the colonialism to the American eagle. And I have said before that the annexation manifesto of 1849 is a viable document; and really the legacy of the annexation manifesto was what killed Walter Gordon politically, which is a good McLuhan-like statement to make. But it is that desire of the powerful corporate people in this country to make that transition to the acknowledgment of the hegemony of the American eagle. If you speak out against it, what you say is bad for business; it is bad for business, you must not say these things because it will interfere with our business with the States.

How really could the Provincial Secretary be consistent and accede to the request of the member for Windsor West when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Development, the happy couple, are off in California selling more of Ontario to the Californians, more branch plants, "Come on into Ontario." The indicia under which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Development can peddle Ontario is that they can truthfully say, "When you come to Ontario, you will find the least inhibitions against your operation of any place on the planet".

Mr. Lewis: And the greatest concessions.

Mr. Sopha: So generations of politicians throughout the ages have cheerfully sold Canada, sold the land of Canada to foreigners. We end up with the two-thirds part of the 20th century where somebody else owns our birthright; we have lost it. Well, as I say, I have been preaching this doctrine here for a long time—

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the member not get out of the Liberal Party—

Mr. Sopha: My friend, the member for York South, declaimed against me for preaching it.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, nonsense!

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The member has done a complete flip-flop.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Are you finished?

Mr. MacDonald: Is the member finished?

Mr. Sopha: On a Friday morning—he is not worth tarrying to quarrel with, but just to make the record complete—on a Friday morning I said these things and he said, "You are wasting the time of the House."

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, nonsense!

Mr. Sopha: I do not recall any time that he ever spoke out.

Mr. MacDonald: The member was on the other side for years when we were fighting to protect the interests—

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes. And I must look at the record—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The member for Riverdale says the member for York South is not credible, what can he do?

Mr. J. Renwick: You are not suggesting the member for Sudbury is credible?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I do not stop to tarry with these labels used in the modern argot, I try to speak a better form of English than that. If you take away their labels, they are inarticulate and, indeed, they are without thought, if they forget the appropriate label. But the thing is, to make the point, that these are sensible suggestions made, and by the time the clock rolls around a year, I would hope the Provincial Secretary, with the broad-minded outlook he has on these things, he will look into this.

Mr. MacDonald: The member is in the wrong party.

Mr. Singer: The member for Riverdale says you are not credible.

Mr. Sopha: Why is it, when someone promotes reform, that one has to tolerate this picayune nit-picking from the fringes? Why do we not join together and achieve the results?

Mr. MacDonald: Why does not the member join together with us instead of—

Mr. Sopha: I do not want to commit suicide.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Before a year is up, I hope, I was unaware—I am deeply grateful to the members to my left—I was unaware of the intimate effect on collective bargaining that this type of thing has. And I got up with something of fervor that the government use its good offices in this area.

Mr. MacDonald: Where has the member been?

Mr. Sopha: All right, where have I been? I was dining with my daughter between six and eight. Where was the member for York South?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1702. The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, continuing on the same point over the mutterings of the members to the left, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he discussed his knowledge of the operations of the American mining companies in this province before the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) made his rather gross generalizations the other night concerning the mining industry in Ontario. If I recall the news report of what the Minister of Mines said, he said this, sir, that politicians had better lay off talking about taxing the mining industry in Ontario a bit more à la Carter, because if we keep talking this way they will get up and flit down to South America and take the employment with them.

Mr. MacDonald: That is how the Liberals act in Ottawa.

Mr. T. Reid: And so I would like to ask the Minister over the mutterings of this nut from York South—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, if I can have some order, please, if—I would like to know, has the Minister made available to the Minister of Mines any factual evidence concerning the operations of the mining industry in this province, and if he did not, where might have the Minister of Mines got this information that the American mining interests are getting scared?

Mr. MacDonald: He got it from the federal Liberals.

Mr. Chairman: We are still on vote 1702, are we?

Mr. Stokes: It is hard to tell.

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, we are. I would like to suggest, sir, that the Minister ought to collect information about the wholly-owned American mining operations in this province so when a Minister of the government does make a statement, he will be able to speak from factual evidence instead of muttering away on hearsay.

There is another issue, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the question of getting facts on the operation of American mines in this province, which comes under the purview of the hon. Minister, and that is finding out the extent to which American investment in Ontario is tied to the war budget of the American government in Washington. He should be collecting information on companies and branch plants of American companies, who are associated with the war industry in the United States, particularly as related to the Vietnam war. If we are to understand and be able to prepare for disarmament in this province, the Minister must know what the armaments industry in this province is up to. Thank you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The hon. member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, in order to come back to the vote and from the ruminations, I have before me, Mr. Chairman, the corporation information returns of the province of Ontario from year to year—and this will bear out what has been contended earlier and should be reinforced throughout this debate. It is designed either deliberately or ingenuously, take your choice, to hide far more than it ever hoped to disclose. What does it show? Let us look at it. I wonder for whose benefit the tawdry piece of tissue is designed, because it is a tissue of innocence.

You name the number of directors. Now, as you well know, the directors may hold one share. There may be literally hundreds of thousands of shares out, but the directors of the company may be the most negligible of individuals, they may be pure front men, and so you want the names of the front men disclosed. They all hold one share apiece. But the big shot, the boy who controls the show, the one who really runs the thing, never appears on the face of your document at all. You want to know the dates of the transfer from one of these rather negligible individuals to one of the other negligible individuals while the substantial figure grows shadowy in the distance.

Half the page is used up in these machinations and in this form of shadow play, to what intent and purpose completely escapes me. You say that perhaps sometimes someone might want to sue the corporation and they put their finger upon somebody along the line who might be desirous of seeing the writ. Well I suppose that could be true. Nevertheless, you have down here the officers of the company who receive writs generally and they would be quite outside the purview of the person who makes the determinate decisions for a corporation.

As was mentioned earlier tonight, when you asked for the annual meeting, that annual meeting reigns surreptitiously in a corridor as many say, particularly when the return comes in and the date has to be set up. I just wonder to what extent your department has ever investigated, just as a spot check for instance, as to particularly private companies, when the annual meetings are held, whether they are held, whether there is anything on record, whether the minutes have been drawn up, whether there are any shareholders' meetings or directors' meetings on that particular day and what transpired. I have seen them a hundred times. They are done by rote. You can buy them from Dye and Durham Stationers and fill in the blanks. I mean this thing is a hodgepodge and an empty cavil, the pretensions of a corporation return.

Then you say, well, what would we like to know? Some of the things have been brought out. We would like to know what the income, the profit and loss and the balance sheets of these corporations are and if there is the argument that this would be detrimental to the secret interests of the competitive ethos, I would reply to you that we all make disclosure, where everybody is under the obligation, that undermines that argument severely because the competitive aspects of the thing are then abnegated or obviated and it is not the intent. It is only when you bring a few within the disclosure principle and exclude others in pretty much the same area on some discriminatory basis, that you can cause a great deal of harm in industrial life.

But to make full disclosure on these particular points would be highly beneficial to union negotiations, to your whole statistical set-up and I will come to that in a moment. I would like to know—it has been pointed out—a place in these forms to indicate whether or not the company in question is a subsidiary. On the second page on the back of the form, on the yellow sheets, you have sections set out here touching the number of par value shares, the no par value, preference stock, the class, but nothing is ever mentioned here—and I just wonder what the intent is that it should not be so mentioned—nothing is ever mentioned as to who owns these shares or what proportion any particular person owns. There is nothing set forth here as to the inter-company transfer of shares from year to year.

You do have a place where you say new shares are being issued, you want to know the basis upon which they are being issued; whether they are in return for commissions or services and I suppose that is for the purpose of the corporate transfer tax certificates and that particular thing within Treasury, so you can catch them that particular way. But what about the already issued shares of a corporation that is being shifted around internally, within the corporation, from person to person? Where is the disclosure with respect to that? The ownership and determining voice in the corporation in the last analysis may shift from time to time and different people emerge into the picture, and there is nothing to make any disclosure of that. Therefore, we want to know where the true ownership lies. If it is a subsidiary, who owns the majority of the shares in it?

I suggest to the Minister, Mr. Chairman, that this is all extremely necessary if you are to get adequate statistical information upon which to make your budgetary forecasts and projections, for the first time in your history. You have managed to come out with an ad hoc, day-to-day establishment of the economy into some kind of rationale. You are, for the first time, glimmeringly breaking through into the possibility of a framework within which to design an economic system. That is quite a step for a Tory but in this recent Budget the initial baby movement was made. But you cannot make it and you cannot forward the cause, nor will the infant grow without adequate statistical information. And your forms, I repeat, are designed deliberately, as far as I can see, to suppress the vital statistical information which will make economic planning a possibility even within the rather truncated terms in which you think of economic planning.

During the Smith committee's hearings last summer we heard ad nauseam the facts for The Department of Municipal Affairs. There was a dearth of statistical information upon which to make the allocation of grants, upon which to make a distribution of the services of the province and in this day and age everybody seemed to throw up their hands and say, "Is it not amazing, is it not incredible, that a government with all the machinery and with all the apparatus and with the computer age having come upon us, should lack basic facts upon which to make crucial decisions." That is equally and more a fortiori, borne out within the economic sphere of this province, touching the corporate return, and I think you should give good thought in the near future to amending your returns so as to make the disclosures here vital and worthwhile.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to mix the two things, but quite separately from what I said before, I would like the Provincial Secretary to consider before this time next year an amendment to the Act that would enable him to gather information about American domination of our unions in Canada.

I would think it would be in the public interest if we were to ascertain how many unions are wholly owned or largely owned subsidiaries of the parent American body and I would think the Canadian people is entitled to know how much money from union coffers goes to the United States.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Usual red herring—

Mr. Sopha: I have reason to believe—that this really exercises them—that there are several in this group to my left, that would agree privately with what I say and want to see the development of an indigenous Canadian union movement. And we are entitled to know as well. I see no difference between the large multi-national corporation and the parent union in Pittsburgh or Detroit. No difference at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Now I am going to say this, I may take some time because this really gets under their skin. I see no reason, any logical, rational consideration which would preclude the Canadian people from knowing, and indeed union members having full disclosure of the financial affairs of unions and the transfer of payments made.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I happen to know that there are a good many people in the largest local in Canada and—well let me interpolate by saying I will be delighted to hear, when I finish, from my friends, what the difference is—

An hon. member: You will.

Mr. Sopha: —what the difference is in the two considerations. But I want to say that quite genuinely in the largest local in Canada, there are a growing number of people who are becoming very concerned about these large transfers of money that are taking place from the union dues to Pittsburgh. And at the same time, commensurately, there is the growth of an ever-increasing body of opinion in that local that Canadians should, in this area of management of their labour relations have complete autonomy. Having said that, what is wrong with that? What is wrong with that? As a matter of principle and—

An hon. member: You are wrong and you know it.

Mr. Sopha: And I will be delighted if someone gets up and tells us what is wrong. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander and the Provincial Secretary might well consider requiring full disclosure of these financial affairs of the parent organizations. I do not think it is quite enough, you know, really for Mr. Abel to make one trip every three years to account for his stewardship to the largest local in Canada and then, only on the eve of an election—the only time he comes to our community and he is a highly respected man—on the eve of his own election he comes and makes a fleeting visit to the community to win over votes. There are a good many people in the local, in the community, among the citizenry who would like a much fuller disclosure.

I say that in the light of the activity of that important group in my community whose existence I with great pleasure acknowledge, and I would say this at the steelworkers hall, given the opportunity. This other group in Sudbury that bends very far reaching efforts and a great amount of energy to promote the idea of indigenous Canadian unionism—and I refer to the adherents of Local 598, who indeed are willing to test their principles in the courts, and have done so—and as a Canadian (I say it as a matter of principle). I am ready to stand or fall on it in my community that we will be far better off in our labour movement when we have a totally indigenous union movement and when our friends, the union leaders, do not have to look across the border for any guidance, sustenance or advice or support, but can manage their affairs wholly within Canada. To promote that ideal the Provincial Secretary can require under this Act full disclosures of the financial affairs. And I hope that would begin at the earliest time, because I and others are very worried about the millions of dollars that are pouring across the border to Pittsburgh, to Detroit, to fatten the coffers.

Indeed, let me end with this additional thought that oft-times there is a suggestion, a very unsalutary suggestion that ought to be acknowledged—and people in the NDP have told me about this—that when the chips are down and the hard bargaining takes place, and there is perhaps the imminence of a strike to win the demands that are being made at the negotiating table, then there are some inhibitions, some reluctance, that creeps across the border from the head office of the union to settle at something less than they might otherwise expect because a strike would impair the American coffers in the head office.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I hate to interrupt the member for Sudbury on a point of order—

Mr. Sopha: Well, I have finished so you go ahead.

Mr. J. Renwick: We have sat while he has had the opportunity of making this rather diverting point that he wants to make, but this has no bearing whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, on vote 1702. The substance of the remarks that had been made until the member for Sudbury interjected did in fact deal with the heading companies and the programme as designed under it.

Now if the member for Sudbury wants to propound this proposition—ridiculous as it may be—

Mr. Sopha: I have propounded it. What are the arguments against it?

Mr. J. Renwick: I would suggest he do it on another occasion while we get on with the substance of this vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Well, may I just say that—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Chairman, I must say I have been very interested in the comments of the member for Sudbury, and I am impelled to ask which members of the NDP are actually on the payroll of these American unions. I have very good reason to think that it is rather a large number, and in keeping with the member for Sudbury's query, I would like very much, Mr. Chairman, to ask the number of such members and the amount of salaries—

Mr. J. Renwick: What is this—London South or the London Free Press?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. J. Renwick: The member for London South is as out of order on this occasion as the member for Sudbury, and I would ask the—

Mr. Sopha: Well how many of you are on the payroll?

Mr. J. Renwick: I would ask the Chairman to rule on the point of order, not to allow the interjections, inane as they may be, of the member for London South.

Mr. Sopha: He never wants to answer, he wants to—

Mr. Chairman: May I say first of all that the hon.—

Hon. Mr. White: Before you rule, sir, I can recognize about 12 members of the NDP who are the paid agents of these American unions.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am asking on a point of order—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, we have gone through the ridiculous nature of the rules when we cannot discuss Texas Gulf in this House. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the first time I think you are making the procedure ridiculous.

The member for Sudbury is out of order and the member for London South is out of order. We are quite prepared to discuss this matter at an appropriate occasion, but not on the estimates of this department under the companies branch.

Mr. Sopha: When they think up some arguments.

Mr. Chairman: May I say first of all in reply to the points of order—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Beg your pardon.

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. member speaking to the point of order? Are you speaking to the point of order?

Mr. Pilkey: No, I want to speak to the—

Mr. Chairman: Well, the Chairman has been requested to rule on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Riverdale which I propose to do if I may have the opportunity.

Mr. Singer: Will you state it again? I was not here.

Mr. Chairman: I would say first of all that the hon. member for London South certainly was out of order. His remarks had nothing whatsoever to do with the estimates.

May I say that the hon. member for Sudbury, while he seemed to be straying and wandering around, nevertheless—

Mr. Stokes: Seemed to be straying? You let him talk for twenty minutes without calling him to order.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: You let him talk for twenty minutes and—

Mr. Chairman: All right, if the hon. members wish to take charge of the meeting, proceed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if you are going to allow all these subsidiary interests to be discussed, then the Legislature should spend some time discussing these lackeys of a foreign power in Ottawa. Then we are at the guts of the issue, Mr. Chairman.

I think this Legislature would like to have full disclosure about the puppeteering that exists in the foreign power. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the point that I am making on the point of order is that you will allow the debate to descend to turmoil, sir, unless you bring order to it.

Mr. Sopha: Nobody wants to say any more.

Mr. Chairman: If the hon. members are ready for the Chairman's ruling. The hon. member for Sudbury was straying all over the place, but he did come back to the point—disclosure, insofar as unions were concerned. We were talking about companies. He was talking about disclosure on the reporting of returns—the filing of returns. In that respect he came right back on the topic, just as much as the hon. members from the New Democratic Party, who were wandering all over the place talking about anything else but vote 1702, in addition to the hon. member for Sudbury.

In my view there was much of the discussion that was completely out of order, but the Chairman permitted it because he let it proceed in the first place and it was not fair to cut one member off when others had been speaking.

Now we are on vote 1702, and I would hope that all the members will return to vote 1702, the companies branch.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! On vote 1702, the hon. member for Oshawa was on his feet.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to answer all of the charges that were made here by the hon. member for Sudbury.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Just a moment. I have not said anything about them. I said I do not want to get into all of those charges—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I think there were no charges that should be answered by the hon. member.

Mr. Pilkey: I suggest that this Legislature set a day apart to discuss this whole question that the member raises.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Vote 1702, Department of the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Pilkey: All right, vote 1702 then. I agree that there ought to be a full disclosure of the companies' reports and I make this comment on the basis of collective bargaining because many times with the trade union movement in their periods of negotiations, the corporations point out that the demands that the unions make are rather unrealistic. But in my opinion, many of those demands are made in terms of the progress that the company has made, but without complete disclosure.

Now, if the unions, or the trade union movement in this province, understood exactly the position of a company then I am sure that they could negotiate their equity within the framework of those disclosures. I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that the reason that we have not got full disclosure is because it would be in the interest of the workers in this province in terms of their negotiations, and this government will not put the companies in a position of full disclosure, giving the workers of this province an opportunity to get their equity.

Now let us go to General Motors as an illustration.

Mr. Chairman: Let us go to vote 1702, the companies branch.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, that is what I am talking about—vote 1702.

Mr. Chairman: Will the hon. member please indicate to the Chairman the relevancy of his remarks.

Mr. Pilkey: I am talking about the companies, information and disclosure, that is what I am talking about.

Mr. Chairman: The filing of returns to the companies branch?

Mr. Pilkey: Sure. It certainly does. Yes, why does it not?

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. member talking about the filing of returns to the companies branch?

Mr. Pilkey: I am talking about the filing of returns.

Mr. Chairman: To the companies branch?

Mr. Pilkey: Right.

Mr. Chairman: All right, proceed.

Mr. Pilkey: That is exactly what I am talking about—so that the workers of this province can get their equity in terms of the progress of the company so that they will understand.

At the moment, with many of the corporations, my colleague from Windsor West has pointed out, there has been no revelation of the company's progress in terms of information. I only go to General Motors which is in my home town. We have to do a hell of a lot of digging to find out the position of that corporation because it is tied in with the American returns. They make their returns, but it is all in with the American returns.

That corporation has been described many times in Canada as the brightest jewel in the General Motors empire. We do not really know that, but I think we ought to know prior to any negotiating period. Or every year there should be this kind of disclosure so that the workers in this province, along with the shareholders get their just equity.

I think it is important that we have full disclosure and I just wanted to support the comments of the member for Windsor West. I think his point was well taken, and I suggest very frankly that the Minister take this under advisement and in the future enforce that section of the legislation that will guarantee full disclosure.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1702, the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I believe any corporation operating in Canada, whether it be public or private, should have to make the same returns. I cannot understand why it is that we have three different places that a corporation has to make its return, some of which information is open to the public for some companies and not for others.

Many companies are quite concerned about the fact that they have to disclose certain statistics in public returns because they are publicly owned, which private companies do not have to make. It puts them at a disadvantage over such private companies. It seems to me that we should be consolidating the three returns we make, namely, the corporation tax return to the Provincial Treasurer's Department, the corporate annual return that is made to the Provincial Secretary's Department and the reports which are made to the public through The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

In every case whether there be one shareholder, two shareholders or a thousand shareholders it seems to me that the same information should be made available. It should not matter whether the corporation is owned by one shareholder south of the border or in any other part of the world, the information should be a public return available for people to see.

I would appreciate getting the Minister's view on this matter because I cannot see why we continue to treat private and public companies in a different way; why we should not have just one category of corporation, and each corporation as soon as they are incorporated, should not have to file common returns disclosing a basic amount of information that would be of value to such people as the union negotiators at Oshawa. But also, since our public companies in Canada have to disclose many figures that are of value to their competition why should they not have the advantage of the competition's returns and similar knowledge about their internal figures?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I simply say in answer to the hon. member's question: in the first place there is no distinction as far as this department is concerned. Regardless of the nature of the company the same return is filed with this department. The member must be having some reference to other departmental planning requirements. Earlier today, the member for Downsview raised this question, and at that time, we pointed out to him that studies were underway between this department and Treasury—Revenue, as it is now—to find some way in which we might combine our returns so that they would in fact go out as one return. As I explained at that time, this required some approach as to the programming for the computer and so the point that he makes in that general line has already been anticipated by this department in working with other departments.

But I would simply say that as far as the annual return required under The Corporations Information Act is concerned, it is the same return from all corporations, as far as Ontario corporations are concerned.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the Minister's views concerning the integration of these returns that are internal and available only to the Revenue Department and also available only to you. Your returns are quite limited in their content. Information that is available to the corporations tax branch, the revenue branch, is far more extensive. But we have a third department that is involved with many corporations of this company, that is, Financial and Commercial Affairs, and I cannot understand why we cannot have the same return available and made, and require it of all corporations so that public and private companies are not differentiated against. Why should we unfairly discriminate against the public corporation, the kind which we really want to have increase in this province if we are going to have more Canadian ownership? We have to have more public companies in which Canadians can buy shares. Why do we not require that private companies disclose the same information as public companies? Why do we not eliminate this category of private versus public companies and merge the departmental returns into one, the three departmental returns?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I cannot add anything more to what I said because I only speak for this department and the returns that are there and to assure you that there is some attempt to study the combination of returns.

As the hon. member will know, at the time of the introduction of the new bill, The Business Corporations Act in draft form, the distinction between private and public companies is in fact eliminated, and we are thinking more in terms of those companies that are in fact going to the market for their securities and the type of information which would be offered along with other classifications. I have noted the hon. member's remarks and will certainly see that they are shared with the Ministers of the other departments to which he makes reference.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, under section 4 of The Corporations Information Act, I understand you can require additional information. Would this not be a good way to start the ball rolling? Why hide behind the fact that it should involve a different department—Financial and Commercial Affairs?

It seems to me important that we get moving now on this matter because we have been talking about it for a long while and we may be talking about it for a lot longer. But at least if you take action you will get the matter in motion and we will find out if there are any particular problems. I cannot see that there should be. But, even if there are any particular problems why should private companies have a different privilege than public?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will be glad to take a look at it. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1702, the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I gather this is the vote under which the extra-provincially licensed companies can come.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

Mr. Brown: I am interested in some information that I have not been able to get from the material provided. That is, the number of extra-provincially licensed companies that are operating at the present time in the province of Ontario, who have their head office in other provinces of the Dominion, as compared to the number that have their head offices in other countries; the gross earnings of these companies, the net earnings and the income derived by the province from the licensing of these companies. I would like to get some sort of comparison between the income realized in terms of licensing their operation in the province as compared to the kinds of net earnings that they take out of the province.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I will have to take that as notice. I will get the information. I can provide you—we can get the information for you as to the numbers. We would have no way of knowing their gross earnings or their net earnings in this department, through the returns that are filed.

But those questions which have been raised for which we have information in our department, I will be very glad to provide for the member.

Mr. Brown: Could you give me the information in terms of the amount of income that comes from the licensing?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh, I am sorry; yes, that is the one I meant. The numbers and their head offices and the income produced to this department by the licence fees is certainly available, and I will get that for you.

Mr. Brown: In your figures presented in the estimates for 1969-70, what items refer to the anticipated incomes that will come from the licensing of extra-provincial companies? One of the problems, you understand, is that it is very difficult to make sense out of the presentation here because we do not have these kinds of breakdowns, and I would appreciate that sort of information from you.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Thank you. These estimates before us are for expenditures, there is no revenue.

Mr. Brown: I am going back to the other material that you have presented along with this, such as the public accounts for the province.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can certainly provide you with the information concerning the revenue which these licences do produce. I will get that information for you; I do not have it here with me.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1702. The hon. member for Yorkview was on his feet.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): I am coming to another matter, Mr. Chairman, at this point.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1702 is still open for general discussion.

Mr. Young: This matter, Mr. Chairman, comes back to the matter which was raised in the first presentation this afternoon under vote 1702, and that is the name of companies. I have in my hand a communication from a Mr. Jim MacDonald who is executive secretary of a National Labour Co-operative Committee in Ottawa. This is a problem which he met recently when he drove into a City Parking (Canada) Limited lot, a parking lot, thinking that he was giving his patronage to a public rather than a private enterprise. It did not make that much difference as far as he was concerned but he did favour the civic lot. And he said:

When I protested that their rates were higher than in the adjoining private enterprise parking garage, for poorer facilities, the kid in charge agreed but pointed out that the rates were set by the company.

Raising the matter by phone with the Ottawa Parking Authority the next day, my suspicions were confirmed that it was a private company, and not a city lot. The parking authority manager willingly agreed to my request to put her reply in writing.

I want to put that reply on record, Mr. Chairman, and to ask the Minister for his comments. This is the reply:

Parking Authority of the City of Ottawa

March 14, 1969.

Mr. Jim Macdonald;
111 Sparks Street,
Ottawa 4, Ontario.

Dear Mr. MacDonald:
Regarding City Parking (Canada) Limited
Our File P42.

Thank you for your telephone call to my office on February 13, 1969. We regret your unhappy experience with a private firm City Parking (Canada) Limited, and share your opinion that the name should be changed so that it does not lead the public to the belief that the firm is owned, operated or sanctioned by the Corporation of the City of Ottawa, or its agent the Parking Authority of the City of Ottawa.

The Parking Authority has a very thick file of complaints dating back to 1960, and has itself, and through the office of the city solicitor, approached the Provincial Secretary to require this private firm to change its name under the provisions of subsection 2, of section 12 of The Corporations Act. It appeared in January 1966 that we had met with at least token success, but then we were advised by the Deputy Provincial Secretary, that as a condition of incorporating City Parking (Canada) Limited, City Parking Limited on December 16, 1964, undertook to either dissolve or change its name to some dissimilar name.

In June 1966 we were advised that the City Parking Limited had been instructed to change its name and had, in fact, by letters patent, dated April 30, 1966, done so. The name chosen as a replacement was Athos Parking Services Limited. Those lots at Ottawa which had been operated by City Parking Limited, however, continued to operate under that name.

This point was brought to the attention of the Deputy Provincial Secretary, and subsequently City Parking Limited lots began to operate under the name City Parking (Canada) Limited.

The Parking Authority of the City of Ottawa continues to object to the use of a name which implies civic sanction and has attempted to have the name City Parking (Canada) Limited changed, under The Corporations Act, but without success.

In a copy of a letter from a Toronto city solicitor to the director of Companies Branch Department of Provincial Secretary and Citizenship, dated October 7, 1968, we learned that the department reaffirmed its position, that the name City Parking (Canada) Limited is not objectionable under section 12 of The Corporations Act. We regret that confusion exists in the mind of the parking public between the Authority and a private operator. It would appear, however, that we are powerless to have the situation changed so that the interests of the parker may be protected.

Yours very truly,
Helen R. Fisher,
General Manager.

That is the letter from the Ottawa authority,

Mr. Chairman, and I would like the comments of the Minister as to why it is that this company cannot be requested, or ordered to change its name so that there is not this confusion between the public authority and the private corporation which is operating a parking lot in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, Mr. Chairman, this question has been before this department, as the hon. member knows—through the correspondence to which he has made reference—and there is a considerable amount of correspondence that has been exchanged. This name was granted some years ago. There are other incorporations with the word “city” in them. I think there is a City Laundry, and different connotations thereof. It is perhaps sufficient for our discussion tonight to say that after a very careful review of all of the matters, we were satisfied—I think in the case of Ottawa, do not hold me to this—that the incorporation of the City Parking was even before the Parking Authority was established itself—that there is no confusion. I would point out to the hon. member that under subsection 3 of that same section 12, if the Ottawa Authority, or whoever has complained to the hon. member, is not satisfied, the matter can now be taken to court and my decision, of the entire matter, reviewed by the courts, under subsection 3 of section 12, on giving seven days notice to the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1702.

Mr. J. Renwick On vote 1702, there are three brief comments I would like to make about the earlier discussion this evening.

First of all I do not think we should hold out too much hope that the select committee will deal adequately or effectively in this area of disclosure of information for strictly non-corporate purposes. The kind of information that has obviously been discussed this evening is the kind of economic information which will have the impact on the foreign-owned corporations which are operating directly or through subsidiaries in the province of Ontario. I think it is appropriate to raise the matter here because they are corporations and The Corporations Information Act appears to provide the avenue through which this information could be obtained.

The select committee, so far, has not dealt adequately with the question of what distinction you can make between a public and a private company. As the Minister has mentioned the new Corporations Act purports to abolish the distinction and goes to this different distinction of those who are offering securities to the public. But, it does not come to grips with this wide open door which has been available for such a long time for foreign corporations to operate in Ontario, in Canada, under circumstances which permit them to not even make the limited disclosure which is required of public corporations.

This is the point, and I think the only way in which this point can be resolved is for the Minister to take it as a matter which requires clarification by the government of its policies. It is just ridiculous, when you actually look at it, to think that General Motors US can operate in Canada through General Motors Canada—a tremendously large corporation—under the guise of a private corporation. Under the existing Act, it is not even required to provide the additional information which would be available, not in terms of the annual summaries, but in terms of other disclosures, that would be required to be made.

It is equally ridiculous to think that the solution has been found in the new Corporations Information Act, which abolishes that distinction between a public and a private corporation and goes to this question of whether or not the securities have been offered to the public. Now, I do not think that either within the realm of the select committee dealing with the form of the annual return, which is under consideration, or in the select committee on the question of disclosure by corporations of information of an economic nature, important for the assessment of their impact on the province of Ontario, we can expect that from the select committee.

As a member of it, I think I can almost guarantee that the select committee is not going to feel that it can deal with that question. It is not within its terms of reference, as broad as those terms of reference may be. This question of disclosure is difficult to raise in the various estimates—and this appeared to be the appropriate estimate because of the section of The Companies Information Act—in the context of this department or in the context of The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, or in the context of the economic planning by The Department of the Treasury and Economics or in the department of the Minister of Trade and Development. So of all the possible places, this did appear to be an appropriate place to draw the attention of the government to this vast gap which appears in the information which is available.

The tragedy of the Watkins report is that people now consider that there is a report which can be studied. Yet, the point that Professor Watkins and his colleagues who presented that report, emphasized time and time again, is the lack of information on which they could make the assessment about the impact of the foreign ownership and control of large segments of the Canadian economy in order to develop either measurements or indicate some method by which they can assess the impact which that ownership has made on our economy.

The substance, therefore, of what we are talking about is that it has got to be in the province of Ontario where this information must come. There is no point in suggesting that we can await the federal government. The strange fact of the matter is that the members of the Watkins committee were under the misapprehension that a substantial part of these matters were solely within the jurisdiction of the federal government, whereas, as the Minister knows, all of the companies that the leader of this party, the member for York South, dealt with—the major companies—are all subject to the jurisdiction of this government because they carry on business here, one way or another, either directly or by just carrying on business or having their head offices here. Now, we can get at those companies.

The other aspect of it is one which can more appropriately be dealt with in The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, and it is we have to get the equivalent of the civil side of the anti-trust combines law in operation in the province of Ontario, an cease to deal solely with those kinds of matters related to public policy only on the basis that they are criminal offences.

For this whole area, the member for York South outlined to the House, vast parts of it fall within the jurisdiction of this government. This government can, in fact, deal with this whole question of adequate disclosure and adequate assessment. I do not myself believe that it is an appropriate matter or that indeed the select committee can deal with it perhaps other than by way of a passing reference. A select committee which had sat under the chairmanship of the now Minister of Mines produced a report which indicated that in the abolition of even the distinction between public and private companies, there was going to be no requirement of filing any kind of financial information.

Now, this is the hang-up. Where in the government is the financial disclosure—that kind of financial information—about companies going to come? I come back again to the very simple point that it is really quite ridiculous and infantile that we should have allowed for so long this fiction of the private company to be used by the large corporations who are going to have such a substantial impact on the Canadian economy.

I want to come back to what the member for Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr) raised earlier—the matter is of great concern to him and to the members from that part of the country. That is the question of the island in the river, Peche Island. My understanding is that that island is going up for auction in the next few days. I do not know whether or not the government is just not interested in that island, or whether it is quite prepared to see that particular part of the Canadian heritage disappear as part of the public patrimony. I find it difficult to assess whether or not the Minister himself has any feelings about it.

The member for Sandwich-Riverside was assuming that somehow or other if the government were interested, it could have used section 4 of The Companies Information Act to get all the information which was required in order to found a government policy about Peche Island. Maybe it is the kind of thing which should be acquired when the opportunity presents itself by something like the Ontario Heritage Foundation. That Act is being amended for the purpose of including recreational or scenic properties in the heritage of the province.

But I think what bothered the member for Sandwich-Riverside and the member for Windsor West, and I am sure other members in the House, is that this statute appeared to provide a method by which, in such circumstances where the public interest is so specifically and definitely involved, the government could on its initiative get information which would permit it to make an assessment and a decision as to whether or not the public interest was such that the government itself should intervene.

Now, those are my comments on them and I would invite, as we draw to the end of this particular vote, the Minister's further comments about it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, Mr. Chairman, I really have nothing further I can add to what I have already said during the course of what I found to be a very interesting discussion with respect to the whole matter of disclosure. I really fail to see how this Minister could be particularly involved with respect to the auctioning of an island in the Detroit River.

It may well be under the circumstances this is something which should be brought immediately to the attention of the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) or some other Ministry of the government or the government generally with respect to what is the position. If there are any constructive suggestions to come from the member for Sandwich-Riverside in that regard, he might direct them to the attention of that Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: You are so requested now.

Vote 1702 agreed to.

On vote 1703:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I was one of those who was very enthusiastic about the translation of this hon. young gentleman into this department, especially with regard to my hopes that in this branch, the citizenship branch, that he might exercise the talents of which he has many, to render it into a viable, effective and meaningful force in the life of the province.

It is true to say—and I think it fair to make the comment—that under the previous Minister this branch of the Department was little more, as indeed it was, not little more, it was a department of propaganda of the government and mainly a department of propaganda directed to the so-called ethnic groups. The previous Minister never missed an opportunity, of course, to propagandize those people whose mother tongue is neither French nor English.

It was sometimes said that two Bohemians could not meet in this province without the previous Minister popping up in between them, saying, "I am here" and handing them some sort of placard or making a speech for which he has great aptitude.

I do not think there was a newspaper in the so-called ethnic press published that the previous Minister did not have a government ad in, and he saw the citizenship branch as really being a vehicle to propagandize those people whose mother tongue was neither French nor English.

With that remarkable hubris that he demonstrates to aggrandise himself, that culminated in that very revolting and divisive speech that he made here a few weeks ago in which he referred to them as the third element. Now, having put it in that context—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Of course they have all disagreed with you.

Mr. Sopha: You will get your opportunity later. It was the most divisive speech that I have ever heard in the ten years I have been here.

But, to turn to a more constructive approach, I am one of those who is intensely worried about the appreciation of the incidence of citizenship among our people. I abhor, I eschew, I avoid, talking in terms of generality. I like to support the things I say with evidence.

I refer to two items. One was the report of the national history project, which reveals to us that the teaching of the incidence of citizenship, or that rubric under the dusty old word, civics, is in a very low state indeed in this province. Not only does it receive little in the way of attention in our schools, but Mr. Hodgett tells us that the burden of inculcating knowledge about the value of citizenship to our young people is most often sloughed off as a chore upon the most incompetent people on the teaching staff, who take it on as being something of the nature of a remission into a penitential purgatory, and carry out with the degree of enthusiasm implicit in that description.

Now, that is one piece of evidence. The other piece of evidence is, of course, the realization that in the great city of Toronto, Metropolitan Toronto, and all the composite municipalities that make it up, that little more of a third of the people take the trouble to go to the polls in election year to exercise their choice of the civic leaders. And that is a matter that causes me grave concern.

I use Toronto only as an illustration of our largest and most important city. That causes me a great deal of anxiety, and I hope that it instills anxiety in the mind of this Minister. I see no other way that we are going to rectify one mistake of the teaching of citizenship and, two, its practice in such an important thing as voting, other than making some positive efforts to acquaint our people, and particularly, newcomers, to our country, with some of the values, some notions of the values of being a citizen of this province, this country beyond.

And rather than continue the path that was set out by the champion of the ethnic groups, when he occupied the department, the self-appointed champion, I would like to see a new direction taken and this Minister seize upon a device such as the creation of citizen forums throughout this province. The inauguration of groups of people, and particularly new Canadians, where meaningful efforts, intelligent efforts, by well equipped people are made to stimulate them to come together to discuss, in an exciting way, the incidence of citizenship, the privileges and the rights—the liberties that it gives in the first place, the responsibilities that it entails in the second place; perhaps the teaching of a smattering of history.

Now, this, to me, seems to be a much more exciting and far-reaching programme than that which has been used by this department, which limited itself to, I think, the teaching of language to new Canadians. A very important subject, but none of the business of this department. None of the business of this Minister. The teaching of English, facility in that tongue, ought to be entirely within The Department of Education, which has the plant, which has the administrative setup, which has the teachers to do it, and it ought to assume the responsibility. But in an overcrowded curriculum where there is always great pressure to add new subjects, then it is possible for this department and the citizenship branch, to take the responsibility for a curriculum such as I propose, and that is, the teaching of the incidence of citizenship.

I do not hesitate to refer to my earlier words when I say that we are in danger of making the transition from being English colonials to American colonials, and to call attention to the importance of the uplifting, the focusing upon the value, the inherent work, the great birthright of being a Canadian, and increasing the knowledge, our own knowledge, but imparting the knowledge to new Canadians, of some of the exciting history of this country. Without dwelling on it, of course, it is most often said that our history is dull. That is the label that is put on it. It is not true a bit. But I want to see, under this Minister, some forthright steps being taken in an intelligent way of imparting a meaningful message to these people, because, look at it in this framework: We are enriched by the progress across the seas, or over the seas, I guess is more appropriate. They do not come across the seas but over them. We are enriched by the progress of tens of thousands of people annually, who come to Canada; most of them apparently want to come to Ontario. Most of those who come to Ontario want to settle in Toronto. Oh yes, they do. The statistics I share with the Minister of Health, the gloomy statistics show that they make that unfortunate choice, they do.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): One or two go to Port Hope, and to Port Colborne.

Mr. Sopha: And a great many, of course, jam themselves into downtown Toronto, into central Toronto.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: All right. I say we are enriched by that, because that is a conscious choice.

Mr. Singer: 80,000 a year.

Mr. Sopha: They come here, and the moment they arrive, those people, they acquire every right—well almost every right, some they must get by operation of law—but they acquire the great composite collection of rights which are the heritage of Canadians. And that is why it is true to say that Canadians are treated, or ought to be treated alike, whether they came early or whether they came late. All right, it is our responsibility, government's responsibility, to take immediate steps to acquaint them with the exact nature of that very valuable acquisition in Canadian citizenship.

But, what do we do? What does this department do? This department I say—and that path across the snow that was beaten out by the man who never quite recovered from the fact that he was sent to Hungary to persuade some people to come here and thereafter saw him as the spokesman of what he calls a third element—they organize elaborate citizenship rituals, and the acquisition of citizenship, and, sometimes, with all the Mounties and provincial police that one sees around them, one gets the impression that it is a military ceremony, instead of attaching the dignity to it of a civil ceremony of utmost importance where there is the grant on the one hand, and the acquisition on the other, of something, the value of which they will probably never obtain the like again in their lives.

All right, while in that vein. Let us make a break with the past, and let us take some forthright steps to establish throughout this province some kind of citizen forum among these people where competent teachers could be hired and set out to talk to them in an intelligent, comprehensible way about the meaning of Canadian citizenship. Really, that is the only justification that I see for having the branch such as this. We do not need an immigration branch in this province. We can leave that to the federal government, to foster immigration, set the standards for admission and look at health and all that sort of thing, and as far as I am concerned, they do it very adequately.

We have the power under the Constitution, it is true, to be engaged in immigration, but really from another point of view I adverted to earlier, we ought not to exercise many efforts to attract people to Ontario because apparently the statistics tell me, and I looked at them as recently as last week, that people come here anyway, they come to Ontario. Ontario is the Mecca and it is not because of the Minister of Trade and Development they come here—he builds up with smiles—that is not the reason.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Good government for 25 years attracts them.

Mr. Sopha: The reason is a simple one and that is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I think you had better quit when you are ahead, if you are going to make statements like that because you will have to live with them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Living conditions—

Mr. Sopha: They come here because many of their fellow countrymen are here and they seek the safety and the refuge of joining their cultural peers. That is the reason they come.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Housing attracts them.

Mr. Sopha: Well, this promises to be a very yeasty discussion. I am glad that I got my oar in first because I want to plead with the Minister that he develops some sort of theme as I have laid out because I am very worried. Indeed, I was really impelled, propelled into throes of depression when I read that report of the National History Project and saw the low state that the teaching of Canadian citizenship has come to in the pride and heritage of this country. Here, I see, is a device, a means whereby a remedy can be afforded in a very important area of people who have no impression at all of this country when they come here.

Rather, I should not say that they have no knowledge of this country. The Minister, I hope, will soon cut out that practice of putting an ad in every ethnic newspaper as being his total contribution to this department to citizenship, and the sending out of the scrolls and placards and that sort of thing, and get down to some fundamentals in respect of citizenship and its values and in privileges, its rights and responsibilities in the life of this province and beyond it.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, without embroidering the question, I would like to ask the Minister, why should the human rights commission not be brought under the Minister of Citizenship? Is that not its logical place? One of the first important features of our country about which a new immigrant should become well informed is the matter of his rights as a citizen and a first class citizen at that. As human rights and citizenship seem to me to go together quite naturally, and quite logically, I would like the Minister, when he gets a moment, to comment on that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I at this stage say, quite sincerely, how much I have appreciated the comments of the member for Sudbury. I really feel—that is a proper word—I really feel with him the need for this type of emphasis, and can assure him that much of our concern and a great deal of our study at the moment is centered around the type of involvement to which he makes reference.

We have experimented already with a community conference in Windsor. We are going to Fort William Saturday of this week—the Fort William conference is along this particular line—and then to Cornwall within two or three weeks.

It is sufficient to say too, that I share with him the concern. I think he is making reference to Professor Hodges' study, "What Culture? What Heritage?" at OISE. It may be at this stage, perhaps just sufficient to say that he has a great feeling for the work of this department, and he sees a great deal of opportunity for the expansion and the deepening of its work. I share this view and hope that as resources, both manpower and money, will provide, that we can continue to develop the type of programme so well launched by my colleague, the Minister of Social and Family Services when he was the Minister of this department.

If I might turn to the specific question and I would like to speak further on this, it is an aspect of the work of this department which is very close to my interest as my officials will know. I can assure him that I am hopeful that we will be able to develop, before too long, some tangible evidence of implementing many of the things to which he has made reference.

The member for Sandwich-Riverside has raised a question with respect to the human rights commission and all I can say in answer to it, is that as a matter of government policy it has been placed with the Minister of Labour. Perhaps it is not proper for me to comment on any change which might be made until such time as the government has had an opportunity to, in the review of the assignment of responsibilities within departments, make that announcement itself. With respect to where the human rights commission should be, at the moment it is the decision of the government to have that work with The Department of Labour.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, a year ago in the Throne speech address, these words were spoken:

My government has accepted its responsibilities to our new residents and is committed to further action to ensure that such equality will continue both within the province of Ontario and throughout Canada. This is in keeping with the plans of my government to initiate a series of conferences throughout Ontario to foster interest in community affairs and to improve communications between the newcomer and the established residents of our province.

Then, going from there over to a brochure issued by the department in question we read these words above the signature of the hon. Minister:

The department also undertakes research into the educational, social and economic needs of newcomers and conducts pilot projects to determine effective means of meeting these needs.

Now I always think it is chastening for the individual, at the odd time, having basked in the sunshine of praise; beyond the reach any human being; which is the condition that this Minister approximates to, I think a chastening exercise to get him to pull up his socks and to put some weight into this department, the citizenship branch.

I make allusion to a project initiated by the social planning council of Metropolitan Toronto this past year which states itself to be a social opportunity project, a report of a survey relating to urban immigrants and receiving areas in Metropolitan Toronto. I read through this document compiled by many, many individuals, community-minded people, including the Reverend Graham Cotter of St. Mark's Anglican Church.

I turn to page 6 of this report which has to do with the job and range of problems which face this Minister in his department and for which he has been given funds. On page 4, I read a series of names; everything from Manpower Centre, the department of public welfare, that is the metropolitan department; liaison division of Canadian Citizenship; Travellers' Aid; Young Christian Workers, YMCA, Parkdale Library.

I could go on for quite a while reading the list of people who participated in this enterprise. The people who put money and effort and a bit of brawn into it but nowhere in the list do I see your department. Where were you when the revelation came? This is the first major task force working in this city with respect to the very areas in which you are most interested.

The social planning council of Metropolitan Toronto launched this enterprise. True they launched it very close to the line of the Canadian Manpower Centres. Nevertheless you are supposed to have some liaison with those centres.

If your department is to have any vitality at all, it is to the extent that you do have such a relationship with these centres.

You should be concerned with informational agencies. The latter part of this report is taken up with the various agencies such as Travellers' Aid, who I never realized previously, play such a highly social role. They are very much concerned with the indigent, with the ambulatory people who are down on their luck coming to this province. I felt that they gave us simply an informational service to travellers. But not really. They have gone into social welfare work in a big way, and you give a small grant to them every year.

I notice back in your citizenship estimates of 1968 there was a sum—I think it is $3,000—a munificence against the work that they are doing in this city for people coming through this territory and trying to accommodate themselves. That is less than respectable for the kind of job these people are carrying out.

This study—which I am saying that for some mysterious reason the Minister seems to me to have been deficient in entering into, participating in, or advancing any funds towards—was concerned with a study area, largely Parkdale area in Toronto, chosen rather arbitrarily just to be able to determine again the business of statistics, to find out what the facts of immigration were.

They found out what the incidence of immigration from the Maritime provinces was. For the first time they were able to make some determination of income levels, job opportunity, the lack of information.

My friend has spoken of forums—well be damned with the forums—I am for information. I would think that what we really need are information centres. We spoke of orientation centres; a different kind of thing.

For the nonce, and this ties in with what the member for Sandwich-Riverside had to say on civil rights—we will come to that in a moment—there is a deficiency in communication, in the basic communication of the faculties of everyday life. Where do they go to get certain information? There is no one there to tell them what services are available; that would be the initial task of your department to make that kind of information available. The cost, I suggest to you, would be negligible. You are using churches and using the social club outlets, to be of benefit in this regard. Here is the federal government moving in ahead of you in this particular matter, and all these organizations—a list of which is on page 4—are all vitally going together in the enterprise; and you are left out in the cold.

You are not left out yet, I trust, because there is a phase two of the study which would support the first phase and it is a proposal for a community benefit project in the area designed to assist workers and their families to cope with problems within the context of employment, health, welfare, recreation, and educational services in the Dufferin-Parkdale area.

To mention some more of the objectives of this study—"since the objectives envisage an area-based project that was to deal with migrant problems by way of community development; direct contact, or systematic interviewing of migrants was not planned for." It goes on to say:

While a summary of agency migrant involvement is basic to any description it must be stressed that there is, in Toronto, no one agency or facility specifically designed to assist the integration of immigrants of concern to this project. The experience of any one agency is naturally related to the type of service or intervention for which it is organized.

The experience is fragmented further by the age, sex and family status of immigrants to which specific services of reference—the YMCA for example—would tend to have contact mainly with unattached males; churches more often may be assisting families and so forth.

Again I would suggest that your role would be a healing role, synthesizing, playing that central function, instead of having no function at all so far as one can determine with respect to the ongoing work which is the finest piece of study I have seen touching this whole business of immigrant integration into our communities. To continue with the quote:

The project had its origin partly in the insight of those who have frequent contact with migrants, that the needs of migrants were not being met, or at least that unmet needs of migrants affected their work adjustment.

It would be entirely possible that under conditions of mobility, if for no other reason, the needs and problems of migrants might remain unfocused and unknown.

And that is largely what they have remained.

They recommended, among other things, apart from these informational services—which are lacking, and which are basic, and which only Travellers' Aid seems to basically supply—a friendship house where people can meet in the day and evening on a casual drop-in basis. This would be a good place to have someone available to answer questions or to give information as required.

The report goes on, over a space of close to 100 pages, to document and outline what the work of the Good Shepherd Refuge is; how many beds they have, how many men they service, what payment they take in the evening for men staying over, the whole problem of housing and the notoriety of that problem, and the role of youth in the wind-breaker group, as they call them.

I would commend this study very much to the Minister. It is right up his alley and just to hammer home the point that I was making, on page 14 they say among their recommendations:

Initiate a neighbourhood information centre, or a citizens' advice bureau, in the Parkdale area of Toronto. In this respect the needs of migrants for gatekeeping services are similar to the needs of other Parkdale residents, including immigrants and senior citizens.

So the Minister's role really cannot be confined or constricted to the business of providing some translation service, and is this, I wonder, really extensive in terms of the vital need?

Over and against that is the teaching of second languages. Someone in this House has already mentioned that it should not be in your department at all. Obviously it is a job for the educational department. All it does, as far as I can see, is divert attention from what the true education budget of the province is. It is one of those areas in which educational services are being provided outside the strict educational budget and it would be far more fair and equitable, for this particular disclosure to be made to the Ontario people at large.

Turning for a moment to the business of civil rights. In a brochure which is called "Human Rights in Ontario," issued by this government, it mentions minority and ethnic groups and civil liberties as follows:

This is one area, however, where the commission has a big job to do. Many minorities and ethnic groups are not aware of the provisions of the code and they do not understand the areas of jurisdiction which the code covers.

This is your own document.

Many suffer discrimination quietly and resentfully without realizing that action can be taken and the wrongs righted. Or they are unwilling to come forward to file a complaint with the commission because they are fearful, for example, that they or their relatives will lose their jobs, or that in some cases, if they speak up and attract any kind of attention to themselves, they will somehow hurt or embarrass other members of their own group.

With many immigrants, the language barrier makes it more difficult to understand the legislation and how the commission operates.

Can there be any question in our minds at all about the whole of the human rights thing, the weight of the thing, the benefit of the thing, the need of the thing, for those within these minority and ethnic groups?

These are the people more deeply afflicted, these are the people for whom you should have some kind of paternity. The Minister of Labour is quite conversant with this and I would urge you, within the Cabinet, and I would urge every member who thinks this way, to have that whole department switched away from Labour and put under the Provincial Secretary's jurisdiction.

This would give some depth, some meaning, some breadth, to the whole work of the citizenship branch. It would give it an orientation that it does not have presently. It seems to be all out at the elbows; you know, over here a little English being taught, and over here, some translations being done, and apparently very little being done in between, particularly as disclosed again in this social research project, as to the role of immigrants in this province.

So, two things: first try to bring human rights legislation under your surveillance, as it would probably receive a good deal better attention there than it does where it is at the present time—in a rather desperate and wholly unaligned situation with a man who has other tasks to perform than worry about the problems of strict human rights which you know only have a relative relationship to the Labour Department. In terms of that, perhaps you would switch the company branch completely out from where it is.

This is one of the dregs from the old days, you know, when this department used to handle the whole of the economic affairs of the province. Before that it handled all health subsequent to that I believe, it handled all the economics. That is long past but the companies stay where they are, as I suggest, mere dregs of that tradition. They have no business there really and they should be under The Department of Commercial and Financial Affairs, where the securities legislation lies. That is where the corporations should lie. You should govern, you should be responsible for the like of the citizenry in this province; that would be a full-time task which could give you a very worthy object in life.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, on the first item of vote 1703, programme administration, what type of programme does the hon. Minister administer? I see the salaries amount to $151,500.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Are you making reference to the programme administration being the first item? This particular programme, the administration of the entire citizenship programme, includes a staff of 18 people including our liaison officers who, in fact, give the co-ordinating activities for the administration of the entire departmental programme.

Mr. De Monte: May I also ask what programmes has the department initiated in connection with citizenship? What seminars or conventions, in the last year?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As the member will know, the planning for the citizenship or the community conferences to which reference is being made; the organization and conduct of the programme for the teaching of English as a second language; working with the various volunteer groups who conduct certain programmes and assist us in this regard; our work with the international institute. I would like the expression of the member for Lakeshore, and I prefer to think of the department as the catalyst whereby we are the common ground to which we can invite people with various interests. This is a very diversified type of activity, and all of the co-ordinating activities bring together many branches and groups who work with us in the conduct of this particular programme.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, the thing that bothers me about this whole aspect of The Department of Citizenship is that I do not think the Minister is trying to get this catalyst moving. I know that the work he is doing in the teaching of English as a second language is a very laudable job but I think that can be extended. I do not think that his programme should be so limited. The Minister has said that his programmes act as a catalyst but I cannot see where his programmes are acting as a catalyst, Mr. Chairman. I know that he has had two one-day seminars on teaching of English as a second language; he has had a conference in Windsor in connection with community unity.

With the greatest of respect, I would suggest that the Minister has to move more programmes, more ideas, in order to become a catalyst among the immigrants in Ontario, particularly to unify the immigrants with the other groups that are already here in Ontario. I do think that a very important aspect of this department is the teaching of English. I do think that the Minister can conceive some programmes as to the problems of immigrants, as to the problems immigrants have in appreciating our history and our culture, and initiate programmes where these things could be taught to immigrants as they come into Ontario.

I notice also that we have an information service costing $101,000 for the maintenance of that information service and the salaries are only $16,800. I would personally like to ask the Minister why there is such a variance in these figures? Also why is the department spending $101,000 on maintenance when the salary aspect of it is merely $16,800!

Hon. Mr. Welch: The salary item includes the salary for an information officer and his secretary. The large item for maintenance, of course, is the government publication series, as the hon. member will recall. We publish the government brochures on services in 13 languages as a special information programme together with other related publications. The bulk of the vote is for the government information series.

Mr. De Monte: By the information series, are you referring to those small booklets that are fixed up in a package? I understand they are published in 14 languages. I am wondering, the information set out in those booklets is a bit meagre, it has pictures of the Parliament building and I know we must explain Parliamentary institutions to the immigrant, no doubt about that. But I feel it would be valid if the Minister could possibly explain to the immigrants their rights under the labour laws, under the health laws, the Ontario Hospital; there are many immigrants that do not know about these laws and I suggest that these booklets have less of a public relations aspect and be informative enough as to the rights of citizens in this province and as to the laws that affect them in their work, their play, The Highway Traffic Act. Certainly, none of them know anything about these things and perhaps these might be made known to them under this maintenance-public relations aspect of your department. Could you answer that for me?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Of course; if the hon. member reads the publications, this is what we think we do. There is a book on The Department of Labour, a book on The Department of Health, and one on the Workmen's Compensation Board; there is a book on these and there is a whole package of at least ten different subject matters in the folder. If the hon. member will take the time to look at them and study them, that is what I assumed they were doing.

Now, I think there is some value and we are doing some research on the fact as to whether these books should be published on a departmental basis or whether we should now be coming out with what we call the semantic approach. When we deal with welfare, for instance, the whole field of welfare or social and family services, we should be putting in one booklet what is available in all levels of government so they can get it in one booklet. This type of research is in fact going on. But I invite the member to re-read the series as it presently stands. I really thought they were an information booklet to give people in 13 languages, including English and French, the story of the departmental programmes.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister did not reply to the questions posed by the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: That is why I am on my feet.

Mr. Chairman: But if the hon. member for Dovercourt has a series of questions, perhaps the Minister should reply—

Mr. Lawlor: I wonder if the Minister would not care to reply, if on nothing else but the social opportunity project. I suggested that you were deficient somehow in not participating—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The points raised by the hon. member for Lakeshore are of great interest. I would direct his attention to the fact that $33,500 is asked for in these estimates for research and grants. We do involve ourselves with the work of the social planning council, with the international institute, with the Travellers' Aid, with the Ontario Welfare Council and such groups, and I have no explanation why there is no reference to this department in that particular publication to which the member makes reference. We like to think we have very close liaison with this organization and with many.

We have made it a point, particularly recently with some new programmes and changes at the federal level, to meet on a more regular basis with Manpower and Immigration, the federal department, so that we are quite familiar and up to date with new trends in that department of government. We have always worked very closely with federal Citizenship and we recognize—I could give you more—we recognize and underline the need to be keeping in very close touch with all groups who are involved in this work, where we have no monopoly in it or no monopoly of concern.

I would also point out that in the field of research, we are and have been working with the department of sociology of York University, with Dr. Richmond of the university, doing some specific research in this field as well. So may I briefly say I do not argue with the hon. member at all, about the need to take some initiative to make sure that we are abreast of all these matters.

There is a very interesting study done by the social planning council of the greater Hamilton area on the neighbourhood approach to this whole community thing. As many of our communities get bigger, the need to sort of bring back the concept of neighbourhood—and I never cease to be amazed at the tremendous quantity of very helpful reports and seminars and meetings that are available all the time. Our liaison people are continuously attending these meetings and identifying the work of this department. If you were to look, as I do quite often to remind myself of my terms of reference as long as I have this responsibility, it is a tremendous wording, challenging wording in the Act of this department, where among other things it says that "this Minister in co-operation with everybody who shares this interest will work tirelessly to ensure that all residents of Ontario enjoy full and equal citizenship." And I would like to point out that although they may only be words to some people, I only hope that we all work together, for there is really no partisan approach to that interest, I am sure, that we may all work together to accomplish that fact for our people in this province.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I have ascertained from among the official Opposition and from the members of the NDP that there are perhaps seven or eight speakers at least who want to join in the debate on this vote, and I wonder since it is now ten past eleven, whether the hon. Minister who is the House leader, will not consider moving the adjournment because if it is his thought that we go on until this vote is finished, we could be here for another hour and a half. Certainly he is not going to get his estimates through tonight.

Mr. Chairman: I do not know that the hon. member has a point of order, but his remarks are well put.

Mr. Singer: It was just a suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go to the order paper to consider legislation that will be ready, and if time permits we will return to the estimates.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, what does the Minister mean by that euphemism "legislation if it will be ready"? For example, is he talking about the college of arts; is he talking about Bill 73 and Bill 74?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I cannot be any more specific. I really will have to depend on the Ministers who are here for calling it.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Is the Minister privy to the order of business?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I guess anything on the order paper is fair.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.15 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests in the galleries today are, in the east gallery, students from Preston High School in Preston, from the Adult Education Centre at Keele Street in Toronto, and the Waterloo-Oxford and District Secondary School in Baden; in the west gallery, the Huron County Council from Goderich, and students from Etobicoke Collegiate Institute in Islington.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Yesterday the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) rose on a point of order with respect to an incident that afternoon at the main entrance to this building.

I have now had the opportunity of investigating the matter and have received reports from the corporal in charge of the OPP detachment in the buildings, and from the executive officer from the Prime Minister's department, who also was present. It appears that some 40 humane society officials or officers bearing petitions for presentation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) were met at the main door by Mr. William Kinmond from the Prime Minister's office. Apparently there was no prior notice of this delegation and it was necessary to arrange a suitable place for the Prime Minister to receive the delegation. It appears then that Mr. Kinmond asked two or three members of the delegation to accompany him, in order that necessary arrangements could be made and requested the others to await entry until he returned for them to be conducted to the reception area.

It further appears that the members of our OPP then on duty at the main entrance to the building, following Mr. Kinmond's suggestion, which was concurred in by the delegation, stood in the doors, which may have in some measure impeded entrance by visitors, members and the public. I am advised further, however, that at no time during incident were the doors locked nor anyone denied entrance, which would seem to be substantiated by the entrance to the building of the hon. member herself. I am further advised that room 263 was made available to the delegation who then entered and were received by the Prime Minister.

From this it is apparent to me that there really was no denial to the citizens of our province, including members of the delegation in question, of the right of free entrance to our Parliament buildings. Rather was it an honest attempt to arrange an orderly reception by the Prime Minister of the delegation.

I have, however, made it abundantly clear to the officer in charge of the Parliamentary detachment of the OPP—who I may say have been serving us in a most excellent and exemplary manner—that except in most exceptional circumstances, which do arise from time to time, the Parliament buildings are open to the public.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. Since he is not in his place I would not ask it at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) is not present. I have nobody there. The member for Oxford is not there either and he has a question.

The hon. member for Nipissing.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

What provisions or changes in the grant structure does the Minister intend to implement in light of the fact that the educational tax level in the Nipissing district and other northern Ontario districts will rise sharply, and in some cases double, as a result of the amalgamation of separate school boards into district boards under provincial government direction?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, under Bills 44 and 168 provisions were made for the individual former school jurisdictions to raise the same amount of money through the local levy in 1969 as they did in 1968. This was written, perhaps as the hon. member will recall, right into the legislation so that the only additional sum to be provided, either for the separate or the public schools, will be for any increase in growth or additional costs for the new programme. The proportion of this additional amount required because of growth factors will be apportioned among the municipalities on the basis of the provincial equalized assessment.

The new grant regulations which were made available the latter part of last week—and which I would assume are presently being digested and, hopefully, understood by the various boards—provide for a weighting factor, which is a change this year, in terms of grants of 1.1 over the base generally applicable in the province for a student resident in a territorial district. So there has been recognition under the new grant plan of the additional cost in these areas of the province.

We have also suggested to the local boards in the calculation of the specific amounts they will receive, that any questions at this moment should be directed to and discussed with the regional directors of education, and this information in turn is being transmitted to the department.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would accept a supplementary: In the grant structure regulations that have been set out there has been a limit put on the increase of between four and ten per cent; is this correct?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been, shall we say, a minimum or a floor of 104 per cent of last year's cost and a maximum of 110.

Mr. R. S. Smith: This is regardless of what the additional costs have been because of moving into the larger boards?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this applies whether it was part of a new amalgamated board, or perhaps one of the designated cities. The floor is 104, the maximum is 110, no matter what the causes or the reasons may be.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): A question for the Minister of Tourism and Information.

Will the Minister consider the possibility of acquiring Peche Island under The Province of Ontario Heritage Foundation Act, 1967, as now being amended to include recreational and scenic areas?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment to the Act now before the House is to permit the foundation to accept gifts of this type of property either by themselves or primarily in connection with historical buildings.

I think it is unlikely, in the foreseeable future, that the foundation would ever have sufficient funds to purchase recreational land; however, even if the foundation did, I do not think it is likely that this would happen because I think if that were to be done, it would be done by some other department.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Health also. A supplementary?

Mr. Burr: Yes, a supplementary question: What does the recreational and scenic aspect of the amendment refer to then?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, I think on introduction of the bill, there have been lands where the solicitors for those wishing to make a gift to the Crown in right of Ontario, wanted to ensure that their gift could be accepted where there was land in connection with the building—large chunks of land in connection with a building which might be of historical interest.

Mr. Burr: A question for the Minister of Health. Is Ted Boorsma now being treated in Toronto General Hospital and if so, for what ailment?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, before taking responsibility to answer such a question in the Legislature I would like to have the written consent of Mr. Boorsma that he wishes his private affairs made public in this way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question of the Premier who is now in his place.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to rush this too much. Has the Premier arranged to meet with the representatives of Local 512 of the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of America in connection with the situation at the Etobicoke plant of the Canadian Westinghouse Company?

What action will the government take to safeguard the interests of the 102 employees who will lose their jobs as the phasing out proceeds?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the leader of the Opposition on his rapidity in getting on top of these things because his question was delivered to me before the telegram; but I now have the telegram here.

Mr. Nixon: We give the Premier very good service.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well it all depends who people are talking to, I guess.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I have the telegram before me. To be quite frank with you I have not had time to go into the detail of the request. Of course my door is always open to any group that wants to see me and I will look this over and I will do what I can to assist in the situation.

I have not made any arrangements to answer the question specifically because the request only arrived in my office a very short time ago, but I will be quite happy to go into the whole matter and do what I can to assist in this situation.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary to that question: Is the Premier aware that the EIO programme of the government seems to be resulting in some shifts in these industries—at least being partially responsible for some of these shifts—which are working some hardships, at least serious dislocations, on the labour force?

There is one example, there is another one in London and there may in fact be another one in Brantford. I think this is something that is going to be a continuing problem and I guess we have to deal with it on a situation basis. And yet it seems to be recurring quite frequently. I would ask the Premier if he is in consultation with the Minister of Trade and Development as to how we might get around these recurring difficulties?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the problem no doubt is there and I think as a government we are aware of the fact that if we are offering incentives to industry to go to areas which we think need industry more than other areas do, certainly it always can be said that the government is doing some other area a disservice. In each of these—and I do not know that this is involved in the particular situation with which we are dealing because, as I say, I have not had a chance to get into it, but in answer to the general question being put — assume this government tries to encourage industry to go from one area to another. Our motives, of course, are of the best, we want to put industry into certain areas where we have employment problems and where we want certain development to take place, of course it is going to result in some dislocation. Now, we would want to keep that dislocation to a minimum and I do not think it has been great to date. I am certain that when we deal with the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), he will be able to give the member that information, chapter and verse, because each one of these applications is dealt with as a unit on its own merits. There are standard rules, but the point is the complete circumstances of each application and each grant is gone into.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): No politics at all!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce cannot get his mind off the petty part of this whole business. We are trying to do something for people in this province; we are trying to put industry where there are people who need it; we are trying to develop the north. And if the member must relate everything to partisan politics, Mr. Speaker—you see how successful it is when one attempts to relate every action of the government to partisan politics, you just simply create chaos and discord. Really, it is not worth my time in even replying to these comments.

Mr. Sargent: The Premier is paid pretty well to do it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: But I would point out in answer to the question, that in dealing with these applications, we are looking after the greatest number of people in the greatest area of interest which we think exists in the province, and we will, of course, attempt to alleviate any difficulty that may be caused.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is in the form of a question. Surely the Premier would agree that the aim of the policy is not to relocate industry, but to make industry grow? If the government is going to move one industry from one community to another, then this programme is not going to be in the best interests of the province. They are trying to get new industry, or industry to grow, and this is to the advantage of the province. But surely, if the aim is to move it from A to B and then not have a programme to deal with the problem that evolved in the first location, then the policy is not in the best interest of the province.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Of course, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, that is not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Just a moment, please!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I told the House—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not need any assistance on this.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister thought the Premier did.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Let the real Premier stand up!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh Mr. Speaker, they need not try to drag us into their difficulties.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The Premier is very touchy today.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, of course it is not our intent to move an industry from one place to another. But there is the establishment of branch plants, and it might very well be in the interests of everyone concerned if, instead of a huge addition being built in the centre of an area which has all the problems that some of our big urban areas have, that addition was built in some other community where we were having difficulty—for instance, with the farm population, with the contraction of labour used on farms and the labour surplus, young people needing jobs. It might be a good idea to locate an addition someplace else. It is not our intent to close a plant in one place and move it to another.

Mr. Nixon: Unfortunately this is what happened.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Maybe it did and maybe it did not. We will find that out when we delve into it.

Mr. Nixon: That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight) has a question of the Prime Minister.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order? I apologize for my delay in arriving at my seat in the Assembly. I have read your remarks with great interest. I would like to put on the record, however, Mr. Speaker, that I did have to identify myself to come through the front doors of the building yesterday. And I have with me a letter of which I would like to read one paragraph, to show you that it happened to a public citizen.

This letter is signed Marguerite E. Parker, 72 Millbrook Crescent, Toronto 6.

Dear Mrs. Renwick:

Just a short note from a member of the public to say "thank you" for your timely intervention yesterday afternoon when, for the first time in my memory, the doors of the Parliament buildings were barred and closed to a few members of the general public who wished to enter: I, for the purpose of using my ticket to the Speaker's gallery and listening to the afternoon session, and a few other orderly gentlemen from the Ontario Humane Society who had petitions from a large section of the population of Ontario which they wished to hand over to Mr. Robarts or his representative.

I will not take the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, to read the next paragraph which is not exactly charitable towards the attitude of government, but I do think it is important that you have a view that is not a partisan view, such as I might present myself at finding those doors with a policeman on each side of the main entrance.

Mr. Speaker: I may say to the hon. member that not only do I have a written report from the two gentlemen I mentioned but I have talked to them personally, and I have every confidence in the corporal of the detachment who tells me that he recognized the hon. member and that she was allowed in without anything further than that.

That was the information which has been conveyed to me and I think it is reasonable to assume that there is a misunderstanding here so far as the person is concerned, to whom the hon. member refers in the letter. It is quite possible that it could have happened in accordance with the report which was given to me and which I gave to the House. It is an unfortunate incident. I have said that I will endeavour to see that it does not happen again, because obviously it was quite a misunderstanding between those who were on the door and those who were endeavouring to come in yesterday. We would hope there will be no further occurrence.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to put on the record that I was at no time critical of the police.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising again to a point of order? If she is then she is entitled to say so. If she is just making a remark then she is out of order.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I rise again on my point of order?

I would just like to state, Mr. Speaker, that at no time was my purpose in raising this issue, to criticize the corporal on duty at the door. I asked the corporal on whose orders he was keeping the people out of the building, and asked him if he felt he had a right to do so. He said he was doing so on the orders of Mr. Kinmond. I said, "This building is the citizens' building. Are you sure you are right, officer, in keeping the people out?" And with that he then apparently checked, Mr. Speaker. I was not critical of the policeman who was carrying out an order of government.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I would understand from the hon. member, then that she was not kept out. It was on behalf of the others that she was discussing it. I wish to have this important point decided because certainly of all people who are entitled to come into this House, a member is entitled without any question whatsoever, and I want to have that straightened out. Would I be correct in assuming that as far as the hon. member went that she herself did not have any difficulty?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, may I speak again on my point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Would you please?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you.

I would like to state, Mr. Speaker, that I in no way had to fight my way into the Parliament buildings yesterday. I would like to say that I came to the doors, I was behind one or two citizens—I presume this lady must have been one, and the two orderly columns of the humane society men—and I went to grab the door handle and found two policemen. I was just astounded and said, "Are you keeping these people out? Surely you are not!" in an affable way. And he said, "Yes, my orders are to keep people out, keep them out." And I said, "I am Margaret Renwick, the member for Scarborough Centre, officer. Are you sure you are right in keeping these people out? I certainly have to get in."

Now, he did not attempt to keep me out,

Mr. Speaker. I would like that definitely, clearly on the record. That was not my point yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that I was being kept out. I am concerned about the people who are being kept out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has now answered my question because, as I say, I think it is most important that members, certainly should not be impeded in any way. She has already made her point with respect to the general public which I have endeavoured to ensure will not arise again. I thank the hon. member for bringing it to the attention of the House, because certainly it is something that should not be allowed to occur here except in special circumstances which do arise. I trust that as far as the hon. member is concerned, at the moment at least, this ends the matter. Thank you.

The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; to the Premier: In view of the fact that the Premier has not answered my supplementary question to the questions which I asked five weeks ago concerning the bilingualism of Queen's Park guides and security guards, is the Premier now prepared to indicate the ethnic origin of bilingual guides and security guards, and whether their bilingualism qualifies them for higher salary?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, frankly when I received this question I did not realize that I had undertaken to do anything in answer to a supplementary question. So the first thing I am doing is checking Hansard to find out precisely what did take place on that occasion. If I gave an undertaking, I will carry it out. I do not really know whether I will be able to find out from The Department of Civil Service what the ethnic origin is. I would have to find out whether we asked for this information on application forms, for instance. There are quite a few aspects to it. I do not recall undertaking to do this but if I did, I will get the information and I have people on my staff digging into Hansard at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Premier.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Prime Minister.

Will the Premier advise the House how many times the TV and radio facilities of the Legislature have been used by Alan Eagleson, President of the Ontario Conservative Party and on what authority?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should start at the end of this question rather than at the first. I will answer the specific question asked.

The hon. member asks "on what authority". When the TV room, as it is called, was established it was set up to do away with the sort of corridor press conferences which were becoming popular. We felt that we needed to create a room in the buildings in which a press conference could be held where radio and television and the written press could attend all at the same time and each perform their own function. As to the authority by which it is used, so far as having somebody who has a key to the place and looks after it, it is run from my own department. To the best of my knowledge no one has ever been refused the use of it, on any grounds whatsoever. It is there really more for the convenience of the news media than it is for perhaps those they are interviewing, but it has meant that over the years we have been able to get away from the corridor press conferences, as I call them, which we were trying to avoid when we set it up.

As far as Mr. Eagleson is concerned, he has been in the TV studio twice since his election as president. On February 3, 1969, he attended the press conference which I called myself, part of which was devoted to a review by me of some reorganization that had taken place in the Conservative Party.

Mr. Nixon: Revitalization!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Pardon?

Mr. Nixon: Revitalization!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I believe that is the term I used, and it is coming quite well.

So among other things discussed at that press conference was this question, but that was not the sole question discussed. I do not know really whether that is germane. Then on March 5, 1969, CJBC requested to use the studio to do an interview in French with Mr. Eagleson. I was not present at that particular press conference. We do not really ask what use is going to be made by the studio when one of the news media wishes to use it or asks to use it.

The members might be interested in knowing, while I am on my feet, just what use has been made of it. It has been used by various members of this House for press conferences. The hon. member for Sudbury used it on one occasion when he had something he felt was of interest to the people of Canada and—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Need the Premier remind me?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Charles Templeton has used it, Tommy Douglas has used it, and so has Andrew Thompson. John Diefenbaker has been interviewed in there. I believe Bob Stanfield has been interviewed there. I believe that two members of this House had conferences there at one stage to air some of their differences.

I mention these matters, Mr. Speaker, only to indicate that there is no attempt made by the government to control who uses it. I will go back to my original statement, it is really there in order that the news media may conduct their affairs in an orderly manner.

From March 2, 1966, to March 2, 1967, the government held 39 press conferences in that studio; the Liberal Party held six, and the New Democrats held seven. I do not know what that indicates but those are the figures. From March 1, 1967, to March 1, 1968, the government held 43 press conferences, the Liberal Party held 21, the New Democrats held 16, and other groups used it on four occasions. From March 1, 1968, to March 13, 1969, the government used it for 43 press conferences, the Liberal Party for 19, the New Democratic Party for nine, and other groups for eight.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Who keeps the records?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The records are kept in my office, just as a matter of course. We want to know who uses it, and the use that is made of it. I think the members can see from what I have told the House here that it is serving the function for which it was established.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to know that much about it. Would the Prime Minister accept a supplementary on this?

The point that I am making in my question to the Prime Minister, is the fact that he is using this Whip's office as a base for the Conservative Party, and I object very much.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member does not object at this time, he asks a supplementary question.

Mr. Sargent: All right, would you agree that I should object, as a taxpayer?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, if I may answer the question. I realize the hon. member is not interested in my answer. He really wants to make his speech and have no answer, but I will answer as a taxpayer. I think the taxpayers of this province are well served by this room and the purpose to which it is put.

It provides an opportunity for all parties in this House to put their point of view to the news media to be disseminated to all the taxpayers of this province in an orderly, proper fashion. And if the member thinks that the leader of the Opposition goes down there and speaks impartially, he is just kidding himself.

We do not expect him to, any more than we expect the New Democrats to go down there and say they love the Tories. It is not going to work that way. But here we have the facility, paid for by the taxpayers, that permits the views of the three parties sitting in this House to be presented to them in an orderly fashion.

I do not find anything wrong with it and I very much doubt whether any of the taxpayers of this province will find anything wrong with it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A question to the Minister of Trade and Development: In view of the fact that the Hon. Paul Hellyer indicated that $160 million could be used towards a subsidized rent programme in Toronto, will the Minister advise what steps are being taken to acquire 10,000 vacant apartments in Toronto on behalf of the 17,000 families on the waiting list?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister will note that there was a change from "could be taken" to "are being taken".

Mr. Sargent: That is the way I dictated it!

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, this is the way it was submitted to the Speaker's office.

Mr. Sargent: It does not make any sense that way.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is anticipated, Mr. Speaker, so I do not worry about the changes.

In replying to the hon. member's question, I would first of all point out that I am not personally familiar with the statement which he has attributed to the hon. Paul Hellyer. In the Toronto Daily Star, dated Friday, March 21, 1969, there was an article headed: "Ottawa May Help Needy to Pay High Rise Rents". In this article, Mr. Hellyer is purported to have told MPs that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has earmarked $160 million of its total 1969 budget of $650 million for public housing, and a considerable portion of that figure could go to subsidized rents in existing buildings.

Mr. Hellyer is quoted as saying there were "a lot of unoccupied apartments in Toronto now". At no point, however, does he appear to have indicated that $160 million could be used exclusively towards a subsidized rent programme in Toronto.

In the same article Mr. Hellyer apparently cited the housing registry of Metropolitan Toronto's waiting list as containing 13,500 names of families who want to move because they cannot afford their current rents, because of overcrowding or because they now live in substandard accommodation. He did not refer to a waiting list of 17,000 families and I am advised the family waiting list for Metro currently stands at 15,000.

However, as we have learned from experience in allocating Ontario housing units in Metropolitan Toronto, it is frequently necessary to offer the same unit to at least three families before receiving one acceptance.

On February 18 of this year, at my direction Ontario Housing Corporation wrote to the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation concerning rental supplements. The letter referred to the rent certificate plan which was introduced by the government of Ontario in 1962 on an experimental basis. It pointed out that this plan was discontinued because of a number of factors, including the fact that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation did not participate in any cost-sharing arrangement. The letter concludes as follows:

It has come to our attention that in Metropolitan Toronto the private apartment market is becoming softer and there are at present some 5,000 vacant suites which admittedly fall into the smaller bedroom category.

An analysis of our current waiting list indicates that some 60 per cent of the applicants require two bedrooms or less. With these facts in mind and in view of the task force recommendations we would ask whether you would give consideration to a proposal from us for the re-introduction of a rent certificate plan or its equivalent, with the operating losses to be shared jointly under the terms of section 35E.

To the best of my knowledge, we have not yet received a reply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford has a question from the other day of the Minister of Education.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education. In view of the fact that municipalities have varying tax collection dates, what regulations will the department set up to provide an equitable method of making payments to the county school boards since the reorganization of the system in the province?

Has the Minister's department made a request to The Department of Municipal Affairs for the establishment of a uniform tax collection date for Ontario for the individual?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, section 88(1) of The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act requires that the council of the municipality transfer to the divisional board the amounts that have been raised for public and secondary school purposes. These requests come from time to time, but no later than December 15, so that each board can requisition from the municipal councils those portions of the tax levy as they are required to meet their needs. This has been, really the procedure for the past number of years.

This does not alter under the new legislation. However, in order to assist the divisional boards with their problems of, shall we say, cash flow, it has been determined to increase this year from five to ten, the number of payments made on grants—general legislative grants—so that this can improve the cash flow position for them.

Mr. Innes: Could I have a supplementary? The Minister realizes that many of the municipalities have to borrow extra money to make their payments with high interest rates.

Hon. Mr. Davis: At this moment they may be borrowing, but they can requisition. Once their budgets are set they can then start to requisition from the municipality.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has some questions of Ministers who are in the House.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Attorney General: Would the Minister advise the House of the findings and recommendations of the coroners' juries in each of the following inquests into infant deaths in Toronto: (a) Carol Ann Young; (b) Patrick Carr; (c) the Ambing infant born of two mental defectives.

In the Ambing infant case, was testimony received that conception probably took place at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital at 999 Queen Street West?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I will enquire into these matters and get an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I have an answer to a question—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we will allow the hon. member to finish her questions.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A question of the Minister of Trade and Development: Will the Minister assure the tenants of Green Meadows in Guelph, whose homes will be sold to them by the Ontario Housing Corporation about the end of March, that any repairs or maintenance over and above normal wear and tear will be made before the sale is completed, and at the expense of the corporation, or that the sale price will be adjusted accordingly?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, in all cases where a tenant of Green Meadows in Guelph indicated an interest in purchasing the house, a maintenance inspection was carried out by Ontario Housing Corporation engineering staff prior to the execution of an offer of sale and purchase.

Those items of repair or replacement which were considered to be the responsibility of Ontario Housing Corporation were listed, mutually agreed upon between Ontario Housing Corporation and the tenant, and a signed copy retained by each of the two parties. This list was then incorporated into the offer of sale and purchase.

Certain work of an exterior nature may not be finished prior to the closing date of the transaction because of seasonal conditions. It will be completed as soon thereafter as conditions permit, and the closing will be subject to the undertaking that the corporation will meet these contractual obligations. Under these circumstances, there is no necessity to adjust the sale price and the tenants involved have been so advised of the foregoing.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Are the tenants advised in writing that the work to be done will be carried out by the corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I stated that, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General has the answer to a question of a member who is in the House.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I took notice of a question from the hon. member for High Park on March 21 of this year, question number 968, and I would like to reply to that question today.

The question was:

Was Mr. Stanley Dubrueil taken from his home in Windsor on August 16, 1968, by four Windsor policemen who were under the impression that he was mentally ill?

Was Mr. Dubrueil sent to the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital by the Windsor police?

Was Mr. Dubrueil released by the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital with the explanation that an error had been made?

Why and how did this incident occur?

My answer, Mr. Speaker, is that I made enquiries into this matter and I am informed that in the early hours of the morning of August 16, 1968, Mrs. Anne Dubrueil of the city of Windsor, telephoned the Windsor police department telling them that her husband had threatened her with a knife and was acting very strangely.

An immediate investigation was made and from his conduct at the time and from what Mrs. Dubrueil stated to the officers, the man was removed from his home by the ABC Ambulance Company, accompanied by two policemen I might say, to the psychiatric wing of the Hotel Dieu Hospital for examination, in accordance with section 10 of The Mental Health Act. That was the only part the police had to play in the matter.

Mr. Dubrueil was examined by a senior psychiatrist and was then sent in an ambulance to the Ontario Hospital in St. Thomas. The authority for such a transfer is contained in section 22 of The Mental Health Act.

In this instance the action was taken by the psychiatric facility of the Hotel Dieu Hospital, and I stress, Mr. Speaker, that there was an examination by a senior psychiatrist of the medical profession at the Hotel Dieu Hospital. It was on his authority that the patient was transmitted to St. Thomas in accordance with section 22 of the Act, and I am not aware of any comments at the time of the patient's release from the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a point of personal privilege.

I have now had an opportunity to examine the comments made by the hon. Treasurer yesterday in reply to a question put to him, and as his remarks about me were not accurate I wish to set the record straight.

Several weeks ago a Mr. Philip Glanzer forwarded to me numerous allegations of misconduct in our division courts accompanied by certain corroborative evidence from the inspector of legal offices.

To ascertain the accuracy of these allegations I asked the Attorney General a number of questions on the matter. The hon. Attorney General asked that these questions be placed on the notice paper and as yet they have not been answered.

Subsequent to this Mr. Glanzer forwarded to me a further allegation in connection with the question which I asked the hon. Treasurer on March 13, and to which he replied yesterday. In his reply the hon. Treasurer said that I was aware of all the facts in the case. This was not correct. I did not know of Mrs. Campbell's tragic circumstances. What is more, the hon. Treasurer knew this as he had been given a copy of all the correspondence which I had received.

Furthermore, the hon. Treasurer suggested in his comments yesterday that I might have some connection with Philip Glanzer. And the Conservative propaganda outlet, the Toronto Telegram, went even further today in suggesting that I had some relationship with this man.

For the record, not only have I no connection with this man but I have never met nor have I ever spoken to him. Mr. Speaker, what I find most disturbing about this incident is that these comments were not blurted out by a backbender in the heat of debate but were made by a senior government member in reply to a question which had been placed two weeks previously. His comment contained misleading information, improper allegations as to my motives, and at least one flat misstatement of fact. The Minister has accused me of using this incident to embarrass the government. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the reverse is the truth. The Minister in order to embarrass myself has deliberately misled this House.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I think you will recall during my remarks yesterday I stated clearly that I was not aware of the nature or the extent of the association between the member for High Park and Philip Glanzer, the agents in division court.

I say again, sir, that the purpose of this association is not known to me. The hon. member's response to the request from Mr. Phil Glanzer for co-operation represents the sum and substance of what I have put on record. And I will say this to you, sir, at this time, that the information required could have been obtained from myself over the telephone, or by exchange of correspondence. I personally see no purpose in asking questions that will parade the problems of unfortunate people before the Legislature and before the people of this province.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I will not allow that man to mislead the House again. We have made numerous attempts to get information from government Ministers by writing. They will not answer their letters. There are exceptions in the front bench but the hon. Treasurer is not one of them, nor is the Minister who sits to his left.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. members that when the statement was being read yesterday I was paying particular attention to it in view of what obviously would be the results. I have in my hand a copy of the transcript as it will appear in Hansard, and I would point out that so far as my reading of it goes, the hon. Treasurer's statement was very carefully worded and in my opinion did not impute any motives to the hon. member although the matter, of course, of his association—of what it might be—was raised.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker has no control over newspapers.

Mr. MacDonald: But the Telegram took the innuendo that the Minister clearly intended.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was quite correct in rising to his point of order but the only point that I can deal with is the point of what was said in the House here, and I have looked it over very carefully. I certainly think that the hon. member had a point of privilege so far as the newspaper report was concerned and I thank him for giving me notice that he was rising to that point of order.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, just to complete this matter might I ask you to enquire when the Attorney General will file answers to the original questions which would have prevented this whole unfortunate incident?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Why is it still on the order paper?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think the questions were put on the notice paper.

Mr. Lewis: Why are they still there?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is the proper place for them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. Here we are with another illustration of how the business of this House is frustrated.

A question is put on the order paper and its answer can be gotten in 48 hours or 72 hours. It lies there for literally months on occasion. Now, do not blame the Opposition for getting into difficulties when it is the government that refuses to provide the information that the public is entitled to.

Mr. Speaker: We have had this experience over many years. I recall that last year I took the action of sending to the Prime Minister a note regularly as to questions, and I found that he was very co-operative in having them tabled. I have also asked him—the letter is in the mail to him now—to try to table any answers that he has before the Easter recess so that we may have those answers and that information.

So far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, of course, his only duty is to see that the questions are asked and are placed on the notice paper, and from then on I am afraid it is up to the hon. members to endeavour to persuade the government to answer those questions at the earliest possible time. I shall assist the members as best I can in doing that.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask in future that when the Ministers answer a question, they answer a question and not put in their own suggestions, impressions or questions. This instance—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is now out of order. The member for Parkdale has a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): This is a question of the hon. Minister of Trade and Development.

As a result of the provincial pavilion construction at the CNE grounds, will the Lake Shore Boulevard be closed to through traffic for two years?

If not, why is it necessary to close the south end of Exhibition Park for two years to the general public?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, Lake Shore Boulevard will not be closed to through traffic as a result of the provincial pavilion construction at the CNE, so there will be no difficulty there.

And as for the latter part of the question, it is necessary to close the Exhibition Park south of Lake Shore Boulevard during the period of construction in order to provide truck access for land fill operations to create islands and to provide staging area for construction activities such as the assembly of structural steel. We think it would be rather difficult to operate under those conditions if that road was left open for people to come and park and get in the way of the trucks and the construction equipment down there.

Mr. Trotter: I would just like to ask this, if traffic is allowed to go through, which I hope it would be, why does this stop people from actually stopping on the road or parking?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are going to dump something like, I think, roughly 400 truckloads of fill down there each day. There will be bulldozers pushing that around in order to level off that ground and put in that major staging area, and there is not going to be too much room for anybody down there to park or drive under those circumstances. I think for the sake of their own safety, they should not be allowed in there until the building is completed.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): A question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

Is the Ontario Northland Railway prepared to provide such special equipment as may be necessary to facilitate Texas Gulf Sulphur in its location of a smelter in the Timmins area? Specifically, will the Ontario Northland Railway provide special tank cars to transport by rail sulphuric acid byproducts from the smelting process to various parts of the continent?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that there has been no request from Texas Gulf to furnish any equipment, nor have they asked for a rate to transfer sulphuric acid from proposed new smelters to whatever destination they should be shipping.

However, I have said to Texas Gulf and to the council in the town of Timmins that when and if they decided on building a smelter in the north, the Ontario Northland Railway would be only too pleased to cooperate in any way they could in order that the acid might be transferred to its destination.

As to the supplying of special cars, I think perhaps this is something that would be worked out. Perhaps the company might want to furnish its own cars, or depending on the destination of where the acid is to be shipped, no doubt we would supply cars or we would have to work out the supplying of cars with whatever railroad would be transporting the product.

Mr. Ferrier: Am I to understand that the government is not consulting with the Ontario Northland Railway in the negotiations at the present time about a smelter location?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that transportation has been discussed with Texas Gulf as to ores. The question has been asked whether, if a smelter were built in the north, we would be ready to give special rates on this acid, as I understand we could not charge the high rate on it. We have agreed that we would sit down at any time with Texas Gulf and work out a rate that would help them move the product if the smelter were built in the north.

Mr. Ferrier: My question was, at the present time the Minister is not in negotiation, along with the other government departments, as to the location of the smelter. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I do not think we are talking about the location of the smelter; I think we are talking about transporting sulphuric acid, and this has never been negotiated with the mine up to this time.

Mr. Ferrier: It is an important part of the negotiations, I would think.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Evidently not, or they would have asked for it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre was on her feet a moment ago?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, in light of two reasons—first, that I have a question which I consider of urgent public importance to the Minister of Health; and second, because I think I am beginning to observe perhaps a shadow of a system of absence of Ministers on certain days from the House—if there is such a system when Ministers do have a day off from being in the House, a system perhaps of which you are aware?

Mr. Speaker: It is a question which Mr. Speaker cannot answer because Mr. Speaker has nothing to do with the attendance of the members in the House unless there should be less than a quorum. Then, of course, Mr. Speaker would take the necessary action to have those present recorded. But that is entirely a matter for the Prime Minister and also for the House leader, and if either of them would wish to speak to the matter I would be quite content.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we have an arrangement within our caucus to ensure that we have what we consider a requisite number of members in the House at any time and also to give the members of our caucus an opportunity to carry out their duties other than those duties involved in sitting in this House and listening to these very interesting debates. There is no system by which any Cabinet Minister is absent from this House for anything to do with questions. It is impossible, of course, for us all to be here for the question period five days a week. I suppose one has to take one's chances with the questions. But I can assure the hon. member and all other hon. members that we are not trying in any way to avoid answering any proper questions that are put to the government in this House.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, may I speak further to my original point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the hon. member may.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, that is not exactly what I was trying to get at. It does seem to me to be an urgent question. I was not trying to say the Ministers were not here to not answer an urgent question, Mr. Speaker, but I did recall an instance where I did want to know if the Minister would be in the House for a specific question which mattered to me, and I was told by his department it was his day off; and that has prompted my watching for a pattern and asking this question.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that the Minister of Health was here this afternoon but unfortunately the hon. member did not catch my eye while the Minister was in his seat. By the time we got the hon. member's eye, the Minister had gone.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 77th order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

CITY OF LONDON

House in committee on Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the city of London.

Mr. Chairman: Section 1 has been carried on this bill; section 2 has been carried.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill Pr3 reported.

CARLETON UNIVERSITY

House in committee on Bill Pr25, An Act respecting Carleton University.

On section 1.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, on section 1 of the bill, this is the bill that we asked to have stood down a few days ago, in anticipation that when it was called again in committee of the whole House, not only the sponsoring member but the Minister himself would be present. I am delighted to see that he has just come into the House.

The point which concerns me, Mr. Chairman, clause I of the bill—apart from its larger ramifications in terms of the government of Carleton University—is that it establishes procedures by which the faculty board will have members from the student community on those boards, but it goes on to say that the procedures are to be established by bylaw, and there is no reference at all as to the terms of the bylaw which will establish those procedures. Indeed, the very presence of students on the faculty board is permissive.

I would draw the attention of the House to the provisions of The Carleton College Act, in which the authority to pass bylaws is vested in the board of governors of Carleton University. Not only is it vested in the Board of Governors but the only authority that the senate has to pass bylaws is in a very restricted area and then only if the board of governors themselves have not passed the bylaw.

My concern is with whether or not the member sponsoring the bill in the House or the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. Davis) can advise us as to what the terms of the anticipated bylaw of Carleton University will be. Otherwise this bill does not clearly make provision for student representation on the faculty board, which in turn will provide a method and a mechanism by which they will become members of the senate of Carleton University.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Chairman, just on the same issue, when we discussed—

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Mr. Chairman, does the member want an answer?

Mr. T. Reid: On the same issue, when this question was put to the president of the Carleton University in the private bills committee by both the representatives of the New Democratic Party and myself and other members of the Liberal Party on the committee, we were assured by the president that this section must be read—in terms of their intent—in the light of a background document prepared by the students, staff and administration of the university.

He assured us at that time that the intent of this clause was definitely to have students on the faculty boards. The question I raised at that time, with my reading of that section, did not necessarily mean the students had the right to be on the board, that it was in fact permissive. But we were assured in the committee, if my memory serves me correctly, that students are already on such boards and that they would continue to be on those boards.

But I do feel uneasy, as the hon. member for Riverdale does and I am sure the hon. member for Peterborough does, that we are concerned now with legislation. We are not concerned with the intent of the legislation. We are not concerned with any document prepared by these students and teachers and administration of the university which may remove our fears in this regard in actual fact.

So I, too, would like to express our reservations that this section is, in our opinion, not clear. It is subject to interpretation and it does not include students on the faculty boards as a matter of right, if I read that section correctly.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Carleton East.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Did you wish to speak before I did?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Yes, it is on the same issue.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Well, perhaps the member for Peterborough could go ahead. I will sum up my interpretation afterwards.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, this is on the same issue. I wish to associate myself with the members for Riverdale and Scarborough East on this issue.

We were assured by the president that there could be as many as 32 students on the senate as a result of their working their way up through the faculty boards.

I think this brings up the whole question of trying to find our way to patterns of university governments or understand individual university governments through the private bills committee. If this was a bill coming through this House as a public bill, one which the university in a sense presented through the Minister of University Affairs, as the member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock) has pointed out, then I think we would be able to clarify it. We would be able to bear the responsibility for assuming that such by-laws would be a part of this legislation, and I think that this is where we really get hung up.

We, as responsible legislators, are trying to find our path towards an effective university administration. We are concerned about unrest, we are concerned about this whole backdrop of Sir George Williams and of unrest in other universities. I think that we attempted in the private bills committee to be as generous as possible. We attempted to be as helpful as possible. But I must say, I share some of the concern which has been expressed on this side.

I will feel very badly a year from now if I turn and I find that on the Carleton senate there are only maybe two or three students because of the way in which the faculty boards were set up, and the way in which the things occurred within those faculty boards that we, in this Legislature, had allowed a bill to go through which did not effectively allow for student representation.

I will feel even worse if there is a building being occupied; if there is a building being destroyed in Ottawa because of our failure in this Legislature to ensure that those kinds of communications were set up within that university, and that representation was made possible as a result of the bill passed through this House.

I hope that the sponsoring member will be able to enlighten us. I would be even happier if he could give us some idea as to what the nature of this bylaw will be. I think the hon. member is a member of the board of governors for that university. Perhaps he might be able to use his role in the educational arena to enlighten this House on this particular aspect.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Well, Mr. Chairman, I will not purport to deal with the broader policy questions raised by the member for Peterborough insofar as they relate to the form of passage of the bill as to its procedures through this House, and whether or not it be a public or private bill because I would suggest that this is a part of the question that should be dealt with by the government through the Minister of University Affairs.

However, with regard to the more particular questions that were raised by the members who spoke earlier, I think I might underline this as point number one. That is, the existing legislation under which Carleton University operates reposes all power, and certainly all residual power, in the board of governors. This bill that we have before us today, does not, in my opinion, change that fundamental legal situation, and, in fact, this bill is probably not in pure law required if the board of governors wish to stand on an absolute interpretation of its ultimate absolute rights.

However, the bill did come before us and is before us now because it expresses a general intention on the part of the board, supported in Carleton by the faculty and by the student body, that there should be greater recognition of the role of the students in the university community of Carleton University. That is why in section 1 we find the enlargement of the definition clearly set out so that there is no argument that students would be disqualified. We also find a section at the end which qualifies students under 21.

Insofar as paragraph 2 of the bill is concerned, our minds are directed there to the way students become eligible for service on the senate.

Now, as has been pointed out, this bill is essentially permissive, but it does express the very current intention of the community, as I have described it, of Carleton University to the extent that by-laws have been drawn. I am advised by the university and, in fact, students, although not formally permitted to do so, are now serving on the senate of Carleton University.

Substantial numbers of students are serving on each of the faculty boards, and interestingly enough, I am told that the limitation on the number of students on the faculty boards and on the senate have been ones that have been placed before the board by the students themselves.

In other words, apparently the atmosphere and co-operation between the board, the faculty and the students at Carleton is sufficiently good that the students are not only participating, but on their own, are placing certain limitations on the numbers they wish to have participating on the faculty boards and from there, on the senate. That is the current situation.

As I point out, this bill is not one which would force the university to have student representation. But it is one which formalizes and recognizes the de facto co-operation and working together of the students on the faculty boards and in the senate.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to add one point here. I hope that this bill when passed—as it will be passed—will be read by the members of the Carleton University community, all the members of that community, with the Hansard remarks of today, so that all members of that community will see that we are clearly passing this bill in the light of the remarks of the hon. member for Carleton East about the intent of those who have the power to make this type of decision now at Carleton University.

I know one cannot do this in any formal way, Mr. Chairman, but I really would like to see this legislation passed with the debate in this House today, forming part of that bill.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): I do not imagine that the members of the governing body of Carleton University will pay one jot of attention to what is said in Hansard on this particular day, but perhaps, forlornly, the Minister of University Affairs might. I think that it is worth pointing out what clause 1, subsection e, is. It is a pretty patronizing extension of tokenism to students, and it does not reflect well on Carleton University that the student body has somehow been seduced into taking what is essentially an inferior role in the governance of the university community.

It is very nice of them and charitable indeed that they should draft a clause which says "students are not disqualified from membership". It would have been rather more a part of the 1960's had they drafted a clause which said that the students were qualified for membership, rather than putting the permissive intent in the opposite direction. I think it is again a reflection of the invidious position which the House is in when we have to deal with these housekeeping amendments.

The member for Carleton East is entirely right, the final authority residing in the board of governors, the board of governors could have done these things without legislative approval, which indicates how inappropriate the funnel for the bill actually is. It indicates again, Mr. Chairman, and indicates rather vividly, that we are not dealing with the substance of the university structure at all. Until we get to the board of governors of Carleton University, until we begin to deal with the real decision-making authority, the universities will continue to be open to the kind of corruption of intent that was so obvious in that tumultuous presentation and aftermath of the University of Western Ontario bill which was brought into this Legislature a couple of years ago.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): There has been no trouble at Western ever since that bill was passed.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): I would like to say a few words about the manner of presentation of this bill and several others that are on the order paper in connection with changes in university government. This bill comes to the House in committee of the whole House and, as it did in second reading and first reading, under the sponsorship of a private member as a private bill.

While the bill was before the committee on private bills I raised the question in that committee as to whether it was appropriate at this point to treat bills changing university forms of government, or establishing new universities, as private bills of the Legislature petitioned by a group of people wishing to incorporate themselves for the purpose of establishing a university. I suggested in that discussion in the standing committee on private bills when the McMaster bill was before the committee that such bills should be introduced by the Minister of University Affairs as public bills.

I find it most inappropriate, from the point of view of the public interest that is involved in the changes that we have here before us in this bill respecting Carleton University, that it should come to us as a private bill, and most inappropriate that a bill of this importance, this critical public importance, should have been handled in the way in which it was by the private bills committee.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the private bills committee has a great deal of expertise, if you wish, in respect to a large number of areas of concern—in municipal government, and so on. I find that its consideration, in my brief experience in this House, of matters affecting university government, to be inadequate, to be impatient, and to be without the degree of concern that must be brought to bear when we are engaged in the consideration of such an important matter as the framing of government of our post-secondary education institutions in the light of the circumstances on today's campuses.

The province of Ontario has engaged in capital construction expansion plans for the 14 universities of this province amounting to over $1 billion between 1967 and 1972.

Mr. Chairman: I am not at all sure that the member's remarks are in order in dealing with this bill in committee of the whole. We are dealing with section 1 of a specific, private bill and the hon. member is making remarks, in my opinion, that deal generally with bills of this nature. I suggest that it is not in order.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge that I am not strictly in order but I am attempting to engage the ear of the hon. Minister of University Affairs for whose benefit, I think, we asked that these bills be stood down in committee of the whole House until he was present in the Chamber.

May I say though, in respect to clause 1, in respect to the questions that have been raised by members on this side of the House, that for the sponsoring private member to be put in the position to have to answer these questions, to have to speak for the university community and the university government—the board of governors and the senate—is not the position that I think any member of this House wants to find himself in today.

I do not wish to find myself in that position. I think it is far more within the competence and the jurisdiction and the responsibility of the Minister of University Affairs to be the member of the House with whom members on this side are engaged in this kind of exchange and dialogue about such an important subject.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I only want to make one point from the point of view of the New Democratic Party caucus in this House and that is, that from this year forward we do not intend to support bills relating to the governance of the universities of this province which are introduced as private bills. It is absolutely essential that we understand that there is no hurdle which prevents the bills coming forward as public bills even though they originate as private bills.

The governance of the university establishments in this province and their financial support through this House, are matters which require the urgent attention of the government and it is no longer sufficient for the Minister of University Affairs to absent himself intellectually, if not physically, from the discussion of the problems related to government. From this point forward, excluding of course the bills which are presently before the House, we do not intend to support any bill relating to the governance of the universities that is not introduced by the Minister of University Affairs as a public bill of this province.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, on the occasion of the Minister's good-natured interjection, I really feel that—I wonder if the Minister would not comment on this whole matter in view of the fact that it is not suggested that the government should create a single pattern for governing bodies for each university in the province just as we have seen the professional engineers create their own legislation; just as we have seen the medical profession, the legal profession, create their own legislation and bring it forward as a public bill into this House. I find it very hard to understand why it is impossible for the Minister of University Affairs to find it in his heart to see this as a means—a more appropriate means—of bringing before this Legislature something of such important public importance.

I would hope that in view of the fact that he is in his seat, he might find it possible to at least engage in this dialogue and indicate what his views are on this matter.

Mr. Chairman: I must respectfully point out again that the remarks are not relevant to section 1 of this specific bill and they are out of order. However, we have permitted certain comments and in this particular case if the hon. Minister wishes to comment he may do so. Otherwise, I put section 1 of the bill to the committee.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the members opposite would be so deeply disappointed if I did not make some observation on this issue, and I shall accept your very kind extension of the rules, which will permit, perhaps, one or two observations that probably are out of order.

The first point, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that I think should be made, relative to the two bills that we will be considering this afternoon, lies basically in the historical position of the universities of this province. While I appreciate the observations made by the member for Riverdale, and the statement today that the NDP will oppose the universities coming forward in the existing fashion in the future, I think one also must observe, Mr. Chairman, that there is some rationale for the universities themselves developing an appropriate approach to their own government.

While I recognize that the member for Peterborough feels this can be done through presentation by a Minister of the Crown to this House, of the ideas or attitudes developed by a single institution out of 14 or 15, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that before such a policy decision is made, one must reflect very carefully as to whether or not the logical conclusion of this, or the inevitable conclusion, would be the imposition by the government upon the universities of an appropriate governing situation.

Mr. Lewis: You might do that, but others would not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I realize that the hon. member for Scarborough West would never contemplate doing such a thing, although he has suggested this in other situations, but I know now, on reflection, that he would not. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, we would have to be very careful and give this matter really very appropriate consideration. I must also point out that I, personally, have no objection if these bills, under the rules of the House, could be referred to the committee on education and university affairs rather than to the private bills committee.

This I have no objection to, Mr. Chairman, but on checking the rules and the precedents of the House, I believe that it is not possible to do this under the existing rules. In fact, I checked—after the observations made by the member for Windsor West, and I understand his point of view—to see whether it would be possible to have the committee on education and university affairs consider these, rather than the private bills committee, but the rules of this House do not permit this, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it. All I can say is that, personally, I would have no objection whatsoever to this being done.

I should also point out, although I do not pretend to be completely knowledgeable on the subject, that speaking generally to the point raised by the member for Riverdale, as to the desirability of entrenching in legislation certain of these situations, surely we are at a point in the development of university government where we must have, I think, an increasing degree of flexibility.

Surely having general principles that are laid down with the ability, by bylaw, to move into and meet situations as they may develop from, say, month to month or year by year, makes very good sense. And surely, Mr. Chairman, the whole intent or the desire by the university community to make these changes, to have them emanate from the student body, the faculty and the university itself, is far better than having this imposed on them by this Legislature, certainly at this point in history.

I think the whole spirit of the Carleton bill, what is happening at that particular university at the moment, should be very encouraging to the members of this Legislature. If this is the case, surely it is the spirit of what is happening that is as relevant as what we lay down in statute itself. I think I could speak on this, Mr. Chairman, at some length—although I do not intend to—because it is important. I think it is really the desire on the part of the participants to make this thing work, that could be as relevant as the actual statutory requirements that we may or may not lay down.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, would the Minister permit a question?

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the Minister, as he has just suggested, could speak for hours on this topic, but with respect, we are out of order. We are dealing with section 1 of Bill Pr25. I think another occasion may arise.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on the clause of the bill, which was my opening comment.

Mr. Chairman: As long as the hon. member does not become repetitious, in connection with the remarks he made earlier.

Mr. J. Renwick: No, I do not intend to become repetitious. The Minister, in the course of his remarks, said that it was the spirit rather than the substance that was important in a clause such as this. I simply point out—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did not say the spirit of the clause, I said the spirit in the university and the desire to make it work.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right. The spirit—

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is a distinction.

Mr. J. Renwick: There may well be a distinction. The spirit that the Minister is talking about is reflected in language which has come before us, which has not established the principle of student representation, nor has it in any way, shape or form, affected the substance of the fact that the power at Carleton University is to remain totally vested in the board of governors. This is what we have to get at, that the board of governors at that university has total power.

Regardless of what the Minister may think of the spirit, the only place from which this legislation emanated was from the board of governors. They are the only ones who could bring it forward. They may have had to have other persons' agreement but they had the power to make the representation. They have done it on the most minimal basis in a situation which is fraught with great concern in the province about the relationship of the students and the faculties and others in the government of universities. I simply reiterate that we have before us a bill which, in this clause, provides a permissive representation of students upon the faculty boards, in an institution where the board of governors not only has total authority within the university, but has total authority, by bylaw, to determine who are the members of the university. In theory, the board of governors could exclude students in attendance at Carleton University from being members of that university.

It is that kind of traditional framework of university government that we are so much concerned about. We recognize the arguments that the Minister has made. We assume that he recognizes the validity of the position that we are taking. I simply say that this clause 1 of the bill will remain—despite the Minister's remarks, and with the explanation accurately given by the member who has sponsored the bill—simply a permissive section, which, by bylaw, in the circumstances, the board of governors or the senate or the board of governors overriding the senate, could eliminate just like that.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, rising on the same issue, but not repeating myself, I would like to solicit information on one point, and comment on another. I would hope the Minister of University Affairs might answer this rather than the private member who introduced it.

Does this section about the faculty board, listing the teaching staff who are eligible for that board, include members of the teaching staff of the appropriate rank who are part-time appointments to the institution? For example, as the Minister well knows, Mr. Chairman, there are quite a few people with ranks of assistant professors, teaching on a part-time basis, or on a part-time leave of absence basis, at these universities. My specific question is whether or not these people would be eligible, under this proposed change in The Carleton University Act, to be on the faculty boards. Perhaps I could ask that question first and then more on to my comment.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: This is a question of interpretation, Mr. Chairman, and I do not know whether I am any more qualified to answer than any other member of the House. I would think that the interpretation of the section would include anyone who was on the staff so far as basic qualification was concerned, and in the same way, any student, whether he be fulltime or otherwise.

So far as I recall, a question similar to this was asked at the private bills committee, and if I recall correctly I think President Duncan assured the committee at that time that this section was interpreted broadly. In other words, that both faculty and students were considered in their broad sense and not as being permanent, or having tenure, or being fulltime students.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would welcome that interpretation and hope that it is in fact the interpretation that becomes law, because I think too many of the part-time teaching staff of our universities, too many of the part-time students at our universities, have been excluded from their participation in the decisions that affect their learning at those institutions.

The comment I would like to make on this point is this: My interpretation of the section, assuming all the worst possible things about human behaviour and members on boards of governors, is that it would enable the board of governors of Carleton University—assuming that they make the bylaws—to play the faculty and students off against one another. I would not attribute any intent to the president, who presented this bill, or to the hon. member for Carleton East who spoke on this bill with him in private bills committee, but I would say, looking at this section in a logical way, that it enables the board of governors to play students off against the faculty.

Let me put it this way, Mr. Chairman: I am very much convinced now, much more than I have been over the past five years, during which I have been associated with the university, that although there is a real issue concerning the board of governors, the faculty and students, the issue that is coming to the fore now in our universities, an issue that is going to create the tension—and hopefully it will remain “creative” tension, and will not go on from there into antagonisms with the threat of violence—is that of the relationship between the teaching staff and the students.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, thank heavens the member recognized it.

Mr. T. Reid: If I could reply, I would like that remark in Hansard. The Minister of University Affairs said, “Thank heavens you have recognized that”. I would say to him, Mr. Chairman, through you, sir, that if this government had acted—and I think it will be forced to act before 1971—to eliminate the anachronisms of boards of governors and senates, to eliminate that aspect of friction, of tension, and of violence, and unless this government moves to eliminate that source of tension, the tension between the teaching staff and the students will become much worse.

I would say, Mr. Chairman that this section assumes the domination. In fact, it is a legal domination as various members on this side of the House have pointed out; the legal domination of a learning institution by a board of governors not just the financial domination, it is a domination over the learning, the domination of who teaches there, who goes there.

With the perpetuation of that type of domination, the board of governors can, in the state of crisis which is building up because the Minister is cutting back on the funds to universities, make the strife in the relationship between teachers and students that much more difficult. So I can see, sir, speaking very realistically that this section will enable the boards of governors to increase the number of students on these faculty boards, or to decrease the number of students on these faculty boards as they see fit, and to play off the teachers against the students in such a way that will be detrimental to the institutions of higher learning in this province.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I think what this demonstrates about this clause is to reinforce the absurdity of the procedure which the Minister has chosen to follow. We have the member for Scarborough East using his creative facilities, in whatever way he wishes to exercise them, to speculate about the possible outcome of this kind of clause. You have the sponsor of the bill in the House saying, "He would think" that it may be subject to this interpretation or that interpretation. You have a bylaw referred to in the clause for which there is no interpretation.

The point is, Mr. Chairman, that you cannot allow your governance of universities to run amuck in this fashion when the Minister of University Affairs could bring in such a clause as a public bill without in any way violating the individuality of the university that sponsored it, as he did with York, as he did with Guelph, as he did with Carleton, as he did with at least half of the universities that are now public bills.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did not bring—

Mr. Lewis: The Minister's predecessor then. It is an absolutely absurd anomaly that all of us should spend our time this afternoon speculating in the House about the possible intent of a given section of a bill. The member himself who sponsored it can only speculate, when in fact it would become a matter of public record with a Ministerial interpretation, without in any way infringing on the university's individual expression of their own governments.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, one short comment on section 2. Of the Minister or of his colleague: What is the rationale for one-half the total number of persons on the senate to be elected by the faculty boards of the universities—to become members of the faculty boards? Why is it not three-quarters, why is it not one-quarter?

This is a very relevant question, Mr. Chairman, because the rationale of the two-tier system, as the Minister knows, is that the board is supposed to be responsible for the financial affairs, the legal affairs of the corporation—which is the university—and the senate should be responsible for the academic affairs. The basic academic body in Carleton University is the faculty board, a series of faculty boards.

And yet by legislation, with the approval of this government because it has a majority in this House, it is saying: "Well, the teachers and the students really will not have a majority vote on the senate, just one half. The rest will be administrators, the rest will be people who got into teaching to get out of teaching."

Why is it not three-quarters? Why are not these people who are involved in the learning process, the teachers and the students, the majority number on this body concerned with the education and learning process at Carleton University?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I think the member is gravely misinterpreting the section and the existing Carleton bill. I do not think there is any question but that the total senate is an academic body. I do not believe there are any administrators or persons outside the academic community on the senate.

I think he can confirm, if he will get the 1957 and 1952 forms of the University of Carleton bill, the half of the senate that is not mentioned in this paragraph 2 of the current bill is there by appointment; namely, the de facto appointments as deans or assistant deans or whatever their offices may be.

I think if the member would get the original bill, he would find out that mathematically this other half is already appointed directly from the academic community on a faculty basis.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I think the point I raised is relevant, particularly in the light of the hon. member's reply, because what he has said confirms my worst reservations about this section. I like deans, some of my best friends are deans and assistant deans. But while they might try to teach a little bit to keep their hand in, with the turmoil being created by the Minister of Education in universities they have not got time to teach.

The point is simply this, that teachers, full-time teachers, people who do nothing in universities but try to teach, who are involved in the learning process, and students, are the ones who know what learning is all about.

Why pack a senate with administrators, people who have gone into teaching and then whether or not their motive is this or not, have left teaching for higher salaries, in many cases for administrative work or for some perverted sense of greater prestige in the university. Why make the senate an administrative power block?

Why not make it an academic centre, a learning centre? Why increase the power of the administrators who are appointed by the president and the board over the power of the learning process? It makes a farce of the two-tier philosophy when we have this type of section coming in on a private member's bill.

This confirms my view that you cannot have a dichotomy of government within a university because what it really means is exactly what this section means, that the university is run by the board of governors and administrators who are appointed by the board of governors and not by those who are involved directly in the learning process, the teachers and the students.

I think that is an atrocious statement, an atrocious clause, to have in a university Act in this day and age. In 1956 that would have been nice, but today it is a farce.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to interject at this point. I must express disagreement with the member for Scarborough East on this particular area, because I do think, as I remember from the private members' committee, that half of this senate were people who were actively engaged in the university.

I realize that this may be different in different universities, but I know that in the university which I happen to be associated with, those who are involved in the administration as it exists in this particular type of a setting, are involved in teaching and are involved in the educational process.

I would also like to indicate too, that I find it hard to understand how you can have a single tier if you are going to have no representations from the community in this particular situation.

I see two problems here. First, the fact that the community is not going to be effectively represented, and in the second theory there is the suggestion that every university should have the same form of government.

These problems really do bother me. It bothers me very greatly, this whole question of dealing with this in the way we are doing this afternoon; in a very ad hoc basis. I come back again to the comments of the Minister a few moments ago, and I think they are relevant to this section, Mr. Chairman. I do not think that placing it in a public bill, bringing it forward in a public bill through the universities' activity would, in any way, be imposing the power of The Department of University Affairs upon the individual universities. I sensed a degree of openness about this in the Minister's comments when he said that this is a policy decision that really has to be taken. It is something that must be thought about. The implications must be considered.

But surely in a province where each university comes before the committee on university affairs and opens out its entire affairs before that committee, a committee which is surely fairly close to the Minister, it advises the Minister, in a sense it has an even close relationship, it would seem to me that in all candour and honesty it is time that we cleaned up this whole thing and made the debate on university government in this House meaningful and relevant.

Sections 2 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill Pr25 reported.

McMASTER UNIVERSITY

House in committee on Bill Pr32, An Act respecting McMaster University.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on section 2 we notice that the board shall be composed as follows. The chancellor, the president, the vice-chairman of the senate—and then another clause, skipping subsection (b)—one member from the divinity college, four members from the alumni association and six members from the elected faculty members of the senate and 18 members to be elected for terms of four years by the board.

Now, can the member or the Minister explain to me the rationale for that kind of subdivision of the board's authority?

An hon. member: It is called board packing.

Mr. Lewis: On what basis is that introduced: 18 members appointed, elected for terms of four years by the board—which means appointed by the board?

Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton West): Mr. Chairman, if I may speak to this bill: When I was asked to introduce this bill I asked Dr. Thode, the president if he would appear at the committee and he did. He read a comprehensive report and my understanding at the committee was that this recommendation of McMaster was loudly applauded and he was commended for having made this step. I am a little surprised to hear the member for Peterborough say that he has any objection to this. If I understand—Scarborough East or Scarborough West—I am sorry but you did at the committee, commend Dr. Thode on introducing this type of bill.

Mr. Pitman: On extending to student representation.

Mrs. Pritchard: Yes, it was accepted by the committee and received second reading and I think that the whole intent of the bill was to increase the student representation, and perhaps—

Mr. Pitman: That was the aspect I commended.

Mrs. Pritchard: Perhaps the member for Scarborough West can tell me what it is he exactly wishes to know.

Mr. Lewis: I thought that I had made it fairly clear, Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Peterborough applauded the university governor for extending some small smattering of power to students. It was, for McMaster, a considerable intellectual wrench, worthy of applause. But I wonder why in section 2, 18 members, the dominant portion of the board, are to be elected for terms of four years by the board. What is the rationale behind that?

Mrs. Pritchard: Dr. Thode's report, Mr. Chairman, he said that on the new senate the faculty will hold 50 per cent of the seats and the students will have significant representations—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I am asking about the board in section 2, not the senate. I appreciate the senatorial division.

Mrs. Pritchard: Well, possibly it is a continuity of terms.

Mr. Lewis: Could it possibly be that McMaster wants to perpetuate the corporate elite in that university? Could that be it?

Mrs. Pritchard: No, I think that McMaster was making a serious attempt to do the very thing that you have been prating about ever since I have been in this House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am asking a question. Could it be a wish to perpetuate the corporate elite at McMaster University? The member for Carleton East shakes his head in disdain, but I think it is a—

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: They all—

Mr. Lewis: All right, Mr. Chairman, all right. The board of governors of McMaster University, right on this clause Mr. Chairman—now let us trot it out on the floor. D'Arcy Martin, who is the chancellor in the most recent past: His credentials for chancellor of the university were as chairman of Ferro Enamels (Canada) Limited; secretary and director of Gerard Company Limited; director of Ash Temple Limited, National Trust Limited, Royal Oak Dairy Limited, Industrial Corporation Limited, Steetly of Canada Limited, Butler Metal Products of Canada Limited.

H. G. Thode, the president and vice-chancellor—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): This would qualify the capitalistic members from Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown) and High Park (Mr. Shulman) as governors.

Mr. Lewis: No, this is directly on the clause, Mr. Chairman: H. G. Thode president and vice-chancellor. He is—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I do not think the qualifications of the present members of the board of the University of McMaster really relate to whether there should be or should not be 18 members appointed by the board.

Mr. Lewis: I am offering the contention, Mr. Chairman, that the reason for the appointment of the 18 members is to perpetuate the corporate elite at McMaster University. In order to give substance to that suggestion, the members of the board—it will not take me more than a couple of minutes, the Minister perhaps could hear it too, because it is directly on the clause; I am not impugning their backgrounds, I just want the House to know the nature of the governance, let me just run through them.

H. G. Thode; director of Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation, trustee of Western New York Nuclear Research Centre, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

St. Clair Balfour, Jr.; president and managing director of Southam Press Limited; chairman Southam Business Publications Limited; vice-president and director of Niagara Television Limited, Murray Holdings Limited, London Free Press Printing Company, Selkirk Holding Limited, Sun Publishing Company Limited, B. C. Journal of Commerce Limited, Greater Winnipeg Cablevision.

G. H. Blumenauer; chairman and president of Otis Elevator Limited, Dominion Foundries and Steel Limited, Mutual Life Assurance Company Limited.

C. C. Brannan; president, International Harvester Company Canada Limited; director, International Harvester Credit Corporation Canada Limited.

R. R. Craig; executive vice-president of Dominion Steel and Foundries Limited, National Steel Car Corporation.

C. P. Fell; honorary chairman and director of Empire Life Insurance Company, Royal Trust Company, Canadian Surety Company.

D. M. Firestone; president of Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, Firestone Textiles Limited.

D. K. Frid; president of Frid Construction Company Limited.

J. W. Kerr; president and chief executive officer Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, Banner Petroleum Limited, Great Lakes Gas Transmission Company, the Manufacturers Life Insurance.

I am reaching the end, Mr. Chairman.

W. P. Pigott; Pigott Construction Company, Crump Mechanical Contraction Limited, Royal Oak Dairy Limited (Royal Oak is an interesting inter-locking feature), Canadian Westinghouse Company Limited.

V. W. Scully; The Steel Company of Canada; chairman, director of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, British American Oil Company of Canada, Bank of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have made your point.

Mr. Lewis: All right, when I—the Chairman is weary.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman is not weary. The Chairman is trying to find out whether or not this is in order and—

Mr. Lewis: I assume by your indulgence, sir, that it is in order.

Now, one could read off the other numbers amongst the 18. I would be loath to prostrate myself before these titans of industry. I am not sure that they merit that. I cast no aspersions on the elevation to which they have aspired. I just ask, Mr. Chairman, I ask in terms of this clause of the bill, what kind of university community it is we are creating when all the substantial authority lies in the hands of the corporate elite—and this is the corporate elite in no uncertain terms.

I rattled off but a third to a half of the various ventures involved and the various personalities involved; if one is seriously talking about a community of learning rather than a self-perpetuating oligarchy, then one has to contemplate shifting entirely the make-up of the board of governors.

We have to live with this individual clause, but I wonder whether it would not be possible even within these constraints, to allow for some democratization of the board of governors. Are there no other representative elements in the community? Are there no representative groups from consumers, or labour, or farmers, or any other group in the community beyond the appropriate credentials of the corporate elite?

What kind of university are you allowing to perpetuate itself by putting all this authority, and inevitably the final authority, in the hands of a self-impressed respecting corporate group; inevitably self-perpetuating? That is what I read into this "18 members to be elected for terms of four years by the board".

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what conceivable rationale can be contrived to justify it. If one does not want an antidemocratic board of a university, then one at least extends the scope of its participants to other areas of the community to make it even marginally representative. What you have had in McMaster University, and what we are in danger of repeating, is a corporate board running an essentially authoritarian regime with very little possibility of the kind of social change within a community of learning which all these other community facets would introduce.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, that is a legitimate question to ask.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, could I speak to this section or would the—

Mr. Chairman: We are dealing with section 2. If the hon. member has comments pertaining to section 2, he may proceed.

Mr. T. Reid: It has to do with section 11, part (e) on page 2, which reads:

Six members to be elected for terms of three years by the elected faculty members of the senate from among the faculty members except—

I fail to understand why the principle of exclusion of certain members of the senate, as we shall see, is being practised in this subsection (e). As the Chairman will note later on, the senate contains six students of the university, and yet this section here excludes them from participation, from the board, or even the change of participating in the board.

Surely the mentality of the people who brought forward this bill to the Ontario Legislature is a very suspicious mentality. Why should they, in a sense, say to the members of the senate that "we do not trust your judgment on electing from your own number the best people to be representatives on the board of governors".

Surely if the board of governors and the people who were responsible for bringing this bill to this Legislature had confidence in their own recommendations concerning the composition of the senate and the people who will be on the senate, surely, Mr. Chairman, they should allow that group of people, whom they surely must deem to be competent, to select from among their own numbers the best people to sit on the board of governors.

One or two, or even six of the best people in the senate might just happen to be people called students. My question then, Mr. Chairman, is why is this principle of exclusion contained in this section when some of the best people might be excluded from being elected to the board by members of the senate?

Mr. Lewis: Well, who answers the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not really sure the hon. member was asking a question per se. As I recall the procedures, this bill went to the private bills committee. I am not sure that the member for Scarborough West—I had better not get him in the wrong part of Scarborough, it would upset the other member from Scarborough East—was a member of the committee. But I understand he was there, and it was suggested that he might discuss some of these matters with the president of the university at the conclusion of a private bills committee.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, these specific questions as they relate to the individual sections contained in this bill, were the matters that should have been discussed, and discussed at some length, at the private bills committee. To come here in this Legislature and to ask questions of the private member who introduced the bill that obviously must relate to the opinions or the decisions made by the university itself when it prepared this bill for presentation to the House—

Mr. Peacock: That makes the rest of the process meaningless.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —makes it very difficult indeed. If the hon. member wishes me to make any personal observations I would say that this bill reflects the consideration and the study given by the University of McMaster as to the reorganization of its structure.

I think I have said in this Legislature before, and I will repeat it here again, and I think the bill that hopefully we will get to some time this afternoon related to the Ontario College of Art reflects this, as will amendments to the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute bill, that neither I nor the government, have any objections per se to students on governing bodies.

What the University of McMaster is suggesting, and what other institutions have also suggested, is that perhaps the most logical place for student participation in the decision-making process is in some other way than on the board of governors itself.

I think this view is shared by a number of students themselves. To come here, Mr. Chairman, and to have the member for Scarborough East ask the private member who introduced the bill the rationale for matters that were surely discussed by the members in the private bills committee—and I would assume there must be some members from the Liberal Party who were present, and who, I am sure, perhaps discuss these matters with the, shall we say, university critic—ignores the fact that these questions could have been raised by a member from that party in the private bills committee. I am sure this opportunity was there, and surely that was the occasion on which to raise them.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the Minister suggesting that when we get to discussion in committee in the House here that we should skip the whole thing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I am not suggesting that, Mr. Chairman. I am saying with respect to this particular question that to ask the private member who sponsored the bill a specific question of this nature really does not make a great deal of sense.

Mr. Lewis: Who else do we ask?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the hon. member would agree with this.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister is trying to get himself off the hook and this is what we have been trying to draw his attention to for some time. The private member who is introducing it is really only a catalyst, or a vehicle, or an agent, for bringing the bill. It is neither fair nor is it effective to ask a private member to deal with the intimate details of the bill.

Some of them we will get in the committee. But we do not get an opportunity to discuss it in terms of its broad public implications. That is why it should be a public bill introduced by this Minister, and I refuse to hear this Minister say once again that that means you are going to stamp a common mould on it. It is nonsense.

This Minister brought in the bill that established York University, and York University had an amendment two or three years ago. I was lobbied by the board of governors and by the president of York University to assist in the amendments that were going to be made by the government to the public bill. This can be done across the board and we are dealing in a meaningful way with it rather than this anachronistic way up until now.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like some further information on this because there is a parallel somewhat to the position we find ourselves in now. Other private bills are inspected by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) which are in a different area of responsibility. He is either at the committee himself, or his representative is there, in order to give an official opinion on these matters.

Now, if the government is going to continue dealing with bills having to do with post-secondary education in the private bills committee, then surely we can extend the same right to the Minister, who undoubtedly examined this bill already. If he was not at the committee he should have been; either that or have had someone from The University Affairs Department prepared to give a professional and policy opinion as far as the provisions of the statute are concerned.

In the same way, when certain private bills come before the House in committee of the whole, the Minister of Municipal Affairs is usually prepared to get up and defend the government's position which is usually in support of the bills that are called.

Occasionally his views are overridden in the private bills committee and we rarely see those bills here again. As a matter of fact, there are one or two private bills having to do with his responsibility that have not been brought forward.

Now, I agree with everything that has been said. We should be dealing with these university bills in another way, but since we are trapped by the present rules of the House, there is a good and, I think, a responsible rationale. You would simply conduct yourself the way the Minister of Municipal Affairs does and, in fact, take the responsibility away from the private member who introduced it in order to give the opinion of the government and to answer questions of the type that have been so well put this afternoon.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a danger of misinterpretation or misunderstanding here. I think I can categorically say there has been no bill involving the universities, or private bills involving universities that has come before the private bills committee than has not had either the presence of the Minister, a member of the department or a formal note from the department agreeing with the policy comprised in the bill that had gone forward.

Mr. Nixon: Right. I think the hon. member makes an excellent point. That means that passively it is supported by the government and is a part of their general policy. The hon. Minister should be prepared to answer questions that are put to him under these particular circumstances and, in fact, defend the thing, instead of sitting there and letting the hon. member at the other end of the row get up and say that the president of the university was here once and could have answered these questions if they had been put.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, is the answer to the member for Scarborough East then that because McMaster is a community of learning, the board may exclude students?

That is acceptable to the Minister, is it? That is precisely what he is saying. These 18 men with exclusively corporate backgrounds, exclude students from the board and that is acceptable to the Minister's concept of a community of learning, is it? Is that what the Minister is saying to the House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member knows very well this is not what the Minister is saying to the House. What I am saying to the House—and this has been the policy followed by the government and I hope not to have to repeat it several more times this afternoon—and I think it is relevant, is that we are anxious for the universities themselves to work these things out. It does not matter, I am sure, in the minds of the members opposite, really, who presents the bill. I would say with respect, Mr. Chairman, that if we had accepted the position, shall we say, taken by McMaster or Carleton relevant to their own individual reorganization, obviously some of this discussion would have gone on in any event whether I introduced the bill or whether it had been introduced by a private member.

For some members opposite to suggest that a lot of this discussion would then go by the wayside, I think really it is wishful thinking. The position that we have taken, Mr. Chairman, is very simply—

Mr. Nixon: No one suggested that!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, just to repeat it once again.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes; our policy is very simply this, that we look to and anticipate that the universities themselves will reorganize their administrative structures in a way that is in keeping with the situation as it exists in the year 1969 and beyond, and that the bill presented by Carleton University, the bill now being considered with respect to McMaster, represents the discussion, the decisions, the reports and, shall we say, the position that they have taken as a university, which then finds its way into this particular legislation. That is the policy, Mr. Chairman, that has been adopted.

Mr. Lewis: Well, Mr. Chairman, does the Minister think it is in concert with the spirit of 1969 to exclude students from a board of governors? Is that what he is saying to the House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I am saying, and I am saying this personally, and I do not really want to go through this whole debate again, that I personally have taken the position—and I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) has—that we have no objection to students being on boards of governors. What we are saying is that the universities themselves surely are the ones who should determine the best way for student participation, and there are a number of universities who—

Mr. Lewis: What do these corporate people have?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Scarborough West—

Mr. Lewis: All right!

Hon. Mr. Davis: —has asked certain questions. I could also say that in my opinion a board of governors today should reflect in its membership a very broad spectrum of our society today. I have no reservations in making this statement, none whatsoever.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is being on both sides.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of University Affairs indicates implicitly that he does not much like the idea of excluding students. He will accept the fiat of the university, but he does not much like it. He then goes on to say that he thinks the university fiat should be delivered by a group of men who are broadly representative of the community, but the group of men who deliver it are all corporately oriented.

Now, where is the consistency in the Minister's policy, Mr. Chairman? He has no policy whatsoever. He is prepared to see the emasculation of a community of learning for the sake of some almost anti-intellectual idea of keeping hands off.

The government will not, in any sense, alter the dictate of the university, however perverse or destructive that dictate may be. I just do not follow the Minister's view, Mr. Chairman.

I would ask him when he has a university board of governors before him so obviously unrepresentative as that at the University of McMaster, what does he think about the conclusions to which they may have arrived? Does he think his department might give them some scrutiny? Has he any anxiety about the kind of conclusions which they presented to him? I am interested in knowing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I think I can say this objectively, that the bill presented here by McMaster University, after two and a half years of very careful study in which students were involved, represents a very significant step forward in the administration of that university. I think for the member for Scarborough West to predetermine all members of the board in their attitudes, really is, perhaps, being somewhat on the negative side.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to repeat it again, that my own personal point of view is that a board of governors, if this is to be the administrative structure adopted by a university, should be broadly representative of the total community.

Mr. Lewis: Why is it not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who says it will not be?

Mr. Lewis: All the experience says it will not be.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, one brief comment on this principle of exclusion of students from the board of governors which is incorporated by law in this proposed Act. The Minister said that the people involved in those universities must work out themselves any changes in their existing Act that they would like to have.

In some universities where there are open lines of communication, where there is not such a clamp by a single group within the university on the entire power of that university, then it would be possible for a collective decision to be made and to have Acts proposed by the institution.

But what I would like to say to the Minister, Mr. Chairman, is simply this, that history over the last ten years in North America has proven that there are universities that cannot do this in a democratic collective manner. There are universities in Ontario which cannot come to terms within themselves on the changes to be made in their internal government.

I will just say to the Minister that this is an evaluation on my part, and the evaluation of many other people, and unless he acts, unless he realizes that there are universities where there is a stranglehold, unless he realizes this to be so, the only way change is going to come about, generated from within a university, is by the threat of violence on the part of some students.

I say that should not happen. He has the power to prevent that from happening, and I say, sir, that he is not living up to his responsibilities as the Minister of University Affairs in this province in this regard.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Could I ask two questions? Would it be appropriate to ask the chairman of the private bills committee—perhaps he might answer them, I should like to know—first, were there any students at the meeting asking to be represented on the board at McMaster? And second, is there anything to suggest that of the 18 members to be elected that some of them will not be students?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: There were no students at that particular meeting as far as I recall, but there was a statement made by the president that might be pertinent to this, if I might yield the floor to the member on my left.

Mrs. Pritchard: Mr. Chairman, if I may quote from Dr. Thode's report:

Let me add that at our open meeting with students last November, the undergraduate students stated that they did not wish to have representation on the board of governors at this time. This was confirmed by a motion passed in the student representative assembly in November, 1968.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 2 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Lewis: Just before it is carried, I would like to ask the Minister of University Affairs, can he give the House assurance that the 18 members will, in fact, on this occasion reflect the broad interests of the community to which he refers? Has he had that undertaking from the university?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed that with the university. I can only say I am expressing, I think for the fourth time this afternoon, my personal point of view in these matters, and that is, that a board of governors should be as broadly representative as possible of the total society today.

Mr. Sopha: Well, what do you mean by broadly representative?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In other words, that there should be various parts of our society, if I can define it better this way, representative on the boards of governors.

Mr. Sopha: Including students?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, I have no objection to students, I have made this clear.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, just a very short remark on this. The Minister has said on two or three occasions that it is his personal feeling that the board of governors should express the sense of the community. But surely, it is more than his personal feeling. He is the Minister of University Affairs of the province of Ontario. Has he not the responsibility to set the guidelines?

I am not suggesting that the Minister should decide on a particular form of government for every university in Ontario. I am simply suggesting that there should be guidelines that are more than simply the Minister's personal feelings. And this is very strange, Mr. Chairman, that this is the first time that we have had an opportunity to hear what the Minister's personal feelings are on this matter.

Mr. Sopha: That is not your problem. That is not to say—

Mr. Pitman: On a private member's bill about the role of the student in the university, surely some guideline is needed as to what is the role of the board of governors and how it should represent the community. These surely are the things which can best allow the universities to find their way. They are looking for guidance. Is not this within the Minister's purview, that he should at least set these kind of guidelines that are more than his personal feelings. They are rather an indication in the province of Ontario, a recognition, of how university government must comment in the 1960s and 1970s.

Mr. Sopha: Interesting division between them, is there not?

Mr. MacDonald: There is no division.

Mr. Chairman: Section 2.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Identical!

Mr. Sopha: That is why you call him ferocious.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. T. Reid: Surely not the member for Hamilton West?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to ask the member for Hamilton West, Mr. Chairman, whether right now there are any members of her sex on the board of governors at this university, and if not, why not?

Mrs. Pritchard: Any members of where?

Mr. T. Reid: Are there any lady members of the board of governors at McMaster University at the present time? If not, why not?

Mrs. Pritchard: I am sorry I cannot answer that question, I do not know.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on section 4, just a question. It says in section 2(g), if I have this right, that the board has the power to make recommendations to the senate as to educational policies. I thought that the rationale of the two-tier system was that the board was concerned with things financial, and the senate was concerned with things academic, and the twain should not meet. If that is a valid theory of university government, why, then, should the board be given this very confusing power to make recommendations to the senate as to educational policy?

Mr. Chairman: Is there an answer to the question?

Shall section 4 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. MacDonald: No, we asked a question.

Mr. Nixon: Surely the Minister can give some views on that matter. Perhaps if he just said—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the question is really self-answered. If the hon. member for Scarborough East would, in fact, specify that section of section 4 that he thinks really makes this a part of the Act, then I shall try to answer it specifically for him.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I understood that in my previous remarks I identified the section as under what is now labelled section 4, subsection 2(g) at the very bottom of page three—"To make recommendations to the senate as to the educational policy". I understood, from reading the Minister's speeches very carefully, which he sends me all the time, that in his view university government could be either single-tier or two-tier, that either system has its rationale; and that the rationale of the two-tier system was that the board, in its wisdom, since they were of the corporate elite, knew about things financial and how to build buildings, and that was their job. The senate's job was to be concerned with things academic, the learning process within those buildings. Why, if he had that rationale of the two-tier system, is he now, by implication, in favour of, or at least condoning, a system that confuses all this?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, surely the rationale for all of this is a greater communication between the board, if there is to be a two-tier structure, and the senate, if the senate represents, shall we say, the educational or the academic part. Surely there is nothing to prevent the board making recommendations to the senate and vice versa. The senate does not have to adopt the recommendations. Surely this is an avenue for communication that makes some sense. I cannot understand the hon. member's objection to it.

Mr. T. Reid: I simply say, Mr. Chairman, and it is probably a logical objection, that if the Minister believes in greater communication within the university community ipso facto, if that is the right Latin, all universities ought to have a one-tier system.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Chairman, on section 6, it says in clause 8, on page 5, that the president shall be chairman of the senate, and then something else.

The point I am interested in is this, that some universities specify, as this Act does, that the president shall be chairman of the senate. Other universities, and I believe that York is one of them, state that the senate chooses its own chairman. I was wondering if there was any philosophy behind this, because the implication of legislating that the president shall be chairman, is again to say to the full-time academics, the full-time teaching staff, somehow ought not, in their wisdom, to choose someone who is not the president to be their chairman.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I just have to make this observation. I do not think that this is really a very basic philosophical issue, surely, that the president is named as chairman of the senate. It varies from one university to another, as the hon. member is fully aware. I really do not think it is that relevant as to whether he is or he is not. This was, once again, the decision made by those—including the academics, the faculty association—at McMaster University who made this determination. They think this is the best way to make it work.

Sections 6 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill Pr32 reported.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report certain bills without amendment and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House reports certain bills without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill Pr25, An Act respecting Carleton University.

Bill Pr32, An Act respecting McMaster University.

Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the city of London.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I will call upon His Honour and ask if he would come into this Chamber and give Royal assent to certain bills.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario entered the Chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed several bills to which, in the name and on behalf of said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 1, An Act to amend The Evidence Act.

Bill 69, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Bill 70, An Act respecting The Department of Justice.

Bill 71, An Act to amend The Fines and Forfeitures Act.

Bill 78, An Act to amend The Tobacco Tax Act, 1965.

Bill 79, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Bill 80, An Act to repeal The Hospitals Tax Act.

Bill Pr2, An Act respecting Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the city of London.

Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the town of Burlington.

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting the city of Niagara Falls.

Bill Pr7, An Act respecting Bobier convalescent home.

Bill Pr8, An Act respecting the town of Lindsay.

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting March Diamond Drilling Limited.

Bill Pr10, An Act respecting the town of Parry Sound.

Bill Pr11, An Act respecting the city of Cornwall.

Bill Pr14, An Act respecting the county of Ontario.

Bill Pr15, An Act respecting the town of Mitchell.

Bill Pr17, An Act respecting the county of Peel.

Bill Pr18, An Act respecting the board of education for the city of Windsor.

Bill Pr19, An Act respecting the city of Belleville.

Bill Pr22, An Act respecting the township of Teck.

Bill Pr23, An Act respecting Maimonides Schools for Jewish Studies.

Bill Pr25, An Act respecting Carleton University.

Bill Pr26, An Act respecting the Tilbury public school board.

Bill Pr27, An Act respecting Co-ordinated Arts Services.

Bill Pr28, An Act respecting the city of Sarnia.

Bill Pr29, An Act respecting the city of Peterborough.

Bill Pr30, An Act respecting Banks Alignment Limited.

Bill Pr32, An Act respecting McMaster University.

Bill Pr34, An Act respecting the town of Mississauga.

To these Acts the Royal assent was announced by the Clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

BOROUGH OF EAST YORK

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton), in the absence of Mr. Meen, moves second reading of Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the borough of East York.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

COUNTY OF WELLAND

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland) moves second reading of Bill Pr31, An Act respecting the county of Welland.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF WINDSOR

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville) moves second reading of Bill Pr33, An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

UNIVERSITY OF WINDSOR

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West) moves second reading of Bill Pr35, An Act respecting the University of Windsor.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

PUBLIC FINANCE COMPANIES'
INVESTMENTS ACT, 1966

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves second reading of Bill 84, An Act to repeal The Public Finance Companies' Investments Act, 1966.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CREDIT UNIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves second reading of Bill 85, An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LOAN AND TRUST
CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves second reading of Bill 86, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves second reading of Bill 92 An Act to amend The Insurance Act.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Will that bill be discussed in committee?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES
ACT, 1968

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management) moves second reading of Bill 89, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act, 1968.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, before the House carries this particular bill, I would just like to pass a few comments on it. I do not know whether my thoughts are correct on this, but I seem to view this as another erosion of the powers of small local municipalities.

Having served on the select committee on conservation authorities for a couple of years and taking part in the debates in this House concerning amendments that we passed last year which set out guidelines whereby representation was established on the basis of population, it seems inherent to me that here again, the implication I see in this bill is that if we get into a situation of a two-tier system of regional government the regional government itself will be designating those officials who will participate on the conservation authority, rather than the smaller units of administration within that region designating the people of their own choice.

I think it would be very hard for these people to act on behalf of areas within that regional conservation authority, to really speak for their own section of the region. This is most serious in the apportionment of administration costs, maintenance costs and capital costs.

Certainly, the Act that we passed last year does mean that every member of an authority should be resident in the participating municipality. Well, if the region, in fact, becomes that municipality, a great number of sections in this Act that was passed last year have little or no meaning, in my particular thoughts.

I might ask the hon. Minister for an explanation. Am I off base on this or, in fact, in a two-tier system of regional government would those smaller municipalities still have the right to designate the number of appointees on the conservation authority as laid out in the guideline of, say, one appointee per 10,000 population?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all I doubt if there will be any regional government that would coincide with a conservation area. This matter has been discussed with the chairmen of the conservation authorities and with many of the members of the various conservation authorities, and it was felt that where there were regional governments, that the regional government would appoint the members for the area that they represented. Of course, the water shed might spill over into many more municipalities and that will not be changed.

It was felt that it was about the only way this could be handled, and it seems to meet the approval of all the conservation chairmen. I think we have spoken to about this bill and there have not been any complaints.

Mr. Paterson: Well, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Minister, if the conservation people who were in convention last week have no opposition to this particular bill I am satisfied. But I just felt that it should be drawn to the attention—

Mr. Speaker: Under the rules of the House the member may speak once on a particular bill.

Mr. Paterson: It was for point of clarification I asked the question during my remarks.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): After everybody else has spoken then he can speak again.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO COLLEGE OF ART ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs) moves second reading of Bill 41, The Ontario College of Art Act, 1968-1969.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on the question of principle on Bill 41, I would like to make the members of the Legislature aware of the basis on which many of my remarks are made.

Last January 3 I sent a letter to about 30 people associated with the Ontario College of Art asking them for their views on the proposed Act, and in my letter I said this:

At this time it is important that carefully thought out amendments designed to improve the equity and the practicality of the bill be brought forward.

I am, therefore, writing to you to seek your assistance and co-operation.

This letter is being forwarded to about 30 people associated with the college in governance, administration, in teaching, or as members of the student body.

I concluded my letter by saying—

Let me emphasize that the whole purpose of this approach in seeking your views about this proposed bill is to improve the quality of the bill and to make the Ontario College of Art as good as it can be. Neither I, nor my colleagues in the Liberal Opposition are interested in tearing institutions down. We do, however, want to update the total educational structure where we can so that it fits modern expectations and human goals.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where are the words "Liberal Opposition"? Is that the hon. member's?

Mr. T. Reid: Oh the Minister got a copy. That is in mine.

The result of this letter, Mr. Speaker, was a number of very—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Did the member send one of those letters to the Minister?

Mr. T. Reid: I always keep the Minister very well informed. He sends me copies of his speeches bound up in expensive books and I send him these cheap little letters I send out.

An hon. member: I wonder how come?

Mr. T. Reid: The result of this letter, Mr. Speaker, was a number of very good written replies and a number of requests for luncheon meetings and so forth. So today I have some detailed comments to make on the question of the principles incorporated in the bill.

The first matter I would like to say is that I agree with the principle that this is a public bill. We have discussed that very fully this afternoon. It needs no repetition at this time.

One of the best replies I received in response to my letter was a two-page memorandum from the Students Administrative Council Executive of the Ontario College of Art. This is signed by the president, Allan Close; the vice-president, Dan Wladyka; the treasurer, Susan Curry; the secretary, Irene Kayama; and the student members of the council's advisory committee, Jeff Fear and Salvatore Amenta. Also included on this executive committee was the editor of the student magazine, Cult Magazine, Randall Lawrence, I shall be quoting concerning the principles of the bill from this two-page memorandum which they were kind enough to prepare for me.

The first comment I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the students administrative council executive believes:

We feel that the Act as presently drafted does not reflect the spirit of Dr. Wright's report.

I think this is the theme of my remarks today on the principles of the bill. The principles of the bill, Mr. Speaker, do not reflect the spirit of Dr. Wright's report which on the whole was an excellent report. It certainly was much, much better than the bill the Minister has brought forward for second reading at this time.

The first principle then, or the third item which is really the first principle, is the principle of continuing the Ontario College of Art. The Act, by coming forward in this form, states in one of its sections that, "the Ontario College of Art is continued."

Here is what the students of the college said:

We feel that a companion study of the entire area of education in the arts in conjunction with Dr. Wright's report is necessary.

The improved curricula in the arts at the secondary school level, the rise of the community colleges, and the new fine arts departments at York University and Queens, has made the present role and objectives of the college obsolete, and in many areas, redundant.

The students continue in their letter to me, Mr. Speaker, by saying:

The government assumes the responsibility of determining the object of the college without first determining the validity of that object.

It is our contention that one of the clauses as presently drafted concerning the objects of the college is premature, and as such should be set aside, or amended, until the college is able to resolve its aims—directions and relationship to Ontario's educational structure.

The point here, Mr. Speaker, the first principle, is that the Minister has adopted a very haphazard approach to the Ontario College of Art. He is bringing forth a revised bill without first examining the whole area of art—fine art—education in this province to see what the role, if any, of the Ontario College of Art should be in the years ahead.

For example, there are the new colleges of applied arts and technology—I believe one is Sheridan College. There is a very good curriculum which duplicates, in many respects, the curriculum at the Ontario College of Art.

If this is the case, why should there be such duplication, because as you know, sir, the Ontario College of Art does not grant a degree, it grants a diploma. Sheridan College also grants a diploma. Why then, is this examination of the administration of the Ontario College of Art, was not a companion study done to ensure that the whole place of art education in this province was also looked into.

If, and I say this with respect Mr. Speaker, if the decision as to this hard-headed evaluation of the expenditures of public money in this area of education in this province after high school, if the decision is that the Ontario College of Art should continue as opposed to being disbanded, then I would say that the Ontario College of Art must become an institute of high quality, very, very high quality. It should become, in a sense, like the Royal College of Art in the U.K.—outstanding.

It might become like, I believe it is the Bauhaus in Germany—another outstanding institution for the arts. If it is not to become a first rate institution then I suggest the Minister should seriously consider the continuance of this college in any form at all, if art education is being sufficiently fulfilled at York and Queens and in some of the community colleges.

So I question the principle, Mr. Speaker, of continuing the Ontario College of Art because the Minister has not done a companion study of the whole area of art in this sense, this type of art education in the province, and indeed, its relationship to the whole of Canada.

It is another reflection, another example, of a lack of an overall view of post-secondary education in this province, and I think the Minister should at some point learn from his mistakes.

The second principle I would like to turn to, sir, is the principle that the academic staff and students do not have a majority of the people on the single council of the Ontario College of Art.

At the present time the details of the Act embody the principle that the single body should not have a majority of its members from the academic staff from the student body. Right now, I believe there are six academic staff members proposed, three students proposed, the president, plus another nine people who are not students or teachers or the president.

To bring to the Minister's attention, Mr. Speaker, some of the other opinions concerning the nature of this council, I would like to let him have the benefit of a letter I received in response to my request from Professor Stephen H. E. Clarkson, of the department of political economy at the University of Toronto.

Professor Clarkson's letter to me is dated January 13, 1969, and he says this about this principle in the Act.

I do not know why any members of the council should be appointed by the government, unless it is assumed that the government has a superior capacity to judge policy problems in and out of the school.

If it is an absolute political necessity, as opposed to an academic one, I think that three members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council would suffice. This would give the academic representatives equal power with the combined students and appointed members.

That is the way Professor Clarkson, an eminent political scientist, feels about the political composition of the council.

The views of a staff member of the college, whom I will not name because the person asked to remain anonymous, about the principle of who has the power in the council, is this, sir. The staff member notes that there are nine members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, and this is what the staff member says.

It seems undemocratic that half of the governing council of the college should be appointed, no matter by whom. Moreover, what in fact, does their appointment by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council mean? If it means, as I think it has in the past, that these appointments are made automatically on the recommendation of the principal in council, then the staff and student representation could be meaningless. The appointed council, plus the principal, should outvote staff and students.

And the staff member concludes:

Could not some more democratic method for the naming of these outside councillors be found?

There is another letter from the editor of the Founders College newspaper at York University, Mr. Don Long, and he says there are students involved very actively in the reform of our institutions. Mr. Long says, as a second suggestion:

It would appear that the president and the nine appointed members can outvote the six elected academics and the three elected student members. This would almost seem to deny the academic and democratic aspects of the university.

By which he meant the college of art.

There are these three possible changes that would alter the situation sufficiently. Either the president becomes a non-voting member, or the chairman becomes a non-voting member, because in the Act the chairman must be one of the appointed people, or the number of students and academics should be increased by one from each group.

So there are a number of possible changes in this Act, Mr. Speaker, which would change the principles involved in the representation on the council.

For the final evidence from people involved, I would like to quote from a very lengthy letter I received on the subject, from Mr. Stephen Langden, the president of the student administrative council at the University of Toronto. Mr. Langden, I should note, made it quite clear, that these were his personal views and not the views of the students' administrative council at the U of T.

On the issues of the principles incorporated in the council, Mr. Langden says, and this is a very good point by a very astute observer in the university scene today in Canada, and I should say, sir, in my opinion, a very responsible observer of the university scene, Mr. Langden says this:

It is my feeling that the correct relationship between government and an educational institution implies that The Department of University Affairs should represent the people of the province in all negotiations with regard to money and so forth. It seems to me that the nine members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council are, at best, superfluous, and at worst dangerous to the public interest as a whole.

Mr. Langden continues:

My conception of relations between an institution such as the College of Art and the government, would be that the governing council of the institution be responsible directly to the institution. That is to say, it be composed of, and chosen by, the members of that institution. These members should then have to negotiate for the funds which they require with the Ontario government, and that government should have the responsibility to the people of the province as a whole, and at that point, see to it that the public interest as a whole is followed. Thus I suggest there should not be members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor at all.

This is Mr. Langden's view, Mr. Speaker, of the relationship between government and university. I think it is an interesting view. I think it is a view that has merit of consideration, and I would accept those parts of it that say the government should really exercise its influence not by appointing people to the governing council of the Ontario College of Art, but by negotiating with that council which is reflective of the institution.

I would also point out that I feel there is a balance, a different type of approach, a more balanced approach, which might be an acceptable solution in terms of the principle of the council.

The student council's executive at the Ontario college believes that the council of the Ontario College of Art should be reconstituted to consist of the president, six members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, six members elected from and by the academic staff, and six members elected from and by the students registered at the college. And, in making this recommendation, through me, to the government, and I am sure they have made it to the ministry themselves directly, they point out that they recognize:

the responsibility of the government to protect the public interest in educational institutions which are supported by public funds.

However, the student executive continues:

If the college is to have no direct influence in its choice of the lay members of its council, then surely a more equitable solution could be found.

They suggest the tri-partite division, if you like, of six members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, by the Minister, six elected from and by the academic staff, and six members elected from and by the students, with the president in there. And I, sir, would endorse this principle of the composition of the council rather than the principle which is now incorporated in the bill that the Minister has brought forward.

Just in closing, on that particular principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I do not think any group within the institution should dominate the council. I think students should be represented, for example. But I do not believe they should have the power to run the institution themselves. The university does not belong to the students, the Ontario College of Art does not belong to the students, just as it does not belong to the government, just as it does not belong to the principal of the school or the president of the college, just as it does not belong to the teachers.

It is a collectivity. It is a place of learning, and it belongs to everyone who is associated with it, and that, of course, Mr. Speaker, includes the public.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the member speaking to the—

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, I accept his critique, and I think his views should be represented directly in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But the member disagrees with him.

Mr. T. Reid: I disagree with him to the extent that the Ontario College of Art council should be composed along the lines as suggested by the students at that college.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): If it makes the member feel better, I agree with him.

Mr. T. Reid: I am sure we will hear from the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I should make my position a bit more clear on this particular issue. If The Department of University Affairs was abolished and the Minister did not have that particular job and could devote more time to education, and so do a better job there, if the advisory committee on university affairs did not exist, and in place of that we had an independent universities commission, then I think, I would be much closer to Stephen Langden's view about the council at the Ontario College of Art.

But until The Department of University Affairs is abolished, and until we have an independent universities commission, then I think that the council, as proposed by the student executive of the College of Art, contains the proper principles.

Another principle I would like to turn to, Mr. Speaker, is this. The bill contains the principle that only full-time academic staff are eligible to be represented on the council. I would like to let the Minister, who has introduced this bill, and the members of the Legislature know the views of a staff member at the Ontario College of Art.

The letter I have received from the staff member notes that there are six members elected from and by the full time academic staff. Then this person goes on to say:

This clause clearly and decisively places whatever power the staff will have through six elected members in council in the hands of the senior members of the faculty.

The letter continues:

As you are perhaps aware, the practice at the Ontario College of Art has often been to appoint junior people to a part-time position. Sometimes they are working artists who want only a limited teaching commitment. Sometimes they are people from the business community who prefer to keep their outside interests. This clause denies them the right to participate in the future development of the college and to be consulted in decisions affecting their own welfare.

The letter continues, Mr. Speaker:

Naturally, the full time faculty tends to be older and perhaps less capable of new approaches and attitudes. Some of them have been closely identified with the present administration of the college and with the kind of decisions that that administration has made with the disastrous results that were evident at the college last spring.

This particular letter concludes, Mr. Speaker, by stating:

I would plead strongly for a voice for faculty members, either on the basis of teaching load, say half time or years of service, say three years or more. In my experience many of the junior part-time faculty have a great deal to contribute to the college in terms of ideas, energy, rapport with the student body.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that when one examines the Ontario College of Art, when one examines certain administrative decisions that have been made in the past that this college is unique, or has a "special characteristic"—that perhaps would be a better term—and that characteristic is that the college relies very heavily on part-time teachers.

These part-time teachers often have titles which are not the senior titles. My understanding is that somewhere between 30 and 40 per cent of the people who teach at the Ontario College of Art are part-time. I would say that the principle in this bill which excludes them from participating effectively at the highest level of decision making is a principle that is wrong in terms of that institution.

These part-time people, many of whom have taught at the Ontario College of Art for many years, are being denied representation on the council. I would say that this principle, the principle of exclusion of up to and perhaps over one-third of the people who teach at that college of art from democratic participation in a decision-making process is a principle that should be denied by this Legislature.

Before I move on from that principle, Mr. Speaker, I would say, if I could have the Minister's attention because it has to do with some of the comments he has made about my views on education—perhaps he is too busy talking about how to cut back in university funds even more with the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton). The Minister says that the various institutions of higher education have different characteristics, therefore, he does not want uniform legislation. Here, the Ontario College of Art, sir, is an institution with a very large part-time staff, larger than is normal at any other institution of higher education in this province that I know of, and that uniqueness is not recognized in the Minister's own bill.

So I would say to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that either he drops the argument that he does not like legislating principles applicable to all institutions of higher education in this province because they have unique characteristics, or he accepts the recommendation I have received from a number of people at the College of Art that the part-time people be franchised as well.

I am pointing out to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that there are many, many part-time people at the college who have been disfranchised by this bill. The Minister will have time to make a complete rebuttal, when I finish my remarks.

All I am saying is that he cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Lewis: He will defend the Minister's right to rebut.

Mr. T. Reid: Who knows, Mr. Speaker, the member for Scarborough West might even side with the Minister again on this bill.

There is another principle and, that is, that only—

Mr. Sopha: East is east and west is west!

Mr. Lewis: And I wish he would redistribute those ridings.

Mr. T. Reid: Another principle incorporated in the bill, Mr. Speaker, is that only academic staff employees are eligible to be on the council or to vote for people to be on the council. My view of an institution—and I suppose I apply this particularly to the institutions that call themselves universities or colleges—is that all the people associated with those institutions should have some say, even a token say, in the decisions made by that institution that affect their livelihood.

Stephen Langden notes in his letter to me, Mr. Speaker, that:

So far as I can tell, no provision has been made for other than academic employees of the institution on the council. As I recall the crisis there last year, the non-academic employees, most especially the models used, played a distinctive role in the affair. I would suggest that for you to leave them out—

And I suppose he is talking to the Minister.

—I would suggest that for the Minister to leave them out of the governing structure is both shortsighted and unacceptable.

Now, I make the Minister aware of his point of view and that I support it fully. I have made that point repeatedly in this House, in my own discussions about the governance of university bodies.

The principle, I think, is that the non-teaching staff at an institution and by that, I do not mean the deans and assistant deans and chairmen, vice-presidents, I mean the people who work there, people like departmental secretaries who make departments function, should feel they have a say or at least have their views represented on the governing council.

But this principle, Mr. Speaker, is reinforced by the unique nature of the Ontario College of Art. There are many people closely associated with that college who are not academics, or who are not members of the teaching staff. They are people who have technical skills, whether they be models or people who provide some of the equipment necessary for the teaching members of the institution to carry out their function, the learning process. There are many people at this college, people who feel they have an interest in the college, people who have knowledge about the college, and people, who I think, should not be disfranchised from voting or being themselves on the governing council. So I object, Mr. Speaker, to the principle that only academic staff employees are eligible to be members of the council and to be voters of the council.

There is another principle in this bill, Mr. Speaker, and that principle lies in the way in which the selection of heads of teaching divisions and departments is made in section 6(b).

Stephen Langden, I think, makes a very good point on this issue. Remember what we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the power of selecting heads of teaching divisions and departments in the college. In the Act it says in section 6(b), that the council may appoint and remove the heads of all divisions and departments—administrative officers, teaching staff and other such officers and employees as the council deems necessary or expedient for the purposes of the college.

Let me read to members what Stephen Langden says about this. He says:

The centralized power of the council to appoint and remove the heads of divisions and departments and the said courses of study as outlined in this section of the Act also strikes me as unacceptable.

The major problem of the college last year centered about the integrity of the department. I would suggest that the centralizing authority both for appointment of heads of divisions and departments, and for the setting of courses of studies be to the persons involved in the department which would be both more efficient, more democratic and more likely to lead to the education really desired by the people involved.

I support this principle that there must be in the Act, provision for fuller discussion. Stephen Langden is a very sensible fellow. There must be fuller consultation than is implied in this Act on the appointments of heads of divisions. Anyone who has discussed the problems at the college last year will realize that we are concerned with shifting power within that institution. And to make more rigid the existing power structure through legislation, I think, might bring the downfall of the college.

So I say, sir, that the principle of selection does not go far enough. The principle of selection should include at least the recommendation of the president who has received recommendation from members of the teaching staff, full and parttime, and other divisions and departments concerned. That type of consultation should take place first.

Another principle is the principle of the one-tier system and I accept this as a good form of government. I object very strongly to the contrary principle, that it is useful or helpful to divide the universities along two tiers. So I would commend Dr. Wright and I would commend the Minister of University Affairs, Mr. Speaker, for accepting this single tier principle of university government in the case of the Ontario College of Art.

Another principle can be called the principle of "exclusion of eligibility" from the chairmanship of the council to certain members of the council. As one can note, Mr. Speaker, the Act, as drafted at the present time, states that the chairman of the council must be one of the members of the council appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Section 4 of the Act states, "The council shall elect a chairman from among the members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council."

Again, I cannot conceive why this type of statement must go in a university Act or college Act, as we move into the 1970's. I cannot understand why this principle of exclusion of eligibility of the faculty and student members of the council should be incorporated in this Act.

The principle of exclusion, Mr. Speaker, seems to be based on the assumption of fear of faculty and students. What is there to be worried about? If the members of the council, including the nine members appointed by what amounts to the Minister of University Affairs, why should he, as the Minister, be worried about a faculty member or a student being elected in a democratic way from and by all the members of the council, particularly when the people he appoints together with the president, have a majority of the votes.

So I suggest, sir, this principle of exclusion is shortsighted and based on the assumption of suspicion and fear. Why does the Minister not follow, for example, the principles incorporated in Bill Pr32, McMaster University Act? The McMaster Act says with regard to the board that the board shall elect a chairman from amongst members. It does not say from amongst the members who have been appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. Well, McMaster is a two-tier system. It says about the senate that the president shall be chairman, so that is restrictive.

Again, in some senates, as I noted to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, the senate itself can elect anyone from amongst their members.

He does not have to be a particular member of the senate. I will conclude by saying that I cannot understand why the Minister, in bringing forth his public bill, which is his responsibility as Minister of University Affairs, has incorporated in that bill the principle of exclusion of eligibility for the chairmanship of the council.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have discussed some of the principles incorporated in the bill. I think there are many other more specific matters which could be discussed, and which I probably could drag in as matters of principle, but I will not do so at this present time.

Mr. Lewis: What does the member suggest?

Mr. T. Reid: I have just listed about eight of them.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Did it very ably too!

Mr. B. Newman: The member has not been paying attention there.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would welcome the opportunity of trying to drill into the head of the hon. member for Scarborough West what my views are. My views are these sir, that there are a number of principles that should be incorporated in this bill, which are contrary to the principles now incorporated in the bill. I believe that the teaching members, whether they be part-time or full-time, the teaching members of the staff of the Ontario College of Art, together with the students should comprise a majority of the council. The principle of the bill—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the member said that.

Mr. T. Reid: I thank the Minister, but the hon. member for Scarborough West does not seem to be able to listen too well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Go on to the others please.

Mr. T. Reid: As I said very clearly, I thought, Mr. Speaker, there should be six members appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, because we do not have an independent university commission yet in the province. I believe that part-time members, particularly at the Ontario College of Art, should be eligible to be on the council and should be able to vote as well. Perhaps in a pro-rated way, I would leave that open.

Mr. Lewis: How does the member pro rate voting?

Mr. T. Reid: Well, this is an issue. Without getting into detail, the principle is that the part-time staff, have indeed the part-time students, should have fair representation on the council. Another principle which we stand for Mr. Speaker, is that people should not be excluded from being chairman of the council because they are teachers or students.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made my point clear. I was pleased with the response to my request, and I pass the information of the people who replied to my request for further information to the Minister in a constructive way.

As I said in my letter soliciting this information, when legislation comes before this House, myself, who happens to have the role of the university affairs critic for the official Opposition should be informed of the issues behind a particular bill, and should know perhaps the views of the various people concerned about the bill as proposed by the government, I should be able to represent the views of people who might not have had an adequate opportunity to make their views known, and be given the peculiar history of the Ontario College of Art. It is a place where there is a real power struggle going on, so I am very pleased to have this opportunity to make these views known to the Minister, and to suggest, sir, that he take this bill back and amend it in a number of respects so that it contains many more democratic principles than it does at the present time. In fact, I would suggest, sir that many principles are quite undemocratic.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the member for Scarborough East—I have no difficulty in distinguishing between the constituencies—I am very pleased that the member for Scarborough East ended as he did because he may then have the opportunity to support the amendment which we, in this group will make at the end of our argument on second reading.

I would request, sir, in view of the Speaker's dinner, which is due in some four minutes' time, and because we too have a distended contribution to make, that I could move the adjournment of the debate if the House leader agrees.

Mr. Lewis moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we plan to discuss Bill 83, which is in committee of the whole House, and then turn to estimates.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests this afternoon in the east gallery are students from Ridgetown District High School in Ridgetown; and in the west gallery, from St. Raymond's Separate School in Toronto and Monarch Park Secondary School in Toronto.

At this time, the hon. Provincial Secretary has guests whom we also wish to have introduced to the House.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to introduce to you, and to the members of the House, 24 civil servants from many parts of the world who are at present seated in your gallery at the north of the Chamber.

They have been attending a three-day seminar arranged by this department in co-operation with the Canadian International Development Agency of the government of Canada, and six Ontario government departments which have provided seminar speakers. The departments are those of Agriculture and Food, Education, Health, Municipal Affairs, the Treasury Board and, of course, my own department. All of the speakers have described to these students the procedures which govern the operations of these departments.

All of these officials, Mr. Speaker, have been chosen by their respective governments to learn as much as they can about Canadian methods of administration. We are happy that Ontario has been chosen for the sixth consecutive year to conduct this seminar.

I should explain that these young people are in the midst of a course in public administration at Carleton University in Ottawa.

Our guests in the Chamber today represent 12 countries in Asia, Africa, the Caribbean and South and Central America, and they are accompanied by officials of both the federal government and Carleton University.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I speak for all members of the House when I wish them every success in their studies here and indeed even greater success when they proceed to apply what they have learned to the greater advancement of the countries from which they have come.

To each of them we extend the hand of friendship and goodwill.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's 13th and final report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr20, An Act respecting the city of Toronto (2).

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the city of Toronto (1).

Bill Pr21, An Act respecting the city of Hamilton.

Your committee would recommend that the following bills, having been withdrawn, be not reported:

Bill Pr24, An Act respecting the town of Whitby.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, March 24, the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) asked me a supplementary question with regard to inmates concerned with the Burwash incident which took place on February 4. He asked how many of these inmates were still being held in detention. The answer, as to that date, none.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): A question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

Upon what basis did the department arrive at a daily rate of $9.50 for nursing homes under The Homes for Special Care Act?

How can the Minister justify the rate in view of the fact that the rate for county homes for the aged, excluding capital costs, is $12 per day?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I answered the first part of the hon. member's question, placed by the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown), on Friday, March 21, pages 2568-69 Hansard.

To answer the second part, the information I have from The Department of Social and Family Services is that the county homes for the aged rates range between $3.69 and $9.24 per day; charitable institutions are subsidized through The Department of Social and Family Services up to 80 per cent of $8 per day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Health.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health:

How many staff vacancies for doctors exist at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital at this time?

What is being done to fill those vacancies?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Three, Mr. Speaker, and as usual we are trying in every way we possibly can through advertising in the professional journals to fill the vacancies that are there in Brockville. I must admit that there are not enough psychiatrists, apparently, to go round.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

As recently as a month to six weeks ago, was the vacancy then eight? Have we filled five vacancies or was that an incorrect figure of eight originally in the health committee?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not know to what the hon. member refers. There are three vacancies presently. That is what my complement calls for.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

What is the stream flow in July and August at the point where the Baif Associates development in Vaughan township will discharge its effluent?

What will be the comparative effluent flow at that point?

What type of sewage disposal plant will be constructed?

To what standard will the effluent be processed?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part, one to two cubic feet per second; second part 2.6 cubic feet per second; the third—activated sludge with effluent polishing, chlorination and nutrient removal; and the last part—to the highest degree technologically obtainable.

Mr. Young: Could I ask the Minister for the first figure again, I am sorry to have missed it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: One to two cubic feet per second.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East, has questions for the Minister of Mines and the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Minister of Mines:

Because of written complaints on July 10, 1968, January 31, 1969, and March 21, 1969, by Mr. Paul Palkowski on behalf of the men working in the crushing plant in Copper Cliff with respect to the high gas and dust concentrations, and because the Minister's staff has indicated in the past that these conditions do not exist, will the Minister instruct his staff to accept the offer of the safety and health committee of the United Steelworkers of America to point out to them the time and place for the appropriate tests to be taken?

What action does the Minister intend to take to ensure improvements in the dust and gas concentrations being experienced at the crushing plant in Copper Cliff smelter?

If it is impossible for the men to wear protective equipment while performing heavy manual labour, as is being stated, will the Minister ensure that these men will not be disciplined if they refuse to work in gas and dust concentrations which are too high?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, we have repeatedly conducted our own survey in this part of the crushing plant in Copper Cliff and we have used, on a consultative basis, the environmental health branch of The Department of Health.

Our jurisdiction and our authority relate to the safety and the health of the men working in these plants, and the survey is made by engineers, both for us, by The Department of Health, and by our own engineers, who have consistently come to the conclusion that it is not considered that a significant health hazard is present in that crushing plant.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has question of another Minister.

Mr. Martel: Several questions of the Minister of Lands and Forests: Is The Department of Lands and Forests co-operating with the National Research Council, other provincial governments or the federal government to find a substitute for the leg-hold trap? Will The Department of Lands and Forests make funds available to do research to eliminate the leg hold trap and to find better ways for humane trapping?

How widespread is the department's training programme for trappers? Will this course become mandatory? Will the government provide assistance to trappers to change over from leg hold traps to more humane trapping?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Sudbury East.

1. The department has co-operated with the National Research Council by consultation in effort to develop a humane trap.

2. The department, through its continuing programme of trapper education, promotes humane trapping practices. The leg hold trap used in a drowning set is a humane trapping device. It takes less than three minutes to drown a fur bearing animal. Since the National Research Council is underwriting the cost of research on traps, this department has no immediate intention of making funds available for such research.

3. Through direct contact and local trappers' councils the department officers meet most trappers annually and instruction in trapping technique is given at working sessions of these councils.

4. The degree of interest shown by trappers has not indicated a need for a mandatory course.

5. Assistance to trappers in changing over from one type of trap to another has not been considered and will not be until a satisfactory new type of trap is developed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the municipality of Schreiber was able to persuade an English doctor to practice in their town would the Minister prevail upon the Ontario Medical Association to allow him to go into practice immediately upon his arrival in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Medical Association has nothing to do with this, but the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario is the body of course.

It is my understanding that if a physician is a graduate of a recognized British University—that includes the English—he would be eligible to begin practice under supervision by having his name put on the special register as soon as he arrives in Canada. However, without knowing the specific details of the person in question I could not answer the question more definitively than that.

Mr. Stokes: If I might ask a supplementary: Who would supervise him in an isolated northern town? Would it be possible to make some kind of arrangement like this?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, it really could be because he could come under the supervision of the medical officer of health. That is just one example. I am quite sure that a system could be worked out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General: in view of the observations made by the Attorney General to the House on February 13, 1969, in relation to the institution of an inquiry under The Provincial Courts Act into the conduct of Judge Lucien Kurata. In particular, I refer to where he said that in his opinion there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the laying of criminal charges. Would the Attorney General inform the House whether in the light of the evidence adduced in the inquiry he has changed his opinion?

In any event, has the Attorney General considered the question of whether he should discontinue the inquiry and proceed with the matter in the courts of justice?

Has the Attorney General any observations to make to the House in connection with the conduct of the inquiry by Mr. Justice Keith with particular reference to the admission of evidence which would not ordinarily be admissible in a court of law?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, without in any way suggesting that the question the hon. member has asked is not in order, I would think it unwise on my part to make any comment upon the inquiry while it is going on. Certainly, I would not reply to the third part of the question. I think any comment might prejudice either the administration of justice or the party whose conduct is being inquired into.

Mr. Bullbrook: If the Attorney General would permit a supplementary question in this connection, I am prepared, of course, Mr. Speaker, to accept the position taken by the hon. Attorney General, if he feels that comments on these questions, or responses to them, might in any way prejudice the hearing. I purposely phrased the questions, if I might, sir, so that in my opinion they would not. But I am wondering if the Attorney General would consider, after the termination of this particular hearing, if he might reply to this question as to the general aspect of the admission of evidence and right of cross-examination relative to inquiries under The Provincial Courts Act?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I intend of course in any event to review the evidence. I would be very glad then to discuss all the matters raised in the hon. member's questions and perhaps other matters that are relative to the inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Revenue: Is the Minister aware of any instances in which the proposed extension of the sales tax to production machinery and equipment is forcing companies which had planned to locate in Ontario, to alter their plans and locate elsewhere?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): No.

Mr. Peacock: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: has the Minister received correspondence from manufacturers and representatives of manufacturers suggesting this might be the case?

Hon. Mr. White: A number of letters have been written, in particular to the Treasurer, objecting to this and other taxes, as one might expect, because no one likes to pay taxes, able businessmen least of all, I suppose one could say. These letters say it is going to be detrimental to their industry and they try to make that case. We have evidence to indicate it will not be burdensome for the industries concerned and the information that I put before the House during the debate is the point of view which we continue to hold.

Mr. Stokes: That is not true.

Mr. Peacock: Specifically, what I asked the Minister, Mr. Speaker, was whether he had received correspondence suggesting to him that certain industries would not locate in Ontario which had planned earlier to do so?

Hon. Mr. White: Not to my knowledge, no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General has a request.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to table the annual report of the Law Society of Upper Canada on the Ontario legal aid plan and the annual report of the advisory committee on legal aid. Both of these reports are for the year ending March 31, 1968, and they present to the people of the province a comprehensive and informative picture of the legal aid plan.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the citizens of the province may be proud of this unique plan which, in its first year of operation, provided legal assistance to over 118,000 people at a cost of approximately $4,080,000. The report of the law society provided extensive statistics which may be of interest to the hon. members, but these statistics alone cannot reflect the fundamental concept of justice, and equity, that are inherent in the legal aid systems under the plan.

No person may read these reports without a deep realization of the significant advance which the Ontario plan represents in the development of meaningful rights and liberties.

The report of the advisory committee is interesting in its new concept, as it provides an objective review of the annual report on the Ontario legal aid plan. We thus have before us, a commentary of a group representing the public, the social agencies, the bench and the bar, and these views are quite independent of those put forward by the persons who administered the plan. They are most helpful and we are indebted to those men who serve us by acting as members of this advisory committee. They do so because of their spirit of public service, and their dedication to the concept represented by the plan.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members will share the concern of the advisory committee as expressed about particular aspects of legal aid in Ontario.

For my own part I wish to advise the House that I will be introducing a bill for its consideration, which will represent the implementation of some principles designed to improve and modify the plan. At the same time, I am proceeding with amendments to the regulations, which will have a similar purpose and effect.

Early in January of this year, my officials met with representatives of the law society, and The Department of Social and Family Services, to institute a review of the criteria on which eligibility for legal assistance is assessed. This review is presently in the hands of the welfare officers of the latter department, so that we were even then implementing one of the recommendations of the advisory committee.

The areas of possible abuse have concerned us all. The Law Society has been diligent in this regard, insofar as it relates to the legal profession, and severe disciplinary action has already been taken in one case while investigations are readily taken wherever circumstances justify such action. Special investigators and auditors are made available as required, and no effort is spared to ensure the proper administration of this aspect of the legal aid plan.

The report emphasized the effectiveness of the administrative devices that are being used to achieve this efficient and revealing supervision of the services and funds which are being administered under the plan.

The contributory aspect of the system will constantly be kept before all of us engaged in this programme, in order that its true purpose and effect can be achieved.

I commend these reports to the attention of the people of the province, Mr. Speaker, I believe they take pride and satisfaction in having provided this most significant and fundamental assistance to those citizens who have need of this important social service.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister permit a question by way of clarification? I note he used the term modification. Is the import of his remarks that there is going to be a curtailment of the right of persons to have legal aid available to them under the plan? Is that the meaning of the term modification of the system? Is this going to be accomplished through some curtailment of the financial regulations or rules under which legal aid is provided?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I think it is well taken.

I have mentioned the intention to submit legislation very shortly of amendments to the plan and regulations. I do not want to refuse to assist the hon. member but, I would ask if perhaps he might be good enough to read these reports and allow me to expand then upon that whole matter, perhaps, as I introduce the legislation. It is difficult for me to get into it when I am about to introduce some legislation and these reports have not been studied.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General, and if I am unfair you will tell me, but is the Minister going to consider in the proposed legislation the question of strengthening—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is not asking for clarification of the report. He is now asking the hon. Minister about the report which has been tabled.

Mr. Bullbrook: With respect, sir. During the course of his remarks, the hon. Attorney General related to legislation that he anticipates bringing before this House. I was just going to ask by way of clarification if he anticipates the strengthening of the recovery aspect of costs under the plan?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That will be one of the features. I can certainly go that far.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege again. One of the most important privileges of membership in this House is fair reporting, and the reason that this is so very important is because we represent so many thousands of people and the only way we can reach the people whom we represent is through the press.

On Tuesday, the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) rose in the House and made certain remarks in reply to a question which I had submitted. These remarks were extensively and elaborately quoted in the Toronto Telegram and the other newspapers.

Yesterday I rose to correct the record on that matter. The other two daily newspapers, in their usual responsible way, printed both sides of the coin. In yesterday's papers they printed the Treasurer's comments while today, they printed my explanation. The Telegram, of course, is making no effort to correct the misinformation which was placed in yesterday's paper. In fact, in today's paper they have a further article which is headed "Debt Issue Made Public and Widow Breaks Down". In the sum of that article they state:

Mr. MacNaughton had attacked Doctor Shulman for trying to pressure the government into garnisheeing her wages.

This, of course, is not correct.

Unfortunately we, as members of this House, are only entitled to the privilege of fair reporting in theory. In actual practice this privilege, particularly as it applies to Opposition members, depends on the willingness of the government to preserve that privilege. I am only too aware that this government is beholden to the Telegram—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member can dish it out, but he cannot take it!

Mr. Shulman: I am dishing a little out now. I am only too aware that this government is so beholden—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is now off his point of personal privilege.

Mr. Shulman: No, sir, I am not.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now not speaking to a point of personal privilege. He is attacking the members on the other side of the government and it is not open to him to do it in that manner.

Mr. Shulman: I do not wish to attack any member of the government; I wish to complete my point of privilege. The point is that we can only have this privilege if the government extends it to us. I am only too aware that it is useless to appeal to the government at this time to have this privilege asserted and I am bringing this matter up only at this time so it may go on the record. I am aware there is nothing you can do about it. I wish this matter on the record so that after the next election, I can request that the appropriate action be taken.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member amended his remarks, I agree that they are quite in order and I would presume that that closes the matter for the time being.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, if I may.

In looking at the order paper, I notice that questions I have asked of the government take up approximately three pages, and I am not unappreciative of the fact that this is costing the taxpayers of the province considerable money to reprint these inquiries day after day. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that, the government, having recognized I asked these questions, we discontinue printing them day after day because I do not want all that unnecessary expense.

Either let the government answer my questions or please let them be removed from the order paper but only for the purposes of printing. Let them remain on there—I still want the answers—but I do not think the three pages ought to be printed every day at considerable expense to the government. I would estimate that it must run into hundreds of dollars daily just to print three inquiries. If there is a way that they need not be reproduced or perhaps reproduced once a week until they are answered, I would appreciate that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 6th order, committee of the whole House; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

The hon. the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That every corporation as defined in The Corporations Tax Act shall pay to Her Majesty for the use of Ontario, the taxes imposed by that Act in accordance with that Act, as amended by the provisions of Bill No. 83, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Resolution concurred in.

THE CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

House in committee on Bill 83, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

On section 1:

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Chairman, on section 1, I would like to move an amendment on section 1, subsection 5.

I move that subsection 18 of section 5 of the Act, as enacted by subsection 5 of section 1 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(18) every corporation referred to in clauses (i), (l) and (m) of subsection 37 of section 4, and subsection 1 of section 45, shall, in lieu of the tax payable under section 1, pay a tax of $50.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is certainly clear.

Hon. Mr. White: Perhaps I can offer an explanation.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Hon. Mr. White: A word of explanation, Mr. Chairman. The (a) was dropped because while the Act has, I suppose since the beginning of time, levied a nominal tax on muni-capital corporations with share capital, there are no such corporations left in Ontario. Therefore, there is no point in perpetuating that particular provision.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Have you just discovered that?

Mr. Singer: That is a great discovery; it justifies your portfolio all by itself.

Hon. Mr. White: The other change is to delete the words "including a co-operative corporation". It was not the Treasurer's (Mr. MacNaughton) intention that capital tax on co-operative corporations be limited to $50 when the Act was drafted. The co-operative corporations were put in that category in error and I did not catch it.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, if I may speak to section 1.

First of all I would have you, Mr. Chairman, advert to what was said about this capital tax by Smith at 113 of his book:

The continuance of the capital and place-of-business taxes in their present complex form cannot be readily justified. Their nuisance value is too high in relation to the revenue yield, particularly since they, too, are now payable only to the extent that they exceed the tax on income. While we recognize the point that they have some value to the administration as a means of identifying, for the purpose of assuring that the income is not evaded, incorporated enterprises doing business in Ontario, we note that federal authorities and authorities in other jurisdictions manage without this form of impost.

Then jumping down a bit he says:

An amount of revenue equivalent to the yield from the present complex capital and place-of-business taxes could be obtained by a single annual corporate business tax payable by a corporation.

Then he goes on to recommend that a $50 levy be made.

This section does not take cognizance of the recommendations made by the Smith report, not does it in turn appear to be aware of what was recommended in the committee. What has happened in this section is that the place-of-business tax, which is a further section along and deleted, is not incorporated into the capital tax whereas the recommendation was that both of these taxes should be tossed out and incorporated into a third tax, a business tax levy.

Why this occurred I would be most interested to learn, because really all we have here is a retention of a formal taxation which on two occasions, after good scrutiny, had been said to be inefficient, onerous, administratively bad, and so on. But if I may address my remarks to the hon. Minister, I am terribly interested in seeing how, in turning over this tax, he is able to maintain the levies; how he is able to maintain and exceed anything being collected, or come anywhere close to what is collected, under the present situation. Smith discloses—I will not run through all the figures, starting with 1961 and coming to 1966—on page 82 of his book that the capital tax in 1966 brought in $2,239,000, and the place of business tax brought in $1,500,000.

The differential between these two taxes down through the years is pretty well parallel. What we have done here is take the $1,500,000 out so it becomes a deductible item from the $2,300,000. In other words, just a little over $1 million would be collectible under the capital tax that was then.

You have doubled the rate, but if it is just a little over a million, then the most that it could reach, superficially, would be somewhere in the region of $3 million. Your budget statement has indicated, I believe, a figure of $17 million. The partial explanation, perhaps, is that whereas formerly they were able to make a deduction from the income tax—or vice versa, that the income tax was deductible from the levy—now this the tax, as applied, would be in addition thereto.

I would like assurance from the Minister that this factor, perhaps the most salient one, is the determining one also with respect to these increased revenues that he is expecting to get from the imposition of this new tax rate and this new tax.

I have several rather more minor thoughts touching this section. I notice that there is no provision, as the section is set out, allowing for taxation on a pro rata basis for only part of a fiscal year. I believe that was contained in the earliest Corporations Tax Act. Is that an oversight or an omission? Does the hon. Minister intend that the full levy should fall, irrespective of how long the company has been in operation in that particular fiscal year?

Apart from that, the section in question should be differentiated from the second section. In other words, this Corporations Tax Act in its amendment and in its scope touches on three major sections of the Act itself.

The fourth section is the income tax section. The fifth section is the capital tax section, and there is the sixth section of the Act, all of which have numerous subsections, each one being interrelated to the other. For instance, the capital tax set up incorporates and refers back to some of the 43 subsections of section 4. Section 5, the capital tax section as such, has 17 subsections, some of which are presently being either deleted or changed.

There are numerous exemptions allowed. This is in continuity with the previous legislation. In subsection 2 of section 1, adversion is made to sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 13, under which the tax is not payable. If the hon. members would inspect those sections they would see that they apply seriatim, to banks, the railway mileage tax, the telegraph companies, to wireless companies, to car companies and to certain kinds of insurance companies.

But why are they exempted in the terms of this Act?

Again, the recommendation of Smith was that these so-called special taxes should be caught up and brought into a general levy, and a single form filed. I believe that the same type of recommendation, under 274 of the recommendations, was made by the Smith committee; that a single proposed annual corporate business tax be collected and that a single form be used.

Again, as in the previous legislation, the hon. Minister will probably claim that he is clearing out a little underbrush prior to entering into the forest. But the point is that in this type of legislation you can hardly see the forest for the trees. The whole point of the exercise was not just to clear a little underbrush here and there so that we can come on some straight paths, but to make the path straight to the centre of the forest.

If one reads through these Acts—they are intricate enough, heaven knows—in trying to disinter what exactly is the intent of section after section, and the inter-relationships among the sections without having had the opportunity to launch forthrightly into it, as we recommend it to be done, obviously it can be done without preserving a whole host of exceptions and anomalies.

The thing might have been attacked now, once and for all. But no. All it is, is an alteration in the rate structure, a certain basic tax of $50 imposed, leaving a whole host of these anomalies and discrepancies which we felt were burdening the business operations of the province. Why have you not gone further? In other words, you have had this opportunity, to make some further pruning and grow a straight apple tree instead of one that is all burred over.

I want to go one step further on this section 2. It ties in more, I suppose, with the subsection 5 which refers to a whole host of various types of corporations, some of which fall inside a certain figure, some of which fall outside. Up to this time, section 5—the capital tax section—referred always to section 4, subsection or paragraph 37, which contained the exemptions. Subsection 37 said that no tax whatsoever—I mean capital tax—would be levied upon certain corporations running from A to P.

Now what the Minister has done, and I will mention a few of these corporations in a moment, what the Minister has done, or appears to have done, is he has segregated some of these corporations from the other, namely four different types of corporations, and he has imposed the full range of the tax upon these of $50. To the other ones he has applied a lesser tax, a mere $5.

So, whereas previously there was no tax at all, he has further added to the underbrush in this taxation jungle which we were trying to do something with, by making a distinction between two different kinds.

A point I want to make to him right off the bat is that under 437(b) certain types of municipal and other forms of Crown corporations appear to be subject to the tax unless they are outside the tax by reason of section 58 of the Act.

I wonder if the Minister would clarify the point. It appears to me that that section and your retention of the section may be unconstitutional in so far as federal corporations or federal Crown agencies of various kinds under this legislation may fall under the provincial tax. I suggest that there should be some question as to its constitutionality.

The four kinds of companies that have been taken out of the exemption clause and the full range—that is the full range of the $50 taxation now applied to them—are personal corporations. One can see the reason for that insofar as a personal corporation is taxed, the profits or dividends are taxed as moneys in the hands of the shareholders, and the corporate shell is voided or is penetrated and goes right through.

Therefore, it is like personal income and not as the two levels. The corporate tax, together with the dividends or profits, then transposes into the hands of the shareholders.

Nevertheless, these personal corporations do now have to pay at least $50. The foreign business corporations now have also had a tax imposed of $50 where they had none previously. I see the beginning of the taxation on co-operatives taking place in this province. The co-operatives are now taxed $50 also.

There was one other type of corporation, a type of mutual insurance companies which have premiums wholly derived from premiums from churches, schools, or other charitable institutions. Now, if that is the way in which their premiums are solely and entirely earned, I have some grave doubt as to whether such a type of corporation ought to fall into the tax at all, but I would leave it to the Minister to tell why these types of corporations are now being taxed under a capital tax levy when really they have no capital in that sense to tax. The capital of a co-op is obviously the various shares presented to it out of the pockets of the individuals and is held thus individually.

For the others, the tax of $5 is really something that is superficial and picayune. Why would housing for aged be taxed $50, while credit unions, housing corporations, farmers and fishermen's insurers, all be taxed $5? The business of trying to collect the $5 is probably going to outdistance by many times what you are going to receive back from the taxation.

Why not just leave them exempt as they have been up to the present time? What is the point of taxing non-profit corporations, charitable organizations, agricultural societies, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, various municipal bodies and agencies under the labour organizations, benevolent and fraternal benefit societies, the munificent sum of $5? They say these taxes were nuisance taxes and that we had an obligation to alleviate the business men of this province of nuisances. Then the Minister comes along in one of his first acts of gallantry and imposes a further nuisance. I trust that the business community does not think the Minister himself is a nuisance in bringing forward legislation of this kind.

I would like to know again the justification, if any, for moving in this field in this way. And under that particular heading, just what precise sum of money would you hope to derive from a $5 tax? What would be the aggregate sum? What would the administrative costs, to print forms, send them out, and supervise or police the collection, be in comparison to the aggregate collected?

I feel that there are many aspects of this Act and this particular section which deserve no commendation at all.

Hon. Mr. White: I am interested in these comments, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, just a few comments before the Minister makes his comments and then we could perhaps finish off with them.

I would like to just ask him two questions.

1. Would he give us the rationale of this tax—why this flat rate tax has been historically or traditionally levied within the province?

2. Why is it a flat rate tax and not a progressive tax if it is going to be maintained as such?

The next point on which I would like clarification—the member for Lakeshore has alluded to it—is why did he, in fact abolish the place of business tax and then transfer those corporations to liability for paid-up capital tax at this nominal rate of $5 in the classes which were formerly exempt from this tax?

These are the principal points that concern me about this clause. I have great difficulty in understanding why there should be this kind of a tax on a flat rate basis.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to answer the questions that have been posed here. I will start in the order that they were raised in the comments of the hon. members.

First of all, we come up with the yield of $17 million as follows:

The gross amount anticipated is thought to be not less than $26 million. Is my hon. friend with me to this point? I am explaining how we arrive at this estimation of $17 million more.

Mr. Lawlor: I am all ears.

Hon. Mr. White: The gross amount anticipated is thought to be not less than $26 million, from which we must deduct present collections—$4.9 million; produced Ontario income tax—$3.1 million; and other adjustments because of the timing in of the tax $1 million. That brings us back to $17 million.

Now, of course, the reason for this very substantial increase is not so much that the rate was doubled but that the rate was doubled and it was made payable in addition to corporate income tax. That is the way we arrive at this figure.

I might add that the estimation is very difficult to make. We have used every statistical method available to us. Some of these methods turn up a somewhat larger gross than $26 million. However, we think this is the best conservative gross estimation and that the $17 million is the best conservative net estimation.

Mr. Lawlor: I followed the hon. Minister to the $21 million figure; could we bring it down to $17 million?

Hon. Mr. White: All right. Gross capital tax is $26 million. This, less reduced Ontario income tax of $3.1 million; less present collections of $4.9 million; and other adjustments because of the timing in of the tax, $1 million, which brings it back to the $17 million.

If there are no questions on the aspect of yield, I would like to deal with the "prorating".

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one question. Do I take that to mean that the income tax is no longer deductible from the paid-up capital tax. That, and the increased amount which the Minister states that he is going to obtain by reason of this, coupled with the deductibility under the federal income tax by corporations, means in substance that this is a transference of money which would otherwise go to the federal treasury, or to the provincial treasury—at least to some part of the amount which is stated. So, it is a direct transfer from the revenues of the federal government to the revenues of the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. White: A portion of the increase is—yes. I suppose one could say about 40 per cent of the increased revenue received by us will be offset—so far as the corporate taxpayer is concerned—by a decrease in the federal proportion of his corporate income tax. Of course I have mentioned already the amount that the Ontario tax receipts will diminish. Because of the 12 points the amount paid to Ontario will be decreased, in that this tax is applied in the determination of profit for corporate income tax purposes.

So far as the pro rata aspect is concerned, I am quite familiar with the proposition that this should be phased-in in some fashion. We considered the pros and cons of that and we decided that the method we have chosen is the most suitable for a number of reasons. This is not a tax on a period of time, this capital tax does not cover 12 months' or something.

This capital tax comes on at a point in time, namely, the fiscal year-end of the corporation involved. It is, in a sense, a licence fee for doing business in this province and for that reason it was decided that it should be payable in full commencing with the date cited by the Treasurer. This is not quite as severe as it looks because of the offset from corporation income tax, because the rate is relatively modest and I will deal with that more fully in a moment or two and because in the first year it will be paid as part of the fourth instalment. In subsequent years it will be spread out in six equal amounts, together with the corporation income tax.

I think it is not a bad tax. The main reason, I suppose one must admit, that we have not gotten rid of it is because it does turn up about $26 million gross, which is a great deal of money and certainly at this time, we are not able to let go of that particular source of revenue. That fact that it is deductible from corporate income tax purposes maximizes our revenue while minimizing the burden on the business sector here in Ontario.

We have very greatly simplified this tax by eliminating the place of business tax, by having a minimum of $50 so that we no longer have nickels and dimes—I will deal with the exceptions in a minute or two—but the tax, of course, has been increased from a twentieth to one-tenth of one per cent. On that point I think I should tell you that at one time Quebec had its rate of a twentieth, a few years ago it moved to a tenth, and this year it has moved to a fifth. So our capital tax, even with this increase, is just exactly half the capital tax being charged in the province of Quebec.

It is not, I think, an onerous tax to put on a corporation when one considers that the amount of tax is $1,000 for every million dollars of capital, and a million-dollar corporation is a relatively strong taxpayer so that the $1,000 I think in nearly all cases will be not too difficult for the corporation to pay.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Would the Minister accept a question at this point, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I am answering some questions. I have half a dozen here. Maybe the hon. member's will be one of these.

There are exceptions and in many cases the exceptions shown under this early clause are because there is a special kind of capital tax in another clause. Let me use the banks as an example. I have not the section in front of me because it is not in the bill, but the banks pay on the capital in their corporation not only here in Ontario but worldwide, as I understand it. They pay a sum of money for their head office and several hundred dollars for each other office. They pay up to one-fifth of one per cent, if my memory serves me correctly, on the capital—I am sorry I do not have that section in front of me—and a lesser amount, I think one-tenth of one per cent, on their reserve.

The point I am trying to establish here—and I am not doing very well—is that because of the nature of the capital in this particular institution, the form of the tax is different. The exceptions which the member has referred to are—I have it here now—section 7, banks, taxes on paid up capital.

Every bank shall for every fiscal year thereof pay a tax of one-fifth of one per cent on the paid-up capital stock thereof and one-tenth of one per cent on the reserve fund and undivided profits thereof.

So the point I am trying to make is that these financial institutions and certain other types of corporations which are excepted in this clause referred to by the member for Lakeshore, are taxed in a special way because of the unusual form of their capital and that is done in subsequent sections.

Now, Crown corporations do pay this tax. The list of taxable Crown corporations is in my possession and if the hon. member wishes, I can read that list to him or alternatively, I can show it to him at a later date—perhaps that would be a more satisfactory method. The federal government permits its Crown corporations to pay these particular taxes and there has been no change in their approach as I understand it.

The co-operatives were taxed previously in rather an unusual way, they were required to pay a $5 place of business tax for each of the first three years and then a place of business tax ranging from $20 minimum to $50 maximum on each of their outlets. This puts them on an equal footing with privately-owned enterprises but I must point out to you that the amount of money concerned is very small and I think will not be troublesome to this particular class of enterprise.

The active incorporated co-operatives with share capital in this province number 92. Those without share capital, 142. The estimated capital tax at one-tenth of one per cent is $50,000, which is an increase over the previous tax of $42,000. Now, $42,000 spread among more than 200 co-operative enterprises and more than 100,000 co-operative shareholders, members and patrons, amounts to 50 cents each and we think that this is entirely fitting.

Mr. Lawlor: Then why bother at all? The argument cuts both ways.

Hon. Mr. White: Because, as both Smith and the select committee recommended, we want to get rid of this hodgepodge of taxation. And dealing with the capital tax, we want to have these enterprises on the same basis. Now, it may be, as the hon. member suggested, that some of these benevolent corporations, shall I say, should either be excepted or put on the same basis as a regular privately-owned enterprise. I think, as a matter of fact, there is more work to be done on that. But anyway we have taken a long stride on the straight and narrow path that the hon. member recommended.

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps the Minister would let me comment on that point, if that is convenient. I propose later on simply to move that clause 17 of subsection (5) of clause 1 of Bill 83 be deleted to eliminate the $5 nuisance tax on, amongst others, agricultural organizations, charitable organizations, non-profit corporations, non-profit corporations for scientific research, housing for the aged, labour organizations, non-profit organizations such as clubs, credit unions, housing corporations, which are some of the ones which are listed as being subject to this $5 nuisance tax. I propose the amendment both because of the nature of the corporations but also because of the point that the member for Lakeshore makes, that they are in the nature of nuisance taxes. However, I think the appropriate time to move the amendment would be a little bit later.

Hon. Mr. White: I will not be able to support that amendment because, while it may be wise, it may not be wise and I would want to have a very careful study done before we did this. The members of this select committee will remember that a very expensive aspect of administration was the marginal tax payer that was taxable one year and not taxable the next. That type of taxpayer, whether we are talking now about personal tax administered by the federal government, or some other tax, that type of tax payer must be followed up to ensure that he did not forget to pay the money that was owed. From an administrative point of view one of the reasons we found the credit approach to retail sales tax rather attractive, was because the administrative efficiency would be increased and not decreased by having every head of household filing a personal income tax.

This, I think, is one of the reasons why we require such a return from every corporation. My hon. friends opposite will ask why we do not incorporate this with the provincial secretary's requirements. We have a task force on that subject doing this very thing. We have a degree of co-ordination now through the computer and it would be my hope that, I think not in this session, but my hope would be that in the next session we might hope to get closer to that objective.

Mr. Lawlor: Is it possible to tie that up?

Hon. Mr. White: Well that is what the task force is developing.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, I beg your pardon, the securities tax?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. White: I think that is not part of the study, but it is a suggestion that should be explored.

Now another reason I think, Mr. Chairman—as I understand it from the tax administrators—is that sometimes this type of corporation, which is now non-profit and benevolent and paying the nominal capital tax, may alter its status, or its operation, or its profit or capital position, and may, in fact, not be in the non-profit benevolent class. Sometimes, I am informed these corporations alter their character very greatly, and this—

Mr. Lawlor: They must have altered their charters too.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, the charter is sometimes very broad. At any rate, this is a reason that is offered to me for continuing this. I think that deals with the matters that have been questioned so far. If there are others.

Mr. Lawlor: The hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, mentioned the base of computation for the tax and how the tax of one-tenth of one per cent is now arrived at. In glancing over this aspect of the matter, there are two ranges of the tax—the paid-up capital of the corporation as a whole, and then a second definition of a taxable paid-up capital. Maybe it is as well to mention the paid-up capital of a corporation for a fiscal year is its paid-up capital as it stood at the close of its fiscal year, including the paid-up capital stock of the corporation; its earned capital and other surplus, all its reserves except any reserve the creation of which is allowed as a charge against income under part 3 of the Act; all sums or credits advanced or loaned to the corporation by any other corporation except a bank; and all its indebtedness—I am just wondering, do banks borrow from other banks and utilize the moneys in this way and still not fall within the definition—and all its indebtedness represented by bonds, bond mortgages, debentures, etc.

The determination of the paid-up capital of taxable foreign corporations is governed by special provisions.

Then coming to the thing I take exception to, I direct your attention to it for possible further surveillance and amendment.

In determining its taxable paid-up capital, a corporation is entitled, under section 69, to deduct certain amounts in respect of good will, discounts allowed on the sales of shares, investments and securities, and amounts invested in mines and related plant and works.

That bothers me, those sections. I wonder if some perusal of them might be given. There is obviously, in the case of investment in mines, an incentive or inducement section to cause corporations to invest their money in natural resource industries in the province, and they are given special concession for so doing. But I wonder to what extent this is really applicable in determining the taxable paid up capital.

Perhaps a stronger case could be made on this business of good will. Now you restrict it in the amount of good will, I think it is 50 per cent of the book value that is the limitation that is placed by the legislation itself.

I wonder whether good will should be considered in one way or another at all.

I am told that some major corporations in this country have no good will, or have good will, let us say, of $1. Other ones would have, just as a book entry or figure, massive good will. There could be arguments and nice points raised and it is a device, I suggest, this floating quantity called good will, to escape the fair measure of taxation under this capital tax to which the corporation will otherwise be subject.

I will ask the hon. Minister to take these remarks under some consideration as to eliminating the basis of these deductions and exemptions.

Surely if the total amount from all the corporations of this province is to be something in the region of $17 million and most of it is mulcted from the federal treasury in the process of doing so—rather sleight of hand, you know—I wonder how the federal officials in terms of federal-provincial co-operativism regard this particular type? I mean you are doing it all the time admittedly, but your recent budget has got it in three of four instances.

In other words, all you have done is take from the left hand what Johnny pays with the right, and it is only the federal treasury that is suffering.

It is your way of saying, "Well, if you fellows are not going to give us the money, we will find a subterfuge to get it anyway." They are pretty well available, and this is the utilization you are making of this thing. Admittedly, at your present stance with the refusal of Benson to talk, or at least to talk intelligently on these matters, I really do not blame you. But I think it is a very dangerous practice in terms of the future unity of the country.

This is an instance in point, and if this is going to multiply and proliferate—you have done it three times in your present budget—the ultimate effects are going to be very disrupting, and disintegrative fiscally, to the overall interests of the country. You must not tax on that basis, I suggest, unless it can be avoided, which perhaps it cannot be in the present context.

Just to return to the basis for the computation of the tax itself, I think that various forms of amendment and a wider range of the weight of this tax, can be made to fall other than what you have presently arrived at.

Hon. Mr. White: I cannot accept the proposition that has been put to the House by the hon. member for Lakeshore. I would like to draw a parallel between two other levels of government in the hope of winning his concurrence.

The city of Toronto must raise a sum of money in order to finance its public services. In the process they establish a mill rate and, in fact, they establish a separate mill rate. If they increase the property tax along with the business tax, that increase becomes an increase in expense to the corporations or the enterprises concerned, and diminishes their profit and lowers the income tax which they must pay and which we collect in part.

Now, would you suggest that the city of Toronto in striking its mill rate and levying it against businesses thereby decreasing our corporate tax receipts, was being in some way injurious to the province of Ontario. I know you would not.

We in Ontario must provide a certain amount of money to pay for a wide variety of public services. In order to do that we have to utilize the tax fields available to us. In most of the cases I think it is fair to say the increased revenues in no way impair the federal collections. In some instances there is a partial offset. That is something, I think, over which we have no control.

Now, running through the amounts of money again—I am sorry I have just forgotten the question you asked before you sat down. Did you want me to review these sums of money?

Mr. Lawlor: On this computation business?

Hon. Mr. White: Just before you sat down you mentioned something about the computation—

Mr. Lawlor: I felt that you, within your ministerial discretion, or at least the Minister of the Treasury within his discretion, may allow certain deductions in order to reach a taxable paid-up capital figure. I am suggesting that in a range of those discretions, for instance, with respect to the good will of corporations and to certain investment portfolios they may have touching natural resource industries, they get special advantages.

Hon. Mr. White: Right. I cannot speak with a great deal of expertise on this matter. If your suggestion is that we should review the method by which we arrive at capital as defined for this tax, you may be entirely correct and it is something that I am certainly prepared to do. It has not been suggested, I think, by taxpayers or tax administrators or other interested parties that the definition was deficient. If my hon. friend thinks it is, then we are quite prepared to re-examine it.

Dealing momentarily with the idea of good will, if a corporation acquires another enterprise, let us say for $100,000, and if the actual net worth as represented by the balance sheet and not including good will is only $75,000, then in order to bring the acquired assets and liabilities into balance one must increase the good will shown on the balance sheet of the acquiring corporation by $25,000.

When my hon. friend says that some large corporations have no good will, he may be thinking in a social sense. In other words, he and his colleagues may have some ill will towards these great private enterprises. That, I suppose, can be debated at another time.

The good will item is simply a balancing item. If there was no such transaction then, of course, the company would not have a balancing figure to put on the asset side of its balance sheet. The amount of advertising, public relations, and so on, would not be quantified and would be shown at that nominal amount of $1. It is not a tangible asset; it would not ordinarily enter into the capital of a firm.

Mr. Sargent: I cannot speak with a great deal of expertise on this matter, but I would like to know from the Minister how much revenue he expects to raise from this field on this vehicle this year?

Hon. Mr. White: We expect to raise $26 million gross.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in the Minister's remarks—this would seem to be a dialogue between those of the ilk of lawyers—and I say with respect that at Mr. Speaker's dinner last night the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) said that a lot of times I do not know what I am talking about and do not understand myself. I agree, but—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, please, last evening really I was speaking in a facetious manner and I would never make such a statement, even if I did believe it, about any member of this House. It was made in a purely facetious manner and I hope the hon. member will accept it in the sense in which it was meant.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Prime Minister for his remarks. But I want to say that this field is very highly complex and complicated and I think it should be put at a level that even I can understand; so that all of us could talk in the same dialogue, on how much money do you hope to raise by this vehicle.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): The difficult we do immediately, the impossible takes a little longer.

Mr. Sargent: All right. I wanted to say that somewhere along the line that those of us who have been in business have had to meet a payroll. I do not know of anyone on the front bench who has ever tried to meet a payroll.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment. We are talking of raising money in this greatest economy in Canada where we are in trouble getting the money to do the job we want. I would like to ask the Minister why—in this great economy we have here, where you have $1,000 worth of tax for every $1 million of paid up capital in your quotation?

On the other hand, we have a report in the paper this morning that one firm did multi-million dollars' worth of business this past year and paid no taxes. Somewhere along the line, I think, you must look at the overall picture of our economy insofar as we have the greatest gross national product here in the province.

We have, we are told, 90 per cent of our industrial capital controlled by the United States; I would like to suggest you tell me in a simple way why you cannot change this fact that you are charging $1,000 for every $1 million paid up capital? Why cannot any firm in Ontario that has American capital and outside capital pay double the tax that Canadian capital pays in this area of tax? In the area of $1,000 for paid-up capital of $1 million. Why cannot you say to an American firm, "you pay $2,000." Then, instead of getting $26 million, you get $52 million and you could build four more lakefront projects for the city of Toronto.

We look at this thing, at the overall picture, and say the Minister is doing a pretty good job. But can you do a better job and show us why you cannot recognize the fact that American firms should be paying more of the economy than they are paying. I would like to hear the Minister's comment on that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Remember what happened to Walter Gordon.

Mr. Sargent: He was doing all right. He was a great Canadian.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He tried what you proposed and he failed.

Mr. Sargent: Maybe you fellows are more intelligent. I do not know.

Hon. Mr. White: Let me make one or two comments on this. There is no reason why we could not double the taxes on American corporations and cut the taxes on Canadian corporations in half or down to zero. But let me say that in the process you would certainly discourage foreign investment and the cost you would pay would no doubt be very heavy unemployment. Because who is going to come in here and have every nickel of profit phased away?

Mr. Sargent: You do not know that for a fact.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, wait! We have an unemployment rate in this province of 2.7 per cent. In order to provide tens of thousand of new jobs every year we have had to have an immense inflow of capital. If we were to discriminate against this outside capital we would be punishing ourselves, that is my belief.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: We can debate this at greater length if you wish. Pardon?

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): How much actual outside capital have you got? How much of it is generated inside Canada?

Hon. Mr. White: The figure is readily arrived at in the DBS statistics because it is the difference between our total exports, including services, and our total imports. The difference there is the capital required to balance off the account. I have not got the figures in front of me but what I am saying is simply this. My hon. friend, who is a businessman, cautions us from time to time about killing the goose that laid the golden egg. There are a number of geese, some foreign and some domestic; the proposition that you apply in a general way must be applied to American corporations, British corporations, just as you yourself on occasion apply them to Ontario corporations.

May I make one more point before you do so. I should think, without having explored this with the experts, that the minute you applied a special tax on American corporations, very serious efforts would be made to avoid that tax by Ontario-izing the corporation in some highly technical and spurious fashion. Now I am sorry, I cannot really suggest the best ways in which this might be done, except that there might be different classes of stock—the majority of the less powerful classes owned by resident citizens thereby qualifying it as an Ontario corporation with the actual powerlines and the government class of stock being held elsewhere.

An hon. member: Do not think you can avoid the problem.

Hon. Mr. White: At any rate, please accept my assurance that when one tries to differentiate taxpayers on the basis of nationality or by some other test, one introduces a new complication and a new loophole through which that class of taxpayer would try to avoid paying the tax.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister is much more knowledgeable than I, but he has probably studied the impact of such a tax on American investment. I do not suggest that I am right there; I suggest that there might be some modification. I do know that there are many parallels—in a sense, Mexico: if you once had a business there, you must have 51 per cent Mexican ownership. An American firm going to Mexico can only own 49 per cent of the industry or any operation down there. It would seem to me that there are many parallels in South America and around the world, that we are the people, Mr. Minister, who create the climate that they can invest in here.

Their gigantic corporations and their conglomerates have more money than the province of Ontario. They give us loans, making another eight or nine per cent on the money. You tell me to justify your case so that it would discourage all these attractions.

We have the variance on the money, they have given us loans, and we have the most buoyant economy in all the North American continent in this area of Toronto here. You tell me that this is going to discourage American location here, but I doubt very much if you are 100 per cent right. I suggest that there must be some other economies doing this, so why cannot we say: okay; let us get our chance to get off. For instance on February 30 Stelco announced that out of sales of $559 million, it had the biggest year in its history—$63 million profit last year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Good!

Mr. Sargent: Wait! A 45 per cent increase in profits; a 45 per cent increase in profits!

Mr. Pilkey: The workers could not get a dime.

Mr. Sargent: You know what is going to happen. The same day they announced this biggest profit in history, the 45 per cent increase in profit, they announced a 10 per cent increase in the price of steel across the market. The same day, again, the same day.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is what helped.

Mr. Sargent: Four other domestic mills announced a ten per cent increase in profit of steel across the board.

Hon. Mr. White: It is all very interesting, but what has it got to do with this?

Mr. Sargent: I am saying that here we have, Mr. Minister, a province trying to build schools and hospitals, and the Prime Minister does not say to Stelco—like John Fitzgerald

Kennedy said to the U.S. steel industry: you cannot increase steel prices. The Prime Minister did not phone down to Stelco and say: "No more increases in steel." You let them go merrily on their way when they have a $63 million profit. Someone's got to run this store.

Mr. Chairman: Are you talking on section 1?

Mr. Sargent: I say this is the area for revenue, Mr. Chairman, not where a guy cannot pay his taxes on his home. This is the area where you must get money—through corporate taxes. The Minister is getting help from the Provincial Treasurer here; he says that the corporations are being taxed to the hilt. This is simply ridiculous. I would like to hear the Minister say why you cannot tax them more than you are taxing us.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. White: As a matter of fact, I think our tax rates here are very moderate and very equitable. We are setting our sights on even greater equity and Budget Paper B explains the long-term intentions of the Treasurer in order to bring about a most progressive tax structure. I do not think our corporations are being taxed to the hilt.

I think it would be very unwise to have discriminatory taxes with different rates applying against domestic and non-domestic taxpayers for a variety of reasons. It would discourage the import capital which we need at this point in our history, and it would be very difficult to administer. I just do not think it is a good way to do business.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): All right, you wait and see.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, we appear to be discussing the principle of this bill rather than the matters involved in this section.

Mr. Sargent: I do not know what section you are talking about, Mr. Minister, I thought I could talk about the general picture of the corporate tax.

Mr. Chairman: We are dealing with amended section 1, and the particular aspect of that section with which we were having a discussion had to do with tax on capital. The discussion was about the increase of the tax to $50 on capital and what constituted capital.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister advise, Mr. Chairman, if there is any corporate tax on the area of banks, on reserves and deposits?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, there is, section 3, subsection 7 (a). No, excuse me!

Mr. J. Renwick: That is section 7.

Hon. Mr. White: I read it earlier when the hon. member was out of the room. Yes, there is. I guess I will let it go at that.

Mr. Chairman: Section 1, carried? The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move that clause 17 of subsection 5 of section 1 of Bill 83 be deleted.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale moves that clause 17 of subsection 5 of section 1 of Bill 83 be deleted.

Mr. J. Renwick: May I just speak briefly to this. I move the amendment for two reasons. One is that the Treasurer, in his Budget statement referring to these changes which are incorporated in this bill, referred to the increase in the paid up capital tax from one-twentieth to one-tenth of one per cent, made some other comments about it and then stated:

In view of these changes, this is an excellent time to abolish the place of business taxes. The abolition will be effective at the same time as the capital tax changes.

The net effect of the provision which I move the deletion of is to eliminate, in the one sense, the place of business tax, but to reimpose the tax under the paid-up capital tax provision. Therefore, these corporations which formerly did not pay any paid-up capital tax—because they have no paid-up capital in a technical sense—are now going to be subject to this $5 tax.

The second reason why I move the amendment is because it is, as the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) has said, a nuisance tax. A nuisance tax which should not and need not be imposed on such corporations as an agricultural organization; a board of trade; a chamber of commerce; a charitable organization where all of the resources are devoted to charitable activities carried on by the organization itself—a corporation that was constituted exclusively for charitable purposes and fulfills certain other requirements; a corporation constituted exclusively for the purpose of carrying on or promoting scientific research; a corporation that was constituted exclusively for the purpose of providing low cost housing accommodations for the aged; a labour organization or society or benevolent or fraternal benefit society or order, or club, society, or association organized and operated exclusively for social welfare and civic improvement, pleasure or recreation or for any other purpose except profit; a corporation incorporated or organized as a credit union or co-operative credit society; an institutional housing corporation, an institutional holding company or a limited dividend housing corporation within the meaning of those expressions as defined by The National Housing Act; and similar types of corporations, the main criteria of which—in most of the cases—is that no part of the income which was payable to or otherwise available for the personal benefit of any proprietor, member or shareholder thereof.

So, in that sense, Mr. Chairman, this is a nuisance tax and it is a tax imposed purely for information purposes on organizations which traditionally should be exempt from this kind of taxation.

Mr. Sargent: How much did you lose?

Mr. J. Renwick: Well they only are going to charge $5 for each one of them but each one of these organizations has to file a return in order to pay the $5. The number of dollars is relatively negligible; I am quite sure that the Minister is going to lose money.

Mr. Singer: It would cost $10 each to programme the computers in respect to one company.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am sure it will. I think in this instance there is no great problem in the Minister agreeing that this nuisance tax could be removed. I do not think that there is any substance in the suggestion that a corporation constituted for the purpose of providing low cost housing accommodation is somehow or other going to become a taxable corporation and, therefore, omit to file any return which is required. I think that remark applies to many other of the classifications of corporations to which this tax is applied and I, therefore, urge that the House support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, I hope that will not be done. I mentioned earlier that I am quite prepared to have this matter examined and perhaps bring in a change along these lines. I am not willing to do that until the matter has been very carefully gone into.

I offered a couple of reasons why we have retained it to this point. I think it should be mentioned that we estimate there are less than 1,000 of these corporations because they must have share capital.

Now, I would urge the deputy leader of the NDP not to vote for his own amendment either, because if he does, and if we strike subsection 17 of section 5, we will be thrown back on subsection 1 or 1(a), and instead of paying the $5 they will pay a very substantially increased tax.

I think that is not the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think the purpose of the drafting of the amendment is to point out the reasons why this tax should not be levied. I am not worried about the technicality of the language. It may possibly be that in the turgid prose available in this bill, the point which the Minister makes is quite correct. I do not necessarily accept it because it does provide specifically that the place-of-business tax is to be abolished.

This is the provision under which, having abolished it one place they purport to levy it in another place, and my guess is that the effect of the amendment is to leave in the clause which states that: "No tax will be payable under this section by this type of corporation". I would not swear to it, but I think the House has the substance of the amendment which I propose.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale has moved that clause 17 of subsection (5) of section 1 of Bill 83 be deleted. Those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Those opposed, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes are 40, the nays 53.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost and section 1, as amended, will form part of the bill.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Lawlor: Section 2 has to do with the wiping out of the place of business tax as such. I want to return to a question that is under this head which I asked earlier of the Minister and to which I did not feel any adequate reply was forthcoming.

Why did you do this thing to us? If you had gone that far, why then did you not move on to the deletion of the capital tax too, and go into the business tax field?

If I may quote the recommendations of the committee under this head: The committee under recommendation 27(3)—which confirms what Smith had to say about getting rid of both these kinds of taxes completely—went on to say:

We endorse the recommendation because the present method of computing capital and the place of business taxes is necessarily complex.

Again, when you are giving consideration to what we just voted on, the thinking that went into that sentence might be very much off the top of your head, because the fee should be payable whether or not the corporation is liable for corporate income tax.

It is the opinion of your committee that the revision of the structure of these taxes should be combined with a complete review of other minor taxes and filing fees presently levied. We see considerable advantage in requiring corporations to file only one composite return which would include the information and the tax presently required under The Corporations Information Act, the annual tax proposed above and any other filing.

Then you come down the page and the last sentence reads:

We note that a flat rate, fee or tax of $65 for a corporation would yield approximately the same revenue as is now received from several existing taxes and fees.

This will obviate most of the difficulty which we have encountered, which we will continue to encounter and the move to strike out the place of business tax under section 2 is fine but the fact of the matter is that it did the job only in part. If I can elicit from the Minister the rationale for doing that, and not doing the other, in face of the considerable amount of thought and work that went into the committee's recommendations in this regard—taking the foliage off the tree—just why the Minister did not, why he does not now, consider doing something rather different from what he is doing in this section and this Act. But, more in line with a thing which has a far greater measure of efficiency, it does not produce the same revenue—

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member would not agree that section 2 deals only with the repeal of a former section? His remarks are not in order with the repeal of a former section, that section no longer applies.

Mr. Lawlor: No, Mr. Chairman, I would argue that it has to do with the repeal of the place of business tax under section 6 of The Corporations Tax Act, which is also—that is fine, repealing that, but why did the Minister not also repeal the other form of taxation, bringing this tax under a completely distinct head, of which the Minister is well aware?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I covered this, I think, Mr. Chairman, but let me repeat; we have made this very much simpler by eliminating a place of business tax. We have only one return which embraces both corporate income tax and capital tax, I hope I am correct about that, yes, I am sure I am. We just have the one return, so it is a composite return. We hope that we will be able, at some future date, to incorporate the fees charged annually by the Provincial Secretary's office. This is complicated enough and it cannot be done immediately. We have eliminated the off-set which my hon. friend has mentioned. The $65 flat figure would, I think, have produced the sum of money that we did receive from this source before, but now we are anticipating something like $27 million gross. I have used $27 million for this little arithmetic. About 90,000 corporate tax payers, so it averages out to $300 each.

Now, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) mentioned in his earlier remarks that this was not a progressive tax because the rate remains the same. But in point of fact, it is progressive because there are two factors leading to the amount of the tax, and the capital is certainly very directly correlated with the ability of the corporation to pay. Is it fair to utilize the system we have here now, where one corporation, a small corporation, will pay the $50 minimum, and the large corporation will pay thousands of dollars, or to levy the $300 flat, even on the smallest corporations in this province? I think my hon. friend will agree that this is a more progressive method, and that I think answers the several points he raised.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this, in the statute, takes about 50 pages, and it would be almost impossible for the average person to grasp the whole significance of this next clause. Would the Minister spell out briefly what this means, very simply?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes I would be glad to. It means, very simply, that section 12, of the Act is repealed.

Mr. Sargent: Does the Minister know the answer to what I am asking?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, what is the question? I do not follow.

Mr. MacDonald: In a nut shell, what is section 12? If we can clarify the hon. member's question, maybe the Minister can clarify the answer.

Hon. Mr. White: Section 12 is just one short paragraph, actually. Section 12 reads:

There may be deducted from the total of the taxes payable by a corporation under sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, tax payable by that corporation under section 4.

Now this means very simply that if a corporation's income tax amounted to the same or exceeded the amount of the capital tax, that the capital tax was deducted from the income tax. We have eliminated that provision so that the capital tax is separate from and in addition to whatever corporate income tax may be payable by the corporation.

Mr. Chairman: Section 3. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in the Watkins report it says that many American firms do not pay any taxes in Ontario, corporate taxes. Would the Minister like to comment on that?

Hon. Mr. White: I am sorry I cannot deal with that without knowing the specifics. I am not aware of any unusual situation. The claim is made, of course, that goods and services being supplied from American branch plants to Canadian subsidiaries are overpriced thereby draining profit out. The federal government, I think, has been very vigorous in protecting against this particular loss of revenue.

We, ourselves, do reassessments to ensure that tax is not avoided or evaded in this fashion. I do not know if it was true at one time or not, but I think in recent years this has not been the case.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister relate into dollars what clause 3 means in increase in revenue?

Hon. Mr. White: In the absence of the repeal of this section we would have collected $4.9 million in capital tax. With the repeal of the section we will collect $26 million approximately, gross. Certain other taxes will be reduced because of the offset, and we will end up with $17 million increase net.

Mr. Lawlor: Just to explore that point a bit further. What happened, in effect, I would take it, was that the corporation income tax, by and large, would exceed on any computation, in most cases, the capital tax being levied and, therefore, no capital tax would be payable. That is what it would come to.

This being true, I would take it then that many large corporations with goodly profits in the province—the greater the profit the larger the income tax and, ergo, the less likelihood of paying the capital tax at all—that many corporations in this province did not pay the capital tax in any event under the old legislation. Can you give us any estimate of how many corporations never paid capital tax, and now will be obliged to pay a capital tax?

Hon. Mr. White: I do not think I can give the hon. member the number of corporations. I have informed the House about the amount of money involved, and I am sure we could determine the number for you if you wish. I do not have that information here at all.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Sargent: What is the position of the federal government insofar as this next clause is concerned; section 4, clause 1?

Hon. Mr. White: I have not had a comment from Mr. Benson on it.

Mr. Sargent: You are giving a concession here? What is their position on it? Are you giving a concession and the federal government is not?

Hon. Mr. White: Not to my knowledge, no.

Mr. Sargent: I did not ask that. What does this mean in dollars?

Hon. Mr. White: This amendment is similar in principle to the amendment under section 4 of the bill. If it were not for this amendment to subsection 1 of section 45 of the Act, a non-resident owned investment corporation would escape liability entirely under this Act. So this is to plug that loophole.

Mr. Sargent: If no tax is payable under section 4 by a corporation for a fiscal year during which it was a personal corporation, why should they escape taxation at provincial level because they were a personal corporation?

Hon. Mr. White: If it were not for this amendment to subsection 1 of section 45 of the Act, a non-resident-owned investment corporation would escape liability entirely under this Act.

Mr. Lawlor: We are not talking about the same thing.

Hon. Mr. White: I am talking about section 5 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Section 4.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, you are on section 4!

Subsection 1 of section 42 previously provided that a personal corporation was not liable to income tax or capital tax. Such a corporation was, however, liable to a place of business tax of $20 or $50 depending on its paid-up capital.

In view of the repeal of the place of business tax, and in order to render such a corporation liable to a capital tax of $50 under section 5 of the Act, it became necessary to amend subsection 1 of section 42 of the Act to remove the exemption from capital tax.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I know we are dealing with section 4, but the explanation in the margin of the bill with reference to sections 5, 6 and 7, state that they are complementary to section 4, and I presume that when it uses the numbers 5, 6 and 7, it refers to sections 5, 6 and 7 in Bill 83, and not to the original Corporations Tax Act.

Now, with reference to section 4, Mr. Chairman, I can understand why a personal corporation will not be paying corporate tax because it is taxed as an individual, as a person. I am rather at a loss to understand how the other three sections would be complementary to section 4, where one deals with non-resident-owned investment corporations as being tax exempt, that is, section 5 in this particular bill and another, section 6, deals with foreign owned corporations.

I ask why they should be exempt and how they happen to be complementary to section 4? Perhaps this may be what caused the hon. member for Grey-Bruce to rise and ask about foreign-owned corporations. The hon. Minister said he knows of no corporation that is evading the payment of tax but by section 6, which again as I say is supposed to be complementary to section 4, such corporations are specifically exempt.

Would the Minister please comment before we pass section 4, why foreign-owned corporations should be tax exempt and why non-resident-owned investment corporations should be tax exempt, and how they are complementary to section 4?

Hon. Mr. White: Several sections fall in the same category, and I would like to repeat the explanation provided under section 4.

Subsection 1 of section 42 previously provided that a personal corporation was not liable to income tax or capital tax. My hon. friend has made mention of that and has explained that he understands and agrees with that.

Such a corporation was, however, liable to a place-of-business tax. That tax was between $20 and $50 depending on its paid up capital. In view of the repeal—

Mr. Ben: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, could the Minister please repeat that last statement?

Hon. Mr. White: The personal corporation was liable for the business tax which, of course, we are repealing as of the end of this month. Now, in order to retain the revenue that we have had from that source we are replacing the place-of-business tax with some capital tax.

Having expressed that inadequately in my own words, let me read this explanation again and perhaps that will clarify it:

Subsection 1 of section 42 previously provided that a personal corporation was not liable to income tax or capital tax.

Such a corporation was, however, liable to a place-of-business tax amounting to between $20 and $50 depending on its paid-up capital.

In view of the repeal of the place-of-business tax and in order to render such a corporation liable to a capital tax of $50, under section 5 of the Act, it became necessary to amend subsection 1 of section 42 of the Act to remove the exemption from capital tax.

You will have noticed that five, six and seven are complementary, dealing with section 5 of the bill. This amendment is similar in principle to the amendment under section 4 of the bill which we have dealt with now.

If it were not for this amendment to subsection 1 of section 45 of the Act, a non-resident-owned investment corporation would escape liability entirely under this Act, and the same situation is true of a foreign business corporation.

Subsection 7—

Mr. Sargent: What is the thinking behind that?

Hon. Mr. White: We have had place-of-business tax from these four categories of corporation. We are doing away with the place-of-business tax. We do not want to dispense with the revenue and so we are levying a similar amount under the capital tax.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 4 form part of the bill? The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, am I to understand that Brazilian Light, Power and Traction Company would not be paying us any taxes here?

Hon. Mr. White: Sorry?

Mr. Ben: Am I to understand that Brazilian Light, Power and Traction—the proper title escapes me for the minute but I am sure the hon. Minister knows the corporation I am referring to—does it pay corporate tax to the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I would not have thought so. We will check and let you know.

Mr. Ben: Would that be an example of a foreign-owned corporation? A foreign business corporation?

Hon. Mr. White: I think not, but we are getting into a very complicated area. I am sorry I will just have to have some research done before I can answer it.

Mr. Ben: You refer in section 6 to subsection 1 of section 46 and there it defines what a foreign corporation is. If my interpretation is correct, Brazilian Light, Power and Traction—I think is the proper title of the company—pays no taxes in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. White: I cannot give you a definite answer, but my guess is that this company, which is a Brazilian corporation owned by Canadian shareholders, is not liable to tax so far as our Ontario corporation tax is concerned. Their assets are not here; their head office is not here.

The dividends paid to their shareholders, of course, would be taxable by the federal government and we would receive our proportion of this. By the way my tax administrators pointed out to me it is really not appropriate to discuss a particular corporation because of the secret nature of tax relationships.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, first of all, if I may continue on this, the Brazilian Light Power and Traction Co. is a Toronto-based company; its head office is in—

Mr. Sargent: Point of order!

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce is raising a point of order in connection with the hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, where does a department head get the right to tell a member of the House what they can talk about in this House?

Mr. Chairman: That is no point of order. The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Sargent: It certainly is a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Why can a department head tell me what I can talk about in this House?

Mr. Chairman: No department head has suggested this to the member.

Mr. Sargent: The Minister just said that here.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I am sorry. There is a little misunderstanding here.

The federal income tax people will not divulge the details of your income taxes. That is private and considered a very highly confidential matter. So if—

Mr. Sargent: I am not asking that.

Hon. Mr. White: Right. This is the point I was making, so the confidential aspect is not a suitable subject for discussion. The policies, the programmes, the statutes and so on, are.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, that is right. I did not properly phrase my question. What I should have asked was would the Brazilian Light, Power and Traction Co. be liable to pay taxes in this jurisdiction if it made a profit? I am not asking how much it is paying. Is Brazilian Light, Power and Traction Co. a foreign corporation within the meaning of this? In other words, is it exempt from paying corporation taxes in this province?

Hon. Mr. White: I simply do not know. I will be glad to inquire and I will be glad to attempt to inform the member later.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister tell the House then the yardstick used to tax American corporations per se, in Ontario and corporations—

Hon. Mr. White: The same as we use for Canadian.

Mr. Sargent: So the Canadians do not have any favoured treatment? The Americans have the same treatment that the Canadians do? So this is going to be your policy.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member?

Mr. Sargent: No wonder you are broke.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the comments I am going to make on section 5 apply equally well to section 6, so I will not have to repeat them.

I realize that only by indirection are we saying in these sections that no income tax will be paid by a corporation that is a non-resident-owned investment corporation. That definition of non-resident-owned investment corporation appears in the appropriate section of The Corporations Tax Act, which is section 45.

Similarly, in the case of a foreign business corporation—that a foreign business corporation, if it qualifies, pays no income tax under The Corporations Tax Act of Ontario if it meets the requirements set out in the definition in section 46.

Now I realize that all you are doing by these sections is removing the exemption from the paid-up capital tax so that you will derive the nominal revenue which you formerly derived from the place-of-business tax.

I am going to ask the Minister if he would give consideration in the next year to looking at the traditional exemptions which have been available for non-resident-owned investment corporations and for foreign business corporations? The philosophy and the theory behind their exemption is historic in many cases. I am going to suggest it may well be that the nominal tax is not an adequate tax in terms of the facilities which we provide for such corporations in the province of Ontario.

As I understand it, what we are talking about is those corporations which qualify as foreign business corporations; they are corporations which have their head offices in the province of Ontario. They are, for income tax purposes, resident in the province of Ontario in the sense, in the language of the tax cases, the seat and control of the directing power of the corporation is located here. I believe that also to be the case in the portfolio type of company which qualifies as a non-resident-owned investment corporation. In traditional tax terms, we have the right to tax them on their income worldwide because they are resident here even though they do not, in a technical sense, carry on business in the province of Ontario, which is the other area which will permit us to tax for income tax purposes.

I am not, on the one hand, saying that they should be taxed at normal tax rates. But I am curious as to whether or not we are, by these nominal taxes, in fact collecting the revenue which we should collect because of the facilities which we provide for those companies in being here as resident companies, and having the benefit of this jurisdiction from which the direction and control of their business is carried on. I think there is a very good reason for the Minister in a new department looking at these matters in terms of their historic place in the tax scheme.

I recognize, of course, that this type of exemption appears in identical terms in the complementary provisions of the federal income tax and therefore it is not really a matter that can be dealt with in isolation by this Minister from the federal Income Tax Act without causing unnecessary divergence between the two statutes. So my comment simply is: Will the Minister look at this type of exemption from that viewpoint? Then, he can come to some definitive conclusion as to whether or not the nominal revenue which we derive is adequate to compensate the province for the facility and the environment within which they carry on the direction of very substantial portfolios of investment in the one case, and very substantial business operations through subsidiary companies outside Canada in the other case?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, I certainly will look into it. As has been suggested, we follow the federal government in not applying income tax on non-resident owned companies. This is a means whereby a non-resident can hold his investments in Canada under certain conditions and it is pointed out that these investments are very mobile and could be moved to another country very easily. I think those are the reasons, but I would be very glad to have the matter reconsidered.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my only comment to that comment is that there is an element of protection and financial facilities available within the province of Ontario that make it on balance, more convenient for them to be here. I think there is probably an additional number of dollars which they would be prepared to pay and still remain here for the purpose of managing their portfolios. That is the substance of my comment in both cases.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, I am gratified the member points out that the good government here in Ontario makes this a very suitable place for people and for their capital.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this is a glaring example of the immobility of this party. You cannot move with change. Here is a great area of revenue which the member has pointed out that you could bring into the hopper and test it and see what would happen if you taxed these people more. But, you cannot change with the times.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my only comment to the Minister of Revenue would be that I hope that those non-resident owned investment corporations which left the security of the Ontario market because of the number of financial disasters could, perhaps, because of the interest which the public has taken in endeavouring to cure the defects in the securities laws, in some way or other be attracted back into the province of Ontario.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Lawlor: I will just say one word on this section. Section 7 is the one that brings the co-ops under the tax for the first time.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister—I do not know a great deal about co-operatives, but we are deluged with the propaganda from the equitable tax foundation about the taxation of co-operatives. I am always concerned, even in a detailed amending bill such as this, where I find there has been a change in the taxation position of co-operatives which have had a historic tax position as well.

I do not pretend, as I say, to understand it all, but we all get the literature. We all know that it is subject to a very powerful propaganda operation, to destroy the co-operative movement in Canada through the use of the tax system. I would hope that the Minister, on this occasion, will assure us that this amendment is not part of the giving way by this government to that kind of pressure—and I do not think it is.

But I would like to have his confirmation of it, and perhaps on another occasion the Minister could state what the position of this government in the taxation field is at the present time in the whole question of the taxation of co-operatives.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, obviously, we are not gunning for the co-operatives by increasing the tax in the amount of $42,000 when we are talking about an overall increase in taxes of $181 million. We saw no reason why this particular tax should not be applied right across the board. This idea of uniformity and minimizing of exceptions or special provisions was one of the objectives of the Smith committee and the select committee.

We have accomplished that, we have turned up a little bit more money. It is not going to hurt anybody at all; it is not the beginning of a serious campaign against co-operatives.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am delighted, Mr. Chairman, to have that assurance from the Minister.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, what does it mean? Let us put it this way: Where a corporation is prescribed by regulation to certain exemptions that other corporations had until we passed the other sections of this Act—such specially reduced exemptions do not apply. Looking at the Act, section 58, subsection 1 has to do with Crown corporations of various kinds. My question really is: What kind of a Crown corporation is it for which you envisage—possibly bringing in a prescription whereby in effect they will have to pay this tax?

Hon. Mr. White: The prescribed corporations for purposes of section 58 of the Act are Air Canada, Bank of Canada, Canadian National Express Company, Canadian National Railway Company, Canadian National Railways Limited, Canadian National Telegraph Company, Canadian National Transportation Limited, Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, Gray Coach, Great North-western Telegraph, Hoare Transport, Husband Transport, A. E. MacKenzie Company Limited, Midland Superior Express, the Minnesota-Ontario Bridge Company, the Northern Consolidated Holding Company Limited, Scobie's Transport Limited, Toronto-Peterborough Transport Company Limited.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9:

Hon. Mr. White: If I may. I move that subsection 3, of section 74 of the Act, as re-enacted by subsection 2 of section 9 of the bill, be amended by striking $81 in the fourth line and substituting therefor $300.

Mr. Chairman, we have been trying to minimize the expense and nuisance so far as taxpayers are concerned. Not long ago we altered upwards the maximum amount by which the frequency of sales tax payments were made. Until very recently if a vendor collected more than $80 he was required to file monthly. We have now altered that upward to $360. We are doing the same thing in this instance and in so doing we are increasing the number of corporations who file and pay taxes annually from $30,000 to $50,000 of the $90,000 corporate taxpayers. This cuts our administrative expense internally also.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, that last clause, I missed that, would you please say it again.

Hon. Mr. White: In the past, if a corporation was liable for more than $80 per year, they had to file quarterly. They had to send in $15 every three months or whatever the amount was. Under this change the amount is raised to $300, so now if a corporation has to pay $250 annual tax, they may remit annually. Now this saves us under the new schedule of payment sending out a half a dozen sets of forms and having them complete them and return a half a dozen $5 cheques.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the Minister's amendment carry? The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, under section 9 of the bill, this is the section that deals with the acceleration of payments so that the sixth payment is made within the fiscal year for which the tax is filed. Is that correct?

This is a one shot application as far as securing extra revenue then, is that correct? What would the amount be, would the Minister tell me? Also, under previous arrangements where your final payment was not due until the second month following the end of the fiscal year, corporations were able to judge their tax and either reduce or increase the last payment as they saw fit, under this section then, you are asking tax to be paid before in fact the corporation has any idea of what profit is being made during that fiscal year. Are there any provisions then for interest on overpayments and the main thing is how much extra revenue for this one year will you derive from this acceleration of tax?

Hon. Mr. White: Well I think the amount was $42 million. So far as the increased frequency is concerned it will be six payments instead of four, but if you had a corporation which had a year end of December 31, it would not be required, I think, to make its final payment for six weeks—I can see six but is it weeks or months?

At any rate I think your criticism should be levelled at the federal government because we give the taxpayer quite a lot more time than the federal government does in order to make that final payment.

Mr. Good: No, under this section you are following exactly in their footsteps. They require 11 payments made monthly to be made in December of the fiscal year, and you are now asking for your last payment in December of the fiscal year, that is, corporations whose calendar year will start actually March 31, so you are no better than they.

Hon. Mr. White: The first instalment will be due on or before the fifteenth day of the third month of the fiscal year in respect of which the tax is payable, and the remaining instalments repayable at regular 2-month intervals thereafter. So if the fiscal year ends in December the first payment is in March of the following year, the second payment is in May, July, September, November, and January 15, so we do require the final payment on January 15.

It was my understanding and my hon. friend may now correct me, that the federal final payment was coincident with the year end, but perhaps my memory is mistaken on that point.

Mr. Good: That is for corporations whose year starts after the fifteenth of March of this year but in subsequent years then, will the tax not still be finalized in the 11th month of that year, say the 11th month of the year of the firm? That is the way I interpret it, I could be wrong. Do you start in the—

Hon. Mr. White: Is it my turn to answer? A December company will make its sixth payment in January—January 15.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lake-shore.

Mr. Lawlor: What does it really come to? Is it not an acceleration all the way through by two months? As I read it it seems to be a greater acceleration than that.

Under the old Act, as you say, there were four instalments. The first one was the 15th day of the fifth month after the fiscal year. Then the next one would be the fifteenth day of the eighth month—three months later as they come through on the quarterly instalment basis.

Under the new section the first payment would be on the third month so you would catch up two months there, but the second instalment would be in the fifth month, instead of the eighth month, as in the other one, so you are accelerated by three months, and the third payment, which previously was in the 11th month is now the seventh month, now you see your four payments—it seems to run that way. Is my interpretation of this correct? Let us say the fiscal year coincides with the after the March 15th limitation here. In other words we are not taking a calendar year, we will run it from March 15 on—say a company was instituted as of the 15th of March, its fiscal year, does it accelerate to the extent that I am indicating, or is it a uniform acceleration?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, there is no short answer to that. I suppose one could sit down and compare the new bi-monthly schedule with the old quarterly schedule and I suppose one could affix some number of days. On the other hand if one takes the one time increase in revenue of $42 million and computes that as a percentage of the new revenue expectation, that, I suppose, would be another way of judging the speed up. I suppose it would be an increase of about 15 per cent on that basis.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 9 as amended form part of the bill? Carried?

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I take it that section 10 is amended to strike out the rate of nine per cent per annum, that is for moneys late-owing and that section 11 is overpayment. One case: If I owe the government money I have to pay in excess of nine per cent or the going rate; but if the government owes me money, they only pay me four per cent. In general, is this the position or what?

Hon. Mr. White: If the taxpayer overpays us because of a mistake or because of a deliberate action on his part, we pay less than the going rate. We do not want to have a high rate because we do not want people in effect depositing money to earn a high interest rate from us.

Conversely, we want to have the interest rate for late payment, high enough that they will not lean on us as their banker. Now the nine per cent which we are charging is, I think, a fairly reasonable amount when one considers prime bank interest rates. We simply do not want to become a form of banker for short term funds.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): You can get eight per cent on short term funds today. Eight per cent, as of this morning.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me rather sensible that if the province is able to raise money in this way, at five or six per cent, which is a lot less than you are paying your banks for your borrowed money, why not consider paying a higher rate of return to those who deposit money? It will save you in borrowing.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Getting it both ways.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, I think I would agree but this is not the function of the corporation tax branch. You would agree with me, of course, that our rate of interest charged on late filing should be more than the prime bank rate. I think we all agree on that aspect of it.

Mr. Sargent: It is a good Liberal idea though.

Hon. Mr. White: If you are suggesting that we should increase the amount from four per cent to six per cent or seven, in the hope that there may be some sum of money placed on deposit with us I do not think I could quarrel with you theoretically. I do not think it is the function of the corporations tax branch to do that. I think from a practical standpoint, there are other solutions to be found.

Mr. Deacon: But I certainly agree that we should pay a higher rate if we are late in our payments. But as far as prepayments are concerned, perhaps some co-operation between your Revenue Department and the Treasurer would be very sensible in this regard.

Mr. Sargent: They do that in the municipalities. They have some intelligence there.

Section 10 agreed to.

Sections 1 to 16, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 83, as amended, reported.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the committee of the whole House rise and report a certain bill with certain amendments and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report a certain resolution and a certain bill with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 29th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND CITIZENSHIP

On vote 1703.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, would the Minister on page 128 of the estimates, indicate how the grants of community agencies have been distributed? The item is $24,500 and I have not been able to find them in the public accounts.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Yes, Mr. Chairman, research and grants totalled $33,500. Is that the reference that the member is making? $33,500 under the heading of research and grants in the estimates?

Mr. Burr: Just the first one, the grants to community agencies. The $24,500.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes. The $10,000 to the International Institute to Metropolitan Toronto; contribution of $1,500 to International Services of London; $3,000 to the Travellers' Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto; $2,000 to the Ontario Welfare Council. A grant is provided for $3,000 to establishing a pilot citizens information centre in Windsor; $5,000 to the department of sociology, York University; and another item of $9,000 for community conferences.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Then there would appear not to be particular research actually being done, or do you consider that the grants to these organizations to set up either pilot projects or to develop certain programmes in research as such?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Definitely, Mr. Chairman. The contribution of $5,000 to the department of sociology, York University, is in fact research money for work that is being done there. I would say that insofar as many of the other organizations are concerned, we do work with them in both their active programmes and in the research aspect of their programmes.

Mr. Breithaupt: Tell me, Mr. Minister, what research you expect to have done at York under this programme?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The sum that we ask the Legislature to devote this year, $5,000, is necessary to continue the research project undertaken in 1967-68 to assess the effectiveness of the citizenship branch's pilot project of teaching English to immigrant women with pre-school children. This work we commented on last year is being undertaken by Dr. Richmond of that department at that university.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): In this matter of research projects, Mr. Chairman, how are you co-operating with The Department of Education and The Department of Social and Family Services, both of which have branches that work in this area of community involvement, getting citizens interested? In these research projects, working with the universities, how are you co-ordinating your research projects in the areas of citizenship which, as I mentioned before, have a relationship to community projects, with the other departments?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Very closely with the other departments. Particularly involved in this area of mutual contact are Social and Family Services through the Ontario Welfare Council, which council we work very closely with in connection with the planning of our first community conference in Windsor as well as other branches of government who are particularly interested in following through with us in this way—the Ontario Human Rights Commission, the Ontario Welfare Council, the youth and recreation branch of The Department of Education, which is the branch of government to which the member was making reference.

So there is very close liaison. We have just finished a conference in Brantford where all departments of government under the leadership of youth and recreation were called together to consider this whole question of co-ordination and liaison insofar as the citizenship programmes and our communities were concerned.

Mr. Deacon: Did you mention The Department of Agriculture and Food, and the athletic commissioner under The Department of Labour, in the co-ordination—

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Department of Agriculture and Food would come in through the capital grant programme insofar as community centres were concerned. The athletic commissioner would be involved, I suppose, in the recreational sense through the special awards in the form of equipment that are given to amateur sport groups. Both agriculture and labour, in this way, are more directly related perhaps to the recreational activities, insofar as our programme, as it is now defined, sees itself from the citizen involvement and the co-ordination of this type of programme.

I had to mention those two departments, but certainly, insofar as community activities are concerned in the light of their activities, they are there with their programme as well.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, there are a great many departments involved in this whole field of community activity and it needs perhaps more co-ordination than it has been receiving in the past.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think that is a very valid comment and I appreciate it being made. There are more departments or branches of government carrying on this type of activity or related activities than just this one. I appreciate the point.

Mr. Deacon: Yes, citizens do find it quite confusing.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I note on some information I have with respect to immigration, that during the three years, 1965, 1966 and 1967 of the persons that came to Canada, approximately one-half were of Italian background. I would presume that the vast majority of these Italian people came to Ontario. I am wondering, in the light of the great increase in language training funds which are available this year, could the Minister give us some background information as to what proportion of these funds are being used within the Italian community which, of course, in Toronto is a substantial community?

I am wondering if he can further advise us as to the plans of the department for giving assistance to integrate within our society, persons of Italian background who have to learn English as a second language? What kind of effective action is in fact being taken?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, it is very difficult for us to break down our ethnic community and to show—in the amounts of money which are voted to us—how they are expended among particular groups. We treat all new arrivals the same way and so I think the hon. member would appreciate the difficulty, at this stage, of trying to separate various peoples insofar as their country of origin is concerned.

Our programme is the same for all new arrivals and we work through COSTI, through the International Institute, through our own adult programmes, through adult programmes sponsored by school boards—regardless of the country of origin to support the language training programme.

I think it is very important to understand that insofar as the language training programme is concerned, it is given against the background of the general theme of integration. I think the “in word” in this field now is “acculturation”, a synonym for integration. Here, we attempt to introduce people as part of the total citizenship preparation to the Canadian way of life and to community life. This is a good part of the language training programme.

I would not be in a position to break down our budget between various ethnic groups, but I can say that certainly the numbers of people who come from that particular country are considerable. There is a tremendous and very vital part of the population of Toronto made up of people with this background who all—along with all new arrivals—benefit from the programme of this department both in the language and citizenship classes.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I just want to pursue this one point briefly. With this proportion, especially of Italian persons who have chosen to come to Canada, I am wondering if the Minister has any means within his department of attempting to assure that possibly the same proportion, within the classes, are studying the English language.

In other words, are the various groups to some—possibly even crude relationship with their percentage of the total immigration group, taking advantage proportionately of the programmes? One would think that if there was a disparity in an area of a certain group, then perhaps we are not making our facilities known to that group in a proper proportion.

To take the Italian example: I am just wondering if some one-half of our immigrants to this area are Italian, do the sizes of the classes and the numbers of persons taking advantage of the programmes relate in the same way? Are we apparently getting through to each group, at least, proportionately?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, this obviously might be an interesting activity to follow up on. That is, your question to satisfy ourselves on that particular line. The difficulty, and I remind you, in all this is that we have a programme for all new arrivals. Keep in mind also, Mr. Chairman, the voluntary nature of the programme. There is no compulsion for people to take these particular classes.

Part of the research project at the university to which I made reference was indeed to look into the difficulties we have encouraging housewives to come to classes like this—particularly in the light of their own views with respect to the time of day that married women go out.

We are attempting, by equipping ourselves with all possible information, to do everything we can to encourage people to take these classes for languages. This is the very important key to open the door to much of the integration programmes to which you have already made reference. I accept the comment in the spirit it is given; and it would be very interesting to take sort of an ethnic census of those who are in fact involved in some respects in the various classes.

This programme takes on many facets. I was very thrilled not long ago to go down to a factory where language classes were introduced right in the factory. The men were coming off their shift, going to the lunch room and taking classes right at their place of work. I would think that it would be fair to say that the largest group there were in fact of Italian background.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I thought you were going to say that they came on speaking Italian and came off the line speaking English.

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, we cannot take that credit. But certainly the interest, the eagerness of these people to be equipped by this language training was quite evident at those classes which I viewed.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, a number of my colleagues have commended the Minister for a somewhat different approach to the work of the citizenship department as compared to that of his predecessor. I think he has rescued the department from being a pretty blatant agency of Tory propaganda among the new Canadians. I add my commendation too.

However, having said that, I want to suggest to the Minister that we may have reached the point when the whole concept of the work of the citizenship department should be broadened much beyond what it is now. It is still, for the most part, restricted to the field of meeting the needs of new Canadians. I would be the last person in the world to suggest that this is not a very important aspect of the job of citizenship.

But there are citizens' rights and needs that go beyond new Canadians. I think there is an invidious quality to a department that is set up to deal exclusively—or almost exclusively—with one group of people, particularly when the topic is citizenship.

My colleague, the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) raised the proposition that the whole Ontario Human Rights Code and its operation more logically falls within The Department of Citizenship than The Department of Labour. I am wondering whether or not the Minister could intercede with his colleagues and get the rationalization of this departmental setup. The Department of Labour is really a potpourri into which many things really are not part of labour, but have down through the years grown up or been shoved off on it. I think they should be rescued and put in with The Department of Citizenship. Surely, the whole Ontario Human Rights Code, protecting the rights of citizens is the legitimate and important thing that should be put in The Department of Citizenship.

I sketch that by way of review of some proposals we have been making during the estimates. I want now to go one step forward. I was rather interested in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts) comment on the so-called bilingual districts that were envisaged in the B and B report.

As far as this government is concerned, it is going to be approached in a somewhat different way than was proposed in the B and B report. The Prime Minister indicated that he would be unhappy at the idea of delineating the district because you would create what might be described or come to be described as a French-Canadian ghetto, or hiving off French Canadians.

Quite frankly, I must say that I think that the reservation the Prime Minister has raised has some merits. It also raises problems as to how you phase out of an undesignated bilingual district; where the rights are going to be granted and assured, I presume we are moving towards that. How do you phase out from an area where these rights will be, in some fashion or other, guaranteed, into an area where there will be no such guarantee because the proportion of French-Canadian population has edged down until it is nothing, or only one or two per cent?

What I am asking the Minister is whether or not in his concept of the whole function of The Department of Citizenship, the idea of the human rights code, or the idea of the bilingual districts—since they too are going to be another mechanism for assuring citizens of their rights that are part and parcel of a bilingual country—should not more appropriately become part of The Department of Citizenship?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this comment. Perhaps it would be sufficient to say at this point that the whole concept of the broadening of the work of the citizenship branch is presently under pretty active review by government. Having said that, perhaps that is all I can say until such time as that review is completed. Any announcements which come as a result of that review must be made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): A most illuminating statement.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Not bad, it will do!

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sure any member of the Legislature will realize that matters such as these are policy decisions which have to be announced in their proper way.

The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside—if I have the riding correctly—and now the hon. member for York South, have raised, as others have, some very worthwhile questions with respect to the broad view of citizenship as it would be represented in the programme of the province. What we have been trying to do, certainly in the last little while, using the communications model as one, is to show that all of us in the Legislature are concerned about anyone who feels in any way disadvantaged in the citizenship concept.

We see as a very acute illustration of this, new people with their particular set of duties; and as the hon. member for York South said, all of us recognize these as special responsibilities. Now, he says, and we are all giving this some thought, what about everybody from this standpoint, and what about the whole broad outlook with respect to this programme when you think in terms of the broad terms of reference laid down by the very statute which encompasses this department.

Perhaps I could say at this stage that all of these matters are presently under review and we have made some very interesting observations along these lines ourselves as our contribution to this broad citizenship concept. What develops remains a matter of that type of discussion and consideration. I appreciate the comments.

Mr. MacDonald: I note with interest that the matter is under consideration, and I offer these suggestions to the Minister for nothing. If he does not implement them by 1971 the New Democratic government will.

Mr. Singer: The member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) says it cannot happen.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Would you like me to read you what the member for Riverdale says, page 1774?

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): He is always dreaming, that member for York South.

Mr. Chairman, we have about $1 million in this section of the Minister's estimates that he is asking for, about a quarter of a million dollars up from last year. I have always had a vague suspicion that this whole caper—I could be very wrong in this—but this whole operation is where you have a captive audience, where you can inculcate them with the Tory dogma because they are not too well versed in the things that go on.

Mr. MacDonald: "Acculturizing" is the word.

Mr. Sargent: That is a good word. He was using "culturism" as a synonym for "biculturalism". I can use the big words too, I guess. Was that "acculturism"?

Mr. Singer: I have the right page reference, 1774, or would you like me to read it to you again?

Mr. Sargent: I do think there is a great area of duplication here, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1703?

Mr. Sargent: We had a good chairman a minute ago. Slow these guys down.

I do say that from where I sit, we do not hear too much about this $1 million spent up in Owen Sound, I think there is a concentration of spending in the Toronto market and maybe rightly so if this is the market where the would-be Tories are. They want to—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1703, citizenship? Is the member talking about citizenship?

Mr. Sargent: Yes. We are talking about spending $1 million on educating these people how to vote Tory. I would like the Minister to tell us why? What is the motivation for a person to take this language course that he is saying is available, and they get paid to take the course in education or under Manpower.

We have a great area of duplication. We have an exercise going on and I do not doubt for a moment that he will get a chance to get a shot at these people properly. He is going to give them the good treatment then. There is a good saturation potential there and I think this goes on.

Would the Minister advise? Does he get subsidies from Ottawa towards this? If so, what percentage?

Hon. Mr. Welch: In the teaching of English to adults, we recover from the government of Canada 50 per cent of the actual teaching costs of the actual salaries that we spend on this programme. In addition, we recover from The Department of the Secretary of State the full cost of text books.

Mr. Sargent: Could the Minister advise, under this citizenship branch, there must be some communication between the government and the applicant, the would-be user of this course. Is that right? Letters?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh yes. In fact—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Pictures too!

Hon. Mr. Welch: In fact, there are some very interesting letters from the students who graduate from these classes.

Mr. Sargent: I did not ask the Minister that. But at the starting point there must be a letter from this Minister and the Prime Minister saying they are making this thing available. You know, a nice big gesture. Do you do that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No.

Mr. Sargent: How is this launched?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now the member has mentioned it, perhaps we should look into that. That could be part of the acculturation process. Of course, many of these people work through the associations and societies that have grown up of people with like ethnic backgrounds. One of the big contact points and one very important in Toronto is the international institute with which group we work very closely.

Many of our people from Italy work through the COSTI organization. And so the influence goes out through this particular group.

I think the point I would like to make, and I want to emphasize this, Mr. Chairman, is that we co-operate with many volunteer groups in this programme. Our main job, we think, is through the language specialists we have to work with volunteers with respect to the teaching programme. Many of these programmes are operated as evening classes by boards of education and I am sure the board in Owen Sound would have a class or two, depending on the need in that area.

This is the type of programme which does develop. As we go through this, we work very closely with the federal government's Department of Citizenship, as I indicated earlier, because they, through their federal Department of Manpower and Immigration, come in contact immediately with these people on their arrival to assist them in their settling in in this country; at that time they would make known to them—because, after all, the government of Canada is a part of this language programme—the language training possibilities which are available.

Earlier, under Manpower and Immigration there was an opportunity offered. To the credit of our director of citizenship for the province, Mr. Colombo, Ottawa at one stage designated the acquisition of language as one of the skills for which compensation would be paid. There has been some modification but just for the sake of our discussion today, it was possible earlier for a man to come quickly into the programme and actually be paid while he was learning. Here, once again, is a useful tool in order to help him to integrate into the rest of Ontario and Canadian life.

There are many ways in which the services of this department are, in fact, made known in this co-operative spirit which exists between this department and other departments of this government and with those branches of the federal government which are just as interested and just as concerned in this programme as we are here.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1703? The hon. member for Port Arthur had been trying to get the floor—

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, we have ethnic ghettos at the Lakehead. I do not say that in any bad sense of the term at all, but from the point of view that we have groups of people of the same ethnic origin who simply gather together. Socially, they are almost always together and their big barrier, of course, is that they do not speak the English language.

I know people who have been in this country for 40 years and still cannot speak English, except maybe hello-goodbye. Obviously, these people are at a disadvantage for any employment opportunities. In Port Arthur, for example, we call one area there Little Finland, because we have about 10,000 people of Finnish background who live there, as the Minister, I am sure knows. In Fort William, we have 9,000 or 10,000 people of Ukrainian background. They do, primarily, stick together and I think that language is their big problem.

I just wonder to what extent this department reaches out to those people? Obviously, a lot of them are not aware that they could learn the English language at very little expense. I think perhaps a lot of them would like to learn English but have never done so and are at the point of saying, "well, it is good enough for my children and my descendants." I wonder whether the department does a job of salesmanship with this kind of people?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I think it is fair criticism with respect to any information-type programme. All I can say is that we try our best to make the programmes that are available known to as many people as we can. I would think any school board in any community would certainly include that type of programme in their adult education programme or night school, whatever they still call it.

I can only say that as part of our continuing attempt to make these facilities and this programme available to people, we would be only too happy to send further information to the various ethnic clubs in the riding of the hon. member or anywhere.

We have these little kits as well, Mr. Chairman; the language bulletins of government services in 13 languages as I mentioned the other day, including English and French. They are part of the information programme, and written in these various languages in the hope of introducing government work and government services to the people.

I think it is always fair criticism in any programme dealing with people that perhaps we can always do better; we can always do more to advertise these services and these facilities that are available for our people. I would hope that perhaps, having raised the question, we might now solicit the support of the hon. member in making that sort of thing known.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, there is another point that occurs to me on this. Besides the employment point and the fact that a lot of these people are really excluded from community activity because of the language barrier, there is another very important point that I think, perhaps, I realized more during the last provincial election campaign than I did at any other time.

It is this. All political parties, I think, will have a few key people in a given ethnic district, who speak English as well as the language of that ethnic group; let us say Italian, Finnish or Ukrainian. Now what happens? Because these people do not understand the English language and cannot follow the advertisement of various political programmes, they go to their friend who does speak English and that friend actually controls their vote.

If you are going to talk about citizenship, the one great right that we all have—to participate in government once every four years as far as the province is concerned—they have really forfeited to someone else, because they do not speak the language. This bothers me a great deal. I daresay I got a lot of votes this way.

You know; you know the right people who have a lot of influence in a district and—let us tell it like it is—you go to that person and convince them that you are the one. They will take care of, maybe, several hundred people who will vote merely because Mrs. So-and-So said that was the right person.

This is just how serious this language problem is. This is why I suggest, at this time, that the Minister and his department step up their programmes of salesmanship to reach these people and make them understand how important it is that they understand the English language.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister have any comments?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I want to be quite fair; there have been two speakers from this group. The hon. member for Thunder Bay has been trying to get the floor.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. About a year ago—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! The Chairman has pointed out that the last two speakers have been from the Liberal party. It is only fair that we recognize one from the New Democratic Party. I will do everything possible to see that seven Liberals speak as opposed to five NDPs, which is in perfect proportion. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, about a year ago I asked the Provincial Secretary during his estimates if his department was giving any thought to reviewing the conditions under which a person can vote in this province. I was quickly told by the Provincial Secretary and, in questioning, the Minister of Municipal Affairs that if he made any significant changes in the voting laws in the province he would, in some way, disenfranchise 180,000 people. I drew his attention to the fact that you had to be a Canadian citizen to run on a school board, but it was not necessary to be a Canadian citizen to vote in other elections.

It seemed to me to be highly irregular that we should have one set of values for one political office and another set of values for another political office. I was wondering if there were any on-going consultations with a view to revising the election laws and the requirement for citizenship at the municipal and the provincial levels.

It seems to me that it is not necessary for anybody who is interested in the Canadian way of life to spend five years in the country before he can become enfranchised. I think that it should be possible for this department to come up with a more realistic set of laws for somebody who really wants to take an active part in what is going on in the political life in our province at all levels. I think it is unfair that you should ask him to prove himself over a period of five years, in a good many cases, before he is given an opportunity. If he does not come from the British Isles or a British Commonwealth country we deny him that right for a period of five years.

This seems to be very, very unfair. I was wondering why you would not, after having admitted somebody into the province and into Canada, have them pass a test as to their knowledge of the country. Once the authorities, whoever they may be—whether it be your department or your counterpart at the federal level—have satisfied themselves that these people are familiar enough with the language and conversant enough with our laws, why should they not be given ample opportunity to express their opinion with regard to what is going on in the political scene much earlier than a five-year period? I was hoping that the Provincial Secretary would comment on that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This matter the hon. member mentions was raised a year ago and we have two or three points wrapped up in the comments.

The first, of course, we have to appreciate is that the government of Canada confers the status of citizen of Canada on those who apply and qualify.

Then there is the question of the basis of the franchise which is, really I think, the point which was raised earlier. As I understand The Legislative Assembly Act or the election law of the province, you must be a Canadian citizen—

Mr. Singer: No, British subject—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sorry, I am really quoting the amended Act—

Mr. Singer: The amended Act is not before the House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps the member for Downsview will let the Minister answer. Then he might comment on the Minister's answer at an appropriate time.

What I am trying to say is that all Canadian citizens are deemed by the Act to be British subjects and therefore, there is some reference now to British subjects in the Act.

What I really wanted to simplify was that Canada, the government of Canada, changed that, as I understand their Act, and said: "Canadian citizen or other British subject". As I understand the draft Election Act that came before the Legislature, from the select committee, they used the same wording.

It would seem to me that if we are going to talk about the basis of who has the vote, that is where we should hope there might be some expression of the opinion of the Legislature through the report of the select committee on The Election Act.

I have been reading in the papers recently that, I think it is, the federal member for Scarborough—or one of the Scarborough ridings—has a private bill before the House of Commons now to eliminate this distinction and to treat all newcomers to Canada the same way and to make Canadian citizenship the sole basis.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope their private bill has a better fate than ours.

Hon. Mr. Welch: As far as I am concerned, I am the first to agree with the hon. member that there is some inconsistency on this subject within our own legislation, with the school board legislation about which the hon. member for York South is quite familiar, providing that only a Canadian citizen can sit on the school board of the province. In the other legislation we still have the British subject in this favoured position.

All I can say is that I would hope that as we consider the election law, particularly the new one that is before us, that might be the opportunity that we, as members, would have in expressing our opinion with respect to that basis.

I want to point out one other thing. As you know, to get our status of citizen—this goes back to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight). Before anyone can vote in this country they have to be, in fact, a Canadian citizen if they come from these other countries, and as part of their application for citizenship they have to have some proficiency in the English language.

I certainly am one who would want to dissociate myself from any concept that new people vote in blocks according to how some boss might tell them how to vote. I have more respect for the individuality of these people who exercise pretty keen judgment on their own.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Call it a theory of the Liberal Party.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Certainly that is my approach with any new people with whom I come in contact. If anybody says he can deliver a certain number of votes, I would hold him in the greatest of suspicion.

Mr. Sargent: Just like the unions—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps we could sum up by simply saying this, that I think the comment made by the hon. member places the matter before the House, and perhaps the place for that to be expressed further is at the time of the consideration of the new election legislation which will be before this Legislature.

Mr. Knight: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Point of order. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: I would make it clear to the members of the House that I would not go out and solicit block votes. I am suggesting that this is happening, regardless of who the candidate may be, as a reality—maybe not a desirable one and certainly not as a reflection on these people—but if I did not understand the language of the county. We all do it anyway. We consult with other people as to who we should vote for. But when you cannot even understand the speeches and you do not even know what is written on the paper, you are going to go to somebody you rely on to tell you who to vote for.

I am saying this is a disadvantage to these people. Certainly, I would have more advantage in deciding who I am going to vote for because I understand all these speeches better than a person who does not understand the language. But I want to make it absolutely clear that I would not condone the candidate soliciting block votes.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Speaking to this point of order, Mr. Chairman, how many people cannot speak English and yet, are citizens?

Mr. Singer: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member was speaking.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I think the points have been made. The hon. member for Downsview may have the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this morning in the private bills committee there was a private bill from the city of Toronto which dealt with a new procedure for by-election and the council for that municipality. And they repeated the qualifications presently in The Election Act. Much to the embarrassment of a colleague of this hon. Minister, the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), who was there, when the qualification "British subject" came up, the Minister of Municipal Affairs had to say: "Well, something is happening, we are not quite sure what it is."

I do not blame anyone other than the government in this regard, because they repeat—the solicitor for the city of Toronto—repeats the qualification still contained in The Election Act. One would have thought that this Minister would have been eager and anxious to do this far in advance of waiting for any report of any select committee.

In fact, what the Minister said—and I suspect it is not really binding—he threw out as a side suggestion that hopefully some day soon the House is going to consider the select committee's report. There has been no indication from anyone on the government side. I do not know whether the Provincial Secretary is qualified to give it or not, but there has been no indication from anyone on the government side that this is anything more than another report that can, perhaps, sit on the shelf for days or months or years and perhaps never really be considered in the form in which it is presented.

I would hope the Minister has the power and the authority to say that the government is going to bring in a bill somewhat in the form recommended by the select committee. If that is so, I would commend them for it. But I suspect he has not that power and he has not that authority. I would like to hear it from him if he has been commissioned to do that by his leader, because we do not really know. The fact is, as recently as this morning, Mr. Chairman, we passed a bill out of the private bills committee that referred to voting qualifications in terms of only being a British subject. And there was no effort to change it.

An amendment was suggested and the Minister said: "Well, we can't really do it." The Minister of Municipal Affairs admitted that an education bill had gotten through by accident, changing it.

Let me relate the discussion that took place in our select committee. An amendment was moved—interestingly enough—by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) saying that the words "British citizen" be deleted and the words "Canadian citizen" be substituted. At this point, some of the government members on that committee said: "Oh, this is a terrible thing, let us compromise as we always do and let us use this resounding phrase: 'a Canadian citizen or other British subject'."

So, half a loaf being better than none, those of us who thought that the suggestion made by the member for Kenora had substantial merit—but perhaps would have difficulty in getting the whole thing through all in one fell swoop and causing this great revolution in the province of Ontario—accepted this compromise.

So, the unanimous report of the committee reads: any person of voting age, a Canadian citizen or other British subject who has a residence qualification—and so on. Mr. Chairman, how long is it going to be before it comes to pass, if, as recently as this morning, the government of Ontario was unable to speak in this fashion. We have a Department of Citizenship, Minister of Citizenship, our own flag, our own anthem, and on and on and on. We also have the Minister concentrating in 13 languages to spread the message of Canadian citizenship. Why does he not call it Canadian citizenship in our own statutes and be done with it? Do not wait for the final deliberations. Let us show a little initiative and a little imagination and be proud that we are Canadians.

It being 6.00 of the clock, the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND CITIZENSHIP (Concluded)

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1703, citizenship. The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I would like for a few minutes to direct the attention of the Minister (Mr. Welch) back to the question of citizenship. He spoke in answer to the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) before the recess for supper, but there is a very great feeling among the newcomers to Canada that the five-year wait for citizenship is far too long.

I quite realize that this is a federal matter but I would like to ask the Minister whether or not he thinks it possible that this government, or this Legislature, might make representations to the federal government in respect to this matter.

A lot of people who come here look upon the five-year period as just too extended. They learn the language. They make up their minds that they are going to stay in Canada and make this their native country. They feel that once they have a working knowledge of the language and have determined they are going to stay here, that they should be allowed then to apply for citizenship even though the five-year term has not expired. They think that at the end of two years, three years, or whatever it may be, they should be allowed to make this application, to enter the full privilege of citizenship, to vote and to participate in the future of the country.

So I would urge, Mr. Chairman, through you, to the Minister, that some representation might be made from provincial governments to the federal government in this respect—that is the shortening of the term for citizenship. There is no reason why, because our forefathers said five years, that in this day and age we should not say two years, three years, or as soon as the person may be ready.

We have coming into this country great numbers of very industrious new Canadians. I know in my own area we have great numbers of Italians, people who have made a great contribution already to the building of that part of Metropolitan Toronto. And this is true of the other cities because so many of these immigrants are in construction. They are buying their homes, they are settling down and raising families, they are building their schools, they are part and parcel of the community—as a matter of fact in many areas they are the community, and they feel that they have a right to determine the direction which that community ought to take.

So I would urge upon the Minister that this be done, that this kind of representation be made.

The second thing I would like to raise with the Minister is something a little different. There is a growing body of opinion among these people that even though the federal government might refuse to act, provincially and municipally some new arrangement should be made so that they could vote after a time lag, a certain number of years spent in the country. After they have decided to stay here, after they have become property owners, or whatever the situation may be, they should be allowed to vote even without that citizenship—if the federal government will not move.

Personally I think that citizenship is important, but there is a growing body of opinion, and I bring it to the House tonight, that even though federally citizenship should not be allowed before five years are up, the vote might be arranged at these lower levels of government—provincially and municipally—after a shorter time.

I attended a meeting last Sunday morning, Mr. Chairman, called by a committee of Italian Canadians. Some of them have been here for some time, some not so long, but that meeting was called specifically to air this problem. They invited members of the various levels of government. I was there as one of those representatives. Federal members were there too, and municipal.

This was their cry—that they wanted this kind of consideration. They are quite willing that they should get citizenship and wait for it, provided the time was shortened. But they also said that if that is not possible then they would like considered this whole idea of municipal and provincial voting, with certain limitations, even before the citizenship came. One student who has been here for three years spoke, and put the case very well where he said, in effect:

I have come here, I am in the midst of my university course, I am interested in politics, I would very much like to participate at this stage actively in the government of this nation, because I like Canada. I plan to stay here. This is my home. Italy is no longer my home in the sense that I have no intention of going back there to live. I am settling here. I am a Canadian. I would very much like to apply for my citizenship now.

His English is good; he is being educated; he is a thoughtful person; he determined that he is going to stay here, and participate and build Canada. This was a case of a young man. There were several like that in the audience who could express themselves very, very well and yet they have to wait several more years, in some cases, before they can even apply for citizenship. They felt that this is an injustice.

So I convey to you tonight, Mr. Chairman, and to the Minister through you, this desire of a growing body of our population that some real change should take place in this whole field of citizenship. I would urge upon the Minister two things, the two things I have outlined: One, that representations be made in a realistic and powerful way to the federal government that the time for application for citizenship be changed so that the time factor be shortened; and two, that real consideration should be given to this whole idea of how these people can participate at the municipal and provincial level, even though the federal government refuses to act in this field.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1703, the hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak on the matter of immigration, but since the member did rise and mention it, perhaps I ought to pass a few comments on this subject. Perhaps I am in a better position to do so than most, as aside from Charles Cash, presently serving in the federal House, I think I am the only European-born member who is sitting occupying elected office in this country. Having been born out of the jurisdiction, born out of Canada, I have some idea of what acquiring—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): I am foreign-born also.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Where were you born?

Mr. Ben: I apologize, I forgot.

Mr. Singer: Where?

An hon. member: In America, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ben: Well, I was referring to other than any English-speaking country.

Mr. Singer: In Alabama?

Mr. Ben: Many people feel that a country which imposes a waiting period of five years, or the like, before one can acquire citizenship, is imposing a penalty on those that immigrate into that particular country. That is one way of looking at it, and perhaps, in some quarters, a justifiable way of looking at it. However, I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member for Yorkview, that there is another side to the picture, and that is, any country does not want a person to hastily take on to himself the decision of renouncing the citizenship of the country of his birth. And in many cases it is necessary.

An hon. member: It is a matter of choice.

Mr. Ben: It is his choice, but I think it is wise that a person should not be permitted to make it too hastily. Again, the echo came from over there, it is his choice. Too many people are motivated by their first impressions.

I happen to know many people who came here intending to make this their home, and after they got here they expressed an intention of so doing because, if the hon. member for Yorkview will recall, at one time you had to file a declaration of intention of becoming a citizen. I know many of those who came here, filed those declarations, and then changed their minds. I have to be frank, Mr. Chairman, and point out that an overwhelming majority of those who changed their minds did not in essence change it that much. They were using Canada as a stepping stone to going into the United States of America. I would say that about 90 per cent of them were doing that.

So, although I agree with the hon. member for Yorkview that there should be some scheme worked out where these people who have quickly adapted themselves to our habits, our customs and our traditions, and have familiarized themselves with our language, should be able to participate actively in politics, but I just do not feel that the answer to it is conferring rights of citizenship upon these people at an earlier date. I rather suspect that if they went to a testing office and they were asked who is the Prime Minister of Canada and a man said, "John Robarts", he would pass.

Mr. Young: You have to have your standards.

Mr. Ben: There should be some scheme worked out. I do not think that citizenship is the criterion.

If I may say a few words, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the point raised by my colleague for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight). I do so just to allay his fears that perhaps these new Canadians have a familiarity with the English language that is not as good as it should be, and may not be as well informed on political issues as those who read the English papers adequately. We are fortunate that this government, the governments of the different provinces and the government of Canada have unpaid help in acclimatizing these people to their new country, to this Canada of ours, and that unpaid help is the Canadian ethnic press, which acts as a sort of transit camp for the traditions of those who come into this country.

I do not know how many new Canadian publications there are, but I note that in the public accounts, for the last fiscal year reported, this department spent some $51,000 for new Canadian publications. These perform a great service to this country because they do translate the items that are most newsworthy into the languages of new citizens coming to our shores. Roughly, I would say that there are close to 50 of these publications distributed in Ontario, and that they have a weekly circulation of between 700,000 and one million issues in I do not know how many tongues.

Some of the larger ethnic groups have more than one. The Italians for a long time had only one publication, Couriere Italiano. A new Canadian, Mr. Malvisi came in and founded a new one, Giornale de Toronto, and pretty soon I think his was exceeding the circulation of the one that had been found earlier. The Ukrainians in Toronto have four publications. The only group that I can recall, offhand, that does not have a publication of its own is the Maltese, and I think that is maybe because they come from an island where English was the first if not the second language, and I think I am correct that they do not have a local publication in Maltese.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Maltese Herald.

Mr. Ben: They do, do they. In English or Maltese?

An hon. member: Both.

Mr. Ben: In both. Then that covers practically everyone and I am happy to hear that they do have a publication of their own.

So I am not too concerned that these people are not well informed. I think that generally speaking—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The member for Port Arthur says you are dreaming—

Mr. Ben: I did not hear him say that.

Mr. Stokes: That is what he told me.

Mr. Ben: Well then, you were dreaming when he told you that because I did not hear him tell you that either.

Mr. Stokes: That is what he told me.

Mr. Ben: He is a mind reader over there.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: He felt that the department here could do more to bring to these people the issues that pertain at any election time. I thought that was the gist of his argument, that the government was not doing enough.

I think perhaps more support should be coming from this government to those newspapers in the way of grants for the publication of educational articles. At the present time they publish ads which translate many of the rules and regulations that come into force—for instance, building codes and safety rules and regulations would no doubt be printed in Italian in the Italian newspapers and that is laudable—but I think more money should be given to have these newspapers print articles that would help these people adapt themselves to their environment that much earlier.

The Minister pointed out that there are certain associations or institutions in the province that do help these people. He mentioned the International Institute of Metropolitan Toronto, and I note that in the last fiscal year, it received $16,000 from this particular department. I do believe that it also received a grant from The Department of Education. I am not positive of that but I rather suspect it did. I note that COSTI, the Italian community educational centre, did receive $13,977, and in checking The Department of Education estimates, I found that it received an additional $8,000 from there.

But I have not been able to find two very worthy organizations in the city of Toronto mentioned in either this Minister's estimates or in the estimates of The Department of Education, and I refer to the University Settlement on Grange Street and the St. Christopher's House. Perhaps the University Settlement may be receiving its funds indirectly from the University of Toronto, I cannot say. Nevertheless, they still, if they do receive such funds, go to Metro Toronto and the city of Toronto for funds to help to operate this settlement house. As far as—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Do you want to give a credit line to the man who conceived and helped build the settlement house.

Mr. Ben: I would be very happy to do that; yes, I would indeed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick (Mr. Grossman).

Mr. Ben: I tell you, Mr. Chairman, I believe giving credit where credit is due, and when it comes to a discussion of the new Canadian groups in this city, I must say that credit goes to the hon. Minister of Correctional Services. He seldom avoids accepting an invitation to honour a gathering of these new Canadians with his presence. I have to make the same statement to the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) who once held the portfolio that the hon. Minister of Citizenship and the Provincial Secretary now holds, and in all fairness I must say that as the Minister of Citizenship, this present holder of that office does not stint in lending his presence to these gatherings to make these people feel at home.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I believe in giving credit where credit is due and this particular Minister and the others seem to know very well the background of these people, and I compliment them on it. The fact is, there still is not a grant in these estimates for St. Christopher's House which is in the riding of the hon. Minister of Correctional Services. And I would ask, why not? This particular settlement serves, you might say, 90 per cent of the Portuguese in the city of Toronto, and I would say that 90 per cent of the Portuguese in the province are centred in the city of Toronto. I just cannot understand why there is not a grant for them mentioned here.

As I say, I cannot see the University Settlement mentioned or St. Christopher's House. And I would like to ask the hon. Minister why there are no provisions either in his estimates or in the estimates of the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), and I might say I also looked at the estimates of The Department of Social and Family Services and there are no grants there either. Surely there must be some reason why you do not support these worthy institutions. Would the Minister please answer that?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): I am not able to speak, Mr. Chairman, as far as other departments are concerned. It was the thought and the approach of this department that in supporting the work of, say the international institute in its multi-ethnic approach, that perhaps we were in some way getting ourselves involved in the overall work. I am not familiar, very frankly, with the programme of St. Christopher's House or the University Settlement. I would be very happy to take a look at it as it relates to the activities of this particular department and to meet with whatever other Ministers may be involved directly or indirectly with this work, but particularly from the standpoint mentioned by the hon. member as to the programmes there and how we might be helpful in some way even within the existing programmes of language training. I would be very happy, now that I have had the comments of the hon. member, to take a look into it.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, is this vote 1703 on citizenship?

Mr. Chairman: Has the hon. member for Humber finished his remarks?

Mr. Ben: Not quite, not quite.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the hon. Minister would just wait a moment?

Mr. Ben: Again I appreciate the Minister's desire to be progressive in this particular matter.

If I may offer another suggestion to him, I think the Minister is well familiar with the number of ethnic halls scattered throughout the length and breadth of this province, and I think that they also serve a very great purpose in adapting the newcomers into our environment, helping them to become politically acute—if that makes some members happy—helping them to learn the language, helping them learn our customs, our habits and traditions. I think that those who do run classes in these buildings should receive either an abatement in their taxes to the degree that they use these buildings for educational purposes, or should receive grants in lieu of taxes in proportion to the moneys expended for educational purposes.

Educational purposes may not just be reading, writing and arithmetic; they could be cultural activities where people meet and get an idea of what the culture of their fellow Canadians is like, because that is also an education in itself. I would appreciate it if the Minister could give consideration to giving some relief to these people who do run cultural and educational activities in their premises, because all this goes to make a more beautiful mosaic of what we call Canada.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I have a very important matter, Mr. Chairman, as this is vote 1703 under citizenship. I wonder if it would be in order to introduce some very important young citizens of the province. Some of the members of the St. George Young Progressive Conservatives are in the gallery.

Mr. Chairman: I am sure the committee is glad to welcome our visitors this evening.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if the Minister could advise me what liaison there is between Trade and Development and its services, and transportation and communication or recreation in his department. They have an immigration branch, as I understand it. Would the Minister advise me:

1. What liaison is there between their services available to people outside our country and our province, and the Minister's department when they come in here?

2. Does he have any feedback at all in connection with the services provided by Trade and Development?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am glad this question was asked because it helps to illustrate in a very real way the type of co-ordination we seek in this overall programme. The work of immigration, insofar as this government is concerned, comes under the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) as mentioned, and their particular function is one of recruitment for special skills needed insofar as this province and its development are concerned. We work with them in much the same way that we have these meetings with the federal Department of Immigration and Manpower—or Manpower and Immigration, whatever the order should be—in the hopes that as they arrive and as they start their life in this province, we would be following up with them and working with them as much as we can.

I cannot speak definitely for that branch of government except to say that they work through the various trade offices which are maintained throughout the world, at locations which are noted, and as I say they have their special programme of recruitment, I think insofar as they are related to industrial needs and skills.

Mr. Bullbrook: Most respectfully to the Minister, platitudes are acceptable but not at this time of night.

Could he tell me, in answer to my question, what direct liaison exists between his department and the other?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I know that the member for Sarnia did not attempt to have selective hearing but I thought that was what I was doing when I was answering. I was not extending platitudes, I was attempting very honestly to answer his question. I will repeat my answer. We meet monthly with the officials of this department. We are in very close contact with all of their activities, particularly as they would relate to our general programme of integration. We meet with this department as we do with the officials of The Department of Manpower and Immigration, who have the broader immigration responsibilities insofar as the country is concerned. There is very close liaison and co-ordination.

Mr. Bullbrook: The hon. Minister used the word "platitude." I did not mean to be unduly offensive; I was just suggesting, for example, that there was a degree of self aggrandisement in the attitude of liaison.

I am wondering if the hon. Minister can tell me what members of his department meet with what members of The Department of Trade and Development in connection with these programmes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The director and the assistant director of citizenship, and the two liaison officers of the department who are stationed here in Toronto.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, under this vote, on language training, are there any funds in this allocated to the training of the House in the French language, or is that under the civil service vote?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There are no funds in this vote for that.

Mr. Paterson: Not anywhere in your department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No.

Vote 1703 agreed to.

On vote 1704:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, the whole ball of wax insofar as the Queen's Printer is concerned covers probably $1 million or $2 million; we cannot ever assess what is involved here. In this particular vote we are talking about $300,000. But it is an amazing thing to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have in the press all day reports about Ottawa, the trouble down there, the scandals that the auditors—

Mr. Singer: Criticism.

Mr. Sargent: —have uncovered down there, and it is an amazing thing to me that never in the history of this province have the auditors come up with anything which would be critical of the operation of the government.

Mr. Singer: That is a very good question. And do not throw your hands up because you are not angels, not a single one of you.

Mr. Sargent: It is pretty hard to believe that those things can happen in an intelligent society, but we are broadminded enough to know that these things can happen, and they do happen, at the federal level. They have a system that will scrutinize the books and will level with the public and say, "these things are not right." But you people try to con us into believing that nothing ever happens over there.

Mr. Singer: That is the point.

Mr. Sargent: And the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) sits there and he shakes his head and he smiles, and he will say, "We got by another year with our estimates." You are up tomorrow are you not? We will get a shot at you pretty soon. But I think the Treasury bench should be ashamed of the fact that they will not level with the people of Ontario and say, "We have an auditors branch that does a job, not for the Tory party, but for the people of Ontario." I would like the Minister to tell me, in the administration of his office, have the auditors ever brought to you any irregularities in the operation of your branch?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There are no springs, no water, in the basement of the Queen's Printer's building here in Toronto. You can think that one over. Insofar as the Queen's Printer's operation is concerned, I am advised that the only problem that has been brought to our attention was a shortage of five cents in connection with the operation of the Ontario Gazette.

Mr. Sargent: This is a good example of—
Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: If they can get an intelligent guy like this Minister to go along like that, what the hell happens to the rest of us? It shows what a snow job is going on here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): He is worth calling an Aberdonian.

Mr. Sargent: We will assume then that we do not need any auditors at all. Nothing is ever wrong. And you are saying, as a Minister of the Crown—you are telling me, sir—that to your knowledge, on your honour, you have never had any irregularities brought to you at all, as far as the Queen's Printer's branch, or any aspect of your branch, is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think in all fairness, Mr. Chairman, it should be pointed out that the fact that the auditor, in examining the books in all branches of this department, has brought in a clean bill of health, is not evidence of the fact that we do not need an auditor. It is just evidence of the fact that there is proper and efficient administration. This is a good department about which, to raise this question, because there is a tremendous amount of revenue produced by this department. When you think of the companies branch and the registrar general's branch, to name only two—and this branch too, the sale of publications—there is a tremendous amount of revenue for the province here. A continual audit is going on on a regular basis.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And just a nickel short, imagine that.

Mr. Sargent: Going back as little as five years ago, your department was the most scandalous branch in the history of government here in Ontario. We had a crime report based around your department.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): We are talking about the estimates for next year.

Mr. Sargent: That is all right, Mr. Minister. Getting to the Queen's Printer, and this department—

Mr. Singer: This is why he worries.

Mr. Sargent: I am involved in the printing business, I know something about this business, and never to my knowledge have I ever had a chance to get any business from the Queen's Printer in my part of Ontario. I do not suggest that I would want any, being a conflict of interest, but I was mayor of Owen Sound for a number of years, and I never had five cents of printing in my life from Owen Sound, because it does not work that way. I would like to suggest, though, that I ought to have a chance to refuse any of this business. But I would like to know how much decentralization of bids there is for printing these millions of dollars worth of material that you are spending money on here—the complete waste of thousands and thousands of dollars of stuff we get on our desks that we never read. I think we must get at least hundreds of pounds of mail each year that none of us ever looks at. This is a matter of record. The best filing cabinet we have is our waste basket.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Every one of the Ministers has his own little empire. They are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on promotion and what have you. So I suggest that there is something radically wrong when you have a centralization of all this printing in the city of Toronto, so that I do not have a chance to bid, and no one up our way has a chance to bid. I would like to know how you would assess who gets all this gravy.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think we should comment on this, Mr. Chairman. The operation of this particular branch of this department really does not function the way the member has mentioned. Let us talk about the purchasing of printing. If it is estimated that the cost of any particular requisition or need will be under $1,000 we have a very systematic sharing of this printing throughout the whole province of Ontario.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): On what basis?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am just coming to that now. In this province, anyone who is in the printing business can go on the list of the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Singer: How?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): How do they do that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: They simply write a letter.

Mr. Singer: Who writes the letter?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just a minute. They simply write a letter to the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Singer: That does you no good.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. members would permit the Provincial Secretary to give an explanation, and then they may heckle or talk or discuss whichever matter they wish to do.

Hon. Mr. Welch: They simply write a letter to the Queen's Printer, and in correspondence with him, share with him some list of the type of equipment that they have in order to be categorized for the type of printing they can do. And on a regular basis, and it is there for anyone to see, Queen's Printer's work is shared throughout the entire province. I think in fairness to the members who made the interjections, there was a time that the Queen's Printer wanted, along with the letter from the printer himself, a letter from the member of Parliament on that area.

Mr. Singer: How long ago?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can assure the member that that has been discontinued for two years, and it is not required now to have the member of Parliament write a letter in connection with it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am very fascinated, really, by this remark. I suppose the Minister is just within the time limit.

Since I have been on the committee on public accounts, we did have the Queen's Printer in, and we asked him how one got on the list. He hemmed and hawed a bit and finally he said, because he is an honest man, "Well, if a member writes we put the name on the list." We said, "Why? Why is it necessary that my good friend, the member for Grey-Bruce, should have to write a letter about a printer who wants to have an opportunity"—and this is all it is—"an opportunity to tender on public business?" The Queen's Printer scratched his head and he said, "Well, it has always been done that way and that is the only way it is going to be done." Now, I am interested to hear the Provincial Secretary say it has been changed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: For the last two years.

Mr. Singer: For two years. Why was it ever done in the other way and why is it being changed now?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, the explanation that was given to me when I first became Minister of this department—and I asked the very same question—was the fact that the Queen's Printer does not have a great staff of inspectors and people to travel around the province. In order to have some evidence with respect to the establishment itself, and the fact that it was a business operation in some part of Ontario—simply as a matter of assisting him in identifying it—they asked the member; it did not matter who the member was, the member in the area where the business was located—for some type of letter saying, "John Jones does run this business in my riding". However, as of two years ago, it was felt in consultation—and I might say in consultation with me—that if this was to be interpreted in any way other than that, then simply let the printers write in and go on the list because no one (and I want this to be quite clear) no one in this province need be off the Queen's Printer's list; they need only indicate to the Queen's Printer that they want to go on his list; that is all they have to do.

Mr. Singer: Then could the Minister tell me why there is not public advertising of tenders? Why does there have to be a list, unless there is some system of preference? Surely if a printing contract is wanted and we have to print nine million copies of this document—

Hon. Mr. Welch: That would not go on the list.

Mr. Singer: Well, why not?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Because that would be assumed—

Mr. Singer: Why do we not just call for public tenders?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will tell you why.

Mr. Singer: I wish the Minister would because, Mr. Chairman, what the Minister has said is that a list is maintained which establishes a system of preference. Sure it is. Now tell us why he has to have the list at all?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We want to point out the fact—and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce who spoke illustrated one of the great problems that might come if in fact you grouped or bulked a lot of this together and bid—we wondered whether or not there would be a fair distribution of the printing for this government. So you take these particular smaller orders—of which I am told there could be at least 7,000 in any fiscal year—and where they are estimated to cost less than $1,000 they are shared on a very—

Mr. Sargent: What about the big orders?

Hon. Mr. Welch: —I will come to that—on a very fair basis throughout everybody in the province who is on the Queen's Printer's list.

Mr. Sargent: But it does not work that way.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now, if their estimated—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The list is open for examination at any time. Anybody who is shaking his head here tonight—the list is open for anybody to see it any time, where these small orders are going.

Mr. Singer: Will the Minister table it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There is no problem; it comes out quarterly. As to where this printing goes, it is in the book.

Mr. Singer: Why does the Minister not table the list?

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): It is in the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not have any list.

Mr. Singer: No, of course not—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will send the hon. member the last quarterly list I have here, if he wants to take a look at it.

Mr. Singer: Send us the full list.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It comes out every month. It is there for this very reason, that you can take a look and examine it.

However, let me go back to the $1,000. Anything that is estimated to be $1,000 has to go out for public tender, and that is the division that is made in the Queen's Printer, and there is the procedure open for it. If it is under $1,000, it is distributed in accordance with those who have registered with the Queen's Printer, who are further categorized on the type of equipment they have. The orders go out and are rotated in a very fair distribution throughout this province. If it is estimated to be over $1,000, it is public tender.

Mr. Kerr: You cannot have it better than that.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in every department we have these fantastically beautifully bound books that come in here with a big art overlay job—

Hon. Mr. Welch: By tender. Anything over $1,000—

Mr. Sargent: No, this is not the case.

Mr. Singer: You just said "imagine" and I think that was the proof.

Mr. Sargent: In the majority of cases, Mr. Chairman, these big jobs that come in, like the board of education jobs, with the big overlay in colour, those are not tender jobs, those are special presentations by the artists to the government. And a bill of goods is sold to the department on those. I have been in this printing business a long time and you cannot tell me those are not special deals. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this department here is the least one we should complain about in this area. I say that respectfully but I would like the Minister to tell me that if the auditors did come to him with a great discrepancy in this area, who would hear about it? Would the Opposition hear about it? Certainly not.

Mr. Kerr: What great overlays?

Mr. Sargent: The government says to me tonight for the press—there is nobody here, but for the press—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nobody? Are those people up there nobody?

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry. They say there is a five-cent discrepancy in the accounting of this province. Now, how naive can you expect the people of Ontario to be, in view of your past performance?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sargent: The Treasurer is not the watchdog.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I am not, but I have as much right to rise on a point of order as the hon. member has, or anyone in this assembly. On a point of order, I think it is appropriate to ask the hon. member whether he is challenging the veracity, the honesty and the adequate performance of the provincial auditor.

Mr. Sargent: I am certainly challenging the fact that you will not allow an independent audit of the affairs of this province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Another point of order, Mr. Chairman; the point of order is this, that the provincial auditor is a servant of this Legislature, he is not a servant of the government.

Mr. Ben: He admitted in this House that he did not audit the books. All we can do is take your word for it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Any discussions in connection with the provincial auditor will be kept for the provincial auditor's vote.

Mr. Lewis: I fear apoplexy in the House, Mr. Chairman. Could the Minister tell us who—

Mr. Singer: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: —who puts out The Department of Lands and Forests publication, the annual report?

Mr. Singer: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Shulman: Nobody said it was a point of order.

An hon. member: It is a way to get into the debate.

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. Minister completing the answers to certain questions?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member for Scarborough West posed a question and—

Mr. Chairman: He had directed a question to the hon. Minister; I believe he wanted an answer.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but if it is felt that the member was on his feet—

Mr. Chairman: Well, I had recognized the hon. member for Scarborough before the hon. member for Grey-Bruce had risen.

Mr. Lewis: Well then, could I—

Mr. Sargent: I was in the middle of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman: All right, I am sorry, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce had not completed his questions. I did not realize that.

Mr. Sargent: It is very important to the conduct of this House, Mr. Chairman, that the Provincial Treasurer has put himself into this debate by very pointedly defending the provincial auditor.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will always defend the provincial auditor.

Mr. Chairman: That is out of order we are not dealing with the provincial auditor's department.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you let him have the time to lay a charge I want to reply to it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I was not laying a charge.

Mr. Chairman: We had been discussing the provincial auditor and all remarks are out of order.

Mr. Sargent: I want to challenge this Minister, Mr. Chairman, on the fact that he will not allow an independent audit of the books of this province—

Mr. Chairman: Your remarks are out of order.

Mr. Sargent: What are you afraid of then?

Mr. Chairman: We are dealing with vote 1704, the Queen's Printer, not the provincial auditor.

Vote 1704, the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, last year the Provincial Secretary kindly explained to us the procedures of these accounts under $1,000—these printing jobs of less than $1,000—and he has explained just now the equitable distribution of these around all the printers who wish to be on the list, but what concerns me this year and concerned me last year was, what sort of check is there to be sure that we are getting proper value for this printing? After all, we are not in the business of subsidizing the printing industry in the province. We are interested in getting the best value in printing and you may recall that last year, the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Good) and myself raised examples of our Christmas card bills being well out of line; we both learned well from last year, to go to other than a Queen's Printer and we got our cards then, this year, for considerably less or equivalent value.

Is there someone independent who is familiar with printing costs and really knows this thoroughly, who is checking on the cost of this printing—and it is not going out to tenders, because we are not interested, as I mentioned before, in subsidizing the printing industry. We want to be sure there is an independent check on these smaller jobs, totalling probably $7 million, that is giving us good value for the printing. What is the method of independently checking these smaller jobs of printing?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, on the staff of the Queen's Printer there are three qualified estimators and it is on the basis of their examination of the order that comes from the particular department of government requiring printing, that an assessment is made with respect to the under or over $1,000 and they are quite qualified and competent in estimating. Having made a decision, they send it out on the basis of this list and whoever's turn it may be and then this work is given to this particular firm.

I think in fairness that if the printing order was to come back with any wide difference insofar as the estimation is concerned, then of course, the printer would be contacted and asked for some explanation. And I think in fairness, if the explanation was not satisfactory he might well be removed from the list—

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty I had last year, and which the hon. member for Waterloo North had, was that the actual printing bill that we got and estimated—at least the Queen's Printer obviously thought the printer was giving good value—was about double what we were able to get the job done for elsewhere and this is our concern. Do we have new estimates now?

Mr. Chairman: I believe the hon. Minister is going to provide an answer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If you want an answer, there has been no change in the estimators.

Mr. Deacon: I do hope they are taking a course on estimating.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I think there are a few things we ought to get straight here and that is, that the printing of this government is used to subsidize the ward chests of the Tory party and there are no two ways about it.

There is one of the hon. members who is subsidizing the Tory party by paying those outrageous prices for printing to the Queen's Printer; then part of it goes into the Tory ward chest; and this has been known for a long time. Look at the reports that come out: Who designed these fancy covers? Why should there have to be gold lettering on a report on the teaching of religion in schools? Why should there have to be hard covers on 90 per cent of these publications, when they only end up in the incinerator anyway, as an hon. member pointed out? Sure, we look at them and read them for one session or two and some reports we have to keep on our shelves for 10 or 15 years because they are never considered after they are printed and are still sitting on our shelves.

But who orders these hard covers on them? Who jacks up the prices 10 or 15 per cent and then sends the Tory bag man here to get a cut of the money to put in your chest?

Now, do not act innocent because we all know that goes on and that is why we objected to your resisting an independent audit of the activities of this government. All he does is accept the figures you give him and he adds them up and he says, "By jove, you have made a nickel error in your addition." Now that is just a bunch of malarkey. If you think you are shoving that down the throats of the taxpayers you have got another think coming. They are not that gullible. That baloney that you are trying to shove down their throats smells and they will not swallow it. So do not try to make out you have got a halo on your head and say that you cut out this business of having a letter come from a member before you can get him on the list. We know that they can put him on the list and then they just list and fall down while they are waiting to get some work out of it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Ben: Do not feed us that baloney, as I say. You know we just regurgitate. What we want to know is why you spend so much on printing in this government? We want to know, as was asked by the hon. member who just sat down, are we getting value for our money? For instance how many pencils has the department bought and what do they do with the pencils, do they use them in the normal way, do they still use pencils or do they use ballpoint? Not once has this provincial auditor come up with any sensible answers. As a matter of fact he admits he does not audit, he adds up figures that you give him and that is all.

So do not give us that. You know every time a new Minister comes in here, we are supposed to accept that in two years there is going to be a bull coming from the Vatican making him a saint. We do not buy that either.

Mr. Singer: Even if he gives audiences.

Mr. Ben: Even if he gives audiences. Now, just do not sit up and appear over-virtuous; do not tell us about water in the bottom of the Queen's Printer building. Ask the Minister of Public Works—he is not here now—but he will tell you some of his buildings are sitting on underground streams. They did not bother to tell us—you know they only put down a foundation. I sat on municipal council when they found they had, I think it was Mud Stream or something running down through the complex—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mud Creek. Get it right.

Mr. Ben: What is it?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mud Creek.

Mr. Ben: Mud Creek—well, it is in the hon. member's riding, I think, so he ought to know. So they are having trouble with water in their basements too.

Who is it that decides whether there is going to be a hard cover on a report or a soft cover; whether there is going to be gold printing or just plain ordinary Tory blue printing? Tell us, who decides this? Who decides how much you are going to spend on a publication?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I want to get quite straight. Baloney or no baloney, depending on a value judgment, there are enough members in this House that know that the charges made by the hon. member just are not true.

To suggest in this House—and I have listened and if the hon. member will just listen—to suggest in the House that on the basis of the rotational system in the Queen's Printer office, only supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party get printing is absolute falsehood. It is a scandalous statement to make because you know it is not true. There are members who represent ridings for other political parties who know very well that there is absolutely no consideration given with respect to the political affiliation or the political colour of the printer or the area from which he operates. Let us get that straight. That sort of—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order.

Mr. Ben: He is convicting himself—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ben: —convicting himself. Only the rotating list, he did not make that statement about the others.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce is attempting to—

Mr. Sargent: The hon. Minister has made a very wide-reaching statement. I challenge him to furnish that list in the House of the people who had—

Mr. Chairman: That is no point of order.

Mr. Sargent: It is a point of order. He is making—

Mr. Chairman: No point of order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Sargent: —a list of the people who had business last year with the province—

Mr. Chairman: There is no point of order.

Mr. Sargent: —on those big contracts.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I have already told the hon. member for Downsview I will table the list.

Mr. Sargent: I do not want the list, I want the money you spent and who with.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is on the list.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The printer and the amount that he got and where he is; it is all on the list, it is all there to be examined. There is nothing to hide—

Mr. Ben: You bring the books of Espie Printing here; those are the books we want to see and a few others that I could name who do your work, the Tory candidates' work, at cut rate prices because of the printing they get.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or does he wish to enter the debate?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, my point of order is, how do—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Burr: My point of order is: How do you get into a debate when people keep jumping up in between, and when you have been up for half an hour?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I would say to the hon. member, the only way you will get in is if the rest of the committee gives a little bit of attention to the Chair, so he can find out which member rises first, and then the Chairman will recognize him. The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, if I might just clear up one other point, the hon. member attempts to draw some attention to the distinction which I have made in my former statement between the under $1,000 and the over $1,000. I said specifically the under $1,000 to show the distinction of the work throughout the province because I had already said earlier that if the cost is estimated over $1,000, it is on tender, and therefore this is open and available for members to see the tenders with respect to this type of printing.

Mr. Sargent: It does not work that way at all.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman, my first question of the Minister is: What percentage of government printing is handled by, or sanctioned by, the Queen's Printer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am in no position to answer that question, I really do not know.

Mr. Sargent: Each Minister makes his own decision.

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, the system that I described, the method of acquisition of printing through the Queen's Printer, is that we really perform a function as an agent for those departments of government and those commissions who ask the Queen's Printer to purchase this printing for them. As to the percentage of total government printing which is done, I am afraid I cannot answer that question. I can only account for that which is handled by the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman: The Department of Education is one department that does quite a bit of its own arrangements for printing, and the questions that I want to ask the Minister are: Why is not this Queen's Printer, whose work I thought until tonight was so commendable, not given wider jurisdiction? Why do not all of the departments get him to handle their work because, if he is as good as we are given to believe, he could save the government a great deal of money?

Just to give you one example, I drew to the attention of the House some time ago this little document—you can hardly see it; it is less than one-eighth of an inch thick, not very big, has 28 pages and only about 12 pages of print. There are 11 completely blank pages in it, and without your glasses you could not possibly read the title page. This costs $1.20 per copy for 5,000 copies.

Mr. Bullbrook: What is the document?

Mr. Burr: This is the College of Art Report for September, 1968.

Mr. Lewis: Part of the self aggrandisement policy.

Mr. Burr: An acquaintance of mine went to one of the top printers in the country to ask what this would cost and the answer was 74 cents. So for an order of $6,000, it would be $5,995. Actually, this printer would have done the job and have been happy to do it for $3,705.

An hon. member: And still make a profit?

Mr. Burr: And still make a profit, yes. So, Mr. Chairman, my question of the Minister is: could not the Queen's Printer supervise the work of all the departments and in that way save us a great deal of money?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1704, Queen's Printer. We have had a New Democratic member so we will have a Liberal member. It will even them off.

Mr. Singer: I will gladly yield, Mr. Chairman. I will gladly yield to the Minister if he wants to answer the last member's speech.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I certainly do want to answer it.

Mr. Singer: I do not want to lose my place after him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question raised by the member for Sandwich-Riverside, I cannot speak in connection with the particular document. We would have to check our records to find out whether or not that order was placed through the Queen's Printer.

An hon. member: You ought to be able to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It does not necessarily follow that if the Queen's Printer's name is not on the document that we have them printed. It is only for those official documents that are tabled in the House, I think, that—

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman, I asked the question in the House and this was printed, I think, by a Toronto printer named Cate.

Mr. Singer: Oho, we know about him.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, as you know, the Queen's Printer does no printing himself. Cate could well have printed some material for the Queen's Printer. In other words, the Queen's Printer only places printing.

The important point here is that in order to specifically find out I would have to have the Queen's Printer check the order forms to see whether or not that order was placed through the Queen's Printer or not.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): The point is using the name under false pretences.

Hon. Mr. Welch: But his name does not appear on it. The Queen's Printer's name is not on that document. The point is that there are a number of commissions and departments of this government who in fact put all their printing requirements through the Queen's Printer and the Queen's Printer uses the procedures to which I have made reference. I cannot give an explanation for this, because I do not know whether the department ordered it themselves or whether it was placed through the Queen's Printer. I can check that and I can report directly on that specific question to the hon. member.

I think it is important to know that the service which the Queen's Printer provides is there, as a central clearing house for the acquisition of printing and stationery needs of the departments of government.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am very fascinated by the answer of the Minister.

Mr. Chairman: I am very sorry to have missed your continuation. Is yours on the same point?

Mr. Singer: Exactly on the same point.

Mr. Chairman: Would you yield to the member for Sandwich-Riverside?

Mr. Singer: All right, I will yield to the member.

Mr. Burr: Would the Minister take up the matter with the Cabinet of having all of these publications directed through the Queen's Printer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very glad to have the whole procedure reviewed.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview. Order please!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the answer of the hon. Minister that the Queen's Printer is a sort of central collection agency.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I did not say that.

Mr. Singer: What was your phrase? Clearing house—central clearing house?

I thought we had established a while back, a year or two ago, the thought that there was some merit in having a central purchasing agency? Now that does not come under the Provincial Secretary, it comes under the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell).

There was a pretty substantial criticism in the Financial Post about the malfunctioning of the central purchasing agency, and there was a suggestion that has never been answered, that the Cabinet Ministers would not let it work. Now one would have thought from listening to the Provincial Secretary that the Queen's Printer supposedly was going to do the same function. Apparently it is not so, because from all the complaints that have been heard tonight from my colleagues and the members of the NDP the facts just belie this kind of a general statement. The fact is the charge has been made, and it has not been answered, that the function of printing, as run by this government, is a method of passing out patronage to friends of the Conservative Party in the province of Ontario.

Now there have been numerous examples. We talked about the provincial auditor a few moments ago. In this report of the provincial auditor, his report of 1967-68, which is the most recent one we have, on page 22, paragraph 4, he says this, and this is one of the very few criticisms he levies at the government:

The Treasury Department have purchased about 10,000 sets of the report on the Ontario Committee on Taxation at a cost of $91,271. I do not know who printed it, but apparently it was printed through the good offices of the province of Ontario. Arrangements were made with the Queen's Printer to sell these reports at a price of $15 per set. At March 31, 1968, approximately 7,000 sets were still on hand. It is doubtful if these will be disposed of, as the demand for this report has not been as great as had been anticipated.

In very polite language, this is as strong a condemnation as has ever emerged from the auditor of Ontario against government about this kind of waste.

Now it has been here since this report has been published, and no Minister of the Crown, least of all the Provincial Secretary, who is responsible for the Queen's Printer, has ever bothered to stand in his place to answer it. I wonder why?

Mr. Chairman, on the fourth floor of this building—my colleague from Manitoulin and I have been relegated to the fourth floor at the moment, and, in our solitary splendour, along with the page boys, this is where our office is—every day, as we wend our way upwards into the nether reaches of the building, we pass by stacks and stacks and stacks of undistributed pamphlets, relating to the great words of wisdom in relation to the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference. They are in French, and they are in English.

Mr. Chairman: Well, could the member suggest whether—

Mr. Singer: Yes, I would suggest that they are government publications. They were printed by the Queen's Printer. No one has yet been able to figure out how you distribute them, how you use them, why the waste took place, who got the money, and what the purpose was or who had the responsibility for doing this. Now I think the time has come when this Minister, who is responsible for the Queen's Printer, has got to get up and give the public an answer to the charge made by the auditor. Tell us why there are bundles and bundles and bundles of pamphlets up on the fourth floor that nobody pays any attention to? Pamphlets that were ordered, that sit there, and will sit there until somebody throws them out. Why do you waste hundreds of thousands of dollars of the public money through the offices of this department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to detail an answer to this question, but there is apparently a misunderstanding. Other than the publication of the Ontario Gazette, I am not asking for five cents from this Legislature for printing. I am not asking for any money for printing except as it might have reference to the Ontario Gazette. The function of the Queen's Printer is, as I have already mentioned, one of a central agency, that provides a procedure for other departments and commissions to order printing. They pay for their printing, and so the questions about any particular publication, as to its distribution, and as to its—

Mr. Singer: You are passing the buck again.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —as to its cost, should be directed to those who have ordered the printing. The question that has been raised with respect to central purchasing is a very relevant question, and I am glad it was asked, because this is a central purchasing function which the Queen's Printer performs. Discussions are now under way with the Minister under whom central services and central purchasing come, as to the procedures which might be taken to incorporate this purchasing function as part of central purchasing function.

Mr. Sargent: That was said five years ago.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, this has been a phased-in programme, and so much of it can work into time. This phase is part of the discussion, so what the hon. member mentions is a very legitimate point, and this is the type of function which will no doubt, through some discussion, be incorporated in the central purchasing programme.

Mr. Singer: All right. Then, Mr. Chairman, can the Minister tell me which of his colleagues, if it is not himself, is the responsible member to answer the charge made by the auditor on page 22, item 4, of his last annual report? If it is not he, who then?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Minister under whom—

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The department who ordered the printing.

Mr. Singer: I see. Can the Minister tell me who is the Minister responsible for the hundreds of thousands of pamphlets that sit on the fourth floor, in French and English, containing a great information about the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not know, I would have to see the publication.

Mr. Singer: Well, why do you not go up and look? And see who wastes our money?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): I realize that the hon. Minister, through the Queen's Printer, cannot be responsible for the quantity ordered by the various departments. But is not the function of the Queen's Printer to at least be a watchdog on the price charged for printing? You have explained to us what, on the surface, appears quite a foolproof system. Under $1,000, you put it out on a rotation basis. Over $1,000, you put it out on tender. The hon. member for York Centre and myself know that you are not getting value for jobs under $1,000, because there is no check on cost. We both complained about our bills last year and, without much hesitation, they cut them in half. That is fine. Now, if your 7,000 jobs under $1,000 represent $7 million, as my hon. colleague from York Centre said, you could well be getting that somewhere else for $3.5 million. So this is a point on your small jobs.

Now, let us look at this business of letting your jobs over $1,000 out for tender. There are various ways of tendering. I would like to know, first of all, are your tenders let by invitation—are all people on your list notified of the jobs, and specifications sent out?

Hon. Mr. Welch: In the class of print shop that can handle the job?

Mr. Good: In the class of print shop. Are these the same class of print shops that are on your large list?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, you see, the print shops are all categorized. I think there are at least four, depending upon the type of equipment and the type of work which the shop can do. When the order comes in for a particular type of work—I cannot give you an example since I do not understand the jargon of printing—that perhaps may require a special colour job and special art work, there may be a certain number on the list that can do this. Then there is an invitation to bid among those who are in the classification which have the technical know-how and the equipment to do the particular job which we have been asked to look after.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, could I ask further? Who decides how many firms are invited to bid, and who makes the decision as to from what groups these firms will be invited? Will there be two, four, six or a dozen sets of specifications sent out on each printing job of over $1,000?

Hon. Mr. Welch: A lot depends on the particular job, Mr. Chairman, and, once the job is analyzed with the type of printer who can handle it, then everybody in this classification who can do this is invited to bid or quote on the job, on the basis of the specification. What I would like to say, and I hope that members would accept this invitation as we are very concerned about this—all you have to do is to walk over to the Queen's Printer operation, name the job that has been done, and we can show you exactly what has gone on. It is there for you to see. That is, if you want to see it. It might be easier to ask questions in the House with innuendoes than to actually go over to the Queen's Printer and really see the system. It is wide open for anyone to see at any time. Please go over.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I did not suggest that the hon. member did. I simply say that I am talking in a general way since this vote has been called for discussion in the House. Just go over and see the whole operation. Pick out any job, see who was invited to tender, see what the prices were. It is wide open. It is an open shop over at the Queen's Printer any time.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, come on. It has been going on for 20 years.

Mr. Good: One further question, Mr. Chairman. Would the Minister say the printers who are invited to tender on the over $1,000 jobs, are in fact among the same printers who were on the list which you offered to table earlier this evening?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Every firm that we have is categorized within these four categories.

Mr. Shulman: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. You are going to table a list of all printers. Will this tabling also show which are the invitational printers?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, I think perhaps the hon. member has misunderstood. I was asked whether I would table the allocation of printing on the rotational list. It will be on the basis of the actual business that was purchased. It will not be any great list of printers. It will be actual printing purchased, and from whom, and the amounts—and this was the list I was referring to.

Mr. Shulman: Well, then, may I ask the Minister, will he supply a list of the printers—a total list of the printers?

In fact, I would like two lists—the list of those that are eligible to have dished out to them the under-$1,000 jobs, the ones which presumably are spread out across the province. All I am asking for is a list of—

Hon. Mr. Welch: You want a list of all these printers registered with the Queen's Printer?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, and the amount of business they received last year. And secondly, a second list showing the printers who are eligible for invitations for these special over-$1,000 invitation bids. Will you supply that to us?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No problem.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Chairman, I cannot readily accept all of the innuendoes that have been expressed from the other side of the House concerning the way the rotation of printing of the items of under $1,000 is concerned. I happen to have been in the printing business at one point, and I would say from experience, Mr. Chairman, that the appraisers, the estimators rather, in the Queen's Printer's office are very efficient. As a matter of fact, in my own particular riding at the present time, I might explain to some of the members who are not familiar with the printing business, as far as doing business with the Queen's Printer is concerned, many of the requests or purchase orders that are sent to the printers have the actual price already established. It is not even for tender, and it is so low that many of the printers in my area are turning it down because they cannot make any money at it.

Some of these printers are friends of mine—I would say are supporters, if you want to call them government supporters—and there is certainly no pork barrel there; they are turning the business away because it is a losing proposition. I would like to clarify this point, Mr. Chairman, that I think these estimators are doing a very good job and I would say that they are certainly a watchdog for the public purse.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in this regard I think that over the years in the industry, it is known that if you are not of the right stripe you do not get the business—

An hon. member: Oh yes, absolutely right.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, how else can we think of it, 25 years of this arrogance you have over there? We all think the same way. I say, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister agrees to go this route to open the books up and show us, I think this is great. I think you are digging yourself a great big hole there. I suggest to you that if you are sincere in this regard, this is going to take a lot of manhours to find and do a good job of it, because we are going to take the works, the different jobs that have been done and get competitive jobs and find out exactly what did go on; but it is going to cost some money. Are you willing to put up some money that we can pay for the staff to do this?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, it is not going to cost the people of Ontario—

Mr. Sargent: Will you give us staff to do this?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I have undertaken to produce these lists and that is no problem. I wish he would go over and take a look at the operation. Really, I am quite serious, why do you not go over and take a look at it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He has got his dark glasses on; he cannot see.

Mr. Sargent: The lists are nothing until you have the working competitive prices on the job and the quantity and the run and the different specifications on the job.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is all there in the records.

Mr. Sargent: All right, then we will have to get the competitive bids on the job to see what has been going on, and we need staff to do it. If you are sincere you should give us staff to do it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We should do it like Mitch Hepburn and Tommy Douglas used to do it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West has the floor.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for Grey-Bruce would permit a question? I would like to give him a question.

Mr. Sargent: Certainly I will answer—

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Winkler: Inasmuch as the member for Grey-Bruce has been previously in the printing business, I would like to ask him if he did any work for the government?

Mr. Sargent: I would be glad to answer. I have never had five cents of the business from the government in my life, not five cents.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West. Order, please.

Mr. Sargent: That is not the point—

Mr. Winkler: Yes it is, it is the point.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Winkler: I will do a little investigation and I will find out.

Mr. Sargent: You are so wrong.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

An hon. member: That may be a point in favour of the government.

Mr. Peacock: I was just trying to get my voice in above the uproar, Mr. Chairman. I do not think I can succeed as long as the hon. members from that part of the country engage one another. Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make is concerning the Queen's Printer—the use of that name is an assumption by the government that is completely unwarranted. It is a completely misleading phrase—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Queen does not really do the printing.

Mr. Peacock: It is an arrogation to the government of responsibility and discretion and authority which it does not exercise in any way at all.

Under the branch known as the Queen's Printer in this government we have no control whatsoever over the expenditure of public funds on printing in this province. In the meetings of the public accounts committee before which The Department of Education was called some weeks ago to discuss its printing expenditures, we found that of the total of $480,000 expended on printing in 1967-68, about $30,000 in all was accounted for directly by the Queen's Printer. The publications that were issued on behalf of The Department of Education by the Queen's Printer were the housekeeping matters, the statutes of the department, the regulations, Mr. Chairman.

But when it came to the expensive items, the glossy items, the promotional items—like the college of art report, the report of the committee on aims in education, the Hall-Dennis report, when it came to the speeches of the Prime Minister of Ontario about the use of French in high schools in this province or about Confederation, these items were handed out to a select few printers which received very substantial proportions of the total expenditure on printing by that department.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will the hon. member tell us how they did it in Saskatchewan under the CCF?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, the Queen's Printer exercised absolutely no review whatsoever over the extravagances that The Department of Education perpetrated on the taxpayers of this province in its handing out to Davis Printing Limited—and I am sure there is no connection between the Davis Printing Company Limited and the Minister of Education and University Affairs—over $60,000 in that year; the Westprint Company, $83,000; the Mights Directories firm, a name that cropped up in an earlier estimate, over $11,000; the Bruce Henderson firm, $22,000, and so on—all amounts that were substantially larger than any of the amounts handled by the Queen's Printer on behalf of The Department of Education. These were the items, Mr. Chairman, that appeared without copy on many of the pages, in full colour with the most complete and extravagant art work that I think many members of this House have ever seen. Certainly, I have seen only one or two instances of this kind of printing in private industry, but very, very many instances in the guise of the report on the college of art dispute and the Hall-Dennis report from this government.

We do not have in this branch of the Provincial Secretary's department, the Queen's Printer's office, in fact a central government printing office, which takes the requisitions from the various departments and tenders them out and says to the proposers of the printing who are bidding on the jobs, "These are the standards or the guidelines within which you must work and within which you must produce your printing".

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, we get a range of printing costs when it comes to the production of Ministers' annual reports to this Legislature, varying anywhere from items that cost less than $2 a copy to the instance of The Department of Highways annual report which, I believe, costs over $14 a copy. Many of the annual reports contain very large photographs of the Ministers, lots of white space exposing a few lines of copy. They are four-colour productions, some containing very little information in proportion to the total outlay of paper and colour and art work, on behalf of the political position of that Minister and his department and often of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). In The Department of Education, I am sure, had we had a Queen's Printer worthy of the name, there would not have been the production of printed material under the auspices of The Department of Education in the name of the Prime Minister and the name of the Minister of Education, which had nothing whatsoever to do with the educational activities of this government in the school system of this province. It was material which was solely for the political advancement of the Minister and the Prime Minister of this province. We would not have had that kind of material produced had there been a Queen's Printer who had set down the guidelines as to the quality of printing that was to be produced for this government when it came to annual reports, special reports and all other printing aside from the publication of the statutes and the regulations.

If one looks at the library holdings in this Legislative library of publications of the government of Canada or the government of the United States, one will see the plainest and simplest covers and the compact presentation of data without any embellishment whatsoever. So it is possible today to purchase from the general printing office of the United States government or from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics or the Queen's Printer in Ottawa full information, annual reports, copies of the most extensive studies for 50 cents or 75 cents or $1 a copy. Not the kind of cost that the taxpayer of Ontario is bearing for the printing of government Ministers' annual reports to the extent of $4.96 in Agriculture, $5.17 for the civil service commission, Mr. Chairman, $4.19 for The Department of Education, $4 for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), over $14 for the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme), $7.61 for the Minister of Lands and Forests' (Mr. Brunelle's) annual report, $7.51 for the Minister of Public Works' report, and $4.90 for the report of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. No revenue was raised for these publications. The total of the cost of these publications was entirely borne out of the Treasury of this government. So that in the department of the Queen's Printer we do not have either a central procurement and printing facility nor any vestige of control over the kinds of extravagant printing that many Ministers of this government have engaged in for their own advancement.

The second thing I want to say about the operations of the Queen's Printer's branch, Mr. Chairman, is that it could be, but it is not now and has not been, a major resource and research facility for people of this province. Since the Queen's Printer does not have control over the issuing of annual reports and other special surveys by the various departments of government, it is not in a position to make available to the depository libraries and the university libraries of this province copies of those reports as soon as they become available.

In my own community of Windsor, the public library's reference section endeavoured for several months to obtain through the Queen's Printer's office, copies of the Rand report on labour relations in this province and failed to obtain those copies because it had misdirected its enquiry. The report of the Royal commission on labour disputes headed by Mr. Rand was issued in the name of the commission, it was not handled by the Queen's Printer's office.

Similarly with many other major reports of interest to the public of this province, they cannot be obtained by writing to the Queen's Printer of this province. The Queen's Printer does not issue any kind of index or catalogue of publications of this government and therefore the depository libraries and the university libraries and the industrial, trade union, consumer and farm organizations who wish to keep up with the publications of this government find themselves calling from department to department and office to office to find out where they can obtain a recent and important publication of this government.

And it is, I think, time the Provincial Secretary took it upon himself to start publishing such a catalogue of all the publications of this government, the annual reports, the special studies, commission documents, the proceedings of those commissions and various committees of this House, along with the routine statutory and regulatory items that are now handled by the Queen's Printer, and make sure that they are in the hands of the depository libraries and university libraries so that students and other researchers have access to them as soon as they are distributed in this Legislature and not several months later.

I find as a private member I am often called upon to supply people in the university and in the public libraries in Windsor with copies of such reports. Because extra copies are afforded to members of the Legislature, it has often been within means to fill those requests. But they often come to me only after these people have found it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain these documents through the Queen's Printer's office.

So I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the Queen's Printer in this province really should take on the functions of such an office and catalogue the publications of this government once it has within its control the publication of all of the government printing of this province.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I comment briefly on both major points raised by the hon. member? I will start with the last point he was making. I do not think anyone would argue with him on the necessity of some type of general index list. If the hon. member will recall, I was talking earlier about the negotiations or the discussions which are presently under way insofar as the phasing in of the Queen's Printer's operation is concerned, insofar as it is a central purchasing function with the overall central purchasing function which was announced by the Treasurer some time ago, to become ultimately within the purview of the responsibilities of the Minister of Public Works.

At the time of that announcement, there was some recognition of a division here between the functions which are represented now under the Queen's Printer. There was the Queen's Printer, which was one of the acquisition of printing and stationery supplies, and there was this publications branch, handling the availability of government publications. And ultimately as we develop this programme, we are looking forward to the time when we will have what is called a "Queen's Publisher". The responsibilities of the publisher will be much along the lines incorporated in the latter point made by the hon. member. We hope to have not only the index and the catalogue, which I might point out here we have already started to work on. There will be a central store of some kind where people can go in and actually see and buy these publications. I thank the member for raising the point. It is one of these things which we are working on.

To go back to the first point, may I simply say this in connection with the first point: I have no way of disputing the facts which the hon. member raised, nor would it be my intention to do so. He was at the public accounts committee and he has had this breakdown of printing. All I can say is that perhaps it is a little unfair to criticize the Queen's Printer as such, with respect to the standard or the cost of the printing which is not placed through him. I can only say as the Minister responsible to this House for the Queen's Printer, that any aspects of the publication or the printing needs of this department placed through the Queen's Printer have been subject to the type of scrutiny to which the member made reference with respect to the invitation to bid and everything else. Now, from then on the member's point is such that he is making his point with respect to that printing by that particular department or indeed any department which is not placed through, or requisitioned through, the office of the Queen's Printer.

So with those comments and with particular emphasis on the latter part, I can assure the hon. member that we are busily engaged in attempting to develop some of the general guidelines under the office of Queen's Publisher, to which he has made reference.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the comments of the member for Windsor West, I think, are of quality and very timely, and I am glad the Minister is in agreement with the principle involved. But even so, Mr. Chairman, involved as we are with a magnitude of maybe $7 million to $10 million of expenditures yearly in the operation of this exercise here, there is a law on the books of the land that anyone or group of people in business who would conspire to raise prices or to fix prices, is guilty of an indictable offence and subject to a jail term or heavy fine. This is a matter of law and I know that the Minister and all of this House think that law, somewhere along the line, should be exercised. In this area we are talking about now, are spending about $10 million. The most important commodity in printing is paper and today we have in this province the biggest cartel monopoly in paper.

If you buy paper today, you are paying the same rate from every single paper outfit.

There are no competitive bids in paper. They are all the same price. Now, I think in the operation of your department, as a member of the government, you would be guilty of dereliction in your job or in your duty, if you would not investigate the fact that we do have tight monopoly-type of control in the price of paper. If you look back over the years when Westinghouse and General Electric were caught conspiring to fix prices, that cost the municipalities in this province many, many hundreds of millions of dollars because of the fact that they conspired to fix prices—

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member indicate the relevance of his remarks to the Queen's Printer's office?

Mr. Sargent: Pardon?

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member please indicate—

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Will the hon. member please indicate the relevancy of his remarks regarding combines, and so on, to the Queen's Printer's office?

Mr. Sargent: Well, you do not have to take anything in your orange juice to find out what I am talking about. But I am telling you that the most important commodity we have in Canada today is paper and we have a cartel monopoly in paper.

Mr. Chairman: That has nothing to do with the Queen's Printer—

Mr. Sargent: It certainly has—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: —and if this government does not take steps to block this monopoly and cartel in paper—

Mr. Chairman: That has nothing to do with vote 1704—nothing whatsoever.

Mr. Sargent: It certainly has and I disagree with you very much.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Sargent: I am not finished yet.

Mr. Ben: On a point—

Mr. Chairman: All right, all right.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, sir. The Queen's Printer is responsible for the spending of the taxpayers' money on printing which involves the purchase of paper on which the print goes. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce tried to indicate to the Minister that there is a monopoly in the supply of paper. He enquired of the Minister, "Was the Minister cognizant of this and is he taking pains to see that the taxpayers' money is not frivolously spent because of these combines in the supplying of paper?"

Mr. Winkler: That is federal law. Tell him to take it to his—

Mr. Ben: It may be federal—monopoly may be federal law, but it is the responsibility of this government to see that the business of this monopoly does not cost us money.

Mr. Kerr: How would you do that?

Mr. Chairman: On the point of order, the Chairman is fully aware—

Mr. Winkler: Take it to Ottawa.

Mr. Chairman: —is fully aware of the significance of the hon. member's remarks. The hon. member pointed out that there was a cartel, or a monopoly, or a combine in operation in connection with paper. This is surely a matter for the federal authorities and it has nothing whatsoever to do with the operation of the office of the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Ben: Well he should buy from—

Mr. Chairman: It should be presumed that he does.

Mr. Sargent: May I speak to your ruling?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: In speaking to your ruling. If you want to buy anything today, you and I, as representatives of the people, should be able to get the best dollar's-worth of value for that purchase. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that we are paying through the nose. We are paying twice what we should be paying for paper because of this monopoly and, if we close our eyes to it, then we are only a party to this breaking of the law.

We have the biggest stick in the province of Ontario to save this $10 million which we are spending. We will not be a party to this price fixing. The Minister should make a decision and tell the House that he will not go along down the line to say that we will be a sitting duck for these people.

I think that one person, one Minister who knows what he is talking about, should stop this. It is in every area of our economy now. This is a game and somewhere the government should get into the act and say the people should get a square deal for their dollar. A comment from the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes. Mr. Chairman, may I simply say, in reply to the hon. member, that I think that if there is any evidence of this type of activity, there is a way to direct a complaint on this price to Ottawa for investigation.

As a matter of information, quite relevant to the question which the hon. member has raised, today the Queen's Printer opened five tenders for over two million sheets of paper and each had a different price quoted. I invite the member to go over tomorrow morning and investigate the tenders with respect to that paper.

Mr. Sargent: These were not the kind produced by the paper houses?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I have no further evidence to go on. It just happened today that there was a bulk tender for two million sheets of paper. There was a significant difference in the prices of the tenders.

I ask you to go over and investigate; see the invitation to tender; see the tenders; do anything you like—see the difference in the price.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for—

Hon. Mr. Welch: This is not to speak against the possibility of there being a monopoly. I do not know. I do have evidence—

Mr. Sargent: I am telling you there is.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside, unless the hon. member is still on the point of order.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two suggestions to make. The first is that in the future the name of the printer be put on all these publications and—

Hon. Mr. White: What for?

Mr. Burr: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. White: What for?

Mr. Burr: So that we know who printed it. Any book or any other publication that you ever read always has the name of the printer.

Mr. B. Newman: Maybe he is ashamed of his work.

Mr. Burr: If you look at the estimates themselves, you will find that they are printed and published by the Queen's Printer. Any man who is proud of his work will put his name on it.

Mr. Lewis: Is there a Frank Fogg, by the way?

Mr. Burr: First, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the printer should have his name on it.

Second, if it is authorized by the Queen's Printer, then that should be stated.

Third, there should be a union label on it and—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Union label again.

Mr. Burr: —and the fourth suggestion is that, following the practice of many other departments perhaps, or other—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Minister's picture?

Mr. Burr: —jurisdictions—no. They should—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Incidentally, where is the union label on the Brown Camp brochure? How about it?

Mr. Lewis: —keep it in your portfolio and carry it around with you.

Mr. Burr: —they should put down somewhere, the number of copies that have been printed—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Burr: —as they did very neatly put down in this one; a five and a ten, that is the way it is usually done.

Hon. Mr. White: The socialist mind at work.

Mr. Burr: Inasmuch as the Minister of Correctional Services is interested in this subject, I would like to refer him back to November 26, when I asked the Prime Minister how many copies of this Confederation of Tomorrow booklet had been published. He said 77,000 and the cost was $70,000. Then I asked him if he was aware that about 70,000 copies were sitting in the hall on the fourth floor, to which he replied: "No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that and I very much doubt that it is so." I asked him if he would check on it and he said he would be very glad to do so. So far I have not had any report.

Mr. Ben: You would not be surprised—

Mr. Burr: This is November 26. I went up immediately and checked on it and I was wrong, Mr. Chairman. The Prime Minister is not going to expose me; I had better confess.

I thought there were 70,000 but there were only 60,000 booklets. The other cartons that I thought contained 10,000 more, actually contained 60,000 envelopes—specially adorned envelopes that can be used for no other purpose because they match the booklets.

So there were 60,000 booklets and 60,000 envelopes and my report from my scouts up on the fourth floor tonight, confirms that most of them are still up there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member were a public-spirited citizen, he would go out and sell them.

Mr. Ben: You cannot give them away. How can we sell them?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Burr: And if the Minister authorizing any publication—that is, any of the 22 or 24 Ministers, however many there are—if they knew how many thousand were being published, they would think twice before ordering an inordinate amount. Because this one—this college of art one—if you remember when I asked about it, there were still 2,000, or was it 3,000 left out of the 5,000, representing a very great waste of money, in addition to the extravagant printing in the first place.

Mr. Lewis: The point perhaps need not be belaboured, but it is worth summarizing. I think the Minister would agree on some of the things that have emerged. There is an obvious extravagance in the publication of departmental annual reports.

It is unconscionable that annual reports should cost between $7 and $12.

Members of this House who know anything about printing costs will know that that is simply not a legitimate cost and one which cannot be justified in any economic terms, let alone in terms of the substance of the reports.

My colleague from Windsor West makes a very good analogy when he speaks of the United States printing office and of the Queen's Printer in Ottawa and of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. They have at least adopted a format which does not pilfer public funds in the process of publishing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nobody reads their reports.

Mr. Lewis: Now, Mr. Chairman, there has therefore emerged an obvious squandering of money—a fairly substantial squandering of money—in the area of annual reports from government departments. If one takes a careful look at the cost of those reports as itemized before the public accounts committee, one could well make the assumption that some $50,000 might have been saved in a more scrupulous management of the printing of those reports.

It has also been demonstrated, Mr. Chairman, that there is very, very considerable irresponsibility in the quantity that are ordered and in their subsequent distribution. Again, another unconscionable irresponsibility on the part of the government, because this is not the kind of thing that one treats in quite so cavalier a way. These are things over which one has a very easy and legitimate control, providing the processes are effective.

It has also been demonstrated that a very large number of the reports themselves are self-aggrandisement documents for the Minister's concern, lavishly idolizing their benefactors, which is true very often of The Department of Education. Perhaps the adulation is more grievous in that area than in any other at least in the context of the report, but it is evidenced in other Cabinet Ministers as well. However, the documents themselves cannot in any sense be justified in modern context of report and again run into the tens of thousands of dollars of wasted public funds.

Now there is no particular reason, Mr. Chairman, for this orgy of self-indulgence. I suspect that no one in Cabinet and perhaps it is time for this Minister to do it, because he does it amiably and he does it well—that no one in Cabinet has taken a pretty hard look at the way in which the Ministers run wild, as their own personages are enhanced by departmental reports, by all the documents which come out in their name, and by which they emblazon their photographs in prominent place—albeit some of them are moderately attractive human beings, and I do not begrudge them their photographs. But that notwithstanding, Mr. Chairman, what one is saying, that emerges from the context of the evening—particularly the analysis of the member for Windsor West—is that you have in a variety of areas, flagrant abuse of public money—not premeditated, nothing sinister about it, just totally irresponsible, in the context of government.

If one has a Queen's Printer—pretends to a Queen's Printer—then one at least has the resource, one has the facility where one is able to screen the irresponsibility, and to separate those who lavish their own affections in the public view, from those who recognize that it is the substance with which we are dealing, and that the substance alone is worthy of publication and no more than that.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that a pretty close analysis of it, quite apart from the individual documents, but what is being stored in this building and elsewhere, would indicate that the several hundreds of thousands of dollars that are talked about are unquestionably valid. Whether it is the rotating list for those jobs that cost less than $1,000—for which I gather there were many millions of dollars expended, some of it unwisely; whether it is the departmental reports; whether it is the individual reports; whether it is the various publications that come into our homes; members are flooded with publications which, in terms of their production, verge on the theatre of the absurd.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would think that what we are really talking about are very vast sums. I do not think it is wrong to suggest that one could save $1 million or $2 million a year if one took a pretty intensive and rigorous look at the money which is being spent on printing.

Now let me tie it in, Mr. Chairman. Having said that, let me point out that the session commenced with the Budget speech of the Provincial Treasurer and that in the middle of the Budget speech from the Provincial Treasurer there—with much reluctance and great displays of regret and compassion—the Provincial Treasurer indicated serious public cut-backs in crucial social areas for lack of revenue. Just to put a very appropriate tag to it, Mr. Chairman, one of those areas—the Minister of Social and Family Services is in the House—was a conscious cut-back on the part of Cabinet of an increase from 70 per cent to 80 per cent in the maintenance subsidy for homes for the aged.

Now, we are not debating homes for the aged. I know the Cabinet view of how you look after the aged. I am prepared to accept the inadequacy there, but that 10 per cent shift, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, that statement is completely wrong. It was not cut back.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I concede, I concede. I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that an analysis of the figures for maintenance in that area in this year's estimates shows the amount of money required could be covered by the irresponsibility in printing engaged in by this government. It would have been possible to effect what is, in fact, a pretty significant social programme had this area been more scrupulously attended to. It is very hard to make these things mesh because the fat in government, and again it is not a calculated or conspiratorial fat, but the fat in government is something that accumulates and unless it is taken hold of in a fairly vigorous way it runs out of control.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, then, that one need only emphasize that there are programmes delayed by this government which could be implemented by the very simple facility of using the Queen's Printer as, if you will, a centre for the scrutiny of all government printing in the province. But all of it, you will find, sir, will be a contribution rather greater than these exercises in self-indulgence which definitely characterize printing.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber, I believe, was up before the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, now that the Minister has taken the trouble to learn, perhaps he might also give consideration to all government printing being of a standard size. Why should you have to change the whole format year after year for each department?

The Minister sitting next to you there has not put out a report similar in size since I have been here. I do not think he has put out two reports that looked alike in form. Why? What are you trying to do, show how artistic you are? There are some of us—I have two boxes downstairs, I was going to bring them up here for effect and dump them here, but I decided it was a little heavy—there are some of us who store these reports and we keep them for reference so we can refer back. They are every shape and size and even these cabinets that you make to attach on the wall for the individual members on which they can store the reports, are useless. You give us reports which are too high or too tall to fit on these shelves. So, you are defeating your own purpose. Why? Who are you trying to impress? Or are you just trying to throw away money?

Surely, you could get some uniformity into this business. Now just give some consideration so that next year every report that comes out, can be the standard size. The public accounts seem to come out standard size from year to year, why can you not do this with other printing? I might point out that one way of knowing if this government is going to do anything about a particular topic, is by looking at the report. If it is a hard cover you know they expect it to sit on a shelf for 10 or 15 years before they do anything.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. Minister is just as anxious as we are on this side to centralize printing and eliminate some of the problems that were mentioned, particularly by the members for Sandwich-Riverside and Windsor West, such matters as even the legislative library not having the reports that are issued by the department.

I would like to know whether—since the Provincial Treasurer made the Budget speech 13 months ago—some extra directive or power has been granted to his department to bring together all the government printing, other than this discussion about a change in name or new name being created, like Queen's Publisher.

Surely there has been something done in these 13 months since he announced the centralization toward actually getting it into effect. I would like to also know in regard to that, have any departments put through an increased amount of their work to your knowledge, or all their work now, in response to that government direction or the Treasurer's announced direction?

Hon. Mr. Welch: With respect to those aspects of central purchasing which would affect printing and stationery supplies, there have been a series of meetings—certainly meetings in which we have been involved because of the Queen's Printer. There was the question of a central store for the acquisition of the stationery supplies themselves, and also for printing. We have been very much a part of these meetings and, in fact, there is more to the central purchasing programme than just printing. Some of these other matters have had attention perhaps before this. But we are currently involved in these meetings.

With respect to the printing requisitions or the printing needs of other departments, I think you would have to ask each department as to their budget in that regard. I am sure as it develops along the line, you will get that information.

Mr. Deacon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister. The next matter is: We were told last year about a very modern new printing machine that The Department of Public Works acquired and we learned in public accounts about the printing shop of The Department of Education. Other departmental printing facilities, I am sure, are available. Do these departments bid on the jobs or are they asked to bid on jobs by the Queen's Printer? Or is all the work done outside? If these printing departments have spare press time, are you making use of that spare press time by having them do printing jobs?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am not familiar with the amount of work that goes through the Public Works printing equipment. I can say that we do not direct any printing from our department to the government departments. We go to all the printing shops outside at the moment.

Mr. Deacon: Why would you not make use of that printing facility if it has free time?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very happy to look into this particular matter. I think a lot would depend on the type of equipment and type of work they might be able to do. But we would be very happy to take a look at it from the standpoint of satisfying the query which you have raised.

Mr. Sargent: You mean you have not looked into it yet?

Mr. Deacon: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, rather strange, if it was brought to our attention that we could make use of it as members, that the Queen's Printer, which is the central depot supposedly for all the printing in the government, would not, now that we are going to centralization. A rather strange statement from the Minister.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I have one question I would like to put to the Minister. The Queen's Printer so far, in Ontario, has not really been a Queen's Printer in the real sense of the word. He has been an agent who lets contracts for printing. He was not personally involved in printing on behalf of the government. I am wondering if we have not reached the stage where that should be considered. I recognize that you have got a different flow of printing needs and, therefore, it may well be that if we were to establish a Queen's Printer in the sense that they have at Ottawa, we might not be able to meet all of our needs. Undoubtedly, there still would be some work that would have to be let out, but at least a fairly significant body of government printing could be done through its own printing plant and I suspect considerable savings could be achieved. May I ask the Minister whether or not the government has given any thought to this?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Earlier tonight the question was raised with respect to the incorporation of the purchasing function, so to speak, of this department in the central purchasing procedures of government, which have already been announced, and the creation under a heading "Queen's Publisher", of those functions of drawing together government publications and making them available for sale, and perhaps some technical advice regarding basic standards. I merely repeat those things.

With respect to the amount of printing which the government would actually do as opposed to having printing done by printing establishments throughout the province, I cannot report any negotiations in this regard, because I am not familiar with any studies that are going on in that particular area.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, as I interpret what the Minister said earlier, and I do not ask him to repeat it, it is conceivable that the present function of the Queen's Printer might be absorbed in good part, or perhaps wholly, by the central purchasing agency. That would flow rather logically from my concept of a central purchasing agency. The field would then be left clear for a Queen's Printer in the real sense—a publishing house with somebody heading it, who would handle such of the publications as the size of the plant that you established would permit. I repeat, you might be able to achieve considerable savings.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I appreciate having your view. The question is: Whether or not even under that organization, the Queen's Printer or Publisher, whatever he may be called, would actually do any printing himself, and establish a great printing organization himself, or still continue as is the custom now of letting out the work?

Mr. MacDonald: My suggestion is merely that that should be considered. I do not want to get into an argument with our friends down at Ryerson Press which does the printing of Hansard, but in most Parliaments where Hansard is handled in the kind of fashion that it is handled, for example at Ottawa, it can be done only if you have an operation which is really completely under your control. Certainly Hansard, as we sit longer and longer—and it looks as though we are going to be sitting longer and longer—is going to become one main job. And it is given top priority by the Queen's Printer when the House or when the Parliament is actually sitting. However, I leave it as a thought for the Minister to pursue.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for York South rose, I was rising at the same time on almost the same vein, but not quite. What I was going to suggest is: that the government set up a control printing bureau as an operation that obviously would not handle all our printing, and would not be a Queen's Printer in the true sense, but would act as a control on price. That is, it would bid on government contracts in order to keep the other private bidders in line. For instance the city of Toronto does a lot of its own paving. It keeps a paving crew to bid on its own contracts. It does not get them all, and sometimes it will even take a job at a loss, just to keep the other people in line when they get out of line.

We are talking here about monopolies. About the paper monopoly, for instance. We know that there are paper monopolies, with price fixing. The fact that prices are different does not mean a thing. It was established, by an investigation, I think, of this government, that there was price fixing in salt, in the use of salt to melt snow, that certain companies have exclusive rights in one area, and other companies in another area, and still others in another area. Other companies would bid but they would always make sure that they bid outrageously high. In other instances, you get fixed prices. When I was on council, I found that cement was always coming in at the same price. The Lake Ontario Cement Company, the Canada Cement and the St. Lawrence Cement always bid exactly the same price. I tried to break it up by picking one company and giving them a contract. And I would say that we would keep on giving one company the contract until other companies got other prices. But they would not do it. Lightbulbs came the same way. It was amazing how the prices would come in so similar. Then, when you raise a little dust about it, you find out that the contract prices vary. But if you add them up, you will find out the same thing prevails. Company A gets about 15 per cent, company B gets about 15 per cent, company C, etc., so the variation in price on any particular contract does not mean a thing.

I still suggest that perhaps the Minister ought to give consideration to the government setting up a printing bureau, which could be used to control prices, and they would bid on some of them. I am not suggesting for one minute that the printing bureau should go into the business of printing Hansard. It should not tie itself down to any particular job, but be free to bid as contracts arise, one time on this type of printing, another time on another type of printing, and to throw in bids to keep the independent bidders on a competitive level.

Vote 1704 agreed to.

On vote 1705:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, in June of last year the Minister replied to certain questions raised by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) and by the leader of this party about the birth certificates which were acquired by Mr. James Earl Ray. In replying to those questions, the Minister said he had "asked his deputy registrar general to review all these procedures once again, to satisfy me as to the adequacy of the precautions to be taken, such precautions to be consistent with the service which we must continue to give to the public requesting this type of information in the legitimate way they do." My question is simple: Has this review been made, has the Minister been advised of the results of the review and what are the conclusions of it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Following the questions in the House to which the hon. member makes reference, I asked the deputy registrar general if those procedures would be reviewed. He assures me that they were, and as far as our department was concerned, and in consultation with his counterparts throughout Canada, and in all the other provinces—to compare the various systems that were used there with our own—we were satisfied after this type of consultation and these meetings, that the procedures which we were following really were, in fact, consistent with the responsibilities which we really had to facilitate the acquisition of the certificates, these registrations by those who were legitimately entitled to them.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1705. The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman, the matter of data processing is a relatively small item under the registrar general, only $3,700. I think if you total it up for the whole 18 departments, or 20 departments, you will find that about $7 million is spent on data processing. What I would like to know is, in your department do you do all your own work? Do you work for other departments, or do other departments do work for you?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We do all our own work within the department, we send no work out and we do no other work for any other departments.

Mr. Burr: Does that mean that some of the equipment is idle a considerable part of the time?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, that is not the case.

Mr. Burr: It is working almost all the time?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, it is engaged full time. On top of the regular work that is conducted there are certain national indices which are returned to the equipment when it is not in other use, to produce some related work which we do in the tabulation of overall registration. So in fact I think it is fair to say that the equipment is used exclusively by the registrar general's department for work in that department.

Mr. Burr: It works kind of an eight-hour day, does it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: A regular day.

Mr. Burr: Do you mean a regular member's day, or regular computer's day?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do not think it could possibly be used that much.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister a letter that I have received from my own community concerning unwed mothers, and wonder if the Minister could advise me as to what action has been taken by his department, and I will read the pertinent portions of the letter.

It seems rather cruel to urge—this is referring now to unwed mothers:

—them to register their illegitimate babies in their own names when there is an outside chance that the father of the child will marry the mother. I would recommend an amendment to The Vital Statistics Act, to make it possible for a mother, in this category, to be given the privilege of a temporary registration and to have the option of changing and finalizing the registration at the conclusion of one year following the initial registration or date of birth.

May I ask of the Minister if he has followed through with this suggestion?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, the procedure now under the Act which we are discussing, is that in those circumstances, the mother, being an unmarried woman, would normally register the name of the child in her own surname. There are those who have expressed the wish that they should be allowed to register the name of the child in the surname of the father. And, with the consent of this man, as I understand it, such registration is permitted. The difficulty comes in if, in fact, there is no subsequent marriage with that particular man. Then there is some concern on the part of the lady who wants that name off, and although there is some procedure to provide for this, the original record is still there. What the deputy registrar general has attempted to do in these circumstances is to deal with all the divisional registrars throughout Ontario and suggest that they should caution women in these circumstances, and really suggest to them that they may well want to register the child in their own surname; then on the marriage of the mother, through The Legitimation Act the records can be amended correctly and then we carry on.

Now, as to providing some temporary basis where they have a period of so many months during which they elect which surname to use, in my opinion this might cause a great deal of confusion. It seems to me perhaps more orderly to follow this other procedure and have The Legitimation Act take care of the situation on the subsequent marriage. That would be my recommendation.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1705. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder if I might return for a moment to the James Earl Ray issue that was raised by my colleague. I judge from the Minister's reply that after examining the procedures in other provinces, you came to the conclusion that ours was as efficient as anywhere else and you could not see any means for substantially improving it. That still does not meet the particular point that caused considerable furor at that time. Do you conclude that it is the risk of the game so to speak, that there may be a fraudulent presentation of data and therefore there may be, not a false birth certificate—I remember the Minister's very insistent point that there is no such thing as a false birth certificate—but a certificate given after a fraudulent presentation of information? Did you come across any ways and means by which you can check against this periodic presentation of fraudulent material?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The problem is really a practical one. We have, I understand today, about 18,000 requests a day.

Mr. MacDonald: It was 1,200 a year ago. You are really getting up in one year.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can tell you why, too. The new passport regulations, for instance, have really brought with them an increase for birth certificates. Of course when we get nearer to school opening it is just phenomenal, the number of requests we get. Now, you see, what we are faced with there, as a public office, is attempting to get people who are entitled to these certificates to get these certificates as quickly as possible for their legitimate use. The more procedures and red tape we put into the matter, the more we slow up the great majority of people, who really want to get their certificates. The registrars, when they met, thought perhaps the only effective way to stop people not going to get their own certificate was perhaps to increase the fee. But I could not see charging everybody an extra fee just to catch a few people and maybe discourage them; in fact I really did not know how that would discourage people if they really wanted to get something for this purpose.

The other thing to keep in mind is that the amount of information which the deputy registrar general and his officials want is really very insignificant. In other words, you have to know your mother's maiden name and you have to know information about your father and so on. In other words you would have to be fairly clever to get all of the background. For instance, somebody other than me who wanted to get my birth certificate, or somebody who wanted to use my birth certificate, would need to have quite a bit of information about me and my mother and father and so on. All I am trying to point out is the fact that we cannot deny that this man was in possession of this birth certificate which, as the member points out, was a correct registration of the record. But what we had to do for the sake of service to the public was to waive introducing more procedural steps to check the few, if any—and you would have no way of knowing how many—against the general need to expedite the issuance of these certificates to people.

Mr. MacDonald: In short, it is a risk we have to live with.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would think that is a pretty fair way of summing it up.

Vote 1705 agreed to.

On vote 1706:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: The question of item 13, postage, is rather puzzling. In 1967, the postage amounted to $664,000; 1968, $745,000, and in the estimates for 1969, $175,000. There must be some simple explanation. What is it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, in the reorganization of responsibilities, the bulk of mailing became part of the central service function of The Department of Public Works, and the only moneys that we are asking for now are the postage for those who actually use the facilities of this building, that is, the members of the Legislature and those departments that function out of here. All other government mailing is done through the Public Works department now, for which these other amounts—the difference to which the member makes reference—would be voted in that vote.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is all Opposition mailings, is it?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three items in here I would like to raise briefly with the Minister. One of them I had marked when I prepared these estimates a week or two ago, and that was to enlist the support of the Minister to have somebody start revising the rules of this House, since the Speaker's vote comes under the Minister. However, we had a little explosion a week or so ago, and I understand we may have broken through that log jam, so we can let that matter rest for the time being.

I was interested, if I may go back briefly for a moment to the public accounts, to note that in the listing of the money spent in the last provincial election, overall figures are given for each of the returning officers. Is a breakdown of any one of those figures available upon request? For example, as I look at it here, I find that in my own riding of York South the amount spent was $41,162.15. Is a breakdown of that expenditure available?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Does the member mean the chief election officer?

Mr. MacDonald: No, it is the returning officer. What was spent by the government in the operation of the election, not what was spent by the candidates themselves.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I really do not know that I can answer the question, except I imagine this should be available through the chief election officer. I would have to get that for the hon. member; I do not know what breakdown might be available for this, but I assume since they are expenditures of public money there must be some evidence of it, although I would not know. You see, the money for an election is not voted through the estimates, it comes as a special warrant.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the Minister raises another rather interesting point. The chief electoral officer is under his department and yet, if the Minister is correct, when I am quoting from the public accounts I am over in the Attorney General's department. The rationale of this escapes me.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The chief electoral officer and the Clerk of the House are here, insofar as their staff requirements and the moneys that are necessary for this Legislature to vote for the functioning of these offices and the employees there. Insofar as the moneys that are necessary for the running of an election, this is done by special warrant and I think this is why they have to be placed under the Attorney General. I am sorry I have no further explanation than that, except that as far as accountability is concerned, I would have to check with the chief electoral officer as to what detailed information is available and I would be glad to report that to the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: If the Minister would. I realize now I am in the wrong department. This is purely for the chief electoral officer in his continuing activity. The actual expenditure for the election is over in the Attorney General's department, and if any further query is needed, we can do it at that time.

But since the Minister has indicated he will be so kind as to look into what breakdown is available, it strikes me that there are two general areas on which the public has some legitimate right to information. One is the fixed amounts that are spelled out in the regulations promulgated before each election—so much for this, so much for that, so much for the next thing—and then there are other undesignated expenditures. And if that kind of a breakdown is available, I would appreciate it.

A final point, going down into sessional and other requirements. May I ask the Minister what the procedure is now with regard to appropriations for Royal commissions, select committees, and so on? In the third or fourth last item, under sessional and other requirements that go on to page 131, I notice $100,000 for committee fees. I presume that is select committee fees?

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, yes. Now, am I right that the normal expenditures for Royal commissions or investigations of that nature are handled in each department or are they handled in the Attorney General's department?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, in the Attorney General's department.

Mr. MacDonald: Royal commissions?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, Royal commissions.

Mr. MacDonald: In a broad sense sometimes they are called inquiries, and things of that nature?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The amount here is for committee fees, principally the select committees.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this probably is a very unpopular subject with the government and a very popular subject with the backbenchers, but somewhere along the line I think the Minister in charge of the department and now the Provincial Secretary, due to the fact the Prime Minister has not the courage nor the political decency to acknowledge that we have—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Can the member not think of better words?

Mr. Sargent: Well, how do I say things like this? We talk about these things in caucus; we talk about these things in the cloakrooms in the back, and we find out that everybody in the Treasury is looked after except the guys in the backbenches. I think it is time we asked a pointed question, Mr. Chairman, of the Minister: What is going to be done about sessional indemnities here? If the Minister does not have an answer, I will proceed further.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am in no position to answer a question like that, Mr. Chairman. I am asking the Legislature to vote for us moneys sufficient to pay indemnities at the current rate.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, maybe I should apologize to the House for being so arrogant as to say that we should have more money as backbenchers, as members of the Opposition. But I think that somewhere along the line we must face up to the fact that—

Hon. Mr. Welch: You get the same as the rest of us.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think that is quite true. We do not have all the amenities and the plush offices you have, the treatment you get, the expense accounts you have, all the courtesies you have. We are treated like second-rate people here. Whether you know it or not, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister—and I am not one to deny that because I have a great respect for you—I do not think we should be asked to come in here as directors of a $3.5-billion corporation to work for less than $2 an hour. Tonight is a good example. I am not a good example of attendance here; I know many of you are devoted people much more than I and should talk about this, but I am the kind of black sheep who will say this. I will get hell for what I am doing from my leader, probably, anyway—and I am saying this as a private individual.

I have a clipping today from the Niagara Falls paper, which says,

“We are going to pay our assessors $20,000—32 assessors $20,000.

The hon. member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) had a clipping from the paper saying a janitor, a custodial officer, is paid $11,500—$3,500 more than a member of Parliament gets.

An hon. member: That was a building superintendent.

Mr. Sargent: Was that a building superintendent?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was not custodial.

Mr. Sargent: Maybe he has more talent than a lot of us have but the thing is that somewhere along the line I think that—The Chair says that the Provincial Treasurer could speak on this; he owes us the courtesy to tell us our position in this regard, or shall I proceed?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Better proceed.

Mr. Sargent: Well, we will take it then, Mr. Chairman, there is no point in flogging this thing. It is embarrassing probably for those of us who have to sit here. We are begging for the money. I just think it is a lack of political guts that you cannot face up to the fact that you do owe it to the people who keep you in that front row, who make you look the big shots that you are, that you can live on the fat of the land, the expense accounts you have, direct the great amount of budgets you do—

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would suggest to the hon. member that on item 6, I believe he is referring to, of vote 1706—indemnities and allowances to members, including mileage—any discussion regarding increasing those would be more properly directed to the Prime Minister rather than to this Minister.

Mr. Sargent: Well, Mr. Chairman, I—

Mr. Chairman: Questions about—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I will take the alternative tack. If we cannot talk about increasing, may we talk about decreasing then, because it is an insult to each one of us to ask us first of all to put ourselves in a position where those of us who live outside of this city have got to the point where we never get a chance to be with our families; we have to keep two homes; it costs me about $600 or $700 a month to live at the hotel down here. I do not think that is out of the way when I am entertaining people all the time from my riding and trying to live on the scale a would-be Cabinet Minister would want to live on. I think that we have so many inequities here that there is no use me trying to shame the government; they do not have any shame left in them. Look around this Chamber tonight. You will not see too many people saying I am wrong, Mr. Chairman. So I think we will leave it that way. If I have put up a bad case for the backbenchers here it is not going to help me a hell of a lot because I am in trouble with income tax all the time anyway. I think that somewhere along the line the people of this province do not want us to be treated the way you are treating us and I will leave it that way.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Provincial Secretary if any consideration is being given to the travelling of the members. Some of us who live a great distance away from this place have a great deal of responsibility on weekends when we go home to look after our constituents. It is the only time that we can see them. When you have to spend 12 hours in a train, get in on Saturday morning and come out Sunday night and spend another 12 hours and be tired when you are back at your job, it seems to me that there should be some further consideration given to those members from northern Ontario who live a great distance away from here. Since the session meets six to seven months of the year I think that the hon. Minister should give consideration to at least making some better travel arrangements for those of us who live a great distance from this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, at the moment the amount which is requested is the statutory amount to cover matters. I appreciate the comments which have been made. If you will recall last year we made some change with respect to being able to draw on the travelling portion of it on some regular basis rather than having to wait until the end of March.

Mr. Peacock: It simply means you do not have to go to the bank.

Hon. Mr. Welch: But the point was that there was some modification in this. I will be glad to draw the member's comments to the attention of the Prime Minister when he returns and I appreciate the fact that you have made them.

Mr. Sargent: On this item regarding Hansard.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, would the member mind if the same point was followed up?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West—or do you want to speak on it?

Mr. Lewis: If I may, it is on the same point, Mr. Chairman. The member for Grey-Bruce is entirely right, it is a hell of an invidious position for members of the House to have to be placed in, when they have the indemnities and the expense allowances and travelling grants up under the Provincial Secretary's estimates, to have to discuss things which by their implication mean enhancement of one's own economic means. I think that most members in this House resent the invidiousness of that position, and resent it pretty bitterly because there is no reason in the world why at this hour of the night, at the eleventh hour of your estimates, we have to take on some of the fairly sore facts. And there are one or two which are fairly compelling, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister is not aware of it.

There are members of this Legislature going into very serious personal debt. There are members of this Legislature who have an enormous economic burden, which is entirely unfair to ask them to assume. There are members of this Legislature who, in travel costs alone, are snowed under by the economic factors which impinge upon them. There are members of this Legislature who would even contemplate not running again because of the financial duress under which they are presently placed, and I dare say that they are not members confined to any one given political party.

I am not in that position, Mr. Chairman, the Minister knows that; I am not in any of those areas so I think that I can speak fairly freely and frankly on it to him. I think that it is simply wrong in a legislative assembly, that there is no reason in the world why certain members in the various political parties, certainly in the back bench of the government party, and proliferating through the other two parties in this House, should have to be placed in that position. I think that merits some pretty serious government thought.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is not the government in the same position?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly the government is in the same position—not the Cabinet, I think, not quite the same position—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Talking about invidious—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, the government members are in the invidious position, I am sure—I am not privy to these things—of having to raise it in a certain restless frustration at caucus and then wondering whatever happens to it thereafter. I am simply saying, Mr. Chairman, that surely the Minister feels there is some validity for an independent group or tribunal to take this whole difficult subject of members' indemnities and expenses and all the other things right out of the legislative arena altogether, and to do the kind of comparative study which would cause the members of the Legislature to feel that they were not being compromised in this kind of discussion and that some kind of equitable level of income is being set comparable to that which is received in the civil service or in private industry.

The member for Grey-Bruce and other members of the House have introduced anomalies on income level which strike one as laughable at times, as slightly humorous, but they can be produced from any area of the society. One has heard in the rumour mills of the halls that the Prime Minister has, in effect, had a study made of senior civil servants' salaries and that that study would extend to what members of the Legislature should appropriately receive. But none of that is made privy to the members of the House, none of us have any knowledge publicly of what is being done in this area. And in our frequent, and I think quite legitimate, request for an independent group—be it a jurist or someone else—to take a look at the economic position of the members of the Legislature, nothing has ever come of it.

No one here has argued that they would oppose a decrease if such a group found that they could legitimately substantiate the need for it. No one has argued that the income levels and expense levels and travelling expense levels would necessarily go up if it could otherwise be substantiated. What one is really saying is: Why need the members of this House year after year be subjected to the frank embarrassment, to the obvious invidious position of having to state a case which would inevitably be misconstrued in the public mind?

In the province of Nova Scotia, not so long ago, a public study was made, an independent private study, and it was called the Report of the Royal Commission on Election Expenses and Associated Matters. One of the associated matters was the level of indemnity and expense allowances of members. I will not go into the precise figures, but if the figures of this report were extrapolated and pro-rated in terms of the length of the Ontario sitting and the work of the members here, the members in Nova Scotia would, for two months' work, be receiving what members of this House are expected to receive for six or seven months. That is the relationship that this committee suggested when it came down with a salary proposal for the members of that House.

But I am not arguing the rights or wrongs of that, I am just indicating, Mr. Chairman, that here you have a government which felt that they could set up a Royal commission to take away from the members of the House the embarrassment of having to deal with these things, and put it in the hands of an independent tribunal, not subject to any political or other person, and give a decision. We ask the Minister, we ask the Treasurer and we ask the Prime Minister that at least they allow the Cabinet to vouchsafe to us what their plans are in this regard.

No one is screeching for a change in rates at this point. One is simply saying that there are legitimate circumstances now for the government to at least tell us what it has in mind, if anything, or at least to undertake the kind of analysis which would set the matter at rest once and for all. I hope that has not transgressed the proprieties of this very delicate matter.

The members of this House—many members of this House—are in the same position as the member for Grey-Bruce. I have had an occasional record of absenteeism, of which one does not speak proudly. But there are many members of this House—and I think in my own part that accounts for my own room much of the time—who work very hard and very long and very devotedly for a political cause; not a political cause in the doctrinaire sense of their own social philosophy, but in the service of constituents and in the service of the Legislature.

They should at least merit from government something other than the contempt implicit in a refusal to level with us collectively — of all parties — what your intentions are, whether or not you have an independent group, what one might expect, rather than relegating us to this position of having to, in a humiliating way, raise it at this point in the estimates.

I do not go further than that, Mr. Chairman, because I have only spoken about this Minister. I ask him now that when one raises this kind of point with him, that he take it seriously and does not let it simply lie.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to repeat what the hon. member for Scarborough West has said, because I think he has generally put the case. I just want to underline one aspect of it.

There is unconscionable delay and mystery about what goes on and this, I think, is the kind of thing that should be eliminated. I do not know how private the negotiations were between the leaders of the House, but as far back as last November or December, I asked the Prime Minister privately, if he would consider the proposition of setting up an independent triubunal, because we all know, from all sides of the House, that there has been discussion of the level of the indemnity and we are in an invidious position. The Prime Minister said he was considering it.

Now three months have gone by. Nobody knows, and from my tapping in on the grapevine in the hallways, the government members know less than even some of us know, which quite frankly, I think is a little silly.

I do not know why we do not deal with it out in the open.

Let me leave the indemnity and move on to the appropriation. I have only one major area of protest and, again, it stems from the delays. Last year when we agreed on the appropriations for each of the parties and the new arrangement, instead of all of us being sort of children of the Speaker, and being the benefactor of appropriations that went originally to him, the Prime Minister agreed that it could be reviewed at the end of the year. Well, certain proposals have been made and we are at the end of the year.

I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, just how serious it is. As most members know, we are in the process of getting into new quarters up in the third floor over in the corner. We simply cannot give information to The Department of Public Works—to finalize the arrangements so we can go in—with regard to telephones, because we do not know what our staff is going to be next year. April 1 is upon us—a new year. We do not know what the appropriation is; we do not know how many secretaries we may have, therefore we cannot tell Public Works how many telephones there are going to be and where they should be put in.

All this, it seems to me, is the result of the delays which, I suggest, should not characterize our handling of these affairs.

Finally I come to the travel problem for those who live at a great distance from Queen's Park. I know that the government was considering this a year ago. I know that the Prime Minister was wrestling with it and I know some of the problems that were making him hesitate.

But hesitating with problems is not going to remove them. They are still going to be there. One year later we still have no solution to the question of how those members who live at great distances from Queen's Park can be given something beyond the amounts that would go to members who live close to Queen's Park. Whether it is going to be by air fare, or whether it is going to be by 30 trips per year, rather than 15 trips a year, or what, I do not know. But we have been talking about it for a solid year. Who is wrestling with the problem—or is anybody really wrestling with the problem?

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald: The only reason I rise to underline, or to back up, what the hon. member for Scarborough West has said, is that I know that these matters are being considered, but the delay is an unconscionable one. It is frustrating the orderly handling of the arrangements of the offices, certainly in our instance, and I can only speak personally of the details there.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1706. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: On the Hansard reporting, item in the amount of $225,000. The last account we have was $124,000; it is up $100,000.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A lot of words.

Mr. Sargent: Yes. Up $100,000, or about 50 per cent, in two years since 1967-1968.

Would the Minister advise if Hansard is a tender deal?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Hansard is a contract which is under the jurisdiction of the Speaker. I assume that the extra moneys that are being voted for Hansard is because of the longer sessions.

We are talking about an item which costs about $18 a page and the longer the session and the more detail of course—

Mr. Sargent: You did not get my point. Is this a low tender deal? Does Ryerson Press have the contract to print it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I cannot say more than this. It is a contract which is negotiated by the Speaker, as far as the recording of the debates and the discussions in this House is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Imagine the poor proofreader having to read all those speeches.

Mr. Sargent: I see the former Speaker there. Maybe he could—

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): It is negotiated by the Speaker. He gave you the right answer.

Mr. Sargent: But is it a bid deal?

Mr. Morrow: No, it is not a bid deal.

Mr. Chairman, the Speaker's Office has looked into this at length as the years have gone by. They have negotiated with various printers to get the best price that they could, and the best price they could get, after looking into several printing establishments, was with Ryerson Press. So they went ahead and negotiated a contract with them.

This has been renewed from year to year, taking into consideration the number of copies that are used from year to year and that the price per page increases accordingly as costs go up. The Speaker's Office feel as if they are getting an exceptionally good deal from the present printing establishment.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you kept always telling me I was out of order. I am telling you you are out of order.

The thing is that—

Mr. Morrow: I am telling what is being done—

Mr. Sargent: Well, Mr. Chairman, he says that the prices go up each year, but I think it should be a competitive arrangement deal each year—that they must meet competition each year.

I mean, you cannot just give them holus-bolus, carte blanche, in a deal like this, because it is $250,000 you are throwing for some pretty junky paper. It is a cheap book there and it is a big contract. It should be renegotiated each year.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Provincial Secretary if he could tell us among how many members of the House, item 5, $439,000, is to be distributed? Is it among all of the members of the House, or only those who are private members?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just the private members.

Mr. Peacock: That works out to approximately $4,000 per member, is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: And that amount is to cover secretarial, research, office equipment and supplies, maintenance, postage, printing and so on. Now a number of members have already spoken to a prior and somewhat delicate matter, but I think on this item, Mr. Chairman, we do not need to have the same reservations about speaking out about the inadequacy of the amount that the Provincial Secretary is asking us to vote.

I do not think that the members of this House need to feel hesitant about suggesting directly to the Provincial Secretary and the Treasury Board that this is a hopelessly inadequate amount if private members of the House are to fulfill their duties as private members. An amount of $4,000 per member simply cannot cover the expenditure that is required for all the services that the Provincial Secretary has chosen to include under this item. It cannot even come close to covering the expenditure on the very first service that he has listed, that of secretarial help. As a description of the kind of service that I understand is provided to most private members it is completely misleading. It is anything but secretarial in nature and I suggest to the Provincial Secretary that he should omit that item altogether and bring in some other form of description for that kind of stenographic or typing service that is available to most private members of the House; or else he should bring in his request for the amount which is sufficient to provide proper secretarial service for each private member of the House.

The Prime Minister, from time to time, has spoken of the position of a private member of this House as being something akin to that of an ombudsman. Very well, let us just accept that definition for a moment, Mr. Chairman. Let us forget about the legislative responsibilities of members of this House; let us deal with their role as case workers in their constituencies. The amount of $4,000, if it were paid directly to each member of the House for secretarial service alone, to handle what we call in this group—and perhaps other members also use the expression—case work, the work that is brought to members by their constituents, would not come close to providing the full-time secretarial service that members require. That would mean that members would not be making the dozen of phone calls per case that they must make in order to expedite and complete the investigation of the problem that the constituent brings to them. It would provide the service in terms of correspondence that members would like to carry out, whereas at the moment we must sort through the correspondence that reaches us and put to one side the form letters to be answered by form letters—which may well be appropriate, but nonetheless, it is indicative to the person corresponding with the member of just how badly off we are in terms of these services.

Failing the provision of adequate amounts under this vote, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the Provincial Secretary that there are only two other ways in which private members can possibly bring the necessary resources to their support. These are simply by canvassing, as I am sure some members have done in the past and still do, canvassing individuals in their riding associations and outside their riding associations for contributions in the form of grants or loans to help them meet this kind of expense, making appeals to such individuals that, "since you have contributed in some way either financially or personally to the election of the member or even though you have not contributed directly financially or personally to the election of the member, because you are a public-spirited citizen and you want to ensure the viability of the political process in this province, I ask you to assist me financially in sustaining my position as a member of the Legislature."

I know that this has been done by members of the Legislature and I know that in one or two instances it is being done now, that members must make appeals to their acquaintances within their own political organizations in order that they can provide for themselves the services that are necessary to maintain an essential but non-partisan service to the constituents that they represent.

Mr. Chairman, the alternative if we do not achieve some improvement in services to private members is simply a reversion to the old system where members completely rely on the particular machinery that is available to them within their associations in working out some of the problems that are brought to them, the kind of political machinery that was in place and worked rather well before the introduction of a non-partisan civil service and the selection of civil servants by examination and so on; and a system which we will never get back to, thank goodness, but one which in those days was a means by which members served their constituents. It is no longer a valid, moral or technically acceptable way for a member to carry out his responsibilities.

Since that must be rejected, and failing any government response to the appeals of private members, then I think we will continue to have to rely upon the generosity of many private citizens in sustaining the efforts of members in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the hon. members would realize this is a matter of government policy. I am not in any position to make any announcement with respect to change. I have come to the Legislature on the basis of the statutes to ask the money to fulfill the statutes, the statutory obligations which we have—the requirement or the sum of money of $439,000 for the operation of item 5. I think I would draw your attention again to the comments of the hon. member for York South, where originally this was worked out by the leaders, and

I assume that any change would be worked out by the leaders in the same way that this amount was arrived at. I have no alternative now, in presenting my estimates to the House, than to ask for the amounts which are presently provided for in the statute, and also which are the subject matter of the agreement. If there is any change in those then obviously they can make application in the regular way, but I am in no position to discuss the impossible.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: The Minister is just the middle man.

Mr. Deacon: In connection with the matter of expenditures by the members to serve their constituents, as has been mentioned before, and in all other matters of related expenses, it seems appropriate for us now, and the government to consider now, changing the method from what has been perhaps appropriate in the past.

In the former days the sessions were limited in scope and the involvement of the members was much more limited, and perhaps then it was possible to make a flat amount estimate of what was needed and limit people to that amount. But in this time, when we now require for our normal income tax return details of our expenditures and vouchers for any other category of work we are involved in, where we now require of the civil servants in work they do putting in vouchers—and they are not restricted each year to a certain trip or a certain amount for the carrying out of the work of the government—why we should not have our own affairs managed in a similar way where we do not restrict the members; we make a reasonable estimate of what amounts will be required, but require that the members put in vouchers for their expenses. A man living close to Toronto, such as I in my position, does not have nearly the demands or need for expenses that someone living up in Fort Frances has. The need to get the cost of their going back to their ridings, to serve their ridings, are such that they should be not restricted by an arbitrary legislative amount.

I suggest that the agreement should be considered on the basis of publishing, as we do in the case of the public accounts; we have the publication of amounts of how much people have spent for travel expenses. Why do we not publish at the end of the year how much the members have spent, and put in vouchers for, and been reimbursed for, and their expenditures in carrying out their work? I think publication and disclosure of the amounts spent will do a great deal to alleviate any concern on the part of the public as to abuse of this type of control—or lack of control, they might say. We feel it is sufficient to be sure we have control in the case of the civil service; why not ourselves?

I do not think it is appropriate any more for us to work on a flat amount of tax-exempt allowance. I do not feel the public gets any feeling of assurance that this money has been properly expended. And I think in this way, if we do change our policy, we should take off the ceiling, leave it to the member's own conscience and to the fact that what they spend is made public in the accounts of this province at the end of the year.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to return for a moment to the appropriation to each of the parties within the House, and the operation of their offices, because there is one aspect, I now recall, and this is the appropriate place it should be raised.

The Minister has indicated that the details of it are now in the process of being examined. I think proposals have been advanced, certainly by each of the Opposition parties, and the Prime Minister has indicated they will be looked at in the first instance by the Whips, and then presumably they will come up to the troika meeting of the leaders for some final decision. At least, that has been the past procedure. I do not want to deal with the detail, but I want to deal with the principle. Now, I shall attempt to keep what may appear to be partisan aspects of this in a very low tone. Originally, the provision of moneys for Opposition parties, or for the party offices, was because the Prime Minister and everybody acknowledged that the Opposition were at something of a disadvantage in terms of available research facilities. Theoretically we all have access to the civil service, we all have to a certain degree, but there are obvious limitations on the extent to which an Opposition member can go and get research and things done by government departments; and there are not as many limitations for a government member. Certainly for a Cabinet Minister there are none.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All you have to do is ask the Minister, he does it all for you.

Mr. MacDonald: Therefore the original provision of this money was to redress this imbalance. Now, Mr. Chairman, quite frankly, until the consideration of these estimates a year ago I did not know what the other parties were getting, and I did not care, as long as we were getting enough to operate efficiently. But last year the now Minister of Revenue—

Mr. Winkler: If you want to be tolerable you need more money, I can tell you.

Mr. MacDonald: I shall not pursue that, Mr. Chairman, I did not get the import of the interjection. But last year the now Minister of Revenue interjected and in his characteristic way contended, without any documentation at all, that the money that was being made available to the New Democratic Party was being used for the provincial office, and the provincial office was being run here. It was a typical smear and I will call it that bluntly. And only because of that provocation I said, "Okay, what is each party getting?" And I was very fascinated to discover the information.

The Liberals are getting $4,000 per member, which is the basic formula, plus $6000 for the leader's office a total of $118,000. We were getting $4,000 per member for the 20, a total of $80,000 plus $6,000 for the leader's office which is $86,000. The Conservatives were getting the equivalent amount, $204,000—equivalent to the two Opposition parties. Now, how you figure that out I just do not know; quite frankly I have not been able to find out, because, as was contended for the private members, we have got to do a bit more analysis. There are 69 Conservatives. One is the Speaker, and he is provided for in a certain way. There are 23, I think, in the Cabinet. That takes you down to 45. But even if we operated on the 45, four times 45 is $180,000. Where is the $204,000? I submit that even the 45 is not a defensible proposition, because six of the Conservative members have offices in the various commissions that they sit on, OWRC, racing commission, Hydro, and so on. There are really 39 Conservative members, so on the basis that we are operating, it should be four times 39. In fact, it is four times 51.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): We still have to use the research facilities, obviously.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): You have the civil service.

Mr. MacDonald: You have the research facilities of all of your department, and—

Mr. Trotter: All your PR boys.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying, Mr. Chairman—and I said that I do not wish to get into a partisan argument, because quite frankly until that bitter partisanship was interjected last year I did not know what the other parties were getting and I did not care. But now, I do care, because I think that this, too, should be brought out so that everybody can see it and lay it right on the table. The fact of the matter Mr. Chairman, is that while the government should be commended for doing as much as any other government in this country in terms of providing these moneys, and more than most, it is still inadequate.

The point I want to make is, that the objective of creating a better balance, so that the Opposition parties would not have to cope with a government which has all those resources, has certainly not been achieved at all. The imbalance is as great, if not greater than it was before. Because the government members, despite the fact that there are not as many of them who are entitled to it as backbenchers, are getting as much as the two Opposition parties put together.

There is a principle involved in this and I draw it to the attention of the Minister. I have already drawn it to the attention of the Prime Minister, and I think in the course of our working out the details of the new appropriation that some of these principles, if there are underlying principles, should be brought right out into the open.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1706? The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out too, that the 39 non-Cabinet members of the government have not the same requirements as the members of the Opposition. They have their case work. We have our case work. But we also have to be prepared to speak almost every day. We have to do a great amount of research—at least, we would like to. We have very little time to do it and when the appropriations are being divided, that should be one of the major considerations. So that even if we could get equality I think we would be satisfied, but we are not getting equality even and, in all fairness, we should really get more.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I can be brief because I can say this: I can say that I want to associate myself without reservation to everything that was said by the member for Windsor West because he expresses through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Provincial Secretary, exactly the position I have taken since I have come into this House.

It is absolutely unconscionable to think that we can do the job that we are supposed to do for $4,000. Really, as you go down this list it is amazing to me, I had not taken the time to look at it before, the word "secretarial" is an absolute misnomer; the word "secretary" implies to me, some liaison between myself as a personality and the people whom I serve. What we have are stenographers. That is really the word. But I do not want to get into semantics with you.

I think the Provincial Secretary takes a just position in connection with this. This is a unique vote, I would suggest, among all the estimates in that, really, he is not the author of this. I doubt very much really, Mr. Chairman, whether he has much to say about it. But knowing him personally and respecting him as I do, I ask him this: Be my advocate if you would, please, be my advocate with your Cabinet colleagues because I made a speech in this House—I think it was in December—and spent 15 minutes on this very subject. I came here from a law practice where I had four secretaries, and I am blessed in this respect. I would suggest three-quarters of my work is done through my law office in Sarnia, but that should not have to be. Why should my colleague in Ottawa have better disposition of services to the people whom he serves than I? I am not interested in amenities. I do not want that. I do not care one whit whether you put me in a room 8x4 with no window, but I do want proper secretarial service, because I am an ombudsman. That is exactly what the member for Windsor West said and exactly what the Prime Minister agrees with but this business of a troika, an agreement—there is no troika, it is a unilateral decision made by one man. And really it is made reasonably. I think he makes a sincere attempt, and I think I have said this before. There is a sincere attempt to upgrade our facilities here. But the sincere attempt does not exemplify it, Mr. Chairman, and to you, Provincial Secretary, does not exemplify itself in this expenditure of $439,000. This should be doubled, I suggest, and I doubt whether that would be a realistic amount.

I close in saying to the Provincial Secretary, through you Mr. Chairman, please be my advocate and the advocate of the people who sit behind you and need the same type of service that I so badly need.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have two very brief thoughts as I listen to this discussion.

One of the very real problems, I suspect—if I can be forgiven for suggesting it—is that the Cabinet members, the Treasury Board, having within their purview all the prerogatives of their office, find it very difficult to both comprehend and to identify with some of the difficulties of backbench members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you not think we were backbenchers?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Correctional Services has found it necessary to chuckle through various parts of the debate, to make—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was a backbencher without any aid, without any research facilities—but I was not chuckling.

Mr. Lewis: He has to make a variety of asides, I do not know why. This is the kind of defence mechanism that is always employed, and I do not particularly see why it has to be employed on this occasion. But the Minister of Correctional Services, as a Minister of the Crown, I am quite sure, functions with a full-time secretary. And I am quite certain he functions with certain ancillary staff on a full-time basis, and no one in this entire legislative assembly would deny him the right to so function. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, all that one asks of the Treasury Board is why they deny individual members of this Legislature to so function. Are our positions so much less worthy? Must the status of individual members be so much more demeaned in comparison with Treasury Board? I think not sir, I think not. I think the Treasury Board has what they must have—sometimes perhaps a little more—so be it, those are the trappings of power. But I see no reason in the world why the people with whom they are associated in this legislative assembly cannot have even the minimal that is required to do a decent job. The minimal is a sum of money sufficient to provide what you have indicated in this vote—the secretarial work, the research work, the supplies, the equipment, the postage and so on. On that, you put a figure of $4,000.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what it is for the government members, but I know that for our party—and I suspect for the other Opposition party—it works out to not a secretary, not even a stenographer, but a dicta-typist for three or four members. Let me make my point this way, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Provincial Secretary. I challenge him to rise in his seat at this point in time, and turn around and identify for people on this side of the House, three or four members behind him who can function legitimately, effectively and usefully as MPPs with one dicta-typist, very little research and by no means adequate equipment. Which of your members are the three or four? Can you name them for us? Can you identify them for us? Do you not think that that this a legitimate question to ask? And we rest our case there, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I propose to you, and to the House, that this is a matter that can certainly receive consideration. In the words of the hon. member for York South, it has been considered already by the three leaders—the troika, if that is the appropriate word to use—and dealt with at that time. If it has turned out to be quite inadequate, it is quite possible to review again. But the hon. member for Riverdale shakes his head.

Mr. J. Renwick: It has been under review for something like three months.

Mr. MacDonald: And it should have been finished.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Let me pursue this, Mr. Chairman. All right, it has been under review as you say. It has been under review in this House tonight, very extensively and quite appropriately. That is the prerogative of a private member. But may I propose that you vote what is being asked for here now and may I suggest again, that the leaders will likely be consulted if and when—hopefully soon—some estimate of what has been required has been developed? If an agreement can be reached by some reasonable means, then the process is very simple. The Provincial Secretary will submit a request to Treasury Board for an approval of funds to augment what is in this Budget. Now I simply suggest to you that you vote the Provincial Secretary what he is asking for here now. I am quite confident this can be dealt with in due course.

Mr. Ben: What will you do when the Provincial Secretary asks you for supplementary funds?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: May I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that if a consortium of agreement has been reached by the Prime Minister and leaders of the other two parties, it becomes pretty routine, I think.

Mr. Lewis: Only a man who borrows Deutschmarks talks about a consortium of agreement.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Not to labour this too long, Mr. Chairman, I do have two questions to ask. I would like to ask first who sits on the Treasury Board?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Who sits on the Treasury Board?

An hon. member: It is out of order.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Out of order? Treasury Board—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not think it is pertinent to the matter under discussion.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship, is it the Treasury Board that can alter this amount? Who can alter this amount, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think, Mr. Chairman, the point the Treasurer is making is that the Legislature can vote this amount. Then, if it is necessary to increase the vote, the procedure is to apply to the Treasury Board—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask then, when the Minister applies to Treasury Board what Minister he is applying to?

All right, Mr. Chairman, I will accept the Treasurer's comments inasmuch as he seems to have recognized that we are in a desperate need on this side of the House. I was simply trying to find out in whose hands this fate rested so that I might keep a watchful eye.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Because, Mr. Chairman, I wrote a personal note one day to a person whom I consider a senior member of Cabinet and he said, "I will discuss it with the Speaker, I think it comes under his department." I assumed this gentleman would be on the Treasury Board and that was my purpose, Mr. Chairman, in trying to find out which Ministers I should be lobbying.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question as well, on the comments. Actually the member rose when he made these comments, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps you did not see him behind your right shoulder there. I believe the member for Muskoka rose and said "We will have to depend on government research." This is something that I would like to have access to,

Mr. Chairman. I have never clearly understood—

Mr. Boyer: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I made no such remark. The hon. member clearly misunderstood what I did say. Hansard will show what I did say.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, because research naturally is a part of our function as critics, would it be appropriate to ask the Minister if government research is available to members of the opposite side of the House, such as the—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I must apologise, would the member repeat the question?

Mrs. M. Renwick: I believe, Mr. Chairman, I worded it this way: Is government research available to members on this side of the House?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, I assume, Mr. Chairman, that there were some comments being made by the member for Muskoka and I heard his interjection. I think what he was saying was that he relies on the research facilities which are provided for this caucus through its caucus offices. That is not government research, that is the caucus research. As far as government research is concerned, the member for York South has already mentioned that all members of this Legislature can consult with all of the civil servants of the various departments to obtain whatever other information they need. And if that is government research then that is available to all members of the Legislature.

Mr. MacDonald: But much of it is inter-departmental and not available.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well that may be, but I just want to draw that distinction.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Some of it is.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, from the Minister's remarks, I presume he concludes that from the appropriation, we must provide for ourselves, a research person. One person for that job for 20 members is really not enough. We do not take part, Mr. Chairman, in the government switchboard, so therefore we must also, out of our appropriation, provide a switchboard operator. One switchboard operator is not really enough, inasmuch as we sit two evenings a week, and the switchboard operator has lunch hours. And when we provide these amenities, which all of us share in, and assistance to our leader whom we feel deserves all the assistance we can possibly provide for him in the province, we end up, as one of the members mentioned earlier, sharing one secretary between three members of Parliament.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if any of the Cabinet Ministers on the other side have ever tried to do a half decent job with one-third of a secretary.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which third?

Mrs. M. Renwick: But it is about ten hours a week.

I do not know what I said that was so humorous, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to say that many of these speeches that I am asked to make at riding associations are placed before me in this fashion, Mr. Chairman: What is it like to be a lady member in a gentlemen's club or what is it like to be a lady member of Parliament? We do not have all that many.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now you sound like Judy LaMarsh.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that we all have a little joke or two tucked up our sleeves when we are speaking to riding associations. If the audience is cold we warm them up with a little comment. My favourite comment — and I must say I am getting embarrassed at using it—is: ‘Well, first of all, ladies and gentlemen, I work at Queen's Park with the volume of mail I know many of you send me, with one-third of a secretary.’ Mr. Chairman, if I had an ordinary position—and I have worked all my adult life but for about ten years—and the company could not provide me with one secretary for the work that I had to do, I would not stay, and I think we are really asking something that is intolerable when we ask members on this side of the House—

An hon. member: Don't stay.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, in spite of the efforts of Mr. Alan Eagelson and Mr. George Peck who have a great deal in common, I intend to stay in the legislative assembly as long as the people of Scarborough Centre will re-elect me.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, this is a perennial for me. I must put on the record again what I have said in other years. I remember talking to the late Harry Nixon when I was first elected ten years ago and I said that no man has a right to refuse to answer a letter for any man. We should reply, naturally, when we get correspondence from people. They are looking for an answer. Harry Nixon said, ‘You won't be here too long before you will get over that.’

I tried hard not to get beyond that but I find it easier to drop letters into a basket rather than have to reply to them, because we just do not have the staff here. Fortunately, I have a full-time secretary who does most of my political correspondence at home. As I have said before, I write my letters here in longhand and send them to Chippawa. My secretary types them and sends them back to me in a day or so, and then I sign them and send them back to Chippawa or Niagara Falls. This has been going on for quite a few years.

Mr. Lewis: There must be an easier way. Is that what you would do if you ever came to power?

Mr. Bukator: The fact remains that this girl gets paid more in wages than the government pays me for working here, and the days I put in here. Her gross take is greater than the $8,000 that you give me in wages and she earns every cent of it.

I have private offices in both Niagara Falls and Chippawa.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You need to if you are a member on this side of the House.

Mr. Bukator: I have been accustomed to doing business in a private office where I can concentrate and call people and not be bothered. I recall not too long ago talking to a member of a department of the government when four or five of my colleagues came into that particular new quarter that I am established in now. Naturally they are a happy lot after dinner, and I said to the man that I was talking to, ‘Four or five of my drunken political friends have come in and I am sorry I have lost track of what we were talking about.’

Well, it was not quite that bad, but this is the type of privacy we have now. I find it much easier to sit here after the House closes till 11 and 12 o'clock at night doing some of the work that I have to do because the three who are housed in with me do not like working evenings. I find that I can get a lot of work out of the way. This day alone some 55 letters that I signed went out of my office downstairs. I said it a year ago and I say it to you now, we have a big business to look after: the province. We are entitled to a private office and a secretary; that is not asking too much. I personally recall the Prime Minister saying in this House not too long ago "we can put it back to what it was," and sure enough, it was not what it was today. I am happy with what I have, but we do need more help. We need more secretarial staff to help us get this correspondence out.

I have one petition from a group of people from the village where I come from and I think each one of them is entitled to a reply, even though they signed a petition. I intend to do just that. There has to be at least 400 letters go out of that office and I have been waiting for an opportunity for one of our pool—because they have been moved in and out of their offices too, the secretaries—to get to the position where they can take care of this correspondence properly.

Mr. Lewis: What about the humane society—

Mr. Bukator: I am not talking about the humane society, although I have my share of those also. The difference between my correspondents and the humane society—for the benefit of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart)—I reply to the people who write to me, they were not form letters.

I believe people are entitled to just that kind of a reply. And I think this government owes me that kind of staff, to take care of the constituents that we all represent. Until we receive that kind of treatment here, I am not going to be at all content.

I say, through you, Mr. Chairman, to the members who are here, that things are better than they were, but they are not good enough for the type of business we are operating. Therefore, I want to get on the record again what I said in other years—that this is not the way to run the province's affairs.

Vote 1706 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will do some Budget Debate and then go into the private members' hour at noon.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.35 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 1969

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors with us in the Legislature. I am sure the hon. members would want to extend a welcome to our visitors this morning.

In the east gallery we have students from the Brockton High School of Toronto, and from the Brantford Collegiate Institute and Vocational School, Brantford.

A little later in the morning we will have in the west gallery students from the Central Peel Secondary School of Brampton.

Petitions.

Presenting reports. The hon. Minister of Transport.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I table the statistics on traffic collisions in Ontario in 1968, as compiled by my department from police reports.

Although the number of deaths was somewhat lower than in the previous year, the other figures are up. This leaves scant ground for satisfaction with this unhappy report. I present it as perspective for the consideration of traffic matters by the House.

It will be noted that the title of the statistical report is no longer "Accident Facts". This year it refers to traffic collisions. I believe the use of the word "accident" has become symbolic of the perverse attitude that accepts these happenings as inevitable and in so doing perpetuates the problem.

Most collisions are caused by human carelessness and irresponsibility. Therefore, my department is dropping the use of the word "accident" wherever possible, and I ask that hon. members also consider this change in terminology in the interests of encouraging commonsense attitudes toward traffic safety.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills. The hon. member for Wellington South.

THE DESERTED WIVES' AND CHILDREN'S MAINTENANCE ACT

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Deserted Wives' and Children's Maintenance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, very briefly this bill is to extend the time limit of when a husband is responsible to his wife for the care of his children.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day the hon. the Prime Minister has a statement.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to inform you and the hon. members, of the retirement of an eminent senior public servant.

A few weeks ago, the chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, Dr. James A. Vance, indicated his wish to be relieved of his heavy duties as the chairman of this important commission. Dr. Vance agreed to continue in office while a review of the functions of the commission was undertaken.

As I announced to the House on Thursday, March 13, the Ontario Water Resources Commission:

Will be responsible for the holding of public hearings, resolving disputes, considering rate structures wherever the public interest is involved in matters of water management and pollution abatement. . . . The commission and all its quasi-judicial and policy-making functions will continue as it has done in the past. But that portion of the staff of the water resources commission—the technical aspect of it; the people who are doing the surveys and planning the plants and operating them, in many cases, because more and more are they coming into the operation of these plants across the province—will be brought into the department.

In its new role, the commission will be responsible for all aspects of the development of broad policies covering water supply and pollution abatement. In doing so, it will be necessary for it to work closely with the various agencies, including of course the governmental agencies, developing plans for regional development.

In due course, Mr. Speaker, legislation to effect this course of events will be brought before the House.

Now that the broad outlines of the revised role of the commission have been defined, and in consultation with Dr. Vance, it is appropriate to accede to his request. Accordingly, I wish to announce that His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor, has accepted the resignation of Dr. Vance effective April 1, 1969.

The contribution of Dr. Vance to this province has been substantial and is well known to all hon. members. He was a member of the water resources and supply committee, which preceded the establishment of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. When the commission was established in 1956, Dr. Vance became a member of this body. Indeed, he and I were fellow commissioners for a time. Following the death of A. M. Snider, the first chairman of the commission, in 1964, Dr. Vance succeeded to this position. This followed a distinguished career as senior partner in an eminent firm of consulting engineers in Woodstock.

Dr. Vance's attainments in his profession are recognized throughout the world. Utilizing his expertise, he has guided the development of the technical staff of the Ontario Water Resources Commission which today is recognized as one of the most advanced groups in its field.

Under his chairmanship, the Ontario Water Resources Commission has achieved spectacular results in the field of water supply and pollution abatement. As two very large examples, I need only refer to the Lake Huron water supply pipeline and the recently announced water and sewage project for Peel county. Dr. Vance may be justifiably proud of the positive and constructive role he and the commission have played in the growth and development of Ontario. The beneficial effect of Dr. Vance's work as chairman of the commission will have a continuing and salutary influence on the lives of the people of Ontario for many years to come.

So, on behalf, sir, of the government of Ontario, I wish to thank Dr. Vance for his service to the people of Ontario and to express my personal appreciation of my long association with him and the advice that he has given the government. On behalf of all of us in this House, I should like to say to him: We will continue the important work for which you have laid so sound a foundation.

The new chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission will be Mr. Donald J.

Collins, who leaves his present appointment as chairman of the civil service commission and Deputy Minister of The Department of Civil Service. He will assume his new position on April 1, 1969.

Mr. Collins brings to the water resources commission a broad background of administrative expertise in public service. His knowledge and experience will further strengthen the commission in its new and expanded role of involving the people of Ontario more fully in the decision-making process which will result in the greater protection and enhancement of our environment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Works, I believe has a statement.

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement here that I think will be of interest to all members, but may be more particularly of interest to the member for Halton East (Mr. Snow) and, possibly, the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. MacKenzie). Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to advise the members of this House that effective March 31, 1969 my department will adopt the modular co-ordination system in the design and construction of Department of Public Works projects.

Modular co-ordination is a term given to the process of standardizing the dimensions of building components so as to reduce the variety of sizes in which components are manufactured and thus facilitate the assembly of components on the building site.

Dimensional standardization, based upon the standard four inch building module is a prerequisite to co-ordination. It is an important means of increasing productivity and efficiency in the manufacture and use of building equipment.

The adoption of modular co-ordination by the building industry is one of the specific objectives of the federal government's BEAM programme, whose overall objective is to increase productivity and efficiency in the manufacture and use of building equipment, accessories and materials.

For the past two years the staff of public works have been training for this procedure and we have phased it into our design groups.

Shortly, we expect to be calling tenders for an addition, and interior alterations, to the court house in Kenora. The drawings and specifications for the project were prepared by our staff on the modular system. This was considerably more difficult than for a new building, but it did give us the assurance that our staff were capable of efficiently adopting the system for all projects.

As of March 31, we will also require all of our associate architects on Provincial projects to produce their drawings on this system.

You may be aware that, effective the same date, the federal Department of Public Works recently announced a similar policy.

We are continually striving for new and improved procedures for the economical and judicious spending of our construction dollars and we are, at all times, ready to work with all aspects of the construction industry in improving our skills and systems in this industry which is so vital to the economy and growth of the Province.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker I would like to congratulate the Minister on his very progressive steps in this matter. I am sure that the province will benefit greatly economically from his very progressive approach to building construction.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): When it is overdue, then they suggest it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Social and Family Services has a statement.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement in connection with recovery of residential property tax rebates. I have made an intensive assessment of the impact of recovery. This review has included consideration of the effects upon recipients and the meaning to them of the recovery procedures initiated.

We have concluded that in consideration of all aspects of this question that it is in the best interests of the recipients that we should not recover the payments that were made to and received by them, in good faith.

I am therefore pleased to say that I have obtained approval for appropriate amendments which will provide that payments under The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act are not recoverable from recipients of family benefits and general welfare assistance. Where recovery has been made in whole or in part, it is our intention that appropriate adjustments will be made. I am sure that this decision will be welcomed by all concerned.

Mr. Speaker, as you know our programmes of financial assistance are designed to cover a variety of circumstances where provision of essential needs of persons, for one reason or another, is not available or is inadequate. Indeed, the package of social services and maintenance and other allowances and benefits is within this province amongst the best anywhere. Although these programmes are extensive and cover the great majority of situations of need, from time to time there evolves a particular group of persons who are in a situation where it is difficult or impossible to obtain the necessary benefits from existing arrangements.

I am keenly aware of the plight of certain persons who are receiving care in a hospital for chronic patients and who have no private resources to use for personal needs. I am pleased to say again that I have obtained approval from the gentlemen on my immediate right for appropriate amendments in order to provide for the payment of a comfort allowance up to $15 per month to those who are patients in hospitals for chronic care, and who of course qualify under the needs tests. We feel that this new provision will bring some comfort and some of the amenities of life to those who are in the unfortunate position of suffering from long term illness and disability.

Mr. Speaker, although the gifts are not of my own making only, it is nice to be Santa Claus.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Pending a favourable reply from Ottawa wherein the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will share the cost of rent subsidy premium, will the Minister guarantee that all cities in Ontario will have equal treatment with the city of Toronto?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Subject to our receiving a reply from Ottawa to the effect that the federal government will participate in the operating costs of a scheme similar to the rent certificate plan—introduced by the government of Ontario some years ago—and subject to the establishment of terms and conditions for such a scheme acceptable to the government of Ontario, it could be implemented in any Ontario municipality.

I would, however, draw to the attention of the hon. members that the implementation of such a scheme in any municipality is dependent upon there being established need and effective demand for rent-to-income accommodation and the availability of suitable, privately owned accommodation at a realistic rental rate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has questions from a few days ago. Does he wish to answer them at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have no answers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has a question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): A question to the Minister of Justice:

Is the Minister aware that a Mr. Joseph Viner of 14 Major Street, Toronto, appeared before Judge R. K. Hirtle in Court "K", old city hall, on March 24, on a traffic offence and was refused by the judge the option to make an affirmation instead of an oath, and consequently lost his case because he was unable to plead?

Second part: is not mandatory for judges acting in Ontario courts to accept an affirmation when the person to be sworn in refuses to take an oath under section 18(1) of The Evidence Act?

And the third part: if so, will the Minister instruct Judge Hirtle to reopen Mr. Viner's case so that he may have a court hearing in the proper manner?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I received the question a short time ago. I would like to check the facts, and certainly shall then have an answer for the hon. member.

I would say definitely, as to the question about affirming instead of swearing, this is permitted, I know. I would want to check the facts surrounding the case so that I shall be able to give a proper answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has questions to the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, might I ask you to give me the number of that outstanding question?

Mr. Speaker: Question 981.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A question of the Minister of Social and Family Services: are welfare administrators in Metro Toronto encouraged or allowed to seek the co-operation of the Ontario Housing Corporation in their attempt to house welfare recipients; or do they rely solely on the Metro welfare housing department on George Street where, it is my understanding, it is limited to landlords who will take welfare recipients as tenants at welfare rates for shelter?

Question 2, Mr. Speaker: what is policy with regard to welfare administrators trying to cope with emergency housing cases, such as evictions. Are they allowed or encouraged to work with the OHC on these cases, or are the administrators to rely on the one-family hostel in Toronto, on Dundas Street, where husbands are not allowed to stay with their families?

Question 3: why are husbands not allowed to stay with their families in the family hostel on Dundas Street? Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling I asked that question previously.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet answered it.

Mr. Speaker: May I say I am trying desperately to find the question, and I do not appear to have one with that number on it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The question was asked, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. M. Renwick: About March 24, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I do not have that question.

Mrs. M. Renwick: No, it was asked. That would be why you would not have it, Mr. Speaker. It was asked on March 24, and the Minister is replying today to that question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I replied, but I ended my reply at that time by saying I would be pleased to obtain the information and answer the question at a later date. Now I have the full answer:

1. The welfare offices of the welfare department of Metro Toronto seek housing for people and the welfare offices of The Department of Social and Family Services are often engaged in the same task. Both provincial and municipal welfare officers work in close co-operation with the Ontario Housing Corporation and receive excellent help from that source in many cases.

2. Where persons are threatened with eviction from housing, the municipality makes every effort to forestall eviction so far as the legislation allows. If eviction takes place, the family may be placed in other rented accommodation, or may go into an Ontario housing unit. In some cases the family goes to the family hostel on Dundas Street for a comparatively short time until housing can be found for them.

3. The family hostel is emergency shelter and is not equipped for full private-family living. There are only bathrooms, for example, for women and children, and the presence of men would be inappropriate. For these reasons the husbands do not stay with the family. The separation, however, is temporary and the families are reunited in appropriate housing as soon as possible.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Perhaps the hon. member would place the question and then I would see.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the Minister undertake to make some contact with the Coxwell and Queen welfare office, where I have been told that they are not to contact OHC unless they are down to a seven-day eviction for a family.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will take that matter up.

There is question 1024 from the member.

Mr. Speaker: Question 1024, dated March 26.

Mrs. M. Renwick: If it has been asked, Mr. Speaker, I do not have it here. Has it been asked?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No.

Mr. Speaker: According to my information the question has been asked.

If the hon. member does not have it there, I could send this one up to her for her use at the moment.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number again?

Mr. Speaker: Number 1024.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I have it, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Are Crown wards Peggy and Valerie, former foster children with the Timbrell family, still together; and are they adopted or still foster children and wards of the Crown?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, Peggy and Valerie are still Crown wards. They are living with different families of relatives and have regular contact with each other.

Mr. Speaker: Question 1011, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre to the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that question is no longer applicable.

Mr. Speaker: Question 1013, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre to the same Minister.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have not received that.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Minister have that question?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, I have not. That completes all the questions I have, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I also have question number 1014 by the same hon. member to the same Minister.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, 1013 is no longer pertinent due to the Minister's statement this morning.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): The Renwick rebates!

Mr. Speaker: What about question number 1014?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Question 1014, Mr. Speaker, is no longer pertinent due to the Minister's statement this morning.

Mr. Speaker: Question 1015; the same hon. member to the same hon. Minister.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I presume the same comments apply?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the same comments apply to question 1015.

Mr. Speaker: Question 1043, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre; a question of the hon. Minister of Health.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: will the Minister take steps to make sure that the emergency key to drugs in the dispensary of the Brockville psychiatric hospital is placed with the senior medical staff person at the hospital instead of the switchboard?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be unreasonable to ask the hon. member to put all of the questions. All of her questions have relationship to the same matter.

Mr. Speaker: Well, perhaps the hon. member would put the remainder of her questions to this Minister?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask your opinion on this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the question be put on the order paper, because I believe it more rightly belongs there—the entire series of questions.

Mr. Speaker: I have a series of five questions by the hon. member to the same Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They are related to the same thing; they should all be on the order paper.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They are not necessarily related questions in all of these cases. I would have been glad to have put this second question, along with the other one. But the others, regarding the staffing of the hospital, Mr. Speaker, if I might say, do not really bear any relationship to the question of the control of drugs at the hospital.

May I receive permission, Mr. Speaker, to deliver the questions as they were delivered to the Minister? Except that I would have been glad to add the question of the dispensary in other hospitals along with the one which the Minister has.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could deal with this by citing the numbers of the questions. Question number 1039: does the hon. Minister care to answer that question or take it as notice?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that it be put on the order paper where I think it more rightly belongs.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Speaker, question 1039 has not been asked. May I have the floor to ask the question?

Mr. Speaker: Well, I believe the hon. member may ask the question properly.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Question of the Minister of Health: How many doctor vacancies were there at the Brockville psychiatric hospital at the time of Dr. Mullner's testimony to the standing committee on health, March 6, 1969?

How many doctors' positions have been filled since that date and for how long had these vacancies been in existence?

How many of these doctor positions were filled by transfers from other hospitals, and if so, from which hospitals?

For how long have the three doctor vacancies, the Minister spoke of yesterday, been vacant?

How long is it since the Brockville psychiatric hospital had its full complement of medical staff?

How many doctor vacancies have occurred since the present superintendent, Dr. Miller, came on staff?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this question be put on the order paper where it more properly belongs.

Mr. Speaker: I might say that the question had been placed before Mr. Speaker and the question was permitted. However, I believe that it would more properly be placed on the order paper and in that event the question should not have been put.

We will now put the question on the order paper at the request of the hon. Minister.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification. Is it appropriate for me to ask you what would decide whether a question should go on the order paper? All of this information was divulged yesterday in an exhibit at the hearing, with which the members of the committee were not provided. Therefore, the information is in the hands of The Department of Health.

Mr. Speaker: I can only say that the question had been cleared through Mr. Speaker's office. Perhaps the hon. Minister would reply to that question.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this is a lengthy question having pertinence to the operation of one particular hospital in our system. I am quite prepared to put all the information on the order paper. It will find its way, therefore, to the public record and will be available to every member of the House.

I think that this is far better than trying to answer it in this manner. This could take up a very great deal of the House's time and it was, as the hon. member has already pointed out to, dealt with fairly thoroughly yesterday, although the "exhibits", which the hon. member chose to term them, were not put in the hands of every member.

In this way the information from the exhibits will be put before the entire House.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the circumstances it would seem to me then that the question should properly be on the order paper.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask, through you to the Minister of Health, are these exhibits public so that a member of the House can go and read them and view them? I would assume they are.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, not necessarily, Mr. Speaker. The exhibits, as they are rather loosely termed—indeed this kind of language is foreign to me and the standing committee—were a memoranda which passed between the hospital and the department, inter-departmental material, and I do not necessarily agree that they are public property.

I do not know myself what is in them because I have not read them, but I will extract the necessary information to answer the hon. member's question when it appears on the order paper. It will then appear, I repeat, in the public records of this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Well Mr. Speaker, I would draw this to your attention, and I would request that the hon. Minister and the Speaker, examine what I think is a very remarkable situation.

We have a meeting of a standing committee. It is a public meeting and material is submitted as evidence. Now the Minister of Health comes in and says that the evidence that was submitted was not public evidence—that he is going to, in effect, go through it and choose what of that evidence will ultimately be made public.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh no, Mr. Speaker! On a point of order!

The hon. member is putting words in my mouth. This is absolutely not what I said.

The material presented before the standing committee yesterday was extracted from memoranda that passed between the hospital and the department and all of the content of these memoranda need not necessarily have been presented to this committee yesterday. Those parts of it that were presented to the committee will reappear.

I do not know why, sir, we have to waste the time of the House and the cost of Hansard, which we heard last night was exorbitant, in reproducing all this.

Every member who was present at the standing committee yesterday heard the answers to these questions. We are quite prepared to reproduce them and put them in writing, but they will have to be extracted from the memoranda from which they were taken. There will be no alteration of them; there may be some change in semantics, because I cannot remember the exact words which Dr. Miller used.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. What comes through to me from the Minister—what the Minister is saying is that the procedure yesterday in the standing committee was in complete opposition to that of the committee at its meeting two or three weeks ago. No record of the evidence given was taken down and the information which was submitted to that committee was subject to some form of selection before it appeared before the committee. No opportunity was given to the committee to get a full and complete disclosure of the matters that were supposedly given in evidence at that inquiry.

Now it has much larger ramifications than the question of whether or not this should or should not be on the order paper. It goes right to the root of whether or not an inquiry before one of the standing committees of this Legislature should be done partly under oath, partly with the benefit of counsel to carry our cross examination, or when it suits the Minister's purposes, that the matter only be dealt with by a representative of his staff coming before that committee—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of order. The hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. J. Renwick: If the hon. Minister will sit down—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The hon. Minister has risen on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member is talking about something of which he has no personal knowledge.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you want to rewrite the rules again here?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister had risen on a point of order during the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. J. Renwick: I was speaking on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I may say that the hon. member for Riverdale was discussing the matter and making many statements. Whether it constitutes a point of order or not—in so far as he was making a great many statements—I believe that hon. Minister should be permitted to rise on a point of order at this point.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I rose on the same point of order, I have been commenting on the same point of order. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is now not up to the Minister to stand up on some other point of order. He can get up when he wants to, Mr. Speaker, but not on this point of order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Riverdale has made remarks that are not in order, surely it is the privilege of the hon. Minister to rise on a point of order?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to have you rule me out of order when I have completed the point of order that I want to make.

Mr. Speaker: I was trying to listen very carefully to the hon. member for Riverdale and I did not observe that he was out of order so perhaps if he has a few remarks to complete his point he would proceed.

Mr. J. Renwick: My point in very brief summary, Mr. Speaker, is that the point of order arose on a question of whether or not questions admitted by the Speaker, and put to the Minister, should now go on the order paper. That is the first change which has taken place.

It is now apparent from the reply of the Minister and the discussion of that question, that the Minister has in fact said that matters that went before the standing committee of the Legislature yesterday were carefully selected items out of various memoranda which were submitted. I am simply saying that the Minister should answer the question. I asked a further question as to whether or not the standing committee should conduct an inquiry on one basis one day and on another basis on the second day of the same hearing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it must be perfectly obvious to you, as it must be to every hon. member of the House that the hon. member was not in the standing committee yesterday and therefore does not know whereof he speaks, at least at first hand.

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh yes, I know everything is nonsense unless the hon. member dredges it up, but let me point this out. The standing committee meeting yesterday had no relationship — except perchance — to the matter that was discussed before. When the evidence was taken previously, under oath, this was done at the direction of this assembly, and they were given certain restricted, limited powers and responsibilities. These were completed.

The meeting yesterday was a regular meeting of the standing committee of health to which Dr. Miller was invited. Dr. Miller came but did not give his evidence, he answered the questions that were put by various members, and he made a statement pertinent to certain other statements that had been made previously in the standing committee.

I repeat to you, sir, that there was no selected material. Dr. Miller's material was unknown to any of us in The Department of Health. Dr. Miller, as the director of that hospital was given complete freedom to speak of what he believed was right and proper and certain of his material did come from memoranda that had passed between him and the department—memoranda which I repeat, sir, I have not yet personally seen. But because all these questions which are being put by the hon. member for Scarborough Centre were answered as I recall it yesterday, I am quite prepared to get the answers again as nearly accurate as possible since no record was taken—

Mr. MacDonald: Why?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Because we do not usually take records, as the hon. member well knows.

Mr. MacDonald: They put one witness under oath and others they do not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, could I have an opportunity to tell the House without this—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has the floor, although I must say he is speaking somewhat apart from the point of order.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): So was the member for Riverdale.

Mr. Speaker: That is quite correct. They were both somewhat out of order.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Let us get on with the business of the day.

Mr. Speaker: As soon as the hon. Minister concludes his remarks we will do that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The material will be put before the House, sir, and the only proper way to answer this great series of questions which were answered in the standing committee—I know why she is asking them again, sir, but I am too much of a gentleman to put it on the public record. I am quite prepared to put the answers in a gentlemanly fashion on the public record as soon as the question appears on the order paper.

Mr. J. Renwick: There is no public record yet—

Mr. Speaker: It appears to me that in any event the hon. Minister is not in a position to answer these questions today. If I may be permitted I will discuss the entire matter with Mr. Speaker upon his return (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair) and he will rule then on whether or not the question should be placed upon the order paper, if this is agreeable to the House.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to that point of order?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre was on her feet first.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Correctional Services says: "Margaret, you are nagging". I am not nagging, Mr. Speaker, but I find it very difficult to be quiet when I feel any sort of injustice is being perpetrated.

The standing committee which the hon. Minister of Health was speaking about—

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): What has this got to with it?

Mr. Speaker: Order! I think there is no point of order, with respect to the hon. member. I think the situation has been fully discussed. I have suggested to the committee that I will discuss the entire matter with Mr. Speaker upon his return and he will direct the House as to his decision as to whether or not this should go on the order paper. If not, then the hon. Minister may undertake to take it as notice and provide the answer. However, I do not believe that I should make a decision on it this morning, and I ask the House to permit me to discuss it with Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Then, Mr. Speaker, would you clearly define to me which questions you are ruling out this morning?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is not clear about my handling of the situation at the moment, I think perhaps we would permit her one question.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like some guidance, Mr. Speaker, as to the balance of my questions that are on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I was just going to deal with them.

We dealt with question 1039 in the last few moments. Now we come to question 1040. Is it the feeling of the hon. Minister that this question deals with the same matters and should be handled in the same way as I have suggested?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have questions 1039, 1040, 1041, 1042, 1043; all are relevant to the matters that were discussed in standing committee yesterday, all pertinent to the Brockville hospital situation. I would therefore ask, sir, that the entire series of questions be put on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: In going over those questions—1039 to 1042, I believe—I concur that they all deal with the same matter. I will discuss the entire group of questions with Mr. Speaker on his return.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, you have left me no alternative but to rise on a point of order.

Yesterday at the committee I asked a question regarding doctor-staff ratio.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order in connection with?

Mrs. M. Renwick: The point of order is in connection with the Minister's last statement. He insists that we are not talking about exhibits, Mr. Speaker; and Dr. Miller himself said: "Here are four exhibits".

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is not on a point of order. I have dealt with this matter as I see fit to deal with it this morning. I suggested the hon. member could ask for clarification on my decision but she is certainly not talking about my decision. I know of no other way to handle it this morning until Mr. Speaker rules on it. Therefore, if the hon. member has any further submissions to make to Mr. Speaker on his return, she may do so.

Mrs. M. Renwick: May I have a question, Mr. Speaker? May I ask you a question?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Do I have some right to refute what I have listened to here, which I feel is in error?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may refute it at some time other than this.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I tried to get the floor before, on a very brief point in regard to the question raised by the member for Scarborough Centre.

I am a member of that standing committee. First of all, let me say that the question that was posed this morning requires statistical information which in my opinion—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order, please! I would point out to the hon. member that I have made a decision as to how I see this matter should be handled. There will be no further discussion on that particular point.

The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) has a question for the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), who is not present.

There was a question from the hon. member for Humber to the hon. Minister of Health. This is question 667.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): That is going way back.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister does not have the answer to that question.

Mr. Ben: Well, if he has not got the answer, I will not ask it of him now. I do not want to embarrass the dear boy.

Tut, tut; No. 667—and we are in the thousands now.

Mr. Speaker: I do not appear to have any further questions on hand.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Before the orders of the day, I would like to table the answers to questions 19, 29, 30, 31, 32, 35, 36 and 37 on the order paper. (See Appendix, page 2858)

Then I was asked a question by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight); he asked me a supplementary question concerning bilingualism of Queen's Park guides and security guards. He asked if I was prepared to indicate the ethnic origin of bilingual guides and security guards and whether bilingualism qualifies them for higher salaries.

I would point out to the House that the Ontario Human Rights Code does not permit the question as to anyone's ethnic background in his application for employment in the civil service of the province and, therefore, we do not have a record of the ethnic background of these bilingual people.

As far as a higher salary for bilingualism is concerned, it is not the policy of the government to have a pay differential for bilingualism. That is a characteristic that can be taken into account when fitness for any particular job is being considered. I suppose one could say that this non-payment for bilingualism should apply in the translation service where people are employed to do precisely that, to translate, but as a matter of policy we do not have a pay differential for bilingualism.

Then the hon. member for High Park asked me what the government was doing, what steps the province was taking to collect the $41 million owing to Ontario by the federal government for health aids under the federal-provincial sharing programme and, in part, dating back to 1957 for mental hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, we are unable to take any action to collect this money. In fact, the situation is that the federal government says it will pay $2,000 per bed for hospital beds, then it puts a ceiling on the total amount it will pay. We have constructed a great many hospital beds in this province upon which no federal grant has been paid, because the federal government simply has not voted enough money to pay the $2,000 per bed on the number of beds we have constructed in this province.

We cannot take any action to collect the money in the first place, we cannot sue the federal government; and in the second place the money has not been voted, so there is nothing there. It is simply a question of an arbitrary limit being placed on the total amount that the federal government seems to be prepared to give to the construction of hospitals, at least in this province.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The sixth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to launch the Budget Debate from this side of the House, I think of the fellow who was speaking to a Rotary Club in Chicago at noon one day, and he said: "I am surprised to see so many people who have nothing to do at noon in Chicago." I think I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, to find so many people who have nothing to do on Friday morning at 11.30 of the clock in the Legislature, because nothing ever happens or comes out of our submissions to the government. But, being perfectly fair, we have had an example today of action on the part of the government from submissions of the Opposition over the years. We do thank the government for throwing a few bones to the people of Ontario and acknowledging that possibly, through this system of democracy, we are part of the democratic principles.

An hon. member: They did not throw us much last year.

Mr. Sargent: I think it is significant, Mr. Speaker, on the threshold of the Liberal convention today in Hamilton, that the very important announcements, which we are very much in favour of, come as a very planned promotion to steal space in the papers for the weekend from the big goings-on in Hamilton today.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): You mean Judy is going to run?

Mr. Sargent: I did not say that, Mr. Minister, but I do think this is a planned operation. In business, we call this leverage, and we have leverage in action here. You know that on the very day our leader was on television in reply to the Budget, the hon. Minister of Trade and Development launched a big spending programme on the Lakeshore involving $50 million of our hard-earned money; that completely stole the front page news. These things are planned on the part of the big public relations staff the government has to keep itself in the forefront, and using public funds to do so.

We have a bachelor in our party named Jack Spence. One day Jack asked a girl with a million dollars to marry him, and she said no. Jack said he thought she would say no. She said, "Well, why did you ask me then?" And Jack said, "I just wanted to see what it felt like to lose a million dollars." That is the position we are in here in this House. We wonder what we are doing here, but we are hard at it on the part of our people.

Mr. Speaker, in launching this party's attack on the current Budget demands from the pockets of Ontario citizens, ordinarily one might shoot with a rifle. But there are so many targets here we can even use a shotgun or a machine gun in areas such as school consolidation, skyrocketing tax rates, $35,000 salaries for school administrators, regional government, assessment takeovers—you name it.

I suggest to you that one time the Prime Minister went out to the airport on a trouble shooting mission in Ontario, and the pilot said, "Where to, boss?" The Premier answered, "Any place, I'm in trouble all over."

That is about it, Mr. Speaker. In Ontario, in 1969, not only is John Parmenter Roberts in trouble, but hundreds of municipalities are wondering just where they went wrong, why they have suddenly lost the right to govern themselves. It is a long, long history, but we are well along the road to central government. We have a form of police state coming into our spectrum. If we do not stop this steamroller soon, we will be heading right down the road to socialism, and the boys on our left here will be in the driver's seat.

It is a shocking thing that we have in Ontario, the home of free enterprise, the most dynamic economy in all North America, that in this province it has become a fact, it is a matter of record, that we are centralizing the whole of government into too few hands and people have lost their economy and now all our operation will be controlled from a central point.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a reason behind this whole piece, and it is simply a plan where a firmly entrenched bureaucracy, 25 years in power, feels it is not responsible to the people any more. I say with considered judgment that collectively that House has looted and drained the treasury of the people of this province in the same manner as the directors of the finance companies looted and drained the treasury there, using the assets of that caper to build up their own empire.

The final steps in this drive are in the hopper now to take that last step to even control the taxation at local level. Now we all know this government controls by commission, not responsible to the people. In every segment of our lives, hospital, police, law enforcement, power, hydro, you name it, it is a complete spectrum run by people who are not elected, not responsible to anyone; they are run by political hacks appointed by loyalty to this Conservative Party, and they are not responsible to the people.

We tell you this repeatedly and most of you agree with it, and nothing is done about it. I suggest to this government that it is digging its own grave and somewhere along the line when the people are informed, Mr. Speaker, the people will be right and the truth will out and we will have possibly a more democratic return to government by the people and for all the people.

It was revealed on December 10, 1968 in a story by Donald Newman in the Toronto Globe and Mail, when this very responsible journalist revealed, on a front-page, five-column story, Mr. Speaker, that this province keeps two sets of books, that the Treasurer keeps two sets of books—one set to produce to the electorate before an election and one set to go to Ottawa with when you are looking for money.

Now, the Minister of Mines is usually intelligent; I have great respect for his intelligence, but he doubts these things could happen. Now, if he thinks they are wrong, maybe the reporter was wrong and maybe the government should take action against the reporter. But I will read a segment of this report by Donald Newman, ONTARIO'S NET DEBT RISES $107 MILLION:

Ontario operated $150 million in the red during the fiscal year ended March 31, increasing the province's per capita debt to $203.79 per person.

However, the deficit—$149,748,000—was about $55 million less than the shortfall Provincial Treasurer Charles MacNaughton predicted when he brought down his Budget for the 1968 fiscal year in the spring of 1967.

At that time, he predicted a deficit of $162 million on 'ordinary' expenditures exclusive of money set aside for the province's sinking fund. Subsequent spending estimates revealed that the government had budgeted $43 million for the fund.

However, the report released by the government yesterday lumped the sinking fund expenditures and the operating deficit together—creating the appearance of a government miscalculation of only $12 million.

And here is the guts of what I am trying to say, when he says:

The two systems of reporting the fiscal position of the province are apparently political. In 1967 the Conservatives were facing an election and, seeking to keep the projected deficit within manageable proportions, they bisected the operational deficit from the sinking fund requirements.

Now, however, attempting to pry more of the revenue collected in income tax from the federal government, Ontario is putting its worst fiscal face forward in an effort to appear hard pressed.

So we have a respected journalist saying that you keep two sets of books, that you do juggle the books for your own purposes. And if I think there is an indictment against a would-be ethical and well handled operation—certainly if anyone did that in business—I think they would be very severely dealt with by the income tax people. We have examples in the auditor's report, the same year, where the gross debt of the province increased 25 per cent in one year, increasing the debt to $3.5 billion of a total debt position. The moneys owned by Hydro, the interest costs are a half a million a day and the interest owed by the province in the neighbourhood of a million a day. So, we have quite a healthy package every day, about a million and a half dollars a day in interest on the debt they have created.

So, in the past 30 days, Mr. Speaker, we here have seen the hon. Treasurer get up and read off a two-hour presentation on his answer to the financial nightmare that he said Ontario was facing. So he has a "plug the holes" budget. It reminds me of the Prime Minister being captain of a leaky old boat, he is running around busy patching the boat so much, to keep afloat, that he cannot steer the boat, and this is about the situation today.

Basically, the budget did not provide any tax relief for the taxpayer who is having a tough time running to standstill, and this is another shot at the average man, a tax play on liquor, cigarettes, meals, hotel rooms, but hands off the big business boys, the banks and the insurance companies.

We had a submission by the Minister of Revenue yesterday on corporation taxes. In all burgeoning economy of this great province, he hopes to raise about $26 million in corporation taxes, a mere bagatelle. We have the sister province of British Columbia here and they are running fullpage ads in Time magazine and it says "Come to B.C. to operate where we have a balanced budget with increased benefits for all British Columbia citizens but no increase in taxes", they are operating on a pay-as-you-go plan and they are debt free.

We are debt free to the extent that we owe $3.5 billion and last year you increased our debenture debt 25 per cent. You know, you all know that you were close to bankruptcy less than six weeks ago, regardless of what he tells you, about what portion of the gross national product that we have going for us in this province.

We have a situation in this province, Mr. Speaker, where I think the Prime Minister has lost the will to govern. I think he is just going through the motions and as soon as he can get out of this business, the better. At least that is his attitude. He has no concern at this point for the economy of the province in that he has—he knows that we are facing, the economists tell us we are facing inflation, inflationary trends, but the Prime Minister is so busy looking after the basic issues he cannot look after the very important ones of what is going on in the province.

As I said last night: at the end of February, the Steel Company of Canada announced an increase of 45 per cent of the net profit. A net profit this year of $65 million, on gross sales of $560 million, so they have the greatest year in their history, a 45 per cent increase in profit in the Steel Company of Canada. The very same day, Mr. Speaker—those of you who are business men, and those of you in the construction business—I am not knocking profits at all, I like to see profits, but the very same day, the day they announced this increase of 45 per cent or $65 million profit, they announced an across the board increase in the price of steel. A ten per cent increase in the price of steel the very same day that they announced a $65 million profit.

The situation is this, Mr. Speaker, the very same day, also, the other four domestic steel mills in this province announced a ten per cent increase in the price of steel. So, for those of you who are still awake, I am trying to build for you a picture of the economy of this province, of just what is going on and who is running the store.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Get another shovel.

Mr. Sargent: You need a shovel to dish out the stuff going on here. You need a big power shovel.

The most important thing about this increase of 45 per cent or $65 million is a case in point from Stelco. In two months' time, the labour contracts are coming up for renewal, and the first ones to complain will be the steel companies who will say, "What right has labour to ask for more money?" I say to you, "What right have they not to ask for a greater share of the profits? They were part of the creation of it. And I say again, that it is time we had in this province a man who has the stature of John Fitzgerald Kennedy who said to the United States Steel Company, when they brought out their steel increase which was affecting their economy there—and this steel increase is affecting our economy because schools, hospitals, everything we do in this province, is geared to the price of steel. It is time that we had a man who will pick up the phone and say: "This is the Prime Minister of Ontario calling," and say to Stelco, "I am telling you that your price rise of ten per cent cannot go into effect; you must revert and hold the line." It could be that he has not the power to do that, but he should work with Mr. Benson in Ottawa to see that this thing is brought about to keep our economy—

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Or Pierre Trudeau.

Mr. Sargent: Or Pierre Trudeau, that is right—to do something for the people of this province to keep our economy healthy. So I suggest in my submission to you that we have great lack of leadership in the most important areas. I am sure these announcements that came into the House today are greatly because of the efforts of the Opposition here and in the New Democratic Party. I do not think you would do anything unless you were forced to do so by public opinion.

Further along the line, in view of the double taxation we have in this province now in force, in a positive way it is time we worked out a new tax system in this province on the principle that the province has the first right in taxation. The federal government now makes allowances for municipal taxes. I think it is time that we made all taxes payable to the province, and make the following all deductible items: mortgage payments on your home; your real estate taxes; gasoline taxes; cigarette taxes; liquor taxes—they should all be deductible, and the residual paid to the federal government. In other economies this the way they operate. But we are continually being taxed—sales tax, gasoline tax, the highest gasoline tax on the whole North American continent; we are paying 17 cents a gallon in taxation. The highest in North America.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Nova Scotia just went from 19 to 21.

Mr. Sargent: I did not know that, but at this point I do think that we are the highest.

Mr. Winkler: It is 21 cents in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Sargent: I did not know that.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Another Tory province too.

Mr. Sargent: I think that somewhere along the line we need to give equity, we need to stop this double taxation system we have, Mr. Speaker, and give the small man in this province a decent break.

Now, what I would like to say before I get to the have-not areas of this province, with which I and the member for Grey South are very concerned—because we are 49th and 51st on the totem pole on the economy in this province insofar as many things are concerned. Income, lack of facilities for education, and so on—I would like to suggest to you that we have responsibility somewhere along the line to break the cartels and the combines and the price-fixing going on in Ontario today.

Last night in the estimates of the Provincial Secretary, we found that we were talking about $7 million of printing. A big cost of this industry in printing is the cost of newsprint, the cost of paper. I think I am as knowledgeable as anyone about the printing business since I have been in that business all my life. We have, in this area, a complete monopoly where four or five paper companies control the price of paper; if you want to buy a ton of paper from one company you pay the same price from all the companies. They have identical pricing.

We have, as most of you know, a law on the books of this country—and this is a shocking thing because every member of government is in collaboration with this—a law on the books which says that no firms, no business people can collaborate to fix prices. If you do it is an indictable offence; you go to jail or you pay heavy fines. It is a shocking thing that in 50 years in this province not one single person has ever gone to jail. The heaviest penalty they ever got from this government, when they were fixing prices on highways, was a three-months' sentence—the only time they could not bid on prices. That is the way they treat them.

But we acknowledge that if someone breaks the law, steals a loaf of bread, if someone gets too much to drink, they go to jail. But if you are in the right area of business, if you are the big operators, you can break the law every day in the week. You can steal from millions of people because you have price-fixing. It is an eerie area of the economy. I stand here, talking to eight members of the government and I am wondering what I am doing—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Come on over here, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: —I am wondering what I am doing when I say, here is an area where the law is being broken 365 days a year, by thousands and thousands of people, and you say, "so what are you going to do about it?" I tell the Prime Minister—he says, "What are you going to do about these things?" He laughs because he is in power. Well, this is what causes socialism. It ruins our free enterprise system because we have not got—

Interjection by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to say to the hon. member that even with all the evils of the free enterprise system, I would rather have our system than his system. I like the freedom of choice, not to be told what I am going to do by big brother. No one ever pushes me around, Freddy, and God bless you, I hope they will never push you around either.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): They have got socialism—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): No, you have got good socialists.

Mr. Pilkey: No you have got socialism for the rich—$600 million given by the federal government in grants and subsidies to industry.

Mr. Young: Go on down and talk to Trudeau.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you have got some pretty rich socialists there too, in your party. But I am wondering, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I have got six minutes left here. The only thing we do is to hope we will catch some press and that something will be brought about. Nothing happens until you have aroused public opinion.

I see a boy there wearing a Liberal handkerchief in his pocket, bright red. I think he is like the 70 or 80 successful businessmen. It must make you wonder what goes on when giant corporations can connive to cheat and break the law. You find ways in the Attorney General's office to punish people for doing small things, but big boys can get away with this and the galleries are empty. These things go on—go on for ever.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the area of newsprint, is one I know about. In the area of steel, it just happened recently—I quoted Stelco, two cases in point. I met a member of the Cabinet yesterday after I spoke on monopolies, combines, price fixing. He is in a pretty business. He said: "I would like to have got up to support you, because what you said is right." I said: "Your parties are breaking the law too." He said: "What can I do about it?"

So we have people there who think, but they do not do anything. The Minister of Tourism there, he knows this is right. I think if I were in that Cabinet—your Treasury Board, I would go up to those meetings of the Cabinet and I would raise some hell until something was done about it.

Believe me, we do things in our caucus and we have disorganized things too. But we at least come up with some consensus of opinion. Somewhere along the line I think that if all of us collectively would get aroused about cheating on the part of the big boys, then something would evolve. If these laws are not right—if they are allowed to cheat and fix prices and cheat the public—then let us change the laws. Let us take them off the books.

Mr. Pilkey: That is socialism.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): These big boys prefer free enterprise.

Mr. Sargent: Well, somewhere along the line we think that our function here is to translate ideas into action. I know that I can tell you that in 1971, when we are in the government, we are going to do these things. But if you want to do something towards it, you had better get talking over there.

Mr. Young: The federal Liberals are not doing a thing—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, up our way we have some pretty bad roads, as you all know. In the spring time, when the frost is breaking up and the roads are impassable, the odd time you see a sign which says: "Take care which rut you choose because you will be in it for the next 50 miles."

Well, we are watching progressively the goings-on of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Education and we think that they are digging a great big grave for themselves. In fact, I think they are the best two things that ever happened to the Liberal party, those two men there.

The fact is that I was in Chicago one time, on a Saturday afternoon—speaking of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, of the intelligent answers he gives you. I 'phoned up this industry in Chicago and, on a Saturday afternoon, I asked the fellow that answered the 'phone, "Do you know anything about the business?" He said, "Buddy, when I said 'hello' I told you all I know." I think when you ask some of the members of the government some questions, you get that kind of intelligence.

I want to ask the House, Mr. Speaker—glad to have you back again—I want to ask the House in the two minutes I have left here just how does a very ineffectual backbencher, who is a member of the Chicago gang, just how does this completely naive and nice choir boy, how does he ever get the chance to make multi-million dollar decisions on behalf of millions of people? When we watch this operation over here and the far-reaching effects that it has on the lives of our people, I wonder about the thinking of a government that can take a man completely unschooled, unversed in such a fantastically complicated and technical job and put him as a key man to make those decisions.

I am wondering about the thinking of a government, of a leader who will do things like that, because of geography or political expediency.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): He is the best they have with no talent.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I think if he is the best they have, they are in a very sorry, sorry mess.

An hon. member: Which one are you talking about?

Mr. Sargent: I want to say, insofar as regional government is concerned, Mr. Speaker, this Minister over here, in the question of the Chinguacousy deal out there—you are talking about people—he was quoting 56,000 people and the official had him right. He said, "I am sorry, sir, it is $556,000."

He was only 5,000 per cent wrong.

This is a man who would spend $80 million; they had a $80 million water project in part of the deal. This is what is going on. We here, as representatives of the taxpayers, of the 56,000 people I represent, I have to countenance and say, "that is good business."

I say that insofar as his approach to regional government, Mr. Speaker, he can talk about it. The government can talk about it. I say stay out of Grey-Bruce. This is a programme, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this province must have a vote on, a right to say what their future shall have.

In closing at this juncture, I think of the story about the two old maids who had two fine cats. These cats were very fine specimens. They would not let them outside to mingle with the ordinary variety of cats.

One day, one of the old maids got married and so, after the wedding, leaving on her wedding trip, she told the other old maid that she would send her a telegram from New York. So true to her word, the dear soul, she sent a wire back from New York, to the other sister and she said, "I do not care what you do with your cat, but let mine out!"

I do not suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you could catch that, it is kind of sharp.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That lost something, for the benefit of Hansard.

Mr. Sargent: You must have lost something.

I do not care what you do with your plan on regional government. I suggest to you—

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think you left something out.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think I did. Things are kind of slow today.

We do not care what you do with your regional government programme, as long as you stay out of our area where the people will have a right to vote on this referendum themselves.

I see that it is 12.00 o'clock; I adjourn the debate.

Mr. Sargent moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I would like to introduce a group of students from Robert Wesley college, Rochester, New York.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Private member's notice of motion No. 23, by Mr. Bukator:

RESOLUTION: That The Workmen's Compensation Act should be broadened so as to include injuries and incapacities sustained off the job and that the increased cover be financed by the savings accruing from investigators not having to determine whether an employee was, or was not, actually working on the job at the time the injury or incapacity was sustained.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I move the resolution standing in my name.

I have listened with interest to my colleague for the last half hour. There were some interjections and I suspect that there will be others while I speak on a subject that has been very close to my heart for many years.

When I put this resolution on the order paper to be discussed here, I was hoping it would not hit a Friday because the attendance in this House usually is not what it ought to be. I do not find it too interesting to speak to so many empty chairs on both sides of the House and I am sure that what I have to say on any issue is not often read by members of this House in Hansard as there are many other important things to do. I felt possibly that I might get through to someone with a most serious problem.

For ten years I have sat in this House and talked about workmen's compensation and the shortcomings of that department. I may say that I am very much impressed with the Chairman, Mr. Legge. I believe he is trying to do a job for us. If there are shortcomings and if there are inadequacies in this Workmen's Compensation Board Act, it is very simply that they can always refer to the Legislature and say, "You members of the Legislature ought to bring in better laws and we naturally will be governed by them."

Not too long ago, I met a citizen in my riding who had a cast on his arm and I asked about his injury. I intended to touch a little more broadly on that a little later on in my remarks. I have had a feeling for years that the workmen's compensation board could save a lot of money if they were to pay compensation to an individual whether he was hurt on or off the job. I have had a feeling that the government spends many manhours and many dollars, Mr. Speaker, trying to find out whether the injured claimant through the workmen's compensation board was injured on the job. They investigate, they meet with the officials of the plant, they meet with union representatives, and they discuss their problems with them. In many instances people who were not hurt on the job try to collect compensation, and in some cases do.

In other areas, where they were hurt on the job, Mr. Speaker, they find themselves having to prove to the workmen's compensation board that they were hurt on the job and that it was a legitimate claim; and after many, many weeks they start to collect some money. Their families, their creditors, the mortgage they owe on their homes are not being paid because the money is not coming in. So I investigated; and I hate to go to our friends to the south of us; I think we are capable in Canada of drawing laws to govern our people as well as, if not better than they can. I think we are as capable as they are to look after the problems of the constituents that we represent and yet I felt that I should write to New York state to find out what benefits the employees get if they are hurt off the job.

I find that they have something that we ought to take a good look at. I believe that some of you may say that it will require a lot of legal entanglement and therefore the legal bill will be great. I do not speak of that at all and I hope no one gets the impression that we need any more lawyers involved in workmen's compensation cases than we have now. I do believe that if an individual is hurt on the job, or where he is hurt at home, or whether he is hurt through some accident somewhere, the compensation should be immediately paid to that man. This makes sense to me, and I think that it makes sense to you if you bear with me until I read of the New York state off-the-job disability benefits programme. They have the workmen's compensation board there also and I would like to quote some of the statements that they make in a pamphlet that I received.

The disability benefit law supplements the benefit provided by the workmen's compensation law which gives aid to those injured on the job. The disability benefit law provides for those injured or disabled off the job. The question is: What are disability benefits? Disability benefits are temporary cash benefits payable to eligible wage earners when disabled by an off-the-job injury, or illness. Supplementing the workmen's compensation law, the disability law assures protection for the wage-earner by providing for weekly cash benefits to replace, in part, wages lost due to injuries or illnesses that do not arise out of or in the course of his employment. Disability benefits are also provided to an unemployed claimant to replace unemployment insurance benefit lost because of illness or injury. Off the job injury—to tell you about; a man with tendons severed near the palm of his hand while carrying a TV set; he slipped and fell, the sharp edge cut through the flesh severing the tendons. The accident happened on his day off; a fortunate man indeed. The disability benefit law that is in effect in New York state, supplementing the workmen's compensation law, provides weekly cash income that will keep the claimant and his family in funds until he is well enough to go back to work. Where do you suppose this man would have been financially if he had been injured under similar circumstances off the job in Canada? He just would have been out of luck. There would not have been any income simply because he was hurt while doing something at home on a day off. Yet in New York state, compensation is paid to that man.

I wish to carry this a little further. This man was sitting in a restaurant with a cast on his hand and I enquired, naturally, like any politician—you never miss an opportunity to speak to a constituent—I enquired what happened, and he said that he was carrying a chassis of a TV set into his home; he slipped, fell and cut the tendons in two fingers, severed them to the bone. He did go back, sir, to his construction job in New York state, compensation was immediately paid, supplemented by a good agreement with their union which paid him an additional $35 a week. This is negotiable in both countries and I realize that.

He found that even though he was hurt off the job, he could go and honestly say what happened and start collecting benefits immediately to maintain himself and his family. I found that it was such a good proposition that this appealed to me to the point where I thought I ought to bring it before the hon. gentlemen of this House. With fair amount of discussion on this issue and commonsense and reasoning, there is no reason why our statutes cannot be amended to give this kind of protection to all people who are being covered by workmen's compensation; and I know where that money comes from. You might ask, "Where will the money come from?" We have talked in this House the last few days about the American industries which have come into Canada. My colleague just spoke of one industry alone that made some $65 million in one year. You know how the money is collected for compensation purposes.

Naturally a small percentage of the wages not paid by the employee—and I know that I have made reference to the man I started the employees make this money—is paid out of the company side of their profits, and so they pay some six per cent or five per cent, whatever the tariff is based on, or the amount of accidents in that particular industry.

Now, I say that if they can make this kind of money, and they can give that type of protection to their employees in New York state, companies who have subsidiaries on this side of the river dealing with the same kind of human beings, can surely pay it on this side of the river also. I find no difference; it is the same group of directors, the same group of investors, industrialists, who do business in New York state who also do business in Canada. I would think that if they can do it for their folks on the other side of the river, why cannot they provide the same kind of protection for our employees on this side of the river? They owe that to us; we are entitled to that much protection. I do not see any reason why the Legislature, since the Prime Minister is back—and I would like him to listen with some thought of what I say—and a very good morning, by the way. You have treated the citizens of the province very well this morning; you have given some concessions that we—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Not just this morning. For some years.

Mr. Bukator: Well now, that is debatable.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now you have spoiled it.

Mr. Bukator: However, I think—I am sorry the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) is not here; he is a very reasonable man in my opinion, and the Workmen's Compensation Board comes under the department—the coverage can be extended for injuries off the job at not too much expense, simply because of the investigations alone of the Workmen's Compensation Board. The cost to them could be put to giving benefits to their employees, and I do not think it will be that much greater. People who work in this country, people who know that they have a family to maintain, people who find themselves in the position where if they are injured today off the job and have no means of revenue whatsoever because immediately they are not working—many of them are not in the position that they have money in the bank, and they find themselves losing their homes. I have known of cases where this has happened; they find themselves accumulating debts that take years to pay off. I would think that this would take a little bit of a problem off their shoulders.

I say the second source of financing could be the saving of dollars and manhours of the staff of the Workmen's Compensation Board, which is now being wasted in investigating whether the claimant was truly injured on the job. The most important thing—the peace of mind and the knowledge that his family will be properly provided for during the period of his recovery from his injury—would well compensate this government and all people of the province for their efforts on behalf of the injured claimant.

I hope my words have not fallen on deaf ears; I hope the Minister of Labour takes a good look at this. I would like to say one more thing before I close in connection with this and many problems in this House.

I have been in some of the States since I was elected to this House, and I have found that if an Opposition member brings in a bill—whether it be by a private member or the leader of the Opposition—if that bill makes sense, it goes to a committee with only a few amendments. They bring that bill back, and regardless of which particular member brings that bill in, it becomes law.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): See how much attention you are getting?

Mr. Bukator: Oh, he is a good man. He is doing a fairly good job, and I am sure he will look into this matter for me. One of our members here—I am sorry he is not in his seat—is costing the province many hundreds of dollars at $18 a page, bringing in bills on every issue and talking on every issue. Most of it I do not agree with, but once in a while he may come in with a bill that is good. If he does, I think this government ought to immediately pick that bill up and make a statute for the province of Ontario. That would make all of the people happy.

I know that I will hear this speech before I get through here this afternoon—I might even get a bit of a compliment—but I do not know why we have to say, and naturally I am surmising, what could happen. This is good, but it does not go far enough; maybe another time with amendments, with additions and deletions, and we will give you what you want.

Even if that comes in another year, it is better than nothing at all. I look to this government to take another look at this resolution with favour and bring in the statutes that will cover the off-the-job injured claimant.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Durham is next on the list.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Niagara Falls, and one must have a certain degree of sympathy for his proposal. But it would require examination of the whole field of assistance, both welfare and that involved through The Workmen's Compensation Act.

He has referred to certain legislation in the United States, and I will refer to this a little later in my remarks. There are certain ramifications which limit that programme.

The resolution proposes to extend the benefits of The Workmen's Compensation Act to include injuries and incapacities sustained off the job. Mr. Speaker, this is an entirely new concept of assistance and, if practical at all, I would say it should be established under a completely different plan and should be related to the welfare field. It would simply be another form of welfare assistance or coverage, which at the present time—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Carruthers: Certainly it is another form of welfare assistance. This is being provided at the present time through various programmes of welfare and assistance; also it is available through private insurance companies, if you wish to join.

Mr. Sargent: Who wrote that speech?

Mr. Carruthers: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand; every time I get up to address this assembly, they always ask me who writes the speech. The odd thing about it is that I write all my own speeches.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Carruthers: It is very difficult to understand how the hon. member can propose that compensation be provided for off-job injuries when, at the present time, the cost of benefits provided by the Workmen's Compensation Board is borne by industry, which in no way is responsible for such injuries. The cost must be borne by party or parties responsible for the injuries sustained—it may be the individual himself—and the financial loss can either be recovered through other forms in insurance, as certainly should be the case where injuries are sustained as a result of motor accidents. It must be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, that the Workmen's Compensation Board is not a welfare agency.

May I illustrate my point by referring to a case recorded in the Action Line of the Telegram yesterday. This is a gentleman from West Hill who slipped and broke his leg while he was on his way to work at the Hydro project at Pickering. He is going to be off work for three months, and the Workmen's Compensation Board claims that he is not entitled to benefits because the injuries did not occur while he was working. Now the answer that Action Line gives to that is the same that I wish to affirm today:

There are already such protections, even if most people, including yourself, do not think about them. The basic one is, of course, welfare. And when a person is disabled through sickness or injury, welfare keeps the family going. We are also getting very close to a guaranteed annual income, where every family will be entitled to a certain amount of money regardless of the earnings of the breadwinner. You could not get compensation because the accident was not related to your work. Just because your employer pays you extra to cover the distance of travel to and from work does not mean you are under his control. So, no compensation.

The Workmen's Compensation Act makes it mandatory for all employers to protect their employees through coverage under the Act. The employee contributes nothing to the coverage and, therefore, it is ridiculous to suggest that an employer should bear the cost of injuries or incapacities for which he had no direct or indirect responsibility.

According to statistics published by the National Safety Council, accidents occurring at work represent one-fifth of the total accident picture. In other words, for every accident occurring at work, four occur off the job.

If we assume that the resolution involves the paying of benefits on the same scale or basis as benefits under The Workmen's Compensation Act, then the resulting cost of benefits for off-job compensation would be staggering.

Benefit payments made under The Workmen's Compensation Act in 1968 were in excess of $100 million. By simply multiplying this figure by four, we come up with a figure of $400 million as the cost of compensation for off-job claims on the same basis that workmen's compensation benefits are paid.

It is recognized that, generally speaking, much of the motor vehicle accident cost would be withdrawn from this amount, but the home accident cost and the cost of accidents occurring in public places would keep the cost of such a resolution much in excess of the cost of work injuries.

The resolution indicates that the financing of the benefits designated in the resolution should come from a saving in investigation. The total cost of all investigations, other than correspondence involved during the year 1968, was $285,000. Considering the very large number of accident occurring outside of work, and the method by which the hon. member suggests the programme be financed, the feasibility of this financing is certainly open to question.

There are two states in the United States—and the hon. member referred to New York State—having disability benefit laws. In each case the law prescribes the extent of contribution of the workman to the coverage afforded, and in each case the benefits are low.

The use of the law is limited due to other types of coverage being available which have a better benefit picture. The net result is that the employee is actually paying the cost of the coverage.

There is no precedent known, Mr. Speaker, by which the cost of off-the-job accidents is made the financial responsibility of the employer and, therefore, I regret that I must urge all members to oppose the resolution.

Under the original Act of 1910—Workmen's Compensation Act—there was no redress for the victim or his dependents if the accident was caused through his own negligence or the negligence of a fellow employee.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Workmen's Compensation Board is many things. It is a system of adjudication, and it is an administrative tribunal providing impartial hearings in all cases appealed to it. It is an insurance company, and as well a trust company providing lifetime pensions. It is an educational institution responsible for the operation of some nine safety associations in an effort to cut down the number of accidents, and it is a hospital and rehabilitation centre. It is a $120-million business—a round-the-year enterprise employing some 1,400 people.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not a charitable organization or form of welfare administration in any sense, nor should it be. The basic principle governing the operation of the Workmen's Compensation Board is that it exists as a collective liability for the employers and benefits without litigation for the workers. I regret that I must oppose the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this resolution, I do so with mixed feelings. First of all, I would like to commend the member for Niagara Falls for the principle involved in this resolution, and say to him that we regret very much that, in its present form, this party cannot support it.

The principle of coverage, regardless of how a person is injured or how he is incapacitated, as I say is to be commended. But we forget what the main purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Board is supposed to be—that is to compensate workers for injuries suffered on a job. Now, if we are going to change that, we must change the principle that the board was founded on.

There is no doubt that we, as legislators, have a duty and a responsibility to the workers of Ontario and to the people of Ontario to provide an adequate and sufficient income to ensure that they do not suffer financially because of injury, whether it is on the job or off the job. And should the member for Niagara Falls bring forth a resolution to that effect, I can assure him of the wholehearted support of this party. However, we cannot, as I say, support a change in The Workmen's Compensation Act, to do so.

Under the present system of workmen's compensation, industry is responsible to compensate a worker for an injury or an incapacity suffered through his employment. No one has been more critical of the Workmen's Compensation Board than myself. However, my criticisms have always been that The Workmen's Compensation Act and the Workmen's Compensation Board do not live up to the principles that are embodied in the Act.

Industry has the responsibility and the obligation to provide compensation, and it has always been our feeling that they have not lived up to their responsibility; they have not lived up to their obligation. And if anything is done with The Workmen's Compensation Act, it should be strengthened to make sure that industry does live up to its obligation. We do not believe that adequate compensation is provided, and until it is, The Workmen's Compensation Act and the Workmen's Compensation Board, in their carrying out of the principles of the Act, are not performing the services for which they were originally brought forward.

The member for Niagara Falls has said that the savings accrued by taking the investigators out of the field, by eliminating the need for investigation, would pay for the cost of providing compensation for those who are hurt off the job. Well, I must agree with the government's spokesman when he says that $285,000 just will not do that. But $285,000 will do something else, it will change the investigation system from a system of disproving the worker, to a system of aiding the worker and proving his claim. The total investigation system of the Workmen's Compensation Board is geared to a system of proving the worker wrong, to a system of disproving claims, to a system of finding mistakes in the statements of witnesses, and to a system of saving money for the board.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you and to this House that this should not be the job of an investigator. The investigator's job should be to prove the man right, to aid the worker in preparing his claim for presentation to the board. To aid the worker in presenting his case to the board, and to aid the worker in any way necessary to prove that he has a justifiable claim. And only as a secondary part of his job, a very minor part of his job, should he be even concerned with the small percentage of fraudulent claims that come before the board.

Instead of that, we have a system that degrades the worker in many cases, puts him in a position where he is almost sorry that he applied for a claim because he feels as if he is getting something that does not belong to him. I believe that the $285,000 should not be used to eliminate investigators, it should be used to strengthen the investigation team so they serve a useful purpose.

To go on, Mr. Speaker, I would say that adequate investigation would not only aid the worker in his fight—and in many cases that is the only word you can use, fight—to have his claim allowed. It would increase the number of claims that are allowed. It would decrease the number of claims that are thrown out on the basis of one letter, or one witness, who, in many cases, is unreliable. Because of the poor investigation system, the witness is not shown as unreliable, but the claimant is shown, unjustifiably, as being fraudulent.

The number of claims allowed would increase and, as that increase took place, the number of people who are hurt on the job and are forced to seek public welfare for their compensation would decrease. Every one of us in Ontario would benefit from that.

If the member's resolution had been brought forth in the form that we believe it should have been brought forth, it would have eliminated any need in this province for Medicare. It would have eliminated any need for supplementary accident benefits, or sickness and health benefits. It would have eliminated the need for any hospital coverage. It would have eliminated this so-called guaranteed annual income that the government speaks of—and then, in the same breath, mentions the figure of $1,500 which, in our opinion is not an income, it is a pittance. It is something to salve their conscience; something to go forward in the next election with, to say, "Look what we are doing for the people of Ontario."

The government spokesman, Mr. Speaker, has mentioned the fact that for every accident that happens on the job there are four off the job. We feel that because of this fact the government has not only a responsibility, they have an immediate obligation to provide benefits to those who are hurt off the job. These people are hurt in the public sector of life, as the member for Niagara Falls says, they are in the position many times where they will lose their homes, where the families will have to be split up, because of an injury that happened off the job. The government has a responsibility to those people to insure that they do not suffer dire financial circumstances because of that injury. The government has an obligation to make sure that what a man has on the day of his injury, he still has the day he goes back to work. He should lose nothing because of his injury.

Should the member for Niagara Falls at any future date embody those principles in his resolution, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we, on this side, will not only support it, we will wholeheartedly support it.

I must agree with the government spokesman that industry does not have this obligation. Industry has one obligation and that is to provide for the workers who are hurt on the job. They do not have any obligation outside of that, and I can only reiterate what I say over and over and over again—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Is that NDP policy? That is a new line.

Mr. Jackson: The government has the responsibility to provide for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, with the strengthening, rather than the weakening, of the investigation system, I feel, for the first time since The Workmen's Compensation Act in 1915—since the board came into being—that perhaps we will start to work towards the motto of the board: "Justice humanely and speedily rendered."

Mr. Speaker, I say we cannot support this resolution, but we do support any resolution and any member who will stand up in this House and bring forward legislation that will improve the wellbeing of the people of Ontario, not necessarily any one segment of the population.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the resolution of the hon. member for Niagara Falls, I do so with complete amazement at the trend this resolution has taken in this House.

I can forgive the hon. member for Durham, he is a reactionary of the first order, a Tory true-blue. As a matter of fact, he is so reactionary that he probably makes the John Birch Society look like anarchists in their reform movement—if I may use that expression.

But listening to the statements that were made by the hon. member for Timiskaming cast a complete new light on the attitude of the NDP in this particular Legislature. To say that industry has no obligation to the workman beyond compensating him for injuries received on the job is just complete unadulterated hogwash as far as we, the Liberal Party, are concerned.

Industry's obligation never ends to the citizens of this province. I dare say that the hon. member for Timiskaming would probably try to convince us that the workmen pay no income tax—that only industry pays income tax, because they are the ones who remit it to the government, even though it is out of the pay envelopes of the workmen.

Not only that, he also said on behalf of the NDP that if you cannot give the workmen a whole loaf of bread, let them starve. Well, we just do not quite go along with that philosophy. We, on many occasions, have spoken in support of a guaranteed annual minimum wage. A resolution to that effect got us nowhere. For the hon. member for Timiskaming to say that if the hon. member for Niagara Falls had worded his resolution either this way or that way, he would have solved the problem is again unadulterated nonsense, because we keep bringing up resolutions in this House—both the party I represent, the Liberal Party, and his own party—and we get nowhere.

Passing resolutions in this House while you are in the Opposition does not get us as far as the hon. member for Timiskaming would lead us to believe. We try to enlighten the government and that is all we can do with resolutions. Sometimes we succeed, sometimes we do not, but we try.

The Liberal Party has been advocating a guaranteed annual minimum income for all people who labour in this province, not just those who pay dues to the bosses of the NDP. Because we consider everybody is a workman and they do not have to have a union card to be entitled to the protection that this government gives when it comes to illness and adversities.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: They do not quite disagree with that. We advocated disability insurance—

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Are you against the guys with union cards?

Mr. Ben: —insurance to fill the gap between The Workmen's Compensation Act and The Unemployment Insurance Act.

At the present time if you are a workman and you are injured on the job, you are compensated—or at least, there is a provision for you to receive compensation. If you are unemployed, but are employable, then you receive benefits from the federal government under The Unemployment Insurance Act. But there has been a gap in the centre involving those that had been injured off the job. Having been injured off the job and not in the course of their employment, they cannot collect workmen's compensation benefits. And, having been injured and not being employable—that is not being able to hold a job because of their injury—they cannot collect unemployment insurance. These are the people that we want to protect.

Frankly, you did not have a resolution. I had a resolution which the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Gisborn) spoke on in the Throne debate, even though my resolution has been on the order paper—the resolution was in my name last year.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Oh, we have had resolutions on this for the last ten years.

Mr. Ben: You are confusing resolutions with revolutions. All right, so as far as we are concerned everybody who is injured ought to be compensated. You have to pay your taxes. You have to feed your family. You have to clothe your family. You have to pay your rent or your mortgage payments whether you are working or you are not working and, if you are disabled, and cannot raise the money, society should come to your aid. That is our philosophy.

Simply because this reactionary society across from us will not cover you, does it mean that we are going to say, "Well, we will not take a half a loaf"? We tried to convince this government to bring in guaranteed annual minimum wages but they have not budged. We have tried to convince this government that they ought to have disability insurance to cover that gap that I mentioned between people covered by Workmen's Compensation and those that are covered by Unemployment Insurance, but this government has not budged.

So the hon. member for Niagara Falls has brought in a resolution which he watered down, to his deep regret himself, that he feels might be acceptable to this hard hearted government so that at least they will be able to extend the workmen's compensation benefits to that degree, and the party to our left turns it down.

Now I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what is so sacred or so sacrosanct about the Workmen's Compensation Board Act? Why can we not amend it? After all, we just had a commission on The Workmen's Compensation Act suggesting a whole series of amendments. They did not object that it had to be amended then. Why can we not amend it again? Does it involve that much of our time here to amend it to give additional benefits, small as they may be Mr. Speaker, but surely we are not going to deny them any improvements simply on the grounds that they are small. If we cannot give them a loaf big enough to feed them satisfactorily, we are not going to deny them a half a loaf. That is not our policy.

I am rather surprised by the trend this debate has taken. I support the resolution of the member for Niagara Falls. Sure it does not go as far as perhaps the member for Timiskaming would like it. Sure, it does not even go as far as the member personally would like. He has spoken on many occasions and expressed his feelings but having been unable to get the benefits that should go to everybody in this province, that is, protection against adversities both by unemployment or ill health, we are trying to get the next best thing we can.

As a matter of fact, we will even admit that it is not even the next best thing, it is probably the third best thing because we have already given two other alternatives.

Mr. MacDonald: —having regurgitated our speeches you are now in the process of interpreting a Liberal resolution.

Mr. Ben: Well, you have to look at the Bible in Genesis there, it says, written by the NDP. I mean everything has been regurgitated.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is just chaos.

Mr. Ben: You know, nothing came before the NDP. They are like the Russians. They even invented light. That is how it happened. He got up there—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall when I started but I know that my time is getting short. I just want to end by saying this, I support the resolution of the hon. member for Niagara Falls, and so does the Liberal Party. We desire that it be wider than it is but we are trying to bring up something that would be a compromise, and be acceptable to this government; a step towards our ultimate desire of a guaranteed annual minimum income with disability insurance for everybody.

Failing that, we have to try to get what we can. We do not believe that industry's obligation ends when they compensate a person injured, in the course of their employment because anything that industry has, has been produced by the sweat and intelligence of all the people of this province, whether they hold a union card or not. So they owe an obligation to everybody in this province and everybody in this country and we are not going to accept anything less than that. So, my time being up now, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to go on record that our party supports this resolution.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, the resolution that is before us—the question of an injured workman being compensated for injury sustained off the job—in my opinion The Workmen's Compensation Board Act is not the vehicle to provide that kind of compensation or benefit. I think that the member for Niagara Falls is just a little naive and the Liberal Party if they think this could be the vehicle.

Let me tell you what he is really talking about. He is really talking about a maintenance of income plan and it appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that such a plan could be incorporated in a Medicare guaranteed annual income plan and may be The Workmen's Compensation Board Act could be incorporated in that overall benefit plan.

An hon. member: You are backtracking.

Mr. Pilkey: I am not backtracking one bit. I want to just indicate, Mr. Speaker, that there is a problem for people who are injured outside of the Workmen's Compensation Board authority. I would suggest along with the member for Timiskaming that industry alone cannot support the number of people that are incapacitated off the job if they were going to use the Workmen's Compensation Board as a criteria because there are too many workers in this province for that, outside of the Workmen's Compensation Board. One such worker, I want to talk about here just for a moment.

A Mr. Alfred Gabor of 533 Glengarry Avenue, here in the city of Toronto. Mr. Gabor was an employee of the Toronto-Dominion Bank at the Toronto-Dominion Centre. Now he is an exclusion as I understand if from the Workmen's Compensation Board coverage. He is an exclusion, as are many thousands of other workers in this province. He worked on a delivery van for the Toronto-Dominion Bank and he worked there for some five months.

But during the very cold period this winter, for approximately a week, when we had zero weather, he became sick. He reported to the nurse of that centre and he was referred to a urology clinic. First of all, he was told to report for X-rays and a urine analysis. This was a Wednesday—a week that Thursday, he was to report. He went to his employer on Thursday morning and reported that he was to report to the clinic and his foreman said that there was no use for him to take his coat off and they asked him to resign. He refused to resign and they fired him.

Now when he did report to the clinic—I might point out that he had not lost any time during the five months of his employment—he claims that the reason for his condition was the coldness in the van. Therefore he should have been eligible for compensation, but seeing that he was an exclusion he could not get compensation. In addition to that, the Toronto-Dominion Bank fired this employee.

Now he was seven weeks in Toronto Western hospital. He had an operation. Last week he was released. He has no benefits whatsoever.

I think this is what my colleague from Niagara Falls is talking about. Here is an employee that had an off-the-job illness—or in this case on-the-job, but not an inclusion in the Workmen's Compensation Board—and was denied a benefit under the compensation Act. And his employer had no sickness and accident benefits to cover this employee's sickness, or injury; at least, this is what I am given to understand. This chap's wife is working and provides their total income, as I understand it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You are arguing at cross purposes.

Mr. Pilkey: No we are not arguing at cross purposes at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is suggesting he should be included in workmen's compensation.

Mr. Pilkey: His wife earns $60 a week and this is their total income.

Now this party can support a question of maintenance of income, there is no question about that. I recall the member for Durham saying that there are no plans of that type—at least that is the impression that I received—that there were no plans of this type in which the cost was borne by industry.

Let me say to this House that there are many plans in the province of Ontario that cover employees for off-the-job injuries or sickness and the cost is fully borne by industry. There are many plans, and I think that if you would go into the big industries of this province you would find all the workers covered in the auto industries, steel, and other industries, the premiums to cover the benefits for those workers are paid 100 per cent by the corporation.

This is not something new that the member for Niagara Falls is suggesting. We have many precedents in this province.

I make this observation in terms of this employee, who has no income now and can make no contribution really to his family. It seems to me, if we are going to preserve some dignity and decency for the people of this province, we ought to provide a vehicle that would give these people benefits to maintain their present economic standard of living. Until we provide the necessary plans and vehicles to do that kind of job, then I do not think that we have fulfilled our obligations to the many people of this province.

I want to make just a couple of further brief comments. First of all, I am not too sure that the New York system should be applied here in Ontario, because it is a highly legalistic procedure. The total cost of the New York system is twice as high as we have here in the province of Ontario, and has meagre benefits in terms of our system. I want also to point out that our present Workmen's Compensation Act is going in that direction under our appeal system. The government ought to be taking a very strong look at that, or we are going to have lawyers continually handling these types of cases, and I do not think it was really designed for that.

The other comment that I wanted to make was that the very principle initially of The Workmen's Compensation Act for employees was that we were to take care of loss of earnings. But we find now that the employee can be given the status of a temporary disability, and we find his compensation or benefits reduced to 50 or 25 per cent. So there has been a deviation from the principle of loss of earnings to one of the principle of degree of disability.

I think that this whole thing is wrong. If an employee has a loss of earnings, he cannot perform light work—and this is what many doctors say, that he is fit for light work, and he cannot perform that work—then the compensation board reduced his benefit level. I think it is about time that we get back to the principle that was enunciated at the very beginning; that was that the benefit level should be related to the loss of earnings and not to degree of disability.

Mr. T. P. Reid: On a point of order. I believe the hon. member's time is up.

Mr. Speaker: No, I do not believe that the hon. member's time is up. The hon. member would normally have about ten minutes. He has not had that time yet.

The hon. member for Rainy River has indicated to me that he would like to speak, but I would point out that his name was not on the list given to me originally.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member for Rainy River wishes to make a comment, I would not want to deter him.

I want to conclude by saying this. It may not be relative to the resolution that is before us, but I want to make this comment because there has been a great hue and cry across this province about the loss of man-hours in terms of strikes. I want to point out to this House that there are twice as many manhours lost because of accidents as related to manhours lost because of strikes. And, if we want to really do something in terms of employment in this province, then we ought to set up a preventative measure that would curtail the accident incidence here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: There are about two minutes available to the hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will try and be brief.

Mr. Speaker: Two minutes please.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In rising to support the resolution of the member for Niagara Falls, I would just like to preface my very few remarks, Mr. Speaker, by mentioning a tendency that I see more and more in this House every day, and it is one which I personally deplore. That tendency, sir, is for the party of the left, the New Democratic Party, to more and more bring into this Legislature the problems of the citizens of Ontario. This is our function, surely, but the part of this that I deplore, sir, is the fact that these people's names are paraded in this Legislature, and get into the public press. Now, I have had very many comments on the fact that people who contact me with their problems—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not speaking to the resolution.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, I would say, sir, that this is the tendency; these problems can be brought to the attention of the government without parading these people's personal problems and their names—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order, he is not speaking to the resolution.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In supporting this resolution, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out two things especially to the members of the left. First of all I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Oshawa for bailing out his party from the box that the member for Timiskaming had put them in. But I would just like to suggest that they read the resolution.

The New York plan provides that these be temporary benefits, for a very temporary period from an accident that happens in the home, where a worker is away from his job for a very short time, a period of one week or two weeks. This would supplement his income, provide him with some income, while he is off work and until he can return to work. As the member for Humber has pointed out, this is only part of what we, as Liberals, would like to see done with the welfare and compensation system in this province, but we have been unsuccessful in our attempts to enlighten our friends on the other side, and we offer this resolution as a temporary stopgap to patch up an existing loophole in the present structure.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will consider matters on the order paper and the private members' hour will be resumed.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock p.m.

APPENDIX

19. Mr. Shulman—Enquiry of the Provincial Secretary—1. How many brands of spirituous liquors manufactured by Hiram-Walker Gooderham Worts are carried by the Liquor Control Board of Ontario? 2. How many imported brands sold by Hiram-Walker Gooderham Worts are carried by the Liquor Control Board? 3. What is the total dollar value of the above purchased by the Liquor Control Board in 1968?

Answers:

1. 27.
2. 54.
3. $42,067,829.53.

29. Mr. Ben—Enquiry of the Minister of Health—(1) In Paragraph 679 of the Report on the Pollution of Air, Soil and Water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke in Haldimand County, the statement is made that the Committee and counsel viewed the film "Air of Death" officially in the CBC studio on Thursday, February 22nd, 1967, at 10.30 a.m. Will the Minister of Health take this opportunity to correct the record in the light of this obvious error, since the film was not shown to the public until eight months after this date? (2) What criteria were used to determine the "recognized and accepted scientists" referred to in paragraph 43 of the Report? (3) Is there a professional or other peer group ranking to justify the subjective selection of "persons known for their interest and reputation" and those "recognized as experts in a general discipline", according to paragraph 44 of the Report? (4) What were the "special arrangements" under which additional consulting experts appeared before the Commission (para. 46)? (5) To what extent was the Counsel for the local Air Pollution Committee, Mr. Geoffrey Brooks, of Welland, assisted from public funds by way of mailing and typing costs, legal service, etc. (para 53)? (6) Since the publication of the Hall Report, has Mr. Drysinger, the sulphur dioxide specialist of The Department of Mines, or any other technically competent person, visited the automatic testing station adjacent to former Reeve Siddall's home in Sherbrooke township, or the candle recorders in the immediate area? Has he made a report to the Government and will the Minister table this report? (7) Is the Minister prepared to accept the reasoning behind the statement of Dr. Lawther (para. 102) that the main concern is what the individual is breathing and not what is emitted from power stations or industrial stacks? Does this not imply an abdication of long-term control? (8) Does the Minister still accept the proposition in paragraph 129 of the Report that "in this Port Maitland study, we are dealing only with the effects of inorganic fluorides, and these only on a quantitative time basis, which may result in a demonstrable effect of chronic fluorosis? There are no organic fluorides involved, nor is there any possibility of acute fluorosis being a factor." (9) Will the Minister undertake to table the answers to these questions before March 18th, 1969?

Answers:

1. The date mentioned in the report is an error, but any correction would be a matter for the committee of enquiry to make. This committee was disbanded after the report was produced.

2-5. As the committee no longer exists, it is not possible to provide answers to these questions.

6. Four automatic fluoride recorders, two automatic sulphur dioxide recorders, the candle recorders for fluoride and sulphur dioxide and the particulate sampling devices are maintained regularly by the air pollution control service. One automatic sulphur dioxide recorder is maintained by The Department of Mines.

7. Dr. Lawther's statement that the main concern is for the air that the individuals are breathing, is accepted. The Ontario air pollution control programme is directed to securing or maintaining an air quality compatible with good health and well-being of the residents of Ontario. Our programme is directed toward elimination of emissions of pollutants into the atmosphere.

8. The whole of paragraph 129 should be read in its entirety.

I would agree that there is no significant risk of acute fluorosis or health hazard from organic fluorides.

9. This question does not apply.

30. Mr. Singer—Enquiry of the Minister of Municipal Affairs—1. How many complaints has The Department of Municipal Affairs received to date concerning the refusal of landlords to pay to tenants the rebates provided by the provisions of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968? 2. What has been the disposition of these complaints? 3. How many of these complaints have not yet been processed? 4. How soon is it anticipated the balance of these complaints will be dealt with? 5. (a) Have any Justices of the Peace in Metropolitan Toronto or anywhere else in the Province of Ontario been instructed not to accept informations concerning offences alleged to have taken place under the provisions of this Act unless the acceptance of such informations is first approved by the department? (b) If so, on what authority? (c) If not, why should a Mr. Stephens of the department have so advised an inquiring solicitor on February 20th, 1969? 6. (a) Is it correct that no charges can be laid alleging breaches of this Act after June 30th, 1969? (b) If so, on what basis? (c) If not, why would a Mr. Stephens of the department have so advised an inquiring solicitor on February 20th, 1969?

Answers:

1. To date approximately 4,500.
2. To date approximately 1,500.
3. The balance are in the course of processing.
4. It is anticipated that the balance will be dealt with within the next six weeks.
5. (a) (b) No instructions have been issued by this department to justices of the peace in Metropolitan Toronto or elsewhere.
- (c) Mr. Stephen did not advise the enquiring solicitor that the department had issued any instructions to justices of the peace.
6. (a) Yes, the hon. member is correct in his assumption that no charges can be laid after June 30, 1969 for failure to comply with subsection 2 of section 4 of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968 in respect of the 1968 reduction of taxes.
- (b) The basis for this is subsection 2 of section 693 of the Criminal Code (Canada) which provides that "no proceedings shall be instituted more than six months after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose".

(c) Mr. Stephen provided the enquiring solicitor with the correct information.

31. Mr. Shulman—Enquiry of the member for Haldimand-Norfolk—When may I inspect the minutes of the Niagara Parks Commission?

Answer:

A visit of the Committee on Commissions to the Niagara Parks Commission is anticipated in the near future, at which time the minutes of the meeting referred to by the hon. member for High Park will be made available.

32. Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River)—Enquiry of the Minister of Tourism and Information—1. Who is Arnold Olsen? 2. What department is he with? 3. Why was the picture taken by Karsh instead of either a Tourism or Lands and Forests' photographer which appeared in the Saturday Review of February 15, 1969?

4. How much did the photograph cost? 5. Who was responsible for the writing of the advertisement? 6. How much did the total advertisement cost? 7. Will the same advertisement be run again in the same magazine or any other publication? 8. Why is he depicted wearing a Lands and Forests' uniform, and yet the public is asked to write him c/o The Department of Tourism and Information?

Answers:

1. Arnold Olsen is a conservation officer.
2. He is employed by The Department of Lands and Forests.
3. His picture was taken by Karsh because we sought out the best possible portrait photographer for this series of advertisements, because the name Karsh itself has prestige and marketing value, and because the ad series was aimed at an influential, high-income market.
4. Karsh was paid $1,500 per photograph for all reproduction rights.
5. The advertisement was written by the James Lovick advertising agency.
6. The insertion cost of the ad in the Saturday Review, February 15, was $9,411.60. Production costs of the ad were $716.
7. The same advertisement had been used twice previously, once in the New Yorker magazine and once in the Saturday Review. It may possibly be used once more, but this has not been decided.

8. The public is asked to write to my department because we maintain an information branch for the mailing of the literature on Ontario tourism.

35. Mr. Ben—Enquiry of the Minister of Health—1. Under reporting procedures of The Air Pollution Control Act and any other powers vested in him to receive such information, by Statute or Order in Council, what information has the Minister of Health acquired relating to the production and manufacture in Ontario of any of the following substances: (1) Cholinesterase inhibitors of the group known as G-agents: Sarin, Soman, Tabun; (2) V-agents having formulae $P-RO-R=O-SC_2H_4NR_2$ where the symbols refer to single and double valency bonds respectively; (3) 2, 4-D (Defoliant); (4) 2, 4, 5-T (Defoliant); (5) Picloram (Defoliant); (6) Cacodylic acid (Defoliant); (7) CS (Riot control agent); (8) Mace (Riot control agent); (9) CN (Riot control agent); (10) DM (Riot control agent with high arsenic content). 2. Is the Minister familiar with the Mulley proposals for revising the Geneva Protocol with respect to micro-biological agents? If not, will he so familiarize himself, with a view to ensuring Provincial awareness and responsibility in the whole area of chemical-biological warfare manufactures? 3. Has a chemical-biological warfare-agent factory been established anywhere in Ontario? 4. In the light of the opinion of Professor Henry Miller, Vice-Chancellor of Newcastle University, England, that doctors who work on chemical-biological warfare research are in violation of their ethical code and their Hippocratic Oath; and should surrender their status as physicians and withdraw from the Medical Register; will the Minister give a clear-cut statement on his views in this matter, before this $400 million U.S. industry moves into Ontario, if, indeed it has not already done so?

Answers:

1. (1) (2) I am not aware that any of these chemical warfare agents (nerve gases) are manufactured in Ontario; (3) (4) 2, 4-D and 2, 5-T are both well known herbicides, which I believe have been manufactured intermittently in Ontario—UniRoyal, Elmira, Ont. (formerly Naugatuck Chemicals); (5) (6) It is my understanding that these are manufactured in the USA and used in Ontario for agricultural purposes; (7) (8) (9) (10) To the best of my knowledge, these are not manufactured in Ontario. They have been imported and used as riot control agents.

2. We have no knowledge of the Mulley proposals for revising the Geneva Protocol. To our knowledge the production of chemical biological warfare agents is the concern of the Defence Research Board under The Department of National Defence. The board has an experimental station at Suffield, Alberta.

3. The air pollution control service has not received an application for a certificate of approval to construct such a plant, nor has it discussed such a proposed plant with anyone. Trade and development and labour also report no knowledge.

4. Those physicians who choose to engage in research on chemical biological warfare agents may do so in keeping with their own conscience. The Hippocratic Oath is not binding on physicians other than as a guide of conduct. I am not familiar with the $400 million industry that is said to have moved, or be ready to move, into Ontario.

36. Mr. Ben—Enquiry of the Minister of Health—Will the Minister of Health report to the House on the danger of andromeda-toxin contaminated honey in Ontario, following the experience of poisonings in Washington State where bees had been kept near mountain laurel, sheep laurel, rhododendron and azalea family plants? Have any cases been brought to his attention?

Answer:

No cases have been brought to the attention of this department. As far as can be determined, no illnesses of this nature have ever been reported in Ontario or in Canada.

The possibility of poisoning by andromeda-toxin-contaminated honey is considered to be extremely remote.

37. Mr. Shulman—Enquiry of the Prime Minister—1. Were Dr. J. K. Reynolds (Chief Executive Officer in the Prime Minister's Office) and members of his family occupying the guest house at Upper Canada Village during the May 18, 1968, holiday weekend? 2. Did they have a supply of firecrackers and detonate them up against the guest house? 3. Was this the cause of the fire in these premises? 4. What was the cost of repairing the buildings, and what amount was received, if any, from the insurance coverage? 5. Did the Fire Marshal or his officials make an inspection of the premises and the damage? 6. Did the Fire Marshal or his officials prepare a report subsequently? 7. Was it sent to the Commission? 8. Was General Manager Peacock requested or persuaded by Dr. J. K. Reynolds to cover up this report? 9. Why did the General Manager or other official withhold such report from members of the St. Lawrence Parks Commission until forced to produce it by demand of the Commission members? 10. Will the Prime Minister table this report? 11. If not, why? 12. Will the Prime Minister inform the House fully of all the circumstances and explain why the incident is not mentioned, for the information of members of the Assembly, in the current annual report of the Commission for the year ending December 31, 1968?

Answers:

- 1. Yes.
- 2. Dr. Reynolds' eight-year-old son did detonate some firecrackers on the adjoining lawn and in the vicinity of the residence.
- 3. The confidential report of the assistant chief, fire investigation section, office of the fire marshal states: "Our investigator, after conducting a thorough physical examination, is reporting the cause of the fire as accidental and possibly caused by children playing with firecrackers".
- 4. $3,950; $3,250.
- 5. Yes.
- 6. Yes.
- 7. Yes. The report referred to above, dated June 19, 1968, was received in the commission's Morrisburg office on June 24, 1968.
- 8. No.
- 9. The report was not withheld. It was discussed at the commission meeting in June, shortly after receipt of the fire marshal's report.
- 10. Yes.

11. I do so herewith.

Gentlemen:

An investigator from this office investigated a fire at the above location that involved a two-storey frame and brick constructed dwelling house, fully serviced, and the following summary is compiled from our investigator's report:

Our investigator visited the scene of the loss and established that the fire had originated at the lower portion of the outside north wall of the house. Since an addition has been added to the building, the north wall was now located inside the addition. The fire spread up inside the wall and into the roof over the second storey. Our investigator found extensive charring at the top of the foundation some 2½ feet above ground level where the exposed end of a 4-inch by 4-inch timber was located. The fire was unable to spread up the inside of the wall, due to it being lined with brick, therefore, it progressed along the wooden sill and then spread up the inside of the wall.

Our investigator, after conducting a thorough physical examination, is reporting the cause of the fire as accidental and possibly caused by children playing with firecrackers.

If any further information of value is learned, a further report will be forwarded.

This concludes the investigation.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) Alan C. Williams,
Assistant Chief,
Fire Investigation Section.

12. I am informed that the item was judged to be of insufficient consequence or interest to be mentioned in the annual report.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 1969

The House met today at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests in the east gallery this afternoon are students from St. Ambrose Separate School in Toronto; and in the west gallery we have students from St. Andrew's Junior High School in Willowdale and from the Adult Education Centre, McGill Street, Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the interim report on the control of DDT use in the province of Ontario by the advisory committee on pollution control.

This report follows from investigations and enquiries made during 1968 by the committee of Deputy Ministers who have met regularly to co-ordinate the government's pollution abatement programmes.

Monitoring studies on fish and wildlife were initiated several years ago and the preliminary results of these investigations were presented to the advisory committee early in 1968. These results referred mainly to studies undertaken in the Muskoka Lakes where measurable quantities of DDT were found in fish obtained from these waters.

The committee decided upon a threefold attack on this problem. Firstly, extensive study of the subject was undertaken. Secondly, monitoring and research were continued. Thirdly, it was decided to reduce the usage of DDT in Ontario by such means as were available to the committee, without waiting for the final results of the study.

Since the committee commenced its study, the use of DDT in Ontario has been reduced. Commencing with the 1968 field season, The Department of Health has not issued permits for the commercial application of DDT in the Muskoka Lakes system. No permits were issued for the aerial spraying of DDT during 1968 for biting-insect control and the various committees of The Department of Agriculture and Food have altered their recommendations to reduce the use of DDT in agriculture.

In 1966, The Department of Lands and Forests discontinued the use of DDT for the control of mosquitoes and black flies in provincial parks. In 1968, the department discontinued the use of DDT in all of its projects and primarily the protection of the forest against destructive insects.

Enquiries made during 1968 by the committee failed to disclose any evidence of human health being affected by the use of DDT in Ontario. Similarly, the committee has received no evidence of fish being adversely affected in any Ontario waters. Consequently, the committee does not recommend a ban on the use of this pesticide, but, recognizing its persistent qualities, recommends strict control over its continued use.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister whether a copy of that report is going to be made available to each member?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have copies for all the members. If they would like them we will see that they get them. I think we have issued some to the press, but we have additional copies if members would like them.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, there are nearly 100 amendments in all. Seventy of these are changes in penalties. Taken together, these amendments constitute an overhaul of the entire system of deterrents in our provincial traffic law.

The new penalties will be simpler to administer; they will have greater consistency; they include certain innovations; and they are calculated to be more realistic in the light of present-day conditions. They draw a sharper distinction between offences that are more serious—involving wilful wrong-doing or posing a serious threat to public safety—and those that are relatively minor. For some offences the options of suspensions and jail terms will be removed because they are inappropriate or, in practice, not effective. For other offences these options will be added. The fines for serious offences will be substantially more severe.

In consideration of such extensive changes, I ask that the House place them in the perspective of their purpose and their need.

Their purpose is the achievement of greater traffic safety through the use of a more effective set of deterrents. The penalties of the past for serious traffic offences have tended to be too mild. A Toronto judge has commented that:

The major reason for this is that virtually all legislators and judges drive automobiles, and think that there-but-for-the-grace-of-God . . . Thus we see mild traffic laws and penalties, for example, of $50 for careless driving where a child was killed.

When the need for strong deterrents is examined, it will be indisputable that a great many motorists show a shocking disrespect for the laws of traffic. Our society has been far too tolerant of the person who breaks traffic laws; all too often the lawbreaker is given more sympathy than the victim of his carelessness or irresponsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I am fed up with the concern that is repeatedly expressed for the person who is convicted of driving offences. I am fed up with the attitude that shrugs off traffic laws. One thousand, five hundred and eighty-six persons were killed by traffic collisions in Ontario last year, and most of them died because a driver was irresponsible. The 71,000 persons injured in collisions suffered those injuries, in most cases, because a driver was irresponsible.

Those are the persons I am concerned about—not the irresponsible drivers but their victims; and the families of the victims.

The ultimate purpose of traffic laws is to save lives and prevent injuries, not to wink at people who think they have the right to break the law and thereby endanger the lives and health of themselves, their families and other users of the road. I am confident that the people of Ontario in 1969 recognize the growing urgency of solutions to the toll of collisions; that they have the enlightened self-interest to support stronger deterrents.

If we really want safety, we have to be willing to accept the price of personal responsibility and restraint. If we are not willing to pay that price, then we are endorsing Russian roulette on the highway and we are just giving lip-service to safety.

The amendments I propose today are not a total solution, but they should play an important part in the achievement of greater safety.

In fatal collisions, the statistics for 1968 show that the most common driving error was excessive speed. Year after year, speeding is both one of the most common offences and one of those that causes the most deaths and suffering.

Therefore I propose an innovation that will establish a more meaningful deterrent: a penalty that reflects the fact that the greater the speed over the maximum, the greater the danger to life and the more irresponsible is the driver. Fines for speeding will be on a sliding scale, based on the number of miles per hour over the legal maximum. Some courts have followed this principle in the past, but usually within the range of $5 to $50. The amendment will establish a uniform practice, with fines ranging from $2 to $5 for each mile per hour over the maximum, so that convictions for extreme speeding could result in much more severe penalties.

The same kind of sliding scale of fines is proposed for the overloading of commercial vehicles. The present fines of up to $50 are too low to be a deterrent and our studies have shown that in many cases they do not come close to offsetting the economic advantage of exceeding the legal limits for loads. These limits are important for purposes of safety, road maintenance and equity of fees. Therefore the amendment will establish a sliding scale of fines for overloading that could amount in extreme cases to thousands of dollars.

Many penalties now are minimal for first offence, more severe for the second and still more severe for subsequent offences. I propose to remove this principle from the Act entirely. The theory has much to commend it, but it does not work. In practice, because of procedural complications, prosecutors usually avoid the use of the provisions for second and subsequent offences. Therefore the minimal range of first-offence penalties applies in most cases. The removal of provision for second and subsequent offences, in conjunction with the adjustment of the severity of penalties to suit the conditions of today, will result in a system that is both more practical and more effective.

I would like to draw attention to a few of the most important penalty changes.

For careless driving—one of the most serious driving offences in the Act—the minimum will be raised from $10 to $100, with the maximum remaining at $500. In addition, the amendment will increase the discretionary jail term from three months to six months and will provide that this may be in addition to and not instead of, the fine. The discretionary period of suspension remains, with a maximum of two years.

The same range of increased penalties will be applied to several other serious offences: for example, the offences of racing, failure to remain at the scene of a collision and operating a motor vehicle when the vehicle permit is under suspension.

A further group of serious offences that relate to manufacturing and selling, which now carry penalties that are in some cases as low as a $5 minimum, will be increased to a $100 minimum and a $500 maximum.

Another important change in the Act concerns powers of arrest. In the section listing the offences for which police officers may arrest without a warrant I propose deleting three offences which seem inappropriate: concerning the position of licence plates on vehicles, notification of change in vehicle ownership and notification of change of address. I am proposing also that two new offences be added to the list: failing to remain at the scene of a collision and the failure of a driver to properly identify himself to a police constable.

The latter change is part of a significant group of amendments that are designed to facilitate reasonable enforcement in the public interest. In the past, a driver has been required by law to produce his driver's licence at the demand of a police constable. But if he failed to do so, or if he displayed it so quickly that it could not be read, the constable had no power to act. The officer could find himself in a position that he could not ascertain the name of a driver he wished to charge and therefore could not lay a charge.

The proposed amendment will require a person to identify himself, and if he fails to do so to the satisfaction of a police constable the constable can arrest him without a warrant.

The McRuer Report said, and I quote:

The necessities of the cases would appear to be met if the power of arrest without a warrant were restricted to those cases in which the driver of a motor vehicle, without showing reasonable cause, does not properly identify himself and the owner of the vehicle, and those cases in which the driver does not appear to have any legal right to have the vehicle on the highway.

I invite consideration of this large number of amendments in a spirit of determination to escalate our efforts for greater safety in traffic.

THE PUBLIC VEHICLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Haskett moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Public Vehicles Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for increasing the minimum fine from $20 to $50.

THE ENERGY ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. Mr. Simonett moves first reading of bill intituled, The Energy Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this revision is to make administration of the Act more effective in the light of the experience gained under the present Act, thus improving the safety aspects of the production and storage of gas and oil and the transmission, distribution and use of gas, fuel oil and propane as defined in the Act.

THE GASOLINE HANDLING ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. Mr. Simonett moves first reading of bill intituled, The Gasoline Handling Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this revision is to make the administration of this Act more effective in the light of the experience gained under the present Act, thus improving the safety aspects of the handling of gasoline and associated products.

THE ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Simonett moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, in section 1 the definitions are brought in line with the corresponding definitions in The Energy Act, 1968-1969.

In section 2, subsection 7 of this bill, the amendment is complementary and will bring a new section, 25(a), into line with the exceptions mentioned in section 15(3) of the Act.

In section 3 the amendment is designed to enable the board to control unreasonable inflation of the rate.

Sections 4, 9 and 10 are designed to complement The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969.

The new provision of section 5 implements a recommendation of the McRuer report. It requires the board to send a copy of its report to each of the parties on reference to it of an application for a licence to drill a gas well in a designated gas storage area. The new provision also gives a right of appeal to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

New provisions of section 6 will give the board additional discretionary powers when dealing with an application for the joining of interests in a spacing unit, field or fuel.

The provision in section 7 is new; and it is self-explanatory.

In section 8 the name of the department mentioned is brought up to date.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister has a statement.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to remind the members of the House that this is the 20th anniversary of the entrance of Newfoundland into our Confederation. Members might be interested in knowing that I have sent a telegram to Mr. Smallwood on—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is the Premier declaring today "Joey Smallwood Day?"

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —on behalf of the people of this province, because Mr. Smallwood's contribution in bringing Newfoundland into Confederation was undoubtedly greater than any other single individual. I think his province has benefited by this association and the rest of Canada has as well.

As far as Mr. Smallwood is concerned, I have known him and have met with him over the years at many conferences—always, I hope, with pleasure on both sides. Members will recall he played a very active part in the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference here in Toronto. He is always able to enliven the proceedings, and when they perhaps begin to get just a little dull and ponderous for the listening audience he manages to throw in some remark that changes the general tenor of the discussion.

I would extend to him my personal congratulations on this momentous occasion.

I do not know whether he has called a leadership convention, or indicated that perhaps he may not be leading his party in that province in the future, but certainly I think the people of Newfoundland will always be very grateful to him. I have a feeling it will be purely his decision and no one else's when he decides his course has been run.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a feeling the Prime Minister is right.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In any event, it is a happy occasion for us to extend congratulations to the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to associate myself with the words of greetings and congratulations expressed by the Premier.

I sometimes feel that the Premier's interest in Newfoundland and the Premier thereof has been whetted by the fact that they have been salmon fishing together, as much as by their discussions at the federal-provincial conferences.

Perhaps members would be interested to know that I too have sent the Premier a telegram of congratulations—I am working on an invitation to go fishing myself.

I had a chance to talk with Mr. Smallwood in Ottawa just a few weeks ago about some of the history leading up to their entry into Confederation. He said that the old slogan in the period when Confederation was being considered first in the 1860's and then in the 1890's, was as follows: "Come near at your peril, Canadian wolf!"

It is an indication of the attitudes that he almost single handedly overcame in the campaign of 1948 leading to the decision that brought Newfoundland into Confederation.

Those days were, of course, very important ones, both for Newfoundland and for the rest of us as citizens of Canada. I think more than anything else, we are aware, at the conferences, of the contribution that Mr. Smallwood makes when he emphasizes the tremendous differences, the disparities, between the region over which he has some responsibility and our own.

One statement that he made that impressed me, and I know it impressed the other members who were also at that conference. He said that if Ontario were to tax at the same rate as Newfoundland taxed her citizens we would have an additional $600 million in our revenues. It is an indication of the different level of life and involvement that is necessary in that particular part of Canada and the challenge it presents to all of us when we concern ourselves with these regional disparities.

I am delighted to join with the Premier in offering our greetings and congratulations to Newfoundland.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition. I shall not usurp the right of the Prime Minister to reply to the validity of the application of Newfoundland's tax rate to Ontario and the figures that Joey came up with. He is a wonderful fellow. He can, in a constitutional conference, off the top of his head, suddenly transform the province into a bilingual province. How meaningful it is I do not know!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): His statistics are wrong too!

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

At least, as Joey Smallwood has so often said, he is the only father of Confederation who is around at this point; and I suppose for that reason, if for no other, some attention should be paid to him.

You might be interested to know, Mr. Speaker—I do not know whether this story is apocryphal or not—but I understand that when the new Confederation building was erected in St. John's that the telephone number given to the building was accepted by everybody in numbers until somebody examined it on one occasion and discovered that the numbers equated "JOEY". I suspect that it is not inaccurate in its reflection of the dominance of Newfoundland during Joey's regime.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways has a statement.

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I should like to draw the attention of the hon. members of the House to the new edition of the northern Ontario map, copies of which have been placed on the members' desks. This map was revised to include new highway mileage, and major highway projects under way in northern Ontario. It also depicts historic points of interest in the north, and indicates by symbols, hunting and fishing areas, the location of camping facilities, mining areas, pulp mills, power generating stations, airports, seaplane bases and hospitals. In addition, there are listings of daily newspapers and radio stations in the north, as well as the Ontario Provincial Police district headquarters. A handy mileage chart with the distance between larger cities in the United States and many Ontario centres is also provided. All in all, I think members would agree that it is much more than just a map. It is a useful brochure that should help stimulate tourist travel in the north. The new map is now ready for distribution, free of charge, through The Department of Highways offices, and from The Department of Tourism and Information distribution centres.

Mr. Speaker: On Friday, when the chairman of the committee of the whole House was relieving Mr. Speaker so that he might attend the meeting of the Speakers of Canadian Parliaments, which is held annually, a question arose with respect to the use of the order paper and the use of the oral question. The chairman advised the House that he would refer it to Mr. Speaker, which he has done, and we have had the opportunity of consulting the rules and precedents of the House. I have merely this comment to make with respect to it.

As has been explained on many occasions in the House, the only questions contemplated by our rules are the written questions which appear on the notice paper. The putting of oral questions before the orders of the day on private notice is a practice of long standing, which has the authority of precedent and approval by the House, and the procedure on such questions has also been well established by practice and precedent. When Mr. Speaker, or the Minister to whom the question is directed, is of the opinion that the question is not a proper one to be answered orally before the orders of the day, the Speaker or the Minister, as the case may be, may require that the question be placed by the Clerk on the notice paper as a written question.

This may be for any number of reasons, such as that the answer is too voluminous or too statistical to be given orally or that the subject matter is not sufficiently urgent. The discretion of a Minister in this regard is analogous to the discretion given him by rule 37 (c) under which he may, in the case of a written question when the answer would require any statements of facts or records or statistics of a lengthy or voluminous nature, or other material which in the opinion of the Minister should be made the subject of a return, instead of answering the question may require that a motion be made for a return.

Now, I would think that we would continue to follow our practice in the House, which actually was followed on Friday in the House here. The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Has the Minister received new information regarding regional government in the Niagara area which will require a delay in the introduction of legislation for regional government there—although he indicated on January 23, reported in the Niagara Falls Evening Review of March 1, that the regional legislation would be brought in before the Easter recess.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received any new information. I would say that the consultations which are being undertaken are perhaps taking a little longer than we anticipated, but I would hope that we would be in a position to introduce legislation a week or so after we return after the Easter recess.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have questions, but neither of the Ministers responsible for the reply is here.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps, if they should come in before the end of the question period, we will go back to them. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has questions of the Premier.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): A question to the hon. Prime Minister. Is the Premier ready at this time to divulge the background of the financial dealings made with Germany recently?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been discussed in the House, and it has been answered by the hon. Treasurer on several occasions, and I would refer the hon. member, in chronological order, to page 1393, page 1989 and page 2005 where this information was put before the House.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last time the Prime Minister talked to the House on this subject he said he would be giving information to the House. I thought maybe he would level with us.

A question to the Prime Minister. Would the Premier advise why, as the Prime Minister of Ontario, he is not taking steps to curb bank interest rates which are continually on the increase?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there is a very simple answer. Under our constitution it is a matter which lies entirely within the purview of the federal government, and I do not think they would appreciate my interference, nor do I think it would have much effect. The whole question of banking is a national matter, and properly so, falls to the federal government.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister agree that he thinks he has influence in Ottawa on other matters? Why could he not do something on this matter?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in the field of financial affairs, you have to form your own opinion as to what my influence is in Ottawa.

Mr. Sargent: We have that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would simply say that I would very much doubt that my interference, or the interference of any province, in this particular area would be particularly welcome. On the other hand we have been crying in the wilderness for a greater degree of fiscal co-operation in this country if we are to be able to formulate national fiscal policies that would be meaningful. We have been asking for this for some considerable time. In the last few months we have seen some slight breakthrough. We think, perhaps, our point of view is beginning to be understood but I do not think it is understood completely yet. But we would be pleased—

Mr. Sargent: Like Medicare, for instance.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Quite. We would be happy to co-operate with the federal government in those areas in which our activities have an effect on money markets, and thus on the interest rate. On the other hand, I must come back to the point that I made. Constitutionally, it is a function of the federal government; I agree that it should be, and I do not think the provinces should be able to interfere in this other than through, as I say, consultation. But if we are to have national policies, and particularly in the area of monetary matters, then, of course, the responsibility must lie with the national government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question from the other day for the Treasurer, and a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I have a question of the Provincial Treasurer, sir. But, before placing my question, I would like to raise a point of order in connection with this question, sir. No one wishes to prolong the question period unnecessarily, and everyone agrees with the remarks that the hon. Treasurer made last week that it would be preferable to have many of these questions answered by writing to the responsible Minister.

I wish to point out to you, sir, that a letter was written to the hon. Treasurer about the matter in today's question, some seven months ago, and as he has not yet answered, it is unfortunately necessary to place this question in the House. Furthermore, sir, I wish to remind you that on July 17, 1968, in this House—on page 5905 of Hansard it was recorded—I first pointed out that this Minister will not answer his letters.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Why did the member not mail it?

Mr. Shulman: It was mailed; he received it. The question is as follows, sir. Has the Minister had an opportunity to look into the complaints about the placing of governmental insurance, which was forwarded to him by Mr. Leslie E. Mackay, a general insurance agent practising in Listowel, Ontario?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, my file showed no record of the receipt of a communication of this nature from Mr. Mackay, and I do not recall one. It is possible, of course, and I say this in all fairness and honesty to the hon. member, that it has been received and misplaced, in which case I would extend apologies to Mr. Mackay and to the hon. member. But I can tell you, we have turned our files inside out, and I cannot locate it.

Mr. Shulman: It was sent last August.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We will continue the pursuit of the question. Possibly we were not looking under the right alphabetical order. Did it come in from the hon. member, may I ask him that question?

Mr. Shulman: From Mr. Mackay.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It came from Mr. Mackay? We will continue our search.

As far as insurance commissions are concerned, payments are made to licensed agents outside Metropolitan Toronto. To qualify, the agent must be a member of the Ontario Insurance Association, and the affiliated local association in his community or district. The agent, of course, must be licensed by the appropriate government body. From then on, payment is made on a rotational basis once every three years to all agents in the province who qualify, as I have mentioned, to ensure that over the course of the three-year period they will receive a commission representing a share of the commission accruing on premiums placed on government facilities.

Mr. MacDonald: Sounds like featherbedding to me.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is the policy that is followed and I think in general that would be the only answer I could give, Mr. Speaker, even when I do turn up the letter, which I shall endeavour to do.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Treasurer accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: As Mr. Mackay is a licensed agent—licence No. J209, the province of Ontario—and sent $25 to the Treasurer of Ontario, would this not be sufficient to get his share of the cream?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, we pursued this matter with the Ontario Insurance Agents' Association. It would appear that he has not been a member of the Ontario Insurance Agents' Association since September 30, 1963. He is recorded as being a member from October 1, 1962 to September 30, 1963, a period of just under a year, but not since that time.

If the hon. member will recall—I will repeat what I said—to qualify, an agent must be a member of the Ontario Insurance Agents' Association and the affiliated local association in his community or district.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister explain the reason for that rule?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Only to say, Mr. Speaker, that this was worked out with the insurance companies, the insurance advisory committee, some time ago. It has been functioning very well over a period of years.

Up until now we have had no particular reason to believe that it is not acceptable to the agents, I suppose, except when someone for some reason misses his commission, and this is probably such a case. It was set up to ensure, as I have said, as fair a basis as possible—on a rotational basis every three years—and agents who qualify, as I have mentioned, will participate in these commissions.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this explains the need for self-insurance in this province.

I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Has OMSIP agreed to pay the new schedule of fees planned to begin tomorrow by the Ontario Medical Association?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, we have not reached such an agreement yet. If and when we do, I am sure this House will be advised of it.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? Does that mean that as of tomorrow the increased fee must be paid by the public?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is a certain percentage of the profession who still bill the people for the difference in the fee. I suppose they will continue to do as they have been doing in the past, but at the present time we cannot pay more than the fee permitted under our Act, and we have not yet decided to bring in an amendment to that Act.

Mr. Shulman: One further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. If the government does decide to pay the fees now issued by the Ontario Medical Association, will that mean that the charge made to the public for OMSIP will have to be raised?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would have to look at that because I really could not answer the question without seeing what the total ramification might be.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

Has the OWRC given permission to the Steel Company of Canada to dispose of waste acid from its No. 1 pickle line into Hamilton Bay?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Water Resources Commission has permitted the Steel Company of Canada to discharge pickle liquor from the No. 1 pickle line to a lagoon system through which the acidity is reduced to an acceptable level. It is understood that development is under way to convert this line to a process in which spent acid is regenerated for reuse.

Mr. Speaker: Was the hon. member on his feet for a supplementary question?

Mr. Deans: I was going to ask a supplementary, but I will let it go at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill 23, An Act to amend The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act.

Bill 24, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Bill 64, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Clerk of the House: The 7th order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT, 1968

House in committee on Bill 89, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act, 1968.

On section 1:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, this is the section that extends the authority of the Act to include Indian reserves, I believe, and I am particularly interested in what the Minister has in mind. There are several reserves covering fairly large areas that are presently surrounded by conservation authorities, but up until now have had no part to play in the work of the authority.

Would it be in the Minister's mind that the representative, either elected or appointed by the band council, will become a part of the conservation authority in the areas where it would apply? Or is it going to be only a financial involvement in which the government of Canada will be required to pay at least a part of the costs, or has agreed to pay a part of the costs of the work on behalf of the lands the Indians hold and would be benefited by the work?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Chairman, as I understand, it would be upon request of the Indian band. Now, as to financial implication, I am sorry I cannot explain that. I have never heard at any time that the dominion government was coming in on any financial arrangement with the conservation authorities.

Mr. Nixon: But the Minister would be prepared to accept representation on conservation authorities from Indian reserves without the requirement that any funds from Indian sources be a part of that representation?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: Good!

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, on section 2, dealing with the transfer of authority from the local municipalities to a regional government municipality, I am concerned here with the function of the regional council as it would relate to the duties now carried on by the local municipalities, especially as it would affect a two-tier system of government. In the secondary or lower tier system, I understand that they would have no say as to who would represent them, but this would be done by the regional council.

Under the previous Act, it says that a person representing a municipality must be a resident of the municipality. Would this mean then that any resident of the large region could, in fact, be a representative of the smaller, lower tier municipality on a conservation?

Also, I am not clear, and I do not think it is spelled out in the amendment, what effect this would have on the apportionment of cost for the lower tier municipality. I wonder if this has been checked out with The Department of Municipal Affairs in their proposal for regional government, how this will affect the proportionment of costs to the lower tiered municipalities within the region that would be subjected on them, by the regional council. Could the Minister answer these questions?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think this is more to protect representation when an area comes under a regional government, instead of bringing the membership down to a municipality or a regional government which might be considered as a municipality. We are trying to protect the smaller municipalities within this region.

As to cost, it will be appropriated as they have been previously where there is a municipality or part of a municipality left. If it all comes under one region and the total government is there, of course it would be the region we were dealing with. But where there are two tiers, costs would be appropriated the same as they are today.

Mr. Good: This is exactly my point, Mr. Chairman. Under this new amendment, the regional council or the regional government will have all the authorities previously delegated to the local municipality. Under the original Act, the local municipality was responsible for the appointment of representation from the municipality under the sections dealing with costs, section 25 under the original Act, after determining the approximate maintenance costs for the succeeding years. The costs were proportioned out and this was all done through the representative of the local municipality as it affected that municipality. My point is this, are the costs going to be related in proportion to the whole region, or are they still going to be delegated out and the responsibility taken from the individual lower-tiered municipalities of the region? If they are, I think they should have some say in it. Otherwise, you are going to run into the same problem you are now running into in the smaller municipalities and the county school board costs.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think that it would depend on the form of region that is being set up and you would make your decisions after that. But that is not our intention with this bill. Our intention is that we might keep representation in the rural municipalities, or if there are two stages, of course, costs would be apportioned the same as they are today. In fact, under The Metro Toronto Conservation Act, if you would look at that, you would see how that has worked out and worked very well.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, the way I read this section (b) of the amended bill under clause 2, the regional government could appoint representatives from anywhere within the region. They could all come from the city or they could all come from the rural areas. Previously, the small areas were protected under the old Act, the person had to be a resident of the municipality from which he was appointed. I do not think there is that protection under this.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is right, there is not.

Mr. Good: There is not?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Good: They all come from the city? Do you not think that there should be some direction given as to what areas of the region the appointment should come from? In what areas of the region the appointments should be made?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would think that under regional government you will have representation throughout the region. I cannot see why they would all come from one locality. I know as far as the government appointees are concerned, they will be considered over the whole region. I think the same would apply locally.

Mr. Good: I do not think there should be any government appointments, but that is another matter.

Mr. Chairman: Does section 2 stand?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Following this point, Mr. Chairman, the amendments to The Conservation Authorities Act as presented here are necessary in regard to the development of regional government. But you have to be explicit. You have heard the question from the hon. member previously in regard to the two-tier system and the representations.

What is going to be the situation if we come up in the province with one or more one-tier regional systems? Then the problem that he presents on representation will be magnified, you could have your representation all from one central core of an urban municipality. I think you will have to give some attention to that because it is a great possibility we will have one or more one-tier regional governments in the province.

Another point I would like to make and I was disturbed about the results of the annual meeting of the Hamilton District Conservation Authority which took place in the first week of February. There was quite a furore there about the method of the appointing of executives. Now as I understand it the procedures for appointing the executive are well laid out in The Conservation Authorities Act. Why they are confused about it, I do not know, except that they are ignoring the terms of the present Act and were playing politics. I do not know; but the fact is that they were moving motions in this meeting to review the procedures of electing the executive members. When they were told by the present chairman that the Act provided the procedures, they then proceeded to move notices of motion to review the whole procedure of electing executives at the next meeting.

I would hope that the director of the conservation authorities is cognizant of the misunderstanding there and sends copies of the Act and regulations to all the members in the Hamilton district region so that we do not have this apparent lack of confidence in that very important conservation authority. The press story indicated that there was not the kind of correlation and co-ordination that is necessary to really make an important body of that type function properly.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, this protection for representation from all areas was given in the original Act and has now been destroyed. The Minister of Municipal Affairs is in the House; would he like to comment what his thoughts are on this matter of representation from lower tiers in the proposed regional government set-up?

Mr. Nixon: I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs would be glad to do that.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): While the Minister is considering his answer, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could make a few remarks in connection with clause 2?

Mr. Chairman: We are dealing with Bill 89, section 2, of An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act. The hon. member for Waterloo North wondered whether the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs cared to comment upon the representation in a two-tier form of municipal government.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I am sure that the Minister of Energy and Resources Management has already answered the question but I would think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This was put in specifically as I understand it, with the Niagara peninsula in mind. I think any of the students of regional government would feel that one of the things that a region can and should do best is a regional park system. Now it so happens in the Niagara peninsula that the conservation authority and the proposed regional municipality are nearly "coterminus" and it therefore seemed appropriate that rather than have a regional park system you had it already in the conservation authority. This would, in fact, become a regional matter and that is why the representation would be put at that level.

Mr. Good: To repeat my question, Mr. Chairman, this amendment to the bill gives the regional council the authority for all appointments, which means that they could appoint anyone from within the region. So, in effect, they would be licenced to appoint members from any one locality to the regional conservation authority which, in that particular case that you have mentioned, would include two complete counties.

Under the old Act protection was given so that your local small municipalities made the appointment. What protections are you prepared to put in this bill so there is representation from all areas of the region? The Minister of Energy and Resources Management said none.

• Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think if you are going to have that kind of protection then you are saying it is not a regional responsibility. Because if you are talking about a regional responsibility, it is conceivable—I do not imagine it would ever happen—that a regional council might decide in their wisdom to appoint from one municipality. But presumably, in making their appointments, one would hope—and that is the basis of a regional municipality—that they would not necessarily look at where the people are from or what particular locale they came from, but they would look to find the best people that they could appoint to represent on the authority from the region.

Mr. Good: Then, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the authority should come under the regional council. If the regional council is representative of the region, the conservation authority should be run by the regional council and you have no need for a conservation authority.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, there is a problem there because all authorities will not come under one region. Conservation authorities are set up on a watershed. Now a region might be a part or all of an authority, but in many cases it will not cover the whole authority, so this is just the area that is covered by the region.

We do not anticipate any trouble with this. In fact, conservation authorities have been a form of regional government. They have covered a large area, a watershed over the years. You will get, in some areas where there are conservation authorities, a majority of the members on that board who are in the built up areas because some of the smaller townships are not too concerned and they are the headwaters of these authorities. We have not had many problems along this line as far as representation is concerned.

• Mr. Good: No, because your old Act gave them representation—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well I do not think there will be any problem here.

Mr. Good:—and your amendment is taking it away.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I cannot see that there will be any problem, because a region in itself in most cases, perhaps outside of Niagara, will be a very small part of an authority.

Take the Ottawa region, for instance, that is going to be on the Mississippi or the Rideau, a very small part of either one of those authorities, although it is a region, within Ottawa, Carleton and that area.

Mr. Good: Well once again you are taking the responsibilities away from the people in the smaller communities.

Mr. Chairman: On section 2, the hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, my objection to the clause is that since the Minister of Municipal Affairs has indicated that it is framed with a particular part of the province in mind—the Niagara peninsula—it may well preclude the establishment of conservation authorities, which the clause envisages in other parts of the province, once a regional government structure has been established.

In the case of my own community, the municipality of the city of Windsor would form a very substantial portion of any regional structure established in southwestern Ontario but a component of that prospective regional structure which in the past has opposed participation in a conservation authority.

At a meeting last fall, I believe it was in Windsor, which a large number of representatives of municipalities in Essex county attended to discuss the establishment of a conservation authority, the city of Windsor was not represented. Although the meeting of those representatives of the Essex county municipalities decided not to proceed with the establishment of an authority, there is no doubt that the absence of Windsor had considerable bearing on that decision not to proceed.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Do not count on that.

Mr. Peacock: Under the provisions of this clause it could well come about that the city of Windsor, as the major component of a regional structure for that part of the province, could impede, or block altogether, the establishment of a conservation authority. I would suggest to the Minister that he consider the amendment of clause 2 in the seventh line of paragraph (a) of subsection 1 of section 3(a) as amended by clause 2 of the bill, to delete the word "may" replacing it with the word "shall". Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, I have not had time to write out that suggestion as an amendment to the clause, but I would like to propose it.

I would also like to suggest that not only would the clause be perfected by this amendment but that it would be further strengthened by an indication in it that the representatives not only number the same total to which the local municipalities would have otherwise been entitled had this amendment not been introduced, but that those representatives would come from the same local municipalities that they would otherwise have represented had not this amendment been passed. So that the regional municipality under this paragraph would be required—not permitted solely—to appoint representatives in the same number and to appoint those representatives from the local municipalities who would otherwise be entitled to participate in the meeting to establish or enlarge a conservation authority.

Since I have not got that all set out in writing, Mr. Chairman, I cannot move it as an amendment at the moment but I would like the Minister to—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think we feel that we would sooner leave the word "may" there. You are speaking about Windsor which at the present time does not happen to be under a conservation authority, but when we think of conservation authorities that reach from Ottawa as far north as Denbigh—some hundreds of miles—to say to those people up there that we say that we "shall" appoint somebody when they are not too concerned whether they have someone on there or not to drive 85 or 100 miles to meetings—this is why we would like it left as "may".

I would think if any of those northern municipalities on that very long watershed wanted a representative there, that the people down in the populated area of the authority would be very happy to have a representative look at the problems that they might have in that area. But, we could create hardship in some cases, especially where there are large conservation authorities and we have several in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Peacock: Surely that is a pretty thin argument, Mr. Chairman, for not insisting on representation from all parts of the regional government structure, that representatives would have to travel a considerable distance where a large geographical area was covered by a conservation authority. Let us not move into that on the premise that it is going to cause hardship on account of the mileage separating the representatives of the local municipalities from the location at which the meetings under this clause would be set up. If that is the only objection, the only reason the Minister has to offer why the permissive nature of the clause should be maintained here rather than changed to one of straight requirement for representation from all parts of the authority, then we should ask him to stand it down and not proceed with it.

Surely here is a piece of legislation setting out, for the first time, I think in any piece of legislation that has come before this House, a function and responsibility of a regional government which will have general application wherever a conservation authority can be appropriately established or enlarged where an authority already exists. We must ensure that there is participation by all components of the new regional structure.

We must not allow a situation to develop under such a clause where a regional municipal authority will be able to arrogate to itself the kind of discretion and authority which the Minister I think, in his answer a moment ago, suggested it well could take unto itself. If people find it a bit difficult or hazardous on some of those northern roads to make it to a meeting, then those that are able to get to it will simply proceed and do as they wish without respect for the feelings or views of those that have not made it to the meeting.

I think the Minister's answer makes it imperative that we have a much stronger wording in the clause and one that will require the regional municipality to take into account the views of all parts of the regional government district. The only way that can be done is by the instruction, through this clause, to the regional municipality that it invites to the meeting to establish or enlarge a conservation authority—all of those representatives that the separate local municipalities would otherwise have been entitled to and representatives resident in those municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I know that you can appoint members. If you put "shall" in there, you can appoint them, but that does not necessarily mean that you can make these appointees attend meetings. This happens in many cases where people are appointed by the municipalities. For some reason they do not turn up at any meetings so that they do not add to the authority, or they do not represent the municipality in which they live. Evidently, they are not too interested, so if you run into a municipality where the head people are not too concerned with conservation, I think we should appoint somebody from some place else that will represent them on the watershed. We deal with the watershed, and this happens in so many cases.

In fact, even with our government employees in some areas, we wrote last September asking if someone would serve as a government representative and we have not heard from some of them yet. They do not seem to be too concerned in some areas at this particular time. So we feel it is better to do it this way, where people are appointed, people who are interested and concerned with conservation.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, one point further on this very subject. Now, under your present Act it says that the cost will be "apportioned", or it says, "shall be apportioned to the benefiting municipalities". This is for cost of maintenance or cost of work in that area. So you are asking now, when you are not considering your method of cost, that your cost not be borne by your regional government, the cost will still be borne by the small second tier of government on a regional area.

Consider your Niagara region as an example. Your costs are going to be proportioned down into the smaller, local boroughs and municipalities of the region. Now, your Act specifically says that they shall be apportioned, yet you are asking that, in all likelihood, they would be without representation on the authority. This just is not the way the thing should be resolved. If the people are expected, and can have the cost of their maintenance and the cost of further operation apportioned to them then on an assessment basis, they should be given the absolute right to have representation on the authority. For you to say that the regional government will set who represents the authority, and then your Act says who is going to pay for it, there is a great discrepancy there in the line of thinking in my estimation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, on this point, I wonder if the hon. Minister would explain the alternative to the word "may" if you say that you want this to be left with the option that they may appoint representatives to establish a regional conservation authority.

If you do not do that, how do you get one established? You have to have representation. They have to be appointed, to establish an authority. If you do not get someone at the meeting you do not get the authority established. So, if you say now that they may appoint, and they decide that there is no one to appoint, how are they going to establish the authority to get the thing off the ground?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are having any problems here about establishing authorities. I think I said before, an authority could be a regional government, several townships, or two or three regional governments. Of course, it seems to me that where we have regional government we can have representation—elected representation—throughout the region. They may appoint people who are interested in conservation.

I cannot see where we are going to have any problems at all. In fact, talking to conservation authorities, they are quite satisfied with the bill. They think it is workable. We think it is workable, and I cannot see yet where we would have any problems.

THE PENSION BENEFITS ACT, 1965

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer) moves second reading of Bill 76, An Act to amend The Pension Benefits Act, 1965.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am interested with respect to developments under this amendment to The Pension Benefits Act, to review with the Minister some of the situations which resulted from the Dufferin retirement plan, upon which, I understand, this bill may well have been based.

There was a meeting with the Ontario pension commissioner, Mr. Bentley, held by Mr. David E. Hastings, a solicitor of Guelph, Ontario, with respect to obtaining the approval of the pension commission to withdraw certain pension contributions from this plan. Apparently a meeting was held, and I would like to quote to the House certain paragraphs from the letter which Mr. Hastings had written originally to the member for Wellington South:

To refresh your memory, The Department of National Revenue has agreed to permit those employees who wish to withdraw their pension contributions from this registered plan, to do so on a once and only election basis.

However, the Ontario Pension Commission has ruled that such withdrawal of pension contributions may be made only up to December 31, 1964. But from January 1, 1965, all their pension contributions are locked in and they must continue in the plan and continue to make contributions.

We challenge this ruling as The Ontario Pension Benefits Act, 1965, makes no provision for such ruling, either in the Act itself or in the regulations under the Act.

Moreover, Mr. Bentley said that this was the policy set up by the commission and that they had obtained some legal opinion to support it. However, he did say that a bill was being submitted to the Legislature to cover this situation.

Under section 21 of the Act, which is the only applicable section, reference is made to the locking-in of contributions only for an employee who is 45 years of age and who has been in the employ for 10 years, or has been a member of the plan for 10 years and it does not refer to any other employees.

It was on this basis, and under this section, that we had been proceeding up to the time of receiving Mr. Bentley's ruling. As we understand it there is only one member of the Legislature who is a member of the commission and that is, Mr. Kerr, the member for Halton West. Our legal opinion is that the commission does not have the power to refuse to approve this withdrawal from the plan under the Act or its regulations and that this is strictly an autocratic decision without authority. If the power was there, there would be no reason for a bill being put before the Legislature, to validate something that the commission has already been doing.

However, I would be interested if you were able to check into this matter, whatever manner you see fit, to see if you can ascertain how the commission can interpret the Act to rule that pension contributions of those under 45 years of age, who continue in employ are locked in.

Mr. Speaker, I would be very interested in hearing from the hon. Minister as to the correctness or otherwise of the comments made by Mr. Hastings in his letter. And even more so, I would be interested in hearing from the hon. Treasurer as to the approach which the pension commission has taken apparently to cause this sort of development of decisions for the withdrawal of various funds without apparently having the legislative authority to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West. Perhaps the Minister would wait until the end of the comments.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we in this group support the amendment, because obviously it confirms by statute what ought to have been in the original Act: a prohibition against the withdrawal of employees' contributions where they had not achieved the minimum vesting requirements of the original Act, ten years service or the attainment of 45 years of age.

It is a fairly innocuous amendment, but it closes what might well have become a very serious loophole in the administration of the Act and in the guaranteeing of fully paid up vested pension benefits on behalf of the employees participating in the registered pension plans.

I would suggest to the Treasurer that in bringing in this amendment to cover this particular deficiency in the original Act—and one which quite rightly has to this point been closed by regulation or by by-law of the commission itself—he might well have considered a number of other major changes to the Act itself which, of course, I will not undertake to discuss at this point, knowing how much I would incur your displeasure, Mr. Speaker, in putting myself out of order. I would like to take those matters up with the Treasurer when we come to the vote for the Ontario Pension Commission, when he returns to the House with his estimates. I want to make it clear that we in this group do support the amendment in that it provides that, after January 1, 1965, employees' contributions are not just savings; that they are going to be put to one side, out of their pay envelope and earn some interest; that they are there to be used for the purchase of pensions when they reach the eligible age for retirement under the plans that have been registered with the pension commission.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak? The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on the same point to that raised by the member for Kitchener, we support the bill as it is, but I am concerned to make certain that it is not the intention of the Treasurer to make this retroactive, because there are persons who have operated under the assumption—and unions who have operated under the assumption—that it was possible for an employee to withdraw his contributions prior to attaining the age of 45 years or the attainment of ten years of service.

I would like to have an assurance from the Minister. While we support the bill I would like to be certain that it is not made retroactive to affect the rights of persons who believed that they did have this right to withdraw until the fulfilment of the two conditions.

Mr. Speaker: Any other member?

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hastings brought this to my attention. He was representing the Dufferin retirement plan. I discussed this problem with the Minister personally, and I think this is Mr. Hastings' concern as to whether it is going to be retroactive. I would like his view on that too.

Mr. Speaker: Any other member? The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think, Mr. Speaker, that I can do no better to clarify the matter than to read a paragraph, found on page 3 of the 5th annual report of the Pension Commission of Ontario, that I tabled in this Legislature about a week ago. But in any case I will read it for the record.

During 1968 some employers filed with the commission, amendments which would permit members of the pension plans while remaining in employment, to withdraw their contributions from the plan, in which case, the employee would forego any entitlements that have accrued to him for service up to the date he withdrew from the plan.

The commission is prepared, since the Act is not retroactive in any way, to accept an amendment to a plan permitting withdrawal by the employee of contributions made under the plan for service prior to January 1, 1965, the effective date of the legislation, with corresponding loss of pension benefits for that period of service.

However, the commission cannot accept an amendment permitting the withdrawal of contributions made after the January 1 1965, while the employee remains in the employ of the employer.

Since this amendment contravenes the necessary implication of section 21 of the Act: that employees upon attaining the age of 45 years or the ten years of service will have established their entitlement to benefits for service after the January 1, 1965, as part of the benefits comprised in the deferred life annuity.

Now the reason, of course, for proposing the amendment that is before us for second reading today is simply, that while this was always the intent and the spirit of the legislation—and hon. members of the Legislature, who were in the House at the time the initial bill was dealt with, will recall that it was always the intention and spirit of the legislation that that be so—it turns out, Mr. Speaker, that there is some doubt about that particular section of the Act. The purpose of this amendment is to clarify it.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY TAX REDUCTION ACT, 1968

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I think the members of the House would support, with much more enthusiasm, An Act to amend The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968, that merely said that this Act is hereby repealed. I am just at a loss to understand why at this stage the government is trying to patch up something that it has said in its white paper is no good.

If it was any good why was it announced that it is going to abandon it a year from now. Why prolong the agony? Why spend another $150 million of the taxpayers' money that is going to serve no useful purpose? It has satisfied no one, it has caused grief, it has set up a new administrative machine which functions inefficiently.

The Minister, in an answer that was tabled to a question of mine a few days ago, admitted that there are some 4,500 complaints, most of which have not yet been processed; hopefully they would be processed within six weeks; hopefully they would be processed before the provisions of The Summary Convictions Act come to bear and stop convictions under the old Act. As you know, from December 31, Mr. Speaker, there can be no further convictions.

Interestingly enough, the Minister, in a note that he sent to me after I had asked him a question of whether or not justices of the peace had been instructed to refuse to accept complaints until they had been approved by the department—I hope the Attorney General is paying a little attention—the Minister said, no, there were no such instructions. But the chief justice of the peace in Ontario instructed all the people who work under him that that was to be the procedure.

This came as a great shock to me, Mr. Speaker. I just wonder what right the chief justice of the peace has to issue such instructions to the justices of the peace. And what right, that having been done, does The Department of Municipal Affairs have to join in this way of avoiding the law?

Now obviously this Act does not work; obviously the prosecution sections do not work; obviously there is great dissatisfaction. And what does the Minister do? He brings in this namby-pamby, apparently useless, series of small bookkeeping amendments to enact which his Treasurer says they are going to abandon. Just one more $150 million, just one more year of grief, and we are going to give it up anyway.

Why not be brave, Mr. Speaker? Why not withdraw this Act and bring in a simple repealing Act? Why not take that $150 million and use it to reduce the tax burden on the people of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker, I can see no point in these amendments. They are a little bit of house-keeping. They are still going to allow the Governor of Michigan—he used to be the Governor of Michigan, I think he has been taken into the United States Cabinet—to maintain his summer residence over here and get a tax benefit from the people of Ontario. I am sure he needs it very desperately. He would not be induced to keep his summer residence here unless he got this tax rebate from all the good citizens of the province of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The whole Grand Bend crowd.

Mr. Singer: Yes, they are worried about that. I am sure the people who live in government-assisted housing throughout the province of Ontario could make more use of assistance that could be made available out of this $150 million than the Governor of Michigan or the former Governor of Michigan.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, while there is nothing in this bill that moves us violently to oppose it, as an amendment, we say to the Minister as strongly as we can put this, that they made a serious mistake a year ago by bringing in these amendments which are minor in effect and serve no useful purpose. They are continuing that mistake for another year. They have admitted publicly that it was a mistake, so why not let it go once and for all? Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Minister through you, be brave and repeal the Act right now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, I find in the bill something of worth, unlike the member for Downsview. That is the sections which finally indicate recognition by this government that tenants, whatever their circumstances, ought to be treated equally, tenants in Ontario Housing Corporation units as well as tenants in privately-owned accommodation. The government found itself in one of the most ridiculous administrative positions that I think it has managed to fall into for some time in endeavouring, under section 8 of the prior bill, to exclude from receiving the rebate as many people as it possibly could who were tenants of its own Ontario Housing Corporation.

Back in December, 1968, during question period, when members were seeking information as to how the provisions of section 8 could be carried out in respect to tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation, the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) explained that tenants of full-recovery projects are paying a rental rate which is substantially less than the rent charged for comparable property in private ownership, and therefore the rebate is not applicable. The Minister said this on December 3, Mr. Speaker, at a time when no regulations had been drawn by either the Minister of Trade and Development, on behalf of the Ontario Housing Corporation, or the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Through the whole piece, from the time of the announcement that the residential property tax reduction would be made available to the citizens of this province but not to the tenants of the government's own housing, the government insisted that it knew which of its tenants would qualify for the rebate and which would not. Even though the Minister of Trade and Development, in answer to other questions, revealed that surveys were being undertaken to determine how many of Ontario Housing Corporation tenants were paying what could be considered a market rent or a rent which was the equivalent of that paid for similar private accommodation—the only means by which OHC tenants could qualify for the tax rebate.

The answers of the Minister of Trade and Development indicated that this would be a very, very small proportion of Ontario Housing Corporation tenants. In fact, when I asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs at a later date about the advertising of the rebate and the text of the pamphlet which his department had prepared for distribution to virtually every household in the province, the Minister said: "This is a negligible proposition of our population and we did not bother about it in the preparation of this material."

Mr. Speaker, when it finally became apparent that the government could not administer section 8 of the Act, they abandoned it. On January 2, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Trade and Development held a press conference in which they announced that finally, after struggling through this endeavour to establish the regulation based on the survey which, I assume, has not succeeded in establishing comparable market rents or comparable rents in private accommodation to those paid by tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation, with great fanfare they announced their beneficence to these tenants—that finally they would get the rebate.

Then what did we find? We found the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) following through with a claim for over-payment against the very large number of tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation who thought at last they were going to enjoy, along with tenants in private accommodation, the same reduction in shelter costs.

But it was not to be so for that period of time until we had from the Minister of Municipal Affairs an opinion last week or the week before that he did not view the property tax rebate as income, as taxable income. In the light of that, his colleague recently announced that The Department of Social and Family Services would cease their efforts to collect over-payments on account of the rebate being paid to families on social assistance, many of whom are occupants of Ontario Housing Corporation.

So we have, I hope at this point, Mr. Speaker, nailed down the entitlement of all these people, the tenants of the Ontario Housing Corporation, those of them who are on assistance from the family benefits branch or on disability pensions of The Department of Social and Family Services, and those tenants, as well, who are in private accommodation. That leaves us with only one group, which I would like to speak to the Minister about—those senior citizens occupying units in municipal or Ontario Housing Corporation projects where, I believe, an amount of $25 per unit has been paid to the municipality in lieu of full payment of taxes. I want to ask the Minister if, in this bill, the senior citizens occupying the senior citizen units will be afforded the same entitlement to the rebate as those occupying family units of the Ontario Housing Corporation or its local authorities where their rents are on a full-recovery basis or on a rent geared to income scale.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They were separately assessed.

Mr. Peacock:—and where the housing corporation pays the equivalent of the full taxes that the city would levy on those properties were they in private hands.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The answer is yes, if they were separately assessed.

Mr. Peacock: If the senior citizens' units are separately assessed, which proportion of the rebate will be paid? The full amount for that particular part of the city, which in Windsor's case is $65.30, or the $25 portion which is the amount paid to the municipality in lieu of taxes?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: These are the ones that are fixed at $25?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister would make note of that, so that we can conclude this bill.

Mr. Peacock: Fine. That was my last point, Mr. Speaker—to raise that question with him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, the principle of this bill—An Act to amend The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968—of course is to correct some of the inequities that existed in the original Act, I would like to speak first to two of these specifically that had to do with tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation, and also tenants of properties held by the Crown in the right of Canada, tenants of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

These people had been paying full rents for their properties. The Crown was making payments equal to property tax to the municipalities, and due to the ambiguities of the original Act some municipalities refunded to CMHC the portions of the property tax relating to these CMHC apartment buildings.

My reading of this amendment does not include legislation to return to these people their rebate for the year 1968. I would hope the Minister would correct me if I am wrong on that. I think this amendment takes care of the legislation necessary to make it legal for Ontario Housing Corporation to get their rebate back, but I do not think it covers those people who are resident of Crown property in the right of Canada—CMHC—for the year 1968, so if the Minister would comment on that.

Further, the principle relates to the reduction of rebate so that only 50 per cent would be the maximum amount. I think that principle should be enlarged so that no one could collect taxes on a second property.

The Minister will probably say that this is impossible to enforce. Well, OMSIP does not let you collect from another insurance company if they make payments, and I do not think this bill should permit rebates to be collected on more than one residence in the province of Ontario.

I would welcome the Minister's comments on the first part of my presentation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this bill before the Minister? The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, let me answer just a couple of the questions which have been put to me first.

The people who were referred to by the member for Windsor West will receive the full reduction. We are ascertaining the actual amount for Windsor and we will get that for you. I do not have it here just at the moment.

If the hon. member for Waterloo North refers to subsection 2 of section 6 of the bill he will find that this looks after it in that it is deemed to come into effect on June 13, 1968, which is the date the original bill was passed. I think that looks after his problem.

I know that the hon. member for Downsview would want to be brought up to date on his query of several weeks ago.

Mr. Singer: Yes, sir, if the information is changed, give us the latest.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, you would want the up-to-date information. I think when we reported to you the last time—which was perhaps at the end of February—we had received complaints from some 4,500 people. That has now grown into 4,700 in the last three weeks. Complaints processed and the files closed amount to 2,900, so there is a balance in process of 1,800.

We would hope that these would be finalized so far as we are concerned by the end of the month, by the end of April.

With respect to those 1,800 which are hanging fire, all landlords have been contacted at least once and a letter has gone to the tenants asking whether they have received their entitlement, and are they prepared to swear out an information. So there are only 1,800 which we are dealing with at the present time.

We imagine that a good proportion of these will be settled, or have perhaps been settled already, and we are not aware of it. So I would draw to the member's attention that we have received some 4,700 complaints which I think represent something in the neighbourhood of one-tenth of one per cent, which is not very substantial.

Mr. Singer: It is substantial to the people who have to complain.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is correct, but I think we have to try to keep into perspective—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): That is closer to one per cent than one-tenth of one per cent.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The one-tenth of one per cent refers to the people. I am sorry, I have misled the member. If he asked me for an estimate of what number will finally end up in court, our estimate now would be in the neighbourhood of about 500, which would be one-tenth of one per cent of all the tenanted properties.

Mr. Singer: Of the 4,700 that is one per cent.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right. I am sorry I meant 500—4,700 of which perhaps 500 may end up in court.

I think the reasons for these amendments have been explained and I do not propose to deal with the principle of last year's bill which the hon. member for Downsview started to deal with. The purpose of continuing the bill is the same as it was last year and that is—

Mr. Singer: What was the purpose of abandoning it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is no intention, if the hon. member will bear with me. The purpose of last year's legislation was to reduce the property taxes and this is precisely what was done. I think I gave members of the House a sampling of municipalities across the province last year. Houses in many municipalities are assessed at about $4,000—that is the average assessment—but taking the—

Mr. Sargent: The government overtaxed and they are giving them their own money back.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But taking the average assessment in all these municipalities, members will find that with one or two exceptions on the average house the net taxes were actually reduced in 1958. This was the purpose of the bill—to reduce the burden of property taxation, and to do it in a way which got at the regressivity of the tax system. This was done, and there is no intention of discarding this particular method of reducing that regressivity, or of discarding this method of reducing property taxes until a better way is available for us to do it. Such a way was not available last year.

I think on my remarks on second reading I indicated last year that if there had been a vehicle of personal income tax available to us then—we had some control over the forms—we could do many things as the Treasurer has pointed out several times since.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister will permit a question?

Does the statement he just made imply that he looked into the possibility of having this done by the federal collection agency on the basis of the federal-provincial tax collection agreement, and they said it could not be done?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They said they were not prepared to do it. In any kind of deductions, as I understand it, they want a considerable amount of warning; of leave time to prepare for them and—

Mr. Nixon: They could have done it this year if the government had asked them to do it last year?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This was not available to us last year and I doubt whether it would have been available this year.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I disagree with that. It would be available this year.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But through our own vehicle we will be able to do this.

Mr. Singer: Well, what warning is enough warning?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think the member would have to ask the people who—

Mr. Singer: Surely the Minister asked them?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —who make the agreements, that specific question. I have taken it that it would not be possible through the federal legislation.

Mr. Nixon: But the government did not ask that specific question—how much warning they needed so that they could have done it this year?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: If I asked it, I have not got it available for the member now.

Mr. Singer: It is rather vital, so the Minister does not know.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that this has reduced the burden of real estate taxes which it was set out to do. I think the amendments this year clarify certain matters and I just cannot help but feel, Mr. Speaker, this year, as I did last year, that the crabbing which comes from opposite is generated by the fact that we kept an election promise, as we always do.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister a point of clarification on my question? The Minister answered my question by referring to subsection 2 or clause 2, stating that this would come into effect.

Now, that section does not cover Crown property in the right of Canada. Crown property in right of Canada is covered under the next section which did not come into effect until January 1, 1969. So in effect then, people of CMHC housing of last year will not receive their rebate. This was my point and I do not think you answered me.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will check that.

Mr. Good: Would he please?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister answer a question for me?

Mr. Speaker: If it is a point of clarification arising out of the Minister's statement.

Mr. Sargent: Yes it is.

Am I to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the method of operation this year will be the same as last year insofar as the distribution of the moneys?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister advise or clarify me on this point. In view of the costly experiment that is—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order now. He asked a question, he received an answer. He is now making a statement.

Mr. Sargent: I did not gain an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Sargent: Well, what are we here for, just to hear you give "out of order" rulings and—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. He will take his seat. If he wishes to rise to a point of order later he may do so.

Mr. Sargent: I rise on a point of order now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will resume his seat while Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Sargent: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to find out how he is going to do it this year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize that this is a debate on the principles and not on how things are to be done. The hon. member—

Mr. Sargent: Right. He said he would answer a question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have the opportunity to find it out when this is dealt with in committee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO HERITAGE FOUNDATION ACT, 1967

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information) moves second reading of Bill 91, An Act to amend The Ontario Heritage Foundation Act, 1967.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question in regard to this bill.

As I understand it there were some $500,000, I believe, initially deposited or credited to the Ontario Heritage Foundation. Is this true? And $50,000 of that was put in the current account for use during last year. The intent is that we will operate off the interest on the $450,000. Now, I want to ask the Minister in all fairness, how much does he expect he will be able to purchase in the way of recreational land or land of scenic interest or objects of scenic interest, with the interest on $450,000? It seems to me, as I look at it, that nothing of any consequence could possibly be purchased with the amount of money that you will get in interest on a yearly basis. I would like the Minister to clarify that for me, if he would.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other comments by members with respect to this? The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister a question on this particular bill.

Does this give the Minister any opportunity to take steps which will allow the provincial government to be responsible for the preservation of historical sites, of monuments and particularly, of buildings? It seems to me that these are being very quickly destroyed across the province and I understand that at the present time it is up to the municipality to put through a bylaw in order to maintain or preserve a building in that particular area.

This is of particular importance to my area where I have seen a number of buildings, 75 and 100 years old, disappear in the last two or three years. I think this bill is a most important piece of legislation if we can indeed somehow, preserve the very few pieces of architecture of a pre-Confederation period that are left in this province. I think this would be one of the most important steps that the Minister could take to preserve the history of this jurisdiction.

But I am wondering to what extent there is some kind of power to stop the destruction of buildings of historical interest, particularly when these buildings become financially significant. And, of course, we are going through a period now where really, no building which was built 75 or 100 years ago is really in a presentable state for present use, as the Minister well knows. The plumbing is gone and all the insides of the building have been destroyed; the company or the individual who owns the building wants to unload it, and naturally he wants to get his price. In any case, he has no interest in history whatsoever. I am just wondering to what extent this bill will have the teeth to actually take part in the preservation of the history of this province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has the floor if no member wishes to speak.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question: it is not the intention of the foundation to acquire land for recreational use. I think, when I answered a question the other day in the House from the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside (Mr. Burr), I indicated that the amendment that is put forward in this bill is to make it clear that the foundation can accept gifts which might be in this category. I think I said at that time, that any land being acquired for recreational purposes would be presumably acquired by The Department of Public Works or The Department of Lands and Forests who operate the parks system in the province. So briefly, I would simply answer the hon. member that the $450,000 of capital funds or the interest from it, would not—no matter what the amount would be—be used by the foundation to acquire lands for recreational use. The purpose of this is to make it clear to those who may be donating land and buildings to the province—say, in the case, for instance, of the Jalna House, to which is added some five acres of land that the land not required for setting the building on, can be accepted by the foundation. I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. Deans: Could I just ask a question for clarification?

In the event that someone wanted the Ontario Heritage Foundation to take over a piece of land, to purchase it in other words, what would they have to do? You would not do the purchasing. Would you look the land over, determine whether or not it was suitable and then recommend to The Department of Lands and Forests or some other department that they ought to purchase it? Would this be the procedure? I am trying to find out how you would go about getting a piece under the jurisdiction of Ontario Heritage Foundation, that was not offered free and gratis.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If someone approached the foundation, Mr. Speaker, with the enquiry as to whether the foundation would purchase land of only recreational or—

Mr. Deans: Historical and recreational!

Hon. Mr. Auld: If it were recreational the foundation would, I think, say, "We are not interested." If it is of an historical nature then the foundation might be interested. If it was a question of whether it were entirely recreational or partly recreational and partly historical, if it was a question in the prospective donor's mind, that it might be considered recreational, he would still with this amendment, be able to make the gift to the foundation.

Is there any statutory provision in the province to prevent the destruction of historical buildings? Presently there is none. There was an attempt, I believe, by the city of Kingston some years ago, by bylaw under The Planning Act to provide waiting periods. This was found to be outside the provisions of The Planning Act. The foundation are discussing with the Municipal Affairs people at the present time, the possibility of some amendment to The Municipal Act at least to provide a waiting period so that the people who might be interested in preserving such a building would have an opportunity to act. But the correct answer to the hon. member's question is that at the present time there is no statutory authority to prevent the destruction of buildings.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask a question, Mr. Speaker, to clarify what the Minister has just said. Is there any way by which this Act could be beholden upon people who own buildings from 75 to 100 years old, simply to inform this foundation, so that you might say, there would be an almost automatic hold put on just by the fact that a period had to elapse whereby the foundation was informed. I say this with some passion, because, just in the last few weeks, one of the finest buildings in eastern Ontario was destroyed, almost overnight; and we have lost, once again, another monument to the—

Mr. Nixon: What was that?

Mr. Pitman: It was a building in Peterborough, which was actually in the hands of a credit union, and this building on Brock Street was regarded as really a fine piece of architecture.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has been given the floor to ask a question of clarification. He is now expanding into a statement in respect to matters which I do not think are proper at this time.

Mr. Pitman: Although I must say that the leader of the Opposition was the reason for my digression, I apologize. May I just simply ask the question, is there any way by which this foundation could act in the kind of an operation to receive information, even though it had no actual legal right either to make any suggestions or advice, or to take action to put any legal hold on that structure?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, the foundation already has done this on a number of occasions. I would hope, as the years go by and the work of the foundation becomes better known around the province, that this will happen more often. I have looked in my file today; I thought that I had with me a letter in connection with a home in Perth, the owner of which is concerned about its eventual demise, and who is proposing to give it to the foundation on her passing, so that she would have life tenancy. And this is the case in several other proposals and submissions that have been made to the foundation. It is our hope that this will happen more often.

Mr. Sargent: Could the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has not taken part in this debate and he is not entitled to ask a question now. As a matter of fact, there should be no questions after the Minister's reply to the others or we might just as well be in the committee of the whole House or standing committee. From now on, therefore, the Minister's statement—unless I am otherwise directed by the House—when the Minister has made his closing statement, that will be the end of the debate on the second reading of bills. That was the procedure that we were following; it worked very well except that there were some reasonably good questions asked by members who had participated in the debate earlier and I thought they were entitled to have clarification.

Mr. Sargent: This was going to be a good one, too.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure, coming from the hon. member. But as he had not participated in the debate he could not ask for clarification of any questions he had asked. If the hon. member had wished to get in on this procedure, he should have engaged in the original debate. Then he would have been in the same position as the other hon. members.

THE ST. LAWRENCE PARKS COMMISSION ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moves second reading of Bill 99, An Act to amend The St. Lawrence Parks Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HOMES FOR SPECIAL CARE ACT, 1964

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): moves second reading of Bill 93, An Act to amend The Homes for Special Care Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PHARMACY ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill 94, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE NURSING HOMES ACT, 1966

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill 95, An Act to amend The Nursing Homes Act, 1966.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question with regard to the first section of this bill, the principle.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. We are getting into the same situation as last time. I would be the last one to stand in the way of questions or debate of any sort, but you know what happens every time that you permit this to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader is quite correct, and it is a fact that first of all, clause-by-clause consideration of the bill is not appropriate at this stage. Secondly, the hon. member is presumably not directing himself to a question of principle. Now, if the hon. member has a matter of principle arising out of that section, he should deal with it as such and not as a clause-by-clause consideration. The hon. member for Wentworth now has the floor to engage in this debate on principle only.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this particular bill there appears to be at least two principles in the three sections, and I want to direct myself to the principle of the first section. The principle of this section says that the Minister can order the relocation of residents of nursing homes that are presently unlicensed. What I want to suggest to the Minister is that until such time as he goes ahead with a programme of providing suitable nursing home accommodation in this province, we will not have any place to put these people. What I ask the Minister, in this particular instance, is whether or not this is an indication that the Minister is now prepared to initiate a clear-cut, aggressive programme of building nursing homes in order to facilitate those people who, out of necessity, will be moved from the nursing homes that are presently unlicensed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this bill?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few brief comments on Bill 95. The department is presently engaged in upgrading the standards of nursing homes throughout the Province of Ontario, as set out under The Nursing Homes Act of 1966. As I understand it, the department is going to pursue this policy and will pursue it until all nursing homes in the province meet the standards as set out under that Act, as I mentioned before. I believe the nursing homes in the province at the moment are given a period of grace in which to do this. They are notified of the areas where they have to make changes in order to come up to the standards set out in The Nursing Homes Act. Then they have to indicate whether they are, in fact, willing and prepared to make that type of expenditure. If they are not willing and prepared to make it, their licence is forfeited and they give up all right to take in people under a nursing home situation.

The amendment, as I understand it, is—and I would like clarification on this, Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly sure what is meant here—means that anyone who has previously been in a nursing home—will not be allowed to stay in that nursing home if the home happens to be unlicensed. Or does it simply mean that anyone who does stay in such a nursing home, that happens to be unlicensed, is not eligible for any government assistance of any type? I would like clarification on that point.

The other point that I would like to raise with the Minister is, it says that the Minister shall assist in finding appropriate alternative accommodation. I am wondering in what way? Is this to be financial assistance, or is this to be by way of pointing out to the patient that there are certain vacancies in other nursing homes which happen to be licensed under the Act? I would like to have clarification on those points, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder if I might point out the fact that the explanatory notes in this bill do not apply as they are supposed. It points out, in explanatory note section 2, a general penalty is provided when, in actual fact, this is related to section 1, clause 11(a). It points out that section 3, the proposed amendment authorizes regulations to be made, when in actual fact this appears to apply to section 2. I wonder if this bill is properly drawn up?

Mr. Speaker: I would suppose the hon. Minister might wish to comment on that when he replies to the other questions which have been asked.

Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this before the Minister? The hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wentworth points up the fact that in his view there are not enough nursing homes. I am pleased to advise him that there is a tremendously great upsurge of interest in the provision of high-quality nursing homes, homes that are being provided specifically for this purpose—architecturally provided with a view to serving the function of nursing homes. This is a very interesting programme that is going on in the province. We have already had three very large groups of people from outside the province, representative of substantial financial resources, and all expressed most active interest in this. I do not think we need to worry now so much about the lack of good accommodation.

But it would be unfair to leave the impression that there is a likelihood of many of the homes that are now in operation losing their licence because they are not seeking to come up to standards. There has been a very great response to the programme that we originated two years ago. Some of the homes are just so situated and so constructed that they cannot come up to the standard necessary. In those cases many of these people are willing to relinquish or are acceptive of the fact that they cannot get a nursing home licence, but will look after people who do not need the standard of accommodation, or standard of care, or the standard of protection necessary in the case of the nursing home patient.

I am sure the hon. members would realize that the nursing home patient, not able to move usually of their own volition, we have to think of a higher standard of safety than we would in the case of people more able to move about on their own.

Mr. Gaunt: Would the alternative be the residential home?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They can be a residential home and, of course, they are outside of the scope of The Nursing Homes Act.

11(a); I would say, with respect, sir, that I am quite confident the bill is well drawn. It was drawn by good lawyers. Far be it from me to criticize a sister profession, but I am sure the legislative counsel—

Mr. Nixon: The Minister should get a good lawyer!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We have them, we have a lot of them. But this is a penalty clause, and I have to say, as members will remember when the bill came in, I had quite a discussion with one hon. member of the Opposition who pointed out to me that we had not provided a general penalty clause. I was assured then that we did not need it. Now I realize we do need it and here it is. But this has not strict reference to the first clause to which the hon. member referred it.

In the case of the argument brought up, or the points brought up by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, this is, of course, part of our programme of upgrading homes. Some of the homes cannot possibly achieve licences, they cannot meet the standards. Either by their own desire, or they refuse to accept the standards and, therefore, reject licensing. Or we have at some time to enforce the law and at some point will say: "Now, we have given you every opportunity and long enough time, you are not making progress, so you cannot be given a licence."

We have to do this in the case of a few homes, but relatively few. It is part of our programme in upgrading since the provincial licensing came in and this was, of course, one of the important reasons for the licensing programme coming in. As I have already pointed out, those homes that cannot achieve the standards can become boarding homes or residential-care facilities.

Now, if one had been in a home that either loses its licence or accepts the fact that it cannot reach the standards, and that person insists on remaining there, well, of course, we cannot bodily remove him. But there is no responsibility under the law any longer. We point out quite clearly that this is not a licensed boarding home, and the operator cannot hold himself or herself out as a licensed nursing home operator.

If the patients are eligible for assistance in any measure, or through any department of government then, of course, they cannot stay there and we would have to move them or withdraw the support.

What does it mean: "The Minister shall assist"? If they are eligible for financial assistance, of course, this is automatic, but it actually means that we shall point out to them where other accommodation is necessary, and we shall do all in our power to assist them in being removed to that accommodation, unless they themselves decree otherwise.

Mr. Gaunt: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: Having advised the House that we would return to the proper way of dealing with these matters, and that once the Minister had spoken the debate would be ended, I will rule the hon. member out of order. I suggest he might get his answer in committee or otherwise.

Mr. Deans: Might I ask you, sir, for a ruling on whether or not the explanatory notes apply?

Mr. Speaker: I beg your pardon, I should have advised the hon. member that the Clerk, under whose jurisdiction these matters of printing come, advises me that there is an error in the numbering of the explanatory notes. But since they do not form part of the bill, they do not affect the bill itself. I beg the hon. member's pardon, the Clerk did give me that information and I neglected to pass it along.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PESTICIDES ACT, 1957

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend The Pesticides Act, 1957.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this bill briefly. It appears to be relatively inconsequential, just dealing with some strengthening of the Act in terms of coping with termites, a problem that is of great magnitude in some parts of the Metropolitan area.

Section 2 is the one that I would like to address by remarks to at the moment. It is indicated that no member of the board, or officer of the board, is personally liable for anything done by him in good faith, purportedly done under the authority of this Act or its regulations.

Now, this raises the whole question as to exactly what this government is doing. I have raised in the last couple of weeks with the Minister, in questions before the orders of the day, what is happening to the government advisory committee on pesticides. In the Minister's reply it was quite clear that a number of people had resigned from the committee partly because of change of position, partly because of that euphemism "bad health" and partly—most important of all—because the chairman was in conflict with the department.

I think the public is entitled to know why. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it raises the whole purpose of this committee; what its public responsibilities are and to what extent it needs the protection of immunity in this way. I am not suggesting they should not be granted this immunity if there is any danger, but the Minister has not explained it.

I happened to have the privilege a week or two ago of attending a meeting of the conservation council of the province of Ontario, and I listened to Dr. D. A. Chant of the department of zoology at the University of Toronto make some rather scathing remarks with regard to the—I am going to use this term and indicate its source in a moment—the reckless irresponsibility of government in terms of authorizing the use of pesticides.

This would apply, in part, at the federal level where it comes under the food and drug division for authorization of the marketing of a new product, and in part at the provincial level in terms of the licensing of the use of these pesticides.

His contention as an expert in the field is that there is at best most cursory and fragmented kinds of research work done on the basis of which these rather fateful decisions are made. We really have no idea as to what the ultimate effect is going to be on plant life or animal life or, indeed, human life.

Today issue of the Globe and Mail carries in the last column of the letters to the editor, a letter from a gentleman in Lockeport, Nova Scotia, in vigorous protest at the distribution in Nova Scotia of a publication which emerges in the province of Ontario on vegetable production recommendations.

He lists two or three of the pesticides for which instructions as to their use are contained in this official publication of the province of Ontario. He points out, to my mind rather conclusively, that the conclusions reached are that it is rather dangerous for poultry or for animals and, therefore, he asks a rather pertinent question: "Why is it being authorized for use on foods that are going to get into the supermarkets of the nation and be consumed by humans?"

He concludes:

I suggest to your readers that both the government and the chemical manufacturing industry have adopted an attitude of reckless irresponsibility in connection with the use of agricultural pesticides.

My question to the Minister in speaking to the principle of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is what exactly are the responsibilities of this committee, that they require this degree of immunity set forth in section 2? What exactly is the jurisdiction within which this committee operates? How valid are the accusations or the comments of experts like Doctor Chant, this citizen of Lockeport, Nova Scotia, who is obviously somewhat familiar with pesticides? How valid are the contentions that governments, both provincial and federal, are acting with reckless irresponsibility?

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak to the bill before the hon. Minister replies?

The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from York South has raised some very interesting points which, important though they are, I really do not believe belong within the principle of this bill. I think they are matters which are very worthy of further discussion and I sincerely hope and believe that there will be adequate opportunity to discuss them at length. However, the responsibility of the board, its main responsibility, as laid out in the Act, is to examine applicants for licences and recommend the issuance, the refusal or the revocation of those. I am sure my hon. friend would realize, sir, that there would be occasions when the board could be possibly in a difficult situation and might be subject to suit, justifiable or otherwise. It is really for this reason that it is believed, that they themselves believe, that they need protection, which I think is granted under many of the Acts of similar nature. This is really the reason for it. This is the main function as I answered the hon. member when he put the question a little while ago. Other things may be referred to them, but so far, we have not found it necessary to refer those things.

The staff of the department are well skilled in this field. There is no question in my mind that the opinions and experiences of a man like Professor Chant cannot possibly be brushed lightly aside. He is a man of sound scientific background and high reputation in the scientific world. Whether we have had occasion to use the services of Professor Chant or not, I really could not tell the hon. member, but I would point out, sir, that I certainly hope there will be very adequate opportunity for us to discuss this at some length at another time.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill 97, An Act respecting The Department of Health.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this bill gives the Minister pretty wide powers insofar as direction of funds under clause 6 is concerned and I think my remarks, very briefly—watching the clock—are, in effect, that we have been aware across this province, across Canada in fact, of the growing lack of physical fitness of our people here. I think it would come under The Department of Health that we have a growing awareness of the need for moneys controlled by the Minister for a physical fitness programme for Ontario citizens insofar as the youth of our nation is concerned. We have been watching the performance of Canadians, Mr. Speaker, in the various olympias, olympics, the Pan-Am games, and more recently, we are ashamed of the performance of Canadian hockey teams in world hockey tournaments with the Russians. Almost any nation knocking us off at will. I think somewhere along the line there is a need for an awareness on the part of this government to launch a physical fitness programme which can be available under clause 6.

An hon. member: Adjourn the debate.

Mr. Peacock: Let them win another game.

Mr. Sargent: I do not want to adjourn. This is very important.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that we have reached the hour for the private members' discussion.

Mr. Sargent moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 25, by Mr. Ferrier:

RESOLUTION: That this House strongly asserts that corporations exploiting mineral resources of this province should process them to the maximum degree possible in Ontario, and that particularly in the case of Texas Gulf Sulphur, smelting facilities should be established in the Porcupine community to provide the vital economic lift needed to compensate for the gradual phasing out of the gold mining industry.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I move resolution No. 25, standing in my name. Mr. Speaker, the people of northern Ontario are becoming increasingly distressed and angered at the continuing exploitation of the north for the benefit of others.

For years we have watched the ore trains carrying away the ores and concentrates of the north to be processed in the south, in the United States or some other foreign country. Our sweat and labour have been used to provide jobs, wealth and a full range of municipal services for others while we struggle valiantly to keep from falling behind.

We resent bitterly, the fact that our part of the province has not kept pace with the expansion and growth of most of the other areas of the province. We believe that the time is long overdue for this Tory Ontario government to start to do something about development of the north for the benefit of northerners, rather than pay lip service to this concept, as is presently the case.

It is about time that this government ceased to be fully beholden to the mining corporations and began to think of the citizens of the north rather than the best way to protect maximum profit for the mining empires, most of which are American owned.

I contend that the decisions affecting any part of this province must be made by the elected representatives of the people and not in some board room in New York or some other part of the United States. If representative democracy is to have any content we must be maîtres-chez-nous. Because successive governments at Ottawa and here, at Queen's Park, have encouraged a "hands-off, come and do what you wish" attitude with American companies that operate in Canada and Ontario, it is no wonder that we no longer own or control large segments of our economy.

American policies largely control American subsidiaries in their business and trade practices here, and we are becoming less and less maîtres-chez-nous. Decisions that have wide ranging implications for an entire region of the province have been made heretofore without much participation or opposition of the governments of the day. Just take a look at the second natural gas pipeline circumstance of two years ago and you will know what I mean.

At this moment, the entire future and development of northeastern Ontario hinges on the location of the smelter for Texas Gulf ores. I contend that this government, in their intensive negotiations with Texas Gulf Sulphur, must unequivocally, take the stand that one smelter, preferably the zinc smelter, must be built in the Porcupine. The government has a responsibility to, and for, the people and must say to this American company—whose stock value has more than tripled since the discovery of the Kidd Creek ore body northeast of Timmins—"The greatest profit for your American stockholders is not the overriding factor in the location of your smelter. You are mining ore that belongs to the people of Ontario and you are mining this ore in Ontario, in northeastern Ontario, and the needs of that section of the province, along with the needs of the people as a whole, dictate that you must build there."

So, the question of provincial autonomy, in the face of foreign-owned and operated corporations, is one of the issues that is at stake in the Texas Gulf smelter issue.

Last summer members of the Economic Council of Ontario toured the province. In due course they paid a visit to the Porcupine. What do you think they were shown? Of course, the Texas Gulf mine site and concentrator. From this they probably concluded that everything was going strong in our area. It is a strange thing, Mr. Speaker, that when outside dignitaries and officials tour an area, they are only shown the best things of that area, so that they may come to the erroneous conclusion that everything is rosy there.

This is the impression the government tried to foster in our tour of northwestern Ontario last fall in showing us the good parts but isolating us from the realities and problems that confront people and which the government has done little to remedy. For instance, one would have thought that we would have been shown at least one Indian reserve and had a chance to speak to the Indians to find out from them how they felt, what they wanted and what they thought we should do.

But, no, we did not have such a trip included in our itinerary.

So it was with the Economic Council of Ontario in their visit to our community. A few months before their visit, the Hollinger gold mine ceased operations, as well as the Preston East Dome. As an aside, I may say that at its peak the Hollinger had employed over 2,000 men, and latterly between 600 and 800 employees. The Preston East Dome employed about 130. Now, why was not the economic council taken to one of these mines or to one of the other four gold mines that have closed in the last four years, the Broulan Reef or the Delnite or Paymaster or Kenilworth mines? They would not see a booming economy or a particularly envious future from visits to these mines.

The closing of gold mines because of a depletion of ore or because the grade of the ore is so poor that it is uneconomical to mine it at the present fixed price of gold, has meant a great deal of uncertainty and anxiety for the residents of my riding. Many of our able-bodied men for the last few years have been forced to move away from the Porcupine, not because they wanted to leave our area—by choice they enjoy the north and the special opportunities of outdoor life it affords and the other amenities of northern life—but because they were forced to look elsewhere for gainful employment. This was why they had to move. Others hesitated, hoping for a smelter announcement. But because of the inordinate delay in its coming they have reluctantly moved away so we have lost many good citizens of our area.

Unemployment has remained high in our area because of a lack of job opportunities. The Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) bemoans the lack of skilled miners in the province but I can assure him through you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the case in Timmins. Moreover, the number of people on welfare in our district is extremely high and is a subject of concern for community officials. In fact, the costs of welfare for the Cochrane district welfare board have risen to the point where they bear no relationship to the projection originally made by provincial representatives; so that the various municipalities are considering dissolving the welfare board on a district basis. The economy of no area is booming when it has high unemployment and a high incidence of welfare.

Because of the uncertainty that exists in the Porcupine, businessmen hesitate to make needed alterations or expansions to their businesses, as the risk is too great. While some businesses are doing well, a number of small businesses have had to close, and others are just holding their own. People who own property or businesses are watching for the announcement of the smelter location with a good deal of concern because if the smelter is built in the Porcupine, the assessed value of their properties will remain constant or increase, whereas if the smelter is not built in the Porcupine, the assessment is bound to drop drastically.

Our community has not experienced a vast new building of homes in the suburbs as many of those in the south have. We do not have any high-rise or medium-rise apartment buildings in Timmins; we have mighty few new homes in comparison with others. In addition, local municipal councils which have been hamstrung for years because of very inadequate mining revenue payments, in lieu of direct taxation of mines, are faced with the demands for greater services, adequate paved streets, additional facilities and so on. Yet they are reluctant to commit themselves to any long-term high-price projects because, if the smelter is not located in the Porcupine, the assessment and population are both likely to dwindle and they do not want to be left with a very, very high debenture debt. So, because of the tax policy of this government, and the delay in the Texas Gulf smelter announcement, the councils are holding back in their long-term, but required projects.

There is another argument associated with the existing economic condition of our area that has a certain compulsion, I believe, on Texas Gulf to build at least one smelter in the Timmins area, and that is that Texas Gulf has been fortunate to find their ore body and develop their mining operations nearby an existing and developed community. If Texas Gulf has found this ore body out in the middle of nowhere and had started to develop it from scratch they would have had to spend a great deal of money to provide homes for their employees as well as to develop the required services, but they are spared these expenses.

So that it is clear to me that they have a moral obligation to the communities in which their employees live and work. It was the gold miners and those who serviced them who pioneered the Porcupine mining camp and who, over the years, sacrificed and struggled to provide good communities with the best services and facilities—educational, hospital and such—that they could afford, to meet their needs and those of their children. Surely their efforts must not go for naught. Surely Texas Gulf has an extra-special obligation to the communities of the Porcupine camp. This is another reason why Texas Gulf and this government must give preference to our area as far as the smelter location is concerned.

By and large, northern Ontario is dependent on three basic industries for its livelihood and survival—mining, forestry and tourism. We realize that our future is tied to these industries, even though we hope to attract other secondary industries into our region. But even these, no doubt, will bear some relationship to one of the three basic industries. If we are to stabilize our economic base, and make it possible to attract secondary industry, we need in northeastern Ontario a processing plant such as a smelter and refinery for the Texas Gulf ore, and preferably a zinc smelter. This smelter not only will provide decent wage levels for a greater number of people during the construction stage, and when the smelter is in operation, but it will make it possible and sensible for secondary manufacturing to locate near our area, close to the supply of the finished raw material. This could lead to a huge industrial complex in the northeast, so that we can again experience, prosperity, expansion and growth in a fashion not yet envisaged.

Our present businesses engaged in services and such, will be strengthened and can go ahead with plans for expansion and diversification. There will be greater educational opportunity for our children and the medical services can be more widely developed. Our young people will not be so prone to move away and not return, as they now do, since there will be sufficient opportunities and challenges to keep them in the north. This will also mean that the badly needed leadership the north requires will be found in increasing numbers. Our unemployment problem will be greatly reduced as well as the number of welfare recipients.

This may sound like wishful thinking and dreaming, Mr. Speaker, but I submit this dream can become reality if Texas Gulf, on their own volition, or by government direction, build at least one of their smelters in the Porcupine area.

There cannot be much content to all this government's talk of regional development if, when presented with such a splendid opportunity to develop northeastern Ontario by means of a smelter in the Timmins area, this is not seized upon and put into concrete form. I therefore challenge this government to take whatever action is necessary, legislative or otherwise, to ensure that a least one smelter is built in our area.

Some people are somewhat critical of this position that I and a great many other members of my riding, are taking. They say that you must not speak too strongly to Texas Gulf Sulphur because it might offend them and they might back off. My reply, Mr. Speaker, is that we shall never get anywhere by bowing and scraping. We must inform this and every other American firm that operates in this province that they do so on our terms and under our rules, and not with a free hand to do as they see fit. They have a responsibility to the province and the local areas and they must be prepared to accept it. We must remember that the ore body that Texas Gulf has is at least a $2 billion ore body and the profits realizable through the mining and processing of this ore are enormous.

This company, with such wealth in their possession, can and should be directed by this government if they had sufficient backbone. The time has come for us to be maitres chez nous in this province. We must process as much of our minerals in this province and generate the wealth that can be ours rather than let it go to somebody else. We must stop the rape of the north because we are not enjoying the ordeal one bit.

In conclusion, I wish to review the government's handling of the issue as I see it. When the smelter issue began to come alive we were told that the government had appointed a Cabinet committee consisting, I believe, of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the then Ministers of Mines and Municipal Affairs.

In Timmins, it became obvious as time went on that this was another one of those committees that did nothing but was there for publicity purposes only. We were not told what stand the government was taking as to the location of the Texas Gulf smelters, whether they would take action to force it in the Porcupine area or not. It seems as though the government was dangling this carrot of a possible smelter before us, month after month.

Everyone expected that a couple of days before the election, the former Minister of Municipal Affairs would announce that a smelter was to be built. You can imagine the consternation, Mr. Speaker, when the Saturday Globe and Mail, prior to the election reported an aside of the Premier's in Kirkland Lake that it was quite possible the smelter would be built somewhere down there rather than in Timmins. It was a sight to behold as the former member for Cochrane South had to apologetically try to explain away the statements of the Premier which, he claimed, were misunderstood. One wonders, with the Premier for a friend, if he needed any enemies.

Last July in his estimates, the Minister of Mines came out with the stand that the copper smelter should go to Timmins, while the zinc smelter could go anywhere in Ontario. This was a break-through at the time and we lauded it, but on further study it is seen that the amount of copper in the ore may not warrant a copper smelter and the necessity of the zinc smelter has become the main area of concern. Therefore, our battle is primarily for the zinc smelter now, although we shall rest content with one guaranteed smelter.

We were informed that Texas Gulf would make their feasibility studies available to the government in early January, 1969, and then they had to postpone it for a few months, a further delay to add insult to injury. We know that the zinc smelter feasibility study is completed and negotiations are going on as to its location. I therefore say to this government: Stop dangling the carrot before the people of my riding; give it to us, and tell Texas Gulf to build at least one smelter in the Porcupine and enact legislation if necessary to make them do so.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in my mind, it is unfortunate that the NDP called this resolution for debate today, because the indications are pretty clear that the government, through the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), is in a rather delicate stage of negotiation right now with Texas Gulf Sulphur, in respect of its operations in the Timmins area in Ontario.

Perhaps some history is in order, Mr. Speaker. You will remember that in 1965 the Kidd Creek mine of Ecstall Mining Ltd., which is a subsidiary of Texas Gulf Sulphur, came into production and now produces zinc ore, copper ore, silver ores and lead ores. The copper and the silver are processed in Canada already.

The lead ore is an extremely complicated one and I am told, does not warrant, because of the metallurgy or because of the volume of ore, the building of a smelter. There is not enough lead ore produced elsewhere in Ontario to justify a lead smelter.

The announced policy of the government is to encourage processing in Canada. This has been repeated many times by the Minister of Mines and has been reiterated just lately in this House by both the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) and last week by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts).

Last year, the Minister of Mines outlined the very great pressures he had brought to bear on Texas Gulf to begin a smelter or even more than one. He stated, if my memory is correct, that the company had called for feasibility studies for both a zinc smelter and a copper smelter, and that these studies would be completed by January 1, 1969.

Then in November in the House, the hon. Minister indicated that both reports had been delayed, but said that he would be making important announcements before the House adjourned at the end of this session. Surely the Minister's word should be counted upon and accepted by this House without the need for a further debate such as this.

Then, just last week, the hon. Prime Minister indicated that the Minister of Mines was right in the middle of negotiations with the company, and the Minister himself stated that the company had received the feasibility study in regard to the zinc smelter.

Obviously the Minister's hard efforts and good work is not being assisted by the premature and ill-timed discussion today in this House. I can only hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members of the Opposition would just have some patience, trust the new Minister who is aware of and working hard on the problems concerned, and not upset the applegart by any more inflamed or extreme statements.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the views put forward by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Gilbertson), but surely with the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) present, we will be treated to him speaking for himself before the hour is completed. It is a matter of great importance and this is at least the third time that it has been put before the House since the session began last November. I believe many of you may recall the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) in a fairly lengthy but, of course, interesting and well-thought out presentation—I believe it was 64 pages in length in his original script—putting before us all his views that Ontario requires a new national policy, or perhaps a provincial policy which will emphasize the use, the refinement, the development of our natural resources in a way that this government has not been able to provide in its 25 years, of responsibility in these matters.

The matter was raised again last week, when you, sir, in your wisdom, met privately with the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier), in order to determine whether or not this matter was of significant importance and emergency to warrant the adjournment of our regular business for debate here. You took it upon yourself, sir, to announce your decision before the House. It was then challenged by the leader of the New Democratic Party. We voted with the government at that time and I feel that it is necessary to explain the position, since we certainly do not want, for a moment, for any person to put a political misrepresentation on this matter—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon:—since it is obvious from positions taken by myself, the member for Sudbury and others that we believe that the government has not been effective in giving leadership to those people who have had the capital and the initiative to develop these natural resources in the past.

To deal specifically with this question. Most of us received a communication from the mayor of Timmins, speaking for himself and his council. It was a communication backing up a very lengthy and well-worded telegram to the Premier (Mr. Robarts) on this very matter. If I might quote from the letter from the mayor:

It is our belief that natural resources in a province and in a country should not be exploited in such a way as to permanently deprive residents of the area, where they are located, the only foreseeable chance of its keeping parity with the rest of the province and the country. If it is right for government to make use of tax funds obtained from the people at large in order to help an underprivileged area, it is doubly right that we direct the resources that do exist in such an area will not leave it unless the rights of those very people who live and toil at the site of the resources are well looked after.

I believe that his worship has well expressed the view that is supported on this side of the House, and in opposition to the approach that is being taken by the government of the day. The member for Algoma has attempted to apologize for the inaction of the Minister of Mines and the Cabinet. The Minister of Mines has tried to reassure us on at least two previous occasions that he is prepared to exert his strong will and his office in order to require that this particular company, Texas Gulf Sulphur, will locate part of their facilities in Ontario, and hopefully in northern Ontario.

I agree with the mayor of Timmins and I agree with the member for Cochrane South, that at least a major part of these facilities should be established in the community of the Porcupine, where there is regional disparity as a result of the working out of the gold deposits. I recall on a trip to northern Ontario with the hon. members of the Legislature in 1962, being taken underground, I believe at the Delmite Mine, and meeting, on that occasion, I believe, with the mine management from the various companies active at that time. While they were particularly generous in giving us a good meal, and so on, the message that they were putting forward was that the gold mines would not continue long to support the community, and that this government had to make plans for assuming far more responsibility in this area than they had at that time. I recall meeting with the miners underground and they put a pitch to us that was even stronger than that. At that time—I believe it is still the case—many of them were not unionized; they were working at scales of pay which were unbelievably low, and the reason for this and the reason why they felt they had to accept it, at least on the short term, was that the economic prospects for the Porcupine were so poor, that they felt they had no alternative but to quit and move right out of the community, which many of them, particularly the older workers, were not prepared to do.

Well, now, something has come about that might very well save the situation. One of the largest and, potentially, most productive mineral finds of the last many years in northern Ontario has come about, and still they are afraid that the ore will be removed from the ground in that huge, open-pit structure, which I believe we flew over in one of the recent trips. We have not visited it since it came into operation. The vision of the Ontario Northland Railway, carrying great amounts of ore to another province, at least as one possibility—or even to the United States for refining—is a real nightmare as far as they are concerned. I trust the government is being much more active than appears on the surface. There is nothing to indicate to us, however, that the Minister is engaging in other than a display of histrionics when he gets red in the face and shakes his fist at us, and says he is doing everything that can humanly be done to insist that this development be located in the Porcupine.

I believe that legislation is possible; if not legislation, then a direction of funds by The Department of Trade and Development which would make it an economic requirement that this development be located in northern Ontario, and specifically in the Porcupine and at Timmins. We have had an opportunity to examine the plight of many people of that area. When the mayor puts forward his views as he expresses them here, I think that this Legislature has the responsibility to respond. We did not have the opportunity to set aside the order of business last week, but we have an opportunity this afternoon to discuss these matters, and we would say we support wholeheartedly the resolution that has been put forward at this time, and that we are looking forward to hearing the Minister of Mines state his view in this important matter.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to read a few excerpts from a speech given by the Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. MacNaughton) to the northeastern regional development council. And he starts out:

Development is a torrid topic in the north. We can hear the reverberations with increasing velocity and frequency at Queen's Park. They come in the form of questions like: "What are you doing for northern development? How do you plan to increase growth and activity in this important area in the province? How are you stimulating use of the north's resources?"

He goes on to say:

I do not want to launch into a long recital of the many programmes that the government is providing for progress in the north, but let me review some of the highlights that apply to both northeastern and northwestern Ontario.

The Department of Energy and Resources Management is financing a detailed survey. The Department of Lands and Forests is carrying on a planned inventory. The Ontario Water Resources Commission is carrying on an intensive examination. The Department of Municipal Affairs is continuing its studies of local government. The Department of Tourism and Information recently announced its intention to develop a master plan.

Now we are faced with a feasibility study. Mr. Speaker, that is all we have in the north. For so many years, in fact from time immemorial, I imagine, we have been getting studies, one after the other, with no action. We do a study, we do the study over again. We do research, we do the research over again. But when it comes to action, this government is sadly lacking.

The hon. Treasurer went on for some time to put forward his programme of study, and I can tell hon. members the delegates to that meeting were as unhappy as I am with what he had to say. In fact, they not only told him what he could do with his speech but they told him in no uncertain terms; and at that time, in an offside remark, the Minister said he would not be back. If that is all he has to bring us, we hope he will not come back.

The Department of Mines, if I can just go on in this speech, has stated that we have passed the $1 billion mark in our mining efforts and that we should draw a certain satisfaction from passing that $1 billion mark.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we do, as northerners, draw a certain satisfaction from passing that $1 billion mark, but we draw very little satisfaction when we look around us and see closed down mines; holes in the ground; waste land from tailings; and then we see the position we are left in after $1 billion has gone out every year.

In Kirkland Lake we walk down the street and see nothing but mine shafts or mine head frames that are being torn down, whole buildings falling down, and know that over $880 million came out of the hole in the ground in Kirkland Lake and the town is sitting on the border of financial ruin.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): All the money has gone to the States too.

Mr. Jackson: I can only say that at least $40 million went to the Bahamas.

We do draw a certain amount of satisfaction from the development of the north, but I can tell you we draw very little satisfaction out of seeing what is happening right now.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle)—I imagine he was the Minister of Mines at the time—stated to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers in Halifax last year:

While Canada's total land resources seem endless, her rate of urbanization is one of the highest in the world. Thus we have become a country of city dwellers creating the problems and crises involved in great clusters of humanity. In addition, many northern settlements, established on a single resource, have regressed to rural slums.

We have regressed to rural slums because we never got our fair share of the mining wealth that has left northern Ontario. The degeneration of our northern communities have come about because of the failing of this government to provide a reasonable return to the communities that did the work, and to the people that by the sweat of their brow dug the gold out of the ground.

The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) mentioned that many of these miners are not unionized, and because they were not they were exploited for many years. When Kirkland Lake's gold mines closed down, literally hundreds of miners were left without pensions who were too old to go anywhere else; who were left trying to make a living in an area where there was no living to be made.

If the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) will speak to his colleague the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko), he will tell him that many of these miners are drawing welfare today because of the mining policy of this province for so many years.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of a news letter that is put out by the Japanese-Canada Economic Council every month. Each one of these news letters is filled with what Japan is doing; how it is going ahead; how it is forging ahead in its industrial capacity. It is only able to do that by using the resources of countries like us. We give it to them so that they can produce industrial capacity, while we sit back and dig in the ground like a bunch of animals.

We do not want all of it. We do not want to hold back the industrial capacity of any nation. But at least we want our fair share, just a small share of it. When my colleague says that he will be satisfied with one smelter, I can assure members that the people of Timiskaming will not be satisfied with one smelter. We want both of them in Ontario.

This government has an obligation to the people of Ontario, to provide jobs for the people of Ontario, not for the people of Japan; not for the people of the United States; not for the people of Norway; but for the people of Ontario.

At this moment at a time of serious unemployment in northern Ontario, you have an obligation and a responsibility to supply jobs to those people and can do so, Mr. Speaker, not by a feasibility study; not by studying the land use; not by studying the water resources; but by telling Texas Gulf—and telling them in no uncertain terms—that they will smelt their ores in Ontario.

This government has no responsibility except to the people of Ontario. Their prime responsibility is to the people of Ontario.

We have a little clause in The Mining Act that says that ores will be smelted in Ontario, or in Canada, and yet this government writes in loopholes—intentional loopholes—to exempt the largest part of the mining economy of Ontario from that clause. The first thing they should do is change it, take out the exemptions. Then sit down and talk to the companies that really have a reason not to smelt in Ontario, not because they have patented before 1917, but because they have a reason, a valid reason.

Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague from Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier) in saying that this government has been remiss in their duty for 25 years. They have sat on the seat of their pants and on their hands. I can tell you that it is our opinion that most of the lead stayed with the Ontario government, it is not being smelted out of the country.

For once in your life, just for once in 25 years, show the people of Ontario that you really mean that you are going to do something for them. Do not give us another 25 pages of promises or studies. We do not need any more studies. We need a little action, and Mr. Speaker, the responsible Minister, the Minister of Mines, can give us that action if he has the intestinal fortitude to do it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River is the next speaker.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Have we run out of government speakers so soon?

Interjections by hon. members:

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): I will yield, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The Minister of Mines is stuck to the seat of his pants—to his seat anyway.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the Minister if he wishes to speak at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has the floor. He is the next speaker and a minute of his time has gone already.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Well, he can yield to the Minister if he wishes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister has yielded to Texas Gulf.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this resolution, I would draw the attention of the House to the speech mentioned by the leader of the Opposition, that of the member for Sudbury in this House last year in which he delivered a rather weighty tome of 64 pages entitled "Northward lies the path of progress"—a new approach to the economic development of northern Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: And called for a study at the end.

Mr. Lewis: What was that about a tomb?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would just point out briefly, Mr. Speaker, in this speech of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), on page 13 he says:

I say to the Premier, through you, Mr. Speaker, that he would make better use of his energies and be more loyal to his responsibilities if instead of these peregrinations to California he required Texas Gulf Sulphur to show cause why it should not for good economic reasons build its smelter at Timmins, telling them at the same time that it is a policy of his government in the interest of the people of Timmins, to maintain that town as a viable community.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this problem that we have contained in this resolution is only one small aspect of the neglect of this party, the Conservative Party, for the people of northern Ontario. This is only one small part of the lack of planning, the lack of co-ordination, of the Conservative government to the people of the north.

The hon. member for Sudbury points out very well in his speech, I think, the over 25 years of neglect of this Conservative Party towards northern development.

I would suggest that one of the first things, the prime requisite in any economic development, and the economic expansion of any company, is the transportation costs, a cost benefit analysis. This is one of the very real vital places that we in the north suffer, because we are at a very poor economic advantage in the cost of transportation, both of the supplies needed in the communities and for the shipping of the products out of the community.

I would just read to you a resolution of the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities in which they say that freight rate structures must be revised on all lines, and consideration given to lower rates being offered for finished products than that of shipping in the raw state.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it would seem eminently reasonable that The Department of Transport—which is now a very moribund department along with quite a few others over there—could become vitalized or revitalized with some kind of research projects being undertaken by that department.

I note in the estimates this year, of The Department of Transport, that there are no moneys given over to the research of transportation problems in the province of Ontario.

We in the north have been calling for such a research programme for many years so that we can prove to the government sitting opposite, and to the people of Ontario, that we are at a very severe economic disadvantage in the transportation problem.

I think it is eminently reasonable that goods processed in the north should be given some kind of transportation incentive so that these products might be processed much more than they are in the north. This is one of the first economic principles involved in the location of any kind of plan in northern Ontario, or anywhere in the country for that matter.

I would refer the members and you, Mr. Speaker, to a speech by the hon. Minister of The Department of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) in Halifax last fall. He was speaking to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers on the problem of northern development. He goes on and points out very well—I was not aware that anyone on the other side was so well aware of the problems of the north—but in his speech he lays out certain problems that we face in the north. It is unfortunate that he is not able to impress upon his Cabinet colleagues just how important the north is to Ontario and to Canada, and the fact that some action must be taken.

We do not expect very much from the Minister of Mines. We realize that he is known in the north as the "Bay Street Miner" and he is more aware of the problems of underground sewers perhaps than underground mining. But the Minister of Lands and Forests indicates an awareness of these problems and I fail to understand why some action has not been taken. Now he says in his speech and I quote:

While Canada's total land resources seem endless, her rate of urbanization is one of the highest in the world. Thus we have become a country of city-dwellers creating the problems and crises involved in great clusters of humanity. In addition, many northern settlements established on a single resource have regressed to rural slums. Northern development and the resultant dispersal of our people is seen as one possible way to ease the pressures and strain of urbanization. It should also provide remedial action to the stagnating frontier settlements.

This is a statement of a Minister of this government and yet no action is taken in this vital area of the province of Ontario and of Canada.

The Minister goes on and points out that in the development of the north, northern Canada, the Yukon and Northwest Territories:

The main thrust of the economic development of these areas has been in the way of transportation.

He says:

You will notice that all items mentioned include some improvements in the means of transportation.

I would suggest that we not only need an increase in the means of transportation but some kind of subsidized transportation as an incentive to people like Texas Gulf and others to process their raw material in northern Ontario. The Minister goes on further to state:

We have to put behind us our unwarranted fear of co-ordinated planning and consider the long term interest of the people concerned and develop the north as a whole region.

This is certainly not a new concept. We in this party have advocated this over the years. The member for Sudbury has talked about this at great length. I have talked about it. Even some of the more enlightened people on the left have talked about it. Everybody seems to be in agreement—even the Minister of Lands and Forests and yet, nothing is done. It seems to be—

Mr. Singer: He only agrees when he speaks in Halifax.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes, I would think that certainly, if the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) was to add his voice to that of the Minister of Lands and Forests and the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) some co-ordinated plan and policy could be arrived at. It would seem, however, that the idea of natural resources and the concept of their development and utilization has not occurred to those people on the front benches.

Just to reiterate briefly, Mr. Speaker. One of our main problems in the north and one of the things that stand in the way of mines like Texas Gulf, and others, is the fact that the transportation costs in the north are excessive. Some of these rates are applied on the principle that they will be paid on the basis of what the traffic will bear. Because we are at a disadvantage, we have to pay these high rates.

In some cases these transportation rates are pulled out of the air. I give you the case of the CNR's rate proposals for the mines of Steep Rock and Caland Ore, just outside Atikokan. The present structure of rates is not based on any academic or economic look at the figures involved or any rate that would be economic to the companies or that could be justified in any rational manner. Rather, it seems that these rates have been pulled out of the air and slapped down to the economic disadvantage of the mines involved. Perhaps, since, there has been some rational explanation given for these rates. I would reiterate—

Mr. Speaker: I would call to the hon. member's attention that he is now in someone else's time. Would he please draw his remarks to a conclusion.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would reiterate, in closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that one of the main things that is needed, and needed immediately, is a complete study of a complete co-ordination of policy in northern Ontario. To begin with, something that could start immediately is a complete study of the transportation rates and system in northern Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the most important thing about this debate is the utter contempt with which the government treats this important issue. Last week, when it was raised in this House, this government which has permitted itself to be conned into procrastination over the years, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) rose and said, "Now is not the time", and with that rare flash of anger that sometimes emerges from him he was indignant that the Opposition should insist that this issue be discussed at a time which he deemed not to be convenient. Today, when we put it on the order paper—when we were denied not because it was not an important issue, but because the archaic rules did not permit it—then what does the government do? They put up a backbencher, a lowly backbencher, who says, in effect, "Trust in God and Lawrence, and (presumably) your interests are going to be protected", and speaks for three or four minutes. The Minister sits through this whole debate, and they, once again, resort to this lame excuse that this is a private members' hour, and therefore presumably no government member can raise his voice from the Treasury benches. I repeat, it is utter contempt for the whole issue which has been characteristic of this government's attitude towards this problem, and this is just a new manifestation of that characteristic contempt.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): That I deny.

Mr. MacDonald: That he denies! Well, we will just proceed to deal with some of the facts in relation to it, Mr. Speaker. The interesting question, Mr. Speaker, is: Is Texas Gulf directing this government or is this government going to direct Texas Gulf?

Mr. Lewis: We know the answer to that.

Mr. MacDonald: That is the issue. When we needed a Mines Minister to replace one in northern Ontario, the Prime Minister, in his wisdom, decided he would pick a man in Toronto, with his roots in Bay Street, so he is the voice of the north. Characteristically, on this issue, the Mines Minister is silent. So if he does not like it—and he normally is a fiercely independent fellow—if he does not like it when I ask the question, is Texas Gulf directing this government, or is this government directing Texas Gulf, it is a long time since he should have spoken, Texas Gulf are studying it as they see fit, and this government meanwhile is willing to procrastinate. Now—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Quite absurd!

Mr. MacDonald: Quite absurd? Well, the Minister's silence is quite absurd and no other absurdity can match it at this point, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say that the time for this government to act has come, and in terms of legislation. I want to deal in a moment with some of the rather waffling proposals we have had from the Liberal Party; but let us deal with the real problem at the moment, namely, the Tories. We need legislation, and Texas Gulf should be told that if it is going to exploit resources in Ontario then the legislation will dictate that they shall smelt those resources in northern Ontario, and if they are not willing to do it, let them get out, and let some company, some corporation develop these resources in the interest of the people of the province of Ontario and not the board members, wherever they sit, in New York or elsewhere.

It is interesting to recall, Mr. Speaker, that in the late 40s, we faced a comparable kind of situation in the forest industry. The Prime Minister of that day—not normally the most flaming radical in the nation—finally could not take it any longer. Either through a bill or regulations—I have forgotten which—he fixed a limit for exports of unprocessed pulp within the province of Ontario. He gave the companies some six or seven years to phase down their exports to that limit of 150,000 cords a year, which is a relatively small amount and is chiefly gauged to meet the needs of marginal areas where there is no mill capacity. Now, a Tory government did that. One of the fascinating things about Tory governments is that the longer they go on, the more gutless they get; Tory governments 50 years ago would deal with the question of public ownership, for example, of power resources. Tory governments today will not touch it. Tory governments 20 years ago would deal with protecting our resources. Today Tory governments will not touch it—at least they have not touched it up until now.

On the question of the smelter, Mr. Speaker, I was interested in re-reading what the Minister had to say a year ago. His contention was that one of those smelters must be in northern Ontario and the second one must be at least in Ontario, the south or elsewhere.

I am sorry, I think I am misquoting him. He said one of them must be in Ontario, preferably the north. Then he raised this nice question that as Canadian—and we are first Ontarians—whether or not we should quibble over the proposition that some copper smelting is now taking place in Noranda. Presumably we get some benefits from it, it comes by the ONR, our railway.

But he finally concluded for reasons that mystify me now that the copper smelter should be in Timmins, and that the zinc smelter might be in the south. The Minister shakes his head. I just read his speech of a year ago, and I think I am accurately reporting it—the copper smelter should be in Timmins and the zinc might be somewhere else.

Mr. Singer: Maybe if the member misquoted him he could get him up on his feet.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I do not know. He shook his head, which presumably meant he thought I was misquoting. But it still did not get him up.

Mr. Speaker, all I know is that on the basis of some evidence that we got last December in a question put by the hon. member from the Porcupine area to the Minister of Mines, it was revealed that in the loadings of ore coming out of the Kidd Creek mining area in the month of September, only 19 per cent was copper and 81 per cent was zinc. I suppose, to be perfectly fair, that may not be accurately representative of the whole ore body.

But assuming that it is somewhat accurate of the whole ore body, clearly the smelter that should be put in the Timmins area is the zinc smelter, not only because it is the major part of the ore body, but because you have got a copper smelter literally 100 or 150 miles away tied in with an Ontario railroad, Mr. Speaker.

If you have to make your choice, let us make it an all-Canadian choice, with the major smelter in the province of Ontario and the subsidiary smelting of copper, the lesser mineral in the picture, being done at Noranda. But at least have one in Timmins and let us have it by process of legislation at the present time.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the time has come to quit talking, to quit studying, to quit being conned by the Texas Gulf Sulphur and to act. To act in terms of passage of legislation which will make it very clear under what ground rules, under what guidelines this company can continue to operate in the province of Ontario.

Once they start to operate, if you think they are directing the government now, make no mistake about it, at that point the direction will be 100 per cent plus, because that is the way Inco and all of the big mining corporations have operated. They have directed the government, the government has not directed them.

Mr. Speaker, in 30 seconds, may I comment on the proposal that has come from the Liberal Party, to go back to that bankrupt presentation of the hon. member for Sudbury, after 64 pages the conclusion was that we should have more study before deciding where we are going?

I have often said that the Ontario provincial Liberals are more Tory than the Tories, and this is just another proof of it. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid), even today, after all the procrastination in studying and waste of time over here, concludes once again that we should have a study to know what we are going to do about it. Mr. Speaker, we have studied and studied and studied—

Mr. T. P. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I never said that at all.

Mr. MacDonald: The member's concluding remarks in Hansard will reveal that they asked for a study—

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South will please yield the floor to the member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would think, Mr. Speaker, that one of the rules of this House is that a member should not be misrepresented, and I dissociate myself with these remarks.

Mr. MacDonald: I reiterate—on my hearing of what the hon. member said—in his concluding remarks, he contended that one of the important factors in dealing with the resources was transportation costs, and he urged that we should have another study of those transportation costs in dealing with resources.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That was only one point in my whole comments.

Mr. MacDonald: Right! Well, we want a massive study from the hon. member for Rainy River.

The leader of the party, Mr. Speaker, said there should either be legislation—and I agree there should be legislation. Then he called for—and what exactly he meant I do not know—a direction of funds by the trade and development branch.

The proposition that this government should dip into the public treasury to give some money to Texas Gulf to do what they should do, is—well, if there is anything more preposterous than this government's lack of action, it is the proposal we have just had from the Liberal Party.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I adjourn the debate?

Mr. Speaker: Nothing is impossible so far as the House is concerned, in my view of matters. But I think it would be very unwise to proceed. I am quite prepared to do whatever the House wishes, but the private members' hour has expired. I would allow—if the hon. Minister wishes to get up on a point of order, or personal privilege, I think there would be no problem. Otherwise, I would think that as a member of the government benches, he is not entitled to—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say there has been no lack of concern on this side of the House. There has been no neglect, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this problem. There have been a great many man-hours and a lot of effort put in on it. May I assure you, sir, and may I assure the House, that there will be ample opportunity to debate this matter further within a very short time.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that the hon. Minister, although he did not phrase it, was rising on a point of order that the statements made there did not represent his actions or otherwise. It was a much better point of order than is often raised.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and in a similar vein, sir. I object to my privileges as a member in the House being usurped because the Minister deliberately contrived to move his estimates to the bottom of the list in order to avoid debating this subject. That is why we were forced to a resolution.

Mr. Speaker: The private members' hour is now completed.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go to some third readings. The Lieutenant-Governor will stand by for Royal assent, and then we will go on with estimates. May I say at this stage that in the order of estimates, we would like to introduce tomorrow the estimates of The Department of Social and Family Services, and then followed by the winding up of the Treasurer's (Mr. MacNaughton) estimates, Mines and Transport as we had originally planned.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What does the Minister mean by "introduce" the estimates of Social and Family Services? Does he mean just the lead-off speeches?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, I am sorry. I just want to point out that I had mentioned that following the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary we would then go to the Treasurer. Urgent business requires the Treasurer to be in attendance at certain meetings tomorrow, so we will go to the estimates of the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) and we will see them through, and then go to the Treasurer.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): A question there: does that mean that we are going to complete Social and Family Services before we go back to Treasury?

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is right!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): We will not get back to Treasury for seven years.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the west gallery are students from Bridlewood Public School in Agincourt and from the Sheridan College of Applied Arts and Technology in Brampton.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

What responsibility does the department have for the credit counselling service of Toronto directed by George Penfold?

Does the Minister agree with Mr. Penfold that credit rating information, associated with the service, should be disclosed to private credit bureaus as reported in the Toronto Telegram of March 31, 1969?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my department has no responsibility for the operation of the credit counselling service of Metropolitan Toronto as such. We do, however, make a grant to that operation, along with the federal government.

The Metropolitan Toronto counselling service is a very responsible operation and it is against this background of trying to rehabilitate people with respect to their debt problems and the financial problems that some of them have found themselves in that this question, to which the hon. leader of the Opposition has referred, has arisen.

It is my understanding that no decision has been arrived at with respect to such a step, but in any event, the premise on which the proposition is advanced involves the consent of the debtor himself, that is the person or the citizen who is seeking advice from this organization.

The proposal is against the proposition that such revelation or disclosure of that information, with the debtor's consent would be an assist to the debtor, with respect to his efforts to rehabilitate his financial circumstances, and be a deterrent against incurring further financial obligations which might not be absolutely necessary.

On that basis I would see no harm to the proposition that the debtor himself would give his written consent to the disclosure of the information. I understand no firm conclusion has been reached by that organization to take that step.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister will permit a supplementary question, is he trying to tell me and the House that reduction in a person's credit rating could in fact be to his personal benefit if in fact he has not more or less the ability to control his actions in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is right.

Mr. Nixon: A similar question, really arising from the same circumstances, to the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Attorney General agree that information on debtors should automatically be turned over to privately run credit bureaus from division courts, as will be the practice announced by division court referee David Scott on Saturday, March 29?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the question as notice just to check the facts of what transpired here. In the meantime, I would say that of course all the records of the division court are public. Anyone could get that information if he wanted to go in there and get it. But I would like to take the question as notice to give a full answer.

Mr. Nixon: I might ask the Attorney General, if he will permit, another question arising from the same source of information.

The Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs said in the one case it would only be with the permission of the individual concerned, but in the other case it would be that the information would be turned over automatically. I would appreciate the further information that the Attorney General has undertaken to get.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to point out as a basic answer that any citizen can go to the division court and look at the records and get the whole story with respect to everyone who is on record there in a case.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): That is not what the news story said.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I know what the news story said. The point is that the records of that court are public and if someone wanted to make a business of getting them he has a right to do so.

Mr. Sopha: It said the court was going to turn them over on its own motion. We do not want the Minister to be a fink.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

1. Is the Douglas Point nuclear reactor in full operation?

2. Have there been recent difficulties experienced with the fueling machines while attempting to refuel under load?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Douglas Point generating station is not operating due to difficulties which have been experienced with the fueling machines. Those difficulties did not arise while attempting to refuel under load. The necessary steps are being taken to effect repairs to the fueling machines as soon as possible.

Mr. Nixon: As a supplementary to that—I wonder if the Minister could tell the House how long the reactor has been out of commission and how long it is expected not to be working?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I do not have that information but I would suggest that if the hon. member would like it that I would arrange a meeting with some of the engineers at Hydro tomorrow and perhaps they could give him the answer much quicker than I could dealing with it before the House.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps that would be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Would the hon. member like that?

Mr. Nixon: Yes I would, and I will get in touch with the Minister about it. The hon.

Minister is not prepared then to answer any supplementary question on this at this time?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests from yesterday.

Will the government be introducing legislation this year to resolve the confusion relating to deeds so as to assure public use of the beaches in the east Lake Erie shoreline?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for York South, the government does not plan to introduce legislation this year with reference to this subject matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask by way of a supplementary, does this mean that the government has foregone completely this avenue for solving this problem and is relying completely on the expropriation of certain properties to provide some public access to the beaches?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: No, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we have not completely abandoned the idea, but I would say that at the present time we are doing as you just mentioned—acquiring beach land to provide park land through the regular provincial park programme.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the Minister in a position to indicate why one has to delay still another year in grappling with this admittedly complex problem, the complexity of which will not be reduced by procrastination?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under study.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is consideration, not procrastination.

Mr. MacDonald: A difference of viewpoint. I have two questions of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. The first one is in three parts:

1. What figure does the government accept as accurately representative of animal needs—dogs and cats—for medical research?

2. How many animals were destroyed by the humane society during the last calendar year?

3. How many animals from municipal pounds were destroyed during the last calendar year?

Mr. Sopha: What is the member's policy on these matters? We have never heard.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the figures relating to the number of animals needed, were obtained from the deans of medicine and the directors of the research institutes and medical schools. How accurate they are we are not absolutely sure. I do not think any firm figures have been given, but we have been given to understand that between 5,000 to 7,000 dogs are needed for the medical schools and the teaching laboratories, and about 3,000 cats.

We were told by the various deans of the respective schools that because of the increased number of doctors in training in the next few years, that figure would likely escalate to about a maximum of 10,000 dogs and perhaps up to 5,000 cats.

The other figures that the hon. member has asked for, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid are not available because I know of no such figures that could be found for the last calendar year. The only figures we have to go on are ones supplied by the humane society themselves, and I understand that those figures were something like 50,000 dogs and 250,000 cats destroyed by the shelters operated by the humane society.

With regard to the municipal pounds, about all we have to go by is a brief that was submitted to the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) by the Ontario Humane Society. They had requested a mail poll of the various municipal pounds indicating how many dogs and cats they had picked up and how many were destroyed. The total figures that were submitted to the Minister in that brief, from the 454 municipalities, indicated—if my memory serves me correctly—21,000 dogs and about 16,000 or 17,000 cats.

Mr. Speaker, we discussed these figures with the deans of medicine suggesting that this looked like quite a sizable source of animals that were being destroyed. They questioned the accuracy of these figures that had been submitted. Perhaps they were only estimates that had been mailed in to the humane society, rather than the accurate figures, because their experience had indicated that such numbers of animals just simply were not available in these municipal pounds. This is why they took some exception to the supposition that there appeared to be this availability of animals.

Mr. Sopha: Where does the NDP stand on these bills?

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. member for Sudbury had been around a bit more often he might know where we stand on many things.

Mr. Sopha: Is the member playing both sides of the street?

Mr. MacDonald: My second question of the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Half of their friends are dogs and half are cats and they stand four square behind their friends.

Mr. Sopha: Playing both sides of the street as usual.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: That is what they always do.

Mr. MacDonald: I understand that a committee representative of the Ontario Humane Society and some of its affiliated societies has been set up to work out and present to the Minister proposals regarding Bill 73 which will make it more acceptable to the humane society. Is it the Minister's intention to consider any representations which this committee may make before proceeding with second reading of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we would welcome any representations that might be made by that group. We met with them and we had, I thought, a very excellent meeting. I think we appreciated the position that they were taking and I am sure they recognize the position that we were taking.

They asked if they could go back to their respective groups and discuss the matters that were of concern to both parties; they asked if they could make further representations and we quite agreed to do this. I am hopeful that we will hear from them in the near future.

Mr. MacDonald: By way of clarification, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister, when you say "that group", are you referring to a group that comprises both the affiliated organizations and the Ontario Humane Society?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No. We met with them separately and it was the affiliated groups that asked if they could do this.

Mr. MacDonald: For whatever consolation it is to the Minister, I understand that there is now a joint group.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There is what?

Mr. MacDonald: Now a joint group.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well that is fine.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; to the Minister of Health:

How many employees in Ottawa restaurants, dairy bars, take-out counters and grocery stores have been given tests at the Ontario provincial laboratory at Bells Corners, in view of the fear of a typhoid epidemic in that part of the province?

How many typhoid cases have been identified at the laboratory?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, 192 persons have been tested. It is not known how many of them are employers or how many are employees. None of the tests have shown the presence of the typhoid organism.

Mr. Ben: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Are the tests still continuing, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe they are and will continue until all those who have been exposed or are likely to have been exposed have been tested.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; a question for the Minister of Health:

Is the Minister aware that infants' dolls now being sold in Toronto stores, which carry the label, "This article has been made in compliance with the regulations under The Public Health Act of Ontario", are lethal weapons in that the heads slide off with very slight force to reveal a pointed steel spike which could penetrate a child's eye?

What immediate steps will the Minister take to prevent sale of these dolls?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, these regulations are now under The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, consumer protection division.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the urgency of this matter—that is, a child could very easily be seriously hurt by this type of thing—will the responsible Minister answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard of the matter. We will be glad to look at it.

I do know that questions of safety and obnoxious types of material—which would include the item the hon. member has referred to—are constantly before us. This would certainly fall into that category.

If the hon. member will send me the information about the manufacture and the source of the toy, we would be glad to look at it.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Minister think some immediate steps will be taken?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Minister would take this question as notice on transfer to him.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member for High Park forgot to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Health enquiring whether that label was used with his permission—with the department's permission.

Mr. Shulman: I thank the member for Humber.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question of the Minister of Health and certain allied questions—or at least they appear to be allied—in connection with the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital.

It would seem to me that perhaps the hon. member might wish to place all these questions at this time of those Ministers who are present in this group, rather than when we come to the Minister in question. Perhaps you would address your question to the Minister of Health first.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A question of the Minister of Health. Does the Minister agree with Dr. Miller, superintendent of the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital, that Dr. Mullner's work load was not an unfair one?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: If I am to speak personally, Mr. Speaker, I would say, no, I do not agree with Dr. Miller's estimate—but then I might be a harder taskmaster than Dr. Miller. But I have every confidence in his ability to direct and organize his hospital, therefore I would bow to his judgment in this case.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

A question of the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. What complement of medical staff is on duty at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. Monday to Friday, and also what complement for the 24-hour period of Saturday and Sunday?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, one physician on duty, nights and weekends; and consultants on call as required.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, with the whine in the speaking apparatus, I did not hear the first part of the Minister's answer. Could I ask if the Minister would repeat it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker, one physician on duty, nights and weekends; consultants on call as required.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you. A question of the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Are all the medical posts at Brockville, except the three vacancies the Minister spoke of in answer to my question of March 26, filled with permanent staff or are some on a transfer temporarily?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, all posts are filled with permanent staff.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A question of the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. In the Minister's opinion, what would cause Dr. Mullner, at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital, to have, in addition to his 144 hospital patients, 180 of the 310, or over half of the resident patients in his care, with four other doctors on staff, outside of the superintendent, to share in that resident patient load?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter again which I leave to the wisdom and judgment of the director of this hospital in whom I have complete confidence.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, the Minister, of course, did not answer the question.

A question of the Minister of Health. Would the Minister tell the House the number of hospital patients, and the number of resident patients, assigned to each of the doctors and medical staff at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this is a number that could not be given except as it obtained perhaps yesterday or today. First of all, I want to make eminently clear that there is no such thing as resident patients. These people are residents, and I think we went over this matter very, very thoroughly during meetings of the standing committee. Indeed, all of these questions were dealt with very extensively during that committee meeting.

I do not know how many patients are assigned to each physician. Again, I have to say, sir, that this is the responsibility and the duty of the director of the hospital, and I have every confidence in his ability to look after it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Does the Minister not recall that when I asked this same question of the committee, Dr. Miller said that the information was in his memos to which I do not have access now and to which the hon. Minister does?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I do not remember that but I still repeat that the number of patients under one doctor could change from day to day. The only answer I could give was the number that was under the care of a particular doctor yesterday or on some particular day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services from the other day which she might place now.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A question of the Minister of Social and Family Services:

In view of Mr. Borczak's remarks, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star, March 29, that the "decision re rent rebates applies only to payments made in 1968", will the Minister assure the House, and Ontario welfare recipients, that any future rent rebate payments may also be kept by welfare recipients?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, government policy as to the future will be announced in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food comes in two parts:

Did the farm products marketing board order the flue-cured tobacco board to amend its regulations in order that the flue-cured tobacco acreage rights could be transferred from one area to another?

Is the Minister aware of the concern of the county of Elgin of farmers and the municipalities that this new policy may adversely affect the economy of that area?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is no, the farm products marketing board did not order the flue-cured tobacco growers marketing board to amend their regulations. And the answer to the second question is that we are aware that the clerk of the township of Aldborough, I believe, in Elgin county, has written to the farm products marketing board expressing concern. His letter was acknowledged by the board. They expressed their appreciation for his concern and said they would discuss it further with the flue-cured board. This was a decision that was made by the flue-cured tobacco growers marketing board and I am sure the hon. member would not suggest that we should interfere with the decision of the producer board.

Mr. Spence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The farm products marketing board approved of the action of the flue-cured board, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I assume they must have.

Mr. Spence: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it possible, as I understand it, that the assessment will remain on the farm from which the flue-cured tobacco acreage rights are moved? Then will the farm that the acreage rights go to also be assessed for tobacco acreage?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I could not answer that question, Mr. Speaker; that is a matter for the local assessor. I have no idea what will happen.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): May I place my question of the hon. Prime Minister first?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will ask his question, please, of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management and we will get the Prime Minister's question in due order.

Mr. Deans: To the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

What is the acceptable ratio between dilutant and pollutant permitted by the Ontario Water Resources Commission in the case of waste acid?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, there is no accepted ratio that can be broadly applied. Factors such as the strength and volume of the acid solutions being disposed of, the volume and buffering capacity of the dilution water, and the mixing time provided are always taken into account by the Ontario Water Resources Commission when assessing proposals for waste discharges.

Mr. Deans: May I enquire of the Minister, by way of a supplementary question, whether he might not consider neutralization as a better process than dilution, whether he would not consider neutralization of the acid would be a better way of dealing with it than diluting it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, again I think if the hon. member would like to speak to the engineer in charge of this particular department, I would be very pleased to arrange an appointment with him where he can ask questions and get responsible answers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming has a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests?

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests. It is in two parts:

1. Is it correct that The Department of Lands and Forests has been unable to achieve success in the successful regeneration of yellow birch?

2. What is the projected life expectancy of the lumber industry in Algonquin Park based on the present supply of yellow birch?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Timiskaming:

1. This information is not correct. The departmental staff have developed successful techniques for regeneration of yellow birch.

2. The lumber industry in Algonquin Park uses several species of hardwood, primarily maple. The present department management plans are for this industry to continue on a sustained yield basis.

Mr. Jackson: By way of a supplementary question, could the Minister tell us what percentage of yellow birch is used compared with hard maple?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I will be pleased to have that information sent to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Prime Minister now?

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Prime Minister—I will leave the first sentence off because it does not apply; I discovered that in a question from our leader to one of the other Ministers—will the Prime Minister approach Dofasco and request that a major portion of the five miles of Lake Erie shoreline, acquired under option by Dofasco for future expansion, be donated as a public beach?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the previous question has been asked, but this is a matter that comes under the aegis of the Minister of Lands and Forests. I would be happy to discuss it with him, I think the idea has some merit. On the other hand we would have to check into the matter, and I would be quite happy to discuss the proposal with the Minister whose responsibility it is.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine has a series of questions. Perhaps he would start them with the one addressed to the Prime Minister?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the Prime Minister: Who acted on behalf of the St. Faith's Lodge Board in prior negotiations with The Departments of Health and Public Welfare for the government take-over of the Warrendale complex?

Is the Prime Minister aware that at the time the negotiations were under way this gentleman was not a bona fide member of the board?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will take the questions as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will place another of his questions? Would the hon. member continue placing these questions as long as he has Ministers in the House to direct them to?

Mr. Brown: I would be pleased to. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) is not present. To the Minister of Social and Family Services:

With whom did the Minister negotiate for the replacement of staff in the Warrendale complex in 1966?

Is the Minister aware that the individual involved was not a bona fide member of the board?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I am getting the information and will take the question as notice.

Mr. Brown: To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General:

1. Was the action of The Department of Health in occupying the Warrendale premises at Etobicoke legal at the time?

2. If not, what has been done by the Minister's department to rectify the situation?

3. If it was legal, why is the property still owned in the name of St. Faith's Lodge?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the action which was taken by The Department of Health for the welfare of these children was, in my opinion, legal. I am not familiar with the title aspects relative to the property and I will obtain these facts and advise the hon. member as to why the property is still held in the name of St. Faith's Lodge, if that is the case.

Mr. Brown: A second question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: Is the Minister aware that the Elizabeth F. Brown memorial camp occupied by The Department of Health was given to the board of St. Faith's Lodge one year prior on the agreed conditions that:

1. Its name would not be changed.
2. Its purpose would not be changed.
3. The high level of treatment would not be changed
4. It would not be turned over to anyone else.
5. If any of these conditions were breached, the property would revert to the original owners?

Would the Minister indicate on what legal grounds this property was occupied by The Department of Health?

Is the Minister aware that all the moneys spent in developing the camp were private funds and that government at no time contributed funds to the development programme or to the land or facilities?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the title aspects of this matter but I will get the necessary information and answer the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Brown: To the Minister of Health:

1. On whose directions did The Department of Health direct the occupation of the Warrendale complex buildings in Etobicoke?
2. Who currently administers the programme there?
3. What are the costs for the repair and administration of the building?
4. Who bears these costs?
5. Why is the department using these facilities that are not owned or rented by the department?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: [Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: I have another question of the Minister of Health from the hon. member—No. 1073, in connection with the Elizabeth F. Brown memorial camp.

Mr. Brown: Oh yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Minister of Health: Has the Elizabeth F. Brown memorial camp been purchased by The Department of Health? If not, is the department paying for rental? Does the department have a contract for the use of the camp?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this question also as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways has an answer to a question.

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question put to me by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) on February 28 regarding a fatality in Scarborough involving a GO-Train, I said that Canadian National Railways officials promised a complete report and I would table it in the Legislature when it was received.

I am now informed that a public inquest is to be held in the matter. In the light of this information I just wanted the hon. member to be informed that it is now not possible for me to table a report prior to such an official enquiry. However, I did receive a communication from the railway on the matter, setting out the problem of trespassers on railway property and the means that the railway uses to combat it.

I shall now quote from a letter received from Mr. A. R. Williams, the Toronto area manager of the Canadian National Railways:

The question of trespassers, particularly children, is a matter of grave concern to the Canadian National Railways. Its employees, and particularly its investigation personnel, are continually on the lookout for trespassers so that they can be directed from the property before being hurt.

Where practical, CN maintains fences which it hopes will discourage children from venturing on to a right of way. More importantly, however, CN has for years maintained public education programmes aimed at bringing home to the public, and especially the school children, the dangers of playing near the railroad.

Last year our investigation people showed films and made safety presentations in Ontario to more than 187,000 persons, mostly young school children. Safety films were also shown over the educational television network and over private television stations.

CN has tried to reach parents through the medium of service clubs so that they, too, would be aware of the dangers, particularly where school-age and pre-school-age children are concerned.

Earlier this year CN added a new safety film, this one aimed at teenagers, to its Toronto library and hopes to make good use of it in the months to come, along with other films and presentations.

The nature of the railway property is such that it would probably be physically impossible to exclude trespassers everywhere, particularly trespassers as curious and ingenuous as young children.

CN believes, therefore, it is through the medium of educational programmes that it can most effectively reduce chances of an accident, such as that involving the GO-Train on February 24, occurring again.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, just a small point on this first bill. It is indicated here that that bill is not reprinted. I have not checked in my book. Is there any requirement that it should be in its final form before we give it third reading?

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that the bill is not reprinted. It will be up in the morning. I am also advised that it has been the habit and custom here, unless there is some good reason for not doing so, that bills are, and have been, given third reading when they have been amended in committee and have not yet reached the House in their reprinted form. As far as I am personally concerned, it is whatever the House wishes with respect to this.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): There were certain amendments when the House in committee took place. There was no objection to those amendments being made at that time, as I recall.

The following bills were given third reading on motions:

Bill 83, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Bill 89, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act, 1968.

Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the borough of East York.

Bill Pr31, An Act respecting the county of Welland.

Bill Pr33, An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Bill Pr35, An Act respecting the University of Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We will await the arrival of His Honour.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario entered the Chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed several bills to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 23, An Act to amend The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act.

Bill 24, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Bill 64, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Bill 83, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Bill 89, An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act, 1968.

Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the borough of East York.

Bill Pr31, An Act respecting the county of Welland.

Bill Pr33, An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Bill Pr35, An Act respecting the University of Windsor.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

Clerk of the House: The 29th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL AND FAMILY SERVICES

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Chairman, one of the very happy events since the passage of the last estimates of the department was, of course, the return to his desk last spring of the affectionately esteemed Deputy Minister, Dr. Band. Upon his return, of course, he followed his usual practice of being at his desk almost continuously. It just so happens that on this day he is out of the city and I trust that he will be very pleasantly surprised to return to find the estimates of the department passed and the moneys made available for continued programmes.

I deem it appropriate at this time to make reference to the retirement this year of one of the leading figures in Canada and indeed in North America in the social services field, Professor Charles E. Hendry, director of the University of Toronto school of social work. He has made an outstanding contribution to the social services field in general and in particular here in Canada.

Professor Hendry came to the university in 1946 and became director in 1951. He has been a long-time member and now chairman of the executive committee of the Canadian Welfare Council and is a national officer of the Canadian Red Cross Society.

The development of research in the social services has been one of his major interests. He was instrumental in the founding of the Cassidy Memorial Research Fund and the development of the University of Toronto's new interdisciplinary centre for research in the social and health services. He was chairman last week of the roundtable on the social aspects of science policy. He has served this province and this government well, being on the Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts) advisory committee on portable pensions, on the Minister's public welfare training committee as chairman, and serving at the Attorney General's (Mr. Wishart) request on the legal aid committee. He has maintained a constant interest in our programmes and has been generous with his own time as well as enabling members of his staff to be available for consultation.

An outstanding educator, a valued advisor to government, a leader, a personality at once warm, forceful and conciliatory, Dr. Hendry is a distinguished Canadian to whom we pay tribute as he nears retirement, and I am delighted to record this in the records of this Legislature.

It is not my intent to discuss at any great length the progress and activities of all the programmes within the department, but I should like to touch on some of the highlights of development this past year. Of course, all details will be discussed in the committee as the various votes are made.

You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that I am requesting approval of estimates just under $265 million, an increase from last year and an amount indicative of our intention to meet our commitments to the people.

As the members will recall, 1967 was the year of major and numerous changes in the legislation of the department. 1968 has been a year in which we have consolidated and undertaken the evaluation of these far-reaching changes.

One of the most significant developments within the department this past year is the formation of the research and planning branch which recruited the first members of staff in the latter part of 1968 and has been filling out its complement since that time.

When completed, all the social science disciplines will be represented; economists, psychologists, sociologists and social workers. The branch will therefore possess a research capability in all of these areas. Its main purpose will be to carry out continuing research and provide guidelines for future policy development. I look forward to an outstanding advisory function within the department.

Some of the activities of the branch might be mentioned: evaluation of both present and long-term needs of Ontario residents from the point of view of both economics and sociology; assessment of existing welfare programmes in the light of these findings; in-depth studies of individual programmes, and an inventory of welfare services to identify gaps and develop policy.

One of the earliest, already undertaken, is an analysis of statistics compiled from the various programme activities in the department. This information will be used to effectively indicate the need for administrative and programme changes and possible future research. I look forward to great things from this particular branch.

We are taking steps to initiate procedures to bring about benefits not only in the effectiveness of our internal operations, but also in relation to our work with private and public agencies. I make mention of the fact that we have recently organized a systems and procedures branch to increase efficiency and reduce administrative expenditure. Already it has increased the efficiency of our filing systems. Of major interest to this branch will be a continuing assessment of the ways in which computer technology can be used to advantage.

In the near future our new programme analysis activity will have appointed a programme analysis co-ordinator to provide background for the defining of departmental objectives and the working out of short- and long-range plans to be co-ordinated with overall governmental activities.

In addition to our normal accounting procedures, we have established financial consulting services with the overall objective to maximize the effectiveness of our use of budgeted funds. It will also provide financial and business management consultation to subsidized agencies and institutions, both public and private, and an advisory service to the directors of the branches.

I touch upon the work of a small but important branch, the training and staff development branch. This achieves its objectives by increasing the competency of the staff to provide essential services of the department, by working with educational and training institutions in the province and by providing training programmes within the department. A variety of activities are carried on: a programme of bursaries; a programme of educational leave; a programme of staff development to make use of seminar courses and extension courses for staff members; and a wide-ranging series of courses within the department for the benefit of staff, including orientation of new members, in-service training, basic and advanced courses for field supervisors, a course for assistant supervisors in the family benefits branch, courses for municipal welfare administrators and for Indian band welfare administrators, and assistance to the in-service training programme of the child welfare branch. This branch is continuously devoted to upgrading the qualifications of our members.

I am going to take the opportunity some time of telling the story to the province of Ontario of our vocational rehabilitation services branch, a glorious story not yet known by the majority of our people. This branch continues to provide a comprehensive and high-quality rehabilitation programme for the disabled. The volume of services has increased right across the board. The number of persons in training increased by 30 per cent. The total months of training have now reached 10,000 months and the number of persons over 1,000. The total case load receiving counselling and guidance is 6,600.

The programme of workshops subsidized is over 100, and this year operating grants were paid on behalf of 2,500 persons. I think were the citizens of this province to view, as I have, some of the agencies and the work that has been done, they would applaud and cheer.

As the members will recall, one area in which there has been recent legislative change is in the field of day nurseries. In August 1967 the legislation was amended to increase the provincial subsidy from 50 per cent to 80 per cent, and last April a new and generous needs test was provided with the object of assisting a greater number of low-income families. We are now in the position of noticing the impact that has been made on our programmes in this respect. An answer given by me a week or so ago in this House indicated that the number of nurseries receiving public funds increased from 45 in 1967 to 101 in 1968, more than doubling the number eligible for public subsidy. The number of preliminary applications for licensing has increased from 40 to 67, an increase of 60 per cent.

I think all members will be gratified that the legislation in which they played a role has been effective in terms of encouraging day nurseries and making these services available to low-income families. An examination, review and evaluation of all aspects of our day care programme continues, and we will watch with interest the studies and progress of others to ensure the growth and benefits of this programme.

I make mention of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that 1968 has also been a banner year for adoptions with more applications than ever before—in fact over 7,800 couples, an increase of 15 per cent. The total number of children who have found permanent security through adoption orders is 7,150, the first time the figure has exceeded 7,000, and now we reach for a new goal.

In family services, Mr. Chairman, the aim is to assist applicants and recipients of family benefits allowances to achieve more effective functioning, and where possible economic independence, and we now have a branch which is in its first full year of operation, participating in this work. A field staff of family counsellors is provided. The counsellors accept suitable referrals where specialized services are required and assist persons and families in appropriate ways, and to utilize other services which are relevant to their needs. In addition, these counsellors are available to provide consultation to municipalities for the development of specialized services for the recipients of general welfare assistance.

In line with this programme, I touch upon the homemakers and nurses services, which also, of course, have been improved since August 1968 when the provincial subsidy was increased from 50 per cent to 80 per cent on services purchased from approved agencies. The introduction of a new and generous needs test has indicated new directions in this field.

An interesting development which we are encouraging is our teaching homemaker programme. It is a very simple programme, Mr. Chairman. The homemaker here goes to show a mother within one of our service programmes, by example and demonstration, how she can improve her basic housekeeping skills and develop the family well-being and sense of responsibility. The homemaker is employed by the municipality and works as a team member along with social workers, counsellors, field investigators, and other members of social service needs. She goes into the home to assess the family's needs, consults with other workers, and plans the best way to meet the needs of the family—such simple things, Mr. Chairman, as showing the member how to plan her housework, in what sequence, how to clean house, how to prepare nourishing meals, the laundry, do the mending, how to budget the family income, do the shopping and give the children the necessary personal care in accordance with their needs. These are very basic things, Mr. Chairman, but things that are essential to the well-being of all families, and in particular to these families that in some respects are at a disadvantage.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most important aspects with which we are confronted at the present time, and one of which I have become increasingly aware since assuming this portfolio, is in reference to what I call the delivery of services.

We have, in relationship to the delivery of services—a matter which encompasses the whole range of administrative arrangement by which the social needs of our people can be most effectively met. And this problem is not one confined to this jurisdiction, it goes across many jurisdictions—indeed, all jurisdictions.

The history of the administration of social services is replete with the problems of gaps, overlapping, complexities. This happens at the national level, at our provincial level, at the municipal levels, between and amongst private agencies and between private and public agencies. Of course, history, and the fact that this problem is still present with us, indicates the complexity of the matter.

We have been improving our legislation in this field and using our own experience to develop new steps, but it is still a place where we seek solutions. The problem is still a baffling one, and I think that anyone that thinks there may be one single administrative device to solve this is really living in a world of illusion.

At this point I touch upon, appropriately, the developments that we have made in this direction. Most members are familiar with the concept and the work of the district welfare administration boards and the accompanying provisions with respect to county administration. We have been encouraging this these past few years, and we are gratified with the number that have come into being. We look to further steps in this direction, not only at the county and district welfare level.

Of course, we have here, in Metropolitan Toronto, the consolidation of welfare services, and as well the Ottawa-Carleton regional government. This was initiated whereby these broad programmes were assigned to the second tier. We are promoting this all along, based on our experience, in order that the benefits of the broad administrative units can be brought to bear.

The advantages cannot be questioned. The provision of skilled and specialized staff, better co-ordination with other services both within and outside the particular regional area. A general efficiency and economy of operation.

In this regard, of course, we continue to enlist the experience and assistance of the private individual and the private sector and the private agency, in order that all of the services may be effectively delivered.

My comments will remind the members of the report of the committee on local authority and allied personal services referred to in this Legislature, commonly known as the Seebohm report, the recent British study. We have been, since its release, studying the recommendations of the report and we will be giving particular attention to any of its findings which are relevant to our own needs and situation. Of course, from the policies which I have touched upon, it can be seen that we had already been going in this direction of unified services.

I conclude these preliminary remarks, Mr. Chairman, by saying that it is an exciting time to be involved in the changes which are coming about. It seems clear to me now that the way in which our administrative services have developed provides us with a firm basis for our other programmes. We have gained useful experience and we are now on the threshold of advances which, I feel, will lead to the provision of more effective, more unified and more co-ordinated social services.

It is a real challenge to meet and satisfy the needs and wants of the some 400,000 citizens who turn to us and are in contact with us annually, and to whom we give service. I like to think we have had some measure of success, and I think the members of this House can use their own personal experience over the course of the year in relationship to the small number, perhaps, of that 400,000 with whom they may have had some direct contact.

Now, as we proceed to consider the estimates in detail, Mr. Chairman, I welcome on the part of members questions on the various items of expenditure, their comments, and above all, their suggestions.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Chairman, I would like first of all to pay a few words of tribute to the Deputy Minister, Dr. Band, and his staff. I want to reassure them that we on this side think they are dedicated, hard-working and that they are rendering a true service to this province.

Mr. Chairman, when I realized that the unhappy task of criticizing the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) was once more upon me, I turned, Mr. Chairman, to that source of all our inspirations, the "Holy Bible", and I looked for parallels.

I thought what the Budget would be doing to the poor of Ontario, as of today, as the price increases caused by the machinery tax were gradually passed on in the form of inflationary increases in retail costs, and I found an appropriate text for the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) in Exodus 30, verse 15: "The rich shall not give more and the poor shall not give less."

Then I turned to the first book of Timothy, and it suddenly struck me that the Minister of Social and Family Services must clearly subscribe to the doctrine that the poor have brought nothing into this bailiwick and, by George, neither shall they carry anything away. In all this, the poor sinned not, nor charged the Robarts government foolishly.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Social and Family Services has adopted the yearly stratagem of not tabling his report before his estimates. The comments he made with reference to the amount—$265 million—that his department is going to be spending in the next year should indicate, Mr. Chairman, to any thinking person that in order for the Opposition to be able to know what is going on, we should have a copy of this report.

But in any event, Mr. Chairman, last year the Premier (Mr. Robarts) backed up this retrograde policy by suggesting that the estimates might be debated without benefit of a study of the annual report. He obviously hopes that by isolating the components of an operation, the full and disastrous social consequences of his administration will be obscured. However, Mr. Chairman, we know he is only playing a delaying game. In the end, everything will come out.

Last year, Mr. Chairman, I formally introduced into the record of this Legislature, in a long and detailed speech, in the preparation of which I had the assistance of the distinguished American social scientist Mr. Robert Theobald, the concept of guaranteed annual income.

Last year's Hansard at page 3144 shows how the Minister of Social and Family Services rolled the phrase over on his tongue in mocking fashion. He said: "One must be very careful, in trying to give to the public at large, some sort of answer which is in the form of three neat words—a guaranteed annual income."

"Those are three nice words," he mocked. "Guaranteed," a lovely word. And not only guaranteed, but also on an annual basis. And "income—now that is a lovely word, income. Three nice words," he said Mr. Chairman.

Then, suddenly, all the world except for this Minister was acknowledging that Theobald had been right, and that more money was going into welfare administration than the recipients were actually getting in the end. And Mr. Stanfield undercut him, and he was left completely alone when the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White), as chairman of the select committee, came out with that report which advocated a negative income tax as the first step on the road to a guaranteed income. Now, Mr. Chairman, the final blow came when the Treasurer included positive reference to the concept in his Budget this year.

So, in the space of only 12 months, the rug has been pulled from beneath the Minister and he is the one who is now left to justify the enormous burden of administrative expense of his department which the timely adoption of a guaranteed income approach to welfare would have eliminated.

I want to read into the record at this time, the editorial from the Financial Times of Canada, of March 17 of this year, which says of the guaranteed income proposal:

To a diminishing number of persons this will seem like a horrifying proposal to reward idleness and "pay the bums for not working." The western world took most of the first half of the present century to digest fully the ideas that society must provide at least a basic living for the halt, the maimed, the blind, the widows and orphans, and even the able-bodied unemployed.

In the last 20 years this new social conscience has led to the proliferation of an enormous complex of government measures for redistributing incomes. Most of them have been based on the dominant, fashionable principle of universality. One Act after another has provided government payments to everyone who was blind, everyone under 16, everyone over 65, every farmer who was hauled out, everyone who could fit into the multitudinous categories prescribed by law.

This era, known to most of us as "the welfare state," has now led to two discoveries which are at the root of the current interest in guaranteed annual incomes.

One is that the principle of universality has become absurd. The taxable capacity of the productive spenders and savers is being exhausted to provide income supplements to whole classes of citizens who do not need them, while the prescribed classes too often exclude the persons in real need. The beneficent principle of income redistribution is fairness. Instead, it has become almost fortuitous.

The second discovery is that society's responsibility for the needy is no longer a matter of the moral conscience alone, but a demand of economic realism. As technology reduces the man-hours of labour required for a given amount of production, even the willingest worker may work shorter hours; the less skilled may find it difficult to work at all. Perhaps society can manage with fewer workers; what it cannot tolerate is fewer consumers. Some form of income maintenance is an economic necessity.

If the growing public debate about negative income tax and guaranteed incomes is to make any sense, it must be based on these two lessons of the welfare state. The basic principles must be to eliminate the inequities and sheer waste of the accumulated jumble of universal welfare programmes; to stop distributing pin money to prosperous families and $80 pensions to millionaires; and to provide a minimum income to those in need without having to search the small print of a dozen predetermined categories.

To present the new concept as an addition to all the present programmes of income support would be a cruel deception and an economic absurdity. Their virtue is to suggest a line of approach which might combine financial feasibility with greater fairness. Understood in this way, the approach is promising. Its consummation in practical policies requires much fuller consideration.

Well, Mr. Chairman, we have heard things good and bad about the new U.S. administration of President Nixon, but one thing can be said about this new group in office, and that is that they have been willing to continue the more promising programmes of the Office of Economic Opportunity, even as we in Ontario have run away from innovation.

I have a late report from Trenton, New Jersey, where a practical scheme of negative income taxation is being tested for the first time in America. This pilot project involves some 80 low-income families, who are given weekly cheques, according to need, from "tax funds", to lift them to an adequate level.

Note that point, Mr. Chairman. The cheques are weekly disbursements, not accumulations at the end of a financial year. The people get the money as they have been used to getting it, on a weekly basis. They may spend the money as they wish, so long as they answer a questionnaire every three months.

The Trenton project, begun last year, is apparently working so satisfactorily that two new programmes have just been set in motion, one involving families at Passaic, New Jersey, and the other families at nearby Paterson. Both of these later projects are expanded, and involve several hundred families.

The "tax funds", in this instance, are funnelled through the federal Office of Economic Opportunity, but that is just for developmental purposes, since obviously the universal version would involve the tax system in general.

Now, these projects are being run by university organizations. One is Mathematica of Princeton, New Jersey, and the other is the Institute for Research of the University of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this government should certainly have its own research people down there, at the very least, to see what is going on. Have they taken any initiatives at all, I wonder?

Mr. Chairman, we in this party shall continue to press the concept of a guaranteed income, not only upon the Minister, but also upon our friends in Ottawa. We are convinced, as a caucus, of its applicability here. Our members of the select committee endorsed this proposal and when they reported back to us, we were certainly more than ever convinced of the validity of the idea.

What we could not buy was its being tied to a tax on food, as, of course, our representatives on that committee could not, and so we had a minority report on that. It struck me again this weekend, in pondering over my notes for this speech, that a government which would even entertain such a proposal as a tax on food and only finally reject it in Cabinet when the outcry became obvious, is certainly the kind of government which believes that if you are born poor, you should die poor.

Mr. Chairman, the welfare game is becoming a professional game which affords a nice living for anyone who could, in the past, achieve a social work degree. Now, you see, the professionals are closing their ranks. There are fewer jobs to be had. They can see the writing on the wall. Next, after the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) has ironed out his present drafting difficulties we shall no doubt be having a new self-governing statute for the MSWs and the BSWs. Like the OSSTF, who managed to go all through their conference without once mentioning the kids, so it will be with the professional welfare establishment. They will be able to go through all the motions without once mentioning the poor.

The only way to break this vicious circle of an establishment with a vested interest in maintaining the status quo of poverty, is to throw the whole mechanism out the window and start again with the new principle of a guaranteed income that administers itself through the taxation system, and does away with those people who are not doing rehabilitation at all, but only administration.

I have no quarrel with the dedicated worker, the grass-roots toiler. All I am saying is there are too many who are in social work in name only, and whose entire time is devoted to maintaining the establishment and, of course, knocking the guaranteed income concept as part of that determined effort to keep things as they are.

Let me now turn to the situation facing the children's aid society, whose problems appear to centre on one thing: money; not simply a question of how much money is needed and provided to agencies, but also how, on what basis, and when, the money is given. Let me briefly review the pattern of what happens in this area.

The agency submits a request for funds to the province and to the municipality; if either government refuses to allocate the money requested, there is an attempt made to reach a compromise. Failing an agreement, the dispute is submitted, as it were, to arbitration.

Last year, in Ontario, all but four societies were in dispute with the government about the funds allocated to them; agreements were reached with all children's aid societies except the two in Toronto.

As a result, it was well into the fall before those societies got their moneys and this led to a trimming of service, particularly in two areas: first, the Metro CAS was unable to hire additional staff until well past the time when the pick of graduates had been snapped up for other social work positions. Second, the agency has had to refrain from expanding its preventive service—although these services of prevention are clearly laid out as a responsibility of the agency, according to the most recent Child Welfare Act.

To take the last point first, it is obvious that any curtailment of preventive service—which might rescue families in distress before the children need protection or custody—is the bookkeeping of the indifferent. The agency itself, not to say our mental hospitals, prisons, reform schools and other institutions are filled with children and adults, at least some of whom might not be there if they had been given help in time. It would be impossible to reckon the cost in human misery, let alone in the dollars so dear to the government's heart, that the lack of preventive service has caused and is causing. More than that, it is a cruel hoax to write an Act which reads like model legislation and then ensure that it is impossible of fulfilment.

The question of preventive service—or the lack of same—brings us full circle back to the question of how money is allocated. Many of the wards of any children's aid society are disturbed—in a far larger proportion than is true of children in society generally. This is because children do not suffer the traumas that make them known to children's aid agencies without suffering some damage. The child whose parents are alcoholic, or who is beaten, or molested, or neglected, cannot come into the care of an agency a sunny, undamaged being.

Some of these children have suffered experiences which scar them deeply and make them unable to live in normal home settings, and many require institutional care. Under the present system, the government gives societies moneys which are simply to be turned over to institutions like Browndale, Boy's Village, and so on.

The CAS has no financial control over these institutions and has no say whatever in the setting of rates. If Browndale's directors were to decide tomorrow that the fees at Browndale were $127.33 a day, the CAS could take it or leave it. Fortunately, they chose not to do so. The fees have remained the same for this year, at any rate.

However, the moneys which go to institutions are lumped, by the government, into the sum it gives agencies for their operation. First, this is an inefficient, not to say extravagant way, to handle the money; why should it go through the hands of the CAS instead of going directly to its intended recipient? This is a costly way of doing things.

More than that, it places the CAS in an invidious position: the government can claim that it has given the CAS as much money in one year—or even more money—than in previous years and yet leave the agency in a spot where it does not have one extra cent to spend and may, in fact, have less. For example, in 1967 the annual cost of care per child at Sacred Heart Village was $8,760; in 1968 that figure was $9,490 and in 1969, it will be $12,282.25. Similarly, the Madame Vanier Institute in London had an annual fee of $7,300 in 1967, $10,585 in 1968. The cost this year will be $11,888.05. Thus, if an institution raises its fees—by an amount that costs the society an extra 'x' dollars, the society must meet that bill—at whatever cost to other services. Mr. Chairman, the fact is that the service to suffer first and most, will be prevention.

This is a nightmare in itself—but what happens when the institutions raise their rates and the government gives the CAS the same or less money than in the previous years? It leaves the society in an intolerable squeeze over which it has no power.

There are several points to be made out of the above:

The societies must receive their moneys—even when there is a dispute—far enough in advance so that they can plan their operations realistically and intelligently.

Sums which are not meant for use or disbursement by the society and over which they have no control, must be paid directly to the institutions for which they are meant. The children's aid society, already overburdened, was designed as a service to needy families, and not as a handy adjunct to your friendly local bank.

The government cannot have it both ways: if it cannot provide the money for a given service, most particularly for preventive care, it must say so. This is just another example of the way in which the present administration sounds like heaven on paper and is hell in reality. The effect of this kind of sleazy dealing can only be to discourage the work of agency staff—from director to secretary—when they are given a job on the one hand and financially handcuffed on the other.

The government cannot cut down on its allocation to the CAS. It is quite evident that as Toronto and other cities grow, as they become more complex and as more is understood about family breakdown, the work of the CAS will, in the foreseeable future, continue to grow.

To use an old quote, John Dewey once said that, "What the best and wisest parent wants for his own child, that must be what the community wants for all its children". The government's present behaviour certainly lives down to its usual standard.

Next, I want to turn to adoption, and the possibility of subsidizing parents who wish to adopt children on a permanent and legal basis, but who need some help to begin with. Not every child available for adoption is "Today's Child", by any means. But, regardless of the fact that not all children are equally photogenic, their chances of adoption should not be lessened.

"Today's Child" is only one avenue, and relatively, not a very good one since it discriminates on the basis of good looks. But every child, pretty or ugly, has a right to be loved, to be cared for, by parents in a home setting. It is a pity that most of the so-called unadoptables do not get the chance, and if we can help really genuine people to adopt children, not just act as foster-parents, then we will have moved a long way towards making their lives worth living, and of reducing our unsatisfactory dependence on institutions.

For this reason, I was attracted by the favourable reports of the New York State Act of last year. Although this bill is not as wide as the one I would like to see enacted here, it is a beginning. Let me read into the record the report on the effects of this bill, as carried in the Christian Science Monitor of Thursday, March 20, 1969, under the byline of Miss Jo Ann Levine:

An expanding adoption market is stretching the old, inflexible restrictions on would-be adoptive parents. The parents have usually had to come from the middle or up-middle class. New York is the first city to open the way for lower-income families to adopt children. Its answer: provide these families with adoption subsidies of up to $120 per month.

The programme of adoption subsidies here is based on a bill which was passed by the New York Legislature last year. It is the first bill of its kind. It is a cautious bill. It limits the programme to those foster parents who wish to adopt the children they have been caring for—children who also are legally available for adoption.

This programme will affect primarily older children, black and Puerto Rican children, and white children with physical or mental handicaps. Such children would have grown up in foster homes as public charges anyway and would be described in adoption "market" language as "not so appealing".

White children who are healthy are almost always placed when they are babies unless there are legal complications.

Miss Mae Neely, director of the division of adoptive services of the city's Bureau of Child Welfare, says of New York's new adoption-subsidy bill: "It is not perfect, but it is a beginning." Miss Neely would like to see the bill affect all prospective adoptive parents who make under $11,000 a year—not just the foster parents.

But even of the 25,000 children in foster care as public charges, only 1,063 can be affected. These are the children legally free for adoption, the children who "could be adopted today" if there were homes for them.

For example, the New York City programme affects children like Jake, a four-year-old black boy whose four foster brothers and sisters consider him a "real brother". Although his foster parents are considered to be "good financial managers" by the Bureau of Child Welfare, they do not have enough money to adopt Jake now, and they depend on the $125 a month they receive as foster parents.

Jake's foster parents understand that even though they will receive a subsidy if they adopt him, it will not be as much as they receive as foster parents. Miscellaneous expenditures such as music lessons, camp expenses, and clothing are included in foster home care, but not under the adoption subsidy. Medical expenses are also allowed in special cases.

Mr. Chairman, the article goes on to describe some unusual children:

Jerry, a white child whose foster mother takes him to three different clinics for medical care is a special case. With a number of physical problems, Jerry is not considered by the Bureau of Child Welfare to be "good for adoption".

Jerry's foster parents, a minister and his wife, have cared for him since he was five months old. They were among the first foster families in the city to show an interest in adoption under the subsidy programme. Most experience so far with adoption subsidies has been in the form of paying for extra medical care.

Susan, a five-year-old Negro girl who has lived with her foster family since 1967, could be adopted now through the programme. Her foster family has one adopted child of its own and was waiting until it could afford to adopt Susan.

Now Susan's foster parents intend to apply for adoption and become her legal parents after the waiting period which in New York ranges from 6 to 18 months.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the article goes on to comment on the fact that such payments are not new.

For families like Susan's who will receive an adoption subsidy the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue has already ruled that the subsidy is not taxable "since it is provided from the general motives of philanthropy and charity".

An article on adoption subsidies in the February issue of Child Welfare magazine points out that "subsidies" in the form of tax credits, tax exemptions, or educational and research grants are nothing new in this nation. The article adds: "Children are our most precious resources."

Emanuel H. Fox, deputy director of the Bureau of Child Welfare in New York, notes a change in foster-care practices. He says: "Many years ago, there was some strong feeling that you had to be one or the other—foster parents or adoptive parents. Now, nationwide, particularly where many children are available, foster parents are encouraged to adopt."

Adds Miss Neely: "Our foster children have been adopted all along by foster parents. This has often been the non-white child's only salvation. A foster child always wants to belong. He wants to say, 'my family', but there is something that always comes between them."

Mr. Fox remarks that some people question the programme because they feel the "selfless love for a child" will be diminished by a subsidy. Mr. Fox does not think so.

Most of the disappearing "rules" surrounding adoption need no change in law—rules such as the old limits placed on the number of children a family can adopt, restrictions on the age of adopting parents, taboos against inter-racial adoptions, and adoption by single parents.

Adoption regulations are in a state of change, particularly in large cities which have a "surplus" of minority children whether they be blacks or Puerto Ricans in New York City, Mexicans in Los Angeles, or Indians in Phoenix.

But there is one professional opinion among adoption experts which has not changed. They still maintain that adoptions should take place through respected social agencies, that privately arranged adoptions are "risky".

Statistics show that "privately arranged" adoptions are remaining at a fixed level while the overall number of adoptions is going up. In 1967, agency adoptions accounted for 74 per cent of the 83,700 "nonrelative adoptions" in the United States.

Miss Neely notes another aspect of the adoption scene which has not changed: "We still look for people who love children, people who are mature, who have a good solid married life, who are responsible and stable, and who have the potential of developing into good parents." She emphasizes the word "potential".

Mr. Chairman, that is the end of that quote. My point is that if this is working so well in New York, why cannot we study this or at best import this idea into Ontario, and give our children a real chance at family life? Perhaps this might be the solution to the problem of our unadoptables who are presently being exported, to no one's satisfaction.

Now I want to go back and quote from page 3138 of last year's Hansard, where I said:

We shall also want to know, in furtherance of Mrs. J. M. Barstow's inquiry at the Ontario Welfare Council of May 20, 1968, whether or not this government is prepared to subsidize family day-care programmes as well as day nurseries. Mrs. Barstow is chairman of the Toronto social planning council's day care committee, and she is apparently backed by expert opinion in her representations to the effect that agency-sponsored family day care is preferable to day nursery care.

Also, it is now said to be much more feasible, since the community colleges are offering courses in child care and homemaking. We would like to know, is an amendment to The Day Nurseries Act now seen to be imminent by the government, in view of these changed conditions? Perhaps the Minister would care to comment on this?

Now, Mr. Chairman, that was quoting from my lead-off speech of last year. Perhaps the Minister would like to comment on that this year, in view of the article that was in the Telegram yesterday. The Telegram is not necessarily a newspaper which is critical of the government, but in any event I trust the Minister has seen the article which is headed: "Toronto MPPs Ignore Day Care Agency". It is by Yvonne Crittenden, Telegram staff reporter, and I will just read a little bit of this, Mr. Chairman, because it points up what I have been saying:

The lack of day care for many children of working mothers is being ignored by Conservative MPPs, a Toronto family agency charges.

Protestant Children's Homes based its opinion on the reaction of Tory MPPs to letters from constituents urging the Ontario government to bring family day care under provincial legislation.

The article goes on to make other comments, Mr. Chairman. I will quote this part where it says:

"To date," says Mrs. Mary Turner, president of the Protestant Children's Homes, "the only success we have had is to discover how little our elected members know about day care."

Letters received back from NDP and Liberal MPPs were enthusiastic about family day care being brought under provincial legislation.

Tory MPPs however, almost to a man, replied with the sentiment expressed by Mr. Yaremko when he said: "The department considers it preferable that day care of children apart from their parents should take place in a setting like a nursery where training staff provide a beneficial experience for them."

Now perhaps the Minister would like to comment on that later.

Our previous critic of this portfolio, Mr. Horace Racine, asked, two years ago—and I mention this, Mr. Chairman, just to point out what this party has been trying to do over the years, to repeat and repeat and to hope that some of our suggestions might sink in with this department:

Has the Minister thought of a programme similar to the one mentioned in the May 1967 issue of the Christian Science Monitor entitled "Success Insurance" which prods employers in the anti-poverty fight? I quote from that article:

"The Office of Economic Opportunity is more and more taking signals from the American business community. . . . Anti-poverty officials consider it good politics. . . . They also think of it as sound policy. Businessmen, after all, they say, have long experience in job training and development. . . . and it is job development which is central to the elimination of poverty, OEO officials maintain. . . ."

"The latest cue from the business community is a proposal to insure businessmen against the risks of taking poor people into training programmes. . . . OEO has agreed to try out a programme in a pilot project in four cities which will be announced later. . . . The OEO publicity people have given the new programme the title 'Success Insurance'. . . . The concept was advanced through the OEO Business Leadership Advisory Council which recently met in Washington to discuss the current direction of the poverty programme. . . ."

"The 'Success Insurance' plan was developed by Joseph H. Kanter, a Cincinnati banker and industrialist. 'Basically, the principle of this proposal,' he explained, 'is to motivate private industry to accomplish socially desirable objectives by insuring it against undue risk and loss.' He says the plan 'encourages and motivates the unemployed towards new achievements—and with dignity, since no hand-out, charity or giveaway is involved.' The programme insures the businessman who employs poor and under-skilled persons for both training costs and losses from low productivity during the learning period.

"This would come in Phase I of the programme designed to reach the hard-core unemployed. OEO will put up the funds for the insurance. Then, if an employee leaves during the training programme, the business would be reimbursed for the cost of the training. Thus the business will be protected. This protection is thought to give sufficient incentive to the businessman to willingly take on the training venture. If the trainee, however, finishes the programme and becomes a productive worker, without leaving the programme, then it would cost the Office of Economic Opportunity nothing."

And the article goes on giving a description of Phase 2 of the programme, which permits a worker who has received Phase 1 to pay for his own insurance, and to receive a loan from the business which trains him.

And the article ends thus: "Clearly, the interest which business is showing in the poverty programme is growing steadily."

And then Mr. Racine went on to ask this question of the Minister, two years ago:

Could not such a programme be implemented in our "Province of Opportunity"? Could not the Minister of Social and Family Services, with the Minister of Economics and Development, the Minister of Labour, and perhaps, the Minister of Education, get together to do something like this in the province? Immediate results may not be seen before a few years. But in 10 years we might have succeeded in making thousands of families in underdeveloped areas self-supporting and helping to develop our economy. Is this not one of the ways of eliminating poverty from our province?

Mr. Chairman, two years later I am asking the same question again, and this time I would like an answer, something Mr. Racine did not get.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, a quick rundown of some of the other points I wish to make more fully as the various votes come up.

The Minister used to get over the long time lag in the statistics supplied in his annual report by publishing a monthly bulletin. This seems to have stopped. Why?

What happened to the much-vaunted welfare appeal board? Is it operating? Why do we hear so little about it? Is it that the Minister does not have enough people available to get the board going? We hear talk about involving the poor in programmes to do with the poor. Why then, is this not being done here? There are many capable people in receipt of welfare, and they know at first hand what the hang-ups are. So let us have them in positions where they can advance the schemes and methods of welfare in a meaningful manner.

Since last year, we have seen, on federal initiative, the establishment of two federal-provincial task forces. One will look into the implications of the costs of all social assistance programmes. The other will study the social alienation of welfare recipients and the integration of services to help combat that alienation. These task forces are not expected to report, however, before September next. But the dialogue must not die in the interim.

We have to be eternally vigilant, as Friday's Hansard shows (March 21, 1969). Here, and I quote, the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) confirms the existence of a report setting out "the rate that will be paid by any department of government which subsidizes in full or in part the maintenance of patients in nursing homes". Any department. So that includes Social and Family Services. And here is the Minister of Health getting this secret report and refusing to table it in the House.

We are told by the Minister of Health that:

On the basis of an analysis of nursing home costs, it was ascertained that a rate of $9.50 per diem was adequate to meet and curb expenditures and depreciation, and provide for an appropriate return on investment. In addition it took into account additional expenditures related to the increase in the minimum wage.

That is what the Minister of Health said. However, the report was not available to members of this Legislature—and just how long can this government continue to treat elected representatives of the people of Ontario in this fashion? This action is not so much an affront to this House, although it is that, but an insult to the people, the taxpayers, of Ontario as a whole. Since this report was not made available to the Legislature, no breakdown of costs was seen. Nor were they forthcoming when the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown) pressed for them. "We simply state," said the Minister of Health with his usual degree of arrogance, "that $9.50 per diem in our judgment is the rate that will be paid by any department of government". His words. Judge and jury. Take it or leave it. Gratuitously, he added: "We do not presume to dictate to the nursing home industry what they shall charge".

My point, Mr. Chairman, is this. Either the nursing home industry is making inordinate profits by charging more than $9.50 a day, or the government is short-changing the operators by putting on this power-play, this squeeze-play in rates. It can only be one or the other, and, so far as the public is concerned, the situation either way is totally unsatisfactory.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I want to say that the shameful treatment of the Indians of Ontario by this government, which hides behind its unique interpretation of The BNA Act to duck its responsibilities in this regard, is becoming known far and wide.

Even the Telegram which, as I said, is usually quite friendly to this government, has just run a series of articles, and some of the things that I saw in these articles, Mr. Chairman, have left me really wondering. I did not know, and I am sure most of the people who read the Telegram had no idea of the facts, that an Indian has to ride in the rear coach of the ONR trains. If some of the things that were stated in that series of articles are true, then our northland, our Indian reserves are no better than some of the places found south of the border.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, we as a group cannot look in the mirror and say we have no faults. This government, Mr.

Chairman—if some of those things are true—has an awful lot that it could do.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, has the Minister of Social and Family Services ever considered taking the Cabinet, or asked the Prime Minister to take the Cabinet to visit some of these reserves? Has he actually ever considered meeting some of these Indians—and I do not only mean the band leaders, but I mean some of the new militants, some of the very ones you may be seeing right in front of Queen's Park here some day, who may be having a march of the poor. Let me warn this government, Mr. Chairman, that it is very possible that you will be having a Cabinet meeting right upstairs while they are downstairs, and I can see the Minister of Social and Family Services saying to the Prime Minister, "What do they want? What did we do wrong?"

For years, Mr. Chairman, my leader and many of the members from this party, and members from the New Democratic Party, have been trying to tell you to ask the Indians what they want, see what can be done to get them to help themselves, because if we do not, I am afraid there is going to be a bombshell of an explosion. I say this, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, because it is frightening when you see on television how the Rev. Abernathy had this march of the poor to Washington, and what some of the police tried to do to them there.

I wonder what is going to happen to the OPP, whether they are going to try and stop some of the Indians coming in, because it is going to happen. I am not just talking in fanciful terms.

The member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) mentioned what the police did when there was not even any cause for panic—no reason for trying to stop people from getting in here—when the humane society people came. I wonder what is going to happen if we do have Indians from all over Ontario come down to Queen's Park to protest their lot right here. If there is the slightest bit of violence, what is our OPP going to do then, what kind of orders are they going to get from the Cabinet? Mr. Chairman, the Indians of this province know that in every way, from OMSIP to community development, they are getting short-changed, and this Minister's department is no exception. To the Robarts government, Ontario's Indians are second-class citizens, period. Is that the way it must continue to be? I certainly hope not.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak as critic of the New Democratic Party for The Department of Social and Family Services, I have listed a series of questions for the Minister, questions which I expect to be answered during the estimates.

I would like to draw to the Minister's (Mr. Yaremko) attention that he is to be severely criticized if this is the last report that has been made from his department—"The 35th Annual Report 1965/66"—which leaves us with statistics three years and three months old. I would say, Mr. Chairman, if there is no more recent report, and none of our members have one, we are going to be here for a long time getting these facts and figures sorted out.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): A number of months, I would think.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Minister would advise the members where the report is—hearing an interjection just now—or the state it is in for our use.

An hon. member: When can we expect it?

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would make note that I believe this is the only department that is far behind in presenting its annual report to the members of the Legislature.

Question 1. What were the amounts requested by the Minister for his department in submitting his requirements to the Treasury Board?

Question 2. What cutbacks were made by the Minister on the amounts to meet the Treasury Board's decision?

Question 3. Would the Minister have expanded the services of his department if there were sufficient funds from the Treasury Board, and where would they have been expanded?

Question 4. What research, if any, has been done, or will be done, by the Minister's department to evaluate the successes and failures of the system now employed by his department in the various areas of alleviating social misery, social needs?

Question 5. What are the goals of the Minister's department? Where is the department going? What will the department have achieved at the end of spending nearly $265 million, for which he is requesting approval during these estimates?

That concludes my questions, Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of these estimates.

I would like to break my remarks today into three sections. First, I would like to speaking about the people from whom the $265 million approximately is taken. Second, I will speak for the people who are in receipt of the benefits of the $265 million, under the Acts of The Department of Social and Family Services. And third, I would like to get to the heart and the mind of the members of the Cabinet who, in my view, have contrived a remarkable combination of neanderthal thinking with clever cunningness to give, and yet not give, Mr. Chairman, assistance under The General Welfare Assistance Act and The Family Benefits Act to persons in need in the province of Ontario.

This legislation is not worthy of some of the clever minds in the Cabinet of the province of Ontario. There is no point, Mr. Chairman, in having a legislative assembly where, if we come in here after hours, we find men very carefully dusting the fine scrolls on the wall, and upstairs we find the ladies very carefully dusting and washing the fine grille work on the railings, if we have the conditions that we have outside these doors.

There is no use, Mr. Chairman, in a government like this one, having the Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) entertaining symphony orchestra leader Mr. Ozawa and his parents on one night in this building, while in Metropolitan Toronto alone, 15,000 to 16,000 children of families in receipt of public welfare are being short changed in life, as children, and never really catching up in many instances. However, Mr. Chairman, it is the prerogative of the Prime Minister to not invite members of the Opposition in entertaining such an interesting family as the Ozawa family, but it is not, I say with respect, Mr. Chairman—because of the courtesy I have had extended to me in this Chamber—the prerogative of the government, the Cabinet or the Prime Minister, to disregard problems of the children and the unsheltered persons in the province of Ontario, except for these two dreadful Acts.

I refer, of course, to The General Welfare Assistance Act, and The Family Benefits Act. The Prime Minister, Mr. Chairman, must take the responsibility for the unsheltered. They are the Prime Minister's people, Mr. Chairman, as much as the taxpayers, as much as the people with special income, special interests, or the people of the business and financial community. The responsibility has fallen upon this Prime Minister, or been sought by him, to lead the millions of people in the whole of Ontario to a full and productive life. The unsheltered in our province, Mr. Chairman, are in the direct care of the Prime Minister, and that is a broad responsibility that rests on his shoulders.

Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions that I would like to ask with respect of the Prime Minister. He may have the shoulders, Mr. Chairman, but does he have the will and the determination to overhaul this antiquated system that most of us are living under in this province, trying to assist persons in need? As an example, Mr. Chairman, in Metro Toronto there is something wrong with a society that cannot take 6,000 to 7,000 families into its mainstream of life when there are nearly two million persons here to do it. Something is wrong with the system, Mr. Chairman, and it is a challenge to the Prime Minister.

Ontario leads in so many facets; why not modernize its care for the unsheltered, so members like myself can be proud of the system? We are the province of abundance and members of the legislative assembly are always being told that we, in this province, lead in welfare assistance.

Mr. Chairman, I say why not? I am looking at a report of the Canadian committee of the International Council on Social Welfare for the 14th International Conference, May, 1968. On page 57, table 8 are the results of the United Fund Drive—numbers of affiliated agencies and population served by provinces in Canada in 1967. The source is the Canadian Welfare Council and the Canadian Community Funds and Council. Mr. Chairman, of the provinces listed, the province of Ontario in its United Fund drives alone, to say nothing of government funding, raised $20 million plus in total receipts.

Other provinces, Mr. Chairman, drop away down below that. The nearest one is Quebec with $12 million plus and then nearest to that is British Columbia with $4 million plus. The others are $1 and $2 million; and there are three less than $1 million. Why should Ontario not lead in this legislation?

As I said, Mr. Chairman, it is a challenge. But let us look where we are going in the province of Ontario in relationship to minority groups and especially to the unsheltered persons. I make those comments, with all due respect.

Lastly, I will speak on the things which might be changed in the Minister's department to bring it into focus as being a department which is knowledgeable about the reality of the conditions of the families for whom it is providing this service. There are a few facts of life which must be brought home to the Minister in this department, and to members of Cabinet, before they can usefully spend $265 million in this department and show some productive return for their efforts. They must make goals and set out to achieve them and must make research of what they have done and the effect it has had on the problem.

I turn now, Mr. Chairman, to section 1—the people from whom the $265 million plus will be taken. There are many families in the province of Ontario who have contributed towards the budget that we are presently being asked to approve in these estimates for the department. Most of those families contributed the year before to last year's estimates of $227 million and to the estimates before, Mr. Chairman, of millions of dollars. And in the interim periods they contributed to community chests, cancer campaigns, all the various drives of funds for social needs that we have had in our province over the years to assist government in its work of caring for persons in need.

Most of these individuals and families do not mind that they have been contributing to the alleviation of human suffering and need. These are not wealthy families, Mr. Chairman. Recent interim DBS statistics have shown that more than 50 per cent of the families in the province of Ontario earn less than $7,000 a year. We heard in the Throne Speech debate from the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) that families of four who earn $7,000 a year pay approximately $1,287 annually in government taxation and premiums of one kind or another.

This leaves the family which earns $7,000 with an income of liquid assets of $5,713 from its $7,000 income, or about $15 a day. We heard in the same member's Throne Debate Speech that if the family income for four is $5,000 a year, they pay $862 exclusive of indirect taxes and motor vehicles taxes, in government taxation and premiums, leaving them $4,138 income or $11 a day. The cost of living for those families has risen in the last year 4.5 per cent on all items and 3.8 per cent on food alone.

I am impelled to point out, Mr. Chairman, that what the average family has left to live on is eaten up pretty well with the business of just living, paying for food, clothing and shelter and automobile, books, newspapers, smokes, incidental personal needs, and the money it has given to government is really the cream of its income, which if government were not taking any at all, it would in all likelihood accrue in a savings account for that rainy day when adversity might hit, for the day in the family where one should fall ill or the day when drugs have to be purchased on a continuing basis or a catastrophe might strike, for the day when emotional instability might hit anyone in the family.

We are taking that money into government, Mr. Chairman—the $1,287 in the case of the $7,000-a-year family of four and the $862.38 in the case of the $5,000-a-year family of four. A lot of these people from whom we are taking this money are saying: "Why government at all? Maybe I would just as soon bank this money, take my chances with some other kind of system." And the government says: "Who will build your roads, build your schools, provide a network of communication?" And the reply will be: "Private enterprise, because they provide it anyway".

Perhaps they will provide it more expeditiously and more efficiently than it is provided under government because they are in the business of building roads and they are in the business of building schools and they are not, at the same time, caught up in the intricacies of government. And if they enquire they would learn that this year government is also asking for $740 million in round figures in the estimates for education. And they will ask "Why do new schools have electronic clocks that cost some $650, that are synchronized and electrically timed and we got through our schooling with a clock on the wall that cost probably closer to $65?"

And because they see these visual things they will ask: "Why would plywood chairs with small nicks be scrapped in my child's school? Why were they not filled with plastic wood like I would have to do at home?"

In The Department of Highways, which is the second highest estimate we are looking at in this session—the $483 million estimate they will say: "What are they doing all the time on Highway 401? Why has Highway 7 between Peterborough and Ottawa been under a constant state of resurfacing and repairing over the last 10 to 15 years?" And when they look at the $397 million estimated for The Department of Health they will say: "You need all this money for health? Why did OMSIP premiums and my Ontario Hospital Services Commission premiums go up and why am I asked to pay them sometimes as far ahead as six months?"

Yet, Mr. Chairman, in these three departments and these three estimates—which are the only three departments with estimates in excess of The Department of Social and Family Services—at least the taxpayer sees some tangible evidence of what is being done.

He sees roads being built, signs going on them, schools coming into communities, probably children in them, community health services at school, hospitals being built.

He does not see anything for the $264,700 that is being requested for The Department of Social and Family Services. Then, when these same families draw or need to draw on welfare assistance, I would like to give you half a dozen examples and a couple of actual statements of what happens to these families. These are all actual cases, Mr. Chairman.

Case A: The man in the family becomes ill. He had a small television repair business which now, because of his heart condition, he is unable to work at. The wife has worked for a public utility for 10 to 12 years and has built a small form of security with that company, earning approximately $55 a week. After a month or two of illness, the family cannot meet their mortgage payments.

The money the wife earns is not enough to do the two things that are required to be done: one, meet the mortgage payments for shelter and, two, provide herself and her husband with food, incidentals, transportation, drugs. In the face of losing their home, the wife turns to The Department of Social and Family Services or The Department of Welfare for assistance.

She is told because she earns $55 a week that the family does not qualify for assistance. She is told, however, that: "If you give up your job you will be entitled to shelter allowance, therefore your mortgage will be met—it is within the allowance made in provision under the Act and a sum will be paid monthly as well, to you and your husband, of $80 to $96 as persons of need."

But, Mr. Chairman, the family did not want to become totally dependent on government. The family simply wanted the mortgage payments met until the husband was able to earn for himself once more. The husband has provided the mortgage payments up until now; the wife's income does not allow for both care of her husband and herself and providing the payments.

It is not a very complex situation, Mr. Chairman. It is ludicrous that we have a government which will care for this family totally if the wife will choose not to work, but will not assist her in keeping herself in the work force.

Now I know, Mr. Chairman, that this is pretty dry stuff and it concerns only a few thousand people in the province, but it matters a great deal to the people who are trying to make it work.

I do not know where the press go when they go from the galleries up there, but I notice they are gone. There probably is not anything very exciting for them here because they have never really sat down and looked to find out what is exciting. The people do not know their rights and the press have an obligation, in my personal view, Mr. Chairman, to provide public information through the press as to how their government is working for them.

In case B, Mr. Chairman, a widow with small children is getting down to the last few thousand dollars of her insurance money—and, as I said before, Mr. Chairman, these are all actual cases. I would be glad to supply them to anyone who has an interest in their facts.

She applied for mother's allowance. Under the regulation for mother's allowance, she is allowed to keep savings of $1,200 for herself, plus one dependent child, plus $200 for each additional dependent child in the family.

The mother's allowance is going to take three months to process. That in itself, Mr. Chairman, is a farce. When a woman is widowed and is a clear-cut case for mother's allowance, there should be no reason why she should not come to this building, if to nowhere else, and declare herself, not go on the roll of the municipality left to provide 20 per cent of her care until such time as her case is dealt with by this government.

When she comes to this building, or to any other building, Mr. Chairman, and shows that she is a person in need, her allowance could begin immediately. It could be reclaimed if anything was done in error, as this system is in use today. She could do this, Mr. Chairman, before the money which the Act has made provision for her to keep is used up.

There are no great public notices telling widows of the province of Ontario to be sure to contact government three months ahead. The latest report I have back from a mother's allowance applicant is that the workers told her it would take six months to process the application. There is nothing to say: "It will take three months or six months to check you out and make certain that you are eligible for this allowance, so therefore please apply to us while you still have about $5,000 of your husband's insurance money left."

In this particular case, the woman was advised to pay $1,000 off her home—she had actually $2,000 from her insurance money on her husband's death—and when she got down to $200 she was to go to welfare and they would expect her to live on the $200 for one month. Then, after she had been on welfare and her mother's allowance was processed, she would be entitled to mother's allowance—when the nest egg of money specifically provided for in the Act that she would have been allowed to keep under the Act is used up.

In this particular case, the lady lived on welfare from April-May, 1968, until she called me in September, a full six and a half months later, to see why she could not get on mother's allowance. This system, Mr. Chairman, is defeating the whole purpose of having a Family Benefit Act. And I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the lady, once my action was exerted, was put on the allowance forthwith. That is another thing, Mr. Chairman, that is wrong with the system.

However, I was curious as to why this had taken so long, Mr. Chairman, so I wrote a letter. And before speaking of the letter, because it is addressed to Dr. James Band, I would like to say that I certainly join with the Minister in his affectionate remarks towards Dr. Band. Although I have not met Dr. Band personally and I will rectify it at some future date, Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate from many reports I have had that the gentleman has done an excellent service to the province of Ontario and to this government.

But I wrote Dr. Band outlining how much the recipient appreciated receiving the mother's allowance and thanked all concerned. I quote now from that letter:

However, as a member of the legislative assembly, I am at the present time vitally concerned with the delay in processing applications for mother's allowance under The Family Benefits Act.

The delay, of course, can mean that the mother must use up the last thousand dollars before being eligible for general welfare assistance until the mother's allowance benefit is approved, where—

And then I outlined, Mr. Chairman, that she would have been allowed to retain some financial assets. In the last paragraph, I said:

I am now looking at several cases in my riding of Scarborough Centre where this has happened and respectfully request that you will please comment on the delay between the date of original application and the granting of an allowance in this specific case.

I think we have to know, Mr. Chairman, when there are delays like this why there are delays and why they cannot be handled more expediently.

By allowing this sort of "first welfare assistance and then mother's allowance" technique, this government is making a complete mockery of the rules and regulations of The Family Benefits Act, which distinctly call for an amount of money to be left with the family. And I might say, Mr. Chairman, that emotionally and spiritually, by now, widowed and deserted and separated mothers in this position have not only suffered the loss of their husbands but they then have to suffer the indignities that go with public welfare. And there are indignities, Mr. Chairman, and I will deal with those later.

Case C: In this case the mother is an emphysema victim. The father earns $85 to $90 a week. The family is four children, ranging in age from five to mid-teens. The mother is anxious to stay well and alive and care for her children while she can, and to do this she requires somewhere between $15 and $35 a month for modern drugs for treatment of emphysema.

At the time I am speaking to you, Mr. Chairman, the family is in danger of losing their home because they cannot meet payments. They have until June to do so. They are in danger of the gas being cut off. And it is not that they cannot manage their income—they have a very strict budget which allows $15 a week for food for the family of seven—but what they do need is to not have to put any of their housekeeping money on drugs. And if they do not offer, Mr. Chairman, through government, some form of partial assistance to this family, they have two alternatives.

One, the applicant says, has been carefully outlined by the Scarborough Department of Welfare: "Mrs. — if your husband leaves you we can supply you with everything." The husband has had a breakdown, on one occasion from the strain of stretching the dollars and the worry of the illness; watching the money grow smaller and smaller, depending on how many dollars of drugs are needed for that month, whether it is $15 or whether it is $35, because of the changing treatment, and he now is saying on occasion: "This is it. I am going, I am clearing out, you would be better off."

He had never been an irresponsible father, Mr. Chairman. His wife has testified to this. His wife has not lost hope, she is so anxious to do something for herself and for other people in this position that she wants to do a television broadcast. She wants to talk publicly. She has asked me to use her name—I will call her Mrs. W. She wants to know what she could do to expose this unusual situation where a family needs such a small amount of assistance, and if they do not get it, might very well end up costing the government a great deal more.

There is something wrong with the system, Mr. Chairman, that cannot provide this lady with $35 a month, or more, for drugs in the anticipation that the family will be kept from being totally dependent on government. If this lady is incapacitated any further before the children reach maturity, this government will have on its hands the cost of four children on children's aid, at as much per day as she is asking now per month, and the chances of that happening are very good.

The lady has been a TB patient. Her daughter is a TB patient, or has the same lung disease. The mother has had a legal abortion and hysterectomy because the doctors did not feel she was well enough or strong enough to bear one more child. In a few years if she can carry out her responsibility of raising her children it will have to be with the assistance of government.

Case D: Mr. Chairman, what happens in the case of an aged person whom no one in the family can support in the fashion that is needed once the aged parent becomes incapacitated?

I am looking at a case of a 65-year-old daughter who has supported her mother ever since her mother was 50 years old. Her mother at the present time is 91 years. For 40 years the government was spared having to support a lady who had never worked, whose daughter had the initiative to go to work and support the two of them, sometimes along with the help of her husband, so they were able to care for the mother in their home.

Now the 65-year-old daughter is widowed. She is suffering from angina herself. She cared for her mother right up until the day her mother had a stroke recently—about Christmas time, if I recall the case correctly—and financially the daughter had been able to care for the mother when there was no other case needed. The mother was a woman of sound mind and sound limb, but after the stroke she became a person who was able to wash and care for herself to a degree but was sometimes continent, sometimes incontinent; sometimes vague, sometimes unsure on her feet.

The 65-year-old daughter could not provide for the kind of care that the mother now needs. All her life the daughter has contributed to taxes, as have all these other people I have been speaking about, Mr. Chairman, and their husbands also. Then at some juncture of their lives they turn around to call upon the service themselves and find that there is nothing there. They find that they have been supporting something which is not real to them, something which is a paternalistic cash hand-out only if you are completely destitute in the area of public welfare, and only if you fall neatly into some form of categorical aid under The Family Benefits Act.

So after caring for a person who would otherwise have been dependent on government for 40 to 50 years, the daughter then finds herself now needing and begging government to take care of her 91-year-old mother. She had to declare to a hospital, Mr. Chairman, that she would not be home if they delivered the mother—because they threatened to deliver the 91-year-old home.

The private doctor was saying the patient needed convalescent care; the hospital doctor was saying the patient did not need convalescent care. The doctor was under pressure to clear the hospital bed—and we all know that story, Mr. Chairman, and we will discuss it under another department.

These people are shocked, they are absolutely shocked that they have been contributing for years to something which they cannot draw upon at the time they need it. It is usually the first time they have needed government in this type of assistance. In many cases it may be the last time.

Case E: This is a family with an emotionally disturbed child. The family have basically handled the child themselves, though the child is blind, possibly retarded, but definitely emotionally disturbed. The child is now eight, Mr. Chairman. In ten years the child is going to be an adult. What will she have learned by then and how far will her capacities have been tapped? Will they have been tapped to full strength?

The mother cannot keep on being a source of strength and source of supply to the child. Through The Department of Education the child is at present in a nursery school where the lady in charge of the school has worked with some deaf children, but other than this she has had no training whatsoever to work with emotionally disturbed children nor blind children. The child does not qualify for the blind school because of her emotional disturbance.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, the family who have been contributing now find that in their time of need there is nothing there. There is nothing in The Department of Social and Family Services for this family of need. And I would ask the Minister if he would support a day care programme in the areas where these cases come before us. Would he support a programme put in by the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis)—a day care programme in Scarborough, for instance—for emotionally disturbed children?

What seems to be the most dastardly flaw to me in many ways, because we tend to think of our civilization as being civilized now, is the plight of the unmarried mother who leaves the hospital with her infant and the infant is not allowed to be a recipient along with the mother, on mother's allowance, until the infant is three months old. So the two of them go on welfare. Mr. Chairman, this to me is deplorable.

This is government saying some mothers will give up their child, some of them will have a struggle and they will part with the child—and that is the likelihood in many instances—and the government really does not want the trouble of booking them on, booking them off, so we will just make a nice three-month cushion here. A shabby trick.

The other shabby side of the story, Mr. Chairman, is the plight of the pregnant girl whom the doctor provides with a chart requiring meat, vegetables, milk, and assistance is only provided under The Department of Welfare if the pregnant girl is not living at home, if under 21 years of age. If she is living at home, her parents are expected to provide for her. In a case I recently had the unhappy experience of sitting on one end of a telephone listening to exactly what happened in an instance such as this.

The father earned $30 a week as a part-time worker in a shopping centre, cleaning it up. The mother had always managed to work and that was the combination that sustained the family—a family of courage, a family of religion, a family of close association with each other. They were so close that the mother's shock at the daughter's plight—aggravated by the fact that the partner of the pregnant girl found some delight in taunting the mother by telephone about the girl's condition—meant the mother was unable to work. She became severely depressed and took an overdose of pills. The daughter called an ambulance and got the mother to hospital. We believe at this date the mother has been saved.

But because the mother was so worried about what was going to happen to her 17-year-old daughter, with respect to food and care, she became absolutely useless to the daughter herself. And I am shocked and horrified to think that in this day and age we do not have a system in this province outside of private organizations and private religious groups, which have come to recognize that a lone pregnant girl—so often of the age of 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18—needs a secure warm, dry, healthy place to live and to be fed, providing she is being left by society to carry an unwanted pregnancy, because we have not any proper abortion laws in Canada or in Ontario.

We have not come very far from the days of Oliver Twist in many ways, Mr. Chairman, and there is very little point in our being proud of erecting a $14 million pavilion at the Canadian National Exhibition when in fact we have these conditions, or in having "The Warble Fly Control Act" if we are missing the whole spectrum of care and accounting for unsheltered persons in between those two extremes.

I am not saying that we should not be building the $14 million pavilion. I am simply saying that we have enough money, we have enough resources, we have enough brain power and we should have enough intelligence in the province of Ontario, to deal with the cases I have described in a healthy manner, in a manner of prevention, something which the whole Department of Social and Family Services is entirely without.

It is entirely without any programme of prevention, even though, as I pointed out during the last session, it takes huge amounts of money from the federal government, under the Canada Assistance Plan, an Act that carefully calls for prevention in the areas of social need, and an unlimited amount of assistance may be provided under the Act when necessary.

In answer to the provisions under the Canada Assistance Plan, in the province of Ontario, we get instead the devious cunning of the persons who devise these Acts, any amount of "special assistance" available, provided it is approved by the Deputy Minister. No one who goes in and out of the offices, or applies for these services, is ever told this.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the clause saying this "special assistance" of any kind may be granted, providing it is approved by the Deputy Minister, might just as well not be in the Act. It is simply window dressing.

And if, Mr. Chairman, the Minister can fault me and say, "Well, we do have this many cases of special assistance," I would say quite clearly that this is certainly not common knowledge of the average applicant for assistance in the province of Ontario in any of the welfare offices that I have spoken to in the last year.

It is the deviousness of this government that puts it there—the phrase "special assistance"—and then does not make it an actual avenue of expeditious service by not laying down the ground rules to municipalities, Mr. Chairman.

It is amazing, Mr. Chairman, what comes sometimes from the province of Alberta, besides, I believe, our own Prime Minister. But an act of prevention has come—

Mr. Lewis: That may account for it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —has come from joining the Canada Assistance Plan. From the province of Alberta comes a prevention Act—and that province, for private United Fund drives, Mr. Chairman, was only able to raise almost $3 million. We have raised almost seven times that much privately, and somehow, we are limping along behind another province. We are in the dark ages, Mr. Chairman, in that regard.

My last three cases are of the people who come to the door and knock and find there is nothing for them, sometimes are told so in sometimes polite terms, sometimes very impolite terms.

I would like to draw attention to the case of a lady discharged from hospital; a chronic care patient whose husband earns $50 a week. The husband does the laundry for the lady; the lady is sometimes incontinent. The lady's spirit is such that she was determined to fight. The lady has, since I made these notes, Mr. Chairman, died.

The husband applied for assistance of someone to go into the home, or money to provide for someone to go into the home, even part of the day, to alleviate the long day of a chronic care patient. Once again, Mr. Chairman, if the husband had left his job completely all would have been cared for. The gentleman applied last July, the decision was made in November and the tragic end to that story was that in January, the lady died.

There is the case of a widow, struggling to meet rent increases—a case which I have brought into the House by name previously, because of high increase of rent—supporting one son, 14 years of age. He was apparently a student who merited the $30 board of education scholarship but, because he was 14 instead of 15, got $20 from IODE instead. Her daughter went through the school on the same $30 educational scholarship of this government and yet, somehow, we have not been able to tie in their need for housing with our anxiety to assist them in education.

People are concerned when they are in the next-to-poverty level, Mr. Chairman. I have a letter from a constituent in my riding which I will be glad to divulge to anybody who would like to see it, but because of the responsibility of it, I would have to make certain as to whom the letter was going. It was written in February of last year and I updated it partly through the year. It is a short letter, Mr. Chairman. It says:

Dear Mrs. Renwick:

I trust you will not find me too impertinent writing you but you are our member at Queen's Park.

Are you aware that there are employees in the Civil Service of Ontario—Department of Highways, to be exact—making less than $4,500 a year? Could you raise two children and run a house on that? My husband is one of those underpaid workers. We would have more peace of mind if we were on welfare. The technical and drafting group has been negotiating for a raise since 1966, with no results.

Mr. Chairman, in there I have written "raise was given—$150 a year, and they were asking for $300 or more." To continue with the letter, Mr. Chairman:

Furthermore, is it fair that some departments in the civil service demand exams before a person can advance where others do not? I fully realize this is your initial term as a member of Parliament and do not actually know what you could do about it, but I thought you should be made aware of these conditions. I hope you will keep our name out of any discussions as I would not want to jeopardize my husband's job.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is something rather pathetic about a letter like that. The government is on both ends of this letter.

If the family should disintegrate under the system and go on welfare, then they are having to take them on the other end. Why not look after their needs by providing a decent income to keep them from having to come to the government's door?

I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to a Toronto Daily Star editorial, September 21, 1968. It is entitled:

WELFARE SYSTEM PROMOTES LYING, CHEATING

New York Civil Liberties Union: The union advocates the substitution of an income maintenance programme, which is unconditionally guaranteed as a matter of right, for the present welfare system.

We take this position because our examination of the present welfare system has led us to conclude that it contains severe and pervasive deprivation of civil liberties. The intrusion of privacy that is built into the present system, can best be illustrated by a description of the way in which the system actually operates in New York city.

The semi-monthly welfare cheque in New York city is based on pre-figured allowances in these categories. Food, personal care, clothing, school supplies, household supplies, utilities, and rent. The food allowances, for example, are based on the daily allowance, per person, of 15 cents for breakfast, 25 cents for lunch, 50 cents for dinner, or a total of 90 cents per person per day.

Now, I would like to stop there, for a second, Mr. Chairman, in that editorial, to say that I have been trying for some time to get the Minister to break down the pre-added budgets for me, to show me what portion of those budgets are for food, what portions are for clothing, what portions are for personal needs—and, in The Family Benefits Act, that would also take in utilities and cleaning supplies.

I tried this on a diplomatic basis, the first try. I wrote a note to the Minister either during the estimates, or sometime shortly after last year, and the Minister wrote back:

Margaret:

The regulations setting out the pre-added budgets were passed—FBA: April 1, 1967, GWA: July 1, 1967. The development of the amounts were an internal matter and form government policy based on the consideration of the factors involved.

(Signed)

Yaremko.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is too serious to say that. Sure it is an internal matter. This is the whole food supply of the family, plus their clothing, plus their personal needs; and we cannot determine how much the government is allowing out of the public purse to these people for food.

Mr. Lewis: We will in this estimate!

Mrs. M. Renwick: The hon. member for Scarborough West says: "We will in this estimate". And this is what I say, Mr. Chairman. I demand that the Minister tell me in this estimate. I think it is shocking. I asked my secretary to check shortly after receiving this note and from her I have a memo, saying: "7, July 18, 1968. Mr. Groom, 2648. (1) How did they base pre-added budget? (2) Where and when was it updated? Answer: Treasury Board works on it—I presume that means Treasury, Mr. Chairman—economic council also works on it. Policy regulations, some allowances made. Updated April 1, 1967."

We talked today, Mr. Chairman, about the increase of cost of living for food alone in the last year.

Regulations, Cabinet and Executive Council. Mr. Groom unable to help. He suggested Minister, but he is away, so is Band. Executive Council, Mr. McIntyre 1944. I called Mr. McIntyre. On the basis of shared cost programmes with Ottawa not able to help. Miss Crittendon, 2388, Social and Family Services, Finance and Administration. Away ill, spoke to Mr. Nywening. Is taken by rent. And then the hopeful appendage. There is a research department in the planning stages for The Department of Social and Family Services."

Now, maybe, Mr. Chairman, for the first time I might have my finger on how this government arrives at about a-dollar-a-day-per-person for a family on general welfare assistance. I wonder if this is it; 90-cents-per-day-per-person. To continue with the editorial:

Equally destructing are the degrading values built into the personal care allowances. It is not only that the allowances are low, but that they so thoroughly degrade people who must live in such a web of regulations and standards. Welfare recipients are allowed a budget based on 12 bars of soap annually, 100 tissues—

Not 100 boxes, 100 tissues.

—one razor every four years, one comb every two years, one coat cleaning per year, and so on.

Mr. Lewis: You are not serious.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Scarborough West says, "You are not serious." Now, I am speaking of the situation in New York which seems to have striking parallels with our own. We do not cheque semi monthly, Mr. Chairman, we cheque monthly, I believe. But I have heard reference as to the number of haircuts allowed, whether a man works or not, referring to our particular preadded budget, and I do hope the Minister will clarify that because of the cloud that is around them now. To continue with the editorial:

But in addition to such allowances, further distinctions are made. Ninety razor blades per year if a man is employed; 50 if unemployed. Twelve haircuts if employed, nine if unemployed. Two lipsticks per year if employed, one if unemployed. One haircut per year for females over 16, two for females between seven and 16. The level to which this specificity of the allowances descends includes the provision of 48 bobby pins per year, one sanitary belt every two years, 144 sanitary napkins per year. It is significant that no allowance whatever is provided for recreation of any kind, newspapers, books for children, or school field trips.

Conflict for the child on welfare is severe.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to stop at that one statement alone. If I do not say anything else today, the conflict that our services are making in the children of the province, alarms me. To continue with the editorial.

On the one hand the school teaches him to expand his reading, to use books and to increase his awareness through newspapers, and on the other hand the welfare system insists, these things are unimportant, and the expenditures for them constitute mismanagement of funds. The welfare system creates a culture in which few persons can avoid lying, in which manipulation is a virtue, nor are the effects of welfare limited to recipients. Indeed, the system can cause everyone connected with it to lie, and cheat or else abandon decency. Thus a young case-worker will falsify the case record rather than follow the direction of her supervisor that she personally inspect the worn out underwear of a man to verify his stated need of a special grant for new underwear.

Now the Minister will say: "Well, maybe we do not do that here." But I would like to draw attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the Minister in the last estimates expansively told me that welfare administrators bent over backwards for recipients. I now know what he means by that. He means that where they may allow certain amounts for utilities, they allow the maximum amount, and where they may allow a certain amount for household cleaning supplies, in many cases they bend over and allow the full amount. It is a form of cheating too, one which I hope will continue until the Act is overhauled. To continue, Mr. Chairman:

The memories of social workers are crowded with such anecdotes. It is the welfare system itself which we believe leads to abuses and which needs to be changed if the abuses are to be eliminated.

Now for the first time, I believe in six years, there were six charges of fraud in Metro welfare cases. I have isolated only one of them, Mr. Chairman, because to do one is probably to do the other. It is a Globe and Mail clipping, April 1968. The title is "Ran Repair Business, Court Told. Man Faces Welfare Fraud Trial."

A 40-year-old father of five children operated a house repair business, while collecting $1,166 in welfare payments in six months last year, a preliminary hearing in the magistrates court was told yesterday.

Then, Mr. Chairman, it mentions the name and address of the person which I can see no point in putting here, correct me, Mr. Chairman, if I am wrong. The gentleman was committed by Magistrate Addison for jury trial on a charge of defrauding the Metro welfare department of approximately $1,400 last year. That is because his wife, when she reported separating from him in December, got some $300. I believe that is the discrepancy in the figures, Mr. Chairman. To continue with the article:

The four others charged are to appear in court next month for their trial. Police hold a warrant for the arrest of a sixth person, a woman. The gentleman was paid $131.90 by cheque from the welfare department twice a month for June and July, 1967, Douglas E. Richardson, Metro welfare district administrator, testified. He said that payments to—blank—continued in varying amounts for the next six months and welfare office forms indicated that—blank—did not declare any employment in that time. Blank—was paid $1,166 by the welfare department from June 1 to November 16, the court was told. Three hundred and eleven dollars was paid by the department to—blank's—wife in December after she reported they had separated.

Alfred H testified he had paid a total of $950 to the recipient, Mr. Chairman, in October, November, and early December, for demolition work to a house—and it gives the address—that was being renovated. The witness said that the gentleman had a truck with his name on it and supervised two other men on the job.

Mr. B told the hearing that he paid the gentleman a total of $146 for repairs to houses from July to November last year. Mr. B, who operates an appliance store, said he buys houses, repairs them and sells them.

Mr.—blank—made repairs to a city-owned house in November and was paid $49.50 by the city on December 4, a city property official told Magistrate Addison. A Metro treasury department official testified that $209 was paid in December to the gentleman by Metro for repairs to houses.

So you might wonder what my point is, Mr. Chairman, in dealing with that so much in detail, but here it is: If you take all of the money that this family of seven—five children, two parents—received from welfare and all of the money they earned, in June they received two times $131.90—$263.80; in July two times $131.90—$263.80, a total of $527.60; in August, $182.40, in September $182.40, in October $182.40 and in November $91.20, a total of $1,166. If you add up what he received in the way of his maintenance work that he was carrying on, he received for the same seven-month period $1,344. He ended up with $403.70 per month, Mr. Chairman, or $13.20 a day for a family of seven, less than $2.25 a day for each of them. Now, if that does not prove conclusively, Mr. Chairman, that welfare is not enough and that we must somehow go into a guaranteed system, I do not know what does. When that family took their welfare allowances, and they took what the father earned with the truck, they still did not have any grand scale of living for a family of seven.

Regarding the welfare fraud cases, perhaps welfare fraud is a natural state of affairs when a father of five was paid only $131.90 twice a month. This level of payment encourages fraud. Any social worker who does not understand the cause and effect in relationship between competitive affluence and hard core repetitive, unregenerate, even fraudulent poverty, has no business being in the profession.

We have heard, Mr. Chairman, the charges of the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk), of recipients being insulted, some being forced into being strikebreakers, whether welfare payments have been made in accordance with the provincial statutes is under question.

In the area of Scarborough—which I feel privileged to represent—children are given clothes. It is very fine for groups to do this, but what kind of society is this in Ontario where voluntary groups have to be formed because parents cannot afford clothes for their children? And this large area of activity by the private agencies in relationship to the government agency is an area that I asked—in my estimates of the last session—be gone into.

And I have no alternative, Mr. Chairman, but to repeat it, because it obviously fell either on deaf ears or on those who do not understand the crying need of an assessment between private agencies and the government agencies who are trying to assist people in need. If the question arises as to whether they are being given clothes, I have only this to refer to, from the Toronto Daily Star, January 11, 1969:

Scarborough group gives children clothes. Nearly 160 underprivileged Scarborough children have been provided with clothing since November from an emergency depot opened by home and school council women-volunteers in co-operation with the borough school board. It was set up after teachers, principals, attendance counsellors and public health nurses expressed concern about the number of people starting out for school in winter without adequate warm clothing or in badly worn garments.

Douglas Jenners, Scarborough board of education chief attendance counsellor, said yesterday, "So far we have been outfitting about 25 kids a week." Mrs. Donna Peachman, depot chairman and past president of the home and school council, said used clothing is collected and repaired by volunteers. "If a boy splits his trousers badly, and it is a week before next pay day, that can be pretty tragic for some parents," she said. "There is a definite need for this kind of service."

That brings me right back to the pre-added budget. How much of those budgets is the government saying, "We are giving you hoping you will have some left over from food to use for clothes?"

On page 3140 of Hansard, Tuesday, May 21, 1968, I called for a commission. I said:

It appears imperative to appoint a commission. The time has come when government's role and the private agencies' role have got to be assessed in relationship to each other and to the community they are serving; time to assess exactly what is happening in the field of private agencies.

Voluntary agencies need some government understanding of what is happening to draw comparison between what voluntary agencies can raise in their own communities for their own work—there is a large gap between that and what they want. They are cut down to what the agency even thinks it is wise to ask for.

The United Appeal takes it from there. They take it down to suit their ability, to fit into their economic forecast; and it is taken down again to what, in fact, the voluntary agency can actually receive, which is a very different figure from what it was originally. If the funds in various communities are unable to rise in proportion to increasing costs, they cannot afford to pay the salaries the government can pay. There is a steady drift of personnel from the private sectors to the government departments. Then comes the inexperienced staff, the untrained, lower quality, and this is sad, because the volunteer agencies were the pioneers of raising the standards of the staff of the service.

Rightist governments can deal this problem a severe blow while espousing the cause of individuals and individual efforts, not realizing what they are doing. Leftist governments give amounts to agencies and give them a job to do. Discussion must come from within the government with those outside the government to arrive at a sensible plan.

How does government see their role? Are they, in fact, providing their services, the volunteer agencies, in an efficient way? What assessment is going to be made of them? What is the criterion that brought about the dismay that the Big Brother movement was turned down by the department for the sum of $30,000 when it is abundantly clear that they, in fact, provide an excellent counselling service, not only to the boys of their clients but to 75 per cent of the boys from one parent, mother oriented families. The counselling service has in fact extended effectively to the mothers of the boys in advising them of facilities available to them, through various social agencies to assist them in dealing with their problem, often before coming dependent on society.

The mothers, many of them, just did not know where to go or what was available to them in the way of social services. This is obviously an excellent agency which should be on a fee-for-service basis and its counselling continued, not cut back.

A commission should begin immediately to sort out where the categorical assistance of the federal Benefits Act and The General Welfare Assistance Act are in relationship to private agencies and where they are going, because the majority of volunteer agencies—due to the inability of volunteer fund raisers to provide sufficient moneys to meet increasing costs of operating—are today working with less staff than they did last year and last year they worked with less staff than they had the year before. The situation has continued for about five years and one is controlling the other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we have private agencies as far back as 1967 collecting $20 million in the province of Ontario, that this government owes them initiative to somehow assess the roles of the private agencies with the roles of the government agencies because it does not look as though there is going to be any major overhaul of the social welfare system in the province of Ontario for some time to come. And my only hope is that an assessment will be made of how best to make the present system work.

I have an editorial, Mr. Chairman, it being two minutes of 6.00 o'clock, I think it could be read in that time. From the March 3, 1969, Globe and Mail:

FAULTY AS IT IS, WELFARE MUST GO ON

There is mounting evidence that our various welfare programmes, assistance plans, family allowances and equalization grants are, indeed, a patchwork. Not only are they inefficient and overlapping, but it has been shown conclusively that they are not eliminating the poverty cycle. The response in this realization has been a growing feeling that the most prudent approach would be to clear the battlefield and start all over again in the war of poverty.

The alternative that has been receiving the most attention has been some form of guaranteed annual income which might be implemented by means of a negative income tax. A family whose income falls below a certain level would receive a grant to bring it up to that level.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the next paragraph deals with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) and I would like to ask why it would not have been the Minister of Social and Family Services? To continue, Mr. Chairman:

Ontario Revenue Minister John White has joined those who want an investigation into the relative costs of what we call straight welfare programmes and guaranteed incomes.

Now that, Mr. Chairman, is something I would like to have heard from the Minister of Social and Family Services. Certainly not the next statement, to continue the editorial, which says:

He would also restrict spending of welfare programmes for the next two years until the comparison is in.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member could break her remarks at this point, it being time for recess.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

It being 6.00 o'clock, p.m. the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL AND FAMILY SERVICES (Continued)

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

When the House adjourned I was reading an editorial entitled, "Faulty As It Is, Welfare Must Go On." I had finished up to paragraph 4 where there was mounting evidence that we needed to take a look at the guaranteed annual income. Paragraph 4 referred to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White), who had raised this question. To continue, Mr. Chairman:

Mr. White would do well to study the remarks of Dr. D. L. McQueen, the director of the Economic Council of Canada, made to a Glendon College seminar. He pointed out that the economic council's most recent report had been moderately successful in bringing home to Canadians the disgraceful fact that one of every five of us ekes out an existence in poverty, but the council has not been so effective in drawing attention to the failure of existing anti-poverty programmes based on our conventional wisdom. We all know, for instance, that Canada's poor are to be found in the Atlantic provinces and eastern Quebec, rural areas, and Indian and Eskimo communities. They are also to be found in families headed by widows or divorcees, and families where the man of the house is unemployed, and we have designed our welfare programme from this basis.

As Dr. McQueen puts it, it is all too easy to draw the conclusion that strong support of regional development in the eastern extremities of Canada, plus special measures for Indians and Eskimos and Metis, plus more day-care centres for small children, plus categorical welfare assistance for those too old or otherwise unable to work, would just about add up to an adequate anti-poverty programme for Canada. But our figures indicate that while all of the measures mentioned are highly desirable, a programme limited to them alone would leave untouched a very large part of the low-income population.

Mr. Chairman, to pause there, I would like to draw to your attention, that is where I began my text today, with that section of the economy, for which I am beginning to have exactly the same concern as the people who fall in the levels below low-income population. To continue:

The economic council, which sets the poverty level at $1,800 a year for a single person and $4,800 for a family of five, found when it began to count heads that most of the poor live in cities rather than in rural areas and more than half of them live west of the Ottawa River. Most poor families are headed by men under 65. Furthermore, most of those below the poverty line could be described as "working poor"—not the unemployed but at least part-time members of the labour force.

Dr. McQueen's economists have been studying guaranteed income and negative income tax and they conclude that such a scheme would not be the panacea. Manpower programmes, individual improvement programmes and community improvement programmes would still be needed. They agree with Revenue Minister White, however, that more research is needed into the cost of welfare programmes as well as research into the root cause of the poverty.

Dr. McQueen has suggested that more use might be made of the Canada Assistance Plan, which at present covers only the aged. The council, with the help of the Vanier Institute of the Family, is exploring pre-school education as a means of giving the poor a running, instead of a limping, start into the formal educational system.

But the council never suggests, as Mr. White does, restriction of spending while new programmes are under investigation. It may seem, said Dr. McQueen, "that our main proposals for early action mostly involve the patching, co-ordination and extension of existing programmes." When, you may ask, are we going to get out and do something for human beings? In answer to this question we should bear in mind that there are already people out there doing something—welfare workers and others who have dedicated their lives to dealing with poverty and its consequences. To leave them standing still while the research went on would be unthinkable.

Mr. Chairman, the next section of my text, if you recall, is to deal with the people who are at present living on the benefits of the almost $265 million budget we are being asked to approve. I would like to draw your attention to about a dozen cases—baker's dozen maybe, Mr. Chairman, I believe there are 13—and these cases are taken from an NDP service centre in the east end of Metropolitan Toronto, the riding of Beaches-Woodbine. I think, Mr. Chairman, that they involve pretty concisely, exactly the sort of problems that the recipients are running into under The General Welfare Assistance Act and under The Family Benefits Act.

Case 1, Mr. A, receiving $25 a week unemployment, no other income, not covered by Ontario Hospital coverage, is crippled and refused family benefits assistance.

Case 2, Mrs. B, separated—the date is on this one, Mr. Chairman, May 1968—separated from husband, has dependant daughter, has to board her daughter with married daughter. Mrs. B boards with a brother and is waiting for a reply on the list from Mrs. Meredith at OHC. Since that was May 1968, Mr. Chairman, that case may have been dealt with. I will check that out and see.

Case 3, Mr. and Mrs. B, February to November 1968, they were getting $127 a month on family benefits assistance and the rent was $110 a month—sorry, Mr. Chairman, they collected from roomers $110 a month, which paid their rent. Their allowances were reduced $37 for overpayment, $30 a month left to feed the three people. This, Mr. Chairman, was rectified after letters from the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown), but I do not like the fact that these cases are rectified if pressure is put on by any person, either in the Legislature or out in the public service field.

Case 4, Mrs. F, December 1967, refused assistance under The Family Benefits Act, immigrant; because sponsor is in position to provide financial aid.

Case 5, Mrs. F, July 1968, separated, one girl, three years; one baby, one week; on welfare, applied for Ontario Housing Corporation last August, rent $170 a month. Was sharing accommodation with other girl who has left. August 26, a letter from the Ontario Housing Corporation saying they are sending a worker. The lady in this case is on welfare “pending”, Mr. Chairman, mother's allowance.

On calculation under The Family Benefits Act, after paying the rent, this lady would have about $49 a month left for herself and her baby of one week and her three-year-old child. If she is, Mr. Chairman, on general welfare assistance, which she is on unless she has been switched over by now, she really only has an assurance of $32 a month to live on. The additional $17 for utilities and household allowances are at the discretion of the welfare administrator.

Case 6, Mr. F, December 1968, medical shows partially employable, six months tried to get job. Refused welfare. Miss Wilson said single men should get work. They called and then said they would help for a week or so.

Mr. Chairman, this sort of substitute type of welfare is not discussed anywhere under The General Welfare Assistance Act, and I think administrators take it into their own hands that if they can somehow put their finger in the dike, perhaps some of these cases will go away.

Case 7, Mr. and Mrs. H, April 1, 1968. Husband on compensation plus help from welfare. Rent is $120, welfare pays $85, has two boys, one getting married. Is getting behind in the rent. I told her when she gets notice to vacate to take it to the Ontario Housing Corporation and then let us know. Also told her to phone Mrs. Meredith and explain situation and it might help.

Case 8, Mr. and Mrs. G, December 1968; young couple, one child 22 months, new child expected any time. Husband out of work for last two weeks, have gotten behind in rent. Families split rent, $60 each, with couple upstairs. They are out of work, too, and have not paid their rent. They went to the welfare last week and Mrs. Chong came today to visit them but offered no help. Told him to go and get information where he worked before, but this is a long way and they have no carfare and she offered none. Has not received welfare before, talked with Mrs. Chong. If he takes letters to welfare tomorrow they could give him a cheque then.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in The General Welfare Assistance Act saying to go back to your previous employer or bring up letters.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member's time is up.

Mrs. M. Renwick: To the member for Grey-Bruce, Mr. Chairman, who is calling "time"—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): He always speaks very highly of you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, 20 years ago I listened many times to his plugs on the radio station in Owen Sound, trying to get some action for the people in Owen Sound with industry, and I am going to try to get some action for people under The General Welfare Assistance Act. And that is going back a long time, it is going back 20 years.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): He should be on old-age pension by now.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Case 9, Mr. and Mrs. L., January 1969, rent is to go from $125 to $135, so he reported this to the field worker. He was getting $184 a month. They reviewed his file. They now say it is to be decreased to $176, including $29 fuel allowance to be cut off March 1, because his son and grandson pay $15 weekly board. The rent is $135, so this leaves him with a balance of $12 after fuel. This case, Mr. Chairman, was reviewed, and he was given $188. That is what I am trying to get at, Mr. Chairman, that sort of discrepancy.

Case 10, Mr. N., March 1968, was told by a welfare case worker to go around to all the places he applied for jobs. He applied mainly to gas stations, transport companies. If he does not go he will be cut off welfare. Has one child and a wife, had to quit work and is taking pills for nerves. Had hepatitis before Christmas and could not get unemployment insurance.

Case 11, Mrs. O., February 1969. Received cheque for $56 February 1. Thought it was for two weeks, but since she lives with stepfather it was for the month. She is pregnant. Her husband lives in the United States, and she has an appointment to get a visa February 27. It will cost $28.45. She has no money. Can her welfare cheque be dated to February 26 so that she can get her visa on February 27, and be off welfare? Mrs. Wilson says no, she must borrow it or explain to visa people.

Well, granted, Mr. Chairman, the Act does not allow for any changes such as this, but in an Act where so much is left to discretion on the part of the welfare administrator, I would have thought it would be easy to date a cheque on February 26, when February only had two more days, in order to get a lady off welfare, get a visa and go to the United States to join her husband.

Case 12, Mr. and Mrs. M. C., May 1968. $75 take-home pay, three children. Because of crowded conditions—three children in one room aged six, four, and three—husband elsewhere, sometimes in car. Applied four years ago to Metro Housing, applied one and a half years ago to Ontario Housing Corporation, two and a half years ago offered Moss Park, but did not want to live in either Moss Park or Regent Park, anywhere else. Letters sent June 7 and 10, accepted occupancy for August 1.

Case 13, Mr. and Mrs. M. Landlord, Mr. M., has tenant, woman with child at school. Applied to Manpower for retraining, also to welfare. Got $69 first week from Manpower so could not get welfare this week. Had to wait a week. Pays rent $16 a week. Out of $69, paid landlady $20, loaned $10, food $18, carfare, and so on, and now owes more rent. Welfare claims she should have paid rent with that.

The baker's dozen was a little large, Mr. Chairman, there are three more cases from this particular centre.

Case 14, Mr. and Mrs. R. Mrs. R. worked part of last year, is on family benefit—this is February, 1969—and now has an overpayment of $661 and is only to get $109 starting next month. Husband has heart condition, she is diabetic, has two mortgage payments and taxes monthly which come to $102. Can the deductions be spread over a longer period pending? She is giving up going to try to get a job and that, Mr. Chairman, is another subject altogether. We defeat these people.

Case 15, Mrs. V. Has job, part time—128 hours every four weeks; getting $1.25 an hour, or $33 a week, or $176 a month, plus $65 a month from boarders. Her T-4 slip for 1967 shows $1,489.45. Cut off mothers' allowance because they say she is employed full time, more than 20 hours a month; now owes them—mothers' allowance, family benefits people, I presume, Mr. Chairman—$199.95. This was reduced on petition to $107. Is painfully honest about wanting to pay but just not able.

Case 16, Mrs. S. Had heart attack in 1961; owns a home, rents it to her daughter for $100 a month; pays $108 a month rent herself; desperate. Went to welfare, offered her $5 a month for medicine. April 9, June 26, got $97 from Metro after letters from John Brown, MPP.

That is one area, Mr. Chairman. From a report which I believe the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) will discuss at some length, I hope, I would like to give a synopsis of a Peterborough "poverty study", with special reference to those 19 of the 50 families on different types of public assistance, types unspecified. This was a study by, I believe, two undergraduate students of Trent University.

Mobility: There is a tendency for welfare families to be among the most mobile. The effect that this has on children is instability, insecurity and poor achievement at school, therefore reinforcing the poverty cycle.

Housing: Crowding, increasing family strain.

Costs for housing: Five welfare families with four children each; four of those five spend more than 48 per cent of income on rent and utilities. Obviously reduces money for other things.

Income: Income of some of the employed householders not much greater than those on welfare; shows need for a guaranteed income to bring up the level of employed who are still poor, or a more realistic minimum wage law.

These families on welfare seem to be in the most dire situations, representing a total of 119 individuals. Nineteen of these families have less than $40 spending money per individual per month. That is pretty low income, Mr. Chairman.

Dental and medical costs: If on welfare, these are often high bills. This is because the welfare will pay. There were five cases of dental costs of about $100 each and they were all on welfare. This indicates that non-welfare poor are forced to neglect their health since they cannot afford to pay the bills.

This little fight on the dental aspect, Mr. Chairman, I think is going on right now in East York, where Reeve Davidson is insisting that the poor people are being done out of the dental services that welfare people are able to enjoy.

I would like to go now, Mr. Chairman, to the area of Kingston to show that this is a problem that is not simply relevant to Scarborough; it is not simply relevant to Toronto. We have facts now from Peterborough, we are going to get some from Kingston, and we will get some from the Windsor area. We have not yet reached northern Ontario.

This is a paper done by a student—a law student at Queen's University who did a paper quite recently, in the last couple of weeks, I believe, on "Human Rights". The introduction states, Mr. Chairman:

This paper is not concerned with Ontario welfare projects in general, but a more particular programme entitled "General Assistance," which forms part of a more extensive scheme under The General Welfare Assistance Act. The reasons for choosing this particular welfare scheme were certain inherent conflicts and paradoxes that do not necessarily characterize other programmes. The general assistance programme was set up by provincial legislation and is a statement of the provincial government objects and goals. But at the same time the programme is partially financed and almost totally administered by municipal governments.

If I may say, Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a considerable flaw in the whole programme. To continue the paper:

The aims and objectives of the two levels of government do not always coincide and this is reflected in the administration of the Act. The Act defines assistance as a legal right and extensively sets out the criteria to determine eligibility and amount of assistance. Municipal welfare administrators do not necessarily apply these criteria, and at this moment there is little that can be done by the recipient to enforce his right.

That particular view can be discussed under the fact that if the recipient has a case that may come before the board of revenue he can discuss a decision. But he has very little to enforce his right. The paper says:

There are limitations to the paper. One, it is concerned with legalistic methods of bringing about reforms and not broader political programmes, although the two are closely related, as evidenced in the United States. Two, it is basically not concerned with the myriad of detailed reforms needed within the Act or proposing sweeping reforms to bring about greater social justice. The paper assumes that the present legislation will continue to operate basically as is now, and it will be its problems that recipients will face from day to day. Three, the paper has not considered the special priorities that must be reviewed when acting for a welfare client—this would be a paper in itself.

I would like to go to page three, Mr. Chairman, "Improvement Through Legalization":

What are the alternatives? The problem is deeply rooted in our cultural and economic values. Essentially, what must be done is to legalize welfare administration and to end its insulation from legal consideration. Because of this insulation, welfare administrators are permitted broad areas of discretion in which they make law, by administrative interpretations or ad hoc policies that may not be in accord with the original purposes of the Legislature. If welfare assistance is to be regarded as a legal right, it must be enforceable in a legal style, and the administration of welfare must be made subject to those standards and procedures that safeguard other areas of government regulation and dispensation. In other words, elements of objectivity, consistency, rationality and accountability must be introduced. In order to do this, welfare legislation and administration must provide the following (there are six points):

1. Legislation must define welfare assistance as a legal right available upon qualification.

2. The statutes, regulations and rules by which administrators are to act, should furnish clearly and concisely criteria by which eligibility and assistance can be determined, so as to produce uniform decision-making. A legal right is useless if its substance is not defined.

3. The regulations and rules should be published and an effort should be made to make their substance known to welfare recipients and the public in general. A legal right is non-existent if one is not aware of it.

4. The basis of all decisions should be explained. A legal right cannot be protected if decisions affecting it cannot be challenged, because one does not know the basis of those decisions.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot get the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) to explain to me, as a member of the Ontario Legislature, how they have made up their pre-added budgets and how can we ever hope that they will come to the point where they feel that the municipalities should be delivering welfare on a fair and just basis, as the Act is devised, instead of their own discretion. Point five:

5. There would be some known form of review or appeal from decisions made by administrators. A legal right is ineffective without some accessible procedure to ensure the proper use of discretion and accountability for decisions made.

6. At all times, the welfare recipient should have a right to representation especially before a review board. This is essential for those who cannot effectively speak for themselves.

The above not only ensures that the welfare recipients' substantial rights are protected but it also introduces qualitative changes as to style. Fundamentally, the law has a way of doing things. It involves doing things with reference to formal standards of justice, with fixed and attributable responsibility and with rational justification for decisions. These stylistic characteristics are the antithesis of tyranny, arbitrary discretion and official caprice.

If it is true that the poorest spend much of their lives being subjected to forces that act tyrannically, arbitrarily and irrationally, the introduction of some element of regularity, responsibility and rationality is a positive boon to prize as such, whatever its value. If the ultimate services delivered to the poor through the intervention of legal processes is only modestly enhanced, they nevertheless are delivered in somewhat more decent fashion and that is a value not to be minimized.

On page 16, Mr. Chairman, we skip over to the recipients' rights and the administrations of general assistance.

At the beginning of this paper, six criteria were listed as being essential for any system of welfare administration if the recipients' substantive rights are to be protected. This portion of the paper will analyze The General Welfare Assistance Act in the light of these criteria.

A. Welfare as a right. There is little doubt that the Act establishes welfare assistance as a legal right available upon the recipient's qualifications. However, the attitude of the general public remains just the opposite. Welfare assistance is still viewed as largess or some form of charitable gratuity.

And I pause there, Mr. Chairman, to say that if you do not believe it, I heard on my left when I mentioned a welfare benefit had been cut, "Good". To continue:

The community's general commitment to social welfare affects the content and administration of welfare programmes. If the environment is hostile, officials will gradually retreat from the original goals of the programme to more modest goals. A minimal commitment means a minimal commitment of public funds. A major cause of the harshness and restrictiveness of welfare programme is a deeply felt need to save moneys. In our research, the above relation was quite evident.

The Family Benefits Act is entirely financed and administered by the provincial government. Mr. D, who is the local regional supervisor and responsible for local administration, spoke of assistance in terms of rights and entitlements. His policy was to determine eligibility and amount of assistance strictly according to the Act. He has the reputation of dealing with the recipients in a fair and polite manner. According to him, a major factor in his possessing this attitude was his access to virtually unlimited funds and the lack of pressure upon him to cut corners.

An excellent example of the opposite end of the administrative spectrum is Mrs. B, the local municipal welfare administrator. She agreed that assistance is a legal right under the Act. At the same time she also asserted that the city was very generous and that the recipients were fortunate to receive so much without being asked for anything in return.

Mrs. B, to say the least, is a controversial figure among welfare recipients. During the course of our interview she was accused of being unfair, unsympathetic, giving favouritism to those who informed on others, "like a stone wall to talk to", and "snotty". In response to the question, "Do you think the city welfare office is generally fair and sympathetic?" one recipient gave Mrs. B as the sole reason for his negative response. A number of recipients interviewed related instances of Mrs. B. shouting at them and continually accusing them of misbehaviour, sometimes relating back to the beginning of the recipient's trouble. Others told us of extended diatribes overheard while waiting in the welfare office reception area.

We suggest that much of this harsh treatment is related to the office's inadequate financial allowance. There is without doubt pressure from the council to minimize expenditure, and Mrs. B told us of a constant stream of complaints from irate taxpayers. It is Mrs. B's duty to work out an annual budget, and expenditures during the year must be kept within this budget. The unenviable position of Mrs. B results in a harsh and summary attitude towards applicants and also a definite deviation from the goal set out in the Act. This will be more fully documented later in this paper.

The case of Mr. T is an example of how preoccupation with limited finances leads to a rigid and harsh policy. Mr. T, along with six others, was refused welfare in April 1968. At that time the city had adopted the policy that anyone who was fired or quit his job was refused assistance unless the social services committee decided that the employer was unfair in releasing the applicant. Supposedly such release or quitting was evidence that the applicant was unwilling to accept employment for which he was capable. At that time, the applicant would have been eligible for welfare assistance in at least the cities of Cornwall, Belleville and Ottawa.

The social services committee chairman stated that it was not easy to get on welfare and that the committee was attempting to keep the average person aware that he must retain his job. According to him, the policy of the committee was to take a more severe stand towards those who live off welfare. He went on to relate that the city's welfare budget had been reduced by $40,000 and this forced the committee to get tougher. According to him, getting tougher meant showing people it is not a matter of walking into city hall and walking out with a cheque. The above expressed attitudes are hardly consistent with the right concept of welfare assistance.

In fact, the reason for denial was not the recipient's unwillingness to work, but rather the limited budgetary requirements of the municipality. In other words, the recipients were forced to sacrifice their rights under the Act because the municipality failed to fulfil its responsibilities under the same legislation. In effect, the poor were forced to subsidize the rich.

Mr. Chairman, where the attitude crept into the municipality that it was going to be made tougher to keep people from living off welfare, I think a programme of education has to be done by the department here at Queen's Park. But there is nothing being done to get families off welfare, there is simply a system of an allotment of money each month. Outside of the three Manpower men on George Street, whom I have referred to earlier this year, and their three assistants, for help in getting jobs in the community, there is no real programme, Mr. Chairman, of analyzing a family as to what its talents are, what its capabilities are, and of taking that family and in a period of maybe 18 months having them rehabilitated.

The attitudes of the recipients themselves are instrumental in determining whether or not assistance will be treated as a right. Out of 15 interviews, 14 recipients said they considered assistance to be a legal right, but only three stated that a lawyer might be able to aid them in enforcing this right. Out of these 14, only two had the idea that a legal right should be enforceable by the courts, but these same people felt a lawyer's services were not feasible. One stated that the expense was prohibitive, the other said he would resort to a lawyer only if he were really desperate.

Mr. Chairman, this paper explains why a lawyer is not the person to resort to, because a lawyer does not understand these Acts any better than the recipients do.

The other recipients interviewed described their right in one of the following manners:

1. Because he was incapable of working and had no money, he had a right to welfare.

2. "The government cannot force me to take care of my children. However, if I do not do so, they would become wards of the state, therefore I am entitled to welfare assistance to provide for my children."

3. "Welfare is paid through taxes to which I have personally contributed or to which my family have contributed."

4. "I am entitled to it because I use it for the proper purposes—that is the purpose for which it was meant."

5. "I suppose it is a legal right because the kids should not starve."

The above expressions are more in keeping with the notion of moral right than legal right—that is, largess rather than right. This type of conception of their position is hardly surprising when one realizes their complete ignorance of the contents of the Act. Only one recipient expressed a vague knowledge of the Act's provisions and then it only extended to the idea that somehow the amount of assistance was pre-arranged.

A note at the end, Mr. Chairman, said:

This recipient will be enrolling in the university in the coming fall semester to study welfare administration.

The remainder of those interviewed had only the limited knowledge gained through dealings with the welfare office. They had a rough idea of what was required before they could be put on the "pokey" and also that their cheque was to be spent on food, rent, etc., as directed by the welfare official. From past experience or sheer desperation, they might realize that they were being shortchanged, but one referred to the Act and based his claim upon provisions. Not one recipient envisaged himself as a right-bearing citizen claiming benefits he is entitled to by law.

The result of this failure by recipients to realize their rights under the law and the improper attitude of the public and the welfare administrators as to the state of the law in this area, in effect negates the intention of the Legislature. The intended legal right becomes reduced to an outmoded concept of social charity.

Mr. Chairman, this is what is happening at many municipal levels. I have learned this through being a member in this legislative assembly for the past year and a half.

B. Defining the rights. The Act defines the criteria for qualification, and the recipient for entitlement to a degree that should ensure that the intention of the Act is substantially carried out. The administration of general welfare assistance should be characterized by uniform decisions consistent in the Act. Unfortunately, in our research, we have found that the record is at best erratic.

Case 1, Mr. S. Home was destroyed by fire in a township outside the city, and had to move in with friends in the city. He applied for welfare at the city office and was denied. At this time Mr. S. was petitioning for divorce and had custody of his children. He was told that he would not be granted welfare unless he gave his children to his wife who was a known prostitute. The children's aid society indicated that they would be recommending that he should have custody of the children after the divorce. Giving the children to his wife at this time might have severely prejudiced his chances of securing final custody. A week later, Mr. S. became a cause célèbre for other reasons. The city found him an apartment and granted him general assistance.

Case 2, Mr. and Mrs. F., and their two children. Had been on welfare for three months. Mr. F. found employment for one week, and the welfare benefits stopped for that week. On the Monday of the following week they applied to welfare again and were refused. The explanation was that they should have saved their money. They were told not to come back for two weeks. The manner in which they had disposed of their money should not have been a factor in determining eligibility.

Further, it would have been unreasonable to expect them to have any money on Monday, let alone for the next two weeks. He had made $73, and $40.50 was spent on rent, $20 on clothes for the children and linen, and the husband spent the remaining portion, $12.50 on self-entertainment. The family was extremely short of supplies. The fact that there was only one blanket between the four members of the family was characteristic of their situation.

Much of the fault for this shortage was due to the manner and amount of the previous welfare payments. They were entitled to $28.50 a week for food and clothing, and were only getting $24 in the form of one food voucher. This meant that they had to buy the food in one entire purchase, and they had no cash on hand for clothes or purchase of food like milk that should not be purchased on a weekly basis.

The laundry had to be washed by hand and dried in their small, two-room apartment. Their rights were explained to them by a third party and they were told to go back to the welfare office with a copy of the Act, and explain to the administrator that they knew what their rights were, and that they insisted on being granted their entitlement. They were not only given the full pre-added budget allowance of $28.60, divided up into separate vouchers for food and clothing, but also the $7 maximum monthly allowance for household supplies, which is seldom paid.

Case 3, Mrs. W. Had been on welfare for 15 years. Her 19-year-old son had moved in with her after losing his job in Toronto. He acquired a job in Kingston and at the time asked the welfare office for assistance until he received his first pay cheque. Assistance was granted to him on the understanding that he was to bring his pay cheque into the welfare office where the amount owing would be deducted. He did not report.

When Mrs. W. left the hospital she was told she would not receive any assistance, and that she could rely on her son to maintain her. Her son had moved out while she was in hospital and Mrs. W. was left without funds.

There is no obligation on children to provide for their parents. The welfare office might have the right to insist that if the son was living with his mother he must contribute towards the rent, or pay his mother for board. They would then be able to reduce the rent payments to Mrs. W., or apply a reasonable charge for lodging as income.

Instead of doing this, they attempted to force Mrs. W.'s son to pay off his debt by denying Mrs. W. A third party was asked to speak to the welfare officer for Mrs. W. and the assistance was supposedly reinstated at the full rate. Without investigating to see whether her son had moved out, the welfare officer assumed he had not and decided not to include the portion for rent in the cheque that was given the next day. In the circumstances he had no authority to do this. Mrs. W.'s landlady was asked to phone the welfare office to confirm that her son had moved, and the matter was finally settled.

Case 4, Mr. F. Twenty years old and single, applied for welfare and was told that welfare was no longer given to single people.

I am very sorry that the member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) is not here. I believe he had quite a confrontation with the Minister during the estimates last year. I think he would be quite interested in these remarks.

Mr. Singer: He was here earlier; he left with the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick).

Mrs. M. Renwick: Continuing to quote:

After enquiries were made he was told that his case would be reconsidered if he applied for a Canada Manpower upgrading course. Unless one assumes that single young men are only unemployed because they are unwilling to undertake employment, the administration's policy to discourage young single people from applying for welfare by denial of assistance is not authorized under the Act.

Mr. Sargent: Take it as read.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would draw to the attention of yourself and the members of the House, that I am only dealing with one part of one Act—the general assistance of The General Welfare Assistance Act—and the ramifications of it are unending. I have made it as concise as I feel it should be, when presented to those persons in the assembly who are interested in the problem.

Case 5, Mr. H. He was laid off his job because of alcoholism and overstaffing. He enrolled as an outpatient at the alcoholic centre of the Ontario Hospital. He was not able to find employment and applied for welfare assistance. He was refused on the basis that his employer was willing to re-employ him. His employer denied that he told this to the welfare office. Mr. H., acting on this information, re-applied and was denied again on the same basis.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out here that this—the divine right to rule that exists in municipal welfare—was quite shocking to me. I would not have known about it except for the last year's endeavours in this assembly.

His employer was asked to phone the administration and state the real reason for laying him off. Once this was done he was declared to be eligible. The administration's previous decision was based merely on the suspicion that he quit because of his drinking problem, and that employment was available if he chose to work since he had been on welfare before the administration was aware of his drinking problem. Their purpose in denying him was probably coercion to work.

The only authority under the Act for their decision would be that inability to work because of alcoholism is evidence of unwillingness to undertake employment. This is inconsistent with the medical view of the problem. Further, it is inconsistent with present practice, since many families are on welfare because the head of the family is an alcoholic and unable to work. But there is a policy set by the social services committee to deny welfare to those who are single and unable to work because of alcoholism.

Case 6, Mr. I. He was 19 years old, unemployed, living with his sister and brother-in-law. He applied for welfare and received $8 for food per week. His sister said they could not afford to keep him if he was not able to pay for his room. The city refused to give him any assistance although he was entitled to a maximum of $43 per month for shelter. The reason given was that his sister was a prostitute and he should not be living with her. They offered to grant him the extra $2.80 for food he was entitled to, but no more unless he moved out.

An unauthorized denial of assistance was used to force a recipient to do what the welfare administrator thought best. The benefit was used as a reward for appropriate behaviour.

An hon. member: Do you know the municipality?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Kingston. Mr. Chairman, for any members who have joined us since we began an hour ago, these cases are cases prepared by a law student at Queen's University in Kingston and the cases are from that area.

Case 7. Mr. X lived in a rural area, and after being unemployed for six weeks during which he received no unemployment insurance or other income or saving, he applied for welfare at his municipality's office. He was denied on the basis that he must be lying about having no source of income since no family could live without money for six weeks.

Mr. Chairman, I will stop right there. If you live in a rural area and you manage to have stocked up some of the vegetables and so on from the rural areas, it is quite possible to continue for some time.

After subsequent efforts were made, the administrator was convinced that he had no income, but he was denied again, the reason this time was that she had not received her monthly allocation of funds and had no money to give out. Mr. X told his story to the local regional supervisor who directed that the municipality pay out the assistance. It was done. The only plausible reason for the administrator's behaviour is that a penny denied is a penny saved. There is no provision in the Act that could possibly be used to justify her action.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in social and family services, Mr. Nywening took a case for me as recently as Friday, a case in Stouffville, rural route 3. The administrator in Stouffville had been giving a deserted woman with four children $30 weekly allowance. She was now behind two months in her rent and two months in her fuel. She had to lie to the fuel man who came to the door when he asked had any money been sent in to the company. She said yes, in order to get fuel. This welfare administrator in the local municipal area had been visiting her once a week and leaving her $30 to live on, his own interpretation of The Welfare Assistance Act.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that from The Department of Social and Family Services a telephone call went out on this particular case over the weekend to make certain this lady was in no hardship, now until Monday.

What I am trying to say is that we cannot have this kind of concern once the case hits Queen's Park. This is wrong. We have legislated Acts which are laws. They must be carried out in the municipality as laws and as a right to the individuals concerned.

To continue with the paper, Mr. Chairman:

These are not the only examples of mal-administration we have come across, but our research was not extensive enough to enable us to estimate the extent of mal-administration of the Act. But it does exist. A partial cause is the absence of the four other preconditions necessary to safeguard the rights of welfare recipients. The preconditions are interdependent and inter-related. The absence of one or more undermines the effectiveness of the other.

Mr. Chairman, I pause to go back—because the Minister is listening intently, I believe—to say that in the Stouffville case, why the welfare administrator acted as he did, is that the lady comes from Scarborough. It was a trial of her marriage relationship to go to a house of their own. They could only afford one in the country.

The marriage relationship has broken down and she wants to come back to Scarborough. She is filing an application with the Ontario Housing Corporation, but you and I know, and certainly the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall), who was here earlier knows, filing an application with the Ontario Housing Corporation does not mean that Mrs. S. will be able to move from Stouffville into the municipality of Scarborough. The responsibility squarely rested in my view—and correct me if I am wrong in any way—with the municipality who dealt with her as far back as two to three weeks ago.

The awareness of rights. To the typical recipient, the welfare office is a place you go if you are in desperate need. One recipient did not know of the existence of welfare assistance before she applied. Those who have had contact with welfare recipients before application—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I think the member is making a good speech, but she is trying to break the record held by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) for the longest speech. This is bad manners to have us sit here all this time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: There should be an understanding, Mr. Chairman, that there is a time limit on speeches. Let us get together and—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sargent: Well, they should not speak this long. It is not good manners.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I do not know why the House should, every now and then, be treated by the hon. member to both ignorant and impudent terms in interrupting a serious presentation.

Mr. Chairman: Speaking to the point of order—

Mr. MacDonald: No wonder Lowry described that as a leader without a party over there.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Speaking to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, I can only say that there was at one time an arrangement whereby the lead-off speakers would devote 20 minutes to the lead-off speech in connection with the estimates, and we would go into the estimates.

Perhaps this is what the hon. member had in mind. However, that arrangement, to my recollection, has gone by long since. The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): It was a piece of diversion anyway.

Mr. Singer: Read page 1774.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you. I would like to draw to the attention of the members of the assembly and yourself, Mr. Chairman, that in that 20 minutes' gentlemen's agreement, in which as a lady member of this gentlemen's club I participated, my lead-off in last year's estimates was 20 minutes to the clock and the Liberal critic for the same department spoke longer. This does not bother me. I feel that if people have something to say here it is important that it is said.

I will take only one moment because it is not worth a great deal more. But might I suggest to you as Chairman that perhaps my remarks, since the hon. member for Grey-Bruce was one-time mayor of Owen Sound—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is out of order. The hon. member is out of order. She will please proceed with her speech.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I will proceed, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He was the mayor. He never even got them a drink.

Mr. MacDonald: Give them some cases from Owen Sound.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes I will. Owen Sound next trip.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mrs. M. Renwick: To continue with the paper, Mr. Chairman:

Those who have contact with welfare recipients before application might be aware that you must be sick, unemployed, or have lost your husband before assistance will be given. Women who have been separated or divorced are usually directed to welfare services by the children's aid society, or welfare officials attending family courts.

Generally they are not aware that loss of family head entitles them to assistance. Nor are recipients generally aware that they may receive welfare assistance while they are drawing unemployment insurance. In terms of what services the welfare offices give, and who is eligible, most recipients have only the vague notion that this is a place to turn to for help when you are in desperate circumstances.

Recipients know practically nothing about income and budgetary requirements, calculations which determine the amount of their assistance. Most know that the family allowance was not to be considered in determining the amount of assistance. This does not mean that they were aware of the income budgetary requirement method of calculating assistance, but only that a welfare official could not say that, "We will give you $250 per month, but since you are receiving $30 family allowance, we will only grant you $220."

They were not aware that donations for religious or charitable organizations are not to be used for income calculations. It is not uncommon for a recipient's assistance to be reduced by the amount of money received from a charitable organization in the previous month or week. Nor are they aware that the Act provides that they are entitled to different amounts for rent, food, etc. based on criteria set out in the Act.

They accept the assistance given as being what they are entitled to receive. They have no criteria in mind to test whether the assistance given is the proper amount. It might be disputed if they feel they could not possibly live on the amount granted.

Usually the assistance is broken down in that they are told that they are supposed to spend so much on rent, food and clothing.

Now, the basis of this calculation is not explained. Not one recipient answered positively to the following questions:

(1) Did the officer make any attempt to explain the Act in general and your rights under it?

(2) Do you know how this amount of assistance was calculated?

(2b) Was it explained to you?

Many of these people had disputed these amounts or had asked for explanations or changes in assistance given. The usual explanation was that this is all you are entitled to receive, and the welfare office's fund does not permit greater assistance.

There was no evidence of a welfare officer explaining what the recipient's general position was under the Act, and how the assistance was calculated.

Mrs. S, who was well educated, knew that somehow the assistance was calculated on a pre-arranged basis, but after several enquiries she was not given a straight answer as to who was responsible for setting the amount, or what were the specifically scheduled amounts for the different circumstances. She, like most recipients, expressed great surprise when the Act was explained to her.

In the local provincial and municipal welfare office there were no brochures, pamphlets, etc. on display. We have not come across any government efforts to explain welfare services to the public in general or the recipients.

An even more hidden area of rules and regulations is that which is properly or improperly based on policy set by local administration or the government itself. There is no source for obtaining such policy directives.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to pause and ask the Minister a question which I hope he will answer during his estimates.

I found in policies in the east-end welfare office, at Coxwell and Queen, a form obliging the applicant to sign that anyone may enter the home on behalf of the department. I believe it said at reasonable hours. Now, there is no sign of that form in the Act, Mr. Chairman, and I would like the Minister to clarify with me if these local forms are permitted at the decision of the municipality?

Secondly, when I followed one particularly tragic case we discussed previously in the House—an inquest case of infant death—from the day the infant went on welfare until the five months later when she died, I followed her to the department of municipal government that allots a burial amount.

I said at the time, Mr. Chairman, a similar comment, that I do not personally hang up much on high-costing burials, but in this case what bothered me was that the Act specifically required an allowance, I believe up to $125 or $150. The gentleman at the burial office said to me: “Oh, we are just going by the $100 allotment that we always had, you know, when we had the old Act, when we had the old welfare”.

I think those discrepancies are very important, Mr. Chairman. Are we allowing the interpretation to vary that much at the municipal level?

To continue, there is no one source for obtaining such policy directives. Consequently it is practically impossible to determine whether a given administrator is carrying out the policy as established by the government.

To continue with the paper:

This is especially important for special assistance and supplementary aid, because the entire programme is permissive and left to the discretion of local authorities. The only way this data could effectively be collected is by detailed analysis of the minutes of the social services committee meetings since the passing of the new Act.

Under section 4 of The General Welfare Assistance Act, the director of general welfare assistance is given the power to supervise the administration of the Act and regulation, and to advise municipal and regional welfare administrators as to the manner in which their duties under the Act are to be performed.

During the course of an interview, the Deputy Minister of The Department of Social and Family Services was asked to explain the precise nature of the directives issued to municipal welfare administrators. He replied that the supervision exercised by the director under section 4 in general consists of explaining to the local administrators how the Act and regulations operate.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot explain to administrators. We must instruct that the Act is carried out in the strict interpretation of the Act. The Minister of Social and Family Services had a very unhappy experience in another department of his, in the children's aid in Guelph, in the foster-children of the Timbrell family, where the administrator interpreted the Act. The administrators are left in this position, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that the instructions should be very clear. Not guidelines, but actual instructions. To continue:

We are not able to determine how extensive these explanations are, or precisely the influence which they carry, nor is it known if an administrative handbook is available from which the departmental attitude towards the Act could be ascertained. Given the tenor of the above reply, one would suspect that such directives are of a most informal nature and that nothing akin to a handbook in fact exists.

So I would ask, Mr. Chairman, is there a handbook from The Department of Social and Family Services to the welfare administrators to make certain that they interpret the Act as it was passed by the members of the assembly? To continue:

If an interested party wishes to become familiar with the process of welfare administration beyond the rather rudimentary outline contained in the Act and regulations, he would have an arduous task before him. Of course, such knowledge is crucial to the establishment of any effective regular appeal procedure.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would say that before the board of review is working this action will have to be taken by the department, the handbook.

It is possible that the regular provincial audit of local welfare administration may act as a check. Apart from certain difficulties inherent in the audit procedure itself, there are other reasons to doubt its true efficacy.

The local regional officer informed us of the dismay of the provincial auditing officers in discovering that certain local rural municipalities had not been providing general assistance to the extent specified in the pre-added budget, much less making provision for shelter costs, utilities, household supplies. The regional supervisor felt that nothing could effectively be done, and there is no evidence that any such attempt was made.

The policy of the provincial government seems to be to leave the municipalities alone, except for the few individual cases specifically brought to their attention.

Mr. Chairman, I have a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services and it is a question involving municipal welfare. With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, the Minister's classic remark is, "That is a municipal responsibility," or "It is up to the municipality."

I want to make it quite clear what I am saying here tonight. I have had a year of dealing with these cases, and I cannot talk now for only 20 minutes on them, even if that had been the rule. I would have found it very difficult to adhere to it. The problems are so flagrant that the Minister must act.

Our research definitely indicates that few recipients are aware of who is responsible for deciding what assistance is to be granted. This fact, in combination with their suppliant attitude and vague conception of their right, precludes any control over the process by the recipient. One such recipient stated that there simply is no time to think at a moment like this, referring to the application process.

Mr. Chairman, that is understandable enough.

She went on to say there was no reason to disbelieve them and she accepted what she was told. Others continually indicated that their dependent relationship prevented them from being assertive.

With their lack of knowledge, they are too unsure of themselves to argue and insist on anything with welfare officials. If welfare recipients are to be able effectively to insist upon their rights, they must know the exact nature of those rights. They cannot question an administrator or an administrative decision if they have no established criteria upon which to judge.

Given the lack of such criteria, the administrator is free to make as arbitrary a decision as he wishes. The protection of the welfare recipient's interests and right is dependent on the local administration, and the government's dedication and determination to administer the Act in accordance with the Act and regulations.

D. Explanation of decision: The basis of all decisions should be explained to the recipient, be they negative or positive. For the most part, this would only involve a summary of the relevant provisions of the Act. As indicated in part C, this is not done.

Other decisions may be based on local policy and not the Act. For example, the welfare administrator may demand that the recipient surrender his automobile licence plates to the office during the time in which he is on welfare. This is not done in all cases and it should be clearly explained to the recipient what the general policy is and why he is being asked to surrender his plates. Certain regulations within the Act involve a degree of discretion. The policy behind each decision should be explained.

Some possible examples are as follows:

1. Why, in practice, is nothing usually given the recipient for household supplies?

2. Why was $15 granted for fuel when the actual monthly expense was $25?

3. Why is a weekly pre-added budget of $36 granted in the form of a $34 food budget, leaving a remainder of only $2 for clothes and personal requirements?

4. Why is it necessary to report three days every week to the welfare office in order to indicate that the applicant is making reasonable efforts to insure employment. Is such a requirement necessary in the circumstances to show he is willing to work?

I was looking at an old welfare Act today—I believe it was 1965—and there was a requirement there where welfare recipients were required to report three times a week to the social service centre, to the unemployment centre, and we do not now have such a requirement.

What evidence we have compiled indicates that such decisions are usually presented in a form of a fiat, with little or no explanation. Seldom is reference made to the relevant legislative provisions, and the individual's queries are consistently discouraged. In order to alleviate this situation, we suggest that a statutory duty should be imposed on welfare administrators requiring them to give full explanation of all decisions concerning the recipient or applicant.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to the Minister that if I were in his particular position, at this point I would insist that it be done. You have the member for Brantford bringing shocking reports of welfare administration, the report from Peterborough of disparities, now one from Kingston. I would say that the time to overhaul the municipalities in their administration of welfare is now.

This would assure that all recipients would possess at least a minimum knowledge of their status under the Act, and also make an effective appeal procedure feasible. Without knowing the basis of the decision it is impossible for the recipient to decide whether the administrator's decision is in keeping with the purposes of the Act, or whether the discretion exercised is within the ascertainable limits laid out in the Act.

E. Appeal Procedures: Reference was made above to three official appeal procedures available to the welfare recipient and their serious shortcomings. There are also a number of unofficial methods that have in the past been used. Several women recipients have disputed decisions by taking their children to the welfare office and refusing to move until the decision was reversed. By office closing time, the officials were usually amenable to change. Others have taken their problems to the press in the form of news stories or letters to the editor.

And, Mr. Chairman, I assure you that I had a Kingston case where the lady asked for a stove. Mrs. S. was told "go out and buy a hot-plate", so the lady, the recipient, took her welfare cheque and went out to a secondhand store and bought a secondhand stove, then went back to the welfare office and asked for a food voucher.

Mrs. B. refused to give her a food voucher, so the lady went home and called her and said: "You give me a food voucher by five o'clock or I will send my five children over to your house in a taxicab." The welfare voucher was received by the lady.

This lady is anxious to tell you these things because she is going to be married this year. She will not be on welfare assistance any more. Her husband will be in the faculty at Queen's and these people feel there is a story to be told.

All recipients interviewed were asked to whom they would appeal if they were dissatisfied with the decision made by a welfare officer. Several alternatives were suggested if the recipient was unable to give an answer.

Their responses were as follows: Five said they would appeal either to their alderman or mayor. Of the five, only one had ever expressed dissatisfaction with the decision, and none had ever actually appealed to the mayor or an alderman. Two recipients felt they were not in a position to appeal because of their dependent relationship.

Mr. Chairman, this is where I think the onus is on the Minister to remove these people from such a dependent relationship, it is not a healthy situation.

They believe that such a complaint would single them out and do more harm than good in the long run. One recipient replied that she would seek help from an alternative source such as the children's aid society. Four of them thought an appeal to the mayor or an alderman was totally useless, since the problem would only be passed back to the administrator without any directive. Two of these had personal experiences with it.

None believed that any success would be achieved by asking the welfare administrator to reconsider his decision. None of the recipients thought that the regional provincial office could help them. Only one recipient had attempted this and was unsuccessful.

Finally, one recipient suggested that the community information services might help. She was the only person interviewed who had had previous contact with this service.

As far as most welfare recipients are concerned, an administrator's decision is final and there is little that can be done to alter it. This assessment of the situation is, in our opinion, quite realistic. What is needed is an appeal procedure that is both regular and effective.

And, of course, on February 1, Mr. Chairman, the regulations to the appeal board were published in the monthly Gazette and we will discuss the appeal board at another time during the estimates.

In 1968, legislation was passed to establish a board of review for decisions made under The Family Benefits Act, and general assistance provisions of The General Welfare Assistance Act. As of this date, the board has not been appointed.

This work, this paper, was done by the student prior to February 1, or if it was not, he certainly learned that the regulations had been published February 1 after he had written it.

The size of the board and the extent to which its hearings will be centralized depends on the number of appeals. This can only be decided in the light of experience.

It is impossible to say in advance whether the procedure of the board will be similar to the labour relations board or to any other existing tribunal. Generally, the board will be fulfilling a judicial function in that it will apply legislative rules to findings of fact. The standards of procedure of a judicial tribunal would, therefore, seem appropriate.

On the other hand, formality and delay will have to be kept to a minimum if the best interests of those being served are to be safeguarded. Since this board has not yet been established, it is not known how it will act.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fair enough statement to say right here that this board in all likelihood would never have been established, if it was not a requirement to comply with in order to receive moneys from the federal government's Canada Assistance Act.

In our opinion there are four conditions necessary to make the board truly effective:

(1) A board and procedure should be set up in such a way that appeals and decisions can be made within a minimum of three days, at least in those cases involving complete denial of benefits. Such circumstances are usually, in fact, emergencies, and consequently the time element must be paramount.

(2) Definite efforts must be made by the government to ensure the recipients and applicants are aware of the board and its function. Its efforts should include the usual forms of advertising, plus the statutory duty imposed on welfare officials to inform the applicant of his right to appeal the decision. This would be in conjunction with the approved statutory duty to inform the applicant or recipient of the basis for the decision.

Mr. Chairman, we all saw in the province of Ontario what the government did and was able to do when it wanted to advertise publicly the medical insurance plan. We found the large, conspicuous blue and white folder in every possible conceivable public place—banks, restaurants, you name it; I believe even chain stores. I think the writer of this paper has done the government a service to point out many of the things that need to be done. To continue:

(3) The appeal procedure should be as simple and as practical as practically possible.

You are not dealing with sophisticated people in many of these cases.

If the board is centralized in Toronto, and/or a few other major centres, argument, information, etc., should be allowed in written affidavit. Personal appearances would not be feasible in most cases because of the extensive ignorance about welfare legislation, not only on the part of the recipient, but also of lawyers and of the public in general. The board should play an educative role by giving written judgment.

(4) The review board will only be effective in protecting the rights of the recipients if it is in fact consistently utilized. Voluntary organizations who come in contact with recipients will have to make an effort to inform themselves and recipients of the latter's rights in order to aid them in making appeals.

F. Representation. A welfare recipient should have a right to representation not only before a review board but at any stage in the proceedings of his application. This should be based on the general principle that everyone should have the right to competent representation before an official process whenever he feels he is incapable of speaking for himself.

There is no reason why such a right should interfere with the welfare official's job, or why he should treat such a suggestion as a claim of incompetency. It would only lend dignity to the entire process and help ensure that the Act is administered judicially and impartially. Welfare is of the utmost importance to recipients and denial often means destitution. In such a crucial manner it is only elementary that the recipient be allowed a knowledgeable spokesman, nor should such a right be based on the money value of the matter in question. Spokesmen need not be lawyers; anyone with a reasonable working knowledge of the Act and the administration process would suffice.

Apart from appeals to the review board, it is not envisioned that lawyers will play a significant role as spokesmen. Our research has shown that present welfare recipients do not, and will not, turn to lawyers for aid in these matters. Welfare recipients are hardly in the position to meet the cost of such representation. However, legal aid should be made available, at least for appeal to the review board.

Another drawback at present is the fact that few, if any, lawyers have a working knowledge of the welfare process. Given the present circumstances, if welfare recipients are to realize their full rights, positive educational measures will have to be taken. They will have to be approached and informed of such rights, and persuaded to assert and insist on such rights. They must be convinced that under the legislative intention their dependent relationship in no way prejudices such demands. The people who will be assigned to fulfil this positive function would also be those best qualified to act as spokesmen. Legal aid, and the traditional role of the lawyer are not structured in a way that permits the profession to fulfil such a positive role. This is not to say that appeals or any other representations are not to be made using what is traditionally called the legal approach. Concepts of fairness inherent in this approach are essential to protection of recipients' rights under the Act.

Conclusion. In making the above recommendations, we are not so naive as to assume that the basic evil faced by the poverty-stricken is the denial of their legal rights, and that once they understand their rights and are helped to gain them, justice will be done. But the securing of welfare recipient rights is a part of the fight for a more equitable distribution of society's resources, and should be seen in two different perspectives:

1. Legal. People who can qualify under The General Welfare Assistance Act are granted certain legal rights by our duly-elected representatives. All obstacles to enjoin such rights should be removed. A legal type of assistance can play a significant role in securing the proper administration of general assistance.

2. Political. Ultimately the power to create legal relationships is a form of political power. Official behaviour is a part of the law-making process. If the welfare recipient is able to effectively challenge and criticize official behaviour, he is, in effect, enfranchised and representative in the decision-making process. This involvement in the processes that shape the services so fundamental to the poor is the first step towards full citizenship. Welfare problems are one of the numerous problems that form a web of despair around which the poor may develop a sense of community that can develop into organization to increase their social and political power.

Mr. Chairman, in Kingston there is a community information centre that was started in January, 1968, by a small group of people and students under the sponsorship of the local organization of Kingston NDP. The community information service is a volunteer staff centre which offers information on dealing with a variety of problems—housing, welfare rights, garnishees, agencies. We try to refer you to an agency or person that can help or we will do it ourselves if we can find no one, or we will fight for you if your rights are being ignored.

The service is open from five to nine, five days a week, staffed by regular shifts of volunteers; a telephone answering service is used to ensure a 24-hour availability. Some people come into the office, but in many cases the volunteers go to people's homes after talking to them on the phone.

One outstanding characteristic of this organization is its action orientation. It has a strong link with ATAK—Association for Tenants' Action, Kingston—a militant organization whose president, Joan Newman, is a community information fund, and a recently-elected alderman. Their general stance is one demanding rights, not asking for favours. For tax return benefits for financial supporters they are considering severing official links with the NDP while keeping a live contact.

A regular newsletter is sent to all people on their files to inform them of recent developments concerning their rights. Cost and office needs: expenses are approximately $80 a month, $40 for rent, $20 for telephone answering service, $20 for phone, etc. Most of this is raised by donations from Queen's professors, a drawback—

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. member speaking to the estimates at the present time? It does not sound to me as if this has anything to do with the estimates.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I can complete it shortly. I am going to ask the Minister if he would consider making this type of office, at this low cost, available to the general public as a right from government and not leave it up to local citizens to form. I will make it brief. A drawback here is the amount of time spent to raise it. Government, of course, could finance it. It is a wealth of source material. You see, Mr. Chairman, for the people in need in the areas—be it a city or be it a town—where do they go to get a source of material that is kept on hand for them to see? This source includes income tax guides, Canada Assistance and Canada Pension Plan handbooks and many statutes on human rights, labour, workmen's compensation, minimum wage, legal aid and The Police Act.

In Sweden, the people are provided with a handbook which they can read. It is not a lot of gobbledygook like the Canada Pension Plan handbook put out about three or four years ago. It is a book saying what their entitlement is under government Acts. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the people of the province of Ontario in need—granted they are a minority and for that reason are being ignored in many areas of government operation, in my view—simply must have at least access to know what their human rights are in these days of people spending time on making certain that we have a society that has good civil rights and good human rights.

I would like to tell the Minister formally, Mr. Chairman, he thought last year that the two pre-added budgets were identical and I say that they are not identical. The pre-added budget under family benefits allowance includes the maximum allowances for utilities or household needs that are provided under The General Welfare Assistance Act. The total maximum is $17. The general welfare assistance people get their utilities and their household cleaning supplies at the discretion of the welfare administrator of the municipality. I ask that under the Canada Assistance Plan, which is a plan to help all persons equally, we do not have two different Acts for persons in "need" in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, I know it is taking the time of the House—and a long time—and it is no pleasure to stand here and go on for ages unless you feel there is a cause. I feel there is a cause in this particular instance.

I would like to draw to your attention that the constituents are concerned with this problem. It is not just a law student who made a paper that I think is absolutely magnificent. Next to the Seebom Report, that the Minister thankfully is dealing with, I have not seen anything presented from a private source to compare. I left out the diatribe on the deviousness of the Acts because I used examples which show that deviousness. I could keep the House for three-quarters of an hour just listening to the inconsistency of that Act and its paradoxes.

Mr. Chairman, it is the Minister of Social and Family Services who should be saying this to his Cabinet, not me. I would like to read a letter from a constituent of mine. The letter dated October 1968 from a constituent who got into an automobile accident. Now, Mr. Chairman, that can happen to any of us.

I was talking about the poor people before and I suppose I was making some members impatient and uncomfortable. They do not see the poor. They come down here on the expressways. They do not live with them but they have to take the responsibility of looking after them, Mr. Chairman, and that is one endeavour I intend to make from this side of the House.

The letter, I will spare you, Mr. Chairman, and also the details of the accident but I will start with the classic statement—well there is one detail I will not spare you, Mr. Chairman. I would like you to know that the settlement of the accident was in close proximity, and that the gentleman who wrote this letter might never have been in need of assistance from this government, if the settlement has been made. I will read that paragraph:

In the meantime I have a lot of expense because of the accident. I have not received one cent in compensation. In November last year, we had a three-day trial and the jury awarded me $25,000 for my injuries because my lawyer was able to prove to the jury that my injuries were of a permanent nature. In the meantime my lawyer had asked for only $13,000 and, after consulting with me, he told the judge that he would be willing to settle for that amount.

The lawyer for the insurance company refused to settle and appealed the decision. The appeal has not yet been heard.

So, to put it bluntly, I have money problems. I applied at the Scarborough municipal office for welfare. They sent a Mr. R. Langford to my house to interview me and he took all the particulars and later phoned me and told me that I was not eligible for any assistance.

You have had enough experience with these people to know that they never tell you anything that you can actually use as fact. For instance, he told me that he did not know how much a family of three is eligible for. However, I knew at the moment I could not expect any help from him, but if I go to the hospital for the operation, then everything will change and they will not be able to refuse me some assistance.

As near as I could figure out his line of reasoning, Mr. Langford had established my income in this fashion: unemployment insurance of $36 per week, $156 per month; payment of $20 per week from my son for room and board; $52 they consider as income. I could keep $52 of the $86, putting $34 into the income column. My wife had a part-time job as a maid in the local motel. Many weeks she has very little or no work in the winter, but since she made $700 last year he feels she should be considered as earning $16 a week, regardless of how much she makes, $69 a month, total $259 per month.

His budget for my needs as follows: payment of interest on mortgage and taxes on dwelling (actual figures) $54; heat, hot water, gas—equal billing $17; food—indefinite amount evidently according to whether they feel we should eat 20 or 25 days in the month, certainly not enough for 30 or 31 days—he said it should be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100; incidental expenses for three people—I have a daughter still going to high school—$9, total $186.

I knew that the amount I could expect on welfare would be somewhere around $200, and at this time my income was more than that. However, if I am cut off from unemployment insurance because I am not able to work because of the operation and things get so slow at the motel so that my wife does not work at all for the whole winter—this has happened before—and if there is not enough to eat in the house and my son moves out—and I would not blame him—then I will have to ask for welfare again.

If they again refuse to give me some assistance I will then have to ask for your help. I do not know what you could do to help me but I assume that they are not quite so arrogant if there is a third party with a little prestige in the community taking an interest in the case.

I have never met a more sadistic or loud-mouthed group of individuals than they have in the welfare office. One would think that someone was asking for some of their money when, in fact, especially in my case, all I am asking is a small portion of the tens of thousands I have paid into the common pool through my working life.

It seems to me to be absolutely ridiculous that not a single person in the whole of Canada knows what they are eligible for in total assistance, if you do have to exist on welfare. I thought it rather peculiar that Mr. Langford would lie to the extent that he said that he did not know how much a family of three would get as a food allowance. Evidently they give you any amount they feel like, as long as it does not exceed an amount set by some level of government.

If this is the case, and they do practise discrimination, then it is high time that the figures were made public. It is little enough as it is, and if their twisted little minds feel they are justified in deliberately starving people, then they should be made to untwist their so-called minds.

By the way, I would appreciate it if you could obtain a copy of the Act pertaining to welfare payments and send it to me. I think that it is just about time that the poor in Canada started organizing for their economic rights.

Unfortunately, some of the poor are even among the fully employed. This is because the government is the tool of big business and refuses to pass an adequate minimum wage Act. Because the poor belong to more than one strata of the population I think the problem could only be solved by an organization that would operate as a committee of the poor.

The aim of this organization would be its own liquidation by abolishing poverty. Boy, would I ever love to have a part to play in an organization of this sort. The opportunity does not exist today but it might tomorrow.

Yours truly,

Now that, Mr. Chairman, is just in case anybody thinks they are fooling the general public. That gentleman never did need welfare assistance. The claim was met and he did not, at any time, have to come back to the government as a person in need, and I presume he is contributing this year, Mr. Chairman, to the amounts of money that we are being asked to approve.

Now, I would like to put on record a case from Windsor, Ontario, Mr. Chairman, to show that this is a serious problem that this is not isolated in any particular area. This is a welfare recipient in Essex who presented on request a résumé of what had happened to her in applying for welfare assistance in the area. She was asked to make this résumé by the Family Service Bureau who were counselling her. When I first heard of the family, Mr. Chairman, there was a letter written because the family had a sit-in at the welfare office, and I would like to quote from January 27, 1969, the Windsor Star:

SIT-IN AT WELFARE OFFICE KEEPS FAMILY IN HOME

A sit-in by an Essex welfare mother and her family at the Essex County Social and Family Services Department started and ended this morning—

It is surprising, Mr. Chairman, how quickly you can get some things done:

—started and ended this morning when the department came through with enough money to prevent their eviction.

Mrs. Darlene Bednarick, her two children, Tracy, 4, and Duane, 5, and her parents Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ouellette also of Essex, sat in the office at the county building on Sandwich Street for about half an hour.

After another three-quarter-hour discussion with Murray Smith, county administrator of social services, they went away with an $80 cheque for mortgage payments on their home at 162 Iler Street, and $11.36 for drugs they needed in the past few months.

Both youngsters have been ill. Tracy and her mother have heart conditions and require drugs which until now have not been paid by the department.

Mr. Smith said Mrs. Bednarick paid the bills herself out of her welfare payments, then sent the bills to the department. He said it is not mandatory for the department to pay for drugs. The family home is an unfinished prefab. The ceilings and floors have not been finished; to save on heat they have been confining their activities, including sleeping, to the living room and the kitchen.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a case of a deserted woman, the mother of two children, and her father became concerned. I shall not read the full letter; I shall read the pertinent parts to the problem of social and family services administration at the municipal level.

As you can see by this newspaper clipping, we have had problems. The social and family services of Essex county, with Murray Smith as administrator, is a one-man administration and answers to no one.

This is the father's letter, Mr. Chairman.

For three months my daughter received $138 per month from them for herself and two children. For some unknown reason $16 was deducted from the December cheques.

After our daughter questioned their office on this, Smith's secretary stated that she herself took it upon herself to cut the budget as she felt her heating bill was estimated too high. Murray Smith had come out himself and assessed her expenses and he handled her case himself right from the start.

Metro field worker, Jerry Billings, saw our daughter in a local store buying some hockey equipment for her five-year-old son and he went back and reported it to Mr. Smith, who came to her home the next day and questioned her about how much hockey equipment she bought and where the money came from. We had given her the money.

This deserting husband worked under Murray Smith's nose for four months in Windsor driving a city bus, and no attention was paid to him and he did not contribute a cent.

Although he left September 3, there was one delay after another until the trial came through on November 5, whereupon he was charged with desertion. He was to pay the $80 mortgage payment and $10 a week. Still he did not pay and on December 3, 1968 our doctor was instructed by Smith's office to lay a "show cause" charge. That day they gave her a paper saying the trial would come off December 31. On December 30, my daughter called Smith's office stating her plight to him. Her mother was sick in bed with the flu; her five-year-old son had the chicken pox and she did not have the $3 bus fare to get into court and back.

Smith told her if she failed to come to court the next day that they would drop the charges and throw it out of court and cut off her welfare. By the way, one of their social workers, Mr. Billings, lives two streets over from my daughter and goes back and forth to the court and county and social offices every day.

Well, at 11.15 p.m. the said social worker called our home and told us the trial was off as the summons had been misplaced and not delivered after laying there for three weeks. All this time, of course, the husband is still not paying and under their nose in every other hotel in Windsor.

We proceeded at this point to call in Eugene Whalen and Don Paterson, and at this action the summons was soon delivered. During this interval the husband skipped town but our daughter still had to go back to court two more times. This is making her amount of court trips seven or eight times and yet she is supposed to be the victim, not the accused.

Smith related to our daughter how angry he was for our contacting two MPP's over it, who in turn contacted Deputy Minister

James Band about the case. Smith said we should be minding our own business; he was tired of getting rubbish from Ottawa about it and he then proceeded to turn the case over to Billings.

On December 31, Billings came down asking her to sign countless forms, one of which was a paper stating she would get a receipt for any dollars she spent out of her $122 welfare cheque—by the way her home is 26 feet by 42 feet.

She promptly told him to go to hell and refused to have anything more to do with the matter. Even though the children were healthy and clean, and herself the same and the house clean, and the household bills paid up, she was promised by Billings that they were sending Deputy Minister Band a bad report.

Before and after the husband's disappearance, Mr. Smith had promised to make the mortgage payments if the husband failed to. He told our daughter this and her lawyer, Barry Ruben. She had asked both Smith and Billings on numerous occasions about the house payments and they assured both she and her lawyer that they were taking care of it.

Then on January 25 she received a letter from her mortgage company stating two months were in arrears and unless paid promptly legal action was being taken. When her lawyer, and two MPP's, and even the Deputy Minister could not get Smith's one-man organization to answer, or to come across with anything more than excuses and lies, we took matters into our own hands.

Thank God for the freedom and power of the press. They were more than willing to co-operate; they knew they had a good story. Smith had no choice but to hear us out and believe me we certainly gave him a mouthful. We also caught him in one lie after another.

Two days after the newspaper article, our daughter received $11 from Smith's office. I call it payola. She was contacted by a local radio station and a statement of some portion of the letter she sent to James Band was broadcast several times.

Both this radio station and the Windsor Star want to be kept posted on this case. They were only sorry they could not print and say all there is in this case and tell the people how it really is.

So, Mr. Chairman, it certainly is a happy ending for Minister Mr. "Happy-Up", (Mr. Yaremko), in the case of the tax rebate going back to the welfare recipient. Something bothers me in that whole thing and that is all I am going to say about it, because I am delighted with the results—and I cancelled a good part of my leadoff I might say.

But I would like to say that Mr. Anderson, the Metro administrator, was reported in the past as having said that the people have not protested. So what do they want the people to do, Mr. Chairman? You see, I do not think families should be driven to having to protest as this family did.

I would like to read, Mr. Chairman, an editorial from the Windsor Star about that same time, about the end of January or early February:

HIDING HUSBANDS

Hiding husbands are one of the most serious welfare problems in Ontario. Men desert their wives and families and vanish. Court orders are made directing the husbands to pay so much per week or month to help support the family.

Often the payments are made for a couple of months and then they end. When the courts start looking for the errant husband, he is away and gone. No one knows where he is and he makes sure that no possible contact can be made.

If he is found, the husband can be jailed for failure to keep up the support payments. Technically, he is not jailed for debt, but for contempt of court in that he has refused to pay the sums that the court has ordered. It amounts to the same in the end.

But most of the husbands just bury themselves in the crowd of some distant community. They are not recognized, and they make sure that no word gets back to the home town.

Some better means of checking on this procedure should be worked out. It would be difficult, but the husband should not be allowed to get away with it.

Now, that is exactly what happened to the husband of Mrs. Bednarick and then a quite serious matter came up. I will take a section of the letter only, Mr. Chairman:

As stated in our previous letter, the local welfare officer, Mr. Billings, has had our son-in-law's social security number for nearly three weeks, along with a couple of addresses. Also, Deputy Minister James Band has this information, as has this area's local representative, Mr. R. Jones, along with a photograph.

Last night, our daughter received a summons to court for a debt from Avco Finance for nearly $1,900. They said her husband will be served, too, if they can find him. But in the meantime, she is handy to serve judgment against, and this could result in an execution being put against her home.

The local welfare office knows about this, and why in God's name, with the information they have at hand, and also James Band's office and representative, are they not at least making an effort to find this man? If the summons is served to him, at least there is a chance that the court may garnishee his wages, which would most certainly be better than having this young family out on the street eventually.

This way, even if the house has to be sold, the Avco Finance would come in for their full amount from our daughter's share of the home and the husband's would not be touched if the summons has not been served to him.

Our daughter's Windsor lawyer, Barry Ruben, who also happens to be Avco Finance's lawyer, told her three weeks ago that this finance company located her husband in Winnipeg and even though she passed the information on to the proper sources there, have no results, other than her becoming more involved in the summons and more court proceedings for her.

Then the father has listed Barry M. Bednarick's social security number as 418 141 412. He should be driving a city bus or some kind of transport bus, and may even have a new union number and could possibly be staying with Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Fraser, 3491 Portage Avenue, Suite 16, Winnipeg 22, Manitoba.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the daughter supplied the appropriate people with the information that the finance company had managed to dig up, one certainly would have thought that somehow some action could have been taken out in Winnipeg to try to locate this particular husband. I would like to put the case on this record, Mr. Chairman, it is on the record of the Family Services Bureau and this is the case.

Received first cheque from welfare on September 13, 1968. Within two weeks of the above date, I was advised against coming to Family Service Bureau by G. Billings, the social worker from welfare who was not even handling my case.

He stated, "You only get confused running to organizations like those". However, before he said that, his first question to me was where I was getting the money to go.

Sometime in October I was in a Canadian Tire Store buying my five-year-old son about $10 worth of hockey equipment whereupon I spotted Billings and he spoke to me and asked me if my husband had been back to the home.

Two weeks later, Murray Smith, who learned of the case from the Star, came to my home and asked where I got the money to buy my son new hockey equipment. The following month my cheque was cut down $16.

After three phone calls to Smith's office by myself I was informed that my heating bill estimates were too high. This being the reason for the deduction. This left me with a monthly welfare cheque of $122. With this I am supposed to buy groceries for myself and my two children, utilities and heat my home which is 42 x 26 without garage, buy clothing, dry cleaning, haircuts, any dental work. Welfare only pays for extractions.

I also had to go to court at the Essex county court house seven times up to the present writing, five times was for the court appearance and two times being to lay a charge. Welfare allowed no extra money for this and each trip cost me around $3, since I have to come in from out of town.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the Minister that surely in a case like this, if the husband does in fact contribute to the family, and is saving money for the welfare department, then surely a simple cost like $3 bus fare seven or eight times is something that could have come under special assistance.

With regard to Mrs. Bednarick's comments about welfare doing only extractions, I would ask the Minister that he explain that to me during the estimates. Apparently this is a municipal decision because we have had, quite recently I believe, dental service in the Metro area which includes dental care as well as extractions for welfare recipients.

Page two, to continue:

Murray Smith was approached by my lawyer, Al Gatti—

(because of the conflict of interest, I would presume the lady changed her lawyer as the lawyer was handling the finance company's and her work:

—Al Gatti, just before my husband's desertion trial of November 5. My husband wanted to sign his half of our home over to me in return for being left off the hook for desertion. Mr. Gatti pleaded with Mr. Smith—

Mr. Chairman, I pause to state, that Mr. Smith is the welfare administrator:

—for ten minutes on the telephone to accept this, explaining the legal ways to get him charged with desertion, etc., a few days later.

However, Smith's answer was, "No, we cannot accept this offer. We have to take him to court now and just get some kind of a token payment from him".

Up to this time, welfare had not made one house payment. This was done and he was ordered to pay the $80 house payment every month, plus $10 a week for the three of us. My husband failed to comply with the court order, although he did make a couple of house payments.

I was advised by welfare to lay a show cause charge against him. I did this on December 3, the trial being set for December 31.

During the month of December, I found out November's mortgage cheque had been returned to my husband for non-sufficient funds, and he was supposed to present Smith with a receipt every month so he would know that the house payments had been made. He did not do this, so Mr. Smith never knew if the house payments were being made or were not being made.

Mr. Chairman, I can only ask the Minister, is it because Mr. Smith did not care? To continue:

Only after two weeks of telephoning his office did I find out if they (welfare) would pay the house payments if necessary, which they said they would. And only then did he call the mortgage officer at Canada Permanent, who had been after me for two weeks to talk to Smith about arrangements for the house.

Mr. Chairman, we saw the hon. Treasurer objecting to any sort of harassment against a lady with children in this type of disaster. I really question that this lady was left to deal with the Canada Permanent with an Act that actually outlines the shelter allowance. To continue:

During December Gene Whelan, MP, and Don Paterson, MPP, were informed of the whole situation and they proceeded to investigate. I called Mr. Smith's office on Monday, December 30, 1968, to explain my difficult circumstances which were that I had no money to get into court, and my five-year-old son was sick with chicken pox.

Murray Smith proceeded to light into me about the rubbish on his desk from Ottawa. He also stated that my parents, who contacted the MP, should mind their own business and had no right to do this.

I replied to him that as taxpayers they had every right to contact their member of Parliament if they felt it necessary and, furthermore, if he were running his organization all right he should not mind someone from the government asking a few questions.

He also told me if I did not get into court the next day they would drop the charges against my husband and then they would cut me off welfare and that, furthermore, they did not have to pay my house payments if my husband failed to do so. If the mortgage company foreclosed, they were not responsible, even though they would have to find me another place to live and undoubtedly pay much more than the $80 a month. He ended the conversation warning me to find a way into court the next day. By the way, G. Billings, their social worker, lives two streets over from us.

The same night, December 30, at 11:30 Billings called my parents' home telling them there would be no court order for me next day as the summons for my husband had been lying around the court for the whole month of December. He told them he did not have my phone number. I had left it with the welfare office on half-a-dozen occasions and had also told them it is unlisted. The next day, Tuesday, December 31, the government official was at my home to investigate as he had to send in a report to the Deputy Minister, James Band, who was contacted by Jean Whalen. His parting words were, "Murray Smith is making a lot of unnecessary garbage and complicating matters for everyone." He is for mother's allowance—

I presume she is referring to the man from Dr. Band's department, Mr. Chairman:

—and informed me that his office and Smith do not see eye to eye on anything. The same day, December 31, Billings from welfare came down with a lot of forms to fill out and wanted me to sign a few, just as I had at the beginning after my husband left. He said Smith would not handle my case any more and had handed it over to him. He then proceeded to ask me to sign a form stating I would keep a receipt for every dollar I spent out of my $122 monthly welfare cheque. I asked him if he were kidding me and he said no.

So I simply told him to go to hell and to tell Murray Smith the same thing and that under no circumstances would I sign such a stupid thing and that if they wanted to cut me off welfare they would just have to do it. I also questioned Billings on medicine and he informed me that they would pay for any prescription if the receipts were provided. He knew I had no previous knowledge of this, even though I had personally asked Murray Smith before and even his secretary.

I also questioned him about my house taxes, as they were supposed to be making some payment towards 1968 but which they did not and now it is 1969 and they have not made any payment towards them either. During this time, Jean Whalen and Don Paterson were keeping in touch with the whole situation and were also questioning Murray Smith. Billings told me that these MP's were not going to do me any good and they would not break the rule and do a favour for one person and not for everybody. Also that I might not even get on to mother's allowance since I had no divorce and that they did not have to make my house payments.

Mr. Chairman, I pause once again, to say that that sort of statement is not consistent with the Act. To continue:

And that he had other cases where things were going just like this and I was just out of luck. Also that they had to send a report into the Deputy Minister, James Band, about me, and that it would not be at all favourable.

Two weeks ago Billings came to my house to pick up $13.26 that I had in receipts which I had spent for drugs. He told me that since only one of them was for the current month Smith most likely would not give me the money for the other one. This past week, on January 22, 1969, Billings came back to my home and informed me I would only get $3.15 back on the money I spent on drugs and that they close out their books at the end of every month so he could not bother with the other one and I was just out that money. This was Murray Smith's decision, who has the final and only say with welfare money.

I also questioned him about my house taxes and he said they would see to it and that furthermore maybe I should be paying something towards my taxes every month out of my monthly $122. My taxes are around $250.

I presume, Mr. Chairman, Mrs. Bednarick means per annum.

He also could not say when I would get back the $3.15 I spent for drugs, only that it might be on February's cheque. This is the whole situation up to today, January 23, 1969.

On Tuesday, December 31, 1968, Jean Whalen contacted my parents by phone to inform them they had found him and to quote a few words: "Your case was very badly handled and without a doubt you were misused. This county welfare is away under par and behind the times and that Murray Smith is a very bigoted person." He, along with Don Paterson, said that they have people after them every week to try to get some place for them on welfare but this case was just about the worst so far that they had encountered.

There was a note attached to this, Mr. Chairman, saying:

Dear Mrs. Renwick:

I believe I have forgotten to mention the fact that on January 14th, when my husband failed to show up on a show cause charge, Judge J. McMahon issued a warrant for his arrest. This was to be taken care of by my lawyer at that time, Barry Ruben, Ouilette Avenue, Windsor.

Yours truly,

Darlene Bednarick

It had to be done, Mr. Chairman. You can see what I have tried to do is to show that welfare cases from the Kingston area to the Windsor area are being mishandled, to say nothing of east end Toronto, to say nothing of other areas of the province, such as the member for Brantford raised.

Mr. Chairman, I am delighted beyond imagination that the Minister referred to the Seebohm report. While I spent a great deal of time bringing out parts of this report, there are two things, and only two, that I believe should be recorded at this hour. I feel it has caught the interest and the imagination of members on the other side of the House and that was what I set out to do.

In chapter 15, under research:

The case for research, 455: We have made it clear in several chapters how much importance we attach to research. The personal social services are large-scale experiments in ways of helping those in need. It is both wasteful and irresponsible to set experiments in motion and omit to record and analyze what happened. It makes no sense in terms of administrative efficiency and, however little intended, it indicates a careless attitude towards human welfare.

In 473, the conclusion of their research, chapter 15:

Number 473, we cannot emphasize too strongly the part which research must play in the creation and maintenance of an effective family service. Social planning is an illusion without adequate facts and the adequacy of services mere speculation without evaluations; nor is it sufficient for research to be done spasmodically however good it be. It must be a continuing process accepted as a familiar and permanent feature of any department or agency concerned with social provision.

In the area of prevention, Mr. Chairman, one comment in the conclusion of prevention, chapter 14, number 454:

Although we often do not know how to prevent social distress or where our efforts can best be concentrated, it is, we believe, right to strive towards prevention. We are convinced that the more integrated service we suggest, together with an increase in resources, will give an opportunity to think and plan and to undertake work other than that caused by family and individuals in the late and final stages of dependence, disintegration and despair.

Only when the imperative demands made upon the casualties are diminished can prevention become possible. But the number of casualties can only be reduced by preventive action. It is crucial therefore, that this vicious cycle is broken by a forceful and widespread commitment to prevention. We do not pretend to know exactly the form this will take—in no field is systematic research more needed. Meanwhile, we must act on the best available information and regard what is done as an experiment in the broadest sense from which to learn.

Mr. Chairman, in a private conversation recently with the member for Carleton East (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence), I raised the fact that in trying to write this one Sunday afternoon, my blood began to boil and I could not write any more. I had to put it on tape. He said, "I think we all agree about the problem but we do not know what to do about it." I can only hope that there are enough people interested, Mr. Chairman, on the other side of the House to take a look at prevention and research.

The report of the committee on local authority and allied personal services which the Minister refers to, and rightly so, is the Seebohm report. It was chaired by Frederick Seebohm, and attempted to point out that all persons in need, under several departments of government or certainly most of them, should be under one department. I will not take a great deal of time, Mr. Chairman, to point out that there are two or three important reasons why this government should consider doing exactly that.

Persons in need fall under The Department of Health where they have learned about prevention. Persons in need fall under The Department of Child Welfare where they have learned about prevention. Under the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), there are children in need who should not be isolated from services of any category as to whether they are children who are juvenile delinquents in need, or whether they are children in need.

In the December 1968 Journal of the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies, I quote from page two, at the bottom:

In the year 1967, some 49 children representing 23 families required foster boarding care at the cost of approximately $29,000 because their parents were unable to provide them with a roof over their heads. Of these 49, some 29 are still in our care, as of this moment, with very little hope in the foreseeable future of being reunited with mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters. This is a tragic situation which is going worse, not better and not only throughout the city of Hamilton and the county of Wentworth, but the country as a whole.

That is a perfect example, Mr. Chairman, of the need of the Minister of Social and Family Services to have some access to the housing supply in the province, or some recommendation or some continuity of relationship to the persons in need in his department.

In ATAK, the housing organization which I referred to earlier, in Kingston, one case, Mr. Chairman, is Mrs. M, a separated lady drawing $182 family benefits and $20 family allowance. She has four children, two boys and two girls. Until the end of May she lived in a three bedroom row house, renting at $85 a month unheated, but was forced to move when it was expropriated by the federal government to build a parking lot.

The only other accommodation she could find was a small third floor apartment with three bedrooms renting for $110 heated. She was forced to move again in July because the landlord objected to the number of children she had and she moved to the only suitable accommodation she could find, an unheated house in the village.

The rent was $110. She was given notice to vacate in September and could find nothing. She lived for two months in a windowless basement of a student co-operative before she found housing.

Now there, Mr. Chairman, is a perfect example of the federal government coming in, expropriating a person who is falling back in need on this government under housing, and also a person who falls under this Minister's department under family benefits.

The third incident, from CW6, magazine of Canadian Welfare Council, November-December 1968:

HOUSING COSTS FOR PEOPLE ON WELFARE

First findings of the completed survey of housing conditions of public assistance recipients, see CW5, September-October, indicate an impossibly high proportion of meagre incomes being spent on accommodations. The housing is much below the average enjoyed by other groups in the population but the welfare recipients had to pay 47 per cent of their incomes for it.

The average income for a family of four was $210 a month which is below the decent living standard level of $240 a month set by the social standing council of Metropolitan Toronto.

Almost one-third, 30.2 per cent, thought that their life had been adversely affected by housing conditions and more than one in ten of those living apart from their spouses believe that the housing had been a significant factor in the breakdown of their marriage.

When the marriage is broken down, Mr. Chairman, then the family becomes the responsibility of The Department of Social and Family Services who might not have got this family, if they had got some housing.

The total sample consisted of 433 individual recipients and 1,749 families living in two provinces, six municipalities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, someone on the government side of the House is going to have to take the bold step of saying, 'We have to do something. We have to act and we have to move.'

You see there is a reluctance on government to participate even in the private endeavours of the private agencies, and I will show you a classic example, Mr. Chairman.

Back in October, 1967, people were concerned. Two agencies united, North York and Weston family service. The two non-sectarian family service agencies of Metropolitan Toronto amalgamated to form one Metro-wide service, the largest of its kind in Canada. The former North York office, Family Service Centre's main office in Willowdale, became one of the district offices, with sub-offices in Weston and Lawrence Heights. Fifteen people were chosen from each board to form the board of the new agency.

And all this was not done without some concern, too, because so often on a merger like this—it may be a smaller agency with a larger agency—they have come to the conclusion and they said:

Not only will joining forces simplify administration and help us to give more effective service to the community, but it indicates a new level of maturity, and will lead to a joining of forces of more and more family service agencies, and family and child services as they look for ways to get on with the job as quickly and effectively as possible.

In short, I believe this merger is the beginning of a closer co-ordination of services among many public and private agencies who share the same goal.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is from a publication called On Record, the annual report of 1967.

Now let us see what has happened from 1967 to 1969. In 1967, On Record, dated October 1967, wrote about Lawrence Heights:

Such an attitude of responsibility is Lawrence Heights, a large OHC project in North York. The municipality pays for a recreation director, a community service centre, and a day-care centre operated by the public welfare department.

The North York and Weston family service centre has had an active programme for several years, including a clothing depot, and about 60 voluntary friendly visitors.

Recently, the Children's Aid and Family Services Association has begun a co-ordinated programme. The National Council of Jewish Women, in co-operation with the local school, has been active in a head start type of programme involving the whole family.

The crux of the problem, is, of course, finances, the question of who can and who should provide social service.

You see, Mr. Chairman, the Minister's department has provided a day-care system, but now who provides the social service and recreational facilities in housing projects? It is so complex it defies a simple answer. Ontario Housing Corporation has felt, up until now at least, that it is in the business of providing housing, shelter and nothing more. Yet, OHC provides the building for the nursery school at Warden Woods, and has recently furnished a lounge on the ground floor of the high rise. It is also conferring with public and private welfare agencies about the provision of services in forthcoming housing projects. The municipalities vary in their participation but each is already carrying a heavy load in municipal services and higher taxes. It would seem evident that all forms of government must be involved.

Mr. Chairman, government should not have to be told that it should become involved, when there are at least six or eight private agencies already trying to help the people in Lawrence Heights. And you see exactly the same thing in Warden Woods. I will not take the time of the House, but it certainly lists everything but The Department of Social and Family Services, because in Warden Woods there is nothing from the department.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Well, there is a dogged member there.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, somebody has to take the initiative. Mr. Chairman, perhaps out of 117 members there will be somebody who will say, "Let us do something about this system, because this system is not working for the people."

Mr. Chairman, the government got very concerned the other day when it had 40 delegates on the front doorstep from a particular department. I would say that if they do not get concerned with these problems they are going to have many, many more groups of people that are in need on this front doorstep, if not in these galleries or right in their offices. Mr. Chairman, I am not doing this exercise for the good of my health, I am doing it because it has to be done.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister looks terrified already.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, it has to be told as it is, as the young people say these days—tell it as it is. And this is the way it is.

Mr. Sopha: I thought he looked traumatized.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You see, Mr. Chairman, two years later I pick up an On Record, February 1, 1969. Now, mind you, the government gave me hope in the tax rebate. When the tax rebate recall arose in the Minister's department, Mr. Chairman, I gave up on this government, I had not given up until then and I have not given up now. I think the thing is that they are living in a world that is completely devoid of reality and whoever is informing the Cabinet Ministers, and the Prime Minister, indeed, cannot be informing them correctly, Mr. Chairman. Certainly not, as I see it, in at least half of Metropolitan Toronto as an example.

I pick up an On Record dated February 1, 1969, and what have they chosen for a subject? They have chosen another one of these developments, one that I listed, Lawrence Heights. Then I say to myself two years later, Mr. Chairman, have they got a social and family services representative in Lawrence Heights? No. What did On Record February 1, have to say? You would not believe it, Mr. Chairman, unless you were working with it every day as I am in my riding, and as critical as I am of this department. But, particularly, Mr. Chairman, from my riding and from neighbouring ridings in Metropolitan Toronto.

Lawrence Heights, geographically isolated from its middle class neighbours and vital services by chain link fences and circling expressways. This alienated and neglected community of 5,200 people.

Mr. Singer: The expressway is a long way away from Lawrence Heights.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I did not write this, I say to the hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: I do not care if you wrote it or not, if you are going to say it, say it correctly.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Well now, really, reading from an official document.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: If you are going to put an expressway near Lawrence Heights put it in the right place. I am sorry to be so technical.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): A little sensitive?

Mr. Singer: No, no, I am not sorry to be so technical.

Mr. Lewis: You lost every poll there last time.

Mr. Singer: All right, I can tell you polls and polls and—

Mr. Lewis: And there are more than 15 votes in Lawrence Heights.

Mr. Singer: Yes, there are.

Mrs. M. Renwick: To have the record straight, Mr. Chairman, On Record says, "encircling expressways."

This alienated and neglected community of 5,200 people including 3,000 school-age children desperately require more than professional caseworkers.

Mr. Pilkey: What riding is that in?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Since the fall of 1967, the family service association and the Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto, are two agencies which have worked closely together in the area and have combined their efforts to provide prompt services with the common aim of preventing family crisis and breakdowns.

These are private agencies at work to save this government from handling the cases, Mr. Chairman. The project owes much to the vision and perseverance of Miss Gwen Oliver, director of programme development of family services of FSA. As executive director of the former North York and Weston family service centre, Miss Oliver played a large part with leaders and with the CAS in originating the idea and in launching the experiment. This is a worthwhile experiment, Mr. Chairman, have no doubt about it. Meanwhile, the flexibility and the enthusiasm of the staff, the volunteers in the unit, their willingness to become involved in the community itself have generated exciting results. The staff works hand in glove with the community school, and the community centre located in the project, and whenever possible has fitted into the existing structure to provide a broad range of services. An extensive volunteer programme includes nutrition classes, home-making courses, friendly visiting, sewing groups, all helping people to become a more vital part of the community. After school, girls' groups have helped youngsters discover new talents, acquire poise and learn household skills. The staff recognize the great need here for programmes planned specifically for boys, because of the high proportion of fatherless homes. At present, two college students are successfully working with boys and teenagers, co-operating with a social worker and assisting in the teenager drop-in centre.

Under the aegis of the community school, the units' male staff is handling three groups of boys, aged 9 to 13, to help them modify behaviour problems. And I say, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Correctional Services should be glad that the private agencies are doing this sort of thing and the Minister of Social and Family Services should also be equally appreciative. The staff provides leadership for a family life education programme for parents—

Mr. Singer: Why should the Minister for Correctional Services be glad? They are not criminals in there, they are nice people.

Mrs. M. Renwick: If the member for Downsview would take some concern about—

Mr. Singer: They are nice people.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —about the Minister—

Mr. Singer: They are nice people. The Minister of Correctional Services does not need to interfere in this, they are not criminals.

Mrs. M. Renwick: If the member for Downsview would take some interest in the National Health and Welfare's proposal to this government, that they would indeed supply 50 per cent of the funds of all detention homes providing they fall under the Minister of Social and Family Services, he would see that the Minister of Correctional Services—

Mr. Singer: But how do you relate correctional services to Lawrence Heights? I would like to know why the NDP does that.

Mr. Lewis: On the basis of the member who represents them.

Mr. Singer: Well that is fine. I am glad to hear the NDP relate correctional services to Lawrence Heights and I hope the record shows that. They are all criminals according to the NDP in Lawrence Heights, and I hope the record shows that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect—

Mr. Lewis: Have you got all that from the member for Downsview? You realize he is doing that for a true political advantage? You want to get it all in. He is desperately salvaging votes in Lawrence Heights, so make sure you get every word of what the man said.

Mr. Singer: Hansard will show it and people will know it. I will make sure they know.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: No. Hansard will have it and my voters will know it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: What else is new?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not really know what the member for Downsview is so apoplectic about, Mr. Chairman, but he can indeed yell a great deal louder than I can.

Mr. Singer: I just do not like you running down my people. They are nice people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if I could hear the member for Downsview ask the Minister of Social and Family Services for a social and family service representative in Lawrence Heights I would be delighted.

Mr. MacDonald: He is not interested.

Mr. Singer: No. I would rather refer them to the Minister of Correctional Services.

Mr. Chairman: Surely the hon. member for Scarborough Centre realizes that the interjections are out of order. She may continue.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just thought everyone was being so patient with this year's work of mine. The members have been patient, Mr. Chairman, I thought they would enjoy a laugh in between.

Mr. Sopha: Patience is our most towering quality.

Mrs. M. Renwick: In fact, Mr. Chairman, the member from Timmins drew attention to the fact that there were very few press members in the gallery, and I had thought on one occasion of talking to Clerk Lewis and asking him about the rules on dress. I was thinking perhaps if I gave this diatribe in some unusual dress I might have attracted some press recognition.

Mr. Lewis: I thought you wanted me to do up my tie.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps we can get back to the estimates.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We are, Mr. Chairman, and we are coming now on the home stretch.

It is not often that I would like to attribute remarks to John Munro, but we might as well all get with this movement that is necessary both in Canada and the province of Ontario at this time in a common war on poverty. So from Council Comment dated January, 1969, in an item called "Focus" hon. John Munro on new trends in social work:

Instead of seeking to help those trapped in poverty to adjust to their poverty, we must help them by providing direction and motivation to break the chains of their disadvantage.

This opinion was expressed by John Munro, Minister of National Health and Welfare, when he spoke at the opening of the McMaster School of Social Work on December 4. He was commenting on an important trend which has become apparent in social work—the shift from a case-work approach to a group or community development approach. The difference between the two approaches has been described as the difference between helping man to adapt to his situation—as in case-work—and helping to adapt the situation to man for community development.

The Minister commented on the view of the social worker as a "social animator," which has been praised by the Economic Council of Canada's Report on Poverty.

Mr. Chairman, I was going to define to you what a social animator is. I think they are people who when they see a person in need give him a fish, then they are doing what we are doing now; if they teach him to fish, that is a different proposition which has been praised by the Economic Council of Canada's Report on Poverty. He felt that the new development of schools of social work at the undergraduate level would encourage the trend by making it possible in a four-year course to interrelate the course with other behavioural sciences.

In the old two-year programme, which followed the completion of a liberal arts education, it was necessary to devote much of the time available to training. Training, Mr. Chairman, we will deal with later in the estimates.

Mr. Munro noted that in 1966-67 almost $800 million was spent on research in Canada and that less than 1 per cent of this was in research on the social sciences.

Clearly, he said, we must devote far more of our resources to finding answers to questions as to why, for all our welfare expenditures, we have failed to break the debilitating cycle of physical and emotional poverty for one Canadian in five. Why the growth of urbanization and industrialization has been matched by the growth of an alienation which threatens to rob man of his essential humanity. Why the gap between the generation born after World War II and that which preceded it now reached such proportions that many of our young people have become convinced that our society can only be saved by destroying all of its institutions. The needed research, he felt, would have to be done by co-ordination and integration of the efforts of the various branches of the social and behavioural sciences.

We must lure the psychologist out of his laboratory and the social worker out of his client-by-client orientation to join with the sociologists, the social anthropologist, and others, to seek answers collectively.

Now in the Globe and Mail, January 18, 1969, on the meeting of the Social and Family Services Ministers of the provinces—sorry, two committees—the Ministers agreed on immediate establishment of two of the three committees proposed by Mr. Munro to seek ways to improve welfare services. Of the two committees which would go to work immediately, one would study the means of keeping closer control of social assistance costs; the committee will look at better ways to keep track of welfare costs, and the factors which cause them to rise.

I would appreciate, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister, during the estimates, would inform me of any progress that has taken place to this date in those two committees.

I believe from this department there emanated at one time words in reference to the community colleges having two-year courses for social service assistance. I would draw to the Minister's attention, Mr. Chairman, March 21, 1969, in the Toronto Globe and Mail an article entitled "Job Vacuum for Social Service Aides".

Mr. Chairman, the Minister even has trained social aides coming along that he might put on rehabilitative, preventative research work.

The first casualties of the community colleges could well be students trained as social service assistants. More than half the community colleges have two-year courses for social service assistants, para-professionals who assist the social workers in field work and administration or similar training programmes.

Despite this, no social agency in the province has established a job classification for the social service assistant, according to Dr. Wilson Head, of Toronto Social Planning Council. This spring, 200 to 300 of these new para-professionals will be looking for jobs in social agencies. They are not ready for that. Even the directors of the social service courses are concerned.

Robin Duff, course director at Humber College says only one of his 31 graduating students has a job lined up.

Allan Cutcher, director of Seneca College, believes most of his students will get jobs, but may have to go into rural areas that cannot attract professional social workers. Mr. Cutcher expects the crunch to come in the spring of 1970 when all the social service courses will be graduating full classes. The solution is to phase out the social service courses somehow. But the problem is finding someone who is brave enough to try.

I pause, Mr. Chairman, because I was not sure if I heard an interjection from the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) saying "No one is interested," or "No one is listening." Did you hear an interjection of that kind?

Mr. Chairman: I heard no interjections directed to the hon. member. The hon. member has the floor. Interjections are out of order.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would draw to the attention, with all due respect to the Prime Minister, that my last line in quotations is: "But the problem is finding someone who is brave enough to try."

That is exactly what I asked earlier, Mr. Chairman, if the Prime Minister, with all due respect, would have the will and the determination to overhaul this complicated kind of programme? I ask that with due respect, Mr. Chairman, because of the reception I have received from the hon. members from the other side of the House—

Mr. Lewis: There was some agitated sotto voce.

Mrs. M. Renwick: To continue, Mr. Chairman, with the problem of finding someone responsible for the problem in the first place.

In 1966-67, the emerging community colleges looked at their precursor, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, and saw a small successful programme turning out special service assistants. In a competitive scramble to get off the ground, all three colleges in Metro adopted the Ryerson curriculum.

After cursory surveys of job opportunities, Dr. Head said there was little or no consultation with social agencies expected to employ the course's graduates. The council of regents responsible for curriculum approval essentially had to rely on the colleges' assurances that they had done their homework, but a responsible and careful look at Ryerson's course would have revealed how difficult it would be to duplicate its success. The average age of Ryerson's students in the course is 35. Many are housewives and businessmen.

Surely it meant businesswomen. Maybe businessmen looking for a more exciting occupation.

According to course director Russell Jolliffe, others are already employed in social agencies and are being sent back to school so that they can take far more responsible jobs.

"The students in the Ryerson course are a different breed to the students coming out of the community college courses," Dr. Head said. "I do not think that 18- or 19-year-old kids can give adequate marriage counselling, for instance, to a 45-year-old couple. Maturity is needed for something like that."

I know that this has taken a lot of time, but I am at the end. The thing is that when we live on this side of the House, Mr. Chairman, and ask for a preventive programme, or ask for an expansion of service or an understanding of the needs, we are told so constantly that these people are not available, we are short of doctors, we are short of all the trained people. Now, at least, we can present to the Minister that there are some people available, one of whom in a class of 31 has a job.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, obviously a guaranteed income is the solution to a great part of this morass—I would hate to call it a "can of worms", but I will not go into the guaranteed annual income because it will be dealt with by the New Democratic Party at a more appropriate time.

But I would like to read two paragraphs, one from James Cutt, York University, "The Guaranteed Income for Canadians".

The likelihood of significant reforms of welfare policy has been increased in the sixties in both Canada and the United States by the happy coincidence of will and means of both a new concern over poverty and a comparative affluence to make possible steps towards its alleviation if not elimination.

Strategy is being directed both to build-up the earning capacity of low-income groups, and to assuring every family an adequate standard of living regardless of its earning capacity.

On the question of income maintenance, concern is now focused not only on income interruption, but on the whole issue of the income inadequacy or deficiency, and a variety of devices has been suggested to provide a minimum income slot, either for a particular group or on an universal basis.

And that, of course, Mr. Chairman, is not the same language the Minister for Revenue is using when he talks about guaranteed income. We may as well be talking two different languages, Mr. Chairman.

From the Financial Post, March 15, 1969, entitled "What Guaranteed Income Really 'Is'", one or two paragraphs written by James Cutt, quoting the Economic Council of Canada, which recently brought together some startling evidence of poverty in Canada, particularly among certain groups and in certain regions:

One increasingly popular approach to this problem of poverty is the provision of a guaranteed minimum annual income—which would be fine. A minimum socially acceptable income level for individuals and families, and then ensure that incomes were not permitted to fall below those specific levels.

The Canadian Welfare Council suggested in January of this year that the reform of welfare policy in Canada be built around the principle of a guaranteed minimum income, and the latest Ontario Budget stresses that the apparatus of the provincial income tax would provide the framework from which a guaranteed minimum income might be established. There are two basic approaches to the provision of a universal guaranteed income, the negative income tax and the universal demogrant.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take out of context, two lines from a remarkable American, George Wall, the 62-year-old Harvard University biologist who won the Nobel Prize for medicine in 1967 and who recently made an impassioned speech in Boston appraising our tragic times and the future of today's young people.

It was a speech that is shaking the United States, one man's dissenting views on American war policy. Now this is one of the best efforts of communication for the masses that I have had the privilege of reading. Mr. Wall states in two lines a very important fact of government.

If you recall, Mr. Chairman, I began by looking at the people from whom we take taxes and what we give them—what happens when they need us “in need”. There is no imagination and assistance is based on a paternalistic handout; but with imagination, this can be rectified. I realize, Mr. Chairman, we have come a long way since the days of Mr. David Croll and the House of Providence.

We are in different times now, we can do more, and Mr. Wall has said that “the only point of government is to safeguard and foster life”. Mr. Chairman, government is not business, government is people.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I move the committee rise and report.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we shall continue with the estimates of the same department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:00 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: In the galleries today we have as guests: in the east gallery students from Durham College in Oshawa and the W. A. Porter Collegiate Institute in Scarborough; and in the west gallery from Sacred Heart Separate School in Toronto and Streetsville Secondary School, Streetsville.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the annual report of the Ontario Fire Marshal for the year 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, this new Act will replace the original Toronto Stock Exchange Act, which was passed in 1878. The purpose in the new Act is to clear up anachronisms in the existing legislation and to ensure the exchange's position as one which provides service for, and in the interests of, the investing public. The two main provisions, to which I might make reference, have to do with the election of two public directors, and also to clarify, define and strengthen the position of the president of the exchange.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder on a point of clarification if the Minister could advise whether the members of the Legislature will have any ability to express an opinion in the selection of these two public directors.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. Their nomination will come in the normal process and be confirmed by the Executive Council of the government.

Mr. Singer: The Minister means the answer is no.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I have two bills that are rather complementary in nature. I wonder if I could introduce them one at a time and then make the explanation.

THE MINING TAX ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mining Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE MINING ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, these two bills are being introduced together because they are complementary, one to the other, and because they represent a very immense change in the policies of this government in respect of its mineral resources policy.

The Mining Tax Act changes, in the main, were already outlined by the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) in this House in his Budget address, but I do want to emphasize to the House, that the government does not look upon its mining tax provisions and increases as solely a revenue-producing matter, but rather as a vehicle for implementing public policy and the emphasis in our taxing statutes from now on, sir, will be to encourage and provide incentives for the development of our mineral resources, and for the processing and treatment in Canada of the ores mined in Ontario.

We believe that the changes incorporated in the mining tax bill will do some of these things, and it is my hope that as a result of certain studies which will take place over the next year, that further incentives and further encouragements can be built into our mining tax system and its procedures.

But the major change in government policy, Mr. Speaker, has to do with The Mining Act itself, which is being amended by changing section 106 so that all Ontario ores, regardless of when the mining claim was patented or the lease given, will have to be processed and treated in Canada, subject to certain exceptions.

Hon. members will already know, Mr. Speaker, that the present section 106 of The Mining Act requires all ores or minerals removed from any lands disposed of by the Crown since April 12, 1917, to be refined in Canada. In our view, this has been a rather ineffective requirement, Mr. Speaker, because by far the largest number of Ontario's producing mines are on mining claims that were patented prior to that 1917 date.

In effect, Mr. Speaker, we are now removing that 1917 date from the Act.

Henceforth the government will require, subject to certain exceptions, all ores and all minerals mined in Ontario to be treated and processed in Canada, and in this way we want to ensure the development of our north, and to guarantee that Ontario's mineral resources will mainly benefit the citizens of Canada. We are trying to ensure that our northern resources will be utilized and provide employment and security for Canadians first, rather than for the benefit of others.

I should point out that obviously these changes cannot be imposed by us overnight, and some of our resources, even in the foreseeable future, will have to be exported in the form of concentrates, rather than metal, so there is provision in the amendment for the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to grant exemptions to the over-all policy of requiring the processing to be done in Canada.

These exemptions will be granted only after consideration has been given to the following:

1. Whether there are facilities in Canada already for refining in Canada, and if not, why not.
2. Whether the ore can be economically treated to the metal stage in Canada, and
3. Whether there is a market in Canada for the product.

Mr. Speaker, as I have pointed out, it has been the policy of this government, and to be fair, sir, its predecessors, to encourage processing in Canada.

We are now changing that policy to the extent that before ores can be processed outside Canada specific authority must be obtained from the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

I want no one in the mining industry to be fooled by our attitude and our intention. We mean business. Ontario's natural resources belong to the people of this country as a whole. We mean to preserve them for future generations of Canadians, or preferably, and in the emphatic alternative, to utilize them first and foremost for the benefit of Canadians.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman, on point of clarification in relation to this statute, which is a reflection of his party's policy for a good many years, what part of the bill is directed specifically at the decision made, or to be made, by Texas Gulf Sulphur?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: This will affect, as I have indicated, sir, all ores and minerals mined in Ontario.

THE GAME AND FISH ACT, 1961-1962

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Game and Fish Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Brown: The intention of this Act is to prohibit the use of dogs in the taking of game and in fishing.

THE PLANNING ACT

Mr. Brown moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Brown: This amendment ensures that home care can be provided for children with social need.

THE PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT, 1968

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Provincial Courts Act, 1968.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to raise the upper age limit of persons who are to be dealt with as juvenile delinquents by the provincial courts from 16 years of age to 18 years of age.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways has a statement.

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table The Department of Highways capital construction programme book for the 1969-70 fiscal year. This is a departure from arrangements that have been followed in past years when the book was introduced with the estimates of the department. The book was then made available to members a few days in advance so that they would have an opportunity to study it.

The reason for this new procedure is to assist municipalities to organize their works programmes so that there will not be any loss of good construction weather. I am sure the hon. members will agree on the desirability of releasing this information as early as possible.

A copy of the programme book has been sent to each member in the usual way, and when my department's estimates are being presented they will be able to deal with its contents.

For the benefit of hon. members I will briefly outline the programme highlights:

First let me say that despite the financial restrictions imposed on the department, we plan to carry out a volume of work equal to last year's programme.

In order to do this, we carried out a searching examination of operations which has led to the adoption of new standards and procedures in road construction and maintenance. As time does not permit me to do it now, I shall deal with these changes in detail in the course of presenting the estimates.

The total value of capital project work outlined in the highway construction programme is estimated at $289.1 million, of which about $164.1 million will be the expenditure in the current fiscal year.

Work is proposed on a total of 878 miles. The bulk of the programme is on two-lane highways and includes the grading of 138 miles, grading and paving of 247 miles and paving of 436 miles.

The proposed work on multi-lane divided highways will include six miles of paving, 20 miles of grading and paving and 11 miles of grading. Twenty miles of grading and paving are proposed for multi-lane undivided highways.

Work is proceeding on the widening of Highway 401 to 12 lanes in the Toronto area. Proposed for award is an additional 1.5 miles, including complete reconstruction of the Kennedy Road interchange. Also slated for award this year are two contracts for a major interchange at Highway 401 and Highway 27.

Six-laning of the Queen Elizabeth Way between Toronto and Hamilton continues, with the proposed award of a contract of 3.4 miles easterly from Bronte Road interchange. Work is progressing well on the control of access programme between Hamilton and St. Catharines, with two more contracts scheduled for service roads at Jordan Station interchange and Vineland.

Proposed for award this year on Highway 406 is an additional six miles of grading and paving to extend it south from St. Catharines to Highway 58. The awarding of a contract for the construction of the East Main Street tunnel at Welland is scheduled under a cost-sharing agreement with the seaway authority. Cost of the four-lane tunnel, including approaches, is estimated at $5.7 million and will be shared equally by the seaway authority and The Department of Highways.

In the Ottawa area work continues on Highway 416 between Highway 401 and the capital city. Work is under way on the Spencerville Diversion and it is proposed to carry out clearing and grading between this section and Highway 401. Proposed also is additional work north of Spencerville.

Ottawa's 65-mile freeway link with the Quebec border—Highway 417—will proceed, with the award of contracts for the first major grading project on 9.5 miles between Baseline Road and Vars Side Road.

On the west side of Ottawa, Highway 417 will link the Queensway with Highway 17 west of Ottawa. Work continues on grading between Highway 15 and County Road 9, and follow-up paving contracts on this section are proposed for award this year. Grading of a section from County Road 9 easterly is also scheduled for this year.

With the award of a contract for the 2.4 miles from Bridgeport Road to King Street North—Highway 85—the major portion of the Kitchener-Waterloo Expressway will be under construction or contract.

Also proposed in this year's construction programme is a start on grading and drainage of the E. C. Row Expressway in Windsor.

On the Lakehead Expressway, the first expressway in northern Ontario, a contract for paving the section from Broadway Avenue to Neebing Avenue, and paving of the 9.4 miles between Tertiary Road 800 and Highway 17 are scheduled for award this year.

With a view to having the Sudbury-Timmins highway open by the fall of 1970, contracts on the final 18 miles are proposed for award this year, as is the first paving contract on 33 miles from Highway 101 southerly.

On Highway 631, a grading contract is scheduled for award this year from Highway 17 northerly for 12.5 miles, and clearing of an additional 12.5 miles is also proposed.

On Highway 71, between Kenora and Fort Frances, contracts are scheduled for the reconstruction of 17 miles from Nester Falls northerly and asphalt surfacing is proposed over a 25-mile section.

New contracts are proposed on a total of 271.9 miles of Trans-Canada Highway. Most of this total will involve the repaving of 191.6 miles, an additional work will include the grading of 5.1 miles, grading and paving of 70 miles and the construction of 5.2 miles of truck climbing lanes in northern Ontario. Included in the Trans-Canada Highway work is the proposed new 3.7 miles bypass at Sault Ste. Marie.

The Department of Highways is also responsible for design and supervision of construction of a number of miles of resources roads. Under this year's programme we propose to award contracts for 35.4 miles of resources road work in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, this is just a brief summary of the programme's highlights to indicate to the hon. members the extent of the construction programme that the department has been able to schedule with the funds that have been allocated to it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Correctional Services has a statement.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, March 18, during the debate on the estimates of my department, the hon. member for High Park made a statement that some inmates selected for the treatment programme for drug addiction at the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic were, and I quote him, "sent there and took marijuana and no other drugs".

To support this statement, the hon. member sent across the floor of the House, the name of one inmate alleged to be in this category. The hon. member then stated, and I quote again:

I can well understand that errors can occur and I ask the Minister that he take steps in future to make certain that boys, and this is a very serious problem, who are just smoking marijuana are not sent there.

Mr. Speaker, the contention of the hon. member was that we took a young lad whose sole experience with drugs was using marijuana and placed him among those who were addicted to the more dangerous drugs. As I promised at that time, I have looked into this case and am advised that the facts are as follows:

1. The young lad referred to is nearly 22 years of age.

2. This man was convicted of trafficking in narcotics.

3. On his own admission, this convicted drug trafficker had been using methydrone, LSD, and marijuana for a number of years.

Let me emphasize that this is the same man to whom the hon. member referred as a young lad "just smoking marijuana". Therefore, sir, in accordance with the policy and practice in my department, this man was quite properly assessed for treatment at the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic.

Mr. Shulman: For clarification, Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? For clarification, Mr. Minister, would you inform me if the narcotic, for which he was convicted of trafficking, was not, in fact, marijuana?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member asking me about the offence for which he was convicted?

Mr. Shulman: The Minister said the man was convicted for trafficking in narcotics and was the narcotic not, in fact, marijuana?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is beside the point, Mr. Speaker. Whenever we get someone into our system, whether they are convicted for narcotics trafficking or for any other purpose, and we find out that they should be at the clinic for treatment of an addiction, that is where they go—regardless of what he was convicted for.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may not convert this into a debate. He has been answered and I think he should yield the floor now—

Mr. Shulman: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is reminded that this is not a period of debate. He has a privilege, according to the customs of the House, of asking questions for clarification. He has asked one and has been answered by the Minister as the Minister wished to answer. I will be pleased to hear the member's other question and if it is a proper one, the Minister may accept it or not as he wishes.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the question which I wish to ask for clarification—the lad referred to, the 21-year-old lad, was he, in the opinion of the Minister, addicted to any narcotic drugs?

Hon. Mr. Crossman: The answer, sir, is yes.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of clarification. That is a question of the Minister's opinion. It is not proper and it is out of order, as is the answer.

The hon. member for Algoma has been catching the Speaker's eye.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to sweeten up the operation here—

An hon. member: The hon. member should have done that last night.

Mr. Gilbertson: —the page boys are now going to distribute some maple sugar on every member's desk. It is compliments of the Algoma maple syrup producers.

I would also like to announce, Mr. Speaker, that we had our festival last week and we had Miss Dominion of Canada on St. Joseph's Island—

Mr. Speaker: Before we get into the question period, I would like to ask the co-operation of the members of the Opposition parties today and tomorrow with respect to the question period. After the leader of the Opposition and the member for York South have asked their questions as is our custom—and which custom I think we should preserve—I would like to ask the hon. members both today and tomorrow to catch Mr. Speaker's eye as they can and we shall proceed in that manner and see if there is any improvement in the manner of handling questions.

I may advise the House that a meeting is being scheduled for immediately after Easter, between the party leaders, to start the review of what should be done with respect to procedures. The question period is one, I know, that will be considered. So perhaps the hon. members will now take it upon themselves, after the two leaders have asked their questions, to catch the Speaker's eye if the Minister to whom the question is directed, is in the House. If they neglect to do so, I shall not, as in the past, remind them and call it to their attention.

The hon. leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management, further to my questions of yesterday.

For how long has the Douglas Point nuclear reactor been out of operation?

Was there any escape of radioactive materials from the reactor?

Has the reactor been refueled under power since it was commissioned?

When is it expected that it will be back in operation?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the Douglas Point nuclear reactor has been shut down since March 6.

The reactor has continued in a safe state throughout the entire period since shutdown and no significant release of radioactivity to occupied areas of the station or the surrounding environment has occurred.

The reactor has not been refueled under full power since it was commissioned.

The annual planned shutdown for routine maintenance and overhaul, originally scheduled to start in mid-April, has been advanced so as to be concurrent with the unplanned shutdown caused by the fueling machine failure.

It is expected that the annual shutdown will require from six to eight weeks at which time the reactor will again be placed in operation.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

I did not hear the Minister too clearly but am I to understand that there was an escape of some radioactive material?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister, since this particular plant was designed to be refueled under power and a similar design is the basis for the much larger Pickering plant, what assurance can he give us that actually the design is in fact workable, since we are so heavily committed to it in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should read a statement from the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and it might explain some of the problems.

A mechanical failure in one of the two fueling machines at the Douglas Point station has caused the plant to be shut down. Fueling of the station is carried out by two remotely operated machines which work as a pair, one at each end of the reactor. The machines lock on to the ends of a fuel channel and one machine pushes fresh fuel into the channel while the machine at the opposite end receives spent fuel. The system is designed to refuel the reactor while it is at full power.

During the commissioning of the refueling system, however, this work is being carried out with the reactor shut down. Defective fuel bundles had been discovered in the reactor channels and the fueling machines were removing this fuel when the mechanical failure occurred in the west fueling machine. This failure rendered the west fueling machine inoperable while locked on to a reactor channel.

Procedures for removing the fueling machine from the reactor channel are now being prepared. The annual shutdown of the station for routine maintenance and overhaul, which was scheduled to start in mid-April and last for several weeks, has been brought forward.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, just for clarification, I understood the Minister to say in his first answer that no significant radioactive material was lost. Then he emphasized that there was some loss of material. I do not want to be misled in this but can the Minister assure me that there was no loss of radioactive material?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know there is no problem there. But again, Mr. Speaker, and I told the hon. leader of the Opposition yesterday, I think he has got some questions there that might better be answered by the nuclear engineers in Hydro, where they could give him the answer that he is seeking on the floor of the House.

Mr. Nixon: I would just say, Mr. Speaker, in response to the Minister's comment, that it is not my intention to get into needless technical questions. But I made the point that the principle of the Douglas Point reactor is being repeated on a much larger scale in Pickering. Surely this is a matter of policy, not just a matter of technology, and we are concerned about it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of policy. We are talking about a mechanical failure which can happen in anything, not only in—

Mr. Nixon: The Minister has not had that thing working yet.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: —not only in nuclear reactors but it can happen in anything. It will be ready. I cannot see where any government policy is connected with that.

Mr. Nixon: The important thing, Mr. Speaker, is that this particular plant was announced in 1961. Now in 1969 it has still not worked to specifications.

An hon. member: Is this a debate?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader will continue with his questions.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Provincial Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That was a red face—

Mr. Nixon: Yes, the Minister always does that to me.

Were any of the regional development facilities consulted by Dofasco before the company reached the decision to option 5,000 acres at Port Burwell for a new major steel complex?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if the Treasurer might indicate to the House, what the function of his regional development councils would be if they were not to play some part in assisting these major industries to locate in a part of the province where it would be an advantage to the whole province and perhaps fit into an overall plan of the province. There has been some considerable—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader has placed his question now. He need not comment on it. The Treasurer is available either to answer or not the supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I think an appropriate time to debate that matter is when the estimates of The Department of Treasury, regional development branch, are under consideration in committee.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member for a minute? I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development from the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: I spoke about that earlier.

Mr. Speaker: Pardon me. The hon. member for York South; I am sorry.

Mr. MacDonald: My first question is, in view of the case cited by Action Line, Toronto Telegram, March 28, would the Minister indicate for how long tenants' security deposits are held by the Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the security deposit required by Ontario Housing Corporation is a nominal $25. These funds are held in trust by OHC during the period of tenancy. They are refunded in full at the termination of the tenancy provided that there are no repairs required which are the tenant's responsibility and that the rental account shows no arrears.

As the hon. member realizes, the interest on such a modest deposit is not much more than $1 a year. The corporation, therefore, uses the interest to assist tenant groups and tenant recreational and social activities. For example, $300 was recently made available to the Neighbourhood Youth Corps in South Regent Park and regular annual grants are made to groups like the Lawrence Heights recreational committee and the Scarlettwood-Westmount Youth Club.

Mr. MacDonald: By way of a supplementary question, in view of the fact that the tenant mentioned in this instance had been there for 13 years, so that the $13 interest is a 50 per cent increase in the security deposit. Does OHC pocket all of the interest?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I just said OHC does not pocket any interest. They use it for the tenants' benefit.

Mr. MacDonald: On another occasion we will pursue it, Mr. Speaker.

To the same Minister, in view of the fact that Westinghouse is closing down its Etobicoke plant, with consequent loss and hardship to the employees in the community, will the Minister explain how an application by Westinghouse for a forgiveness loan to open a new plant at Orangeville can be entertained?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, there is no loan approved yet for the Westinghouse Company at Orangeville. I might say that consideration is always given with reference to what would happen when a plant moves. I might say I spoke to the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) about three weeks ago about the same plant, and also to the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I pointed out that this was a chain reaction on the part of Westinghouse; they were moving some of their production out of Brantford to Orangeville and out of Hamilton to Brantford, and that in the shuffle there would be $7 million of export products going out of the Brantford plant back to Westinghouse in the United States.

Since that time, of course, the matter of the Etobicoke plant has been brought up, and I might say that we had the UEW group in yesterday and they met with the Prime Minister and myself. We are looking at the situation and I have asked my people to see what effect these moves would have on the Etobicoke plant. But what they make in Etobicoke has nothing to do with these three other plants; there is no chain reaction there I can assure you.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the Minister not agree that what in effect is happening is that the public purse is subsidizing the transfer of a plant from one community to another community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not in this case. The plant in Etobicoke is obsolete and was being closed out anyway, so the Orangeville plant has nothing to do with what is happening in Etobicoke. If the member wants to tie them all together so he can make an argument out of it, I suggest that if we are going to employ more people in Brampton than Orangeville, we have to weigh the circumstances—how many jobs you lose in one area and how many jobs you create in the other. In this case, I do not think that Etobicoke has anything to do with what we are doing in these other three locations.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will get back to that one when the rules of the House permit a fuller exploration.

To the Minister of Health. Can the Minister advise the House whether the Ontario College of Nurses, having been apprised of the Minister's view regarding their rules with respect to nurse registration examinations as they apply to Grace graduate nurses, have indicated to him that the rules will be changed so that the Grace graduate nurses may write their examination under conditions similar to those spelled out in sections 8 and 9 of the regulations under The Nursing Act?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, they have not so advised me yet, but they have given me to understand that they intend to review the situation in the light of actual experience of examinations to see if the present system is good and worthy of being carried on. They have undertaken to review the decision and to recommend whether or not added courses should be taken or more opportunity given to re-write examinations. This, I am sure, will take place at the next meeting of council towards the end of this month.

Mr. MacDonald: A question to the Provincial Treasurer. Has the Provincial Treasurer received representations from the Ontario Regional Development Council and member regional development councils with regard to their work? Will the Minister make the council brief available to the Legislature? And if not, why not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and I met with representatives of the Ontario Regional Development Council and member councils to discuss their future role in provincial planning and development. We met yesterday afternoon.

Both the government and the council are reviewing the nature and extent of the contribution these dedicated bodies can make to Ontario's economic progress as a complement to the valuable assistance they are providing in the preparation of regional development programmes.

The submission made by the Ontario Regional Development Council is directed specifically to the Prime Minister, the hon. Mr. McKeough and myself, and its contents suggest that they did not wish the material to be made public.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): A question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. When the town of Orangeville sells to Westinghouse for $90,000 land which the municipality purchased for $200,000, is this subsidization of new industry permitted under the law or departmental regulations?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter was just recently brought to my attention. At this point, I am not in a position to agree or dispute the figures. We wrote to the municipal clerk on March 20 asking for the facts. We have not heard back from him but when we have, I will be glad to discuss it with the member.

Mr. Pilkey: A supplementary question. My second part of the question is—regardless of the amounts of money, I am talking about the law and the departmental regulations. Would you care to comment on that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The law is very explicit.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kitchener—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs:

What guarantees are there to protect the public investing in university scholarship funds? If there are no guarantees, would the Minister recommend a system of protecting the public, similar to the depositors' insurance legislation?

An hon. member: Good question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. Minister of Commercial and Financial Affairs ready to answer?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am sorry—

Mr. Speaker: A question has been placed by the member for Kitchener, on behalf of the member for Parkdale—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes—

Mr. Speaker: —in connection with university scholarships.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Excuse me, I was directing my attention to a matter which was just delivered to me.

Now, with respect to this question of university scholarship funds, amendments to The Securities Act 1966, which took effect on September 1 last year, brought scholarship plans or trusts within the jurisdiction of the Act by a change in the definition of security.

The result is that those selling such plans are obliged to meet the licensing requirements of the Ontario Securities Commission; those being asked to buy are, through a prospectus, given adequate information on which to base their decision. This information discloses that the net funds accruing to depositors are placed with institutions which are already insured under existing deposit insurance legislation.

Mr. Breithaupt: A question of the Minister of Trade and Development, Mr. Speaker.

1. How many invitations have been sent out for the Provincial Conference on Women to be held at the Royal York on April 16, 1969?

2. How are the names chosen?

3. To what extent is the conference being subsidized by the department?

4. Why are there no opportunities for Opposition members to speak or participate on the panel?

5. What is the function of the women's advisory committee?

6. Who are the members of this committee and what are their qualifications?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre): A question to the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General.

Since The Law Enforcement Compensation Act 1968 does not apply to persons assisting police without having been requested by the police to do so, and is totally inadequate in its application to situations in which private citizens may find themselves from time to time, is the Minister now prepared to introduce legislation which would provide compensation for victims of crime?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misinformed as to the content of the Act. The question reads that the Act does not apply to persons assisting police without having been requested. Section 3 of the Act refers to any person being injured or killed by any act or omission of any other person occurring in or resulting directly from assisting a police officer in arresting any person or in preserving the peace. I would just point out that there is no need of a request to assist.

Clearing that point, I would continue to say that any person assisting a police officer in arresting a person or preserving the peace is included as one who is entitled to compensation under the present Act.

As to the last part of the question, which really calls for a statement of government policy, I think I am prepared to say this—the matter of further extension of this compensation is under consideration and legislation is in the course of drafting. The matter of government policy as to how far that will go has not yet been determined.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question.

Mr. Davison: A question to the Minister of Tourism and Information.

Do films purchased by public or private bodies which are made available for public showing, whether for profit or free of charge, have to be approved by the director of the theatre branch? If so, was the film "Revolution Underway" screened and approved by the department?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the film to which the hon. member refers was a 16 mm film. I can simply say that the board makes a charge for reviewing films. There are many films of an industrial, educational, travel or various nature, on 16 mm, which are not submitted to the board, nor are they required to be, because they are not proposed to be shown for profit. As far as the film "Revolution Underway" is concerned, I am informed that it has not been submitted to the department.

Mr. Davison: A supplementary question; this was a film shown by the Police Department of Toronto, and it was not submitted to your department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Attorney General. In view of the increasing responsibilities of justices of the peace as a result of proposed and past legislation, would the Attorney General advise as follows: What criteria has his department established in evaluating the qualifications of persons appointed to such office? Is there any programme of continuing training and education afforded to justices of the peace, and what type of examination or review as to competency is conducted by the department?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and give an answer very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Has the Minister arrived at a decision as to the sale of homes to the tenants in Bridgeview and other subdivisions in the city of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, we are satisfied now that the pilot project in Guelph has worked out to the mutual satisfaction of all concerned. We are submitting to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approval on all other projects of a similar nature in many areas of Ontario. I might add that this totals about 6,000 units, of which we believe 3,500 to 4,000 can be sold on this basis. We hope to approach it on a concerted basis where everybody is in agreement. We will not be doing it on an ad hoc basis the way we did in Guelph. So I would assume that shortly we will hear from Central Mortgage and Housing that the proposal has been accepted, and we will start to work with these other areas to give them the same opportunity as at Guelph.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification. Has the Minister approached Central Mortgage and Housing concerning the Windsor situation specifically or not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It would be included with the rest of the submissions. Every project outside of Guelph is now included in this submission of 3,500 or so.

Mr. B. Newman: Could the Minister be a little more explicit and possibly give a date as to when occupants of these homes in the city of Windsor could expect to purchase them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No I cannot at the moment. I think we shall have to wait and see if the general proposal submitted to Central Mortgage and Housing is accepted. Then I think we can notify people. We can estimate the value of their homes, what repairs are required, and make a contract or arrangement such as we did in Guelph.

Mr. B. Newman: If I may ask the Minister another question, Mr. Speaker. Back on February 4 I asked the Minister this same question and I got the same answer. I hope in a month from today I do not get the same answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question he may do so, but he did not do that. He made a statement.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps I could clarify that, Mr. Speaker. We did do some preliminary investigation and estimating, as I have suggested to you, and Windsor was one of the areas where we did some preliminary investigating on the value of the homes, which helped us put our report together for this major report we have submitted to Ottawa now.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister if he is aware that the homes keep deteriorating as a result of no action?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has had a great deal of leeway with supplementary questions and I think that he has asked sufficient. The hon. member for Windsor West has the floor.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the Minister of Trade and Development.

Following the meeting of the Prime Minister with the federal Minister of Transport last week, was the Ontario Housing Corporation instructed to withdraw loan applications covering a portion of the 3,000 units then awaiting CMHC approval?

If the answer is yes, what is the number and location of the units covered by the withdrawn applications?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is that we were not asked to withdraw any submissions. To my knowledge, only one has come back, and that was due to a slight change which our people are working on and it will be resubmitted. But the applications we have in there will remain there until they make a decision on them.

Mr. Peacock: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister, Mr. Speaker? Was it proposed to the Minister, or to the Prime Minister, by the federal Minister of Transport that a portion of the units awaiting loan approval be replaced by the rent subsidy programme proposed by the federal Minister of Transport?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not quite follow that. There were no proposals made to change the programme that we have at the present time and, as I said earlier, we have no intention of withdrawing any projects we have up there. We are awaiting decision from Ottawa as to what they are going to do with them. We have no projects approved in Metro Toronto, I might say, right now. I would hope before too long that some of these projects will come forward, but there are no changes contemplated at the present time that I know of.

Mr. Peacock: My question is, was it proposed by the federal Minister of Transport that the rent subsidy programme replace some of the units for which the Minister has loan applications in CMHC's hands?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If I understand, I think you are referring to the apartments that are vacant now in some of the buildings. That is a rent supplement, like the former rent certificate scheme. No, it was not discussed to my knowledge. We wrote, as I said earlier, on February 18, asking if Ottawa would be interested in sharing a rent subsidy on that rent certificate scheme. So far we have not received any reply from them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to place a question from the member for Cochrane South to the Minister of Mines. It is in five parts.

Have meetings been held between the government and Texas Gulf concerning the location of the zinc smelter?

What is the date of the most recent meeting?

Who attended the meetings?

Where were the meetings held?

What is the date of the next meeting to discuss the location of the zinc smelter?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, in answer to these five questions. Number one, have meetings been held? Obviously they have. As I have indicated in the House on a number of occasions, within seven days of assuming the office of the Minister of Mines I had them in and we were holding a meeting.

What is the date of the most recent meeting? The most recent meeting was held a week ago Monday, that is Monday March 24.

Who attended the meetings? On that particular meeting, sir, Mr. Earl Huntington, of New York the assistant secretary of Texas Gulf, Mr. R. D. Dick Mollison, the vice-president of the metals division of Texas Gulf who is also the executive vice-president of Ecstall Mining Limited, in Toronto, Mr. Stephen Gilmore, the traffic manager of Texas Gulf from Houston, Texas, Mr. Devon Smith, the manager of the public relations for Texas Gulf, Toronto, Mr. Gordon McKee, junior, of New York City, the treasurer of Texas Gulf, Dr. James R. West, the manager of research for Texas Gulf of the city of New York, Mr. J. W. Hall junior, the manager of the sulphur and metal sales division of Texas Gulf of New York city, Mr. Brady Lee, the mines assessor of The Department of Mines and of the city of Toronto, Mr. Donald P. Douglas, the deputy Minister of The Department of Mines and of the city of Toronto, and Mr. Alan F. Lawrence, QC, MPP, the Minister of Mines and of the city of Toronto.

Where were the meetings held? This particular meeting was held in the office of the Minister of Mines, Room 1302, Whitney Block, Parliament Buildings, Queen's Park, Toronto 2.

What is the date of the next meeting to discuss the location of the zinc smelter? In the same place, on Tuesday next, April 8, 1969.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Why did you not invite the hon. member for Cochrane South?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Because I do not think the member for Cochrane South would add one single little bit to the discussion.

Mr. Jackson: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Does the Minister support the resolution that was introduced in this House on Monday?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is not a supplementary question.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It would be nice to have a majority of Canadians in those meetings, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nipissing.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): I have a question left over from yesterday to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Has the Minister received a request from the town of Ajax for a meeting to discuss the new town budget? And, secondly, why is there such a marked difference between the residential commercial assessment under the previous assessment procedures, and those used by The Department of Municipal Affairs assessors in that community?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's first question is yes, I received such a letter today. The answer to the second question is that I do not know, we will look into it. Of course, there is an error in the second part of the question. The assessment has been carried on both previously and as of today by the assessors for the county of Ontario and not by the assessors of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. R. S. Smith: As a supplementary, is the Minister going to meet with these people as requested?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The door is always open.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Health.

What formal meetings and/or exchange of correspondence took place between the Minister and representatives of the Ontario Medical Association between November, 1968 and April, 1969 regarding the increase in the OMA fee schedule?

Secondly, if there has been correspondence, would the Minister table it in the House?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, may I ask that this question be held over as I expect to make a statement on this matter tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is taking it as notice then?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if it is considered that the question is incorporated in the statement, may a supplementary be asked at that time?

Mr. Speaker: The question of supplementary or clarification will be considered at the appropriate time.

The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs:

What action has the Minister taken to remove from the market the dangerous dolls which were shown to him yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, this has to do with a question directed originally to the Minister of Health and of which I took notice and undertook to look into the circumstances.

I instructed my department to ascertain the facts of the matter and the situation is this—that while the label on the doll was as described by the hon. member for High Park, it was also identified as having been manufactured in Japan.

The article in question was, in fact, imported approximately three years ago and was presumed to have been sold out.

This type of doll, together with another doll which contained metal pinned eyes, were discussed with the importers some two and a half years ago by officials of the stuffed articles section.

At that time, arrangements were made with the manufacturer, through the importer, to discontinue production of dolls of this type for the Canadian market.

With respect to the doll which was produced yesterday in the House by the hon. member for High Park, it was sold at a Becker's milk store and the Becker's people have assured my department that they will at once recall and destroy any of these dolls which still might be in stock, and that undertaking was given to us yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, in the form of a supplementary, and I hope you will allow this—it is not quite a supplementary—in today's press, the manufacturer of these dolls was quoted as saying there are far more dangerous metal toys on the market which can shred a child to pieces. Will the Minister look into this matter and see that such toys are also removed from the market?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have not seen the article. I shall read the article and decide then.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. What action is the Minister taking to prevent the sale of dangerous toys bearing labels indicating that they have the approval of his department?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs has answered this question. The label on the article only has reference to the material used in stuffing the animals, and is in keeping with The Public Health Act. It has nothing to do with any other part of the toy at all. We have no authority at the present time to deal with these matters.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a supplementary question? Would the Minister agree that these labels are highly misleading to the public and might lead the public to believe that the Minister of Health, in his usual way, was looking after their health?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the industry knows full well what the labels mean and I think the public knows very well that it has to do with the material. Indeed, I believe, if I recall the wording of the label, that it has definite reference to the stuffing or the packing used in stuffing the article, or toy, or whatever it may be.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, sir, the Minister is incorrect. Perhaps the Minister sitting beside him would pass the toy so he could read the label and look into the matter.

I have a question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker: Is an inquest to be held into the death of Mr. William Smith of Oakville, whose car collided last week with a tanker on the Queen Elizabeth Way?

And will the Minister direct the coroner's office to hold an inquest without delay, as had been requested in an editorial in the Oakville Journal-Record of yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am getting the facts of this matter. Until I have the facts, I do not propose to give any answer on the question.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister taking the question as notice?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will be glad to give an answer as soon as I have the facts. My action will possibly answer the member when I get the facts.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Minister is different from the member for High Park, he gets the facts first.

Mr. Shulman: I might also say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is on his feet for the purpose of asking questions, and not for making statements. Now, if he has a point of order that he wishes to state, or personal privilege, that is in order. Otherwise he asks questions, he does not state something.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, or point of personal privilege, you may think it best applies, I would hope the member who made the interjection—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not stating a point of order, he is hoping the Speaker would do something. Now, if he has a point of order, he will state it.

Mr. Shulman: The point of order is, sir, that the member for Sarnia never gets the facts.

I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, if he has a point of order, will state it. He has not yet made it clear, and his remarks so far are out of order. Now, if he wishes to state a point of order, I will be glad to consider it; if he wishes to go on with the other questions he has, he has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: I have made my comment, sir. I will put my question now to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not to engage in a discussion with the Speaker about the Speaker's rulings or about matters of the House. The hon. member, at this time, has the floor for the purpose of asking questions, not for having the last word when any matter is being discussed. If the hon. member wishes to continue with his questions, he certainly is entitled to do so.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services and I am always glad to give you the last word, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is persisting in showing disrespect, not to the Speaker personally, but to the Chair, and I would hope that he would ask his questions without the personal references which he always seems, at this time, at least, to be inserting in his remarks. Perhaps he would carry on with his question.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services: Why was Stephen F., who was transferred from Burwash to Sudbury jail to face charges laid as a result of complaints within Burwash and found not guilty, then transferred to Millbrook?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am first of all grateful that the hon. member has changed his question so that the inmate's name does not appear publicly on the record, which is the way I received the question.

I can only tell him, because he had used the inmate's name in the question as I have it, the only information which I can give him now, is that the inmate was transferred to Millbrook for reasons of security. I am satisfied, having gone into the matter, that those reasons were very good and sufficient.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? Was the inmate transferred directly from Sudbury jail to Millbrook, or was he returned to Burwash and then something happened in Burwash which caused the transfer to Millbrook?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, of course I am not in a position at this moment to answer that question. I do not have all of the details before me. Besides, I really do not think it is of any consequence. The fact is that if, in my view, I think that he is properly in Millbrook, I have given the correct answer—and I am satisfied that the proper action was taken no matter from where he was transferred.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister inform me of the facts?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have already done so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister answer my question either now or at some later time?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister states that he has already done so.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A question of the Attorney General: How many children are there at the present time in juvenile detention homes and how many in each age group?

How many juvenile detention homes are there in Ontario, and where are they?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this question was asked today, first of the Minister of Correctional Services, and then transferred to me a moment before I came in the House, so that I am sure the hon. member will realize that it takes a little time to get actual figures. I shall take it as notice and provide an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister should have those figures at his fingertips.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question by the hon. leader of the Opposition yesterday, I believe, question 1060, and I answered it partly at the time.

The question was: "Does the Minister agree that information on debtors should automatically be turned over to privately run credit bureaus from division court as will be the practice announced by division court referee, David Scott, on Saturday, March 29".

Now I have not got before me the words I used yesterday in partially answering the question but I did, I think, point out that any court of record information, is public information, which a member of the public may obtain.

I did promise to expand upon that answer and I should like to say this now, Mr.

Speaker: I am not in agreement that information secured by the division court referee should be turned over to the credit bureaus, and the referee has been so advised of my view.

I would like to go further and state this, that all references of persons from division courts in the county of York to the judge in chambers are first processed through the division court referee's office. Such persons usually wish to secure relief from garnishees and wage assignments which were entered into prior to March 29, 1968, and they require or seek appointments for consolidation orders. These are processed through an official known as a referee in the county of York.

The referee makes a complete investigation and, where possible, the point at issue is cleared between the debtor and the creditor. In other words, if an arrangement can be arrived at as to the settlement of the debt, or an arrangement for payment made, that is quite often achieved. If this is not possible on the basis of the information he has obtained, he recommends to the judge in chambers that an order be made, and he supports his recommendation with the proper documentation.

On the basis of this, the judge in chambers makes the order or not, or varies the recommendation as he sees fit. In 1968, approximately 4,200 orders were made and I do not feel that such a volume could be processed by the county court bench without this assistance from the referee's office, a very valuable office in advising the court; arranging appointments; bringing the parties together; sometimes achieving settlement or arrangement for payment.

During his discussion with the debtor on which to base his recommendation to the judge, the referee secures a list of the creditors of the debtor and this is the information referred to in the newspaper article on which the hon. leader of the Opposition based his question.

Mr. Scott's remark was based on the fact that if such information were available to the Toronto Credit Bureau, it would reduce calls to his office, and would possibly reduce the issuing of further credit to such debtors until the debtor's credit rating improved.

I would like to interject that one can understand that the credit bureaus keep calling for the status of debtors, the number of judgments, executions against them, Mr. Scott felt that if the information were known it would reduce the work in his office and perhaps be of some assistance.

This may, or may not, be right, but we do not approve of him giving out information on the basis he suggested. I have advised him that such information is not to be turned over to the bureaus. The date mentioned for the giving of information to commence was April 1, and no such information has been divulged.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say further in discussing this—so that the members may be fully informed—I think an organization such as the Debtors' Counseling Service, which is supported by government funds and which does a great deal of good work in assisting debtors—

Mr. Nixon: Is that the one receiving grants from the department?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, that is right. It receives a grant from one of the government departments. I think they are to be commended for the work they are doing because they are assisting the debtor. I think information might very well be given to them that is not in question here—in the question asked by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

In the case of the credit bureau which is pursuing the debtor, I do not think we should be in the position of placing information at the disposal of such an organization by such an arrangement as Mr. Scott suggests. So, as I say, we have told him that is not to be done. But he felt there was some virtue, perhaps, in lessening the number of applications which would be made to the court and assisting the work. He does a very large volume of work as I have indicated—4,200 orders made last year.

In any event, I do not think it is right that though the information is public, an official of the court should be turning it over to a credit bureau which is engaged in pursuing the debtor. I think while it is not asked, and is not in question, that perhaps assisting a debt-counselling service might be a very proper use of such information.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General will permit a supplementary question.

As I recall, in the answer given by the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs yesterday he disagreed with the Attorney General to some extent in that he felt this information might be to the long-range advantage of the debtor if it were turned over to the credit bureau. I would ask the Attorney General if he can assure me on his policy and the policy of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, is it the same now that it has been examined?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not listen to my colleague, apparently being engaged in something else yesterday. I was here when the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs spoke, but I have had no occasion to discuss the matter with him.

I do not believe we disagree. I have indicated, I think, in the remarks I made a moment ago that there perhaps could be some benefit to that debtor because if the information were known, even to a credit bureau, it might look at his situation and say there is no point in us pursuing him; there are such garnishees, such orders, against him now, such obligations which he has assumed, that nothing more can be done at this time. In that case he might be subject to less harassment than he otherwise would be. So I think perhaps one could very well say that there might be some benefit to the debtor in many cases. But I do not think it is proper that a referee, who is an official of the court—the division court—should, as a matter of course, take information off the files of the court and give it to an organization which is engaged in collecting debts.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am out of order; if I may say so. It seemed that the hon. Attorney General's reply to the hon. leader of the Opposition was more in the way of a statement. If I might ask a question in terms of clarification?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that it is a matter which would develop into a debate because I am sure the leader of the Opposition would then want to place a question of clarification.

May I suggest that the hon. member for Lakeshore and the Attorney General, who has indicated that he is quite available to discuss it, might get together on it. If they cannot, then a question tomorrow would serve the purpose.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wonder if I might make a procedural inquiry of you? As you are aware, sir, I have lodged with you today a question to the hon. the Prime Minister involving the Law Enforcement Compensation Act—the Dr. Lindzon affair—and a proposed bill that I had before this House on December 4, 1968.

I consider this a matter of extreme urgency, and although the Attorney General has partially answered the question in a reply to the question from the hon. member for Hamilton Centre, I am wondering if it would be possible for your office to direct that question to the hon. Attorney General so that I might have a reply tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: The question was directed to the hon. Prime Minister for a purpose I presume, and if he feels that the purpose would be better served by redirection to the Attorney General I certainly would have no objection and we would do that. But I am rather averse to redirecting questions when the Ministers concerned are not in the House.

The Prime Minister is not here and presumably there is an answer from his office for this question, because had he been here I am sure it would have been asked and answered. Therefore, I think perhaps that what the hon. member might let me do is communicate with the Prime Minister's office and let him know the urgency which the hon. member feels, and see if we can have it arranged to be on tomorrow.

Mr. Bullbrook: I would appreciate that very much, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 23rd order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL AND FAMILY SERVICES (Continued)

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Chairman, the only remarks I have to make at this time, following the remarks that were made yesterday, is to say to all members of the House that I want to assure them that I am just as anxious as each and every one of them that the reports of the department be made available at the earliest opportunity. We will set it as a goal for this coming year to ensure that all reports are in the hands of the members of the Legislature prior to the discussion of the estimates.

I am very proud of the facts and figures which those reports will disclose, and I am very anxious that they be made public at the earliest opportunity.

On vote 2001:

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us, first of all, on what date last year's report was issued, and also what has become of the monthly summaries he used to send out which more or less keep the public up to date on what is going on in his department?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That matter is being gone into and we are going to reinstate them. The last report—the 1967 report—is in the hands of the printer. The 1968 report, I think, is now being finalized. The monthly reports will be forthcoming in the future.

Mr. Braithwaite: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, could the Minister tell us, are these reports being handled by his research people or the computer people?

I recall yesterday when he made his opening remarks, he did remark on the fact that he had quite capable staff now and that he was going into, I believe it was automation of the facts and figures. I am just wondering if he could tell us who prepares this report, and what is the reason for the fact that we have not had it for two years?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Which report, the annual report?

Mr. Braithwaite: The annual report.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It has just been a delay in bringing it out. May I point out that all of the people involved in the department are involved in this preparation. I assume they have been too busy doing things to be talking about them but that is something I am going to assure the House about. We will make sure that all the facts and figures are available on a continuous basis and as early as possible.

Mr. Braithwaite: When would that be, in the fullness of time, or can you give us a date?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well I expect to have the 1967, 1968 and 1969 reports in the hands of the members before the next estimates are up.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, surely the Minister can give us a better explanation than that. Why have we gone three years without a report of what the department has accomplished? Even the statutory provisions would indicate that we would be entitled to that in this Legislature. It is just not enough to say that his department did not get around to it. He did not get around to it. Surely, there is some further explanation. Are you trying to put too much into the report? Have you statistical range that simply cannot be accomplished by the staff that is presently employed? It seems incredible that you have gone three years without reporting to the Legislature, other than through your own person in answering the questions. Is there no further explanation other than your department did not get around to it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have made an explanation as to the fact that they are now in the process of going through the mill and rather than look at the past, I am making the statement that the reports will be in the hands of the members, in what I would assume will be the acceptable period, which is, in advance of next year's estimates.

Mr. Braithwaite: Well that could be any time between now and next February, is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The other reports will be distributed as soon as they are printed, the 1967 as soon as it comes from the printer and the 1968 as soon as it is printed but I am giving the further assurance that we shall attempt to also have the 1969 report in the hands of the members before the next estimates.

Mr. Braithwaite: Well that is not going to help much this year—

An hon. member: No help at all this year.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if the hon. Minister recalls the discussions we had last year, during which he chided this side of the House for talking about figures and attempted to make us quite uncomfortable about it. I am wondering, in view of what he has just had to say, whether he cares to perhaps admit that he had us at a disadvantage or perhaps to admit that he might be sorry for some of the discomfort he caused us. Nobody understood the facts that the hon. Minister brought before the House, Mr. Chairman, so it was not at all fair.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I do not recall chiding the members for not having the figures. I do not recall—

Mr. Braithwaite: Oh yes, we discussed millions of dollars and you made quite a thing of it, as if we were not supposed to discuss figures. At the same time you were holding the figures away from us. I do not think that is fair at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2001?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I do not know to whom one appeals for a ruling, but why should the members of this House be asked to vote any moneys for this department at all, with absolutely no information on its undertakings for more than two years? How can members responsibly be expected to conduct themselves when there is not a single basis on which to review this department?

There is not another department in the government that has the effrontery to come to this House, without any reports or material whatsoever dating back now some three years and three months. Only this Minister and only this department have any idea of what is being undertaken. We are being asked to vote this kind of money without having anything on which to base it, without any of the historical material over the last two or three years to appropriately evaluate how he is spending the money and you are now asking for these estimates. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is in your prerogative, sir, or in the prerogative of the Provincial Treasurer as the House leader or indeed, as a matter of essential self-respect, on the part of the Minister, that these estimates be stood down until we have some basis on which to work.

You cannot expect us to engage in travesty. We are not fulfilling our roles as legislators if you ask us to vote, carte blanche, sums of several hundred million dollars without any material at all. That is just absurd Mr. Chairman. There is not another Minister in the Cabinet who would ask it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but support the statement that has just been made. Really, the comments made by the previous members who have spoken on this are completely valid and the Treasurer must surely be sympathetic with the problem that faces us on this side.

We are accustomed to a number of departments bringing forward their reports for the past year—the immediate previous year—perhaps a few weeks later than is convenient for us on this side, and that we are sometimes asked to consider the financial estimates for the coming year without having the immediate report. But for two years in succession, it really is incredible that you would be asking us to even discuss your next year's estimates. Is there no alternative to this?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, if I might, the 1967 report is tabled. It is available where the reports are.

An hon. member: Where?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It was tabled last year. It was tabled here in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Where is the report?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the printed report; I am talking about the tabled report.

Mr. Lewis: The only report that is available to members of this House is December 31, 1965, for most of its information. You are three years and three months behind the times.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am suggesting that you perhaps might assign those researchers that I made available to you as Provincial Secretary, to go and look at the reports that have been tabled.

Mr. Lewis: Well what are you saying then? The—

Mr. Nixon: Use some of the money that we vote you to print it up so we can get the information.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Lewis: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Minister must have it in front of him. Surely one of your aides can produce the report about which you speak. Show it to the members of the House. Have you any material for us, more recent even than December 31, 1966?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The reports have been filed as required by the statutes; they have been tabled in the Legislature. They have not been printed but I am suggesting that I have explained them to you.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): They have not been printed.

Mr. Braithwaite: What date are we talking about?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am talking about the 1967 report.

Mr. Lewis: Which covers 1966.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: 1966 to 1967.

Mr. Lewis: It covers 1966. Your statistical data in this one which covers 1965-1966, brings us up to December 31, 1965. Your report for 1966-1967, if in fact it is tabled, would bring us up to date to December 31, 1966. So let us concede, that somewhere there is such a document which was not given to the members of this Legislature.

Where is 1967? Where is 1968? At the very best, we are two years and three months out of date, and there is just no legitimacy for members of this House to vote the estimates now on the basis of no prior information at all over that period of time.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to move a motion reducing this Minister's salary to $1?

Mr. Chairman: Well, if the hon. members would give the Chairman an opportunity to speak. There has been much said by many of the hon. members; questions directed to the Chairman to which the hon. Minister has replied. As far as the Chairman is concerned, we are gathered here to discuss in committee the estimates of this particular department. Now, if for any reason any members wish to dispute or amend these estimates, they may do so by motion. So that if the hon. member for Etobicoke wants to introduce a motion to that effect, I believe it would be acceptable and in order.

Mr. Braithwaite: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the light of the comments made by my colleague, I move that the estimates of The Department of Social and Family Services not be presented to the committee of supply until the annual report covering the years 1966, 1967 and 1968 are presented to the members of this House.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, my understanding is that my salary is statutory.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister was not listening, we are not discussing salary.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister is not listening. That is one of the mistakes of this House, but it does not affect the motion.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Do you want the Minister to go on welfare?

Mr. Braithwaite: If necessary the hon. member for Parkdale will second the motion.

Mr. Chairman: No seconder is necessary in committee.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if the motion is on the floor, I want to put to you, sir, and I want to put to the Minister, because I do not think there is a point. I am sorry, have you not put the motion?

Mr. Chairman: No, I have not dealt with the motion at all. I was simply going to say that in my remarks to the committee I suggested that the motion would be acceptable to reduce the estimates. I believe that is what I had said. This motion, however, does not do that, and I am not at all certain that the motion is in order.

The motion is, and I am not putting it to the committee at this time, I am simply repeating it for the information of the committee:

I therefore move that the estimates of The Department of Social and Family Services not be presented to the committee of supply until the annual reports covering the years 1966, 1967 and 1968 be presented to the members of this House.

Now, I am not at all certain that the motion is acceptable or in order.

An hon. member: What is wrong with it?

Mr. Chairman: I know of no precedent for accepting such a motion.

Mr. Braithwaite: Well, Mr. Chairman, in that event, I move that the committee rise and report progress—no progress.

Mr. Nixon: Take your pick, we are going to vote on it.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman is fully aware of this. Some vote will be coming up.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why that motion is not in order.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the hon. member that I did not say it was not in order. I said I am not at all certain that it is in order. It may or may not be.

Mr. Lewis: If you say it is in order, we will go along with it.

Mr. Chairman: This would have the effect of delaying the entire deliberations of this committee's estimates.

Mr. Pitman: That is the point.

Mr. Chairman: And then we have another motion to the effect that the committee rise and report.

Mr. Nixon: Only if you will not accept the first motion.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the House would, I am sure, grant you recess for a moment or two to consult and to come to a conclusion on this.

Mr. Chairman: I have heard nothing from any member of the committee to the effect they do not believe the motion to be in order.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, surely a motion is in order.

Mr. Chairman: You misunderstood. I said I have not heard anything from any member of this committee to the effect that they do not think the motion is in order. Therefore, I must accept the motion as being in order.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Etobicoke has moved that the estimates of The Department of Social and Family Services be not presented to the committee of supply until the annual reports covering the years 1966, 1967 and 1968 be presented to the members of this House. Those in favour of the motion—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. members would not want to deprive those people who are waiting for these funds.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! When the motion was first placed before the committee, there was an opportunity to speak to it. I have now called for a vote.

Those in favour of the motion, will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members.

The member for Etobicoke has moved that the estimates of The Department of Social and Family Services be not presented to the committee of supply until the annual reports covering the years 1966, 1967 and 1968 be presented to the members of this House.

Those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Those opposed will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 40, the "nays", 54.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

We will proceed with vote 2001. The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the House is now placed in a very difficult position in terms of analyzing the expenditures of this department. I will assume that the main office expenditures, the titles remain roughly what they were. And frankly, Mr. Chairman, if these estimates have to take a month as a result of this lack of information, then that is what they are going to take; because we are going to get every single figure from the Minister, one by one, if he is not prepared to table his report.

Now, could he tell us the refunds of ordinary expenditure from the government of Canada as applied to the main office in the following categories: salaries, travelling, administration, bursaries and tuition, for the last year for which he has them available?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, those figures are given in the public accounts that were tabled. They may not be broken down in detail as the hon. member referred to them, but they are shown in the public accounts. For example, you will find the actual expenditure for 1967-68 shown there.

Mr. Lewis: What percentage of the estimate which you have in front of you, in vote 2001, will be recoverable from the government of Canada for each vote?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Would the hon. member repeat the question so that I might find specifically what he was referring to?

Mr. Lewis: I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, what moneys will be recoverable from the government of Canada and in what amounts for the main office expenditure?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: In the departmental administration programme there will be a reimbursement of $1,085,000, in round figures.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, under The Canada Assistance Act, the board of review is now required by the legislation. What money will be received for that board of review?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: 50 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: Has the Minister an amount?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: 50 per cent of whatever we spend.

Mr. Lewis: 50 per cent of the $146,000, is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If we spend $146,000.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Trotter: I am just wondering, Mr. Chairman, while we are on the question of the board of review. Could the Minister tell us why, for the year ending March 31, 1968, we voted $60,000 for the board of review and did not spend anything on it? According to the public accounts, nothing was spent on it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The board was not operative.

Mr. Trotter: What year did it actually start to operate?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It is now in operation.

Mr. Trotter: It is now in operation—when did it actually start? We have been voting money for it going back about two and a half years and always this money is unexpended. I know it helps the Treasurer to show that they balanced the Budget, or come closer to balancing the Budget when you vote funds you do not spend, but I would like to know why the department has been so long in implementing the board of review. As I understand it, it just recently started. I am not too sure of that. When did it start and why is it that it has been so long in getting under way?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The board of review was appointed in January of this year and is now in the process of being organized and will go into operation. Actually, the set-up of the board of review—the framework—is unique in Canada. We want to make sure it operates in the finest way possible.

Mr. Trotter: Come now, we were voting funds at least two years ago for this board of review. I do not think it has actually met, has it? How many meetings have they had? Who is on the board? Can you tell us something about it? Let us get going. Who, what and why?

Mr. Lewis: If you had a report, all this would be saved.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The three persons appointed are Miss Robena Morris, vice-chairman, with Mr. Frank Drea and Mr. Earl Armstrong as members. They have met as a board and will now be going into action to have hearings.

Mr. Trotter: All right. When did they meet? You are talking about February, 1969; I go back in the public accounts and I see this board of review mentioned about two years ago, something like that. I want to know why it has not been operating. I come back to a question that you are evading. When did it first meet and how many meetings has it had?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They were appointed this year and they met in March of this year.

Mr. Trotter: How many meetings?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: One meeting, I believe.

Mr. Lewis: They must be exhausted.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I would like to continue in the same vein as the member for Parkdale. The Minister has had a great deal of correspondence with the United Workers Unemployed organization of the city of Peterborough and they have been requesting a board of review monthly, I think, since well into last spring. Each time it was said that the board of review appointment was almost imminent. I still do not understand from what the Minister has said why it has taken so long to get this board of review under way. As well as that, I would like to follow-up from what the member for Parkdale has said—what did the board do in its first meeting? Secondly, who decides when there will be a board of review? On what basis is it going to be decided? Does anyone who requests a board of review get one, no matter what the dispute is in regard to welfare payments and so on?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the procedures have been set up both in the statutes and in the relevant regulations which have been passed. Those have been worked out.

Mr. Pitman: There is a good deal of leeway in those regulations.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The board is going into operation now. With reference to Peterborough, they are meeting in Peterborough, I believe, next week. They will be dealing with all of the cases which have accumulated.

Mr. Pitman: Over the last year and a half?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They will be travelling to Peterborough to give a hearing to those cases.

Mr. Braithwaite: Could the Minister tell the House what the ultimate size of this board is going to be?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The statutory figure is nine, I am sorry, ten; nine, plus the chairman.

Mr. Braithwaite: Could the Minister state the salaries of the chairman and the two existing members?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: For the chairman, we budgeted $15,000 a year; and the three members, $30,000 a year so far.

Mr. Trotter: The three members—that is $10,000 each, is it?

Mr. Braithwaite: Is that $10,000 each?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the amount that is in the estimates.

Mr. Trotter: You only have three; how could that be? Are you going to appoint more?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have the flexibility of possible appointments?

Mr. Trotter: What is the policy then? What do you intend to do?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have tried to explain the policy before, Mr. Chairman. We are pioneering in this field, we have—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: What are you intending to do? That is all I am asking. Are you going to appoint five or six for $30,000 as voted; are you going to get each of them for $10,000, or are there going to be six members getting $5,000 each? This is all I am asking.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have said we have budgeted for a chairman at $15,000 and three members at $10,000 each.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could follow on now. Last year, when we were discussing the bill that set up this board of review, all the members of the Opposition drew quite closely to the attention of the Minister the fact that it would be a proper thing to have somebody as a representative of the poor, if not one perhaps more than one, on this board of review.

I understand that in the city of Toronto, we have the social planning council, I believe it is, a representative of the poor. I know our good friend at Ottawa, the Minister of Health and Welfare, Mr. Munro, has taken steps in that regard. Would this Minister care to tell this House if he is going to look forward to, and if he is going to accept graciously, some of the suggestions that we have given him in that regard?

I understand that he should have no difficulty at all in getting some representatives of the poor to be on this board of review. I am sure that he would have no difficulty if he wanted to.

At that time last year, he said that his party was here to govern and we were not. But I still feel that times have changed. Perhaps the Minister would be good enough now to tell us whether some of this booty—this $10,000 a year—is going to be given to a deserving and capable person, who is perhaps on relief. It does not really matter who it is as long as it is somebody who is poor.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, this matter was discussed at the time of the passing of the legislation.

We are looking to a board which will be representative of the people of the province of Ontario and who will be capable of discharging the duties that have been assigned to them. The appointments will be made on that basis—capability and discharging of duties.

Mr. Braithwaite: There are a couple of names that the party to the left of us could suggest. Would the Minister be good enough to put one of these people on the board as our nominee?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I will accept a submission of names from anybody, but I will assume the ultimate responsibility of making the choice.

Mr. Braithwaite: But will you seriously consider them? That is what I want to know.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will seriously consider everything.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, what was the criteria that led the Minister to make the appointments, to make the recommendations that led to the present appointments? What were the considerations that were taken into account, and how many names were considered?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I would say about ten names. I had during the course of the period, about ten names before me. Miss Morris, I assume, is known to a great many people, and particularly those from Metropolitan Toronto. She has great experience in the social service field. She was formerly welfare commissioner for the city of Toronto and, of course, has other experience besides that in the social service field.

Mr. Frank Drea is the director of the feature "Action Line" in the Telegram of Toronto, a man who deals with complaints in many fields, from many citizens across the province of Ontario. He was the first Canadian winner of the Heywood Broun Award presented by the American Newspaper Guild for his 1961 series of the exploitation of immigrant construction workers. He came to the fore, I might say, because of that series of articles.

Mr. Armstrong is a Gloucester township dairy farmer with wide municipal experience. He has served as township reeve since 1951, and has served as warden of the county of Carleton on three occasions. He has also served as chairman of the county welfare board.

Mr. J. Renwick: Have any of those three people been recipients of the benefits of the government department of which you are the head?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I would not think so.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, you are having people who are reviewing decisions of your department who have at no time run up against your department, or any of the municipal administrations departments. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They have had knowledge within the field.

Mr. Lewis: At which end?

Mr. Braithwaite: Well, Mr. Chairman, with reference to Miss Morris, was she dismissed or did she quit whatever job she had; I believe she was with the department or with the Minister of municipal welfare was she not? What I would like to know, Mr. Minister, is, was she dismissed or did she quit?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: She retired, I think, with grace and honour.

Mr. Braithwaite: Was there any break in the time from her retirement to the time she was appointed to the board?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: She was acting director of the general welfare assistance within the department.

Mr. Braithwaite: Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the very point I am making. There is a very good possibility that the chairman of this review board could be sitting reviewing cases upon which she, or somebody under her jurisdiction and control, might have ruled. This could be very bad.

I wonder if the Minister could comment on that. If there was no break, there is a very good possibility that somebody at some time was denied welfare or ruled against in some way.

They will be appealing. And we will have someone sitting as the chairman of the very committee that is supposed to be hearing the appeal. How can the hearing be objective if sitting on the board is a person who directly or indirectly might have had something to do with the very decision that is being appealed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not think that there is a likely possibility of that occurrence. I for one have full faith in all three members, that they will arrive at a conclusion which will be the proper and just one under the circumstances.

Mr. Braithwaite: That is not the point I am making, Mr. Chairman. Justice must appear to be done as well as be done. This is what I am wondering about.

How is the person who has come to this appeal board to feel if he looks up and sees somebody with whom he might have had contact at the time he was denied welfare of some sort? I have confidence in the lady too. It is not that. It is the principle.

Mr. Chairman: You want to say something along the same line?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The three pre-eminent of this review board are all honourable people. They are all people of great honour, and one would not suggest otherwise.

Let us leave them for a moment, and have the Minister discuss with the House his rationale for excluding from the board those who have, at some point in time, been a recipient within his welfare apparatus. What is the rationale now, many months after the Act has been passed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I have not excluded anybody. I have decided, in the discharge of my responsibility, to make the appointments, and these are the three that have been made.

Mr. Lewis: Do I take it then, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister will be appointing, imminently, a representative of other than the chosen, someone from the uprooted and disinherited, someone who has, perhaps, had some small experience with the social welfare apparatus of this state? Is the Minister about to make such an appointment to the review board?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: At the present time, I am not considering any further appointments. I may say, Mr. Chairman, I have not looked into the private lives of these three individuals. Whether, in the course of their careers, they have come into contact with that sphere is something I do not know and would not enquire.

Mr. Lewis: I will ask Mr. Drea, if the Minister would like. I know him and he could ask the other two. It hardly satisfies the point, does it? I would like to pursue it for a moment, Mr. Chairman.

The member for Scarborough Centre in this House last night, read a list of violations of the civil liberties of people receiving money from his department which was absolutely scandalous. I do not think this House has been treated to such a recitation in a very long time. It is entirely possible the member for Brantford, in the very near future, will be setting out to this House a parallel situation which makes one's hair stand on end.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that in this province, the recipients under The Family Benefits Act, and under general welfare assistance, have had their rights abused and violated systematically for as long as any of us can remember, there is no appreciable difference in the introduction of The Family Benefits Act or in the assumption of authority on the part of this loquacious Minister.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely unthinkable that one sets up a board of review through which hands pass people who are thoroughly intimidated by the actions of local or regional welfare administrators, and who put their economic lives in the hands of the board of review people, without any comprehension or with only marginal comprehension on the part of the people on the board of review, of what it is like to be on the receiving end. I am not interested in that paternalistic "gobbledygook" which invests those board members with some form of clairvoyance to understand how it feels to be a welfare recipient, or someone on a dependent father's allowance, or a mother's allowance, or a blind person's allowance, or a disabled person's allowance.

What arrogance is there in the department that it cannot see fit to move into even the marginal mainstream of present social welfare thinking, and allow to sit on the board, people who have been recipients of their programmes, people who are now recipients of their programmes, or, at least, have a real working knowledge of it from a different perspective?

Does not the Minister realize that that is the way one invests these programmes with some social integrity? You do not always run these programmes, Mr. Chairman, with a sense of olympian rightness so that only those of the administrative establishments have the right forever to rule on the lives of the recipients.

Mr. MacDonald: Like Santa Claus.

Mr. Lewis: Forever, forever. Or that, at a moment of great beholdenness—of great charity and magnanimity—the Minister says to the House, “It makes me feel like Santa Claus,” when he can reverse a policy decision so corrupt that it casts an aspersion over his entire department and its function.

Now the thing is, Mr. Chairman, that this board of review is not a legitimate creation until the Minister appoints people who are in the recipient category. It can never be a legitimate creation. However hard Robena Morris and Frank Drea and the third appointee apply themselves, with all the feeling, compassion and sensitivity they can muster, it will never be legitimate until you have allowed to cross the moat into the promised land of your department, some people who have received your endowment.

Worse still, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the revelations about the administration of this department that emerged last night, one would say that not only should there be a recipient on the board of review, but that the board of review should have a majority of social assistance recipients or beneficiaries on it, in order to begin to comprehend the nature of the requirements and to treat them with some feeling.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what it takes to move this Minister into the 20th century. His department is always behind private agencies and semi-private agencies in the area of social service—always.

Even the social planning council of Metropolitan Toronto, a very industrious and relatively enlightened agency, has seen fit to allow on its governing body a member who comes from that stratum of society which we look upon with disfavour in this House through the eyes of the Minister's department, or we would not have the category of poor in this province that we now have.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that it cannot be allowed to rest without the strongest possible protestations being made from this side, and notice being served on the Minister that he is allowing his programme to be further corrupted by his unwillingness to move on this very simple, direct, and explicit matter. Put some beneficiaries on that board of review, and instil a little participatory democracy into your department, instead of forever running it like some autocratic state.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, the matters I intend to bring up right now concern the administration of welfare in the province of Ontario, and they were touched on earlier last night, and in the discussion of the review board.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could tell us: Does anybody appearing before the review board as an appellant have the right to have a friend or counsel with them?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, I have here on my desk a part of the Ontario Gazette, dated February 1, 1969. I have a part of the very regulations the Minister spoke of. I see nothing there that specifically says that this will be so.

Now I know, and, as I say, we all have some doubts as to whether the Minister knows what it is like to have to appear before one of these autocratic boards. It is my feeling, Mr. Chairman, that such a provision should specifically be set out in the regulations that an applicant would be allowed to have someone with him.

Now when this was discussed last year when the bill was going through, several members on this side brought up the point that even if a person had to go to legal aid to get a lawyer, they should be allowed to have legal counsel so that when they appear before this board, they could be certain of having a fair hearing. Before I go on to the other questions, Mr. Chairman, I would like the Minister to answer that if he would.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: My understanding is that in the course of the hearing the board may permit agents to act for, and/or advise, either the director or the applicant.

Mr. Braithwaite: What section would that be, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the comment to regulation 15, subsections 6, 7 and 8, and 15(a) 5, and 6.

Mr. Braithwaite: Well that is not the interpretation I make of it, and that is the very point I am making, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the Minister would give this House a commitment that the regulations will be revised so that they specifically set out that this is possible—because I do not read that in the regulations before me.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the appellants will be given the offer of an opportunity to be represented by whomsoever they wish—an agent, counsel—to come to assist them in the deliberations. That will be the case and I can assure this House that if that is not done so, the regulations will be clearly stated to be such.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I sat here last night and listened to the hon. member for Scarborough Centre relate many cases that had to do with the regulations. I would have done the same thing in my opening speech. There are many cases where we have regulations that are being bent, twisted and ignored by officials in the Minister's department. Why should we wait until it happens?

I am asking the Minister right now, why does he not just change the regulation and make it specific? I have the regulation right here and it does not read that way to me—although I am supposed to be trained in the law.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I give the hon. member the assurance that this will be the case, that every applicant will be given the opportunity to be represented by an agent, or whoever the appellant wishes to bring along.

I may say that the board is going to have to determine the rules of the game as they go along. They have been set up as an appeal board; they are to give the appellant the fullest opportunity. My understanding is that the board, right from the very beginning, will even give those people an opportunity to appear, even though it might clearly appear on the statutes that they are not entitled to a hearing, in order to make sure that everybody does get an opportunity to have his say. The board would rule in that respect.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, the McRuer report, as I understand it, specifically sets out that it should be made clear in regulations. Why is the Minister whiffing and waffling? Why does he not just do it?

If he has no other reply to that, I want to go on, Mr. Chairman, to make the point that when it comes to welfare and this sort of thing, many complaints—I am sure the Minister can bear me out on this—come from people who will phone in a complaint and want to remain anonymous.

The point that I want to make is that if a person on welfare, or a person who was refused welfare, and could have an argument, or in some way become unfriendly with his neighbour. That neighbour could set out to get him and inform on him. No matter how incorrect the information given to the department might be, there is no way, from my review of these regulations, that the person appealing the ruling of that department would know what he is faced with.

Could the Minister tell me whereabouts in the regulations does it state that the appellant shall be able to see the case that he is faced with—the complaint, or the decision the board has come to and on which the original refusal has been made?

This, I think, is quite important because there is no sense in a person going to appeal if he cannot have a counsel with him, and if he cannot know what he is faced with so that he may say, "It is wrong", or if he is not given an opportunity to explain the circumstances.

Could the Minister tell me where, in the regulations, does it say that a person who is making the appeal shall have an opportunity to see the file, to see what it is he is charged with?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He is not going to be charged with anything, Mr. Chairman. He is going to have the right to have the decision reviewed, the decision which will have been made by the official and on which the appeal is taken under regulation 15(a) (5):

The director or his representative shall be given an opportunity at the hearing to give reasons for the decision, order or directive being reviewed.

Mr. Braithwaite: That is not the way I read it. As I understand it—and perhaps the Minister could correct me—the time at which a decision is arrived at is when reasons will be given. I am wondering about the time before the case is heard. I want to know if the Minister can assure me that the person who is before this board will have an opportunity to know why he has been refused whatever it is he is asking for.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the whole purpose of the review.

Mr. Braithwaite: Where does it say that in the regulations?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have given the directive in my—

Mr. Braithwaite: That is not the way I interpret it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I assume that section will cover the point. If it does not and it turns out there is not, then the regulations will be amended. I may say, Mr. Chairman—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I may say that these regulations have been passed by this department on its own, of course, in anticipation of the time when the Attorney General will bring in the necessary legislation and regulations which will govern appeals such as this—generally across the board—administrative appeals. We are pioneering in this. I look forward to the board of review being very flexible and giving the utmost opportunity and fairness to the appellant to state his case. After all, that is the purpose of establishing the appeal board.

Mr. Braithwaite: That is the point I am making. It is not a question of the appellant stating his case—it is a question of the appellant knowing why he was refused so he can state a case in answer to the refusal. You cannot prepare for something about which you know nothing. It seems a shame—we have regulations and the Minister gives us his interpretation of them. Why does the Minister not make the regulations specific? Then we will not have to worry about trial cases which will be used to determine what the board is going to do.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister—where are these regulations available? Are they going to be available in the various welfare offices, for anybody who wants to have a look at them? Where will they be available?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: They will be made available in all the necessary offices, they will be distributed. Presently, they are in the Gazette. Of course, that is not satisfactory for the general public at large but we will produce publications which will set these things out.

Mr. Braithwaite: When is this going to be, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We will proceed with them forthwith.

Mr. Braithwaite: Forthwith. "Forthwith" could be anytime—you mean three years like the reports? But in any event—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): We are starting hearings next week.

Mr. Braithwaite:—when are they going to know? Mr. Chairman, just one last point before some other member gets an opportunity to ask some questions on this.

I wonder why the application forms are not available in the various offices except, as I understand it, from the provincial director's office? I may be wrong—perhaps the Minister can correct me on this—does the Minister's office want to know about all these applications? Is this why he is having the applications available only in provincial director's office?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I fail to get the member's point.

Mr. Braithwaite: Why are applications not available in any welfare office or anywhere else, even in the post offices around the province, so that anybody can go and get one of these things and then can sit down with whom ever he might want to help him before the application is made? As I understand it, the provincial director's office is the only place you can get one of these application forms for the review board. As I say, I could be wrong and I am asking the Minister to clarify this.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not know just where these applications are available, but they will be available in other than those offices that the hon. member has referred to.

Mr. Trotter: Do you not know where?

Mr. Braithwaite: You have your staff here; I will wait if you would like to ask. I would like to find out where they are available.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, really the procedures are going to be as simplified as possible.

Mr. Braithwaite: When?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: All that a person will have to do, in effect, is to write to the chairman—

Mr. J. Renwick: How will he know enough to write?

Mr. Braithwaite: How will he know what to do?

Mr. J. Renwick: In each case are you advising them that a person has a right to appeal the decision to the review board? Is there some form or slip of paper or letter which accompanies the decision of your department, or of the municipalities throughout the province of Ontario, which will advise the person that, in the event he disagrees with the decision which has been made, he has a right to appeal to the review board? Is that being done?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have not got those forms in process at the present time, but I assume that people will become aware of the—

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, people will not become aware. I want to know whether or not this department will communicate with every single person on receipt of benefits under any of the Acts which you are administering, and whether the municipalities throughout the province of Ontario will advise every recipient under the Acts which they are administering that if they have any reason to be concerned about or disagree with the allowances or the determination which has been made they will have a right to process this matter through the review board; and in a properly set-out pamphlet indicate to them what steps they are to take and how they are to do it and when they can expect a hearing to take place? Is that going to be done? Or are you barricading?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, I am not barricading. This is a matter which I will take under consideration during the development of the appeal board procedures.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, just let me finish this point. A year ago the member for Scarborough Centre introduced a question of a recipient, or recipients, being the members of the review board; also raised during that debate was this question, and the answer that was given then was identical with the answer now. In other words, not one single solitary moment's thought or consideration has been given to what we all discussed on the second reading of the bill to set up this board of review. When is the discussion going to take place? Has the department discussed it? Has any decision been made about the procedures in that kind of essential ingredient? Has any discussion taken place in the Minister's department about it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That particular matter and all aspects of this have been discussed in the period of the past year. I used the term that we will be pioneering in this field. I am using the word. If the hon. members have comparable cases where other jurisdictions have set up the kind of board of review that we have, I should be very pleased to receive from them such information.

Mr. J. Renwick: We are not interested in other jurisdictions; we are in Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Other jurisdictions had better family benefits Acts before you.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the member's interpretation; that is not my interpretation of it. We are pioneering in this field—

Mr. Singer: They have to have a review board to take advantage of federal legislation.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: As we go through the year, we will find out what the necessities are and we will develop our programme to meet the exigencies of the matter.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister answer two final questions? Did he have any part personally in the preparation of these regulations?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: In the general discussions which invariably take place in the course of development of regulations of this kind.

Mr. Braithwaite: I am asking a specific question. The Minister can either say "yes" or "no". I am not asking for "if" or "could have been", yes or no?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The regulations are passed upon my recommendation.

Mr. Braithwaite: Yes, but that does not say the Minister had any hand in the preparation. I want to know if he knows what is in them. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman; I would like an answer.

Mr. Trotter: He does not, obviously.

Mr. Lewis: Do not be embarrassed to admit it; it is evident.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not know what is in them.

Mr. Braithwaite: All right now, if that is so, then why does the Minister have to say that, "My understanding is that this is going to apply, and it is my understanding that that is going to apply"? Why does he not make it specific and set out these things? Mr. McRuer went to all the trouble to prepare his recommendations and the Minister, as I understood it, when we discussed the bill that set this board up, said he was going to follow this, etc. In all the questions we raised, he said, "Wait until the regulations come out".

Well, they are out. And we have nothing specified in them, Mr. Chairman. I only ask the Minister, why does he not take the regulations back and amend them so that no matter what happens, he will not have to come up here next year, and we will not have to go through all this again and have him say, "We are pioneering"?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the regulations have been passed in order to carry out McRuer's suggestions. I have McRuer's recommendations, the Act and the regulations as they have been carried out. That was the whole intent of the exercise and, Mr. Chairman, though I do not know whether there will be any pleasing the members opposite. They will discharge their duties as I am discharging mine.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister this: Would he confess that the only reason he is setting this board up, is that he is really not intending to do anything? He really is just setting it up so he can get some money from Ottawa? Is this the reason for it, because otherwise we should have more specific answers? I cannot understand why anybody, with all the help he has—look at the help back there—why cannot we come up with regulations; how can he come before the House with estimates of $255 million and not have any figures for three years? Well, I will not go into that. All I want to know is, does the Minister really and truly mean this board to operate as a viable body?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes.

Mr. Braithwaite: Does he mean for the board to operate with some sort of knowledge of how it feels to be the recipient of welfare? Or does he really just want something that he can say, legally and technically, "We have a board and we will take the money from Ottawa and that is it"? From year to year there is not going to be a thing done. This is the suspicion we have over here.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask four or five questions in regard to this board of review. At the present time, have there been any applications from people who have been refused welfare, who want to be heard by the board of review?

Mr. Pitman: Is the member kidding?

Mr. Trotter: And can the Minister give us an idea how many?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are, I believe, seven, all pending, in Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Oh, come now.

Mr. Trotter: If there are only seven appeals just in Peterborough, and nothing from any other part of Ontario, it is almost incomprehensible to my mind. But how does an individual know that they have a right of appeal?

Mr. Brown: It is a secret, even the Minister does not know.

Mr. Trotter: If I had been refused welfare, how would I know that there is a board of review? What is the procedure?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, how does a citizen know a great many things? He makes inquiries.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, that is just an indication—and it is a pity, because I heartily agree with the principle behind a board of review, not just to get money out of the federal government—because if I understand this right, Mr. Chairman, you must have a board of review in order to get the benefit of The Canada Assistance Act—am I right, Mr. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We entered into an agreement.

Mr. Trotter: The federal government had better start to ride herd on some of these so-called pioneers who are dragging their feet. To my mind, the Minister is a cowboy riding a hobbyhorse in the wilderness, he is no pioneer.

I would like to know if—and I am just assuming—you are going to be inundated with appeals—

Mr. Singer: If the word gets out.

Mr. Trotter: I know cases myself, and probably every member here knows of cases that want to be appealed. I am just assuming that you are going to be inundated and I would like to know how the three people you have already appointed on the board are possibly going to hear the appeals.

Mr. Singer: Very simple, they never meet.

Mr. Trotter: So I would ask this of the Minister. Assuming that you will be inundated with appeals, and I am telling you that it is a very safe assumption, has the Minister any plans to expand the board in the immediate future from three to 10 members, and if so, is there any schedule or any routine set up for the members of the board to meet? Is there any schedule? Any plans?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, we have provision for 10, nine members and a chairman, and we do not know what next month will be. The member says we will be inundated—

Mr. Trotter: You will be inundated.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If we had proceeded to appoint 10 members and then I had been asked the question, "How many appeals are there?"—and I had said seven or eight, the hon. members opposite would have had a legitimate excuse for berating me for making an appointment of 10 to handle so few appeals. The provision is there in the statute and the regulations, and, as the need arises, the appointments will be made.

Mr. Trotter: All right. Are the members going to be paid a salary or on a per diem basis?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Per diem.

Mr. Trotter: Per diem. All right, suppose you did appoint them and they did not meet. Suppose you had no cases; it would not cost you anything, but at least they are ready, and you are ready, and I do not think this Minister ever will be, because I do not think he cares: I do not think he is interested.

It really is a disgrace, and I think it is an indication of the political leadership that this department gets from this Minister and from his predecessor. The only thing that has carried this department—and I think it is one of the most vital departments in the province of Ontario—over the years is that there have been dedicated civil servants.

But the responsibility of policy does not lie with civil servants; it lies with the Minister and the politicians, and the Minister is not giving policy of any kind. He is just drifting. This is a complete indication, and to tell me it is in the regulation is just stupid. I am just appalled at the conduct of the Minister at this point, and it is typical, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, of the history of the political leadership of this department. It is Tory government at its worst.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I think we have discovered one of the most appalling facts possible in discovering that there have been only seven or eight appeals from all the welfare recipients right across this entire province. Now, if the Minister really believes that this is because all the welfare recipients are happy and content, or if he feels that he has satisfied them all, then he is living in a dream world.

Obviously, the only reason that this appeal board has been appointed is because of the day-to-day, week-to-week, and month-to-month prodding that went on in the city of Peterborough. That is the only place with a single appeal, and why is that? Not because of any effort on the part of the Minister to give justice to the people who are receiving aid from this department, but because of a man like Ray Peters, who organized the United Workers and Unemployed Organization, and who has month by month been writing this department asking for a board of review.

Indeed, does the Minister realize that his office was picketed in Lindsay by the outraged citizens in that area? For heaven's sake, one wonders just how incredible a Minister we have here when he admits to the House that, in the whole province of Ontario, he has managed to keep the whole welfare programme so secretive, and made the appeal procedure so unknown, that no one is making any kind of an appeal, months after legislation has been placed forward. Well, perhaps I can give him some other information, too.

The Minister gave the impression that these forms were available in various offices. They are not available in various offices. I had a very pleasant chat with the Deputy Minister and the only place that you can get an application for a board of review is by writing to the Minister's department. It is the only way. There are no applications; they are not sent out in bunches; they are not sent out to the welfare offices, and there may be a very good rationale for that. But, the point is, after the letter comes asking for the application, is a decision made in that office as to whether there is going to be given a board of review or is it automatic? That is the first thing I want to know.

The second thing I want to know is, when the application is sent out, is it made perfectly clear to the recipient of that application that he will be able to have counsel, or his friend, or anybody else he wants to take with him to that board of review? If those two things are not being done then this is a facade. We are not really getting at the problem at all. Very luckily the people in the Peterborough area will be represented by this dedicated man who is not getting $10,000 a year, Mr. Chairman; he is getting nothing, he works many hours a day for those people who are receiving welfare in the area of Peterborough. They will be represented, but I fear for those people in the other parts of Ontario where there does not happen to be an organization like this.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, listening to this debate, I am just flabbergasted. I just do not understand how this situation could come about in this province. I can recall this Minister, when he occupied a different portfolio, the portfolio of the Provincial Secretary, telling us in the House—and being an honourable man, we believed him—that he was concerned about people. He used to boast about how many languages he had used to interpret those pamphlets about Canadian citizenship and how they were being distributed, and so on. I would have thought, Mr. Chairman, that that same kind of intelligence would have been brought with him to this portfolio. What do we hear? We know that we have to have, by reason of the federal legislation, a review board, but with great reluctance, with foot-dragging slowness, positively with almost complete abhorrence, we ignore estimates that have been in the estimate books for over two years. We really have not had an operative review until you were being pressured by somebody over in the city of Peterborough.

You have a moral and a legal obligation and because of the basis on which you accept several hundred million and cannot give us the figure, my guess is that at least $200 million, and probably more, collected by the government of Canada to use in this programme to set up a review board, has not been used to do this at all. You have named a couple of people who have met once, who have no schedule of meetings, who operate by secret regulations, and worse than that, there are interpretations of the regulations which apparently, only you have. There is no distribution of this information. If each regulation has to have an individual interpretation why do you not take them before the cabinet and have new regulations passed in accordance with your interpretations.

Surely if you read McClure you must understand that for justice to be done, these procedures must be known to the people who can use them. You have kept them a secret. You have been pulling the wool over the eyes of the federal government and over the eyes of the people of Ontario, and unless it is absolute negligence, you are subject to a worse charge. You have been doing it in order that the people who are affected cannot use these procedures.

Now, is the Minister stupid, or is he negligent, or is he deliberately denying to those people who are entitled by reason of the federal legislation, a right of appeal? A right of appeal that no one hears of, because there are no regulations published, there are interpretations which nobody knows of and there are no forms available. The Minister knows as well as I that many of the people with whom his department deals, cannot speak or read English properly, so there is no basis for arranging for the purveying of any information if any was available, into other languages than English. How can the Minister bring these estimates before the House and tell us no more than he has this afternoon? Really, Mr. Chairman, it is a disgrace.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could tell us if there is any provision made whatsoever for new citizens of this country who may have difficulty with the English language? Is there any provision in the way of pamphlets for them to know that such a procedure as a review board is available to them?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Those pamphlets have not been available. I can assure the hon. members of this House that there will be pamphlets and information—

Mr. Singer: When?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —produced by this department, that will, I am afraid, lead the hon. member for York South to use the term that they have been produced for aggrandizement. I tell him now that that will not be the purpose. The purpose of the publications—

Mr. MacDonald: You either do too much or nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The purpose of the publications will be to make known to all of the people, both the taxpayers and as the hon. member for Scarborough Centre made reference—to the recipients, all aspects of all of the programmes administered by this department. And I say to the hon. member for Peterborough, who asked me two questions, that the answers to those questions are to be in the affirmative. The procedure in my mind will be as simple as possible. If a person writes a letter, a letter which is received, which indicates that—

Mr. Trotter: Where does he write?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko:—however it comes into our possession—

Mr. Trotter: How?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: By whatever means they write, if it comes into our possession, it will be handled as an initial step in the appeal and in order that the procedures be regularized, the application will go out so that the board will have before it some sort of a simplified résumé. The document which we have prepared, which is in the regulations, is in the very simplest of forms.

Mr. Trotter: To whom do we address the letter, Santa Claus? Where do you address the letter? You say, "these letters that come into our possession." We do not know where to address them to right now.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: To the chairman. I assure you that if there is a letter that comes into my possession or into the possession of any member they will be treated as an appeal and directed towards the chairman.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, is it some transcendental happening? I mean, how do these things occur? How are you going to facilitate it? What, in this House at this time, is the Minister's resistance to the proposition that every single recipient under The Family Benefits Act and The General Welfare Assistance Act should be given a separate form, perhaps in a separate colour, which indicates the availability of the review board procedure. What is his resistance to that proposition?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have no resistance to it, I just have not seen the need of it yet.

Mr. Lewis: You have not seen the need of it yet, after eight appeals? You have $108 million in federal money coming in for income maintenance in 1969 and 1970. The federal government in this instance, with unusual perception, knowing the department with which they were dealing, requested that there be some kind of a review board apparatus set up to safeguard their investment of $108 million, an investment which is supplemented in almost equal sum by the Minister's own department—$215 million on income maintenance—and the Minister is saying, and expects to be believed, in this Legislature that an expenditure of $215 million on income maintenance would return only seven complaints in the entire province?

Mr. Pitman: All in Peterborough.

Mr. Lewis: What kind of travesty are you putting on this House? We had, Mr. Chairman, made light, occasionally, in that engaging way that members of a club have, about the Minister's predecessor. Compared to the Minister, the Minister's predecessor's knowledge of his department was encyclopaedic.

The point is, Mr. Chairman, that one cannot allow in this kind of department, this continual abuse of the recipients, because then the department is not a department of Social and Family Benefits at all. It is a department, as the Minister has been kind enough to indicate to us with his coming, for the self-aggrandizement of the visage of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to it because I think it is a simple proposition and I think we can achieve this perhaps, if nothing else. Is the Minister prepared to undertake to the House now, that he will inform hereafter every recipient, by way of a special notice, that they are entitled to a board of review, and indicate how they then apply to that board if they are dissatisfied with some aspect of the allowance? Can that be undertaken by the Minister, or is that too much to ask at this point in his estimates, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The undertaking that I give, Mr. Chairman, is that the legislation as passed by this Legislature will be carried out. The appeal board has been set up to serve a purpose. The undertaking that I give is that the appeal board will serve that purpose, period.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, we are just strangling on words. Now, it is just not so difficult. Let us place it again because I do not think that the request that is being made is unworthy. You have x number of recipients under The Family Benefits Act and The General Welfare Assistance Act, and you have a board of review purportedly to correct the abuses under those Acts, should they occur. Will the Minister guarantee to the House, not with some sophistry about the legislation, but in simple plain English, that the recipients will be informed of the board of review in a formal way as a matter of course, including the direction for the appeal to be routed? Can the Minister answer that, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have given my answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lewis: I do not appreciate the answer. Then we shall take the answer as you have given it. It just seems to me that it is kind of silly to prolong things this way but I will ask the Minister for an interpretation of his answer. What does he mean by, "as the legislation provides"? The legislation, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, provides for a board of review. There are regulations which are set down which require ministerial interpretation, unlike any other regulation in any other Act of any other department where they are quite explicit and open.

What does the Minister mean when he says the board of review procedure will be given under the legislation? Specifically how?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Just that every applicant for assistance who is refused should be given the opportunity of having his case reviewed, period. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Lewis: Well, will he be told that in some precise way? Are you giving him some indication of that right, and how are you doing it? Can you answer that?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is a lawyer; he must be familiar with the standard form of assessment notice as approved by his colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Every time anyone gets a real estate assessment—it relates to property—there has to be, and the department insists upon it, on that notice, the provision for appeal within so many days, in such and such a way, and the person who gets the assessment notice is told how it is done. Now why cannot you do that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That sounds very reasonable.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, whenever a new programme is introduced, in most cases, large government advertisements often appear in newspapers. I, quite frankly, disagree in most cases with the advertisements because I think it is a waste of public money, but here is a case where I do not ask that you have large advertisements in newspapers, but I do ask that you use some form, such as the member for Scarborough West has suggested, or the member for Downsview has suggested. We have discussed also the use of pamphlets which could be printed very inexpensively and distributed naturally only to those who have applied for welfare, or are receiving welfare.

In other words you do not need the mass media to advertise the board of review. Can the Minister give us any indication of what type of programme he has planned for the future in letting the people who will use the facilities of this board know that such facilities are available? Are any pamphlets drafted that could be circulated? Or these throwaways that they have, have they been drafted in order to be circulated among these people who have applied for welfare? Have you got anything in this line?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are some pamphlets being printed that have been set up but I do not know whether they contained paragraphs to that effect or not—I am not aware of it. All I can say is that the proposals which have been made in this House will be taken into consideration in order to make the appeal boards work, but for the hon. member to try to pin me down to a specific of the kind that he has—I want this board to be as flexible as possible so that it will carry out the job that is being sought.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South was trying to get the floor.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister was replying to the point I had raised, Mr. Chairman. Your board is so flexible, Mr. Chairman, that only 30 per cent of its appointees are presently appointed; it has no regular meetings; it hears none of the applicants or recipients; and it has no prospect of any future employment at all—that is how flexible it is. It is so flexible that it does not exist.

Mr. Trotter: Like nailing jelly to the wall.

Mr. Lewis: Now what kind of rigidity is a member of the Opposition accused of when he asks a Minister to publicize to applicants for, or recipients of, a programme of their rights? What kind of rigidity is that?

When legal aid was introduced, the Attorney General made certain things known to those who had to apply—not sufficient to appease all of us in the Opposition but certainly a gesture of intent far exceeding that which the Minister had undertaken when OMSIP was brought in. There was an enormous advertising campaign to indicate to people that to which they were entitled and what might be available to them.

When the Provincial Secretary had his estimates up before the House a few days ago he indicated by way of pamphlet, the numbers of facts and arguments that were available to all those new citizens of this country who might require certain lucidation on certain matters. What inflexibility is there on the part of the Opposition that can be imputed by asking a Minister to inform the applicants or recipients of a programme what they are entitled to by right?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): How does that affect the possibility of a review board?

Mr. Lewis: And does it affect the possibility of the review board, precisely? Something very strange is happening, Mr. Chairman. Whether the Minister feels that just because it is being put to him by the Opposition he cannot concede an inch—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The Minister—

Mr. Lewis: If the Minister does not feel that, then the Minister is deliberately intent on scuttling his programme because that is what he is doing to it. It is absolutely unheard of, Mr. Chairman. The Minister is intent on reducing the review board to obscurity just so that it can cash in on a few dollars from the federal government—more than a few dollars.

It is determined to perpetuate the discrimination against recipients or applicants in the social welfare field, visited upon them by innumerable welfare administrators across this province.

That is an intolerable proposition and if the Minister wants to understand why we, in the Opposition, do not regard his department as credible, why we in the Opposition feel that he fights a war on the recipient rather than a war on poverty, then let it be demonstrated by the attitudes which are amply shown, in one instance after another, whether it is the rebate on the basic shelter exemption, or whether it is on the review board. There is a consistency in this department's approach which is as punitive as one can possibly contemplate for this kind of undertaking.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the Minister does not seem to realize that at this point, his credibility is sub-zero—on the basis of his record, Mr. Chairman, I invite the colleague of the Minister who objects to reflect on that record.

Two years ago, in the spring of 1967, we seriously debated the appropriation of $60,000 to appoint a review board. Nothing happened for the whole year. One year later, in the spring of 1968, we seriously debated the expenditure of $60,000 for the review board and the Minister got around to appoint it in the tenth month of that year.

He now tells us he has got three of the nine members appointed; that they have had one meeting; and that the only place for which any applications have been considered are from the city of Peterborough. Now can anybody, including the Minister of Mines who is normally rather bright, say that the Minister's credibility at this stage is anything other than sub-zero?

The Minister of Social and Family Services gets up and says to us, "I am going to implement the Act that is passed." Mr. Chairman, for two years he has been sitting on the Act and doing nothing about its implementation. It took him 20 months with two authorizations of appropriations, before he moved. Why should we, for one moment, believe this Minister is going to proceed now?

Furthermore, and I sit down with this point, if the Minister were really serious, if he were not trying to perpetrate a fraud on the poor victims who are in receipt of allowances, as well as on the general public, he would willingly say, "Sure, it took us all this time to get the board set up because we wanted it to be the finest board and we did not want to make any mistakes, and we were pioneering"—you know all of the excuses he has trotted out. At least, belated but at this point, he would be willing to have notices go to every one of the recipients saying, "finally we have got the board set up and your rights are established and we remind you of your rights."

But no, the Minister sits in his seat. He will not give us any guarantee. He says he is just going to implement the Act. But the record shows that he has not fulfilled the Act. That is why I say his credibility is sub-zero and nobody can deny it because the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, one small point, because I think it puts it fairly neatly. Whenever there is an indication of entitlement that goes out to someone under The Family Benefits Act, or when there is a change, there is a little form—this one—that goes with the letter. The form is headed as follows: Notification of Changes in Income, Assets or Budgetary Requirements; this is in 10-point bold type. Beneath, it says as follows:

Since allowances are computed on the basis of income, assets and budgetary requirements, it is necessary for you to advise the family benefits branch or your regional administrator or your field worker if there is any change in your circumstances, such as address, number of dependents, budgetary requirements, income and assets.

Mr. Chairman, why is it not possible to reproduce, for the purposes of indicating the right to review, precisely the same kind of form to go to every applicant and every recipient who falls under The Family Benefits Act or The General Welfare Assistance Act? Why is it not possible for the Minister this afternoon in this House to give us that guarantee in the simple way which his department has already adopted in other areas so that people who receive it, will know that the board of review exists? And that the board of review can be given something to do? If the Minister is not prepared to accept this, then who can do other than to suspect his motives? What has the Minister to say?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I keep repeating, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Downsview has his suggestion, you have your suggestion. Those letters go out to people who are in receipt of allowances. Anybody who is in receipt of an allowance is very seldom likely to be the appellant.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The basic problem will be to let those who have felt that they have suffered by some refusal or suspension of that, to know where they appeal.

Mr. Lewis: The basic problem, if you will forgive me, Mr. Chairman, is that the Minister just does not know what is going on in his own department at all.

An hon. member: Plain, simple ignorance.

Mr. Lewis: It is enough of a disadvantage to put the Opposition in, in that we do not have annual reports; we do not even have an annual Minister.

Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that the bulk of the appeals will come from those who feel that the allowance which has been stipulated, discriminates against them in one or another area; that the pre-added budget—about which I hope we will get details but about which the Minister has never said anything—has somehow not fulfilled the requirements of the Act or has been computed on a discriminatory basis.

That is where the appeal procedure will be used, not simply for applicants who have been turned down but for the vast number of people, all of whom were listed in the House last night, who are in receipt of an allowance and whose allowance is in some way inadequate. Surely, in his many years of experience in his department, even in the whisperings of the halls as he travels to his office, somebody has pointed out to him that this is the area of greatest social grievance under The Family Benefits Act and The General Welfare Assistance Act. That is precisely why this kind of notification will make a world of difference to people. Why impugn the integrity of those whom you have appointed to the review board, which is what you are doing? You are saying, 'I cannot allow the recipients to know of any injustice and to give them the review procedure because when they get to the review board, Messrs. Morris, Drea and Company are so conspiratorial, so sinister that they will not grant them the review or they will not re-appraise their allowance or they will not alter the benefit'.

If you have any faith in the integrity of your review board, then give them something to do. If you want to give them something to do, then indicate to the recipients that to which they are entitled. It is just an embarrassment of this department to go around the merry-go-round endlessly in this fashion, Mr. Chairman, when it is such a simple proposition. I cannot help but feel that the Minister is resisting because the department has contrived the board of review for income-receiving purposes only, and it has no intention of employing its usefulness whatsoever and that, in this department, is a crime.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Does the Minister wish to answer? Mr. Chairman, if the Minister will not answer we will continue with this barrage, I suspect, until 6 o'clock because what is the Minister up to? What is he afraid of? What is he afraid of in sending out, as the member for Scarborough West suggests, simply a statement telling recipients what their rights are under the legislation which exists? Is he afraid—and I wonder if this is really the point—is he afraid that the horrible mess, which the member for Scarborough Centre described last night, is really just one small part of a horror which exists within that Minister's department? Is he afraid to lift the whole lid so the province will become aware of the inadequacies of the legislation in this province? Is that what he is afraid of? If so, let us state it. Let us get it out in the open.

In one small community, seemingly, the only community where this review board came to be known—immediately you had indication of need. It is to be suspected that it exists right across the province. Now, for heaven's sake, surely it is justice to inform the people the rights they have under this legislation? There is no justice whatsoever in giving an appeal board and then letting it quietly lie dormant. That is not justice at all.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Tory philosophy.

Mr. Pitman: No justice at all. I appeal to the Minister—for heaven's sake, one small indication by the Minister that he is ready to send out, not an expensive pamphlet with his picture on it—we do not expect that—just simply a statement, a small slip of paper along with the indication of what the level of assistance is.

The Minister says it is those that are being cut off. Who are affected? It is not those that are being cut off. There are very few in this province who are cut off from welfare. The main problem is that they just cannot live on what the Minister is giving them according to the budget which was set up by his regulations. I think that the Minister is going to learn a great deal from those who come before his appeal board.

He could learn a great deal more but he will not listen to the members on this side of the House. His appeal board is certainly going to have to listen to those people who come before them and it is going to be a pretty grim story that he is going to hear. I suggest that he put this legislation through. He is getting the money from the federal department as expected and he has a responsibility under that legislation to make this appeal board effective. Let us get on with it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wished to point out before the hon. member for Peterborough spoke that there is one thing I cannot grasp. Perhaps I am obtuse—but in reply to the question of the hon. member for Scarborough West, you said this. You said that if you notify recipients then you are going to affect the flexibility of the review board. I cannot grasp that at all. This is the inference I glean from what you said. That is what you said.

I must say this to you, we have many appeal procedures that the public are aware about. Do you think that the court of appeal of this province is restricted? Is it inflexible because the public know that they have that avenue of approach? Explain to me then, as well as to your colleagues in this House, what you meant by that because this is what I understood. You thought you were adversely affecting the flexibility of your review board by notifying recipients. That is what I understand.

Mr. Lewis: How many people—this figure surely must be available—are presently in receipt of allowances under family benefits and general welfare assistance? A rough figure. How many thousands of people in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: 58,000—

Mr. Lewis: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: 58,000 under family benefits—

Mr. Lewis: 58,000 under family benefits? And how many under general welfare?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Approximately 50,000.

Mr. Lewis: Approximately 50,000. So we have roughly 108,000 recipients right across the province of Ontario, of whom eight have a legitimate grievance, according to your figures. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, we set out a review board for The Department of Health to review the cases in the Ontario Hospital system which, if memory serves me, was only dealing with 20,000 people. There were several hundred who lined up to the review board. Here, out of 108,000, we are talking about seven or eight cases.

It is an entirely fraudulent apparatus; it does not make any sense at all. I do not see why one should vote money for the review board—$15,000 for a chairman and $30,000 for three members when the Minister has no intention whatsoever of making the recipients aware of that to which they are entitled. Why are you asking us for $45,000 for seven cases? Can you justify it? $8,000 a case.

Why do you not give the money to the seven people in Peterborough? You will have them all; they will pay more in taxes in 10 years than you will ever achieve by your review board. I do not know what is being pulled off before the House, but it just does not make sense. There is not another department of government with any review procedure that operates as fraudulently as the Minister has put to the House today.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! If the hon. member for Scarborough West wants to ask his question—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the last speaker a question first; is he objecting to a review board?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, let the member for Eglinton attend to his board of appropriations and I will attend to the board of review.

Mr. Reilly: Is that his answer?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, we have sat in this House for one hour and 45 minutes now on the question of review boards and we debated it for two hours last year. We have had it in the estimates for two years, and the board came through the House by way of Act. If you are asking this party their feelings about a board of review—

Mr. Reilly: I am asking you because you have been speaking against it—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Oshawa had the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order or personal privilege to defend what little virtue I have left—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That should not take long.

Mr. Lewis:—having been smitten so low by those devastating remarks by the member for Eglinton—I always resist the proposition of a review board which is corrupted and perverted and distorted out of all substance by this government and its Minister. That is no board of review at all. And if it can be replaced by a reasonable board of review which appropriately attends to the recipients of these benefits, then we will be very pleased to support it. But this kind of review board, which is a fraudulent creation, cannot possibly be perpetrated any further in this House, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Get on your white charger!

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, surely with the human beings handling The Family Benefits Act, and with all of those imperfections, there were more than seven people who were wronged as my colleagues have pointed out.

Mr. Pitman: Only in one area.

Mr. Pilkey: And surely a review board is really designed to be a guardian of democracy; it is an element by which we find redress for the wronged and the inequities that are visited upon people in this bureaucracy that we participate in.

Surely, in the case of a review board, set up to render objective judgment on the basis of these wrongs that are perpetrated on these people provided with family benefits, it is not a question of flexibility. My colleague talks about scuttling the programme. I submit to you, Mr. Minister, that you have not got the programme off the ground.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no programme to scuttle at this point.

Mr. Pilkey: And this is the tragic problem. It seems to be a callous way that your department has instituted upon you, sir, to set up a review board by which people have a course of redress from those laws. Surely you can stand up in this Legislature and make a statement that this review board is going to be a practical, tangible vehicle for people to find a measure of justice? This does not seem to be a great request by the members that have made such an eloquent plea to you. But it seems to me that every time you make an answer to the questions that they pose, you take them away out in Lake Ontario somewhere and prefer to drop them there. There is really no answer—

Mr. Singer: And hold them under?

Mr. Pilkey: And hold them under is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not carry the analogy too far, we are bogged down enough.

Mr. Pilkey: And it seems to me, sir, that you could give an answer that this public review board could be a real instrument in your department to solve those inequities and give redress to those wronged. I think this is the answer that the members on this side of the House are looking for. For the last two hours I have been in the House, you, sir, have not given a real answer to that question yet. I think, before we conclude on the question of the review board, you, sir, ought to give this side of the House a proper answer to that question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I say to the hon. member for Oshawa that the words he has used are really my words. That is what I have been trying to convey to those sitting on your right for the same period of time. That is exactly the approach I am giving to this; I assume it is the approach that every hon. member that voted for this legislation wants me to do and that is exactly my intent and purpose.

Mr. MacDonald: You have had the intent for 24 months.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Read the words of the hon. member for Oshawa. He has stated the intended purpose of this appeal board—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Let us assume for a moment that your intentions are good. Let us just assume that for a moment. How are you going to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Let us just assume for a moment, I said, that your intentions are good. How can we be guaranteed that you are going to carry out the intent? I think what the members want you to say, sir, is that we are going to notify the recipients under The Family Benefits Act that they have a right to redress of their wrongs through this review board, and that you are going to give these people prior notice and public notice of their rights under this review board. This you have not said yet.

Mr. Braithwaite: He has not said anything.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, every time a decision is made by this department in respect to a case, I believe a communication goes out to that person. Is that correct? So that the communication goes out in the case of an award or a change of status, I believe that is correct. Then what is wrong, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, with that letter having an added paragraph which simply says that there is available an appeal to the review board, and the appeal is to be made to such and such a person, at such and such a time, or within such and such a time?

Now, I, for the life of me, cannot understand, why it is not possible for that added paragraph to go on that letter. Or else, if you do not like that, have a small form such as has already been read by the member for Scarborough West, a form which sets out this matter in detail and which can be clipped to that letter, so that when the recipient gets the communication and he is not satisfied with it, he knows that he has a certain length of time to appeal to a certain place, under certain circumstances to be heard. It is a simple thing. I cannot understand why the Minister cannot give the House an assurance that this can be done.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, there are times when the Minister of a department should provide leadership to the senior civil service and to the entire department, and there certainly come times when the senior civil servants should give leadership and aid to the Minister. The fact is, as we watch this debate this afternoon, that we find both parties are failing to do that with one another around this simple issue of making information available to applicants and recipients, regarding their rights under the Act.

We then have to question why are both sides in this particular issue unable to act, and I think the answer is quite simple. It is a traditional problem with the Tory party in Ontario that when it comes to service to people, it is deathly afraid of taking any act that will indicate the degree of amount of abuse or lack of service.

Any structure that gets set up which will make it possible for people to determine and discover the degree to which people suffer is boycotted and blocked by the Tories. The one single thing that would come out of this procedure, suggested by the hon. member for Scarborough West, would be that the department would know how many recipients and how many applicants are dissatisfied with the department's service.

Now, what is so dangerous about that if your intentions are good as far as people are concerned? The only danger comes if you want to pretend to the public, and to the government, and to the Legislature that you are providing an adequate service when you are not providing an adequate service; that you are providing service that meets the satisfaction of the law, when you are not providing that service.

I say to you, that is the issue this afternoon, and any Act that would correct this situation, as you have outlined it for your department, would result in my being very pleased to retract that statement. But as long as both the senior civil servants and the Minister are adamant that they are not going to notify applicants and recipients of their rights under the law, then I say to you that it is because they want to cover up the incidence of malpractice, incompetent practice, lack of service, and abuse of people in need in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and begs for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, we shall continue with these estimates tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1969

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that commencing on Tuesday, April 15, this House will sit at 2 p.m., Monday to Thursday inclusive, each week until further order.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in this connection I might say too that it will be the intention to have night sessions on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday when we come back from this brief recess. We will leave Wednesday evenings clear until further notice.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, while we are dealing with the future business of the House, is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate what the succession of estimates are beyond Mines which I—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I believe this list has been given to the House—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We were going to follow Social and Family Services with Mines, and following that, Transport—

Mr. MacDonald: What of Treasury?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, we have got to finish Treasury, which is under way. This is a rough list—Labour, Highways, Energy, Health and the Attorney General. According to the exigencies of the situation, we may have to shuffle these around, but roughly that will be the order and we will give you due and ample notice if there are any changes.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE MEDICAL SERVICES INSURANCE ACT, 1965

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Medical Services Insurance Act, 1965.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Is the Minister going to give them their money?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this amendment to The Medical Services Insurance Act, effective April 1, 1969, changes the rate of payment for physicians' services from 90 per cent of the 1967 Ontario Medical Association schedule of fees, to 90 per cent of the schedule of fees introduced by the Ontario Medical Association on April 1, 1969.

You will recall, sir, that the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) asked a question yesterday concerning this relative to the meetings I had had with the Ontario Medical Association and on correspondence exchanged between us. I met with them on March 24, 1969, and on January 29, 1969, at which meetings this matter was discussed.

The department carries out on an on-going basis a very careful review of medical care costs associated with OMSIP, particularly because the 1967 schedule increased costs by about 15 per cent. The present schedule will increase costs by approximately ten per cent. This review includes the impact on the public of any lowering of payments by OMSIP as related to the new schedule.

It may be well to emphasize here that a very detailed study of all health care costs has just been launched and in this OMSIP costs constitute a growing factor. While I again must express my concern and that of the government on the escalation of health care costs, we have decided that it is in the public interest to accept the new schedule and this amendment provides the legislative authority for this action.

We shall, of course, have to review our premium structure as related to these increased costs, since it is our belief that the income must bear a real relationship to expenditure.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): I think that is the most shocking statement ever made in the House.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister by way of clarification if a review of the costs will include a review of the government's decision with regard to Medicare?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, as I intimated in this House a few days ago, this matter is very actively under review at the present time.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of clarification, if I may, I would ask the Minister whether or not he in any way endeavoured to roll back the doctors' fees charged in this province? Did he endeavour to do that or did he just sit meekly by and accept what they had to say to him? It is the most shocking statement that has ever been made in this House.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose the hon. member will believe anything I say anyway—

Mr. J. Renwick: I agree, I agree 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: —but yes, I did endeavour in every way possible.

Mr. MacDonald: Some people violate the guidelines with impunity.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has the floor.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, may I ask the hon. Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Humber has the floor, I would ask that he be given a hearing.

Mr. Ben: May I ask the hon. Minister is there anything in this proposed bill which would relieve those people whose fees are subsidized in whole or in part of the onerous burden of this ten per cent, which is now in fact over ten per cent, so that they would not be deprived of medical services because of their inability to raise that ten per cent?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is really a matter of clarification, but this is not touched in the amendment to the bill.

Mr. Ben: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, by way of clarification on a question asked the hon. Minister.

Is it the intention—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I think this clarification has gone far enough.

Mr. Speaker: We will hear what the hon. member for High Park has to ask and if it is a matter of clarification I think he is entitled to ask it. If it is merely a comment he is not.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. Is it the intention that the increased fee shall be paid when the bill has received its third reading or will it go into effect as of the time the OMA announce their increase which was April 1?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that that question was not a proper question for clarification, but a question for discussion when the bill is debated.

An hon. member: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want to know.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question or a point of clarification.

I am not sure whether this is directed to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, or to you, sir. But have not the rights of the House been entirely violated by the Minister because of his assurance on the last occasion when this bill was debated, that no further increase in the OMA fee schedule would be accepted without legislative approval? I want to know how the Minister unilaterally accepts an increase from the Ontario Medical Association without ever bringing it before this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not accepting it. That is the purpose of the bill. As I said in reply to a question put by the hon. member, I believe, we cannot change the amount paid in claims until we have amended the legislation and that is the purpose of this amendment today.

Mr. Lewis: On a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not entitled to ask a supplementary question.

Order. The hon. members will realize that the Speaker has endeavoured to allow questions of clarification which really are not allowable by the rules in order that reasonable understanding of the meaning of bills being introduced can be given to the House. But it cannot degenerate into a debate or we lose the whole purpose of the opening part of the business of this House. Therefore, some of the questions which were asked today, I thought, and I still think, were exceedingly in point and matters of clarification and were so answered. Others were matters which went to the principle of the bill and should be debated on second reading in my opinion, rather than on first reading. I do not see how a supplementary question can enter into the picture when it is a matter of clarification.

If it is a point of order then it is not a supplementary question as to the point of order. It is either the same point of order which is being spoken to or a new point of order. So I would ask the hon. member for Scarborough West, to clarify what he is trying to put before the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I asked my original question. I was not sure whether to direct it to you or to the Minister by way of clarification.

Yesterday I asked a question of the Minister on precisely this subject. He asked that it be taken as notice to be incorporated in his statement today. I am not satisfied that the question was appropriately incorporated in his statement today and I would therefore like to either put the question or to ask a supplementary which will elucidate it. I think it is a fair request.

Mr. Speaker: I think if that is the basis upon which the hon. member has placed it, when we come to the question period, he having given notice and his question having been filed yesterday, I would certainly allow him to ask the question, but not at this juncture.

Mr. Lewis: Is it not more appropriate to do it now?

Mr. Speaker: It may be more appropriate but it certainly is not in accordance with the rules which we try, until they are changed, to observe in the House. So if the hon. member will accept that ruling, I will give him the opportunity later this afternoon to place his question again.

Mr. Lewis: I can wait for the number of minutes that are involved.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the question which I had asked for purpose of clarification is merely to find the effective date of the bill. Surely, that is a reasonable question for clarification.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, in my statement I stated the date was April 1, 1969. I stated that when I read the statement—

Mr. Lewis: Then the Minister has capitulated and we are faced with a fait accompli.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), the adjournment of the House on the definite manner of urgent public importance, namely, the unilateral capitulation of the government to the dictates of the OMA concerning changes in the schedule of fees for professional medical services.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has placed in the hands of Mr. Speaker a motion for the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of urgent public importance. This matter, of course, in accordance with the rules of the House should have been brought to Mr. Speaker's attention at an earlier date. In view of the situation which arose some time ago when I stated that should one of these cases arise again and come into my office in accordance with the rules, I would most certainly allow the motion to be made from the floor of the House, and then the matter could be dealt with, I would therefore read the motion.

I would therefore rule that it is not in accordance with the rules and that therefore the Speaker's ruling is that it cannot be debated. On that basis any questioning of it would not be of the motion, because undoubtedly the motion is well put, had it been earlier submitted, but it would be on the matter of the Speaker's ruling in accordance with the rules of this House.

The motion by the member for York South, seconded by the member for Riverdale, is that the member for York South moves the adjournment of the House to debate a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the unilateral capitulation of the government to the dictates of the OMA with schedule of fees for professional services. I do, and have stated that I would, rule that this motion is not in order in accordance with our present rules and therefore cannot be voted on or debated.

Mr. Speaker's ruling is open to debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on two grounds I will have to challenge your ruling: (a) once again, the archaic rules of the House; and (b) I submit to you that the rules of the House are frustrating in another way. This is literally the first occasion that we had an opportunity to move such a motion because the bill has just been brought into the House. We are about to adjourn for some two weeks. This is a matter of urgent importance to many, many thousands of people across this province. The fact that the amending bill was brought in on the eve of a recess is in itself a matter that merits debate in this House because the government's capitulation was withheld until this eleventh hour as we are about to recess.

Mr. Speaker: I would like, if I may, if the hon. leader of the Opposition would allow me to correct a comment that I made. It was not open to debate, but it is open to comment by the mover of the motion in answer to Mr. Speaker's ruling. I certainly would allow the hon. leader of the Opposition for his party to express his views on this matter, although it is strictly not in order. But all I am calling to the attention of the House is that I am not making any ruling as to the urgency or the public importance of the motion, merely that the motion does not follow the rules of the House.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we must join in the challenge to your ruling. We feel on this side that the statements by the Minister have been inadequate in this regard. We recall very definitely putting forward a suggestion that seemed to have a good acceptance on both sides that matters of this type should be referred to the standing committee on health so that the doctors could bring forward their reasons for raising their fees for service. They have done this unilaterally. I am not satisfied to any degree that the Minister has had meaningful consultation with them and he is not prepared to tell us the means whereby he has attempted to roll back this increase.

I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, that the rules are archaic and it is unfortunate that you have to apply them in this particular way. The only way we can express our disagreement with the rules is to join in the challenge.

Mr. Speaker: I will not allow any further debate. The rules of the House do not allow a debate on Mr. Speaker's ruling. I have allowed the mover of the motion to comment further on it and I have also allowed the leader of the Opposition, because I felt it would be well for the views of that party. If anyone from the government party would wish to speak for that party before I put the motion, I would be glad to hear him, even though that also is out of order. Otherwise—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would appreciate your giving the reason for the ruling again, if you would.

Mr. Speaker: My reason for the ruling is that the rules of the House require that such a motion be submitted to Mr. Speaker and—

Mr. MacDonald: How could it?

Mr. Speaker: I am not discussing whether it could or not, I am merely pointing out that the rules of the House so provide and if there is one thing that Mr. Speaker must do, it is to endeavour not only to deal with the rules properly but to try and deal with them in the context of the House and that is why I have allowed a certain amount of debate.

I personally understand the situation—I am sure we all do—in which the third party find themselves in making that motion, because they are quite right that they, of course, did not know what was going to happen. But nevertheless, until our rules are changed, that is what the rules say and therefore I feel I am duty bound to follow the rules. Therefore I have ruled, and I confirm that ruling, that the motion is out of order and cannot be put. It may not make any sense from the hon. members' viewpoint, but nevertheless, there it is.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: It is ludicrous.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, perhaps, although my point of order is not a valid one, I would like to draw it to your attention, sir. The hon. Treasurer last year assured this House that no bills would be made retroactive unless out of extreme urgency. Surely the raise in the doctors' fees is not a matter of extreme urgency. This bill should go into effect at the time it has passed this House.

Mr. Speaker: The member is now debating the bill again as he endeavoured to do earlier, and I would rule that his comments are out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I draw to your attention, sir, that as far as I can see, this bill has been introduced into the House in violation of the rules. There was no notice of 48 hours given.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There was no objection to the bill when I stood up to bring it in—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: —and therefore I would expect the objection to be raised at that time.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, you, sir, cannot allow deviousness on the part of this Minister in addition to the destructiveness of the unanimous—

Mr. J. Renwick: On a point of order, this is the cheapest trick that has ever been played by that Minister.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will please, please obey some of the rules of the House. One of his party was on the floor on a point of order, and he unceremoniously interrupted him and took over the floor. The hon. member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: I do not call that interruption unceremonious, Mr. Speaker. I accede to it. But not only should this Minister resign, Mr. Speaker, because of his performance this afternoon—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The hon. member is rising on a point of order. Now a point of order is not whether the Minister should resign or not.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that there is some small evidence that unanimous consent is lacking for first reading of this bill without notice having been given.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, if I may speak to it, in order for a bill to be brought in without notice, you, sir, must request unanimous consent from the House. This was not done, and we, certainly, will not consent to it.

An hon. member: Withdraw the bill.

Mr. Ben: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Riverdale accused the Minister and said that this was the lowest, cheapest trick. Now, with them pulling so many cheap tricks, on what authority does he say this is the cheapest?

Mr. Speaker: It is easily seen that all of the members are going to need a good rest when the House adjourns this afternoon.

Mr. J. Renwick: We shall get him to withdraw this bill if we have to sit through the whole of this session.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, is going to have to take some other means to have withdrawal of the bill because the bill has been introduced; the bill has been given first reading. There was no voice raised in opposition.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, are you going to allow the rules of this House, archaic as they are, to be distorted by a Minister of this government? You cannot allow that. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, it is your obligation to make certain that this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

I have pointed out to the hon. member and to all hon. members that the bill was introduced by the hon. Minister, and perhaps to the Speaker. It was given the usual motion; the motion was passed without dissent; the first reading has taken place. Now, in order to correct that situation, if it needs correction, some other action than just—what shall I say—saying unfortunate things about the Minister, other proceedings will have to be taken. I would be glad if the hon. leader of the Opposition, of the third party, or his deputy who have been speaking to the point, would wish to consult with the clerk and see what action is open to them. It is certainly not open to Mr. Speaker to do anything about it. But, if there is some action that can be taken, I would be most pleased to revert to this particular order of business, or such order of business as the House wishes to have it dealt with.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the point of order that has been raised with regard to the lack of notice. I believe, sir, it is your responsibility under advice from the clerk, not to accept bills of this nature unless there is unanimous consent. When we are in a position to bring forward motions and certain bills, we are always carefully advised and abide by those rulings, and certainly on several occasions it is true the government has attempted to introduce certain legislation and we on this side have brought to Mr. Speaker's attention that proper notice has not been given and you have asked for unanimous consent. I believe, sir, that the prime responsibility as the presiding officer is with yourself, not to wait for objections from other sides. On the other hand, the way the circumstances have developed on this occasion, the bill has apparently been introduced and you have, sir, a challenge to your ruling which is presently before you. I would suggest that one way that one of these things can be settled is to proceed with that challenge.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion that it is not our obligation to approach the Clerk and find out how we can get respect for the rules of this House. It is your responsibility as the presiding officer to take corrective action if a bill has been introduced illegally and it is drawn to your attention. You cannot as you did ten minutes ago insist on the observance of the rules of the House and now tolerate their breach.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I recall that we had a precedent not so long ago where one member of the House introduced a bill which was given first reading and which was out of order. I would suggest to you, sir, that this bill is equally out of order and it should be treated in exactly the same way and should not be proceeded with.

Mr. MacDonald: The government should withdraw.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: If the member for Riverdale will please observe some of the niceties of the Chamber by allowing other members the floor, particularly in his own party. The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Niceties are not always necessary. Mr. Speaker, if I may draw your attention to the same point of order. This bill was obviously introduced illegally. There was a breakage of the rules at that time and I suggest that we cannot condone that and therefore this should be reverted back to its previous state and taken again. You cannot break the rules and then say, just because it happened, we are going to allow it. The rules were broken when the bill was permitted to be introduced and, without asking if there was unanimous consent—and as this happened, we must now revert back to the position prior to introduction of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Order, Mr. Speaker.

In the first place, I think perhaps we should deal with the motion on the business that is before the House which is really a challenge to your ruling on a motion made by the hon. member for Riverdale.

Now, as I go back in my memory over the events in this House and the fact that the procedures at one stage of the game were that no notice was ever given of any—I sit quietly and I listen to you argue your point of order so you might sit quietly and listen to me put my point. It is only in very recent years that the government has followed the formality of putting notice of intention to introduce bills on the order paper. For many, many years in this House it was not a practice that was followed. I am quite sure there are many, many bills that have been introduced in this House, if we were to check the records in the last sessions and probably in this session.

Mr. MacDonald: Very interesting, but very irrelevant!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have no objection whatever, if this is going to be a large matter of consequence, that this bill be withdrawn from first reading here and reintroduced; it could not matter less as far as the government is concerned. The intent of the bill is there; the bill will be introduced, and it will be debated in due course.

I have no intention of calling second reading of it this afternoon; therefore it could not be dealt with in any event until this adjournment is over. It is a very simple bill. The intent is there; we will put notice on the order paper; I will give you notice right now that the bill will be introduced on Tuesday, April 14.

Mr. Lewis: There will be enough of a storm over the recess that you will be sorry.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now, sir, if this relieves any embarrassment in which members may find themselves, the government is quite prepared—I do not know—

Mr. J. Renwick: We are not embarrassed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I suppose by unanimous consent we can withdraw this bill from first reading and I would be quite happy to give that consent, but I give notice now that the bill will be reintroduced on April 14.

Mr. Lewis: It will not be; they will retreat over the recess.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Between now and then the members will have their 48 hours notice.

Mr. MacDonald: We are not coming back till April 15.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Was it the 14th or the 15th? Anyway, on the Tuesday.

Mr. Lewis: We will be here on the 14th.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will be here too, but in any event the bill will be introduced for first reading and I presume that we can put a notice on the order paper. I do not know what the virtue of the technicality is, but nonetheless—

Mr. MacDonald: Sometimes technicalities have no virtue.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now, Mr. Speaker, let us really examine the situation. When we put notice to introduce a bill on the order paper, we do not say what the bill is; you would not have had any more information if there had been a notice on the order paper that this bill was to be introduced.

Mr. J. Renwick: We might just have caught on.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: How would you know what was to be in the bill unless the Minister showed it to you?

Mr. MacDonald: So what? The rules demand it should be there.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will go along with the rule, Mr. Speaker, I will go along with the rule that 48 hours notice is required. I do not think it really means anything in the merits of the situation, but that is the rule. And if that is the rule we are going to follow, why we will follow it. But in the meantime may I suggest, sir, that we deal with the challenge to your ruling and in regard to that, perhaps I should speak on behalf of the government.

This rule is referred to as being archaic. I do not think it is the least bit archaic that there should be notice given of the intent to introduce a motion which suspends all the business of this House to debate a matter that may be introduced by any private member. We must have some orderly method of conducting the business of the House and that is why, sir, the rules say that notice must be given so that we have some notice as to what is going to be done.

Now I am going to support your ruling, sir, and I am not really going to offer a change in that rule which would permit every day of the week, every sitting day of the week, for somebody on that side of the House to introduce a motion and thereby frustrate the business of this House, which must be ordered by the government.

The business of the House is ordered by the government and we must maintain our right and our position to do so and that is what the rules assure us. I support your ruling, sir, and we will support your ruling and we believe it is a good ruling.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale was first on his feet.

Mr. J. Renwick: My comment will be very brief and it will be on the first part of the Prime Minister's reference to the orders of this House.

We have been sitting here with bated breath since February 25 for the Minister of Health to introduce an Act to amend The Air Pollution Control Act, 1967; an Act to provide for ambulance services; an Act respecting facilities for children suffering from—

Mr. Speaker: What is the hon. member's point of order?

Mr. J. Renwick: My point of order is very simple. Since February 25 there have been three bills of urgent importance we have been waiting for that this Minister has been sitting on. And on this last day of this session, he purports to violate the rules by bringing in this bill, and the Prime Minister can speak—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has no point of order and he is out of order. The hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of being out of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. He is not here at this point to castigate the Minister. If he is on his feet it should be for a point of order, and the point of order has to do with something in connection with procedures of this House, and the procedures of this House that he has been pointing out have been properly observed apparently, because notice had been given. Certainly it would be up to the Minister giving notice to choose the time that the bill should be introduced, and therefore, as I say, the hon. member has no point of order. He is merely pointing out that the Minister was following the rules in one case and is not in another, according to the hon. member.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I have not been as clear as I should have been on the occasion of this particular event.

I was speaking about the point which the Prime Minister raised a few minutes ago that, for some reason or other because of the past history of this House, the government did not give notice of intention to introduce bills. He is suggesting on this occasion that they can surreptitiously slip a bill into this House and get away with it on the basis of some kind of past history. Now I am simply saying that—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. J. Renwick: If I am out of order, then the Prime Minister was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the hon. member's interpretation of what was said by the Prime Minister is not that of Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say this. I take strong exception to the latter part of the Prime Minister's remarks dealing with a motion to adjourn the House to debate a matter of public urgency. The way the rules are now, and are now being interpreted—not the way they were 10 years ago—makes it impossible for any member who wants to make such a motion to set out the reasons for that motion being made.

It is apparent from the Prime Minister's remarks that that is the way he wants it to continue and if that is in fact so, sir, the whole procedure is ludicrous.

We have had many issues in this session which illustrate the inadequacy of the rules under which we operate, and it seems to me, sir, that every day that we go on longer, and every day that the government takes advantage of these technical procedures in the rules, we are being set back that much further in our effort to pursue our democratic right to discuss matters which we have a right to discuss.

I would just say as a postscript, sir, that every day the Prime Minister further delays convening a satisfactory committee to bring in up-to-date rules, every day he denies democracy to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park was on his feet a moment ago. Does he still wish to speak?

Mr. Shulman: No, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Prime Minister, I think to use his phrase "the virtue of the technicality" in this case of having the Prime Minister withdraw the bill until notice is given, is that a sufficient public furor will arise over the recess so that the Prime Minister will think twice about reintroducing it on the 15th—that is the virtue, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, was out of order. Does the hon. member for Humber have any point of order to raise?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order not with reference to your ruling but the subject matter of the introduction of the bill.

Perhaps it may have slipped the memory of this House, but exactly the same issue arose last session when the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) introduced his bill resulting from the Budget.

At that particular time, Mr. Speaker, if your memory recalls, I refused to give consent to a bill being introduced without the consent being asked for. At that time—for the benefit of the members who were not here—what had occurred was exactly what has occurred here. The Minister got up and asked for leave to introduce the bill. The bill was handed to you by the page. Subsequently you read it out and asked that there be first reading of the bill and it was passed on to the Clerk.

At that particular time, Mr. Speaker, it was your ruling that any person objecting to the introduction of a bill without proper notice had to interject his objections during that interval while the bill was being passed from you to the Clerk at the table.

Now it was argued at that time, Mr. Speaker, that it was rather onerous to put that burden on the members, because, first of all, they did not know that a bill was being introduced. Second, they had to grab the binders which contain the orders of the day, and glance to see if there was a bill with that caption listed there as notice having been served. At any rate, you made your ruling.

In accordance with that ruling I guess you can only do the same thing again, Mr. Speaker, but the point is this. It gave rise to quite a discourse—a gentle discourse, I will grant—between Mr. Speaker and myself; nothing but soft words were spoken.

So, I would have thought that the hon. members of the front row over there, the government benches, would have tried to avoid such a hassle in the future. I would have thought they would have recognized the situation and not have embarrassed your person.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that here we are not so much debating or going to vote on your ruling, but frankly what we are voting on is: shall the person of the Speaker continue to be insulted by the government members?

Mr. Speaker: Well, the first matter before the House, of course, is the matter of Mr. Speaker's ruling. The second matter before the House is the matter of the bill, which has been given first reading, and which, I believe, by unanimous consent, will be withdrawn.

The motion by the member for York South with respect to the adjournment of the House for debate of an urgent public matter was ruled by myself as out of order, because it was not in accordance with the rules of this House as we presently have them. It is now for me to put Mr. Speaker's ruling to the House.

On appeal, Mr. Speaker's ruling was sustained on the following division:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 56, the "nays" 38.

Mr. Speaker: I declare Mr. Speaker's ruling upheld.

I would also now, direct the Clerk, with the unanimous consent of the House, that the bill in question, introduced this afternoon to amend The Ontario Hospital Services Act, be withdrawn. I would also at this time draw to the attention of the members that, since we are endeavouring to do something about the rules—and I would advise the House that the party leaders are making the weekly return from recess—I shall now, on the introduction of bills, allow no points of clarification; and no questions are provided for by the rules.

I shall also scrutinize very carefully any questions of clarification which may be raised from the floor with respect to Ministers' statements, because they also, by rules and practice, are very carefully scrutinized. I have endeavoured to give the Opposition side of the House every opportunity to obtain the information, and desire that they should have it.

But as it has become a matter of debate now, which is neither dignified nor in the best interests of the House nor the people of Ontario, I therefore give notice to the House that that is the manner in which I will deal with these matters when they come before the House at a later date.

I am sure I will have the support of the members who today have indicated that they do wish the rules of the House to be observed as far as possible.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Now that The Medical Services Insurance Act has been withdrawn, I have a recollection in my mind that once a bill has been introduced and withdrawn that it cannot be re-introduced in the same session. Am I correct?

Mr. Speaker: I would be most pleased to take that matter into consideration in due course. If that is the case then the necessary action will undoubtedly be taken. I may say one other thing: I am asking the law clerks of the Crown, who are responsible for the preparation of bills for introduction that hereafter they will attach to each bill, as it reaches Mr. Speaker, a note indicating when notice has been given, so that neither Mr. Speaker nor the House will be put in the invidious position in which we all found ourselves this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I would like to make it very clear that when I said that we would consent to withdrawal of the bill, which had been duly accepted by this House, of course, I made it very clear at the time that the bill would be re-introduced on April 15, and I made no—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am making this point very clear that a proviso to my agreement that the bill be withdrawn was that it would be re-introduced on April 15—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —and I made the two statements at the same time standing on my two feet in my place. I think it must be accepted because that was the condition of the withdrawal.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that what the Prime Minister says is quite correct and I also believe that it should be the rule or the precedent, which has been mentioned by the hon. member for Downsview, that there should undoubtedly be ways and means by which this sovereign assembly can deal with it. The matter certainly should not cause any member of the House—whether the government side or the Opposition side—any difficulty over the Easter recess, and should not spoil the rest we have all earned.

Introduction of bills:

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I wish to introduce a bill, notice of which has been given—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would wait a moment until I ascertain if there are any more government bills.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests.

MARKETING OF FRESH WATER FISH

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to regulate the marketing of fresh water fish.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the marketing of fresh water fish in a designated part of Ontario, and the participation of the fishermen in the designated part in a fish marketing plan being established under federal legislation controlling fish marketing in the prairie provinces, the Territories and a designated part of Ontario.

FISH INSPECTION ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Fish Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the appointment and duties of inspectors under the Act.

CITY OF THE LAKEHEAD

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to incorporate the City of the Lakehead.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, in presenting The Act respecting the city of the Lakehead for the first reading, may I make a few observations arising mainly out of the deliberations of the inter-municipal committee whose consensus helped to resolve a number of points at issue during the preparatory stage of the legislation. These had to do particularly with questions related to the basis of representation and organization for the new city and the consequences of the amalgamation of the portions of the municipalities of Neebing and Shuniah, which are included in the new city, and the residual portions which continue as the townships of Neebing and Shuniah.

While the mayor and aldermen will be elected by general vote, the aldermanic candidates will qualify as residents in the four respective wards into which the new city will be divided.

The first council will hold office for a three-year term, putting it on the same cycle for elections as the board of education.

In keeping with the government's policy to have municipal councils assume greater responsibility for all municipal services, certain boards and commissions would be dissolved. The members of the Hydro-Electric Commission of the Lakehead will be an appointed body for the first time. It was the unanimous view of the inter-municipal committee that there should not be a board of control.

The decision to set the date of June 23 for the election of the first council, originally proposed for September, arises out of the expressed need for adequate time to draft bylaws for implementation in January, and to prepare for the necessary changes in the administrative structure and the city-wide provision of municipal services at the beginning of the year.

Should there be some question as to the name of the new city, an opportunity to make a final choice from several names can be given at the time of the election of the first council.

Considerable attention has been devoted to whatever financial adjustments should be made in the interests of the residents of Neebing and Shuniah who will become part of the new city, and those who will remain in the two townships. Provision will be made for a phasing-in of tax increases in the Neebing and McIntyre wards of the new city, and graduated payments over a five-year period will be made by the new city to the corporation of the municipality of Neebing.

In order that this House may have the benefit of any further reactions from the Lakehead community prior to second reading and committee of the whole, it is my intention to meet with the municipal councils, boards and commissions on April 17, 1969.

THE GAME AND FISH ACT, 1961-1962

Mr. Shulman moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Game and Fish Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: This amendment has been introduced at the request of the Ontario

Trappers Association. At the present time, there is no season on racoon and they are being slaughtered so rapidly throughout the province that the trappers association is fearful that the whole racoon fur industry will be destroyed.

This amendment sets up a reasonable reason for the trapping or shooting of racoon and in addition, protects the farmers of southern Ontario by exempting all of southern Ontario south of Highway No. 7.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has a statement.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, today I am addressing a letter to the heads of all municipal councils in the province, and I thought it would be wise if the contents of that letter were put on the records of the House as well, because I know members will be interested.

TO THE HEADS OF ALL THE COUNCILS:

All borrowers of long-term money, as I am sure you are aware, are experiencing, today, unprecedented difficulties in their attempts to borrow funds to finance the cost of their capital works.

I am told that long-term money has never, during this century, been as scarce, nor as expensive, as it is today. For instance, a prime Ontario municipal credit will pay, at the present time, at least 8.5 per cent for long-term money—such a credit would have paid 7.9 per cent a year ago, 6.40 per cent two years ago and 5.60 per cent five years ago—this represents an increase of 52 per cent in the cost of long-term money within the period of the last five years.

Fortunately, the province, in keeping with the government's policy to grant first priority to the needs of education, established three years ago the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation to purchase debentures issued by the municipalities and the separate school boards to finance the cost of public and separate elementary schools and secondary schools. This corporation purchased debentures in the amount of $121 million in the calendar year 1966, $172 million in 1967 and $198 million in 1968.

The corporation has provided the local authorities, during the last three years, with slightly more than half of their total long-term money requirements. The money that was loaned to the local authorities by this corporation, during these three years, was loaned at interest rates that were approximately one per cent below the rates that a prime Ontario municipal credit would have to pay in the public money market—the availability of this money at lower rates of interest has resulted in a total reduction in the interest expenses of Ontario's school boards of some $40 million.

In order to outline the government's financial policy with regard to these matters, as they relate to Ontario and its municipalities and school boards, may I make reference to a few excerpts from the Budget statement of the hon. Charles MacNaughton:

With regard to the government's expenditure programme he stated: ". . . Our policy has been one of severe and deliberate restraint, aimed at cutting back the growth in expenditures in line with anticipated revenue growth."

With regard to the problems of the public finance system in Ontario which, of course, includes the municipalities, the Treasurer stated: "The first and foremost stage in a programme of fiscal reform must be the containment of expenditures. The only way to arrest growing tax burdens and to relieve the pressure on the province's tax system and debt-raising capacity is to arrest the growth in total public spending." And, again, the Treasurer stated: "Our decision to stay out of the public capital market in 1969-1970 is based on two considerations. The first is the need to avoid inflationary demands on the capital markets. The second and most important consideration, however, is that borrowing is not an effective substitute for the steps we must take to strengthen our fundamental fiscal position."

And finally, in direct reference to the local authorities, as I am sure you are aware, Mr. MacNaughton stated: "I would strongly urge our municipal partners to follow our example in the exercise of voluntary restraint in spending programmes, particularly in the field of education. To the extent that this does not happen, the Ontario government may be obliged to consider the introduction of machinery such as a budget review board to ensure that the taxpayer is not overly burdened and to guarantee that any further financial aid from the province to the municipalities finds its way into the hands of the taxpayer."

I am confident, and the government is confident, we will secure the co-operation of the locally-elected officials in its programme to restrict the level of all expenditures of the province and of its municipalities and school boards.

Because of a growing population, a demand for new and additional services and the increasing standard of these services, the municipalities, but particularly the school boards, have increased, greatly, their capital expenditures in recent years. For instance, the total amount of the debentures issued by the municipalities, for purposes other than schools, in 1956 was $112 million—the amount increased to $159 million in 1960 and to $176 million in 1965 while the amount fell to $172 million in 1968. On the other hand, the amount of the debentures issued by the municipalities and separate school boards for school board purposes in 1956 was $53 million, the amount increased in 1960 to $79 million, in 1965 to $83 million and in 1968 it reached an amount of $198 million.

As a matter of fact, the capital expenditures of Ontario school boards have reached such a level that the $175 million that was allocated to the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation for the province's fiscal year ended March 31, 1969, was not sufficient to purchase all of the debentures that were presented to the corporation for purchase. As of March 14, 1969, the corporation was holding for purchase, debentures in an amount of $35 million for which funds had not been appropriated by the government to the corporation for the fiscal year. Because of the capital moneys available to Ontario, at that time, the government was not prepared to appropriate additional funds to the corporation.

As I am sure the members are aware, the Treasurer's Budget has allocated to the corporation, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1970, an amount of $175 million. Discussions are presently being held between officers of the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation and The Department of Education to devise methods that will ensure that the funds allocated by the province to the corporation, for the current fiscal year, are made available to the school boards on the basis of their cash requirements.

Insofar as the municipalities are concerned, with the exception of one relatively small federal and three relatively small provincial programmes, they are required to rely entirely on the public money market to secure their long-term money requirements.

The municipalities are experiencing historic difficulties in the public money market. The essential characteristics of these difficulties are as follows:

(a) Money has never been as expensive in this century.

(b) Our cities are being required to pay approximately 8.75 per cent for 1- to 20-year money, while our towns and villages are being required to pay approximately 9 per cent for 1- to 20-year money.

(c) Many municipal treasurers, rather than face the difficulties of the market and borrow at these rates, are relying, temporarily, on the banking system at an interest rate from 7.5 to 7.75 per cent.

(d) Some of the more fortunate municipalities are sufficiently large to place issues in the United States dollar market—unfortunately, the hedge that has historically existed with regard to United States dollar borrowings, namely, a spread between the price of money in the United States and Canada, has almost disappeared.

(e) Debentures with a maturity from one to five years can usually be placed in the banking system; debentures with maturities from six to 20 years have been sold in Ontario in very small amounts in recent months.

(f) Historically, municipal long-term financing has been accomplished by the issuance of an installment debenture—by the use of the installment debenture municipalities have been able to raise, by way of taxation each year, an amount of money equal to the principal amount of the loan and the interest that is due on the loan within each year.

(g) A hiatus has developed! On the one hand, it is, essentially, not possible to sell installment debentures with terms in excess of five to ten years. While, on the other hand, because of the relationships between term of the debenture and rates of taxation it is not possible for most municipalities to issue installment debentures with terms as short as five to ten years and, finally:

(h) The spread between the cost of money to Ontario and to its municipalities has widened, sharply, in recent months.

As the Minister responsible for the province's municipalities, I write to you to suggest that you discuss this letter with the members of your council and, in particular, I request that you discuss the following specific recommendations with them.

(a) I would recommend to your council that it give very serious consideration to deferring, for the present, the construction on any new project that is to be financed from the proceeds of a debenture issue, unless the construction of the project, in the council's opinion, is essential.

(b) I have reviewed these money market problems with the chairman of the Ontario Municipal Board and the chairman has informed me that, effective immediately, the board will require, as a condition of the approval of a capital expenditure, other than an expenditure for school board purposes, that the debentures to be issued to finance the cost of a capital project be sold, or other financial arrangements, satisfactory to the board, be completed, before the board's final approval to proceed with the construction of a project is given.

(c) With regard to debentures to be issued to finance the cost of school board projects, The Department of Education is in the process of developing a policy with regard to the approval of projects that is related to the annual appropriations made by the government to the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation. As I indicated earlier, the appropriation to the corporation, for the current fiscal year, is $175 million.

(d) With regard to projects that have received the approval of the Ontario Municipal Board under section 64 of the board's Act, arrangements to borrow money by the issue and sale of debentures to finance the cost of such projects should be completed, and the debentures sold, before the municipality lets a contract for the construction of such projects. This procedure will ensure that the council is aware of the cost of the money to be borrowed and that the money can actually be obtained at a price and under conditions that are acceptable to the council.

(e) The council should give consideration to financing the cost of capital projects, and certainly the cost of non-essential capital projects, by the prior accumulation of reserve funds. One of the principles in municipal finance that underlie the establishment and the use of a reserve fund is that the construction of a project be delayed until the funds to meet the cost of the project have been accumulated. The funds may be accumulated by the council by the annual appropriation of funds in the municipality's current estimates. These annual appropriations, with interest, accumulate each year until a sufficient sum of money is available to pay for the entire cost of the project. This method of financing does not restrict the municipality's credit and, because of the interest earned yearly on the money accumulated, the method reduces the net cost of the project to the ratepayers.

(f) To eliminate the necessity of borrowing money at today's historically high interest rates, the council might give consideration to the provision in the current estimates of a "capital levy". A "capital levy" is a sum of money that is provided in the current estimates of a municipality to meet the cost of a portion, or all, of a capital work. Obviously, the money raised in this manner need not be borrowed. Many of Ontario's municipalities have used this vehicle to control the level of their debenture debt and to reduce the cost of interest.

(g) Because of the demands on the money markets, municipalities will be under pressure to examine the feasibility of financing the cost of a capital project within shorter terms—for instance, a 10-year term rather than a 15- or 20-year term. Such a step will reduce the cost of money to the municipality and will, certainly, facilitate the sale of the municipality's debentures in today's markets. However, to the extent that the term of a debenture is shortened, the annual provision in the municipality's estimates for the repayment of principal and interest on the debentures is increased and the mill rate is increased. This device may be used to good effect in today's money market. However, the device must be used with caution.

The government has examined into the suggestion that legislation be enacted to authorize all of the municipalities, or certain of the municipalities, to sell debentures in foreign currencies other than United States dollars or sterling. It is the government's opinion that, at the present time, it would be undesirable and not in the interests of Ontario's municipalities to accept this suggestion.

Before I conclude these remarks I wish to inform you about the immediate plans of the government with regard to the very difficult problems being experienced by the municipalities in the sale of their debentures.

The Treasurer and I have requested our advisors to examine, carefully, the changing nature of the market for fixed obligation securities in Canada and, particularly, the municipal debenture, and to prepare recommendations that will attempt to ensure that the municipalities' essential long-term money requirements are available when needed.

This examination will include, among other matters, the availability of authorizing the municipalities to issue and to sell several additional types of debentures including installment debentures that are selected by lot, subject to prior purchase and installment debentures that are payable within a period that is shorter than the authorized period during which the cost of the project must be raised by way of taxation, subject to the amount that is not raised by taxation, being refunded within the authorized period.

The examination will include, also, recommendations with regard to the desirability and the feasibility of establishing effective procedures that will permit the government to exercise an element of co-ordination over the long-term money requirements of the province, its municipalities and its school boards.

The province, in 1968, undertook two major measures to assist the municipalities financially, namely, the introduction of the residential property tax reduction programme and the transfer to the province of all of the costs for the administration of justice. These changes transferred approximately $150 million from the tax base of the municipalities to the tax base of the province.

As Mr. MacNaughton indicated in his Budget statement, these changes do not constitute an adequate long-run solution. The government's major local government finance reform objective is to increase the province's financial support for the local governments in order to reduce the burden of the financing which falls upon the slow-growing and the oppressive property tax.

In the meantime, it will be necessary for Ontario municipalities to cope with this current money market problem. I am sure that the elected municipal officials and their advisors, will cope with this problem, as they have coped in the past with so many other problems.

The municipal officials are assured of my full cooperation with regard to the problem.

With kindest regards,

Yours very truly,

(signed)

W. DARCY McKEOUGH,

Minister.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, could the Speaker tell us please, was that a ministerial statement, or was that the Minister's budget speech?

Mr. Speaker: I think the Speaker announced that the Minister of Municipal Affairs had a statement and obviously that is what it was.

I wonder if the leader of the Opposition would allow the Prime Minister to give some answers to some questions which he has, before the leader's questions? One of them has not been asked—from the hon. member for Sarnia—and the other one was from the hon. member for Hamilton East. I wonder if the hon. member for Sarnia would place his question?

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having regard for the latest incident involving The Law Enforcement Compensation Act, 1967, would the Prime Minister consider immediate amendment to such legislation as contemplated in a bill proposed by me, on Wednesday, December 4, 1968, and ruled out of order, so that situations such as Botrie and Dr. Lindzon could be compensable?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I simply say that The Law Enforcement Compensation Act is presently under review.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton East would place his question now.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question of the Prime Minister. In view of the need to preserve Lake Erie beaches for public use, will the Prime Minister request the Steel Company of Canada to purchase and donate for public use, Lake Erie beach lines equal to the amount now taken for industrial use?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this is the second question of this type I have had in the last few days. I discussed this with the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle), in relation to the Steel Company of Canada and Dominion Foundry and Steel, and the land that they own on Lake Erie. When one examines these properties one finds that there is really no beach there that could be classed as suitable for bathing. The shore line is very rocky and it is considered to be unacceptable from the point of view of bathing.

We considered buying some land in 1963, in the area where Stelco is, with a view to establishing a park there, and abandoned the idea because it simply is not suitable. The shore line is very rocky and very steep. But just five miles further along the beach is a provincial park where we have acquired property and where there are proper beach facilities.

The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) asked about the property acquired by Dofasco and my research indicates that the shore line there is too low to be used for bathing. There are 60 to 75 foot eroding clay cliffs right behind it, and it just simply does not lend itself to this.

The beach is very, very narrow and, apparently, when the water is rough there is no beach at all. The water comes right up to the foot of the cliffs.

However, the government recently acquired some 8,000 feet of beach property just east of the Dofasco property which we will be turning into a bathing beach for the public. This will become a future provincial park, so I think that is the answer to the question. If the land were suitable, we would be quite happy to look at it—but it is not.

Perhaps I could deal with some of these other questions here, sir. The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson) asked me about a nucleus of key men who would be hired from outside the area to work on the Ontario Hydro Lower Notch project at Cobalt. I indicated that I would look into this matter and I can now offer some further information.

The hon. member asked that I issue instructions to prevent the importation of 23 workers from Quebec to work on the project and he also asked that instructions be issued that all workers other than key workers be hired locally, so long as local workers are available.

Well, the instructions Ontario Hydro gave to its contractors on this project were that priority of hiring be given to the local Canada Manpower office insofar as practicable and insofar as qualified workmen are available from that source. These instructions are presently being followed and I do not see any reason why they should be interfered with.

My investigation indicates that, at the time the question was asked, only 12 of the 113 men working on the project were from Quebec; only eight came from areas of Ontario not immediately adjacent to the Lower Notch project and, in addition, there were only eight local men listed at the local Canada Manpower office available for work, several of whom were unacceptable to the contractor.

No large numbers of workers from Quebec were brought in to work on the project, so I think the matter is presently quite satisfactory.

The member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) asked me concerning a study on—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Prime Minister would note that the member for Thunder Bay is not in his seat. If the leader of his party would wish the answer given—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, he can read it in Hansard. I may not be present when he is here, and it might be weeks before we got together.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sure he would prefer that it be put on the record now.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The member asked about the study of the feasibility of a steel complex for processing and manufacturing steel in northwestern Ontario. In answer to this, we are doing a great many studies in regard to a development on a very broad basis in that area and this possibility will be examined among others. I cannot guarantee that the Ontario Research Foundation will take this on as a specific project, but their services are used by the government as we do our research in the area.

Also, it has come to my attention that there has been some very intensive investigation by private industry who are interested in the possibility of locating a steel processing plant at the Lakehead, so that from all these sources the matter is being thoroughly examined.

I think that is all I have, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: I was thinking perhaps the Premier might reply to a question I put to him two or three days ago about the Westinghouse workers in the west end of Etobicoke?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: They have been in to see us. They gave us a brief and I have undertaken to take the suggestions they made. An appointment is being arranged so that I can meet with the officials of the company. Their wishes in this matter have been acceded to.

Mr. Nixon: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Education, who must be very anxious to make a statement on some of the things associated with his difficulties recently.

What action will the Minister take to relieve the serious inequities in school costs caused by the 1969 grant formula and the effect of the legislation constituting county school boards?

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I had a question to the Minister similar to this a few days ago. Will I ask it at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it might be just as well to clear the two of them at the one time, if they are similar.

Mr. Good: They are similar. A question of the Minister of Education:

Is the Minister aware that the town of New Hamburg is faced with an increase of educational costs from $92,000 to $209,000 in 1969, representing an increase of 158 per cent or 28 mills, as a result of implementation of county school boards?

Secondly, what action is the Minister prepared to take to rectify this unfair situation which also applies to the town of Elmira and the township of Wilmot, as well as many other rural municipalities?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has a somewhat similar question.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): A question, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. Minister of Education:

1. What will be the nature of the probe of "soaring school taxes" as reported by the Globe and Mail this morning?

2. Has there been any change in the Minister's policy that there can be no increase in the total grant to individual county boards? Is the maximum of 104 to 110 per cent realistic in view of the rise of costs reported by several county school boards?

3. Would the Minister comment on the statement from a source "close to the department" that the new provincial grant structure was the result of drastic cutbacks ordered by the Treasury Department? What was the degree of cutback from the support envisioned by the Minister when Bill 44 was introduced in the Ontario Legislature?

4. Is a 300-per-cent rise in education taxes the highest reported to the Minister of Education by any municipality? How many municipalities have reported a rise of over 100 per cent?

5. Can the Minister defend a policy of promising in 1968 an 85-per-cent grant in support of capital expenditures, with the policy in 1969 of limiting the increase in school-board budgets caused by new debenture issues to ten per cent?

6. Will school boards be given an opportunity to appear before the standing committee on education in view of the role this committee played in amending Bill 44?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I will try and deal with all three questions at once, some of them arising from the story in the paper this morning.

At the outset, there is no probe with respect to soaring school taxes. For the past week or ten days we have been requesting from the boards, information relative to the application of the new grant programme within their own areas.

I should point out that, to date, we have had a limited number of boards bringing forward material because they have not finalized their own budget processes, they have not determined the mill rate.

I would suggest that from the limited sampling we have had to date, there does not necessarily appear to be any common pattern. But there are some problems, of course, that we did anticipate which are emerging with respect to the application of the new grant programme.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister did anticipate?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, we did anticipate there would be some problems.

Mr. Nixon: I hope the Minister anticipated some answers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I should point out, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the member for Peterborough on whether 104 to 110 per cent is realistic in view of the rise in costs within the school system generally, that the Provincial Treasurer made this abundantly clear in his Budget.

It was very necessary for the boards, for every public agency, to do a very special task this year in reviewing their costs. And, of course, whether the 104 or 110 per cent is realistic, depends really on the position taken by the individual boards themselves.

I should also point out with respect to the grants in 1968, which the hon. member for Peterborough refers to as that of the 85 per cent. This grant, I believe was only 75 per cent—and it came to an end two days ago, or at least the applications had to be in. This applied to the technical-vocational programme—this 75 per cent did not apply to any other area of capital grants.

This, of course, is taken into account with respect to the amount per student that is suggested in the new grant formula. Whether or not the debenture payment that will be coming forward in 1969 related to this expenditure in 1968 is in itself adequate—well, we are prepared to examine as we get some feedback from the boards concerned.

With respect to the question of the member for Waterloo North: I indicated to him a day or so ago on the phone, the Waterloo board was one of those boards which wished to come in and discuss their situation with us, as we have with two or three others, including the Wellington county board just a few minutes ago. We would then be in a better position, after getting further information, to make whatever determinations have to be made at that time.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question. He has commented on the general situation, but my question was: What action would he take to relieve the situation?

The Minister has indicated he feels it is just occurring in some selected areas, but where it is occurring, it is a very serious matter indeed. Has he any action which might relieve the situation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I think I have indicated, we are in the process of giving them what we hope will be fairly complete information in the next few days, and at that point we can make determination or a delineation of the problem and see what solutions, if necessary, will be found.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if the Minister would agree that he and the Treasurer and the Minister of Municipal Affairs have succeeded in shifting the fiscal nightmare from the province to the school boards and municipalities?

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask the Minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—whether he has re-thought his policy that there can be absolutely no rise in the total grant to any particular county. It would seem to me that otherwise the problem is simply a matter of shifting expense from one municipality to another within the county.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that one cannot oversimplify the complexity of the situation by saying, we can do this or we can do that. I think it is far more appropriate to make some determinations after we have adequate information from a large number of boards.

Mr. Pitman: All right. Just another supplementary—a very simple, short one, Mr. Speaker.

I wonder if the Minister is aware of the fact that certain counties have passed resolutions demanding municipalities not collect taxes for educational purposes over a certain percentage. First, it is possible for a municipality to refuse to co-operate or to activate this taxation machinery in order to collect these taxes under these circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be expressing a personal point of view that really should be expressed by perhaps either the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) or the Minister of Municipal Affairs. But my own guess is that they cannot.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. leader a further question?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister left over from a few days ago. Has the Minister announced a decision on the establishment of a transfer review board as requested by the Ontario Teachers Federation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, the Minister has not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pitman: I think I have the same—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) if the hon. member wishes to ask a question related to the transfer review board, may I just repeat once again what I have said on several occasions. There will be an opportunity, either here or at the education committee, for the member for Peterborough, the member for Sudbury East and perhaps the leader of the Opposition to express their points of view on that particular subject.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General, in six parts. Is Mr. Dennis Latten, executive director of the Ontario Police Association, correct in his charges—as reported yesterday in the Oakville Journal-Record—that the government is about to make changes to The Police Act which will radically decrease the security of individual officers?

Is the Minister aware that certain police departments already have copies of the proposed changes and that at least one officer has been informed that he is to be dismissed under the new laws?

Why was the Legislature not informed of these proposed changes before copies were supplied to individual police departments?

Is the Minister aware of the acute unrest that has been produced among police officers throughout the province?

Is the Minister aware that the Ontario Police Association intends to call a mass rally of police departments throughout the province within two weeks to protest the proposed changes in The Police Act?

Has the Minister read Mr. Latten's charges in which he states that:

Attorney General Wishart claimed the Ontario Police Commission had discussed the changes with the police association, but we never heard about the changes until they were made.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say, as a preliminary to answering the question, that the hon. member is confusing references to The Police Act, with regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I have not heard from Mr. Latten with respect to his views on any proposed amendments to The Police Act and I will not attempt to anticipate what his views may be. I am sure he will bring them to my attention when the amendments are brought before this House in the proper and usual manner.

I would like to say that there have been no changes in The Police Act. Of course, since the last session. There will probably be legislation introduced later this session.

However, I have had correspondence over the past few days respecting the regulations, which have been made under The Police Act, and which became effective on March 24, when they were filed in the office of the Registrar of Regulations.

I am aware that certain police departments have copies of the regulations and indeed, these departments received the copies at approximately the same time as the copy was provided to Mr. Latten. When he asked for a copy, it was made available to him immediately a copy could be made available. This took place, I am advised, toward the end of last week. I am aware of the other factors to which the hon. member for High Park has referred, Mr. Speaker.

I would point out however, that it is not the practice that regulations be published in the House. The regulations are dealt with under The Regulations Act where provision is made for the filing and publication of the regulations. All of these provisions are being complied with and the regulations will be published in the Ontario Gazette on April 5.

Mr. Speaker, I have as grave a concern as the police association for matters relating to the welfare and conduct of the police service in this province. It is a source of regret to me personally, that this present misunderstanding has arisen. The regulations have been in the course of review and preparation by the Ontario Police Commission since 1965. I was under the impression that this review had included the views of the association and I am advised that the association was given the draft regulation in December 1965. It expressed its disagreement with the draft. In January 1966, at another meeting, it again rejected any proposed changes preferring the existing regulations.

However, Mr. Speaker, it will not serve the purpose of law enforcement to engage in public recrimination about what may or may not have taken place. The important thing is to bring the parties together and resolve any differences that may be capable of resolution. And this, I intend to do.

On April 1, I sent a wire to the association inviting it to meet with me to discuss their submissions. I have received a reply but the suggestion of a meeting may have been overlooked. I am today, writing to the association repeating my suggestion that we meet. I am sure that the president will recognize our mutual interests and that a meeting will be arranged in the near future.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will receive and consider any submissions and comments fairly made and that I will undertake any amendments that may then appear to me, to be necessary and equitable in the interest of both the public and the police forces of this province.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: In view of his comments, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the unhappiness among the police officers, would he be willing to withhold the implementation of the regulations until such time as he has had an opportunity to consider the submissions of the police association?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that would be proper even if I could undertake it. The regulations have been passed. I think, although the hon. member suggests that one member of a police force is being dealt with under the regulations, I do not think I can undertake to suspend their operation—the regulations having been passed. I would hope that the meeting I have suggested will be held before the middle of this month, and since the regulations can be quickly changed, I am quite prepared to make amendments if I see there necessity and reasonableness. I think that the operation of the regulations in that short time would not do any great harm.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister inform me, if they have officers dismissed and we subsequently change the regulations, will he endeavour to have them replaced on the forces?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I will not make any such undertaking either. I think the hon. member realizes that for me to do that would be out of order. The regulations may or may not be, as we examine them, so bad in their effect as perhaps they have been represented to him. What he is referring to are the disciplinary provisions. I am quite sure that, when the matter which is presently under consideration is dealt with, there may be general satisfaction. I think there will be a fair and proper disposition of the matter.

I could not undertake to suspend the regulations which were passed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. I am quite prepared to undertake, and I think I am prepared to admit, as I understand the matter now, that perhaps there was not sufficient discussion with the members of the Ontario Police Association, but I am quite prepared to consider their representations and if it is shown to be proper, reasonable, and in my view right to make changes, I shall do so at the first opportunity.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. Was Stephen F. transferred from Sudbury Jail to Millbrook after his acquittal, rather than being returned to Burwash because he had communicated the details of the Burwash homosexual case to two members of this House?

If there is any other reason for Mr. F's transfer, will the Minister give it to the House?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can possibly do anything else but express my resentment at the implications contained in this question, that is, that members of my staff would transfer an inmate for the reason suggested by the hon. member. The answer is emphatically no, and as far as the answer to the second part of the question is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I gave that answer yesterday.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not give that answer yesterday. He refused to answer it, which is why I asked it again today.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

An hon. member: He did not answer today.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I had a question of the Minister of Health who has departed this place. It was an important question and there is a recess. Can I put it on the record, or does one have to wait now for two weeks to get some indication to—

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that we do not deal with that until the end of the question period. In the meantime some of the other Ministers might not be here who are now here, and we have many questions of Ministers who are not here now that we will have to determine as to—

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Health is on the run.

Mr. Speaker: I will be glad to deal with that problem as well as the other questions which I have of that Minister, and other Ministers who are not in the House, when we get done with the ones who are here now.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I have to slip out for a moment so—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Riverdale will—I will hear him on it. The hon. member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I have two questions, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Education:

How many resignations or firings have there been from the administrative staff of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in the past two years, and what are the reasons given?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my information from Ryerson Polytechnical Institute would indicate that during the past two years and out of roughly 28 administrative positions, including the president, the vice-president, deans, and so on, have been resigned. One resigned to resume purely academic work; two resigned to accept promotions elsewhere and one was asked to resign because of reorganization within the administrative structure.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, my second question is: In the recent past and possibly at present, has there been, or is there now, a representative of the Minister's department on the island of Anguilla? If so, is he there as an official ambassador of Ontario, as a member of the occupying forces, or in some other capacity; and if the latter what is he doing there?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in these questions there is always the odd light moment. I can only tell the hon. member that on March 10, two officials from the department accompanied a shipment of school desks and other supplies in "Operation School Supplies". These were ferried down by The Department of National Defence. They went to Jamaica, the Cayman Islands and British Honduras.

There has never been any departmental staff member whom one could construe as being in the position of an ambassador for this province, although I like to think that the departmental staff people always act in this capacity when they are outside Ontario; nor do we know whether or not one of them, or both of them, at any point had visited Anguilla. I cannot really be any more helpful to the hon. member on this particular major issue at this moment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could direct a question to the Minister of Education?

Will the Minister indicate whether he intends to revise The Public Libraries Act during the present session?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peterborough will be fully aware, certainly after today's discussions, there will be advance notice on the order paper of any amendments to Acts, and when I am in a position to inform members I shall do so.

Mr. Pitman: A second question.

Did The Department of Education receive a brief suggesting the establishment of summer courses on Indian teacher education, to begin in the summer of 1969? Is the department willing to carry through with the plan to initiate such a programme? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did receive such a brief to establish summer courses for Indian education. This submission has been and still is under consideration by the department. It is relatively complicated; it involves our relationships with the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Indian Affairs and the relationship with the boards that they have with the department. We think there is real merit in this, but whether or not we will be in a position this summer, quite frankly, is doubtful. But we are proceeding hopefully for the summer of 1970.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a supplementary question?

Has the federal Department of Indian Affairs indicated any interest in supporting such a programme?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would not say that their interest extends to support per se. There have been some discussions.

Mr. Pitman: My next question is: In view of the recommendations of the committee on conflict of interest, will the Minister encourage suitable amendments to existing legislation which will allow teachers in Metro Toronto area the opportunity to serve on boards of education other than the one by which they are employed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the report is under full consideration by the department and when some determination is made I shall be pleased to inform the House.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question here which was handed to me by the member for Sudbury East who has been ill. I wonder if it would be worthwhile to have this—

Mr. Speaker: It will be quite in order for the hon. member to ask it if he has asked to do so.

Mr. Pitman: Fine, thank you.

Has the teachers' superannuation commission approached the Minister to have the existing policy changed whereby only one pension can be drawn by the remaining member of a husband and wife teacher team? If so, will the Minister comply with the request?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just going by memory now, I did not bring the answer to the question with me, but I do not believe the teachers' superannuation commission did make any approach. I believe that that particular request formed part of several requests from the Ontario Teachers' Federation.

Mr. Pitman: Could the Minister indicate whether he has come to grips with the problem yet?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is no determination of this yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent was on his feet a moment ago?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Will the Minister explain the details of the farm products marketing board issuing a tomato packing licence to Essex county canners for the year 1968, and tell us if the company posted a bond to certify their ability to meet their commitments to its producers?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, the farm products marketing board received an application from Essex county canners for a licence as a processor in 1968. The farm products marketing board arranged for an examination of the financial status of the new owners of the company by a firm of chartered accountants. On the basis of this examination, the farm products marketing board concluded the new owners of the company appeared to possess adequate funds to meet the commitments of an applicant company. And therefore on September 3, 1968, it issued a licence to process.

No bond was posted because the regulations do not require the posting of a bond. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that before the application was ever made to the farm products marketing board for such a licence to process, contracts had been signed between the applicant company and the farmers involved, and most of the tomato plants were in the ground; in fact I think they all were, because the licence application was not made until quite late in May. So it was a case of which comes first, the chicken or the egg; and unfortunately the tomatoes were planted before the licence was even asked for.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary. Is it correct that a liquor permit for a wedding banquet costs $5 and a liquor permit for a bar mitzvah costs $10? If so, what is the reason for the difference in cost?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, there are four types of special-occasion permits, two in the no-sale category, and two in the sale category.

The $5 no-sale permit covers wedding receptions and wedding receptions only. The $10 no-sale permit covers all other no-sale situations — confirmations, christenings, bar mitzvahs, anniversary parties, graduations. I think it is important to realize that the only exception in the no-sale is for the wedding reception which is that way.

There are $15 sale permits and $10 sale permits for reasons which were, I think, explained when the liquor licence board was before the committee on government commissions.

Mr. Deans: Is the Minister able to tell me why there is such a difference made between the different celebrations where no sale takes place?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There is only one exception in the no-sale and that is the wedding reception. I suppose it has just been the policy of the liquor licence board to make it a wedding present for all the married couples in Ontario, to make that one exception.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Owing to the low price of Lake Erie perch and the uncertainty of future prices for perch, will the Minister of Lands and Forests respond favourably to a request by the Lake Erie commercial fishermen that they be included under the federal inland fish marketing board?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Kent, as he knows, I introduced today The Fresh Water Fish Marketing Act and this Act provides authority to the fresh water fish marketing corporation which is in the process of being established. On Monday last I attended a meeting in Winnipeg with the hon. Jean-Luc Pepin and a number of other federal and provincial representatives. We had a very interesting meeting. The plan is designed in a manner which will allow it to be enlarged throughout the whole province. But in the initial stages it is proposed to have northwestern

Ontario included. As time goes on, when others have assessed the advantages and disadvantages they may be included in this plan. Once the plan is established and operating, consideration may be given in consultation with federal authorities, to include other parts of Ontario.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister a supplementary question? I take it the Lake Erie commercial fishermen do not come under the new bill that you introduced today.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, that is correct; they are not at the present time. But as I just mentioned, if they feel there would be advantages in being included they may be included on making application.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Education.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of Education. How many junior kindergartens are there in Ontario and is there a constant expansion in this area?

How many principals in our public schools, and in our high schools, are women, and out of how many?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we do not collect specific information on the number of junior kindergarten classes. To be helpful to the hon. member we have some figures relating to enrolment: In 1966, 1967 and 1968 the enrolments were successively 3,284, 3,226, 5,020.

With respect to the question of the numbers of principals: in the public school system, 3,136; in the secondary school system, 553. Of course, I am quite sure the hon. member would agree with this philosophy; we have not segregated the sexes in the gathering of this statistical material; we treat all our principals the same. In other words, I do not know how many are female.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, do we have women principals in both the public schools and high schools?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, indeed we do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South has two questions.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Mines.

Can the Minister inform the House if there was any substance to the rumours that International Nickel has discovered sizeable ore bodies as a result of their explorations in Langmuir township, southeast of Timmins?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is not aware that there are laws in this jurisdiction relating to the public disclosure of information that would affect the stock market price of certain stocks. So I may say to him that, even if I had the answer to his question, I would deem it a most improper question and I would not answer it.

Mr. Ferrier: I have another question, Mr. Speaker, equally interesting.

Mr. Lewis: I guess that means they knew about it.

Mr. Ferrier: In view of the fact that a majority of the people meeting with the Minister of Mines to discuss the Texas Gulf smelter location are American, representing wholly owned American interests, would not the Minister feel it appropriate to assert more fully the Canadian presence by inviting to the next meeting the chief economist of Ontario, the mayor of the town of Timmins, and Professor Melville Watkins, of the Watkins report on foreign ownership in Canada?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I say that certainly in consultations in relation to this matter I have consulted the provincial economists, I have been in verbal communication with the mayor of Timmins, and six months ago I wrote to Professor Watkins about the overall general problem and I received no reply from him.

Mr. Ferrier: Would you ask him to the next meeting?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, I do not think I would.

An hon. member: How about the member for Cochrane South?

Mr. Speaker: May I draw to the attention of the members that I have some 20 questions placed by various members of Ministers who are not now in the House. It has been suggested by the member for York South that perhaps these might be asked by those members who are still here and placed on the record for answer after the Easter vacation.

Normally I would not allow, nor would the House wish to allow, that they be given unless the Minister were in. I would like to have from the House leader his views as to whether these should be dealt with this way or whether they should be held, as in the normal course, until after the Easter recess, when perhaps some of them would not be of as much value.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the questions being placed on the record now, if the members want to place them there.

Mr. Nixon: I would certainly welcome the chance to put some of these on the record. When the vote was called earlier in the afternoon, sir, most of them, actually, were present. It is a shame that they are not here to finish up the business on the last day.

An hon. member: Ring the bell.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let us proceed to put them on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Then I would be delighted if—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I could move the adjournment of the House, and have them all back.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, unless he is going to make a motion of adjournment, is out of order. Perhaps he would let us get on with getting these matters into Hansard. The hon. member for Riverdale, then, I believe has one or two for the member for York South.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do have them. Before placing them I would comment that it seems strange to me that the Ministers can be in the House for their own nefarious purposes, but they cannot be here for—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the hon. member is in order in commenting. The hon. member has the floor to place certain questions on behalf of the hon. member for York South. This is not a debate, this is a question period.

Mr. J. Renwick: On behalf of the hon. member for York South, I would ask this question of the Minister of Health, who was here earlier but has since fled. Has the Minister approached Physicians' Services' Incorporated requesting that this body become an agent or carrier within a proposed Medicare plan for the province of Ontario?

Did the government present a proposed agreement to PSI? What was PSI's reaction? Sort of a futile operation.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to place a question which he has? The hon. member for Cochrane South has the floor.

Mr. Ferrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question that I had for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett). A two-part question.

(1) Has the Ontario Northland Railway made a study to determine the significance to the railway if the Texas Gulf smelter is built in Porcupine?

(2) If so, will it make any appreciable difference to the financial position of the Ontario Northland Railway if the Texas Gulf smelter for zinc is built in the Porcupine area, rather than elsewhere?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): I have a question of the Minister of Health that I would like to ask on behalf of the member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte). How many microbiologists are on the payroll of The Department of Health? What are their duties and where in Ontario are they employed?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent:

Mr. Ruston: I have a question for the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme); it is in three parts:

(1) How many miles of provincial highways in the counties of Essex and Kent are being turned over to the municipalities as of July 1, 1969?

(2) Did the Minister say at a meeting held at Chatham three years ago that all such roads would be built to a first-class standard, prior to any negotiations to have them turned over to local municipalities?

(3) How can the Minister, in fairness to the counties and municipalities concerned, turn provincial highways over to these local areas without first seeing that they are built to the specifications of the department's own rules and regulations?

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have one for the Minister of Highways.

(1) Would the Minister advise how many miles of provincial highways have been handed back to the counties and districts in Ontario?

(2) How many miles have been taken over by the department of Highways?

(3) Are the grants being increased to compensate for the maintenance of the roads the counties take over?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Under protest, Mr. Speaker, I think we should send the Sergeant-at-Arms with his sword and bring them in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is on his feet for the purpose of placing a question.

Mr. Ben: To the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

In the light of all the new medical evidence which has accumulated in the interim, does the Minister still believe that we are dealing only with the effects of inorganic fluorides in the Port Maitland area?

On what medical evidence does he base his own opinion, given on page 2859 of Hansard that there is no significant risk of acute fluorosis or health hazard from organic fluorides in the Port Maitland area?

Does the word "significant" imply little risk to any given individual, or is it merely referring to statistical significance?

And I have a further question, Mr. Speaker; 1109: (1) Will the numerous factual errors we have found in the Hall report remain uncorrected in the public record for all time, merely because the committee has now disbanded?

(2) Will all questions arising from the report go unanswered by the Minister, merely because the committee has now disbanded?

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to place questions in the absence of the Minister? The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have eight questions of the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall)—three regarding units of empty housing, and five others. I have also four questions of the Minister of Health regarding Brockville psychiatric hospital. I decline, Mr. Speaker, to present them at this time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, sir. I decline to present my supplementary to the Minister of Health, in answer to the question that he has not yet received, nor answered.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: On behalf of the Minister of Health, I decline to answer the member's supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: I might say, Mr. Speaker, in the interests—as I know you have, sir—of literary parallels, you might ask the Minister of Health whether his feelings were not those akin to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is quite out of order.

Mr. Lewis: I was appealing—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I realize that, but we have had sufficient amount of the time of the House taken up with matters which are not of too much consequence, in view of the important business which is before the House.

Before we go to the next order of the day, I would like to say to the House that yesterday there was a considerable disturbance to my right as Mr. Speaker was leaving the House. I unfortunately took it for granted that it was members of the staff of the Minister whose estimates are under discussion and probably spoke more harshly to him than did the Opposition members.

I have since found out that they were not on his staff and I apologize to him and his staff for this misapprehension on my part. I have always found them to be most helpful public servants and not inclined to impede Mr. Speaker's coming and going.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): These words are very gracious of you, sir.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, if I might record the question outlined to you—it is to the Minister of Trade and Development:

How many contracts has Ontario Housing Corporation entered into with Headway Construction Limited.

How many contracts were, as a result of tenders by such company, more than the lowest tender received with respect to the project for which such contract was entered into?

Thank you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to have a question recorded?

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 26th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL AND FAMILY SERVICES (Continued)

On vote 2001:

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, during the discussions we examined the functions of the review board for welfare recipients who are refused welfare or receive inadequate assistance. Besides the matter of considering whether the people on welfare have been denied or are receiving inadequate assistance, there is another serious matter which should be considered by the board. This deals with the type of treatment that welfare seekers or recipients get at the hands of various welfare administrators and inspectors.

Earlier in the session, Mr. Chairman, I made some charges in the House regarding the conduct—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): On a point of order, I wonder if this is in order at this point. It seems to me that the legislation spells out the functions of the board of review and I think if the hon. member has some comments to make in regard to this matter they could be made on another occasion and not at this particular point.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, we are discussing the board of review and these matters that I intend to raise here deal with the inadequate treatment that welfare recipients have to undergo and the lack of recourse available to them.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! If I may speak to the point of order made by the hon. Minister. There is an amount of money in the estimates for this particular purpose, and in discussion of the board of review, I think it may be permissible to refer to the legislation. I must confess I was not able to follow the member too closely to begin with—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Because the Minister interrupted before he could explain.

Mr. Chairman: I do believe that it is not out of order to refer to the legislation that set up this board. Perhaps the hon. member would continue and if I feel he is drifting out of order, I will call him to order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will just give a brief history leading to the events. I am going to introduce some evidence here of the type of abuse that various people, who are trying to get assistance in Ontario, receive. These are the cases I feel should be brought to the attention of the board of review.

However, in this particular case, earlier in the session I made some charges regarding the operation of the welfare office and the welfare administrator in Brantford. The ensuing controversy generated a great deal of local interest. This resulted in a well-attended public meeting with over 300 persons present and this I would like to bring to the Minister's attention—

The degree of interest that exists in various municipalities regarding the operation of welfare.

Here it was a February morning, the temperature was about 20 degrees, the meeting was held outside, there were no invitations—it was just announced that there was going to be a meeting, and over 300 people turned up, most of them either welfare recipients or people who have been abused.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I again suggest that if the hon. member wishes to talk on this matter, it should be at a different point in the estimates. I bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, that section 11a of The Family Benefits Act says:

Any applicant or recipient may, by notice in writing served upon the chairman of the board of review, request a hearing and a review by the board of a decision, order or directive of the director affecting the applicant or recipient, as the case may be.

And I make the point, Mr. Chairman, that this type of discussion could properly come, if you so decided, under the next vote, vote 2002, municipal allowances and assistance.

Mr. Chairman: Well, on that basis, there is nothing in vote 2001 having to do with municipal allowances and assistance. It does come under vote 2002. In that respect, perhaps, the hon. Minister's point of order is valid, that the discussion pertaining to this particular aspect of the estimates could properly be discussed under vote 2002.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is what I am talking about. What I am trying to introduce deals with the board of review and deals with the abuse that recipients get at the hands of welfare administrators and the fact that they have no recourse or compensation of any type. This is what I want to bring up and I intend to bring up the evidence in this particular discussion—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is, in other words, using as an example the situation that exists in the municipalities so that he can relate it to the needs of the board of review?

Mr. Makarchuk: This is exactly—the broadening of—

Mr. Chairman: In my opinion, the hon. member is quite in order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Anyway, at this particular meeting, I called for a full enquiry into the operation of the welfare department. At the meeting, there was a tacit agreement by the Brantford city council to accept my request for a full inquiry. I went away, and so did a lot of other people—it was one of the best attended meetings, in fact it was probably the best-attended municipal meeting ever held in Brantford—and we went away with the impression that the council was sincere in its desires to get to the bottom of the matter.

The council asked me to submit a set of terms of reference for the inquiry and this was done. Briefly, my terms called for a full inquiry by a committee of social workers who would examine all evidence supplied by me, various city social agencies, and other interested individuals and members of the welfare department. The committee would report back to council and hopefully that council would implement some of the recommendations.

As events proved later, my impression of the sincerity of the council was wrong. With absolutely no prior consultation, despite the fact that charges were made by me, the council proceeded to set its own terms of reference. These were, and I am quoting from a resolution passed by council:

That his honour Judge W. W. Leech, judge of the county of Haldimand, be requested to review administration of the city of Brantford welfare department from January 1, 1967, pursuant to The Municipal Act, Revised Statutes of Ontario 1967, chapter 249, section 241 as amended; and that the terms of reference be as follows:

1. Whether or not welfare payments in the city of Brantford have been made in accordance with the provincial statutes and regulations.

2. Whether or not the welfare department employees of the corporation, in the course of carrying out their duties, have insulted citizens of the city, publicly or privately, so as to constitute misconduct within the meaning of the said section 241.

At first glance, Mr. Chairman, the terms appear reasonable. But upon being examined by my legal friends, the terms were nothing but a blatant devious attempt by council to hamstring the inquiry.

Instead of setting the terms which would permit a full scope inquiry which would shed light on the operation of the welfare department, the council, in a legalistic way, set the terms so that the evidence regarding insults on ethical behaviour and other matters would be excluded from being considered by the judge.

Instead of examining fully and impartially the operations of the department, council would be in a position to obscure, hide and sweep the whole thing under the rug.

On Monday night, my solicitor approached the city council with new terms of reference which would have permitted the judge to carry out a broad inquiry. With the exception—

Mr. Chairman: Order please. It does seem to me that the hon. member is straying from the matter relating the situation to the need for the board of review. He is reviewing the matter of an inquiry into the welfare situation and particular municipality. It seems to me he is straying from the import of the item in the vote.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Chairman, if I could interrupt. It seems to me in order for the Opposition to be able to question this Minister and his department I think the Chairman should give the Opposition the widest of latitude. In this case the speaker is merely reciting the facts that are preceding the cases he wishes to bring to the attention of the House. I see nothing wrong with that.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, speaking on a point of order, I think your ruling is quite right. The hon. member is using a devious attempt to bring in a speech which can quite properly be made at another time. First of all, I bring to your attention that the matter is under judicial review at the present time.

The inquiry which is being held is under The Municipal Act, which is outside the jurisdiction of this department. I suggest to you that there is nothing within this estimate 2001, upon which the hon. member has the right to speak on that subject at this time.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, if you will hear me out, this deals with the administration of welfare which comes out of the Minister's department and what I am doing now is—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Now I would like to know—

Mr. Makarchuk: I listened to you; now you listen to me! Okay?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On a point of order, what in the world has the judicial inquiry got to do with terms—

Mr. Chairman: I have not made any ruling. The hon. member will please be seated.

The hon. Minister has risen on a point of order now. I do not think there is any attempt on the part of the Chairman or the Minister to eliminate this sort of discussion but we want to keep it in the proper order. It is a municipal matter, a matter of the handling of welfare within a municipality, which does come under vote 2002. This is the general vote and we have the programmes listed on page 151 of the estimates; and I fail to see yet, whether the hon. member is relating the matter of administration to the matter of the need for board of review. He is enumerating the situation in total within a municipality whereas a board of review, as I get it, is for a different purpose.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, what I am trying to get across here is the fact that these situations would not have developed if a board of review, with broad enough terms, was available. I am just trying to give a brief history of how the situation developed and then I am introducing the evidence as to why a board of review, with broad terms, that could investigate insults to, and abuse of welfare recipients, is necessary.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member said he is giving a brief review but perhaps he could keep it quite brief, as a matter of reference. If he keeps it brief in the reference to the situation in Brantford, perhaps he could properly relate it to the need for a board of review. But a complete rehash of the situation in Brantford, I do not think is essential at this particular point. If in fact, it has to do with the municipal jurisdiction, it could come under vote 2002, item 5. So if he can relate it briefly to the need for a board of review he is in order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, I will try to cut out the large details. Anyway, the term councillor refused their request and said that certain types of evidence regarding welfare would not be introduced or could not be introduced. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have here about a dozen or so affidavits, sworn to me by people who went to receive welfare assistance, and I am going to read the kind of abuse that goes on in council. I will not mention these peoples' names but if the Minister wishes to see the affidavits and examine them, these will be available to him.

This is the first one:

Early in February 1965, I went to see Mr. Fred Nightingale, Brantford welfare administrator, at the advice of Brantford Children's Aid Society. First he took my name and address and insisted that I had money. He kept insisting, "You know you have money," in an extremely insulting manner. I explained the situation, pointing out to him that I was not living at home; I had a child. He immediately asked me, "How long were you living with this man?" I replied, "I was not, I was going to school at this time; I was 18 years old." Mr. Nightingale replied, "I suppose you went to a motel." This time I was extremely embarrassed. Then he leaned back in his chair and said, "Why should I, as a citizen of Brantford, support you and your child?" I tried to explain to him that I wanted some help until I could be physically fit to get a job. He replied, "Why do you not get some guy to live with. Next year you will come back with another illegitimate child for the city to support." I walked out on the verge of tears. I was told to call back but I did not. I went and got a job, two and a half weeks after giving birth to a child.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Must be nice to run a department where that happens. It must satisfy you.

Mr. Makarchuk: Here is a family—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not understand that interjection. It is very unbecoming. I do not run a department—

Mr. Lewis: Unbecoming? If you had a board of review, it would not be required.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It has nothing to do with a board of review at all.

Mr. Lewis: Everything to do with a board of review.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member is going to read affidavits now, I suggest to you he is abusing the rules of this House. That comes under vote 2002.

Mr. Makarchuk: Another one—this is a gentleman who says:

I was laid off in the fall of 1967 and in the spring of 1968, I was running out of money to pay rent. I went to see Mr. Fred Nightingale at the city hall welfare office. When I asked him if I could borrow some rent money he replied in a sneering voice, that was heard by other people in the office and others in the waiting area, "You people from the old country think you can come over here and have things easy. There is no way I will give you the money." I left and went home.

This is followed by this man's wife. She went back to see him and she provided an affidavit. Here is what she says:

I was informed by my husband of Mr. Nightingale's attitude and manner, when he returned home in the spring of 1968 from a visit to the welfare office. I immediately placed a call to Mr. Nightingale. Upon giving my name, I was informed he was unavailable. I made a minimum of five calls within two days. I then contacted Mr. Dorian of the children's aid society. He told me to go right to the welfare department. Upon my arrival there, I was informed by Mr. Nightingale that Mr. Nightingale was still unavailable. I stated I would stay until he was available. After a period of 30 minutes or so, Mr. Dorian telephoned me at the welfare department and asked me to come to the children's aid society to meet his immediate superior, Mr. Sands. He stated, "The children's aid society will guarantee the rent money"—that was needed as we were going to be evicted—"but you will still have to see Mr. Nightingale." He personally would make an appointment with Mr. Nightingale. Mr. Sands made an appointment. Both Mr. Sands and Mr. Dorian went with me to the welfare department. Mr. Nightingale kept us waiting for three-quarters of an hour. Mr. Sands negotiated on my behalf. Mr. Nightingale was not prepared to listen until they reminded him that it was his job to listen. During the conversation he stayed well away from the counter and shouted. I told him that, if necessary, I intended to sit on the sidewalk with my furniture and explain to the public why I was there. We have three children, ages 6, 4 and 1½ years old. It was only then that I got the rent money.

This is another one by a woman:

Last winter, 1968, I phoned Mr. Nightingale. My little girl was ill with a temperature of 104. I phoned to see if Mr. Nightingale could send me a cheque by mail. I explained the situation to him. He said: "It is too bad." There was nothing to eat in the house, no medicine, nothing. So I got my little girl dressed and took her with me to the welfare office. I told Mr. Nightingale that if anything happened to my girl there would be trouble. I got my cheque. I took my little girl home and took her temperature. By then it was up to 105. I phoned the doctor. He told me to take her to the hospital where she was put in an oxygen tent.

Here is another woman:

In October 1968 I heard Mr. Nightingale of the welfare department say to Miss Pat Marlet in his office, "Well Pat are you not making out very well on your back these days?" In January 1968 I drove a friend's car to the welfare office. There, Mr. Nightingale said, "Do you own a car?" I said, "Yes." He said, "If you have a car like that, why are you drawing assistance?" I said, "My car is worth only $10." He said, "I do not mean that, I mean the T-bird; whose car is it?" I said, "A friend's." He said, "Who is your friend?" I said, "Why, am I not allowed to have a friend?" Then he said I would not get my cheque until I told him the name of my friend. I told him the name of my friend and he said, "If he lets you drive his car around there must be more to it than that." I said, "You must be a very evil-minded man." He then put the cheque back in the drawer and I had to get the assistance of an alderman to get it.

Mr. Lewis: Some department you run, some department.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is another woman:

On or about August 9, 1966, I was separated from my husband. I had two children and was living with my parents. In July, 1966, I notified the Brantford city welfare department that I was seeking an apartment. They said it was all right. I found an apartment on Chatham Street and went to the city welfare office on Nelson Street. At the welfare office, I spoke to Mr. Nightingale, the city welfare administrator, telling him that I had found a three-room apartment renting for $75 a month with utilities paid. Mr. Nightingale said that the man was just in the office who had a three-room apartment and I was to go up and see it first. Then he gave me a slip of paper with the address on it.

Incidentally, the woman kept this particular slip of paper.

As I got up to leave from his office, I got to the front door and Mr. Nightingale stood in his office door. Mr. Nightingale then said, "There are some conditions with the apartment; you will have to share the bathroom and the kitchen with the gentleman who lives there." I replied, "What?" He repeated what he had said earlier, and added, "If you talk to him real nice, you might get it cheaper". He went back into the office, I went home. I didn't go to the apartment, I told my dad. He said to call the mayor. My sister phoned the mayor's secretary and related to her what happened. The secretary called me back and said that Mr. Nightingale told her that he did not know the circumstances of the apartment.

This is another housewife:

In the month of February, 1968, I moved to Brantford from Harley after separating from my common-law husband.

I am leaving the husband's name out in the affidavit here.

That same month I went to the welfare office to get assistance for myself and my three children. Mr. Nightingale, Brantford's welfare administrator, said to me: "I have no intention of helping you because you will be back with him in two weeks.

I stated that I would not go back to Mr. Norris no matter what. Mr. Nightingale said: "That is up to you", and refused to help. Next day I contacted a woman at the children's aid society who informed Mr. Sands, also of the children's aid society, of my problem. He then called back to Mr. Nightingale.

I was then asked to go and see Mr. Nightingale again. When I saw him, Mr. Nightingale said, "You have no business going over my head". I asked him how else I was to get help and he then gave me assistance, but only enough to pay the rent on the apartment. He said that any other money must come from my former common-law husband.

One week later I was still without money to buy food for my three children, so I went back to the welfare office and told Mr. Nightingale that the former common-law husband refused to pay anything for the upkeep of the children.

Mr. Nightingale said, "You can't expect the city taxpayers to keep you and everyone who comes to the office." I said: "I don't like the idea of being here, but my children have to eat or I will have to put them out with the children's aid society." Mr. Nightingale said: "I can't help that. You have to get the money in the best way you know how." It wasn't until I had contacted the woman at the children's aid society that Mr. Nightingale gave me assistance the following day, so I now have grocery money for the children.

I was hospitalized as a result of an accident in May, 1968, and the accident was reported in the Brantford Expositor. Three days later I went to see Mr. Nightingale on one of the routine visits to get welfare to buy food for the children. While I was still in the waiting room, Mr. Nightingale said to me: "That wasn't a very smart stunt you pulled." I said it wasn't a stunt. He said: "What were you doing, looking for attention? You will have to come back tomorrow for your payment."

At none of my visits to the welfare office was I ever interviewed in private—it was always in the public waiting room. On one occasion, I asked if we could go into the office to speak and Mr. Nightingale replied: "No, you are not allowed back here."

Mr. Lewis: Public warfare, not public welfare.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is another housewife—now a commercial course student:

In the fall of 1967, my husband left me and went north. The Brant children's aid society had found accommodation for me in the city of Brantford and paid the first month's rent. In January 1968 I went to see Mr. Nightingale, the Brantford city welfare administrator.

I was pregnant and keeping four children. When he recognized me in his office, he said in a very sarcastic tone in front of other persons: "Who are you with now?" We then discussed my accommodation and I explained the CAS had paid the first month's rent. Mr. Nightingale said: "If they pay your rent, then they also pay your food."

He told me to come back when the children were returned to me. When the children were returned by the CAS, I went back the next day. After waiting for three hours, I received a cheque from Mr. Nightingale.

Another lady, a housewife:

On or about September, 1967, my husband deserted me. I went to see Fred Nightingale, the Brantford welfare administrator. In front of everybody in the office and waiting there he said: "What do you want?"

I told him I needed help with my groceries for me and my three children. Mr. Nightingale said: "I didn't tell your husband to walk out." However, after an argument he gave me assistance. In or about November, 1967, I had no milk for the children. I telephoned Mr. Nightingale to tell him I needed milk. He said he would not give me more money. I had to go to the family service bureau, who gave me tickets for milk.

Here is another housewife:

On or about October, 1966, I was pregnant, I went to see Fred Nightingale, the Brantford city welfare administrator, at the Nelson Street office to get some assistance. He started asking me intimate details about my personal life.

I became embarrassed and replied: "How did anybody get into this trouble?" Mr. Nightingale just said: "Let's face it, your life is nothing but trash." I said: "I don't think you have the right to say it."

He sat there smirking at me. He gave me a cheque. I left the office. On or about January 1967, Mr. Nightingale refused to give me my cheque. I went to see Brantford city mayor Richard Beckett. He phoned Mr. Nightingale and told me to go down and pick up my cheque. I went down and Mr. Nightingale handed me the cheque.

Another housewife:

I had occasional dealings with the Brantford city welfare office for the last four years. On or about August 1966, I was sent by Mr. Innis, of the Brantford family service bureau to see Mr. Nightingale, the city welfare administrator. I needed $10 to make up the balance of my rent. At this time I was separated and had two children.

In the interview with Mr. Nightingale, he started asking me personal questions such as: "When you knew you were pregnant, why did you go through with it when you are separated?" He asked me intimate details regarding my relationship with my baby's father.

Mr. Nightingale asked me other insulting and degrading questions. I left in tears as I felt I did not have to go through this for $10. Since then, whenever I needed welfare assistance, I contacted the city alderman who arranged for help.

These are some of the affidavits that I have, Mr. Chairman. I have one here that is probably another example of the type of abuse and insults. This is also a housewife:

On or about August 1966, I went to see Mr. Nightingale, the Brantford city welfare administrator. At this time I was separated with one child and needed assistance. He refused to give me any help whatsoever. The Brant Children's Aid Society insisted I keep going back for welfare help. After a third visit, he gave me some assistance.

On or about December 1967, I asked for assistance from the welfare office at the request of the Brant Children's Aid Society. At this time I was pregnant and unable to work. Mr. Nightingale started interviewing me in the main office in front of the office secretary and people in the waiting area. I explained to Mr. Nightingale why I needed assistance.

His first reply was: "I should go back and live with my common-law husband for the money." Mr. Nightingale then said: "Why should we give you the money?" I explained why I needed it. He replied: "You should go out on the street and peddle your ass." I walked out.

On another occasion in dispute over hospitalization, Mr. Nightingale called me a liar.

These are some of the problems that have been brought to my attention. They were not solicited. These are people who have problems in dealing with the welfare office and felt so incensed that they came out themselves and swore out affidavits to the kind of abuse that has been going on in various welfare offices.

Now, my purpose in bringing this matter up at this time and reading the evidence here, Mr. Chairman, is to stress the seriousness of the situation. I have another letter here which tries to connect a suicide with the operation of the welfare office. We have other allegations for which we have no hard evidence.

But the point here, Mr. Chairman, is that these are situations that are not peculiar to Brantford. They are quite common to other areas of Ontario, as brought out regarding the Kingston situation and the Windsor situation by the member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick).

As I said earlier, the operation of welfare in Ontario can, and in many cases very seriously does, affect the lives of many people. This is the problem that is not peculiar to Brantford. There is a considerable amount of evidence available to indicate that existing provincial legislation is being terribly abused by welfare commissioners in all parts of Ontario. This is why I call on the Minister today to personally intervene, and if necessary, prevail on the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) to change the terms of the Brantford inquiry. All I am asking now is that the judge be given full scope as available under section 241, to carry out an investigation into the operations of the Brantford welfare department.

I am sure the results of the inquiry, under the broad term of reference, would have a direct influence on the operations of not only the welfare department in Brantford, but also all through the province. The consequences of the inquiry can be beneficial to the people of Ontario and useful to the Minister's department in trying to set a consistent, humane pattern for the operation of these departments through the province. Once again, I am asking the Minister to get involved in the vital situation concerning his own department. The date for the start of the inquiry has been set for April 16, and if the Minister is concerned he will have to act in the next few days.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, this matter is under judicial review and I think it would be improper of me to make comment on the matter at this time. I will, of course, watch with a great deal of interest what transpires in Brantford. There is no doubt that I have listened with a great deal of interest to all the cases which have—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What in heaven's name is the Minister saying—the matter is under judicial review? The point that the hon. member has just drawn to the Minister's attention is that the terms of reference were deliberately drawn so as to admit of an interpretation which means all that evidence—which is the relevant evidence, concerning the original charges, which relate directly to the Minister's department—cannot be introduced into the inquiry. What sort of a farce is the Minister going to preside over? To suggest, for example, that he cannot comment because this under judicial review—this is the very point. These charges were made in this Legislature with regard to the administration of welfare in this province, but the evidence is not going to be heard by the inquiry. Now, is the Minister going to sit there and let this farce go on?

Mr. Chairman: I would like to determine whether or not this actually is, in fact, under judicial review at the present time.

Mr. MacDonald: The point is that the terms of reference have been so drawn as to exclude the evidence which the hon. member for Brantford has now put on the record.

Mr. Lewis: The affidavits.

Mr. MacDonald: The affidavits, and these sworn affidavits were with reference to charges which he originally made in the House. They are now documentation from the people who were victimized in this kind of fashion. For the Minister to get up and say that this is under judicial inquiry and therefore it would be inappropriate for him to comment, is just sheer nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not agree that it is sheer nonsense, it is the position I take. Mr. Chairman, I will discuss the matter and that particular section with the hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Lewis: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It just means what I have said.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber was trying to get the floor.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I am willing to speak to this item shortly. I would just say this. I am rather surprised at the hon. Minister. If the member who sat down had been directly attacking the Minister's activities in that area, perhaps there might be some justifiable reluctance to go into the allegations because it would affect the Minister directly. But here the accusations are that a municipal department, which is receiving moneys from this government, is acting improperly. I would have expected the Minister to say we shall look at this immediately to determine the accuracy of the charges.

It does not affect you so directly that you have to try to weasel around the issue, and try to get out of it. There is no justifiable reason why you should not immediately agree to go into these charges and find out if they are meritorious or not. I am not suggesting that if the charges do touch the Minister directly that he ought to weasel out of them. I am just suggesting that here he does not even have that lame excuse for not immediately agreeing to go into these accusations.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I have been informed that the matter is, actually, under judicial review in the city of Brantford.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, you are missing the point. The judicial inquiry that is now being—

Mr. Chairman: No, but the matter of the administration of the welfare office in Brantford is under review.

Mr. MacDonald: The municipal council that set the terms has publicly stated that this evidence that my hon. colleague has put on the House is not going to be entertained in the inquiry. Now, whether or not this view is going to bind the judge, I suppose, is a very pertinent question.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Well, I would think it could not.

Mr. MacDonald: But, they drew up the terms of reference and this is an indication of their intent with regard to the terms of reference. Their intent is to exclude the very thing for which the inquiry was set up.

Mr. Chairman: Well, of course, what their intent might be and what the determination of the judge or officiating official might be, are two different things.

Mr. Lewis: Not entirely, with respect, Mr. Chairman. There has been a precedent for this. There have been many precedents for this amongst the Minister's own colleagues, indeed—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Speaking to the remarks of the member for Brantford, he led us to believe that the reason he was reading these affidavits and making these charges—and deliberately misleading the House—was that he was going to relate them to the board of review. He did not; he sat down without mentioning it. He should have brought it up under vote 2002, municipal welfare administration. The hon. member is now asking me to institute an investigation of municipal welfare administration. Why did the hon. member not wait until vote 2002? Then, it would have been proper under discussion.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, with respect, sir. The member for Brantford indicated quite clearly that he was raising the cases in order to illustrate the need for a board of review. He might well have said that had the Minister allowed the board of review to function the last two years, these grievous injustices visited on the people of Brantford would never have occurred, they could have been corrected. We need not have debated them today. I think what the member for Brantford then said, and it is a perfect extension of the logic of the case, is that a board of review not now being available—because the process has gone this far—he comes to the conclusion that he would request the Minister to enlarge the terms of reference to make sure this material is acceptable. Now, that is not violating a subsection of some estimate discussion, it is just expanding that discussion into a logical conclusion, and the Minister does not have to wait to give his answer, he can give his answer now on this particular point. We will get back to the board of review for the next two or three months as soon as he has given that answer.

Mr. Chairman: Well, in the opinion of the Chair, the matter of the hon. member for Brantford introducing these specific cases as examples of situations that did exist in his particular municipality, did constitute a matter of showing, by example, the need for a board of review, therefore the Chairman feels that, insofar as that was introduced, that it was in order. However, if the matter of the administration of the welfare department in the city of Brantford is under judicial review, I would have to restrict any further debate regarding the city of Brantford welfare administration as sub judice.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The point, I think, has been made, sir, very carefully made, that the terms of reference of the present so-called judicial inquiry, exclude the introduction of the affidavits which were put to the House this afternoon. They preclude the terms of reference and preclude those affidavits. Now, I do not really understand the attitude of this Minister, when his Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—

Mr. Chairman: I think the hon. member is not speaking to a point of order now, he is making a statement regarding the hon. Minister. The Chairman has made a ruling that the matter of the administration of the welfare department in the city of Brantford is under judicial inquiry. Any reference to the administration of that particular department would be sub judice. I permitted the hon. member's examples to be introduced as reasons for the board of review and I feel that was in order. However, further reference to the general administration of the welfare office or administration in the city of Brantford, would be out of order on the grounds of sub judice.

An hon. member: But not discussion of the commission.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, this is only an enquiry, it is not a case of a court inquiry.

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Makarchuk: —and the thing has not started—

Mr. Chairman: If it is under the provisions of The Municipals Act, and a county court judge will be hearing the matter or investigating it, it certainly is—

Mr. Makarchuk: What we are trying to do here—and I think that the Minister has a responsibility—is to stress the fact that under the present terms of reference, the inquiry would not be complete as the judge would be hamstrung in examining the evidence, the affidavits, which will be provided, and which would be the basis for the inquiry. What we are asking the Minister is to get—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

We are not dealing with what you are asking the Minister. The hon. member has read the affidavits, he has related them to the matter of the need for a board of review and the Chairman has ruled that there will be no more discussion on the administration of welfare in the city of Brantford on the grounds that it is sub judice. Now that is my ruling in connection with this matter. The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: I am going to go on to some other topic.

Mr. Chairman: On the board of review?

Mr. Ben: No, not on the board of review. It is on this particular vote.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman did not suggest that you could not return to the board of review.

Mr. Ben: I would just say this before going on to the topic I wish to discuss under this particular vote. I believe the inquiry of which the hon. member for Brantford speaks is under The Public Inquiries Act, although county court judge is sitting to hear it. He is sitting as the persona designate. It is not a judicial inquiry, but of The Public Inquiries Act.

I will leave them to argue the merits of my statement. I am going on to something else, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The rules regarding sub judice do not restrict the reference to a judicial inquiry, it refers to Royal commissions, and so on—

Mr. Benn: Well, all right—

Mr. Chairman: —and other inquiries.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would permit me to make a suggestion in the interest of orderly discussion of the estimates.

We were discussing the board of review. Perhaps we might deal with that particular matter in its entirety and then proceed with some other item.

Mr. Chairman: Well, we were dealing with vote 2001, is there anything further under the board of review?

Mr. Ben: If I might, I have been trying to get the—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber has the floor.

Mr. Ben: I do not propose to deal with that board of review. We could come back to it, but I have sat here patiently trying to raise this one point.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Ben: Thank you. Now, Mr. Chairman, under vote 2001, there are certain grants made, for instance, to the Canadian Welfare Council, Ontario Welfare Council, Canadian Legion of Ontario Provincial Command and the Last Post Fund Royal Canadian Association, and so on, and the Salvation Army, and the Vanier Institute of the Family.

Mr. Chairman, when the committee on youth were meeting, there were many briefs submitted to them. These briefs suggested many reasons why they felt there was a decline in the moral standards of our youth.

I recall reading a brief that was submitted by—I believe it was either the Ontario Orange Order or the Ontario Masonic Order; I think it was the Orange Order. It decried the fact that there were not enough of these youth organizations and what few there were, were not being attended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have searched through the public accounts and I have found that there were grants under The Department of Education estimates for the particular group of which I am going to speak at this time. I am referring to the boy scouts.

Under the education grants, which have not come up yet, there is a provision—or at least last year there was provision—for a grant to the boy scouts association of $15,000 and to the girl guides, a grant of $15,000. Subsequently, under ministerial discretion, there was a further grant to the boy scouts of $2,500, for a total of $32,500.

To me, the Boy Scouts Association of Canada is certainly a social, if not a family, service. There is no doubt about it in my mind. Now the boy scouts association serves to prepare our youth for a direct participation in the social and family life of this community—to make them good citizens; to try to avoid the necessity of the government supplying large sums for reform institutions, for training schools, for jails, even for welfare, if we want to go that far.

I am shocked. In this day and age, all other agencies are crying of the difficulties we are having with our youth. They are pointing out that juvenile delinquency is on the increase. Crime commission reports in the United States, like the presidential commission on crime, point out that the greatest proportion of crime is committed by youngsters, by youths, greatly out of proportion to their numbers in the community.

One would think that, if we are interested in social and family services, if we are interested in the family as a unit, and if we are interested in raising better citizens, as one would imply from the title, then we would take some effort and spend some money to avoid finding our youth in this position.

We should try to do something to keep them out of jails, out of training schools, off welfare rolls—try to give them some respect for society. You might even say we should try to create a new society by leading our youngsters in the right direction.

I look to the Minister's estimates and he will not give them a penny, a farthing, towards—

An hon. member: Department of Education.

Mr. Ben: My dear Mr. Chairman, as you were changing places with the previous chairman, I pointed out that I had searched through the estimates and I did find that, under the Education estimates, there were some funds voted. But I am also pointing out that they ought to be under these estimates.

It is true that something may be taught by the boy scouts that would entitle them to come under the Education estimates, but basically what you want to instill in them is a respect for social order and a desire to implement a new and proper social order, to strengthen family ties. This is where these grants should come and they should not be a miserly $15,000. There are no funds for the boy scouts in this department, Mr. Chairman, and this is what I am decrying—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: You made your point.

Mr. Ben: —this is what I am decrying. There is not a vote in these estimates for this worthy organization. They find great difficulty in functioning.

But perhaps I should declare a conflict of interest, Mr. Chairman, because my older boy is in the stage where he is ready to go into the boy scout movement from the cub movement. They just cannot find sufficient parents to act as scout leaders. The suggestion is that the scouts form themselves in groups of five or six, and the parents take one night a week to lead the boys and once a month they will meet at the church.

I was speaking with a man they call Akela, who is the leader of the cub pack and he brought the suggestion. I pointed out to him that much as I would like to be one of those fathers, being a member of the Legislature here, we meet two nights a week—and now the hon. Prime Minister says we are going to be sitting a further night—that I could not maintain a proper schedule. I said I was willing to pay to have properly qualified scoutmasters teach my son to be a good scout, if I may be pardoned for putting it that way. Because nobody seems to care now—

Mr. Chairman: We have no right to be talking about something that is not in the estimates. It is really under The Department of Education and any further discussion about—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, if I can discuss an allotment here, or request for funds and argue that not enough funds are being spent—that there should be $30,000 spent, instead of $15,000. And if I can say that it would be—

Mr. Chairman: Argue that with the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis).

Mr. Ben: Let me finish my objection, please. It is a point of order I am speaking on now.

Mr. Chairman: I think I have got your point. We can argue that with the Minister of Education, under whose—

Mr. Ben: Look, I am on a point of order. Have the courtesy to hear out my point of order, will you?

Mr. Chairman: Please proceed.

Mr. Ben: You have the hammer. Please use it with discretion.

Mr. Chairman: Your point of order.

Mr. Ben: I argue on a point of order. If I can argue that the Minister ought to have allocated $15,000, instead of $5,000, for a particular service; if I can argue that the Minister should have allocated $5,000, instead of $1,000, for a particular purpose, surely I can argue that he should have allocated $5,000, instead of nil, for a particular purpose?

Mr. Chairman: No.

Mr. Ben: No?

Mr. Chairman: No. I point out to the member that there is no place for discussion of a grant to the Boy Scouts Association of Canada in this department.

Mr. Ben: Well, I say it is a shame—

Mr. Chairman: That is under the Minister of Education!

Mr. Ben:—shame that you, Mr. Chairman, should defend the Minister for not having provided under these estimates for such a worthy organization.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I think you have made your point even though you are out of order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, you have permitted the hon. member to make a very lengthy address and, because it is a very worthy cause, it is one of those situations where to make it a point of order would have been wrong, and I accordingly, did not raise the point of order.

I may say that I have been a cub, a boy scout and long-life supporter of the boy scout movement. I have—

Mr. Ben: Point of order, Mr. Chairman, point of order!

I am quite willing for the Minister to rise and rebut me providing you let me finish my dissertation on this subject. If you rule me out of order then you have to rule him out of order.

Mr. Chairman: Both are out of order. Could we go on to another item please?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have supported the Minister of Education in the grants he has made. Now I bring to the hon. member's attention that if he were not so blind and he could read—I bring it to his attention that there is an item, Yonge Street Mission Youth Centre, $58,000. "Reaching the Hearts and Lives of Today's Boys and Girls" is the title of this brochure. I shall bring you up to date on it and send this over. This is what the department is doing.

Mr. Ben: Well, why not boy scouts?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Because the boy scouts are being looked after in The Department of Education.

Mr. Ben: For $15,000, when there are—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Ben: There are 50 times more boy scouts than there are young people at the Yonge Street Mission.

Mr. Chairman: This discussion has continued long enough. Now, the member for Scarborough Centre please.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I may say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the Yonge Street Mission Youth Centre is a very worthwhile cause—

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, you recognized the member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough Centre please.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you. I would like to ask some questions about the board of review.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, the Canada Assistance Plan section 6, item c. This contains the undertakings by provinces:

Will ensure the provision by law not later than one year from the effective date of the agreement of a procedure for appeals from decisions by provincially approved agencies with respect to applications for assistance or the granting or providing of assistance by persons directly affected by such decisions.

That is what I want to ask, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask the Minister, on what date did the province of Ontario enter into the agreement of the Canada Assistance Plan which was assented to July 15, 1966?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I believe I gave that information at the time that the legislation was discussed in this House a year ago.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Can you not get it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not have the agreement in front of me and accordingly do not have the date of the agreement in front of me.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister then, surely when he had a deadline of not later than one year he must have some idea in his head about when that deadline came upon him.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We met the requirements of the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you. That is what I wanted to know, Mr. Chairman.

Now, in meeting the requirements to that plan, a board of review should have been established for both general welfare assistance recipients as well as family benefit recipients; is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, and they were.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is it the same board of review, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, Mr. Chairman, all these matters were discussed in this Legislature at the time when the legislation was passed a year ago.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to ask then, Mr. Chairman, where are the regulations for The General Welfare Assistance Act pertaining to the board of review?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There is a section of the Act which makes the provision that all the sections of the one Act apply to the other, mutatis mutandis.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you. Having established that, Mr. Chairman, having established that, I would have found some difficulty in not allowing anything to be brought before this vote that pertained to cases which, in all right if the system had been working, would have been dealt with before the board of review and would have saved the time of the House.

I would like to make mention that the Minister would not pay any heed to members of the Opposition. For instance, Mr. Chairman, I myself presented an amendment to the government bill which asked that individuals appealing to the board should have available to him, all records of the department pertaining to him, that he should be represented by council if he so desired. I believe we have covered that all right in the review. But we have not covered that the recipient might be entitled to all records pertaining to him. And, of course, Mr. Chairman, a review which is not going to allow these recipients to have access to his own records means that any decision can be told him without him knowing if it is indeed correct.

We also ask that his expenses of appearing should be defrayed. This too, was ignored. We asked that needy persons be put on the review board and the vote, Mr. Chairman, came down 49 to 35.

I would just like to say, Mr. Chairman, that had some heed been paid to looking at the regulation and the purpose of a board of review in the light of the recipient, instead of just in the light of the administrators and the government, all of the two hours and more that were spent yesterday on the board of review—and many more which may very well be spent, Mr. Chairman, because the board of review was not set up in the proper way—could have been avoided by anyone on the other side of the House turning the regulations around to ask how they are working for the recipients.

If I might say so, Mr. Chairman, this is very similar to the old landlord tenant Act which is now being overhauled—everything for the landlord, nothing for the tenant. This is exactly where the recipient ends up in the board of review that this government was forced into, in order to accept money from the Canada Assistance Plan.

They would not have entered into it on their own, as other colleagues have pointed out. They were obliged to do so, and it is shocking, that a modern-day government would have to be forced into a board of review.

Mr. Chairman, having been forced into it, they pass an Act; we support it, then they hamstring it completely with second-rate regulations. I will set about to prove it.

The board of review should be composed of not more than ten members, nine plus the chair, as the Minister pointed out yesterday. Yet, further down in the Act we see an item from The Family Benefits Act, 1966, regulation 19-69, made January 26, 1969, filed January 22, 1969, gazetted February 1, 1969.

The section of the Act is 15, and I am speaking about item 1, and then drawing to the fact that there is no resemblance whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, with item 15(a). Under item 15(a)(i) the chairman may authorize one member of the board of review to conduct the hearing and to report to the board. This member has all the powers of the board for the purposes of such hearing.

Item 2 under 15(a). The report of such member may be adopted as the decision of the board of review by two or more members of the board, or may be otherwise dealt with as the board deems proper.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely shocking, and as you can see we are growing apoplectic on this side of the House by this sort of shock. The regulations start out: "The board of review shall be composed of not more than ten people."

It looks like a very healthy situation. We find then, that the decision can rest with one person, providing that person takes the material back and presents it. I can only presume, Mr. Chairman—because it was not outlined in the regulations—that that one person presents the material to two others on the board of review without the recipient being present. Now, this is shocking.

This is a board that the Minister has every right not to be proud of. The only way he can keep this board from public activity, public press, public pressure is that, under item 15(a) 4, all hearings to the board of review shall be held in camera.

Then, Mr. Chairman, what really defeats this whole purpose is that the federal government is being had when this government takes moneys and does this sort of thing.

We heard the Prime Minister complain in the Ministers' conferences recently that the federal Minister of Health and Welfare was telling him how to run his government by saying he would give 50 per cent of the cost of juvenile delinquency homes if the government here would put them under The Department of Social and Family Services.

But I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that the federal government is not going to be able to put another Act into the hands of this government without directing and insisting what kind of service it is trying to establish from coast to coast in this country.

Look under the regulations, under item 15, number 5, copies of form 6, that is the form. The notice of request for hearing and review mentioned at the end of the regulations, Mr. Chairman, may be obtained from the director by any applicant or recipient on request, therefore.

We heard yesterday; Mr. Chairman, a hundred and one reasons why this will not work for the recipient. If government is making legislation not to work for the recipient, it deserves to bear the brunt of this kind of debate.

I would like to take the shocking case in which the Department of Social and Family Services in the Essex-Windsor area asked the client to report in full to them. I spared the House the reading of the letters to do with that case, Mr. Chairman, when I made my opening remarks.

Now I would like to point out why this system is simply not working and how close help can come to a person, but nobody offers form 6 and the recipient does not know about form 6. Form 6 is the request for the hearing in review. This is the case of Mrs. Bednarick, Diller Avenue, Essex, Ontario.

On December 23, 1968, Mrs. Bednarick received a letter from The Department of Social and Family Services. As you know, Mr. Chairman, from my lead-off remarks, the client received this letter because members of Parliament had intervened on her behalf. It is a shocking situation in the administration of welfare in the Essex-Windsor area. The letter reads:

Dear Mrs. Bednarick:

Mr. Eugene Whelan, MP, Essex, has personally written advising us of your difficulty. Our senior representative will be calling on you, Mrs. Bednarick, and you may be sure every possible consideration will be given in the needs of yourself and your family.

When thanking Mr. Whelan for his concern, I will also promise to keep him informed.

Best wishes for the holiday season,
Yours sincerely,
James S. Band.

Mr. Lewis: The format of that letter sounds familiar.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mrs. Bednarick has written a note: "This was my first letter I received from James Band."

A note on the next letter, Mr. Chairman: "Mrs. Renwick, this was the letter I sent to Band after my sit-in. His reply to it is stapled on the back of this letter and was sent registered mail:"

Now, you know, Mr. Chairman, from my opening remarks, that the Bednarick family sat in on the welfare office and got action within one hour. They got full benefits within one hour.

January 28, 1969.

Dear Mr. Band:

First may I say thanks a lot for nothing. I hope you will carefully read the enclosed newspaper clipping and the letter from my mortgage company. As you can see from the newspaper article, by last Saturday my situation had progressed to a desperate point. After weeks of waiting on Smith's office—

That, Mr. Chairman, is the local welfare office.

—your official representative, two MPs and my lawyer, I seem to be getting nowhere fast except I was sure I would soon be losing my home.

There is a small correction there, Mr. Chairman, it is one MP and one MPP. As you can see, the government is not even doing a good enough job for people to know the difference sometimes.

I surely did find out there is a lot of truth in the saying about the "power and freedom of the press." With them behind me I had my mortgage money and drug money from Smith within one hour. Whereas, for weeks before that, I had used every ounce of decency and pull I could get to try and accomplish those two things. And believe me, Mr. Band, I got damned tired of crawling and I decided it was about time I got up and walked.

I would give anything to talk to Trudeau and ask him where in hell is this just society we are supposed to be living in. It certainly cannot be in Canada—surely not in Ontario, when we have men like Murray Smith at the head of a government agency.

I know Murray Smith does not have an easy job and believe me, I would not want his job, but there must be a person somewhere more suited to the job—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I know we are nearing 6 o'clock but, on a point of order, are you going to permit the reading of cases of municipal welfare administration on vote 2001, when I continuously bring to your attention that for the orderly discussion of the estimates, those matters should properly come under vote 2002?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have a question—

Mr. Lewis: That is the funniest interjection—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister has risen on a point of order. He has pointed out again that the hon. member is referring to municipal administration as such.

Now, the hon. member was going right along the track in referring to the board of review. Perhaps she did get slightly off the track in relating to municipal administration and she should keep any further detailed remarks to vote 2002.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my point was this, I would just like—

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, this might be a good time—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Can I not clarify my point? It will only take a second, really.

My point was this, Mr. Chairman. I have three government letters, from December 23 to January 21, when full benefits were granted; and nowhere in those letters is there any mention of form 6—the opportunity for this client to go to the board of review.

Could I ask, Mr. Chairman, that, when we resume these debates, there will be outlined carefully for us exactly what comes under vote 2001 due to the new structure? And are we not, in fact, approving moneys to go to municipal offices—

Mr. Chairman: No, that comes under vote 2002.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, may I express the wish that you, sir, and all members of the House might have a restful and pleasant holiday and a happy Eastertime.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister indicate to us—so the Easter period could be more enjoyable—what will occupy the House on our return?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think we would do what might be ready on the order paper. I do not know how much time would be spent on the order paper on that particular day, but after that work is completed we would return to estimates.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to join with the House leader, but my wishes for the hon. members would be, perhaps, a little different. That would be that not only would you have a restful time, but that you would come back refreshed in mind with your sitting capacity refurbished and your vocal cords in good shape.

But I do hope that everyone will have not only a peaceful, but a restful, time and that we will all be privileged to gather here again when the House reconvenes.

Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6:00 o'clock, p.m., to reconvene at 2:00 o'clock, p.m., April 15, 1969.
